While many people have their eyes on the launch of the new Motorola Droid X on Verizon, T-Mobile on Thursday launched the Samsung Vibrant, a potential contender for the best smartphone on that carrier. The phone includes a 1-GHz Hummingbird processor, a 4-inch 854-by-480 Super AMOLED screen, and a 5-megapixel camera. It is available in T-Mobile stores and its Web site right now.

Mobile Managing Editor Sascha Segan got his hands on the Samsung Vibrant late last month. He was very satisfied with the phone and predicted that the Vibrant "will be T-Mobile's top-of-the-line smartphone."

Segan specifically liked the graphical capabilities of the smartphone. He notes: "T-Mobile's software build really shows off the high-end graphics processing capabilities of the new Hummingbird CPU. For example, T-Mobile includes the game Sims 3. I played it for a few minutes and was very impressed by the smoothness of pivoting around the game's 3D layouts.
