Report: Google Prepping $99 Tablet, 32GB Nexus 7

By Stephanie Mlot | October 17, 2012 10:15am EST | 16 Comments

Google is reportedly planning to unwrap a $99 Nexus tablet in the fourth quarter of 2012, according to a new report.

Digitimes, citing "Taiwan-based supply chain makers," said Google is prepping a cheaper tablet that runs a single-core processor from China's WonderMedia Technologies and includes a HUVA TN panel from Taiwan's HannStar Display.

According to Digitimes, the $99 tablet would be produced by Quanta Computer. Google's current tablet, the Nexus 7, starts at $199 and is produced by Asus, which told Digitimes that it has no plans for a $99 tablet. Google did not immediately respond to PCMag's request for comment.

On the Nexus 7, front, however, there are reports that a 32GB version of the tablet will hit store shelves in time for the holidays. TeckComesFirst pointed to a circular from retailer Argos that advertised a 32GB version of the Nexus 7 in its holiday gift guide.

In a scanned page from the guide (right), the 32GB Asus-made Google tablet is listed for £199.99 ($323). That's the same price as the 16GB Nexus 7 in the U.K., so why get the smaller one? TeckComesFirst said the 32GB will not include the £15 Google Play store credit that comes with the 16GB version.

In the U.S., the Nexus 7 is available in 8GB ($199) and 16GB ($249) flavors. As ZDNet noted, there have been reports of a U.S. version of the 32GB tablet, including a Staples Advantage promo that was later removed.

In other tablet news, Best Buy plans to sell its own tablet – the Android-based Insignia Flex for $239 to $259, according to Reuters. The 9.7-inch tablet will rival products like the Nexus 7 and Amazon's Kindle Fire HD. It will hit shelves Nov. 11 and be sold only at Best Buy, Reuters said.

Single core, low resolution craplet? Please Google, don't do this. Don't piss away all the good will and good press you've built with the Nexus 7 by building such an inferior device.

I agree - There's another $99 tablet that launched this week and it's actually good - The Novo 7 Legend - it's a dual core - in the US it's available at a site called TabletSprint - definately worth checking out -- good company - Ainol Electronics makes it and they received "runner up" status at CNET/ CES 2012 for "Best Tablet of the Year"

Why?

I dont see why you need the storage.

Either:

1. Stream your content
2. Get a tablet with a SD card reader.

This is just a crappy Asus tablet - ignore the Nexus branding. I have one and never use it.

I have a 32 gig iPad and I use all the space just with 1 movie and the rest apps and rudimentary files. I use cloud for music. 32 gb is needed for me.

Also, no nexus tablet offers an sd card slot and so that means going with a non-nexus device. I refuse to do that and never know if/when I'll get updates.

Finally, regarding your "crappy" comment, some of the hardware was hit or miss early on, but since then, the quality has been much improved. Plus, you get a quad core processor w 2 gigs of ram AND stock android for $250. That beats any other android tablet out there... Period...

One option now for the Nexus 7 is to use a USB OTG connector. Then use whatever memory you already have. I have a 1 terabyte hardrive that can connect to my girlfriends Nexus 7. Not really an option to have that hanging on all the time, but to swap out media you want to watch, and then disconnect it. Her school won't let her connect to a lot of cloud services.

It's definitely an option I'll use on trips, but still want the extra gigs internally for when the kids need a video or something for on the spot entertainment.

It has a good processor, excellent screen and streaming doesn't work too well on buses and planes.

I've got the Nexus and there is nothing crappy about it. I wouldn't trade it for anything out there and I use it a lot. As for the 32 gb I've got a 32 sd card on my phone and even with tons of apps on it I haven't even put a dent in it's storage space. Most people I know don't even use 8gb.

Ainol also has two new Hi-Res 10 Inch tablets coming out soon, a Dual Core for $209 and a Quad Core with a 1920x1200 Liquid Crystal display (like Apple's Retina screen) for around $275 --WOW- the only site that seems to offer them right now in the US is TabletSprint --
