- National Institute of Urban Planning (INU)

Since its founding year in 1930, The Italian National Planning Institute (INU) has been constantly pursuing its statutory goals of promoting studies on building and urbanism and disseminating the principles of planning. Its statute, approved by presidential decree in 1949, defines the Institute as “an entity of high culture and technical co-ordination recognized by law”. INU is structured as a free association of bodies and individuals, without a profit motive. On this premise INU continues to pursue its statutory goals of an eminently cultural and scientific nature: research in the various fields of interest of planning, the constant updating and renewal of planning culture and techniques, and the diffusion of social knowledge on such areas as the city, the territory, the environment and cultural heritage.
