At its 5739th meeting, on 10 September 2007, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda and heard a briefing by the Minister for Foreign Affairs and Cooperation of Timor-Leste. He stated that the presidential and legislative elections were the first national elections run by the Timorese, and an important assertion of their ability to exercise their independence. He emphasized that with the extensive support of UNMIT, the presence of international observers and the International Stabilization Force, the elections were peaceful, free, fair and transparent, as well as a demonstration of the people's hope, confidence and enthusiasm. Taking into serious consideration the recommendations of the Independent Electoral Certification Team, he was aware that the benchmarks underpinning the certification exercise were only partially met in some cases and expressed a commitment to addressing his country's shortcomings in those areas in order to improve the conduct of future elections. He stressed that fragile institutional structure was the major challenge, still in need of substantial guidance and assistance. However, he made clear that the Government of Timor-Leste remained primarily responsible for delivering assistance and protection to its people. As the consolidation of the State's institutional framework was a long and difficult process, the Minister for Foreign Affairs and Cooperation asked the Council to give consideration to the possibility of extending the UNMIT mandate until 2012. While agreeing with the Secretary-General that a mission with a peacebuilding mandate should subsequently be created and stay in place for five additional years, he stressed that a peacekeeping mission would need to be in place longer than 2010.²⁰⁴

At its 5740th meeting, on 10 September 2007,²⁰⁵ the Council again included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on UNMIT.²⁰⁶ The President (France) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁰⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the formation of the new Government in Timor-Leste;

Emphasized the need for all parties to resolve any disputes through exclusively peaceful channels and within the framework of democratic institutions and called upon the people of Timor-Leste to refrain from violence and work together in order to ensure security;

Called upon the Government, Parliament, political parties and the people of Timor-Leste to work together and engage in political dialogue and consolidate peace, democracy, the rule of law, sustainable social and economic development and national reconciliation in the country; reaffirmed the need for justice and accountability, and underlined the importance of the implementation of the recommendations of the Independent Special Commission of Inquiry report of 2006;

Welcomed the report of the Secretary-General on the work of UNMIT; encouraged UNMIT to continue to cooperate and coordinate with the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes as well as all relevant partners to support the Government of Timor-Leste in implementing a national development plan.

24. The situation in Afghanistan

Deliberations of 15 January 2004 (4893rd meeting)

At its 4893rd meeting, on 15 January 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 30 December 2003 on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security.¹ In his report, the Secretary-General described progress made in the implementation of the Bonn Agreement, of 5 December 2001,² including the pilot phase of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, the electoral registration on 1 December and the Constitutional Loya Jirga on 14 December. While successful implementation of those processes could move the State-building efforts in Afghanistan a good deal, he stressed that fundamental challenges, particularly the problems of insecurity, needed to be overcome if the peace process was to become irreversible and the relatively fragile institutions of the State secured. He blamed the insecurity on factional misrule in the provinces, and on the efforts of “spoilers”, including Taliban elements, loyalists of Gulbuddin Heckmatyar and possibly Al-Qaida. To address the problems, the Secretary-General urged the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and coalition forces to take every measure possible to speed up the deployment of security assistance beyond Kabul. He also underlined the need for further reforms to broaden the representation of all sectors of Afghan society in the central Government.

The Council heard briefings by the Secretary-General and by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan.³

At the outset, the Secretary-General praised as an “important and very encouraging development” the adoption of a new Constitution by the Constitutional Loya Jirga on 5 January. He said that the Constitution provided a permanent foundation for re-establishing the rule of law in Afghanistan and defined a political order through a strong presidential system of government with a bicameral legislature. It also established a judicial system in compliance with Islam, and included provisions aimed at ensuring full respect for fundamental human rights, including equal rights for women. While congratulating the Afghan people and Government on this major accomplishment, the Secretary-General cautioned that the Constitution would not by itself guarantee peace and stability. He therefore called for immediate action by Afghans to address, with the necessary help from the international community, the impediments to the peace process, including the deeply troubling security situation, the lack of an inclusive and broadly representative Government, and the slow pace of development.⁴

The Special Representative briefed the Council on the Constitutional Loya Jirga and then discussed the challenges ahead, particularly the need for improving security, broadening the popular base of the Government, strengthening the system of governance, and increasing the pace of reconstruction and service delivery. He congratulated the Afghan people on the nearly unanimous acclamation of the new Constitution by the Constitutional Loya Jirga, which was to a large degree representative of Afghanistan. He noted with appreciation that despite the substantial extension of the Loya Jirga beyond the originally planned 10 days, the delegates proved willing to reach compromises and to make concessions in order to arrive at a text that all could accept. He believed that the new Constitution, and the process that achieved it, should be a source of pride for the people of Afghanistan. The Special Representative cautioned, however, that there was so much to be done that Afghans and the international partners could not rest long. First was the task of implementing the Constitution to give life to it. He argued that the new constitutional order would have meaning for the average Afghans only if security improved and the rule of law was strengthened. He noted with concern that the deterioration in security conditions continued at precisely the time when the peace process required the Government and the United Nations to broaden their presence in the field, complete the electoral registration and carry out other activities. He therefore stressed the need for the disarmament of factional forces, the protection of basic human rights, accelerated reconstruction and the reform of national institutions. For the international partners, the Special Representative called for accelerated deployment of provincial reconstruction teams, although he continued to believe that the teams were a “second best” to a straightforward expansion of the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF). He alerted the Council to the formidable challenges posed by the growing opium production and trafficking, which was estimated to total $2.3 billion in 2003, or the equivalent of more than half of the country’s gross domestic product (GDP). Finally, the Special Representative drew the Council’s attention to a non-paper circulated by the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA), which noted that a second Bonn-type conference was one possible way to re-energize the commitment of all concerned to the peace process.⁵

(4931st meeting)

At its 4931st meeting, on 24 March 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 19 March 2004 on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security.⁶ In his report, which focused on key developments since 31 December 2003, the Secretary-General described the path ahead in implementing the Bonn Agreement following the successful conclusion of the Constitutional Loya Jirga and the signing of the new Afghan constitution. He noted that one of the key challenges ahead would be the holding of elections, and described the status of the voter registration project and the main issues involved in deciding on the timing and types of elections to be held in 2004. The Secretary-General cautioned that security remained a significant problem, and reported on a number of initiatives to improve security, such as the expansion of the International Security Assistance Force, the deployment of additional provincial reconstruction teams, and accelerated efforts to build an Afghan army and police force. He also emphasized that more progress was needed to disarm, demobilize and reintegrate former combatants. The Secretary-General recommended that the mandate of UNAMA be renewed for further a 12 months. Noting the ongoing consultations on the role of the United Nations after the completion of the Bonn process, he expressed his intention to submit his recommendations on the details of the Mission’s new mandate after the upcoming conference to be held in Berlin on 31 March and 1 April 2004, and once the decision on the holding of elections had been taken.

The Council heard a briefing by the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations,⁷ who reported on the challenges remaining to implement the Bonn process and the measures for the further transition of Afghanistan towards stability and effective governance. The Assistant Secretary-General noted with appreciation that the process had now reached one of its last major benchmarks: the holding of free and fair elections to confer political legitimacy on the new Government. Noting that the new Constitution required elections for the presidency as well as the upper and lower houses of the national assembly, he expressed the hope that a decision would be made on the timing and sequence of those elections “in the very near future”, before the Berlin conference. While understanding the need to hold elections as close as possible to the Bonn time frame, he emphasized that the conditions must be conducive and the preparations thorough. He reported that the first phase of the voter registration process, which covered eight main cities, had progressed more or less on target, and that preparations were being made to launch the second phase to register the remaining 8 million eligible voters in the provinces.

The Assistant Secretary-General stressed that success in completing the registration and in holding elections would depend on support from Afghan and international security forces, and welcomed the deployment of additional provincial reconstruction teams, particularly in the south. Citing the recent fighting in Herat, he expressed concern about the precarious security situation even in areas that most observers believed were stable and safe. He warned that without significant demilitarization, genuine political choice, as required for a credible election, was simply impossible and events such as those in Herat were likely to occur. The Assistant Secretary-General noted with concern that the impact of Afghanistan’s economic growth during the past two years had largely been felt in the urban centres alone and that the trend had prompted a demographic shift from rural areas to the cities, exacerbating social tensions in urban centres. Also of concern was the drug economy and the instability that it promoted, which remained the greatest threat to the development of a stable functioning State. He concluded by expressing the hope that the Council would endorse the recommendation of the Secretary-General that the mandate of UNAMA be extended for a further 12 months.⁸

Decision of 26 March 2004 (4937th meeting):
resolution 1536 (2004)

At its 4937th meeting, on 26 March 2004, the Council again included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 19 March 2004 on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security.⁹ The representative of Afghanistan was invited to participate in the discussion. The President of the Council (France) then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹⁰ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1536 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNAMA for an additional period of 12 months;

Stressed the importance of the provision of sufficient security and of significant donor support for the holding of credible national elections in accordance with the Afghan Constitution and the Bonn Agreement;

Welcomed the progress made since the commencement of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process in October 2003 and the contribution of the International Observer Group in this regard;

Welcomed the efforts to date of the Afghan authorities to implement their National Drug Control Strategy;

Requested UNAMA, with the support of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to continue to assist the Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission in the full implementation of the human rights provisions of the new Afghan Constitution;

Called upon all Afghan parties to cooperate with UNAMA in the implementation of its mandate and to ensure the security and freedom of movement of its staff throughout the country.

Decision of 6 April 2004 (4941st meeting):
statement by the President

At its 4941st meeting, on 6 April 2004, the Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations. All Council members made statements, as did the representatives of Afghanistan, India, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union),¹¹ and Japan.

At the outset, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations reported on the achievements of the Berlin conference and what lay ahead in terms of capitalizing on the momentum gained in Berlin to complete the Bonn process. He noted with appreciation that the conference had approved a comprehensive workplan, which provided clear benchmarks and targets to be met in the political, security and economic spheres over the coming months and years. A strong framework for regional cooperation in countering narcotics by Afghanistan and its neighbours had also been agreed to in Berlin. While praising those achievements as truly impressive, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations cautioned that the tasks still facing Afghanistan remained daunting, especially the holding of national elections. He underlined the need to ensure security, maintaining that without substantial improvements in the security situation, the elections would be threatened. He noted that the vast majority of Afghans remained convinced that elections required prior disarmament. It was therefore vital to achieve the goal of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration efforts set in the workplan, which called for the completion of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes for 40 per cent of current militia and the cantonment of all heavy weapons by June 2004. The Under-Secretary-General also underscored the need for adequate international security assistance to support the electoral process and protect it from both factional threats and attempts to simply terminate it. He noted with concern that despite the progress made in training the new Afghan national army, the Afghan and international security forces currently deployed in Afghanistan had limited capacity and they would be overextended if they had to assume the immense task of supporting a credible election process.¹²

The representative of Germany briefed the Council on the outcome of the conference entitled “Afghanistan and the International Community — a Partnership for the Future”, which was held in Berlin on 31 March and 1 April 2004. He noted that the presence at the conference of 65 delegations — many at the level of foreign minister — underlined the continued international commitment to creating a secure, stable, free, prosperous and democratic Afghanistan. He explained the three final documents adopted at the conference: the Berlin declaration, which described the vision of the future new Afghan Government; the workplan, which showed how the Afghan Government wanted to approach that vision in the coming two years; and the progress report, which summarized the implementation status of the Bonn Agreement. In addition, the Berlin Declaration on Counter-Narcotics was adopted between Afghanistan and its neighbours. He said that the Government of Afghanistan had committed itself to an ambitious timetable for the disarmament of militias, as a significant condition for free and fair elections. He stated that the remarkable results of the conference deserved an explicit acknowledgement and endorsement by the Council. For that purpose, he noted that his delegation had initiated negotiations with Council members and other countries concerned to come up with the consensus text of a Presidential statement.¹³

Most speakers welcomed the achievements made at the Berlin conference, and commended Germany and Afghanistan on their successful co-chairmanship for the conference. They reaffirmed their commitment to further support Afghanistan with a view to completing the implementation of the Bonn Agreement, which was essential to achieving a stable and democratic Afghanistan.

The representative of Brazil agreed that the expansion of international peacekeeping forces throughout Afghanistan would bolster security in the country.¹⁴ The representative of the United States considered that the success of the Berlin conference was a very hopeful sign for those in the international community who worried that interest was flagging and that donor fatigue was setting in.¹⁵ The representative of Pakistan hoped that the spirit of Berlin did not flag or diminish over time, underlining the fact that Afghanistan would need years, if not decades, of political and economic support and engagement.¹⁶ The representative of Algeria stated that the announcement of the additional pledges and the confirmation of contributions in the areas of security and of preparations for elections were vital for the reconstruction of Afghanistan.¹⁷

The representative of the Russian Federation expressed concern with the “growing subversive activities of the Taliban and other extremist forces” which were seeking to plunge the country into bloody inter-ethnic enmity and to prevent the holding of the general elections.¹⁸ The representative of the United Kingdom stressed the need to carry out disarmament, demobilization and reintegration before the elections, as security remained critical for continued progress, adding that enhanced security was not only a requirement for the success of reconstruction efforts, but also a precondition for democratic, fair and peaceful elections in September.¹⁹ Welcoming the success of the Berlin conference, the representative of France urged the international community to focus on the common political objective of the proper conduct of elections.²⁰ The representative of Afghanistan expressed appreciation to the co-chairs of the Berlin conference as well as to the 65 countries and international organizations that had participated in the conference, and reiterated his Government’s full commitment to meeting the guidelines of the Bonn Agreement.²¹

The President (Germany) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²² by which the Council, inter alia:

Endorsed the Berlin Declaration and stresses the relevance of the Work Plan of the Afghan Government, the Progress Report on the Implementation of the Bonn Agreement and the Berlin Declaration on Counter-Narcotics, annexed to the Berlin Declaration;

Stressed that opium poppy cultivation, drug production and trafficking pose a serious threat to the rule of law and development in Afghanistan as well as to international security, and that therefore Afghanistan and the international community shall endeavour to reduce and eventually eliminate this threat, including through the development of economic alternatives;

Welcomed, in particular, the Berlin Declaration on Counter-Narcotics within the framework of the Declaration on Good-neighbourly Relations, signed in Kabul by Afghanistan and its neighbours, as well as the planned Conference on Regional Police Cooperation to be held in Doha on 18 and 19 May 2004.

Deliberations of 27 May 2004 (4979th meeting)

At its 4979th meeting, on 27 May 2004, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan and Head of UNAMA.²³

The Special Representative focused his briefing on the main challenges confronting Afghanistan in the preparation of the national elections in September. He noted with concern that with the spring surge in extremists' attacks, the security situation had deteriorated in recent months in high-risk provinces, particularly in the south. He said that while the aid community continued to keep a low profile in insecure areas in order to reduce its vulnerability, the expanding voter registration process had been affected by the increase in attacks. Despite increased violence, he said that preparations for the elections had been made, as voter registration was now pushing into the rural areas in close coordination with the coalition forces. Upon completion of voter registration in the eight major population centres, he said that the process had entered its second and final phase, which was to cover the rest of the country in the next couple of months. The second phase started with 160 sites in early May and had now expanded to almost 600 sites in 31 of the 34 provinces, with more than 1,000 registration teams operating simultaneously. However, he expressed concern that the lack of security could lead to under-registration in the southern and south-eastern provinces. Another challenge related to the determination of the population figures themselves, owing to insecurity in some provinces. He said that it was now quite likely that some provinces would not be surveyed, or only very partially.

²³ The representative of Afghanistan was invited to participate in the meeting but did not make a statement.

For the holding of free and fair elections, the Special Representative emphasized the importance of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants, maintaining that a genuine exercise in electoral choice could take place only if the grip of local militias on the political process was loosened. He reported that the Government and the international community had reached an agreement on the main phase of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, which was to include, by June, 40 per cent of the militia forces and, by July, the full cantonment of heavy weapons under a reliable safekeeping arrangement. However, he noted with concern that the implementation of the agreement had encountered serious delays owing to the reluctance of some senior commanders. He therefore reiterated the need for a widespread, robust international military presence in support of domestic security forces.²⁴

Decision of 15 July 2004 (5004th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5004th meeting, on 15 July 2004, the Council extended an invitation to the representative of Afghanistan to participate in the discussion. The President (Romania) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Called upon the Afghan Government and the international community to maintain and intensify, ahead of the presidential and parliamentary elections, their efforts to strengthen the national army and national police, to accelerate the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, and to support the Afghan Government in its strategy to eliminate opium production;

Encouraged Afghan authorities to enable an electoral process to provide for voter participation that was representative of the national demographics, including women and refugees, and in this regard calls for the determination of practical modalities for the registration and participation of the Afghan refugees in Iran and Pakistan in the ongoing Afghan electoral process;

Stressed the importance of providing the necessary funding for the timely implementation of the Joint Electoral Management Body timetables;

Reaffirmed its full support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and UNAMA, and reiterated the central and impartial role of the United Nations in the international efforts to assist the Afghan people in consolidating peace in Afghanistan and rebuilding their country.

Deliberations of 25 August 2004

At its 5025th meeting, on 25 August 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 12 August 2004 on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security.²⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General stated that the Joint Electoral Management Body had taken the decision to hold presidential elections in October and postpone parliamentary elections until April 2005, as some of the potential impediments to the simultaneous conduct of those elections, particularly the difficulty of allocating parliamentary seats among the provinces in the absence of convincing census data, had proven to be insurmountable. He also noted a heightening challenge posed by the three main threats to the consolidation of peace and stability in Afghanistan, namely, extremist violence, factionalism and the narcotics industry. Against this background, he underlined once again the vital importance of security assistance to the country.

The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan and Head of UNAMA. In addition to all Council members, statements were made by the representatives of Afghanistan, Canada, Iceland, Japan, the Netherlands (on behalf of the European Union)²⁷ and Uzbekistan.

At the outset, the Special Representative reported that voter registration had been completed with a total of 10.5 million people registered, over 41 per cent of whom were women. This enabled the electoral authorities and the security forces to make appropriate preparations for the presidential election on 9 October, which had the potential to create political legitimacy for the post-war order. However, he said that the picture was not entirely satisfactory. For instance, he noted that it had proved very difficult to redress the cases of imbalance in the areas of the south most affected by insecurity. For the forthcoming election, he stressed that security was a major consideration and called for additional effort with regard to the security of voters and electoral staff. He reassured the Council that during the period of electoral campaigning, the Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission and UNAMA would continue to jointly undertake the nationwide verification of political rights, with a view to ascertaining whether the rights and obligations of candidates were observed.²⁸

Speakers agreed on the importance of the presidential election and reaffirmed their commitment to assisting in ensuring the free and fair selection of a president by the Afghan people, which was indispensable for the maintenance of the political legitimacy of the peace process. Many of them commended the courage of the over 10 million Afghans who had decided to register to vote despite the threats of intimidation and violence, and particularly welcomed the over 4 million women who had chosen to take part in the political process. However, they shared concerns regarding the lack of security and called for accelerated disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants as well as training of the new Afghan security forces.

The representative of the United States urged Pakistan and Iran to move forward in tandem on out-of-country registration and voting so that the over 600,000 Afghans in Pakistan and the over 800,000 Afghans in Iran could take part in the electoral process. She noted with appreciation that by September, the International Security Assistance Force would assume the leadership of five provincial reconstruction teams in the north and north-east of the country.²⁹ The representative of Germany maintained that the additional time gained due to the postponement of the parliamentary election should be used to improve the security situation and underscored the importance of the security sector reform, including the establishment of a functioning judicial system and national army and police forces.³⁰ The representative of Brazil called for a thorough process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in order to improve the security situation and to reduce the power of warlords and terrorists.³¹

The representative of Pakistan remained concerned about insufficient registration in the south and south-eastern Afghanistan due to the lack of security. He stated that the threats to Afghanistan's security lay inside Afghanistan, mainly from faction leaders, criminal lords and extremists, including Al-Qaida and the Taliban. He noted the agreement at the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) summit, held in Istanbul, to expand the International Security Assistance Force, but stressed that the momentum behind expansion of the Force must not be lost and that NATO must now push on into the west of the country.³² The representative of China called for “firm measures” against terrorism, factionalism and problems related to narcotics in order to improve the security situation.³³ The representative of the Russian Federation warned once again against a renewal of the Taliban’s military and political potential, the continuing infiltration of fighters into Afghanistan and the emergence of a neo-Taliban faction, and called for accelerated implementation of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration throughout the country.³⁴

While appreciating the progress made in preparations for the elections, the representative of Afghanistan noted with concern that attempts to destabilize the situation by Al-Qaida and Taliban groups continued, particularly along the eastern and southern borders of the country. He alleged that those elements had their network support in “certain politico-religious circles outside Afghanistan”.³⁵

The representative of the Netherlands stated that the European Community commended the Joint Electoral Management Body’s “tremendous achievement” with the registration of nearly all eligible voters, and underlined the need to rebuild the Afghan army and intensify the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process.³⁶

At the conclusion of the meeting, the Special Representative added that while he did not dispute in any way that the Taliban had assets and resources in Afghanistan itself, among the tools that the extremist forces had at their disposal were cross-border operations and infiltration, which had been used to attack the peace process.³⁷ In rebuttal, the representative of Pakistan reiterated that it was not primarily cross-border infiltration that was resulting in the extremist violence in Afghanistan, including in the south and south-east. He added that his country was doing everything it could and had been taking many political risks and suffering many military casualties.³⁸

Decision of 17 September 2004 (5038th meeting): resolution 1563 (2004)

At the 5038th meeting, on 17 September 2004, in which the representative of Afghanistan was invited to participate, the President (Spain) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;³⁹ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1563 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the authorization of the International Security Assistance Force in Afghanistan for a period of 12 months beyond 13 October, 2004;

Authorized the Member States participating in the Force to take all necessary measures to fulfil its mandate;

Called upon the Force to continue to work in close consultation with the Afghan Transitional Administration and its successors and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General as well as with the Operation Enduring Freedom Coalition in the implementation of the mandate of the Force.

Deliberations of 28 September and 12 October 2004 (5045th and 5055th meetings)

At its 5045th meeting, on 28 September 2004, the Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations.⁴⁰

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations updated the Council on the preparations for the presidential election, which would take place for the first time in the history of Afghanistan. He reported that the logistical preparations were on track for the 9 October polling date, with all regional and provincial offices submitting operational plans. Eighteen presidential and 36 vice-presidential candidates, including three women, had been campaigning since the official start of the campaign on 7 September. He said that, with a view to improving the political environment, the Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission and UNAMA continued to monitor and report on the exercise of political rights throughout the country. The preparations for out-of-country elections were also on track. He reported that the election security plan, which had been developed by the Joint Electoral Management Body, included securing polling sites and counting centres, as well as the movement of personnel and sensitive material such as blank and filled ballots. The national police would provide security for the areas around the sites and the International Security Assistance Force or the coalition would provide “outer-ring support”. He added that considerable efforts were being made to define with tribal and community leaders their crucial role in local security arrangements, particularly in the east, south-east and south. He called on the Afghans and the international community to work in concert to ensure successful holding of the election, which would represent a significant step along Afghanistan’s path to democracy.⁴¹

At its 5055th meeting, on 12 October 2004, the Council heard a briefing by the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations.⁴²

The Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations briefed the Council on the conduct of the presidential election held on 9 October. He praised the election as a well-run operation, given the constraints of geography and security. Almost every polling station was opened on time, with polling staff acting professionally. He said that the reports the United Nations had received so far from the field reflected a “high-level of popular satisfaction with the conduct of the polling”. He reported that initial estimates indicated a high turnout, despite poor weather conditions and a call by opposition candidates for a boycott. He said that after the election, a number of candidates had called for investigation into alleged irregularities. A three-member panel had been established to fully investigate the allegations and present recommendations to the Joint Electoral Management Body. He reported that security conditions on election day had greatly exceeded expectations, despite some incidents and reported intimidations. He noted that an important element in enhancing the credibility of the election was the presence of 5,321 Afghan and 121 international observers, who were in Afghanistan on the polling day. He also noted that the political momentum generated

Decision of 12 October 2004 (5056th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5056th meeting, on 12 October 2004, in which the representative of Afghanistan was invited to participate, the President (United Kingdom) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the presidential election that took place on 9 October 2004 in Afghanistan, stressed its historic importance as a milestone in the political process, and congratulated the millions of Afghan voters who participated;

Urged the Government of Afghanistan, with the help of the international community, to continue to confront the challenges that remain in Afghanistan, including security, timely preparation of the parliamentary elections in April 2005, the reconstruction of institutions, the fight against narcotics, and the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of Afghan militias;

Pledged its continued support for the Government and people of a sovereign Afghanistan as they rebuild their country, strengthen the foundations of constitutional democracy, and assume their rightful place in the community of nations, and called upon the international community, with the United Nations in a central role, to support them in these efforts.

Deliberations of 9 November 2004

At its 5073rd meeting, on 9 November 2004, the Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations.⁴⁵

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations updated the Council on the electoral process that had led to the certification of the official electoral results on 3 November by the Joint Electoral Management Body.⁴⁶ He reported that, in all, approximately 8,128,940 ballots had been cast, representing 70 per cent of the registered voters, of whom 40 per cent were women. He said that the Joint Electoral Management Body had declared that Hamid Karzai had secured an outright majority of 55.4 per cent of the vote, against Yonus Qanooni with 16.3 per cent, Haji Mohaqeq with 11.6 per cent and Abdul Dostum with 10 per cent. He observed that ethnic considerations appeared to have played an important role in determining people's votes, with electoral support for the four main contenders strongly correlating with the areas where Pashtuns, Tajiks, Hazaras and Uzbeks were respectively the majority groups. With the completion of the presidential election, he said that attention had now shifted to the post-election political phase, including the immediate task of forming the next Government and the challenges of parliamentary and local elections. He noted that security remained a significant concern, with a suicide bombing in Kabul on 23 October signalling the end of the period of relative calm that had prevailed during the election.

In regard to the parliamentary and local elections, he mentioned five essential issues that had to be resolved in order to hold those elections within the time frame prescribed by the electoral law: first, boundaries of districts must be officially delimited; second, population figures must be agreed upon for the assignment of parliamentary seats; third, the voters' list must be analysed, refined and, in some cases, updated, in order to prepare specific voter lists for each polling station; fourth, a complaint mechanism and an electoral offence prosecution system must be developed at the local level; and fifth, the qualifications of thousands of potential candidates must be vetted prior to their registration. He noted with concern that the influence of local commanders, the widespread and tangled web of narcotics and arms and the absence of an efficient local civil administration continued to constitute serious obstacles to holding legitimate elections, reiterating that the expansion of the formal security apparatus would obviously be key to the success of the elections. He urged the international community not to diminish its attention to Afghanistan, which still needed full international backing in the new phase of local and legislative elections under way.⁴⁷

Deliberations of 10 January and 22 March 2005 (5108th and 5145th meetings)

At its 5108th meeting, on 10 January 2005, and its 5145th meeting, on 22 March 2005, the Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan and Head of UNAMA.⁴⁸

The Special Representative stated that the presidential election and the recent appointment of the Cabinet had brought with them new momentum in the Afghan peace process. The composition of the 27-member Cabinet did indeed meet the requirements of the Afghan constitution and also reflected broadly the ethnic composition of the country, with 10 Pashtuns, eight Tajiks, five Hazaras, two Uzbeks, one Turkmen and one Baloch. There were also three women. Looking ahead to the challenges that the new Cabinet would have to meet, the Special Representative noted in particular the upcoming parliamentary elections and the establishment of the Independent Electoral Commission. Among other challenges, he noted that disarmament, demobilization and reintegration efforts had been a key consideration in deciding on the date and modalities of the elections. Disarmament, demobilization and reintegration had been particularly successful in northern Afghanistan and had focused so far only on militia forces formally affiliated with the Ministry of Defence. While that programme was progressing well, a large number of irregular forces continued to exist, some of which were among the main sources of insecurity and abuses in parts of the country. He hoped that further disarmament, demobilization and reintegration would create a better environment for both the elections and the restoration of the rule of law.⁴⁹

At its 5145th meeting, on 22 March 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 18 March 2005 on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security.⁵⁰ In his report, the Secretary-General described the myriad challenges facing Afghanistan, touching on the overall security situation, the organization of the upcoming parliamentary elections, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and rule-of-law programmes. He observed that there would continue to be a need for an extended presence of international forces and the need to overcome bottlenecks in reconstruction, among other challenges. He also indicated his intention to submit a proposal for the post-election mandate of UNAMA, but recommended that the Council extend the current mandate of the Mission for 12 months in the meantime.

Decision of 24 March 2005 (5148th meeting):
resolution 1589 (2005)

At its 5148th meeting, on 24 March 2005, the Council again included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 18 March 2005 on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security.⁵¹ The President (Brazil) drew attention to a draft resolution;⁵² it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1589 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNAMA for an additional period of 12 months from the date of adoption of the resolution;

Called upon UNAMA to continue to provide necessary support in order to facilitate timely elections with the broadest possible participation, and urged the donor community to promptly make available the necessary financial support based on that framework, in close coordination with the Government of Afghanistan and UNAMA, and to consider contributing to electoral observer missions;

Urged the Government to take decisive action to stop the processing and trade of drugs and to pursue the specific measures set out in that plan in the fields of: building institutions; information campaigns; alternative livelihoods; interdiction and law enforcement; criminal justice, eradication; demand reduction and treatment of addicts; and regional cooperation, and called upon the international community to provide every possible assistance to the Government in pursuing full implementation of all aspects of the plan;

Called for full respect for human rights and international humanitarian law throughout Afghanistan;

Called upon the Government of Afghanistan to continue to address the threat to the security and stability of Afghanistan posed by Al-Qaida operatives, the Taliban and other extremist groups, factional violence among militia forces and criminal activities, in particular violence involving the drug trade;

Requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council in a timely manner on developments in Afghanistan, and to make recommendations on the future role of UNAMA, after the parliamentary elections.

Deliberations of 24 June 2005 (5215th meeting)

At its 5215th meeting, on 24 June 2005, the Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan and Head of UNAMA and the Executive Director of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC).⁵³

The Special Representative began by noting negative developments in the security situation, including an increase in the number and gravity of incidents in several provinces, which included the assassinations of a number of moderate religious leaders. The worsening security also had an impact on the preparations for the electoral process, and several electoral employees had been killed. While some of the violence could be attributed to drugs, local rivalry and criminal acts, the current offensive by extremist groups, including the Taliban, had been decisive in the escalation. He argued that the international response to the Taliban's attempt to destabilize the political environment could not be limited to combat operations, but it was necessary to attack the financing for fundamentalist elements, their safe havens and the networks that supported them. However, there had been positive steps, particularly the deployment of the electoral administration countrywide, the creation of the Electoral Complaints Commission and the start of nominations for candidates. In that context, he noted that measures still needed to be taken to prevent intimidation and to reassure the majority of candidates and the population at large that they could vote in September without the risk of reprisals. As the demobilization of former army units was wrapping up, the focus of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration would shift to illegal armed groups. Finally, he pointed out that the political transition was too far ahead of the building of the State, and of economic reconstruction.⁵⁴

The Executive Director of UNODC explained that while opium cultivation in Afghanistan would decline, the total area under cultivation would still be enormous. The decrease in cultivation was partly due to the eradication campaign and partly due to self-restraint by farmers and the impact of the Government persuasion campaign. However, he noted that drug traffickers and warlords controlled quasi-military organizations that needed to be met with corresponding force. There was therefore a need for more collaboration between counter-narcotics and counter-insurgency forces. Finally, he stressed that it was impossible to oppose the narco-industry without strengthening the rule of law.⁵⁵

Decision of 23 August 2005 (5249th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5249th meeting, on 23 August 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 12 August 2005 on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security.⁵⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General noted that the benchmarks set out in the political agenda of the Bonn Agreement of 5 December 2001 would be met with the holding of parliamentary (or Wolesi Jirga) and provincial council elections on 18 September 2005. He noted that preparations for the elections were on track. Although significant gains had been made in meeting the objectives of the political agenda, the implementation of the institutional agenda of the Bonn Agreement had been uneven, and many critical State institutions at both the national and provincial levels remained weak and susceptible to corruption. He stated that efforts to reform security sector institutions had enjoyed varying degrees of success, and that the Afghan National Army would reach its target strength of 43,000 by September 2007, three years ahead of schedule. Finally, he emphasized that the security situation in Afghanistan continued to be of paramount concern, with an increase in the sophistication of weapons used and in the type of attacks being carried out by insurgents and anti-Government elements, especially in the south and parts of the east of the country.

The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan and Head of UNAMA, following which statements were made by all members of the Council⁵⁷ and the representatives of Afghanistan, Canada, Germany, India, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Italy, Malaysia, Pakistan, the Republic of Korea, Spain and Turkey.

In his briefing, the Special Representative informed the Council that the electoral campaign had been launched as of 17 August and was being monitored by international observers. The polling would take place on 18 September and the plan was for the inauguration of the new National Assembly before the end of the year. On the security front, attacks had resumed with increased intensity in the south, south-east and east. However, attacks against the electoral process had been mostly indirect, which indicated that the extremists had decided to target pro-Government and international forces rather than try to stop the parliamentary elections.⁵⁸

In their statements, speakers welcomed the progress in preparations for the election, but expressed concern at the security problems and the wave of violence. There were also concerns raised over the challenges of fighting poppy cultivation and the drug trade. A number of speakers welcomed the economic progress that had been made, but also stressed that only sustainable socioeconomic development would guarantee lasting peace and prosperity. Several speakers emphasized that the United Nations presence needed to continue beyond March 2006.

The representative of the Russian Federation noted that while national reconciliation was crucial, the process needed to take place on the basis of a cautious and responsible approach, without creeping erosion of the sanctions regime. He stated that persons included on the sanctions list posed a real threat to peace and security and their involvement in active political life could lead to dire consequences. Specific action needed to be taken to counter that trend, particularly in the context of the upcoming elections.⁵⁹

The representative of Afghanistan stated that his country expected to see the international community play a role in ensuring the security of Afghanistan during the post-Bonn period and welcomed United Nations authorization of that continued role. The representative of the Philippines expressed the view that given the worsening security situation, the planned expansion of the International Security Assistance Force be pursued urgently.⁶⁰

The representative of Pakistan noted that as his country's troop strength on the border was higher than the combined strength of the national and international military presence within Afghanistan, they were disappointed that their great efforts had not been mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General. He stressed that those who raised doubts about Pakistan's commitment to peace and security, often by exaggerating the threat of cross-border movements, were either finding excuses for their own failure or trying to poison relations between Pakistan and Afghanistan.⁶¹

The President (Japan) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁶² by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the progress in the preparations for the parliamentary (Wolesi Jirga) and provincial council elections scheduled for 18 September 2005; and called upon the international community to extend additional financial assistance in order to fill the gap for these elections;

Expressed grave concern about the increased attacks by the Taliban, Al-Qaida and other extremist groups in Afghanistan over the past few months; and condemned the attempts to disrupt the political process by terrorist acts or other forms of violence in Afghanistan;

Stressed the importance of continued cooperation and increased dialogue between neighbouring States and the Government of Afghanistan to promote regional development and the long-term peace and stability of Afghanistan;

Expressed its strong view that the international community must maintain a high level of commitment to assist Afghanistan in addressing its remaining challenges.

Decision of 13 September 2005
(5260th meeting): resolution 1623 (2005)

At the 5260th meeting,⁶³ on 13 September 2005, the President (Philippines) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁶⁴ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1623 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the authorization of the International Security Assistance Force, as defined in resolutions 1386 (2001) and 1510 (2003), for a period of 12 months beyond 13 October 2005;

Authorized the Member States participating in the Force to take all necessary measures to fulfil its mandate;

Called upon Member States to contribute personnel, equipment and other resources to the Force, and to make contributions to the trust fund established pursuant to resolution 1386 (2001);

Requested the leadership of the Force to provide quarterly reports on the implementation of its mandate to the Council through the Secretary-General.

Decision of 23 November 2005 (5309th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5309th meeting, on 23 November 2005, the representative of Afghanistan was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Russian Federation) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁶⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Congratulated the people of Afghanistan on the confirmation of the final results of the parliamentary and provincial council elections;

Commended all Afghans for having taken this step and called on them, and, in particular, the representatives-elect and other former candidates, to remain fully committed to peace, the Constitution, the rule of law and democracy in Afghanistan;

Reaffirmed the importance for the international community to maintain a high level of commitment to assisting Afghanistan in addressing its remaining challenges;

Supported the central and impartial role the United Nations continued to play for the consolidation of peace and stability in Afghanistan and coordination of the relevant international efforts and welcomed consultations initiated by the Government of Afghanistan and the United Nations on the post-Bonn process.

Deliberations of 17 January 2006 to 10 February 2006 (5347th, 5348th, 5369th and 5370th meetings)

At its 5347th meeting, on 17 January 2006, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan and Head of UNAMA.⁶⁶ In his briefing, the Special Representative stated that four years to the day after the signing of the Bonn Agreement, the political transition in Afghanistan had been completed with the inauguration on 19 December 2005 of the new Afghan National Assembly. Since the inauguration, both houses had made progress in the discussion of their rules of procedure and had decided on the establishment of parliamentary committees. Building on the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme completed in the previous year, a strategy had also been agreed by national and international partners for the disbanding of illegal armed groups. With respect to the security situation, he noted that while, overall, the country had seen a drop in violent clashes in keeping with the usual lull in winter, the South had seen an increase in suicide bombings and an increase in attacks using improvised explosive devices. He briefed the Council on the planned transfer of operational authority from Operation Enduring Freedom to NATO, which would continue through 2006. He also informed the Council that on 8 December, NATO foreign ministers had decided to expand the International Security Assistance Force by an additional 6,000 troops to a little over 15,000, although firm guarantees of troops had yet to be secured. Finally, he noted that consultations were ongoing with a wide range of actors on the compact for Afghanistan, which would be launched in London on 31 January and which would cover the international approach to the peacebuilding process in the years to come.⁶⁷

At the 5669th meeting,⁶⁸ on 10 February 2006, the President (United States of America) drew the attention of the Council to two letters dated 9 February 2006 from the representative of Afghanistan, one transmitting a copy of the Afghanistan Compact adopted at the conclusion of the international London Conference on Afghanistan⁶⁹ and the other a letter welcoming the outcome of the Conference.⁷⁰ The Council then heard a briefing from the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations.⁷¹

In his briefing, the Under-Secretary-General stated that the achievements of the Conference had been numerous and had reasserted the unity of purpose in the international community. Over 60 high-level delegations had attended, sending a signal of the international community's continuing resolve. The Compact set out an ambitious agenda, but was a realistic reflection of what was required to consolidate State-building efforts in Afghanistan and curb insecurity, control the narcotics industry, stimulate the economy, provide basic services to the Afghan population and protect the human rights of the citizenry. He noted that the Compact set out measurable and time-bound benchmarks in each area and established a results-oriented action plan for the country's future. Finally, he provided an update on the security situation and recent violent incidents.⁷²

Decision of 15 February 2006 (5374th meeting): resolution 1659 (2006)

At the 5374th meeting,⁷³ on 15 February 2006, the representative of Afghanistan was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (United States) again drew the attention of the Council to the two letters dated 9 February 2006 from the representative of Afghanistan.⁷⁴ He also drew attention to a draft resolution;⁷⁵ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1659 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Endorsed the Afghanistan Compact and the annexes thereto as providing for the framework for the partnership between the Government of Afghanistan and the international community;

Called on the Government of Afghanistan, and all members of the international community and international organizations, to implement in full the Compact and the annexes thereto;

Affirmed the central and impartial role of the United Nations in Afghanistan;

Noted the amount of financial assistance available for the implementation of the interim Afghanistan National Development Strategy, and also noted the intention of the Government of Afghanistan to seek debt relief through the Paris Club;

Welcomed the updated National Drug Control Strategy presented by the Government of Afghanistan at the London Conference, and encouraged additional international support for the four priorities identified in the Strategy;

Welcomed the adoption by NATO of a revised Operational Plan allowing the continued expansion of the International Security Assistance Force across Afghanistan, closer operational synergy with Operation Enduring Freedom, and support, within means and capabilities, to Afghan security forces in the military aspects of their training and operational deployments;

Decision of 23 March 2006 (5393rd meeting):

At its 5385th meeting, on 14 March 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 7 March 2006 on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security.⁷⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General provided a detailed update on the parliamentary elections, the start of the new parliament and the security and human rights situation in Afghanistan. He noted that insurgents and other anti-Government elements had increasingly employed more sophisticated and lethal tactics, such as the use of complex improvised explosive devices, well-planned ambushes and technically advanced multiple rocket attacks. He expressed particular concern with the steep rise in the number of suicide bombings. He also noted that in contrast to previous years the insurgents had maintained a high level of operational activity throughout the winter period. He also proposed a new mandate for UNAMA which would entail some changes in its size, scope and structure.⁷⁷

The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan and Head of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan, following which statements were made by all members of the Council⁷⁸ and the representatives of Afghanistan, Australia, Austria,⁷⁹ Canada, Germany, Iceland, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Italy, Kazakhstan, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan and the Republic of Korea.

The Special Representative noted that the political agenda of the new Government was increasingly focused on justice-related issues, as President Hamid Karzai had indicated his determination to renew the Supreme Court and launch the Action Plan on Peace, Justice and Reconciliation. In regard to the security situation, he added that the prevalence of more sophisticated attacks pointed to the persistence and even consolidation of the command and control networks of Taliban, Al-Qaida and other groups in the region. He emphasized that the key challenge of the new Government would be to extend the reach of Government at the local level, which would require security, development, civil society and private sector actors to be more present in areas not yet touched by recovery. He noted that the proposed mandate of UNAMA included a modest expansion of its field presence to support Government efforts, subject to security conditions.⁸⁰

Speakers welcomed the successful holding of the London Conference and the adoption of the Afghanistan Compact. They expressed concern at the escalation of attacks and violence and expressed hope that the strengthening of the Afghan National Army and police forces, as well as disarmament, demobilization and reintegration efforts, would improve the situation. Many speakers underlined the need to tackle the narcotics industry, which fuelled violence, and create alternate opportunities for economic development. Most speakers also expressed strong support for the new mandate and structure of UNAMA as proposed by the Secretary-General.

On the mandate of UNAMA, Japan added that the “light footprint” approach should be maintained, in view of the need to encourage ownership on the part of the Afghan Government. In addition, a “scrap-and-build” approach should be considered, where necessary, in deciding on the optimal allocation of personnel and funding resources.⁸¹

The representative of Denmark stressed that reinforcing the new and fragile democratic institutions was a major task of UNAMA, and urged the Special Representative to continue an active dialogue with the entire political spectrum and press for concerted action in the reform of the public sector. He continued by saying that human rights should also be a high-priority task for UNAMA, which implied that UNAMA should insist that the President appoint qualified judges to the Supreme Court — judges had the full implementation of the Constitution at heart. He emphasized that the UNAMA presence outside Kabul needed to be significantly enhanced. Finally, he noted that the split of UNAMA into two pillars, dealing with political affairs (I) and relief and development (II), respect gave rise to coordination issues that needed to be tackled head on.⁸² The representative of Slovakia stressed that, when considering the UNAMA field expansion, special attention needed to be given to security measures and resources for United Nations personnel.⁸³ The representative of Peru expressed concern that the issue of drug trafficking was barely addressed in the proposed mandate for UNAMA. He suggested that it would be better for UNAMA to adopt the approach taken in the Afghanistan Compact to prioritize support for combating drug trafficking as a cross-cutting issue in the various areas covered by its mandate.⁸⁴

The representative of the Congo stressed that UNAMA needed to provide assistance at the local level, and it was therefore necessary to give UNAMA additional and sufficient security-related resources, particularly by guaranteeing it air support in cases of medical emergency.⁸⁵ The representative of Norway expressed support for a strengthened role for UNAMA in monitoring and coordinating international assistance, including an augmented role in the consultation process between the donors and the Afghan authorities.⁸⁶ The representative of Italy, echoed by the representative of New Zealand, recommended pursuing consistency between the Mission's structure and the organization of the Afghanistan Compact so as to guarantee full effectiveness in fulfilling the follow-up and monitoring tasks given to UNAMA.⁸⁷ Welcoming the proposed expansion of local offices, the representative of Italy encouraged strong cooperation with the provincial reconstruction teams as an essential component of that process.⁸⁸ The representative of Canada maintained that UNAMA had a crucial role to play in strengthening all the new governance institutions of the Afghan State, and to that end needed to increase its own capacities to intervene on the ground in the areas of individual rights, respect for the rule of law, the police and justice.⁸⁹

At its 5393rd meeting, on 23 March 2006, the Council again included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 7 March 2006 on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security.⁹⁰ The representative of Afghanistan was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Argentina) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁹¹ it was adopted unanimously as resolution 1662 (2006),⁹² by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNAMA for an additional period of 12 months from the date of adoption of the resolution;

Called upon all Afghan parties and groups to engage constructively in the peaceful political development of the country and avoid resorting to violence;

Welcomed the proposal of the Secretary-General to extend the reach of regional offices, security circumstances permitting;

Called upon the Government of Afghanistan, with the assistance of the international community, including the Operation Enduring Freedom coalition and the International Security Assistance Force to continue to address the threat to the security and stability of Afghanistan posed by the Taliban, Al-Qaida, other extremist groups and criminal activities;

Encouraged the promotion of confidence-building measures between Afghanistan and its neighbours in the spirit of the Kabul Declaration in order to foster dialogue and cooperation in the region in full respect for the principles of territorial integrity, mutual respect, friendly relations and non-interference in each other's internal affairs.

of Afghanistan addressed to the Secretary-General,⁹⁴ welcoming the prospect of the International Security Assistance Force continuing to operate in Afghanistan until the security forces were fully able to provide security.⁹⁵ He then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution, which was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1707 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the authorization of the International Security Assistance Force, as defined in resolutions 1386 (2001) and 1510 (2003), for a period of 12 months beyond 13 October 2006;

Decision of 23 March 2007 (5645th meeting):
resolution 1746 (2007)

At its 5641st meeting,⁹⁶ on 20 March 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 15 March 2007 on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security.⁹⁷ In his report, the Secretary-General noted that while insurgency-related violence had peaked in September 2006 and receded thereafter due to intense security efforts and the onset of winter, the incident levels during the winter months nevertheless were higher than those recorded for previous years. There had also been a marked increase in insurgent forces prepared to engage in conventional combat operations against Government and international security forces, and a significant improvement in the insurgents' tactics and training. In particular, security incidents in January 2007 in provinces bordering Pakistan had been double the number recorded the previous year. In addition, only limited progress had been made in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration efforts aimed at illegal armed groups. On the political side, Parliament had begun to assert its independence and serve as an active counterweight to the executive branch. At the provincial level, he underscored the fact that an increased focus on capacity-building of Government structures was needed to enable greater Afghan oversight and direction of development and humanitarian issues. UNAMA could more readily ensure stakeholder coordination in this area through its planned establishment of additional provincial offices, security conditions permitting. He stressed that UNAMA should focus its efforts on promoting a more coherent international engagement in support of the Afghanistan Compact; strengthening its humanitarian coordination role and contributing to the protection and promotion of human rights, including monitoring the situation of civilians in armed conflict; and extending its good offices role through outreach in Afghanistan and support for regional cooperation.

At the meeting, the Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan and Head of UNAMA and the Executive Director of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, following which all Council members and the representatives of Afghanistan, Belarus,⁹⁸ Canada, Germany, Iceland, India, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Japan, New Zealand, the Netherlands, Norway and Pakistan made statements.

In his briefing, the Special Representative pointed out that the unprecedented efforts to improve governance, help development and register military gains were being put to the test. He stressed that the Afghanistan National Development Strategy would work only if international participation improved, if the National Assembly became more engaged and if other wings of the Government took their responsibilities more seriously. He suggested that it was critical that the Government start to view political advice by members of the international community as a genuine attempt to assist rather than as an attempt to control. He welcomed the commitment of new forces to the ⁹⁶ On 9 October 2006, the Council held its 5548th meeting in private. The Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan and Head of UNAMA and the Executive Director of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime. The representatives of Afghanistan, Finland, Germany, the Islamic Republic of Iran and Pakistan were also invited to participate.

International Security Assistance Force, but cautioned that as military action increased, the protection of civilians was becoming an increasing concern. While Taliban-led groups were responsible for the high toll of deaths associated with suicide bombings, he noted that there had been a number of cases of civilian casualties caused by Government and international forces. He stressed that UNAMA had sought to position itself as an impartial advocate by conducting objective verification of those incidents with the primary aim of preventing further civilian casualties. He stressed that the Government and international forces needed to take greater care to ensure that they were not perceived as seeking to do harm to civilians.⁹⁹

The Executive Director of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime noted that while it was easy to be pessimistic about the problems of opium production in Afghanistan, there had been a divergence in cultivation trends between the centre-north, where security and development were improving, and the centre-south, where the vicious circle of drugs and terrorism was stronger than ever. He noted that thousands of tons of chemicals needed for drug refining and billions of dollars had been smuggled across Afghanistan's borders, and that UNODC had proposed a major initiative to help Afghanistan, the Islamic Republic of Iran and Pakistan to improve border management and cooperation. He also welcomed the Council's decision to add major drug traffickers to the sanctions list and underlined the need to promote good governance.¹⁰⁰

During their statements, speakers welcomed the progress in key areas, such as reform of the Ministry of the Interior and the development of parliamentary institutions among other areas, but expressed strong concern with the mounting challenges in development, counter-narcotics and the expansion of good governance, on top of the deteriorating security situation. Most speakers also stressed the importance of regional cooperation as a strategic priority and underlined the need for close cooperation with neighbours, particularly Pakistan.

Many speakers expressed support for the proposed renewal of the UNAMA mandate and for the priorities recommended by the Secretary-General: strengthening the coordination of assistance at the local level; stepping up the good offices mission in matters of regional cooperation; and promoting human rights and the protection of civilians. Several speakers stressed the importance of expanding the Mission's geographical presence by opening new provincial offices where security conditions allowed.

A number of speakers noted that the report had underlined the fact that the Taliban continued to enjoy privileged sanctuary on the Pakistani side of the frontier, posing an imminent and ongoing threat to the State-building efforts of the Afghan administration and its citizens. They urged the Government of Pakistan to redouble its efforts to deny access to its territory by armed groups.¹⁰¹

The representative of Panama welcomed the establishment of the Policy Action Group, a committee composed of Government ministers, UNAMA and other international agencies, but expressed reservations about some of its programmes, particularly the Afghan National Auxiliary Police. He was concerned about the capacity of a police force whose members got only 10 days of training. He underlined the need for a vigorous screening process for Auxiliary Police recruits and urged the Policy Action Group to incorporate the Auxiliary Police force into the regular police force as soon as possible.¹⁰²

The representative of the Russian Federation attached importance to the programme of national reconciliation, but at the same time emphasized that the process should not run counter to the efforts to enforce the sanctions regime to effectively oppose the terrorist threat.¹⁰³

The representative of Pakistan emphasized his country's strong commitment to cooperating with Afghanistan and to contributing to peace and progress in Afghanistan. He stressed that control of the border was a joint responsibility. He also stated that they would act shortly to eliminate the "atrocious allegations about so-called sanctuaries and safe havens for the Taliban in terrorist training camps". He asserted that the actual problem was Taliban infiltration in the refugee camps close to the border, and announced that four of the largest camps would be moved to secure sites inside

Afghanistan, which would “end this story of sanctuaries”.¹⁰⁴

At the 5645th meeting, on 23 March 2007, the President (South Africa) again drew the Council’s attention to the report of the Secretary-General dated 15 March 2007 on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security,¹⁰⁵ and to a draft resolution.¹⁰⁶ It was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1746 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNAMA, as established by resolution 1662 (2006), until 23 March 2008;

Called upon all Afghan and international parties to continue to cooperate with UNAMA in the implementation of its mandate and in efforts to promote the security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated personnel throughout the country.

Following the adoption of the resolution, the representative of Italy stressed that the resolution, while it did not modify the mandate of UNAMA, was not business as usual, but addressed all the priorities identified by the Secretary-General, including promotion of the coherence of the international engagement, outreach, support for regional cooperation, humanitarian coordination, protection of human rights and monitoring of the situation of civilians in armed conflict.¹⁰⁷

Decision of 17 July 2007 (5718th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5718th meeting,¹⁰⁸ on 17 July 2007, the Council extended an invitation to the representative of Afghanistan to participate in the discussion. The President (China) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan, and to the central and impartial role that the United Nations continued to play in promoting peace and stability in Afghanistan by leading the efforts of the international community;

Emphasized that the strengthening of Afghan institutions, the advancement of regional cooperation, sustained economic and social development, and the fight against international terrorism, as well as against opium cultivation, production and trafficking remained key factors to achieve sustainable peace, stability and development in Afghanistan;

Reiterated its support for the continuing endeavours by the Government of Afghanistan, with the assistance of the international community, including the International Security Assistance Force and the Operation Enduring Freedom coalition, to further improve the security situation and to continue to address the threat posed by the Taliban, Al-Qaida and other extremist groups;

Condemned in the strongest terms all suicide attacks against civilians and Afghan and international forces and their destabilizing effects on the security and stability of Afghanistan, and deeply regretted all losses sustained by the local population, the national security forces and international military and civilian personnel.

Decision of 19 September 2007
(5744th meeting): resolution 1776 (2007)

At the 5744th meeting, on 19 September 2007, the President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 13 August 2007 from the representative of Afghanistan, which welcomed the proposal that the International Security Assistance Force should continue to operate in Afghanistan until the security forces were fully able to provide security.¹¹⁰ The President also drew attention to a draft resolution.¹¹¹

Speaking before the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation noted that his delegation had traditionally supported the activities of the Force, but that during the process of reaching agreement on the draft resolution, no clarity had been provided with regard to the proposed new wording pertaining to the coalition Force’s maritime interception component, which had not appeared in previous resolutions. He underlined that the coalition’s activities were carried out outside the context of the United Nations and the Council had not been informed in detail about them. He stressed that the maritime component was necessary solely to combat terrorism in Afghanistan and should not be used for other purposes. He continued that since his delegation’s proposals for new wording had not been duly discussed and the draft resolution had been hastily put to the vote, the Russian Federation would not be able to support the draft resolution.¹¹²

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and was adopted by 14 votes to none, with 1 abstention (Russian Federation), as resolution 1776 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the authorization of the International Security Assistance Force for a period of 12 months beyond 13 October 2007;

Authorized the Member States participating in the International Security Assistance Force to take all necessary measures to fulfil its mandate;

Called upon Member States to contribute personnel, equipment and other resources;

Stressed the importance of increasing the effective functionality, professionalism and accountability of the Afghan security sector, and encouraged the Force and other partners to sustain their efforts to train, mentor and empower the Afghan national security forces;

Called upon the Force to continue to work in close consultation with the Government of Afghanistan and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General as well as with the Operation Enduring Freedom coalition in the implementation of the mandate of the Force;

Requested the leadership of the Force to keep the Council regularly informed, through the Secretary-General, on the implementation of its mandate.

After the vote, the representative of Italy stated that his delegation had tried to reflect in the text all the daunting and emerging challenges that the Force had faced since its expansion across the country. It had been particularly important that the Council was sending a signal of strong attention to all the aspects surrounding the Force's operations. As his delegation had not hesitated to address politically sensitive issues, the process had been more difficult, but they felt rewarded by the outcome. By refusing to ignore the challenges, the Council had lived up to its responsibility as the mandating authority for the operation.¹¹³ The representative of China stressed that the Council should spare no effort to reach consensus when adopting resolutions and expressed hope that the manner in which the resolution had been adopted would not set a precedent.¹¹⁴

Deliberations of 15 October 2007 (5760th meeting)

At its 5760th meeting, on 15 October 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 21 September 2007 on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security.¹¹⁵ In his report, the Secretary-General noted that an intensifying Taliban-led insurgency, which increasingly relied on suicide bombing and other terrorist tactics, was undermining confidence in the future and denying access by the Government and international aid organizations to a growing number of districts. Overall, rates of insurgent and terrorist violence were at least 20 per cent higher than in 2006. Despite those pressures, he affirmed there had been progress in terms of economic growth, education, health, road building and rural development. With regard to the Government, he noted that while some institutions within the judicial, executive and legislative branches had continued to gain capacity and effectiveness, internal disputes and institutional corruption threatened efforts to consolidate and legitimize them. Finally, he emphasized that the continued increase in opium production also posed an increasingly grave threat to reconstruction and nation-building.

At the meeting, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of UNAMA, following which statements were made by all members of the Council and the representatives of Afghanistan, Canada, India, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan and Portugal (on behalf of the European Union).¹¹⁶

In his briefing the Special Representative noted that the recent meeting of the Joint Coordination and Monitoring Board had, despite positive steps, highlighted a capacity deficit in regional cooperation, which needed first of all to be addressed by the Government of Afghanistan through the creation of supporting regional units in the lead ministries and through strengthening the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

¹¹⁵ S/2007/555, submitted pursuant to resolution 1746 (2007).

He pointed out that although the Afghan National Army would be at around 47,000 soldiers by the end of the year, numbers were not a measure of capability and for the time being the International Security Assistance Force remained essential. He noted that with the levels of instability and conflict, the lack of oversight mechanisms for human rights, particularly regarding the mandate of the National Directorate for Security, the intelligence service, was particularly strong. He urged the Government to investigate allegations of arbitrary detention and torture of detainees and grant UNAMA access to National Directorate for Security detention centres and activities. He welcomed the concrete steps taken by the Force and Operation Enduring Freedom to reduce civilian casualties. Turning to the challenges of corruption and good governance, he noted that the focus on shoring up the central Government had come at the cost of provincial administration. One consequence of this had been a 34 per cent increase in opium production in 2007. He observed that where the Government and international efforts had been aligned on developing institutional capacity, such as in the Army and the ministries of finance, education, health and rural development, there had been progress, while in areas such as the Civil Service Commission, counter-narcotics, subnational governance and the Ministry of Interior, progress had been limited. He stressed that to succeed in the myriad of challenges in Afghanistan they had to win the legitimacy of the Government of Afghanistan, because only a Government perceived as legitimate could make progress against the challenges facing the country.¹¹⁷

During their statements, speakers expressed their concern at the worsening security situation and emphasized the need to provide security and good governance to all parts of the country. They expressed support for the roles played by the Force, NATO and UNAMA in the country. A number of speakers also expressed concern about the number of civilian casualties, caused by accident as well as by terrorist attacks. Most speakers also noted the increase in opium poppy cultivation and underlined the need for greater cooperation to address the narcotics problem.

The representative of the United States underlined the need to increase the joint efforts to train, mentor, and equip the Afghan National Army and Afghan National Police and provide every measure of support to the United Nations-mandated, NATO-led Force. In particular, he stressed the need to give commanders the forces and flexibility they needed to bring stability and good governance to all of Afghanistan.¹¹⁸ The representative of the Netherlands added that the Force was not a reconstruction entity, and suggested the need for more complementarity among the United Nations, NATO and the European Union.¹¹⁹

The representative of Qatar expressed the view that the political transition process following the Bonn Agreement had begun to unravel. As the political landscape in Afghanistan was made up of an interdependent network, it was necessary to focus on active participation by all parties. He expressed hope that the Government could develop a new mechanism that would enable it to deal with all its opponents.¹²⁰ Similarly, the representative of the Russian Federation suggested that it was necessary to pursue the policy of isolating extremist ringleaders, particularly those already on the sanctions list, while preserving the possibility of a return to peaceful life for rank and file Taliban not accused of war crimes.¹²¹ The representative of Afghanistan added that his country continued to focus on reconciliation as a measure to encourage non-terrorist Taliban to join the process of building a prosperous Afghanistan.¹²² The representative of Pakistan pointed out that the Taliban were part of Afghan society and many could be won over and spoke in support of President Karzai's offer of reconciliation to the Taliban.¹²³ However, the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran rejected certain efforts to "appease the Taliban terrorists". He noted that contacts with those responsible for insecurity and terrorist activities could be wrongly interpreted as rewarding terrorists and criminals and would prove counterproductive and dangerous.¹²⁴

Finally, the representative of Pakistan also provided an update on the efforts to close the refugee camps for Afghans on the Pakistani side of the border, which had served as a source for the flow of cross-border militants. He noted that the closure was being

25. Letter dated 31 March 1998 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of Papua New Guinea to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council

Deliberations of 6 May 2004 (4962nd meeting)

At its 4962nd meeting, on 6 May 2004, the Security Council heard a briefing by the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs on the activities of the United Nations Political Office in Bougainville (UNPOB), Papua New Guinea, following which all members of the Council made statements, as did the representatives of Fiji, Japan, New Zealand¹ and Papua New Guinea.

In his briefing, the Assistant Secretary-General noted that with the support of the Council, the recommendation of the Secretary-General to downsize UNPOB and to establish its successor, the United Nations Observer Mission in Bougainville (UNOMB), had been implemented. The new Mission was working in close cooperation and consultation with the national Government of Papua New Guinea and the leaders of Bougainville. On 17 December 2003, the Bougainville Revolutionary Army and the Bougainville Resistance Force had consolidated their agreement with regard to the destruction of all contained weapons as stipulated in stage III of the Action Plan for the Completion of Weapons Collection. By decentralizing the process of weapons destruction, which had allowed for the ex-combatants, united commanders and communities themselves to decide on the exact date and method of destruction, the Mission had succeeded in greatly expediting the destruction of weapons. Eighty-one per cent of the arsenals of the Bougainville Revolutionary Army and the Bougainville Resistance Force had been destroyed by the Bougainvilleans under the supervision of UNOMB. The Bougainville Constitutional Commission was in the process of working on the third and final draft of the constitution, which would be submitted for approval by the Bougainville Constituent Assembly in June 2004, followed by submission to the national Government of Papua New Guinea for endorsement by the end of July 2004. The Assistant Secretary-General noted that subsequent to the completion of all constitutional phases, UNOMB would consult with the Government of Papua New Guinea and the parties in Bougainville regarding their intention to proceed with elections. The National Executive Council of the Government of Papua New Guinea had delegated police powers and functions to the Bougainville Interim Provincial Government on 17 December 2003, and, in a further step towards autonomy, the Governor had appointed the former leader of the Bougainville Resistance Force as the first Minister of Police of Bougainville. The Governments of Australia and New Zealand had also been supporting the development of the security sector of Bougainville.

The Assistant Secretary-General noted that some progress had been achieved with regard to the involvement of Mr. Francis Ona, the main Bougainvillean leader remaining outside the peace process. The dominant faction in the Me'ekamui Defence Force of Mr. Ona had completed the destruction of its weapons in April 2004. However, other elements of the Me'ekamui Defence Force had not contained their weapons. UNOMB had been informing Mr. Ona of the developments in the peace process and had expressed its readiness to resume regular contacts with him. Overall, therefore, the Assistant Secretary-General observed that the influence of Mr. Ona had continued to be reduced. Finally, the Assistant Secretary-General urged the parties to redouble their efforts in completing the Bougainville constitutional process, which would open the way to the election of an autonomous Bougainville government as soon as practical.²

Most speakers welcomed the progress achieved in the implementation of the peace process in Bougainville with regard to the advancement of both the constitutional process and stage III of the weapons disposal plan and the delegation of police powers and functions to the Bougainville Interim Provincial Government. Highlighting the nexus between a durable peace and a self-sustaining economy, many speakers underlined the need for continued socioeconomic development supported by the international community. Several speakers reiterated the need for the faction of Mr. Ona to be brought into the peace process.³ Speaking on behalf of the Pacific Islands Forum, the representative of New Zealand stressed that the international community would remain engaged in the future of Bougainville and the rest of Papua New Guinea with regard to socioeconomic development.⁴

Decision of 15 June 2005 (5201st meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5201st meeting, on 15 June 2005, in which the representative of Papua New Guinea was invited to participate, the President (France) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the first general elections for the president and members of the House of Representatives of the Autonomous Region of Bougainville held from 20 May through 9 June 2005, and considered that they were competently and transparently conducted, as noted by the international observer team;

Urged those who did not participate in the electoral process to respect the outcome of the elections and support without delay the Autonomous Bougainville Government in its peacebuilding efforts;

Paid tribute to the efforts of the Government of Papua New Guinea and the Bougainville leaders for fully implementing the Bougainville Peace Agreement;

Noted with satisfaction that the performance of UNOMB, as well as that of its preceding UNPOB, demonstrated that a small United Nations special political mission with a clearly defined mandate could make a critical contribution to a regional conflict resolution effort in an efficient and effective manner.

Deliberations of 6 July 2005 (5222nd meeting)

At its 5222nd meeting, on 6 July 2005, the Council heard a briefing by the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, following which all members of the Council made statements, as did the representatives of Australia, New Zealand and Papua New Guinea.

In his briefing, the Assistant Secretary-General reported, on behalf of the Secretary-General, that the mandate of UNOMB had been fully implemented. On 14 June 2005, in the wake of the first elections for the President and members of the House of Representatives of the Autonomous Region of Bougainville, the parties to the Bougainville Peace Agreement had convened the final meeting of the Peace Process Consultative Committee. The Committee resolved that its objectives under the Lincoln Agreement and the Bougainville Peace Agreement had been achieved. Subsequently, the parties had agreed to dissolve the Committee and manage relations between the national Government and the Autonomous Bougainville Government through the permanent Joint Supervisory Body. Following the completion of the Action Plan for the Completion of Weapons Collection and the implementation of autonomous arrangements, the final pillar of the Peace Agreement remained, that is, the holding of a referendum on the future political status of Bougainville in 10 to 15 years, in which the final decision on its outcome would be left to the Parliament of Papua New Guinea. The Assistant Secretary-General stated that the Bougainville administration was in the process of developing a coherent development plan to improve economic development and government services. Finally, he expressed his appreciation to the members of the Council for the support given to UNPOB and its successor, UNOMB, in the implementation of its mandate.⁶

Most speakers welcomed the establishment of the Autonomous Bougainville Government and expressed their appreciation to the Government of Papua New Guinea for its efforts to implement the Peace Agreement. Commending the work of the United Nations efforts in Bougainville, many speakers noted how it could serve as a model for small United Nations missions entrusted with handling regional conflicts and peacebuilding initiatives. Acknowledging the challenges ahead, the majority of speakers underscored the need for the Autonomous Bougainville Government to develop both a sustainable economy and administrative capacity in order to consolidate the peace efforts.

The representative of Papua New Guinea expressed his gratitude to the United Nations, the Security Council and the Member States Australia, Fiji, New Zealand and Vanuatu for their efforts leading to the successful conclusion of the mandate of UNOMB.⁷

26. The situation in Myanmar

Initial proceedings

Deliberations of 15 September 2006 (5526th meeting)

At the 5526th meeting,¹ on 15 September 2006, the President (Greece) drew the attention of the Security Council to a document that included the provisional agenda,² and to a letter dated 15 September 2006³ addressed to the President of the Council, in which the representative of United States requested a meeting of the Council under the item entitled “The situation in Myanmar” in order to receive a briefing from the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs on the situation, as well as on the status and progress of the Secretary-General’s good offices mission.⁴

At the start of the meeting, the President asked whether any member of the Council wished to speak on the question of the provisional agenda before the Council, following which statements were made by the representatives of China, Qatar and the United States.

The representative of China questioned the relationship between the situation in Myanmar and threats to international peace and security. He cited a letter sent on 10 July 2006 by the Non-Aligned Movement to the President of the Council,⁵ in which the Movement put forward its categorical opposition to the inclusion of Myanmar on the Council’s agenda. He expressed the view that to request that the Council discuss an issue that by nature pertained to the internal affairs of a country not only exceeded the mandate given by the Charter of the United Nations to the Council, but also undermined the Council’s authority and legality. To force the Council to intervene would not only be inappropriate but would also further complicate the situation and have a negative impact on future interaction between Myanmar and the United Nations. China was unequivocally against including the question of Myanmar on the agenda of the Council.⁶ The representative of Qatar also objected to the inclusion of the item, on the grounds that such an inclusion could close the diplomatic channels opened by Myanmar with the relevant human rights mechanisms and with the Secretary-General.⁷

The representative of the United States referred to his letter of 1 September 2006 to the President of the Council,⁸ noting the grave human rights and humanitarian conditions in Myanmar, the detention of over 1,100 political prisoners and the outflow of refugees, drugs, HIV-AIDS and other diseases, and the resulting destabilizing effect on the region.⁹

The President (Greece) then put the provisional agenda to a vote; it was adopted by 10 votes to 4 (China, Congo, Qatar, Russian Federation), with 1 abstention (United Republic of Tanzania).¹⁰ The meeting was then suspended.

The meeting was resumed on 29 September 2006 in private. At the meeting, members of the Council, the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs and the representative of Myanmar had an exchange of views.

Decision of 12 January 2007 (5619th meeting):
rejection of a draft resolution

At the 5619th meeting,¹¹ on 12 January 2007, the President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United Kingdom and the United States.¹² By the draft resolution, the Council would, inter alia, have expressed support for the Secretary-General's good offices mission; urged the Government of Myanmar to respond to those efforts; and called on the Government of Myanmar to cease violations of humanitarian and human rights law, cooperate with the International Labour Organization on questions of forced labour, permit international humanitarian organizations to operate without restrictions, release political prisoners and lift restrictions on political actors, and begin an inclusive political dialogue leading to a democratic transition.

The draft resolution was put to the vote; it received 9 votes in favour, 3 votes against (China, Russian Federation and South Africa), with 3 abstentions (Congo, Indonesia, Qatar), and was not adopted, owing to the negative votes of two permanent members of the Council.¹³

During the meeting, statements were made by most members of the Council,¹⁴ and by the representative of Myanmar.

The representative of China said his country was firmly opposed to the draft resolution, as the Myanmar issue was mainly the internal affair of a sovereign State, and all of the immediate neighbours of Myanmar, all Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) member States and most Asia-Pacific countries believed that the current domestic situation in Myanmar did not constitute a threat to international or regional peace and security. The representative of China stated that there was no need for the Council to get involved, and if it took action, it would exceed its own mandate. It would also hinder discussions by other relevant United Nations agencies and bring no benefit to the Secretary-General's good offices effort. Finally, he expressed the view that the international community could offer all kinds of constructive advice and assistance, but needed to "refrain from arbitrary interference".¹⁵ Several speakers stated that the situation in Myanmar was not a clear threat to international peace and security, that the proposed resolution could hinder the good offices effort and that other competent United Nations organs, such as the human rights mechanisms, were more appropriate venues for addressing the problem of Myanmar.¹⁶ The representative of the Russian Federation said his delegation considered any attempt to use the Council to discuss issues outside its purview to be unacceptable.¹⁷

The representative of the Congo noted that his delegation had voted against the inclusion of Myanmar on the agenda of the Council, as the neighbouring countries did not believe that Myanmar posed a threat to international peace and security. He therefore logically could have voted against the draft resolution. However, in the spirit of reconciliation, his delegation preferred to abstain, but he also noted that this matter fell under the purview of United Nations bodies other than the Council.¹⁸ The representative of Panama observed that the topic being addressed was the functions and mandate of the Council, specifically its capacity to act preventively and in conformity with the scope and range of Articles 32, 33 and 34 of the Charter. He stated that his delegation had voted on the understanding that the resolution incorporated the views of the neighbouring countries and of the Non-Aligned Movement, specifically, that Myanmar was not currently a threat to international peace and security. His delegation felt that the inability of the Council to reach consensus on this item was quite unfortunate.¹⁹ The representative of Italy noted his delegation's view that, while they shared the concerns expressed in the draft text, punitive approaches had not yielded satisfactory results and should not be sought by the Council.²⁰

Other speakers expressed strong support for the draft resolution and stressed the importance of a resumption of a political dialogue in Myanmar and an end to human rights abuses.²¹

The representative of the United States asserted that the situation in Myanmar did pose a risk to peace and security beyond its borders. He said that the draft resolution would have supported the good offices mission and would have helped the Council to act in cooperation with other United Nations organs in a holistic manner.²² In the same way, the representative of France noted that conflict in Myanmar had repercussions beyond the country's borders, and further stated that the Council could not remain indifferent to the situation of civilians in conflict zones.²³ The representative of the United Kingdom also believed the issue to be within the competence of the Council, but not solely so, in that other organs, including the agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations, had a key role to play. He urged the Council to continue to monitor the situation in Myanmar, which would not be an impediment to its consideration by any other part of the United Nations family.²⁴

The representative of Ghana, referring to the principles and objectives enshrined in the Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, expressed the view that the maintenance of international peace and security in the current radically changed world necessarily involved addressing complex challenges that were cross-cutting and interrelated. In recent times, the Council had dealt with many intra-State conflicts. He further noted that the interests of humankind were best served when the organs of the United Nations were devoted to complementing each other's efforts.²⁵

The representative of Myanmar remarked that the draft resolution, if it had been adopted, would have set a dangerous precedent, clearly exceeded the mandate given by the Charter and would have undermined the Council's authority and legality. Finally, he pointed out that cooperation with the United Nations was the cornerstone of the foreign policy of Myanmar.²⁶

Decision of 11 October 2007 (5757th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5753rd meeting,²⁷ on 5 October 2007, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 3 October 2007 from the representative of the United States addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁸ which requested an urgent meeting of the Council and invited the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Myanmar to supply information on his mission.

The Council heard briefings by the Secretary-General and the Special Adviser, following which most members of the Council made statements,²⁹ as did the representatives of Myanmar and Singapore.

The Secretary-General, expressing deep concern at the recent events in Myanmar and the reports of continued human rights violations, underlined the fact that the use of force against peaceful demonstrators was abhorrent and unacceptable. He expressed serious concern about the overall situation in Myanmar, especially with regard to the unknown predicament of the large number of individuals who had been arrested without due process. He advocated a serious and comprehensive political dialogue between the Government and the political opposition.³⁰

The Special Adviser reported on his recent mission to Myanmar during a Government crackdown on peaceful demonstrations. He detailed his mission, which had had three main objectives: first, to assess the situation on the ground in the wake of recent demonstrations; second, to deliver clear messages from the Secretary-General to the Myanmar authorities at the highest level; and third, to try to promote dialogue between the Government and the opposition as the best path to ending the current crisis and achieving national reconciliation. He observed that while the protests had coincided with the Government's sudden decision on 19 August to sharply increase the price of fuel, the marches by monks across the country appeared to have provided a catalyst for the demonstrations to become explicitly political in nature. He observed that by the time his mission had started, the protests in the streets of Yangon had largely been put down, although there were continuing reports of abuses being committed by security and non-uniformed elements, particularly at night, and of mass relocation outside Yangon of monks arrested in the course of the demonstrations. He had made several recommendations to the Government, including releasing all those arrested during the demonstrations and ensuring respect for human rights and the rule of law in the exercise of law enforcement.³¹ Both the Secretary-General and the Special Adviser noted that a united Security Council would give important support to the Secretary-General's good offices efforts to help Myanmar achieve national reconciliation, democratization and full respect for human rights.³²

Most speakers deplored the events in Myanmar and advocated a peaceful solution through inclusive dialogue. They also expressed support for the Special Adviser's visit.

Many speakers stressed the need for the Council to give its full and unified support to the good offices efforts.³³ Some speakers called explicitly or implicitly for a presidential statement capturing the common concerns of the Council.³⁴ A number of speakers acknowledged the role played by China in supporting the visit of the Special Adviser.³⁵

The representative of Slovakia noted that the deteriorating situation in Myanmar could become a regional threat.³⁶ The representatives of Belgium, France and Italy noted the strengthening of the targeted sanctions adopted against the leadership of Myanmar by the European Union.³⁷ The representative of the United States cautioned that his country was prepared to introduce a draft resolution in the Council imposing sanctions.³⁸

The representative of Indonesia informed the Council that ASEAN had expressed concern, "indeed revulsion", over the developments in Myanmar and had called on the Government to desist from the use of force and seek a political resolution.³⁹ The representative of Panama argued that any gesture undertaken by the Council should reflect the positions of ASEAN and the Human Rights Council.⁴⁰

The representatives of China and Myanmar reiterated their positions that the situation in Myanmar did not represent a threat to international peace and security, and that the Council should refrain from any action that could interfere with the good offices efforts.⁴¹

At the 5757th meeting,⁴² on 11 October 2007, the President (Ghana) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the recent mission by the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Myanmar, Mr. Ibrahim Gambari, and reaffirmed its strong and unwavering support for the Secretary-General's good offices mission;

Strongly deplored the use of violence against peaceful demonstrations in Myanmar; emphasized the importance of the early release of all political prisoners and remaining detainees;

Stressed the need for the Government of Myanmar to create the necessary conditions for a genuine dialogue with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and all concerned parties and ethnic groups in order to achieve an inclusive national reconciliation with the direct support of the United Nations; encouraged the Government to Welcomed the public commitment by the Government of Myanmar to work with the United Nations and the appointment of a liaison officer with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi; and urged the Government and all parties concerned to cooperate fully with Mr. Gambari.

(5777th meeting)

At its 5777th meeting, on 13 November 2007, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Myanmar, following which all Council members made statements, as did the representatives of Japan, Myanmar and Singapore.

The Special Adviser informed Council members about his visit to Myanmar, including, inter alia, information about the lifting of curfews, the withdrawal of military presence from the streets and the release of some detainees. He commented that while the Government had assured him that it intended to proceed with the drafting of a constitution and the holding of a referendum and elections, there was still a lack of clarity about the timing. He noted that he had not been able to meet with all the interlocutors requested, including General Than Shwe; but he had met with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, although the Government had yet to provide assurances that it would lift the restrictions on her. Daw Aung San Suu Kyi had issued a statement through the Special Adviser on her commitment in the interest of the nation to work with the Government through meaningful and time-bound dialogue, and on the role of the United Nations in that regard. Additionally, the Government of Myanmar had agreed to receive a visit from the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar and had agreed in principle to allow access to the remaining detainees by the International Committee of the Red Cross.⁴⁴

All speakers expressed support for the work of the Special Adviser. A number of representatives expressed concern about detentions and violence used by the military leadership. Some speakers regretted the expulsion of the Resident Coordinator. Several speakers advocated political dialogue, national reconciliation, respect for human rights and a transition towards democracy, and a few speakers emphasized that a return to the status quo ante was not an option. Many representatives welcomed the statement by Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and her readiness for dialogue.

Several speakers noted that the approach of the Myanmar authorities to the Special Adviser's mission had not been in line with the expectations of the Council.⁴⁵ Several speakers also referred to the important role of ASEAN.⁴⁶ The representatives of China and Myanmar maintained their positions that the situation was not a threat to international peace and security.⁴⁷

27. Letter dated 4 July 2006 from the Permanent Representative of Japan to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council

Initial proceedings

Decision of 15 July 2006 (5490th meeting): resolution 1695 (2006)

By a letter dated 4 July 2006 addressed to the President of the Security Council (France),¹ the representative of Japan requested an emergency meeting of the Council to consider the launch of ballistic missiles or unidentified flying vehicles by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

At its 5490th meeting, on 15 July 2006, held in response to that request, the Council included in its agenda the item entitled "Letter dated 4 July 2006 from the Permanent Representative of Japan to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council". The President drew the attention of the Council to a letter from the representative of the United States,² which concurred with the request by Japan for an emergency meeting of the Council to consider the matter referred to in the letter dated 4 July 2006. The President also drew the attention of the Council to a letter from the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea,³ which transmitted the answer of the spokesman for the Foreign Ministry of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to a question raised by the Korean Central News Agency with regard to the recent missile launches. In the letter, the spokesman stated that the missile launches were part of the routine military exercises staged by the Korean's Peoples Army to increase the military capacity of the nation for self-defence. He maintained that his country's exercise of its legitimate right as a sovereign State was bound neither to any international law nor to bilateral or multilateral agreements.

Statements were made by several members of the Council and the representatives of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea.⁴ The President then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁵ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1695 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned the multiple launches by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea of ballistic missiles on 5 July 2006;

Demanded that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea suspend all activities related to its ballistic missile programme;

Required all Member States, in accordance with their national legal authorities and legislation and consistent with international law, to exercise vigilance and prevent missile and missile-related items, materials, goods and technology being transferred to Democratic People's Republic of Korea's missile or weapons of mass destruction programmes; and also required all Member States to prevent their procurement, and the transfer of any financial resources in relation to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea's missile or weapons of mass destruction programmes;

Strongly urged the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to return immediately to the six-party talks without precondition;

Supported the six-party talks, called for their early resumption, and urged all the participants to intensify their efforts for the full implementation of the joint statement of 19 September 2005 with a view to achieving the verifiable denuclearization of the Korean peninsula in a peaceful manner and to maintaining peace and stability on the Korean peninsula and in north-east Asia.

Several speakers stated that the launching of the missiles by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea was a matter of concern for international peace and security.⁶ Some speakers warned that the situation was especially grave since the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had been developing its nuclear weapons capabilities.⁷ A number of speakers also called on the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to return to the six-party talks.⁸

The representative of Japan welcomed resolution 1695 (2006), which had sent a strong and unmistakable message to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. He explained that the launching of the missiles was a direct threat to the security of Japan, which was far more serious in the light of the fact that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea claimed to have developed nuclear weapons and was a leading proliferator of ballistic missiles and related technologies. He also urged the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to cease all of its work on nuclear-related activities and encouraged other States to exercise vigilance and prevent missile-related items from being transferred to and from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.⁹

The representative of the United States stated that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had violated several international commitments through its actions, which constituted a direct threat to international peace and security. He welcomed the "clear, firm and unanimous" action of the Council, which he contrasted with the "weak and feckless response" of the Council to a similar missile launch by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in 1998. He explained that resolution 1695 (2006) had sent an "unequivocal, unambiguous and unanimous message to Pyongyang" to suspend its ballistic missile programme, stop its procurement of materials related to weapons of mass destruction and implement the September 2005 commitment to verifiably dismantle its nuclear weapons and existing nuclear weapons programme. He urged other States to do what they could to prevent the transfer of missile-related and weapons of mass destruction-related material to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. He advised the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to end its "games of brinkmanship," which had made the country less, not more, secure. He concluded by asserting that if the Democratic People's Republic of Korea did not comply with the resolution, the United States and other Member States would return to the Council for further action.¹⁰

The representative of China welcomed the resolution and noted that the launch by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea of a number of missiles "without adequate advance notification" had caused extensive concern in the international community. He stated that China had always been committed to maintaining peace and security on the Korean peninsula and that China had insisted on resolving the issues through peaceful dialogue, and opposed any acts leading to tension on the Korean peninsula. He stated that China had two primary objectives: to maintain peace and stability on the Korean peninsula and to keep the Council united. In that regard, he explained that China and the Russian Federation had put forward elements for a draft presidential statement and resolution, and had made vigorous efforts to seek consensus on the issue. He stated that his country was opposed to forcing through a vote on a draft resolution that was not conducive to unity and that would have further complicated and aggravated the situation. He hoped that the resolution adopted would help all the parties concerned to act in a calm manner and to continue diplomatic efforts aimed at denuclearization of the peninsula and the normalization of relations between the countries concerned.¹¹

The representative of the Russian Federation expressed serious concern over the missile launch by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. He stated that the reaction of the Council should be firm, but at the same time carefully calibrated and weighed. He cautioned against the heightening of emotions and the threatening of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with isolation. He stated that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea needed to resume its moratorium on ballistic missile testing and the negotiations on its nuclear weapons programme. He also noted that the text of the resolution had been a compromise that his country, along with China, had made with Japan, the United States and the other sponsors, but he believed it would send an appropriate signal to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on the need to show restraint and abide by its obligations regarding missiles.¹²

The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania expressed hope that the message sent by the resolution would engender a spirit of dialogue and cooperation in order to allow for an environment of peace and security in north-east Asia.¹³

The representative of France explained that the launching of the missiles by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had seriously endangered security in north-east Asia for several reasons. They included the fact that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had declared it had developed nuclear weapons and had not joined the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on their Destruction; that it was attempting to increase the range of its missiles that could carry such weapons; and that it was the main ballistic proliferator in the world, particularly in areas of tension. The combination of those factors had made the missile tests a matter which threatened the security of the entire international community. He also explained that the meaning of resolution 1695 (2006) was that the Council had a duty to condemn the missile tests and to mobilize so as to prevent the Democratic People's Republic of Korea from developing its missile and weapons of mass destruction programmes. The representative also welcomed the unanimity of the resolution as a significant development in the efforts of the Council to combat proliferation.¹⁴

The representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea stated it was "unjustifiable and gangster-like" for the Council to debate the missile launch exercise of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, both in view of the competence of the Council and under international law. He condemned the fact that some States had misused the Council for the "despicable political aim of isolating and pressuring the Democratic People's Republic of Korea." In short, he stated that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea totally rejected resolution 1695 (2006). He explained that the missile launches had been part of a routine military exercise and an expression of his country's legitimate right as a sovereign State to increase its capacity for self-defence — a right which was bound neither to any international law nor to bilateral or multilateral agreements. He explained that the moratorium on long-range missile test flights was valid only when the dialogue between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the United States was under way, but since the Administration of President George W. Bush had "totally scuttled" the bilateral dialogue, the moratorium agreement was void. He explained that the same could be said regarding the moratorium agreement on long-range test firing between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Japan: that the agreement was rendered void because Japan had "not honoured its commitments" under the agreement and had "internationalized the abduction issue". Similarly, the September 2005 agreement from the six-party talks to denuclearize the Korean peninsula was also rendered void because the United States had applied financial sanctions on his country and threatened it with large-scale military exercises. He explained that the motive of the missile launch by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea was to deter the United States and to keep the balance of forces and preserve peace and stability in north-east Asia, especially in the light of the fact that the United States had declared his country as part of an "axis of evil" susceptible to a pre-emptive nuclear attack. He asserted that it would be "quite foolish to notify Washington and Tokyo" of missile launches in advance, given that the United States, which was technically at war with his country, had threatened to intercept his country's missiles, in collusion with Japan. He ended by noting that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea remained unchanged in its will to denuclearize the Korean peninsula in a negotiated, peaceful manner and that the Korean People's Army would go on with missile launch exercises as part of its efforts to bolster deterrence for self-defence in the future.¹⁵

The representative of the Republic of Korea expressed regret over the decision of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to launch the missiles. He argued that the action had adversely affected inter-Korean relations and he urged the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to return to six-party talks and comply with international efforts for non-proliferation.¹⁶

Decision of 6 October 2006 (5546th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5546th meeting, on 6 October 2006, the President (Japan) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its deep concern over the statement of 3 October 2006 by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, in which it stated that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea would conduct a nuclear test in the future;

Underlined that such a test would bring universal condemnation by the international community; urged the Democratic People's Republic of Korea not to undertake such a test and to refrain from any action that might aggravate tension, to work on the resolution of non-proliferation concerns and to facilitate a peaceful and comprehensive solution through political and diplomatic efforts; and reiterated the need for the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to comply fully with all the provisions of Security Council resolution 1695 (2006);

Urged the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to return immediately to the six-party talks without precondition, and to work towards the expeditious implementation of the joint statement of 19 September 2005, and in particular to abandon all nuclear weapons and existing nuclear programmes;

Stressed that a nuclear test, if carried out by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, would represent a clear threat to international peace and security and that, should the Democratic People's Republic of Korea ignore calls of the international community, the Council would act consistent with its responsibility under the Charter.

28. Letter dated 22 November 2006 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council

Initial proceedings

Decision of 1 December 2006 (5576th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5576th meeting, on 1 December 2006, in which the representative of Nepal was invited to participate, the Security Council included in its agenda, without objection, the item entitled "Letter dated 22 November 2006 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council".¹

In the letter, with regard to the peace process in Nepal and the request for United Nations assistance in that process, the Secretary-General reported that the peace talks between the Seven-Party Alliance forming the Government of Nepal and the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist) had led to the successful conclusion of an agreement on 8 November 2006, which had been consolidated by a Comprehensive Peace Agreement, signed on 21 November 2006. In that agreement, the parties had agreed on the basic arrangements for the cantonment of the combatants of the Maoist People's Liberation Army and the storage of the arms and munitions of both sides. The Comprehensive Peace Agreement declared the commitment of the parties to transform the existing ceasefire into permanent peace.

Referring to the letter dated 9 August 2006 from the Prime Minister of Nepal,² the letter of the same date from the Chairman of the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist)³ and the letter dated 16 November 2006 from the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Nepal,⁴ the Secretary-General noted that the United Nations had been requested to, inter alia, monitor the management of arms and armed personnel by providing qualified monitors supported by appropriate technical capacity. The scope and nature of that assistance, with a view to creating an atmosphere conducive to free and fair elections for the Constituent Assembly, was in the consultation phase between the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General and the concerned parties. The Secretary-General stated that, prior to such an assessment, it was imperative that the United Nations be in a position to support the peace process during the interim phase by predeploying an appropriate presence in the field as soon as possible, and should his intent to proceed accordingly.

The President (Qatar) made a statement on behalf of the Council, by which the Council, inter alia:

Warmly welcomed the signing on 21 November 2006 by the Government of Nepal and the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist) of a Comprehensive Peace Agreement, and the stated commitment of both parties to transforming the existing ceasefire into a permanent peace;

Noted the request of the parties for United Nations assistance in implementing key aspects of the Agreement, in particular monitoring of arrangements relating to the management of arms and armed personnel of both sides and election monitoring; agreed that the United Nations should respond positively and expeditiously to that request for assistance;

Stood ready to consider the formal proposals of the Secretary-General as soon as the technical assessment was complete.

Decision of 23 January 2007 (5622nd meeting):
resolution 1740 (2007)

At its 5622nd meeting, on 23 January 2007, in which the representative of Nepal was invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 9 January 2007 on the request of Nepal for United Nations assistance in support of its peace process.⁵ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the internal armed conflict in Nepal, between government forces and the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist), had begun in 1996 and had ended with the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement on 21 November 2006, which consolidated the 12-point understanding signed in November 2005 between the Seven-Party Alliance of parliamentary parties and the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist) vowing to “establish absolute democracy by ending autocratic monarchy”. On the basis of the requests contained in the above-mentioned letter,⁶ the Secretary-General had dispatched a multidisciplinary assessment mission to Nepal from 9 to 17 December 2006 to develop an integrated concept of operations for a United Nations political mission in Nepal. Plans were also developed for the rapid deployment of up to 35 monitors and 25 electoral personnel as approved by the Council in its presidential statement of 1 December 2006. On the basis of the findings of the assessment mission, the Secretary-General recommended that a special political mission, the United Nations Mission in Nepal (UNMIN), be established for a period of 12 months until after the implementation of the results of the 2007 Constituent Assembly election. The main components of the Mission were related to the areas of support for the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, as requested by the parties. Core assistance to the peace process was to be provided through monitoring of the management of arms and armies, monitoring of the ceasefire arrangements and support to the Constituent Assembly election. As the concerned parties had called for assistance in creating a free and fair atmosphere for the Constituent Assembly election by monitoring the non-military aspects of the ceasefire arrangements, the Secretary-General underscored the need for close coordination between the well-established Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and the monitoring functions of UNMIN in Nepal. Consistent with the principle of an integrated approach, the Mission would establish a coordination unit whose main function would be to ensure strategic coherence and operational cooperation among members of the United Nations family and donors in Nepal.

At the meeting, the President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁷ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1740 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to establish a United Nations political mission in Nepal (UNMIN) under the leadership of a Special Representative of the Secretary-General and with the following mandate: (a) to monitor the management of arms and armed personnel of both sides; (b) to assist the parties through a Joint Monitoring Coordinating Committee in implementing their agreement; (c) to assist in the monitoring of the ceasefire arrangements; (d) to provide technical support for the planning, preparation and conduct of the election of a Constituent Assembly; and (e) to provide a small team of electoral monitors to review all technical aspects of the electoral process, and report on the conduct of the election;

Decided also that the mandate of UNMIN should be for a period of 12 months;

Requested the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed of progress in implementing the resolution;

Requested the parties in Nepal to take the necessary steps to promote the safety, security and freedom of movement of UNMIN and associated personnel in executing the tasks defined in the mandate.

Introduction

The present publication constitutes the fifteenth supplement to the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council, 1946-1951, which was issued in 1954. It covers the proceedings of the Security Council from the 4892nd meeting, held on 12 January 2004, to the 5816th meeting, on 27 December 2007.

The Repertoire was mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 686 (VII) of 5 December 1952, entitled “Ways and means for making the evidence of customary international law more readily available”. It is a guide to the proceedings of the Council and sets forth in a readily accessible form the practices and procedures to which the Council has had recourse. The Repertoire is not intended as a substitute for the records of the Council, which constitute the only comprehensive and authoritative account of its deliberations.

The categories employed to arrange the material are not intended to suggest the existence of procedures or practices that have not been clearly or demonstrably established by the Council itself. The Council is at all times, within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations, its own provisional rules of procedure, and practice established through notes by the President of the Security Council, master of its own procedure.

In recording the Council’s practice, the headings under which the practices and procedures of the Council were presented in the original publication have been largely retained. Where necessary, however, adjustments have been made to better reflect the Council’s practice. For ease of reference, the studies contained in chapter VIII are organized according to region or thematic issue. This introduction contains a table indicating the membership of the Security Council during the period under review.

The agenda items considered by the Council during 2004-2007, and the meetings at which they were considered, are presented in a table hereunder according to region or thematic issue.*

Symbols of United Nations documents are composed of letters combined with figures. Security Council documents are indicated by a symbol such as S/2006/568. References to the verbatim records of meetings of the Council are given in the form S/PV.5710, meetings being numbered consecutively, starting with the first meeting in 1946. As in previous recent supplements, reference is made in this Supplement only to the provisional verbatim records of Security Council meetings, as the practice of publishing the meeting records in the Official Records has been discontinued.

The resolutions adopted by the Security Council and the statements by the President are published in the yearly volumes of Resolutions and Decisions of the Security Council. Resolutions are identified by a number followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, for example, resolution 1650 (2005). Since 1994, statements by the President have been identified by the prefix S/PRST/- followed by four digits representing the year in which the statement was released. A new numbering sequence is established at the beginning of each calendar year.

* For the table, see volume I, introduction.

Readers who wish to consult the full record of a meeting or the text of a Security Council document referred to in the Repertoire may do so on the official United Nations Documentation Centre website, www.un.org/en/documents/. Security Council documents can be accessed on the website by selecting “Official Document System (ODS)” or one of the direct links to specific categories of documents. The volumes of resolutions and decisions may be accessed by symbol (S/INF/59, for 2003/04; S/INF/60, for 2004/05; S/INF/61, for 2005/06; S/INF/62 for 2006/07 and S/INF/63 for 2007/08). The original Repertoire and the other supplements may be consulted at www.un.org/en/sc/repertoire.

29. The situation in Cyprus

Decision of 21 April 2004 (4947th meeting): rejection of a draft resolution

At its 4940th meeting, on 2 April 2004, at which no statements were made, the Security Council heard a briefing by the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Cyprus on the Secretary-General's mission of good offices.¹ The Special Adviser recalled that on 13 February 2004 the two parties in Cyprus had agreed to resume negotiations on the basis of the Secretary-General's plan to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem through separate and simultaneous referendums before the accession of Cyprus to the European Union on 1 May 2004. To that end, the parties had committed themselves in a first phase to seek to agree on changes and to complete the plan in all respects by 22 March within the framework of the Secretary-General's mission of good offices. The parties had further agreed that, in the absence of such agreement, the Secretary-General would convene a meeting of the two sides, with the participation of Greece and Turkey, in a concentrated effort to agree on a finalized text by 29 March. As a final resort, in the event of a continuing and persistent deadlock, the parties had invited the Secretary-General to use his discretion to finalize the text to be submitted to referendums on the basis of his plan. The Special Adviser reminded the members of the Council that the process was based on the conditions laid down by the Secretary-General in his report of 1 April 2003² to resume his good offices, which had received the support of the Council in resolution 1475 (2003). That process had resulted in a finalized text ("Basis for an agreement on a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem"), which had been presented by the Secretary-General at negotiations in Bürgenstock, Switzerland, on 31 March 2004 and would go to referendum on 24 April 2004.³

The Special Adviser emphasized that while the plan had been finalized, as a last resort, by the Secretary-General, it was not an invention of the Secretary-General. He stressed that the plan embodied the key concepts and trade-offs that had emerged from a long process of negotiation. For a detailed explanation of the main points of the plan, he referred the members of the Council to the report of the Secretary-General of 1 April 2003,² in which the Secretary-General had stated that the plan provided for a United Cyprus Republic with a single sovereignty, international personality and citizenship, which would comprise two politically equal constituent states, the Greek Cypriot State and the Turkish Cypriot State, to be joined together in a bicomunal, bizonal federation. As a constitutive act for a reunified Cyprus, the plan required the holding of separate simultaneous referendums by the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot populations.

The Special Adviser reminded the members of the Council that there were six appendices to the agreement on a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem: a foundation agreement, with annexes, including a constitution for a United Cyprus Republic; constitutions of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot constituent States; a treaty on matters related to the new state of affairs in Cyprus; a draft act of adaptation of the terms of accession of the United Cyprus Republic to the European Union; matters to be submitted to the Security Council for decision; and measures to be taken during April 2004. The Special Adviser then summarized the main improvements made to the plan since the issuance of the Secretary-General's report of 1 April 2003, which included the supervision of transfer of territory by the United Nations, the schedule for withdrawal of Greek and Turkish troops from the island and the mandate of the future United Nations operation in Cyprus.

¹ During this period, in addition to the meetings covered in this section, the Council held a number of meetings in private with the troop-contributing countries to the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus, pursuant to resolution 1353 (2001), annex II, sections A and B. The meetings were held on 7 June 2004 (4983rd), 8 October 2004 (5054th), 9 June 2005 (5198th), 7 December 2005 (5316th), 31 May 2006 (5447th), 8 December 2006 (5582nd), 8 June 2007 (5689th) and 7 December 2007 (5794th).

³ The plan, in the version presented by the Secretary-General on 31 March 2004, was not issued as a document of the Security Council.

The Special Adviser also drew the Council's attention to the steps that needed to be taken in April so that the plan could enter into force on 29 April 2004 as envisioned, should both populations agree to it during the referendums. Those steps included some final technical work of the parties; the written confirmation of the guarantor Powers of Greece, Turkey and the United Kingdom that they agreed to the foundation agreements being submitted to referendums and that, upon approval of the foundation agreement and completion of their internal ratification procedures, they would sign the treaty on matters related to the new state of affairs in Cyprus contained in the plan; the adoption of the act of adaptation of the terms of the accession of Cyprus to the European Union by the Council of the European Union to make way for a reunited Cyprus to accede to the European Union; and the approval by the Security Council of a substantially revised mandate for the United Nations operation in Cyprus. The Special Adviser stressed that the Secretary-General believed that the plan was fair and balanced and hoped that the people on each side would agree.⁴

On 16 April 2004, the Secretary-General submitted a report on Cyprus, focusing on his mission of good offices.⁵ He recalled that, despite the fact that an opportunity to solve the Cyprus problem had been missed, the plan that he had submitted to the leaders of the two sides had remained on the table. Following communications and consultations that had led him to believe that a new effort might be warranted, he had invited the leaders of the two sides to New York to resume negotiations on 10 February 2004.

The Secretary-General subsequently referred to the matters to be submitted to the Security Council for decision (appendix E to the comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem by which the Council would be requested to take certain decisions to enter into force upon the reunification of Cyprus. By those decisions, the Council would endorse the foundation agreement; impose an arms embargo against Cyprus; and establish a new United Nations operation to undertake responsibilities connected with the implementation of the comprehensive settlement. The Secretary-General, also provided details relating to the proposed mandate, composition, strength and structure of the new United Nations operation in Cyprus.

Bearing in mind the understanding of the parties as reflected in the comprehensive settlement, as well as the mode of entry into force, the Secretary-General requested the Security Council to consider taking action in advance of the referendums of 24 April. Noting that the decision to be made by the people of Cyprus on 24 April was theirs alone, the Secretary-General observed that timely action by the Council would go a long way to reassuring the people that the settlement would have the strong support of the United Nations and that its security provisions would be fully implemented.

At its 4947th meeting, on 21 April 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 16 April 2004.⁵ Statements were made by the representatives of Algeria, Angola, Benin, Brazil, Chile, China, France, Pakistan, Romania, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States.

At the outset of the meeting, the President (Germany) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution that had been submitted by the United Kingdom and the United States,⁶ by which the Council would decide that the provisions set out in the annex to the resolution should take effect only upon notification by the Secretary-General that the foundation agreement had entered into force, following the free decision of the Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots. In its annexes, the draft resolution contained provisions (a) replacing the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) with a new operation in Cyprus, to be known as the United Nations Settlement Implementation Mission in Cyprus, with a mandate to, inter alia, monitor the implementation of the foundation agreement; (b) imposing an arms embargo against Cyprus under Chapter VII of the Charter; and (c) calling upon all parties concerned to implement faithfully and fully all aspects of the comprehensive settlement within the time frames prescribed therein.

Speaking before the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation recalled that his country had consistently supported the Secretary-General's mission of good offices and his efforts aimed at a just settlement of the Cyprus problem, on the basis of

Security Council resolutions and the express will of both Cypriot communities. He stressed that the international community, and in particular the Security Council, should help the Cypriot parties to reach arrangements themselves, but should not impose decisions upon them. He emphasized that the referendums planned for 24 April had to be held without any external interference or pressure. He held that the Council would be in a position to take a considered decision, including on the deployment of a new peacekeeping operation, after the referendums had been held. Turning to the process of negotiating the draft resolution, the representative of the Russian Federation expressed deep regret at how the work on the draft resolution had been structured. He held that a technically and legally complex decision, such as the formulation of the parameters of a new United Nations peacekeeping operation in Cyprus and the imposition of an arms embargo, would have called for the most thorough and careful analysis. Instead, he held, the sponsors of the draft resolution had submitted it for a vote after having “ignored” the views of other members of the Council. He noted that views opposed to such a precipitous adoption of a draft resolution on the eve of the referendums had been expressed by the parties directly interested in the settlement as well as by the majority of members of the Council. Under such circumstances, the Russian Federation had no other choice but to exercise a veto on technical grounds, in order to ensure conditions in the future for normal, mutually respectful work to agree upon Security Council decisions that were acceptable to all parties. He stressed that his delegation was prepared to play a constructive role in formulating a draft resolution on the issue after the referendums, on the understanding that such a draft would take into account the results of the referendums and would provide for universally acceptable ways to remove concerns on the part of the Cypriot parties.⁷

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and received 14 votes in favour and 1 against (Russian Federation). It was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United Kingdom expressed disappointment that the Council had not been able to reach consensus on the draft resolution. He noted that no delegation was opposed to the general substance of the draft, while one member of the Council had voted against it for technical reasons of procedure and timing. He stressed that the fact that an overwhelming majority of the Council had voted in favour of the draft would send a strong message of support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and for his plan. That would offer the people of Cyprus reassurance that the Council would act on the obligations foreseen for it in the comprehensive settlement, including the establishment of a strengthened United Nations peacekeeping operation and the imposition of an arms embargo. He expressed his delegation’s hope that the Cypriot people would seize the historic opportunity to find a peaceful solution to the conflict in Cyprus that the plan of the Secretary-General was offering. Stating that the draft resolution stayed on the table and that his delegation would ask for the Council to take speedy action after the referendums, he stressed that there should be no doubt that the Council stood ready to fulfil its commitments.⁸

The representative of the United States also expressed disappointment that one member of the Council had not been prepared to support the Secretary-General’s request to adopt the draft resolution prior to the referendums, in order to provide assurances to the Greek Cypriots that the security structures provided for in the settlement would be in place before their vote on 24 April. He stated that it was evident that, if the settlement was approved by all Cypriots in the referendums, there would be rapid action in the Council to establish the United Nations settlement implementation mission in Cyprus as well as the arms embargo.⁹

Several other speakers stated that their delegations had voted in favour of the draft resolution to support the efforts of the Secretary-General for a resolution of the conflict.¹⁰ Some emphasized that there was general agreement among the Council members regarding the substance of the draft and stressed that, should the people of Cyprus vote for reunification, the Council stood ready to assume its responsibilities under the comprehensive settlement.¹¹

Other speakers expressed their preference that a unified Cyprus accede to the European Union.¹² A number of speakers also expressed regret that consultations had not been extended in order to achieve consensus before proceeding to vote on the draft resolution.¹³

Decision of 11 June 2004 (4989th meeting):
resolution 1548 (2004)

Following the rejection of the comprehensive settlement plan in the referendums of 24 April 2004, the Security Council, at its 4954th meeting, on 28 April 2004, heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs on the outcome of the referendums in Cyprus; no statements were made at the meeting.

In his briefing, the Under-Secretary-General reported that, following the finalization of the foundation agreement in Bürgenstock on 31 March, the two parties had continued to work on technical matters of the comprehensive settlement plan up until the last day before the referendums and that the authenticated text had been sent to the parties on 23 April. On 7 April, the Greek Cypriot leader, in an address to the nation, had called on Greek Cypriots to reject the Secretary-General's plan and to "send a resounding no" to the plan, thereby joining the Turkish Cypriot leader. Nevertheless a number of political leaders on both sides had strongly advocated a favourable vote. One of the main political parties on the Greek Cypriot side, AKEL (Progressive Party of Working People), which had traditionally been in favour of a settlement of the Cyprus problem, however, had indicated that it would be able to support the plan only if certain unspecified security guarantees were given by the Security Council. AKEL had called for a "soft no" vote following the outcome of consideration of the matter by the Council, but had expressed the hope that it would in due time translate into a vote in favour of an eventual second referendum on the plan. Stating that it was too early to provide a detailed analysis of the amount of information that was made available to the people during the referendum campaign, the Under-Secretary-General nevertheless noted that concerns about the issue of access to the media by international personalities from the United Nations and the European Union had been raised by the Special Adviser with the Greek Cypriot leader.

The Under-Secretary-General further reported that, in the referendums, the foundation agreement had been rejected by the Greek Cypriot population by 75.83 per cent to 24.17 per cent, while the Turkish Cypriot population had approved the settlement plan by 64.91 per cent to 35.09 per cent. The foundation agreement would therefore not enter into force since the plan required approval by both sides.

According to the Under-Secretary-General, the Secretary-General respected the outcome of the referendums, while regretting that a unique and historic opportunity to resolve the Cyprus problem and to reunite Cyprus in time for accession to the European Union on 1 May had been missed. The Secretary-General remained convinced that the plan represented a fair, viable and carefully balanced compromise. The Secretary-General hoped that the Greek Cypriot community might arrive at a different view in the fullness of time, after a profound and sober assessment of their decision and its potential consequences. At the same time, the Secretary-General applauded the decision of the Turkish Cypriots, who had approved the plan notwithstanding the significant sacrifices that it entailed for many of them and regretted that the Turkish Cypriots would not equally enjoy the benefits of European Union membership as from 1 May 2004. The Under-Secretary-General concluded that the Secretary-General had begun to give careful thought to the implications of the result of the referendums for the United Nations and the way ahead and would present a detailed written report to the Security Council with his conclusions in due course.¹⁴

On 28 May 2004, the Secretary-General submitted a report on his mission of good offices in Cyprus,¹⁵ which contained a detailed summary of efforts undertaken to resolve the Cyprus problem since the agreement to restart negotiations of 13 February 2004, including the three phases of negotiations leading to the finalization of the comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem. It surveyed the improvements in the finalized plan, and reviewed developments between the finalization of the settlement plan in Bürgenstock on 31 March 2004 and the holding of the referendums in Cyprus on 24 April.

The Secretary-General stated that the outcome of the referendums represented another missed opportunity to resolve the Cyprus problem. The decision of the Greek Cypriots to reject the plan was to be respected, but he noted that the decision was a major setback to peace efforts and stated that the Greek Cypriot people might wish to reflect on the implications of the vote in the future. He added that the Security Council would be well advised to address Greek Cypriot concerns about security and implementation of the plan, which needed to be articulated with clarity and finality. At the same time, the Secretary-General welcomed the decision of the Turkish Cypriots and maintained that the Turkish Cypriot vote had undone any rationale for pressuring and isolating them and expressed his hope that the members of the Council, while in no way affording recognition or assisting secession, would give a strong lead to all States to cooperate both bilaterally and in international bodies to eliminate unnecessary restrictions and barriers that had the effect of isolating the Turkish Cypriots and impeding their development, deeming such a move consistent with resolutions 541 (1983) and 550 (1984). The Secretary-General concluded that there was no apparent basis for resuming his mission of good offices while the current stalemate continued. He announced that, given the watershed in efforts to resolve the Cyprus problem, he would conduct a review of the full range of United Nations peace activities in Cyprus, to be completed within three months, including on the mandate, force level and concept of operation of UNFICYP.

The Secretary-General observed that, during the four-and-a-half-year effort, the parties had found it difficult to agree on key points and had often left it to the United Nations to stimulate the process. He regretted that more could not be agreed between the parties themselves and that little was done by some participants in the negotiations to prepare the people for a compromise. The Secretary-General expressed concerns regarding the way in which the plan had been presented to the public, particularly on one side. While a comprehensive settlement had proved elusive, major achievements had nevertheless been made in the period of the negotiations in that the obstacles which had hitherto prevented Cyprus initiatives from getting beyond generalities had been overcome. While the plan was legally null and void in the aftermath of the referendums, the Secretary-General maintained that the plan had been a comprehensive and carefully balanced settlement proposal, which remained ready to be implemented, and which also remained the only foreseeable basis for settlement at the disposal of Cypriots.

At its 4986th meeting, on 8 June 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 28 May 2004.¹⁵ At the meeting, at which no statements were made, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Cyprus. Introducing the report of the Secretary-General, the Special Adviser stated that, although the ultimate outcome of the good offices mission had not been a success, major achievements had nevertheless been made and needed to be built upon to keep alive the prospects of reconciliation and reunification in the future, and that the Council had an important role in that regard. The Special Adviser also said that the Secretary-General had the previous day received a letter from the Greek Cypriot side,¹⁶ containing comments on the Secretary-General's report.¹⁷

At its 4989th meeting, on 11 June 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus dated 26 May 2004,¹⁸ which the Secretary-General stated that, in the absence of a comprehensive settlement, the presence of UNFICYP on the island continued to be necessary. He recommended that the Council extend the mandate of the Force for a further period of six months, while the Secretariat would conduct a review of the mandate, force levels and concept of operations of UNFICYP.

Statements were made by the representatives of Algeria, Chile, Pakistan, Romania, the United Kingdom and the United States. The President (Philippines) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United Kingdom.¹⁹ The President noted that he had met with representatives of the parties, who had confirmed that they maintained their well-known positions vis-à-vis the item on the Council's agenda. The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1548 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNFICYP for a further period ending on 15 December 2004 and to consider the recommendations of the Secretary-General in his review of UNFICYP and to act upon them within one month of receiving them;

Requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the resolution.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United Kingdom welcomed the unanimous adoption of the resolution and supported the Secretary-General's decision to conduct a comprehensive review of the role of UNFICYP.²⁰ The representative of the United States welcomed the fact that, by adopting the resolution, the Council had set a timeline for acting upon the recommendations of the Secretary-General, in particular in view of changed circumstances and limited resources for peacekeeping operations. The representative of the United States also spoke on the Secretary-General's report on his mission of good offices in Cyprus,²¹ expressing his delegation's regret at the results of the referendums on the comprehensive settlement plan. He also expressed wholehearted support for the conclusions of the report, including its analyses of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot votes. He agreed with the recommendation of the report that the Security Council, while in no way affording recognition or assisting secession, should give a strong lead to all States to cooperate to eliminate unnecessary restrictions and barriers that had the effect of isolating Turkish Cypriots and impeding their development, and concurred with the assessment of the Secretary-General that such a move was consistent with resolutions 541 (1983) and 550 (1984).²² Other speakers also supported the Secretary-General's recommendation to eliminate unnecessary restrictions on the Turkish Cypriot population, with due regard for resolutions 541 (1983) and 550 (1984).²³

The representative of Pakistan expressed serious reservations with regard to the adopted resolution, stating that the Council should have voted for a mere technical extension for only three months, in order to enable the Council to act on the review of the Secretary-General. Moreover, he held that the inclusion of a paragraph urging the Turkish Cypriot side and the Turkish forces to rescind all remaining restrictions on UNFICYP and to restore the military status quo in Strovilia changed it from a procedural to a substantive proposition and that the Council should have taken a more balanced approach. He urged actions by the international community to take concrete steps to end the economic isolation of the Turkish Cypriot community and held that the inclusion in the resolution of a provision to welcome the report of the Secretary-General would have been one way to indicate even-handedness.²⁴ The representative of Algeria stated that his delegation also would have preferred that the draft resolution be a purely technical text.²⁵

resolution 1568 (2004)

At its 5061st meeting, on 22 October 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus dated 24 September 2004.²⁶ In his report, in accordance with the findings of the review of the mandate, force levels and concept of operations of UNFICYP by the Secretariat, the Secretary-General recommended a reduction of the strength of the UNFICYP military component by about 30 per cent to reflect the changed circumstances. In addition, he recommended that the number of civilian police should be increased, while remaining within the current authorized strength, and that the political and civil affairs component of the mission should be strengthened. The Secretary-General also announced his intention to conduct a further review before the end of the next mandate period in mid-2005.

Statements were made by the representatives of Pakistan, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States. At the outset of the meeting, the President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United Kingdom.²⁷ The President noted that he had met with representatives of the parties, who had confirmed that they maintained their well-known positions vis-à-vis the item on the agenda of the Council. The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1568 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations for the amendment of the concept of operations and force level of UNFICYP, as outlined in his report of 24 September 2004;

Decided to extend the mandate of UNFICYP for a further period ending on 15 June 2005;

Urged the Turkish Cypriot side and Turkish forces to rescind without delay all remaining restrictions on UNFICYP, and called on them to restore in Strovilia the military status quo which existed there prior to 30 June 2000.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States noted the strained resources for peacekeeping operations and welcomed the fact that the resolution endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendation for a 30 per cent force-level reduction.²⁸ The representatives of the United States and Pakistan expressed their disappointment that the Security Council had so far not endorsed the Secretary-General's report on his good offices mission in Cyprus²⁹ and his recommendation to eliminate unnecessary restrictions on the Turkish Cypriot population.³⁰ The representative of Pakistan maintained that the resolution unnecessarily singled out resolution 1251 (1999), and held that the resolution should have reflected the fact that the review team of the Secretariat had consulted with all relevant parties on the island, as well as the guarantor Powers on the concept and proposal to extend the mandate of UNFICYP.³¹ The representative of the Russian Federation, agreeing on the importance of establishing a favourable environment for the renewal of the negotiation process, including through economic relations between the two Cypriot communities, held that in that regard the Council should strictly observe the provisions of resolutions 541 (1983) and 550 (1984).³² The representative of the United Kingdom expressed his disappointment that, having voted for a settlement, the Turkish Cypriots had so far seen little benefit and stated that his Government remained committed to ending the isolation of the Turkish Cypriots and to reducing the economic gap between the two communities.³³

Decision of 15 June 2005 (5202nd meeting): resolution 1604 (2005)

At its 5202nd meeting, on 15 June 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus dated 27 May 2005,³⁴ which contained, together with a description of the situation and the activities of UNFICYP, the findings of a review of the restructuring of UNFICYP. The review found, inter alia, that the amended more mobile concept of operations allowed UNFICYP to maintain the same level of mandate implementation with a reduced troop strength. The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the mandate of UNFICYP for a further period of six months with the current authorized strength and concept of operations.

The President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United Kingdom.³⁵ The President noted that he had met with representatives of the parties, who had confirmed that they maintained their well-known positions vis-à-vis the item on the Council's agenda. The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1604 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNFICYP for a further period ending on 15 December 2005;

Called on the Turkish Cypriot side and Turkish forces to restore in Strovilia the military status quo which existed there prior to 30 June 2000.

Deliberations of 22 June 2005 (5211th meeting)

At its 5211th meeting, on 22 June 2005, at which no statements were made, the Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs. The Under-Secretary-General briefed members of the Council on his consultations in Cyprus, Greece and Turkey on the future of the Secretary-General's mission of good offices in Cyprus. Assessing the developments, the Under-Secretary-General noted on the positive side that all parties wanted to see some sort of resumption of active United Nations good offices and accepted that the comprehensive settlement plan should serve as the document on which the negotiations would resume. On the negative side, he noted that the gap between the stated positions of the parties on substance appeared to be wide and that confidence between them did not seem to be high. He concluded that the Secretary-General believed that launching an intensive new process prematurely would be inadvisable and that nothing positive would be served by a new effort that again ended in high-profile failure or in a frustrating stalemate. The Secretary-General therefore considered it prudent to proceed very carefully and intended to reflect on the future of his mission of good offices in the period ahead, taking into full account the reaction of the Council to the briefing.³⁶

Decisions of 14 December 2005 to 14 December 2007: resolutions 1642 (2005), 1687 (2006), 1728 (2006), 1758 (2007) and 1789 (2007)

At its 5324th, 5465th, 5593rd, 5696th and 5803rd meetings,³⁷ the Council adopted resolutions,³⁸ unanimously without debate, extending the mandate of UNFICYP for a period of six months, based upon the recommendations contained in the reports of the Secretary-General on UNFICYP.³⁹

In his reports, the Secretary-General reported that the situation in Cyprus remained stable. Nevertheless, he believed that only the achievement of a comprehensive settlement would bring an end to the Cyprus problem. In the absence of such a settlement, the presence of UNFICYP continued to be necessary and the Secretary-General therefore recommended an extension of the mandate of the Force for a further period of six months. The Secretary-General also regularly included in his reports an overview of his activities in the framework of his mission of good offices. In his report dated 1 December 2006, he reported on an agreement reached between the two sides on 8 July 2006 to begin a two-track process involving discussion by technical committees of issues affecting the day-to-day life of the people and, concurrently, consideration by working groups of substantive issues, both of which would contribute to a comprehensive settlement.⁴⁰ In subsequent reports, the Secretary-General deplored the lack of progress made in implementing the agreement.⁴¹

At each meeting, the President noted that he had met with representatives of the parties, who had confirmed that they maintained their well-known positions vis-à-vis the item on the Council's agenda. By the resolutions adopted, the Council, in addition to extending the mandate of UNFICYP for consecutive periods of six months, called on the Turkish Cypriot side and Turkish forces to restore in Strovilia the military status quo which had existed there prior to 30 June 2000. Starting with resolution 1728 (2006) of 15 December 2006, the Council expressed full support to the process initiated by the agreement of 8 July 2006,⁴² and called for early completion of the preparatory phase so that a fully-fledged good offices process could resume as soon as possible. In resolutions 1758 (2007) of 15 June 2007 and 1789 (2007) of 14 December 2007, the Council noted with concern the lack of progress in that process and called upon all parties to immediately engage constructively with the United Nations efforts. The Council also reaffirmed that the status quo was unacceptable and that negotiations on a final political solution to the Cyprus problem had been at an impasse for too long. The Council also called on both sides to engage in consultations with UNFICYP on the demarcation of the buffer zone.

At two of the meetings, statements were made by the representative of Greece. At the 5465th meeting, the representative expressed his regret that resolution 1687 (2006) did not convey a sufficiently clear and strong message as to the basis, the scope and the objectives of United Nations efforts for a fair and lasting settlement of the problem of Cyprus.⁴³ At the 5593rd meeting, he expressed the appreciation of his country to UNFICYP and the Secretariat for their contribution to maintaining stability on the island.⁴⁴

30. Items relating to the situation in the former Yugoslavia

A. The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina

Decision of 25 June 2004 (4997th meeting): statement by the President

By a letter dated 19 February 2004 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the Secretary-General transmitted the twenty-fifth report of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina.¹ In the report, the High Representative stated that he remained committed to his overarching objective of ensuring that Bosnia and Herzegovina was put irreversibly on the road to statehood and the European Union. His priorities centred on consolidating the rule of law and advancing economic reform — “justice and jobs” — while further improving the functioning and effectiveness of the key governing institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina. With regard to the mandate of his Office, he reported, inter alia, measurable progress in several key areas, including in the field of the rule of law, indirect tax policy, defence reform, intelligence reform and the setting up of a domestic war crimes chamber. In addition, he reported that the principal targets for the transition to domestic leadership of responsibilities concerning the right to return of refugees had been achieved and that the Reconstruction and Return Task Force of the Office of the High Representative could be closed down, having successfully completed its mandate. With regard to the political environment, the High Representative observed that relations in the ruling coalition remained strained, sustaining parallelism along ethnic lines, in spite of the constitutional changes that had been introduced two years earlier. In addition, the reporting period had been marked by political clashes between the Government and the opposition in advance of the municipal elections that were to be held in October 2004. He reported that the European Union Police Mission, as well as its programmes aimed at creating sustainable policing arrangements under Bosnia and Herzegovina ownership and in line with the best European and international standards, had become a well-established feature of police life in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The High Representative also reported on an increasing number of legal challenges to the police certification process that had been conducted by the International Police Task Force as a part of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH) until the end of its mandate in December 2002. He reported that those challenges could lead to the reinstatement of police officers who had been denied certification by the Task Force. He held that this posed a serious threat to the United Nations policing legacy and could cause grave damage to the reputation of the United Nations in Bosnia and Herzegovina. He emphasized that this matter required immediate attention by the United Nations and that, although he had repeatedly sought advice from the United Nations on that matter, a satisfactory and workable solution had so far not been found.

At its 4920th meeting, on 3 March 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned letter dated 19 February 2004 from the Secretary-General.¹ The Council heard briefings by the High Representative, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations and the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Bosnia and Herzegovina, following which statements were made by all members of the Council and the representatives of Ireland (speaking on behalf of the European Union)² and Croatia.

In his briefing, the High Representative pointed out that Bosnia and Herzegovina had two clear and achievable goals to aim for: accession to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) Partnership for Peace programme and the start of negotiations for a Stabilization and Association Agreement with the European Union. He highlighted the new collegial atmosphere in the Council of Ministers and the high degree of statesmanship and leadership within the political community, but warned that the reform process remained hamstrung by an overburdened agenda, residual obstructionism and the dysfunctional aspects of the structures of the Dayton Agreement. He emphasized that the economy remained his main worry.³

The Under-Secretary-General, speaking on the legal challenges to the police certification process conducted by the International Police Task Force, underlined the political importance of the problem and the need for an early solution. He recalled that the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina had been and remained under an obligation, binding under international law, to give effect to the decisions of the Task Force, and held that the support of the Council would be of critical importance in reminding the authorities of those obligations.⁴

The Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Bosnia and Herzegovina held that his country was a positive example of how intervention by the international community could be effective and of how a post-conflict country could become an active participant in the process of regional stabilization. He assured the Council that his Government would continue with the entire process of reform. In addition, he pointed to the imminent replacement of the NATO forces with a task force of the European Union and expressed his expectation that the Council would be fully involved in defining the precise mandate of the new task force.⁵

In their statements following the briefings, most of the speakers agreed with the assessments by the High Representative and recognized the progress achieved. In addition, several speakers expressed concern at the legal challenges to the police officer certification process and called for consideration of the issue by the Council.⁶ A number of speakers reiterated the need to intensify efforts to bring fugitive war criminals, especially Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić, before the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.⁷ The representative of the Russian Federation held that the exceptional executive powers of the High Representative should be used only in exceptional cases and with a mandatory prior agreement with the members of the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council.⁸ The representative of Ireland, speaking on behalf of the European Union, stated that the European Union had confirmed its readiness to undertake a follow-on mission to the NATO Stabilization Force (SFOR).⁹

At its 4997th meeting, on 25 June 2004, the Council again included in its agenda the letter from the Secretary-General.¹⁰ The Council extended an invitation to the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina to participate in the meeting. At the meeting, the President (Philippines) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Recalled its relevant resolutions and its support for the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

Reaffirmed the legal basis in the Charter of the United Nations on which the International Police Task Force was given its mandate;

Affirmed that the certification process was carried out pursuant to the mandate of Task Force and fully endorsed this process;

Expressed concern at the failure of the competent authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to take due steps to implement decisions to deny certification;

Called upon the Bosnia and Herzegovina authorities to ensure that all decisions of the Task Force were fully implemented and that the employment of any persons denied certification by the Task Force be terminated, and that such persons would be precluded from employment, either now or in the future, in any position within any law enforcement agency in Bosnia or Herzegovina.

Decision of 9 July 2004 (5001st meeting):
resolution 1551 (2004)

At its 5001st meeting, on 9 July 2004, the Council extended an invitation to the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Italy to participate in the meeting. The President (Romania) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 29 June 2004 from the representative of Ireland, transmitting a letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Ireland and President of the Council of the European Union concerning the intention of the European Union to launch a European Union mission following the decision by NATO to terminate the Stabilization Force in Bosnia and Herzegovina in December 2004.¹² A draft resolution, submitted by France, Germany, Italy, Romania, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States,¹³ was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1551 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, inter alia:

Called upon the parties to comply strictly with their obligations under the General Framework Agreement and the Dayton Agreement, and expressed its intention to keep their implementation, and the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, under review; welcomed the decision of NATO to conclude its current SFOR operation by the end of 2004;

Further welcomed the intention of the European Union to launch a mission to Bosnia and Herzegovina, including a military component, from December 2004;

Authorized the Member States acting through or in cooperation with the organization referred to in annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement to continue for a further planned period of six months the multinational stabilization force as established in accordance with its resolution 1088 (1996) under unified command and control in order to fulfil the role specified in annexes 1-A and 2 of the Peace Agreement;

Authorized the Member States acting under paragraph 11 of the resolution to take all necessary measures to effect the implementation of and to ensure compliance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement;

Authorized Member States to take all necessary measures, at the request of SFOR, either in defence of SFOR or to assist the Force in carrying out its mission;

Demanded that the parties respect the security and freedom of movement of SFOR and other international personnel;

Decided that the status-of-forces agreements should apply provisionally in respect to the proposed European Union mission and its forces.

Decision of 22 November 2004 (5085th meeting): resolution 1575 (2004)

At its 5075th meeting, on 11 November 2004, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 8 October 2004 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council, by which he transmitted the twenty-sixth report of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina.¹⁴ In his report, the High Representative, inter alia, observed significant progress in all core tasks of the Office of the High Representative, including in the field of the rule of law, reforming the economy, strengthening the capacity of Bosnia and Herzegovina institutions and defence reform. In addition, he reported that while Bosnia and Herzegovina was within reach of the NATO Partnership for Peace and the launch of negotiations with the European Union for the conclusion of a Stabilization and Association Agreement, it had failed to meet the benchmarks required for entry into the Partnership for Peace programme at the Istanbul Summit of NATO, because “a small number of obstructionist elements” in the Republika Srpska had prevented the Republika Srpska and Bosnia and Herzegovina from fulfilling their obligations to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia. The High Representative also reported that on 12 July 2004 the European Council had issued its decision to replace the NATO Stabilization Force with a European Union peacekeeping force by the beginning of 2005.

At the meeting, the Council heard briefings by the High Representative, the Deputy Chairman of the Council of Ministers and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Secretary-General of NATO. At the same meeting, statements were made by all members of the Council, as well as by the representatives of Japan and the Netherlands (speaking on behalf of the European Union).¹⁵

In his briefing, the High Representative, inter alia, said that the handover from NATO would allow the European Union bring together all its assets in Bosnia and Herzegovina under his coordination, including the European Union-led force (EUFOR), the European Union Police Mission, the European Union Monitoring Mission and the European Commission delegation. He also called for an unambiguous and firm message from the Council to the leaders of the Republika Srpska with regard to cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia. On the issue of legal challenges to the police certification process by International Police Task Force, the High Representative reported that following the presidential statement issued by the Council in June 2004, the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina had requested all competent national authorities to harmonize their laws in order to give full effect to the United Nations certification decisions. Nevertheless, as there had been examples of procedural shortcomings, the High Representative held that there was a need to find a solution with respect to those problematic cases.¹⁶

The Deputy Chairman of the Council of Ministers and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Bosnia and Herzegovina fully recognized that cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia remained one of the greatest obstacles for Bosnia and Herzegovina in Euro-Atlantic integration processes, but held that there was a firm political commitment to arrest the indicted war criminals and that several attempts at arrests had recently been made by the authorities of the Republika Srpska. On a different note, he drew the attention of the Council to the fact that the recent reforms in Bosnia and Herzegovina would not have been possible without the readiness of the institutions and the politicians of Bosnia and Herzegovina to take responsibility and to make necessary compromises and that not a single law had been imposed by the High Representative in the preceding year. He therefore expressed his conviction that the time had come to consider the review of the mandate of the High Representative, including his extraordinary executive powers, and assured the Council that the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina were more than ready to assume full power and responsibility for the future of the country.¹⁷

Most speakers welcomed the report by the High Representative and the envisaged transition from SFOR to EUFOR. Many speakers also attached great importance to bringing to justice the war criminals indicted by the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.

The representative of the Russian Federation held that while the affirmed dedication of the western Balkan countries to the European perspective could be used as an additional stabilizing factor in the region, the most important issue, in his view, remained the implementation of the Dayton Agreement, which, he held, should not be reduced to the conditions identified by the European Union for the start of negotiations for the Stabilization and Association Agreement and to the requirements of the NATO Partnership for Peace programme. He also maintained that the responsibility for the problems that continued to exist in Bosnia and Herzegovina should not be attributed solely to the Serbs. In addition, while cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia was an important element of the Dayton Agreement and the Russian Federation favoured the strictest compliance with relevant Security Council resolutions, it did not consider that the stability of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the peace process as a whole should be held hostage to that specific aspect of the Dayton Agreement.¹⁸

The representative of the Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the European Union, underlined the significance of the first European Union peacekeeping mission for Bosnia and Herzegovina — as a final element in the comprehensive policy of the European Union towards Bosnia and Herzegovina — but also for the European Union and the United Nations. He held that regional organizations had an increasingly important role to play in peacekeeping and peacebuilding.¹⁹

In his briefing, the Secretary-General of NATO said that NATO and the United Nations had found increasing scope for cooperation in peace operations. He held that, given the improved state of security in Bosnia and Herzegovina, it was the right time to terminate the Stabilization Force, and he stated that he looked forward to a Security Council resolution authorizing the handover of responsibilities from NATO to the European Union. He reported that NATO would retain a military presence in the country, which would provide advice on defence reform and would remain engaged in bringing indicted war criminals to justice.²⁰

At its 5085th meeting, on 22 November 2004, the Council extended an invitation to the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina to participate in the meeting. The President (United States) drew the attention of the Council to three letters dated 19 November 2004 addressed to the President of the Security Council.²¹ The first letter, from the representative of Germany, transmitted a letter from the Secretary-General of NATO to the High Representative of the European Union regarding the changes in the administration of the activities of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The second, from the representative of the Netherlands, transmitted a letter from the High Representative of the European Union to the Secretary-General of NATO regarding the respective roles of NATO and the European Union after the transition from the Stabilization Force operation in Bosnia and Herzegovina to EUFOR operation ALTHEA, while the third letter, from the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, transmitted a letter from the Chairman of the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina concerning the status of EUFOR and the continuation of NATO presence in Bosnia and Herzegovina and confirming the acceptance of EUFOR and NATO as the legal successors of the SFOR mission and mandate.

A draft resolution²² was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without a debate as resolution 1575 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Acknowledged the support of the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina for the European Union force and the continued NATO presence and their confirmation that both are the legal successors to SFOR for the fulfilment of their missions for the purposes of the Peace Agreement;

Authorized the Member States acting through or in cooperation with the European Union to establish for an initial planned period of 12 months a multinational stabilization force (EUFOR) as a legal successor to SFOR under unified command and control;

Authorized the Member States to take all necessary measures to effect the implementation of and to ensure compliance with annexes 1-A and 2 of the Peace Agreement, stressed that the parties should continue to be held equally responsible for compliance with those annexes and be equally subject to such enforcement action by EUFOR and the NATO presence as might be necessary to ensure implementation of those annexes and the protection of EUFOR and the NATO presence;

Authorized Member States to take all necessary measures, at the request of either EUFOR or the NATO Headquarters, in defence of EUFOR or the NATO presence respectively, and to assist both organizations in carrying out their missions.

Decision of 21 November 2005 (5307th meeting): resolution 1639 (2005)

At its 5147th and 5306th meetings,²³ the Security Council included in its agenda letters from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting consecutive reports of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina.²⁴ In his reports, the High Representative described the progress made by Bosnia and Herzegovina in fulfilling the conditions for opening negotiations with the European Union on a stabilization and association agreement. He reported that the outstanding conditions required by the European Commission feasibility study were legislation on public broadcasting and an agreement on police restructuring, which had been blocked by the Government of the Republika Srpska. In the same period, failure to arrest Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić precluded the admission of Bosnia and Herzegovina to the NATO Partnership for Peace, despite an improved level of cooperation between the Republika Srpska and the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia. The High Representative warned that, as a consequence of those blockages, Bosnia and Herzegovina risked falling behind all its neighbours on the road to Euro-Atlantic integration. In addition, the High Representative reported on the transition from SFOR, which was formally terminated on 2 December 2004, to EUFOR, as well as on progress in defence reform, intelligence reform and economic reform. He informed the Council that, in order to encourage increasing local ownership and responsibility, the Office of the High Representative had minimized the number of instances where it used its extraordinary executive powers in order to impose legislation, and that he had initiated a process of reviewing past decisions banning specified persons from participating in all political and public life. In addition, the High Representative reported that the Federation Supreme Court had declared that negative decisions of the International Police Task Force on certification of police officers were inviolable.

At the meetings, the Council heard briefings by the High Representative. Statements were made by all members of the Council, and on behalf of the European Union,²⁵ as well as by the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina²⁶ and Italy.

In his briefings, the High Representative elaborated on his reports, specifically highlighting the increased cooperation of the Republika Srpska with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, which had transferred or assisted in the transfer of 12 indictees, but expressed regret that Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić remained at large.²⁷ In his briefing at the 5306th meeting, on 15 November 2005, the High Representative reported that there had been a breakthrough in both police restructuring and defence reform, with agreement in both cases that responsibilities would be transferred to the State level. As a consequence, he expressed the hope that the negotiation mandate for the Stabilization and Association Agreement would be approved at the meeting of the Council of the European Union on 21 November 2005. He expressed his belief that the signing of that agreement would “herald the end of heavyweight international intervention in Bosnia and Herzegovina”, and reported that the Peace Implementation Council had made it clear that, once the negotiations for a Stabilization and Association Agreement were under way, the use of the extraordinary executive powers should be phased out and the Office of the High Representative replaced with a structure led by the European Union Special Representative. In addition, the High Representative reported on progress concerning constitutional reform. While remaining essential as a foundation for peace, in his view, the Dayton Constitution had reached the end of its utility as a framework for the next phase of the reform process. The process of constitutional reform, however, would have to be agreed upon by the domestic institutions in Bosnia and Herzegovina themselves and could not be imposed by the international community. In addition, the High

Representative encouraged the Council to set up a review mechanism for the police certification process conducted by the Task Force to review problematic decisions where credible evidence existed that the right procedures had not been followed.²⁸

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina, at those meeting, strongly advocated a handover of responsibilities from the Office of the High Representative to the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina.²⁹

Most speakers agreed with the assessments contained in the reports of the High Representative.³⁰ Several speakers suggested that it might be time for a new role for the international community and the High Representative. The representative of the Russian Federation called for a prompt transfer of responsibilities to the Bosnian parties.³¹ However, the representative of Denmark warned that adjustments to the extraordinary executive powers of the High Representative should be contemplated only in a measured way and with due attention to the risks of new crises in Bosnia and Herzegovina.³²

At its 5307th meeting, on 21 November 2005, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 2 November 2005 from the Secretary-General, transmitting a report on the activities of EUFOR,³³ and the above-mentioned letter dated 7 November 2005, transmitting the twenty-eighth report of the High Representative.³⁴ The Council then invited the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Germany and Italy to participate in the meeting. The President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution³⁵ and read out minor changes to the twentieth preambular paragraph of that draft resolution. It was then put to the vote as orally revised and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1639 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

At its 5412th meeting, on 8 April 2006, the Council heard briefings by the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Statements were made by most members of the Council,³⁶ as well as by the representatives of Austria (on behalf of the European Union)³⁷ and Turkey.

In his briefing, the new High Representative emphasized that the phase of post-war reconstruction was coming to an end and that his key task was to oversee the end of the Office of the High Representative, which would also mean the end of its extraordinary executive powers, and the full establishment of the Office of the European Union Special Representative. He emphasized that Bosnia and Herzegovina would have to take ownership and assume its full responsibilities as a normal European democratic State. He saw three priorities in 2006 for Bosnia and Herzegovina — constitutional reform, the general elections in October and the ongoing negotiations of the Stabilization and Association Agreement — as well as three outstanding issues from the post-war period — including full cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, the status of officials removed from public positions by the High Representative and the issue of police officers decertified by the International Police Task Force.³⁸

The Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Bosnia and Herzegovina welcomed the new and what he was certain would be the last, High Representative. He said that during the past three and a half years Bosnia and Herzegovina had passed from a country focused on implementing a peace agreement to one that was negotiating with the European Commission with a view to signing the Stabilization and Accession Agreement. He said that he supported the High Representative in the directions and policy he had set forth for the fullest transfer of ownership to the institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina. He also reported that pressure had been increasing from the general public in Bosnia and Herzegovina to address the problem of police officers not certified by the Task Force, some of whom had not seen any documentation or had not had the opportunity to appeal because the decision in those cases had been taken at the end of the mandate of the Task Force. The Permanent Representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina had therefore sent a letter to the President of the Security Council,³⁹ in which he requested consideration of possible options for securing rights of appeal and review of decertification decisions.⁴⁰

Most other speakers supported the intentions of the High Representative to transfer more responsibilities to the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina and to limit the use of his extraordinary executive powers. Most speakers also believed that the issue of decertified police officers needed to be addressed.

At its 5563rd meeting, on 8 November 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 12 October 2006 from the Secretary-General, transmitting the thirtieth report of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina.⁴¹ In his report, the new High Representative stressed his intention to oversee a shift in the role played by the Office of the High Representative and the international community from providing leadership to offering advice and support to the domestic authorities as they assumed ownership of and full responsibility for the continuing progress of the country towards institutional stability and Euro-Atlantic integration. He nevertheless made it clear that he would not hesitate to use his extraordinary executive powers in the case of a serious threat to the peace and stability of the country. He also drew attention to the decision of the Peace and Implementation Council to authorize the Office of the High Representative to prepare for its closure and likely replacement in July 2007 by an office of the European Union Special Representative. In addition, he observed that the period had been marked by high expectations resulting from an unprecedented agreement to propose a package of constitutional amendments to the Presidency and the Parliamentary Assembly, followed by a period of “increasingly nationalistic vituperation” after a narrow defeat of the reform package in Parliament. This had set the tone for the upcoming election campaign, in which politicians in the Republika Srpska, referring to the independence referendum in Montenegro and the final status talks in Kosovo, had claimed the right to a referendum on the future of the Republika Srpska, whereas some Bosniak politicians had suggested that the Republika Sprska be abolished.

At the meeting, the Council heard briefings by the High Representative and the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Bosnia and Herzegovina, following which statements were made by all members of the Council, and by the representative of Finland (on behalf of the European Union).⁴²

In his briefing, the High Representative said that developments since the decision of the Peace Implementation Council to close the Office of the High Representative at the end of June 2007 had demonstrated the challenge of moving to local ownership and would have to be considered by the Peace Implementation Council during its review of the decision. He considered that the international community must hold its course and continue handing over responsibility gradually. He reported that political reforms, including the police restructuring process and constitutional reform, which were a precondition for completing the stabilization and association process, had stalled, in part because of the campaigning and rhetoric preceding the elections of 1 October 2006. The High Representative also held that, even if there was no linkage between the decision on the final status of Kosovo and the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, it had the potential to be destabilizing, if the decision were to be delayed. On the outstanding issue of legal challenges to the police certification process conducted by the Task Force, the High Representative reported that his Office had worked with the United Nations and the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina to establish the facts and develop the outlines of a review process, but said that he was, legally and politically, unable to resolve the issue, which would have to be taken up by the Security Council.⁴³

The Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Bosnia and Herzegovina, pointing to a policy of blockade of all political reform processes by the Government of the Republika Srpska that had coincided with the general elections in Bosnia and Herzegovina in October 2006, held that the timing for the closure of the Office of the High Representative had been a “fatal misstep”, and called for the transformation into an Office of a Special Representative of the European Union not to start until it would be certain that Bosnia and Herzegovina and its new Government were completely ready to sign the Stabilization and Association Agreement with the European Union and to fulfil the expected conditions.⁴⁴

Most other speakers agreed with the policy of the High Representative to gradually hand over responsibilities to the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina and expressed their support for the decision of the Peace Implementation Council to close the Office of the High Representative at the end of June 2007 and to replace it with the Office of the European Union Special Representative. Most speakers also expressed their appreciation for the fact that Bosnia and Herzegovina had held its first elections that were fully administered by the authorities of the country. Many speakers regretted that political reforms had stalled.

The representative of Ghana called for the establishment of an investigative commission to determine the fate of the missing civilians of Sarajevo.⁴⁵ The representatives of Slovakia, Qatar and the United Kingdom emphasized that there was no link between the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the outcome of the Kosovo future status process.⁴⁶

At its 5567th meeting, on 21 November 2006, the Council extended an invitation to the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Finland, Germany and Italy to participate in the meeting. The President (Peru) drew the attention of the Council to the letter transmitting the above-mentioned thirtieth report of the High Representative,⁴⁷ as well as to a letter dated 12 October 2006 from the Secretary-General, transmitting the seventh report on the activities of EUFOR.⁴⁸ A draft resolution⁴⁹ was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1722 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Authorized Member States acting through or in cooperation with the European Union to establish for a further period of 12 months a multinational stabilization force as a legal successor to SFOR under unified command and control;

Authorized the Member States acting through or in cooperation with NATO to continue to maintain a NATO Headquarters as a legal successor to SFOR under unified command and control;

Decision of 29 June 2007 (5713th meeting):
resolution 1764 (2007)

At its 5675th meeting, on 16 May 2007, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 3 May 2007 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the thirty-first report on the activities of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina.⁵⁰ In his report, the High Representative observed that highly divisive and occasionally inflammatory rhetoric during the election campaign and a protracted government-forming process after the elections in October 2006 had led to a virtual halt in reform. In addition, an uncertain regional situation, including the deferment of a Kosovo status decision and the independence referendum in Montenegro had had a negative impact on politics and political discourse in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Those factors had led the High Representative to recommend to the Peace Implementation Council to continue the Office of the High Representative beyond the envisaged closure date of 30 June 2007. The High Representative reported that the Peace Implementation Council had endorsed his view and agreed to aim for closure of the Office by 30 June 2008 and to review the situation in October 2007 and February 2008. At the same time, the High Representative reported that Bosnia and Herzegovina had joined the NATO Partnership for Peace programme and that technical negotiations with the European Union on the Stabilization and Association Agreement had been completed, while the political conditions for signing the agreement, including an agreement on police restructuring, remained unmet. He reported that constitutional reform remained a high-profile issue, although it appeared unlikely that the original reform package of April 2006 would receive the necessary support to be reintroduced in parliament. In that regard, he announced that he was preparing a broad constitutional reform process. In addition, he reported that the Council of Ministers of Bosnia and Herzegovina had adopted a unilateral decision to establish a domestic review process for officers who had been denied certification by the International Police Task Force, in response to a hunger strike by former police officers. He had called upon the Council of Ministers to respect fully its obligations under international law and had pointed out that, were its decision to be implemented, he would have no choice but to consider further measures.

At the outset of the meeting, the President (United States) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 8 May 2007 from the Secretary-General, transmitting the ninth report on the activities of the European Union military mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina.⁵¹ The Council then heard briefings by the High Representative and the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Bosnia and Herzegovina, following which statements were made by all members of the Council, as well as by the representative of Germany (on behalf of the European Union).⁵²

In his briefing, the High Representative said that, despite the difficulties of the election campaign, the government-forming process and the blockage of political reforms, the path to more ownership by the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina was not wrong, but that the problems had been a warning that transition could not be taken for granted. The High Representative reported that radical rhetoric had poisoned the political environment, and the issue of Srebrenica had returned to the headlines. He said that the Bosnian authorities must carry out their responsibilities and ensure that concrete measures were taken to improve conditions, but that did not mean changing the constitutional and territorial order of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The High Representative called for progress on police reform, constitutional reform and transfer of the remaining indictees to the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, in order for the “road to Europe” to be unblocked.⁵³

Most speakers at the meeting supported the decision to maintain the Office of the High Representative until June 2008, with the representative of the United States expressing disappointment that the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina had not been conducive to allowing the Peace Implementation Council to decide to close the Office of the High Representative.⁵⁴

The representative of the Russian Federation supported an early transfer of responsibility to the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina, “including with respect to the forthcoming transition of the Office of the High Representative to a European Union mission”. He also expressed the hope that in the framework of the forthcoming review, of October 2007, the members of the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council would “take account of the realities, not of some imagined threat to stability in Bosnia and Herzegovina”.⁵⁵

At its 5713th meeting, on 29 June 2007, the Council extended invitations to the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Germany to participate in the meeting. Statements were made by the representatives of the United Kingdom and the Russian Federation. A draft resolution submitted by the Russian Federation⁵⁶ was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1764 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia, took note of the decision of the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council of 19 June 2007 that the Office of the High Representative would remain in place and continue to carry out its mandate and that the aim was closure of the Office of the High Representative by 30 June 2008.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United Kingdom, referring to the paragraph of the resolution by which the Council welcomed and agreed to the designation by the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council of Mr. Miroslav Lajčák as High Representative in succession to Mr. Christian Schwarz-Schilling, noted that it was the Steering Board that appointed the High Representative and that decided on the mandate of his office. While she held that formal agreement of the Security Council was not necessary, her delegation welcomed the support of the Council for those decisions. She also expressed her understanding that nothing in resolution 1764 (2007) or those it recalled impacted on other Balkan issues under consideration by the Council.⁵⁷ The representative of the Russian Federation held that the decision was in keeping with the Dayton Agreement, previous Council resolutions on Bosnia and Herzegovina and previous agreements.⁵⁸

(5782nd meeting): resolution 1785 (2007)

At its 5782nd meeting, on 21 November 2007,⁵⁹ the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 5 November 2007 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council, transmitting the thirty-second report of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina.⁶⁰ In his report, the High Representative observed that there had been almost no progress in addressing the reform agenda and that Bosnia and Herzegovina had moved no closer to initialling a Stabilization and Association Agreement with the European Union. He also noted a deterioration of the political situation. The High Representative also drew the attention of the Council to a Declaration of the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council, in which the Steering Board noted that certain political leaders had challenged the legitimacy and authority of the High Representative and the Peace Implementation Council and reiterated that any Bosnia and Herzegovina political leader or institution to do so would be subject to appropriate measures. On the issue of legal challenges to the police certification process conducted by the International Police Task Force, he reported that a solution had been found when the President of the Security Council had sent a letter to the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina on 30 April 2007, informing him that the Security Council had lifted a lifetime ban on employment in police agencies by persons who had been denied certification by the Task Force, following which Bosnia and Herzegovina had annulled its earlier decision to establish a review commission for those cases, which had been contrary to provisions of Council resolutions.

The Council invited the representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina to participate in the meeting. At the outset, the President (Indonesia) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 25 October 2007 from the

Authorized the Member States acting through or in cooperation with the European Union to establish for a further period of 12 months a multinational stabilization force as a legal successor to SFOR under unified command and control, which would fulfil its missions in relation to the implementation of annexes 1-A and 2 of the Peace Agreement in cooperation with the NATO Headquarters presence in accordance with the arrangements agreed between NATO and the European Union as communicated to the Security Council in their letters of 19 November 2004, which recognized that EUFOR would have the main peace stabilization role under the military aspects of the Peace Agreement;

Authorized the Member States to take all necessary measures to effect the implementation of and to ensure compliance with annexes 1-A and 2 of the Peace Agreement; authorized Member States to take all necessary measures, at the request of either EUFOR or the NATO Headquarters, in defence of EUFOR or the NATO presence respectively, and to assist both organizations in carrying out their missions, and recognized the right of both EUFOR and the NATO presence to take all necessary measures to defend themselves from attack or threat of attack;

Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of the United Nations Administrative Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK). At that meeting, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on UNMIK dated 26 January 2004.⁶⁴

In his report, the Secretary-General observed, inter alia, that the establishment of a mechanism, under the authority of the Council, to measure the progress made by the Provisional Institutions of Self-Government of Kosovo⁶⁵ in meeting the benchmarks in the “standards before status” policy⁶⁶ was a most welcome development, and noted his intention to provide the Council with assessments on the progress of the Provisional Institutions on a quarterly basis. Pending the progress made towards reaching the standards, a comprehensive review of progress should occur in mid-2005. Initiation of the political process to determine the future status of Kosovo would depend on the outcome of that review. The “standards for Kosovo” document and the development of the implementation workplan would provide a clear framework within which the Provisional Institutions needed to act in accordance with resolution 1244 (1999), the Constitutional Framework and the law applicable in Kosovo. The Secretary-General emphasized that the implementation of the standards did not prejudice the decision to be made by the Council on the initiation of the future status process, or on the future status of Kosovo.

Noting that multi-ethnicity, tolerance and equal rights for all communities must be upheld by all local leaders and institutions, the Secretary-General said that the United Nations stood firmly behind the principle of multi-ethnic representation and meaningful participation of all communities in the Provisional Institutions of Kosovo. In that context, the importance of engagement of all communities in the Provisional Institutions was underlined, as lack of participation and disengagement from the political process only hampered real progress. The Secretary-General stated that acts of intimidation and violence, particularly against minorities, were detrimental to achieving progress in any area and had to stop. In addition, all of the leaders of Kosovo were urged to ensure that the rule of law was upheld. Although progress had been achieved in such areas as the preparation and adoption of legislation at both the central and local levels of self-government, in other areas, such as meaningful participation of all communities in the Provisional Institutions and the creation of an apolitical civil service, much had remained to be done. The Secretary-General expressed concern that the Kosovo Assembly had once again been refusing to take into account legitimate minority concerns in the legislative process and had overstepped its competencies, which posed a direct challenge to resolution 1244 (1999), the Constitutional Framework and the law applicable in Kosovo.

The Secretary-General expressed appreciation that the transfer of non-reserved responsibilities listed in chapter V of the Constitutional Framework had been largely completed and had to be fully and fairly implemented by the Provisional Institutions, which would be held accountable and assessed accordingly for the review process. The transfer of competencies had had no effect on the overall authority of UNMIK and the Kosovo Force (KFOR) under resolution 1244 (1999) or the reserved responsibilities of his Special Representative under chapter VIII of the Constitutional Framework. The Secretary-General reported that UNMIK had continued to monitor the situation closely and intervene as necessary, to ensure the compliance of the Provisional Institutions at both the central and municipal levels with resolution 1244 (1999), the Constitutional Framework and other applicable law in Kosovo. He noted that the robust support of the Council and key Member States would be essential for the full implementation of resolution 1244 (1999) and the “standards before status” policy. Thus the challenge ahead was for both the Provisional Institutions and UNMIK to manage the period until mid-2005 when a comprehensive review had been scheduled.

In his briefing to the Council, the Special Representative elaborated on the “standards for Kosovo” document, which had been endorsed by the ⁶⁴ S/2004/71, submitted pursuant to resolution 1244 (1999).

Council in a presidential statement on 12 December 2003.⁶⁷ He noted that the most important task was to produce an implementation workplan that clearly set out the actions necessary to reach the standards. Towards that end, while five working groups were working intensively to produce the plan, there had continued to be no Kosovo Serb representation in that process. The Special Representative stressed that the principal concern of the Kosovo Serbs — that the standards process was undermining resolution 1244 (1999) — was wholly unfounded. Concerning the process of direct dialogue between Pristina and Belgrade, he underlined that it was the responsibility of the Provisional Institutions of Self-Government, in cooperation with UNMIK, to engage actively and seriously, without further delay, in direct dialogue. The Special Representative noted that the undetermined status of Kosovo helped no one in Kosovo, and needed to be resolved sooner rather than later.⁶⁸

Most speakers concurred that the adoption of the “standards for Kosovo” had to be followed by concrete implementation and expressed concern over the lack of Kosovo Serb representation in the working groups drawing up the workplan. A few speakers observed that Belgrade had appeared to be actively discouraging Kosovo Serbs from participating, and in that regard encouraged Belgrade to take a more positive stance.⁶⁹ The representative of Serbia and Montenegro asserted that the non-Albanian communities had been denied any meaningful participation in political life by the Provisional Institutions to the extent that not even basic access to documentation in their mother tongues had been ensured.⁷⁰

Many speakers noted that, if Kosovo made the necessary progress on the standards, then a process would begin to determine the final status in accordance with resolution 1244 (1999). However, if it did not pass the review on that date, then another review would have to be done at a later date. The representative of the Russian Federation agreed with the view of the Secretary-General that movement forward in the Kosovo settlement was not possible without achieving progress on the standards implementation. He also stressed that a positive outcome to the comprehensive review of the implementation of standards should not automatically trigger the political process to determine the final status of Kosovo, and that the decision to commence such a process should be taken by the Council.⁷¹

Decision of 18 March 2004 (4928th meeting):
statement by the President

By a letter dated 17 March 2004 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Serbia and Montenegro requested an urgent meeting of the Council to consider “the latest outbreak of violence in Kosovo and Metohija”.⁷²

At its 4928th meeting, on 18 March 2004, held in response to the request outlined in the above-mentioned letter, which the Council included in its agenda, the Council was briefed by the Secretary-General on the violent events that had unfolded in Kosovo on 17 March 2004. All members of the Council and the representatives of Albania, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union),⁷³ Japan, Jordan, Serbia and Montenegro and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia made statements.

In his briefing, the Secretary-General observed that the overall security situation throughout Kosovo had remained highly unstable. He expressed his deep disappointment and sadness at the resurgence of ethnically motivated violence, which had claimed 31 deaths and left hundreds injured. He stated that the violence, as well as the deliberate attacks on representatives of the international community, in particular UNMIK and KFOR, had to be condemned in the strongest terms. The Secretary-General further stressed that there was a need to carefully study the implications of those events for the future of Kosovo. However, the first priority was to restore safety and security to the province. He called on the leaders of the communities and the representatives of the Provisional Institutions of Kosovo to work with the international community, with each other and with the people of Kosovo to restore calm. He also reminded the leaders of the Kosovo Albanian community that as the largest ethnic group they had the responsibility to protect and promote the rights of all people within Kosovo, particularly its minorities. The Secretary-General expressed trust that the Security Council would give the situation the urgent and serious attention that it required.⁷⁴

All speakers strongly occurred the acts of violence that had taken place between the communities of Kosovo over the past days. Some speakers voiced concern that the outbreak of violence had compromised the political process and the progress that had to date been achieved.⁷⁵ Several speakers expressed the view that the violence had demonstrated the fragility and instability of the peace in Kosovo.⁷⁶

The representative of the Russian Federation maintained that the acts of violence were “targeted actions to squeeze the non-Albanian population out of the region”, and held that the process of building a multi-ethnic society in Kosovo in conformity with resolution 1244 (1999) had not merely been “bogged down” but was in fact “back to square one”.⁷⁷

At the end of the meeting, the President (France) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁷⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Strongly condemned the large-scale inter-ethnic violence in Kosovo (Serbia and Montenegro) in which many people have been killed and hundreds injured;

Also strongly condemned the attacks on the troops of KFOR and the personnel and sites of UNMIK;

Called on all communities in Kosovo to stop all acts of violence, to avoid further escalation and restore calm;

Urged the parties to refrain from irresponsible and inflammatory statements and accusations;

Deplored the reported deaths and injuries among the population of Kosovo as well as casualties among the Kosovo Police Service, UNMIK international civilian police, and KFOR troops;

Reiterated the urgent need for the authorities in Kosovo to take effective steps to enforce the rule of law, ensure proper security for all ethnic communities and bring to justice all the perpetrators of criminal acts.

Decision of 30 April 2004 (4960th meeting): statement by the President

At its 4942nd meeting, on 13 April 2004, the Council was briefed by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations on the widespread violence that had erupted in Kosovo in March 2004, the responses to that violence and the implications of those events. In addition to all members of the Council, the representatives of Albania, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union),⁷⁹ Japan and Serbia and Montenegro made statements.

In his briefing, the Under-Secretary-General reported that the “onslaught led by Kosovo Albanian extremists against Kosovo Serbs, Roma and Ashkali communities” had been an organized, widespread and targeted campaign. The attacks on Kosovo Serbs had occurred throughout Kosovo, including where groups of displaced Kosovo Serbs had recently returned and had planned to rebuild their lives in Kosovo. Properties had been demolished and public facilities such as schools and health clinics destroyed; mobs had looted, burned and damaged or destroyed 36 Serbian Orthodox churches; communities had been surrounded and threatened and residents forced to leave their homes. Inhabitants of entire villages had to be evacuated and, following their departure, their homes were burned to the ground. The Under-Secretary-General said that the “brutality and breadth” of those events had indicated that Kosovo still had a long way to go on the path of multi-ethnicity and that the violence represented a huge setback for the stabilization and normalization of the security and political environment of Kosovo. He underlined the importance of getting the standards implementation process back on track and noted that the Special Representative had gone ahead with the launch of the Kosovo Standards Implementation Plan in order to move the process forward and not lose momentum. The Plan contained key priority actions in the areas of return and freedom of movement in response to the violent events of March. The Under-Secretary-General observed that further review and revision of the Plan, with additional emphasis on security and the rule of law, minority rights and protection and returns, and on decentralization, could be needed in the wake of the violence.⁸⁰

Most speakers reiterated their continued support for the Kosovo Standards Implementation Plan.

The representative of the United Kingdom proposed that there ought to be a presidential statement to the effect that the Implementation Plan was a step forward, and calling on all parties to actively implement the standards.⁸¹

The representative of the Russian Federation said that in the light of the violent events of March all talk about a timetable for the final status of Kosovo was highly inappropriate. In contrast to the representative of France, who maintained that the Council should not change the approach to the Implementation Plan,⁸² the representative of the Russian Federation said that the Plan required thoroughgoing revision to reinforce its provisions in the areas of providing equal security, freedom of movement and the rights and freedoms of ethnic minorities.⁸³

The representative of Serbia and Montenegro opined that the Implementation Plan failed to provide sufficient guarantees for the survival of the Serb population in the province, let alone for returns. He stressed that the Government of Serbia and Montenegro and the Government of Serbia opposed any changes of borders in the Balkans and added that both Governments looked to a future marked by a process of integration rather than of disintegration.⁸⁴

At its 4960th meeting, on 30 April 2004, at which the representative of Serbia and Montenegro was invited to participate,⁸⁵ the President (Germany) made a statement on behalf of the Council, by which the Council,⁸⁶ inter alia:

Noted that the presentation of the Kosovo Standards Implementation Plan on 31 March 2004 in Pristina in Kosovo, Serbia and Montenegro, was a step forward in the standards process;

Reaffirmed its full support for the “standards before status” policy that was devised for Kosovo and endorsed by the Council in application of its resolution 1244 (1999);

Stressed that it was essential to review and revise in a timely manner two key sections of the document, namely “sustainable returns and the rights of communities and their members” and “freedom of movement”;

Emphasized that no party could be allowed to profit or to advance a political agenda through violent measures;

Called upon the Provisional Institutions of Self-Government and all political leaders to take responsibility in the current situation and to ensure that such acts and threats of violence were not repeated.

Deliberations of 11 May 2004 to 27 May 2005 (4967th, 5017th, 5089th, 5130th and 5188th meetings)

At its 4967th, 5017th, 5089th, 5130th and 5188th meetings,⁸⁷ the Council included in its agenda reports of the Secretary-General on UNMIK.⁸⁸ In his reports, the Secretary-General observed, inter alia, that the ethnically motivated violence of March 2004 had been a serious setback for the efforts to build a democratic, multi-ethnic and stable Kosovo. The process of normalization and reconciliation had been seriously damaged, calling into question the timetable for a successful implementation of the standards that the international community had set for Kosovo, and threatening to destabilize the region.

The Secretary-General reported that during the period from 30 April 2004 to 23 May 2005 UNMIK had continued to operate within the framework provided by the “standards before status” policy, which offered a road map for the interim stage. He observed that the continued lack of freedom of movement, precarious security conditions and lack of access to public services for the minority groups of Kosovo had resulted in only minimal returns of those who had fled during the violence of March 2004. He noted that the elections for the Kosovo Assembly on 23 October 2004, judged to be free and fair, had been an important further step in the consolidation of the Provisional Institutions of Self-Government and the process of stabilization and normalization. In that regard, the

Secretary-General expressed disappointment over the non-participation of the Kosovo Serb community.⁸⁹

In his report of 30 July 2004, the Secretary-General noted that he had requested that a comprehensive review of the policies and practices of all actors in Kosovo be conducted and that options and recommendations be provided as a basis for further thinking on the way forward. To that end, Ambassador Kai Eide had completed and submitted an assessment for the consideration of the Secretary-General.⁹⁰

In his report of 14 February 2005, the Secretary-General observed that while progress had been made concerning the implementation of standards, further sustained effort was required in areas of importance to minority communities, notwithstanding the lack of engagement in the Provisional Institutions at the central level by the majority of Kosovo Serb political entities and leaders.⁹¹ In mid-2005, while observing that the Provisional Institutions had intensified their efforts to implement the standards, the Secretary-General reported that the overall number of returns had remained low and the process remained fragile. Having taken careful consideration, he expressed the view that a comprehensive review should be initiated in the summer of 2005, which would be carried out in accordance with resolution 1244 (1999) and the relevant presidential statements of the Council, and noted his intent to appoint a Special Envoy to conduct that review. He underlined that the outcome of the comprehensive review would not be a foregone conclusion with regard to the final status of Kosovo.⁹²

Over the course of the deliberations, in addition to all members of the Council, statements were made by the representatives of Albania, Iceland, Japan, Norway, Serbia and Montenegro, Switzerland, Ukraine and, on behalf of the European Union, Ireland,⁹³ Luxembourg⁹⁴ and the Netherlands.⁹⁵ At its 5188th meeting, the President (Denmark) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 18 May 2005 from the representative of Serbia and Montenegro.⁹⁶

At those meetings, the Council was briefed on the basis of the above-mentioned reports of the Secretary-General by the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations⁹⁷ and the Special Representative.⁹⁸

In response to the reports of the Secretary-General and the briefings on UNMIK, most speakers expressed their continued support for the process of peace and reconciliation as foreseen by resolution 1244 (1999) and the “standards before status” policy for Kosovo, and urged the Provisional Institutions to demonstrate their responsibility for, and commitment to, achieving concrete progress on the implementation of the standards. Although welcoming the free and fair Kosovo Assembly elections held on 23 October 2004, many speakers expressed regret over the low turn-out of the Kosovo Serb community. The representative of the Russian Federation stated that the low turn-out was an indicator of the “utterly unsatisfactory” state of affairs in the sphere of ensuring the human rights and security of ethnic minorities.⁹⁹

Most speakers concurred with the recommendation of the Secretary-General in his report of May 2005 to launch a comprehensive evaluation of the situation and to appoint a Special Envoy for that purpose.

The representative of Pakistan noted that the entire process of seeking to promote standards without addressing the status issue had been flawed at its conception and inappropriate to prepare Kosovo for the transition from war to peace, from socialism to a market economy, and from international political limbo to political and legal clarity. Within that context, he proposed that the Council should promote a “status with standards” approach.¹⁰⁰

The representative of the Russian Federation stressed that the premise of the Secretary-General, that the peace process in Kosovo must be built on the solid legal basis of resolution 1244 (1999), was of fundamental importance and that strategically important steps in that sphere needed to be implemented with the Council playing a lead role.¹⁰¹

The representative of China noted that a comprehensive and satisfactory resolution of the Kosovo issue had to be predicated on the full implementation of resolution 1244 (1999).¹⁰²

The representative of Serbia and Montenegro noted that the optimal solution, with regard to the future status of Kosovo, would not be one that gave everything to one ethnic community and deprived another of everything else.¹⁰³ He noted that the situation of the non-Albanian communities in Kosovo had remained unacceptably poor. He argued that suggestions that “standards before status” be reformulated into a “both standards and status” policy actually implied the search for a quick exit strategy and the failure on the part of the international community to create a truly multi-ethnic and democratic society in Kosovo.¹⁰⁴

The representative of Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of the European Union, asserted that Kosovo would not return to a pre-1999 situation and that the European Union was unwavering in its commitment to help a democratic and multi-ethnic Kosovo, characterized by the protection the European Union provided to its minority communities, on its way to full integration in Europe, regardless of its future status.¹⁰⁵

The representative of Serbia and Montenegro voiced concern over the recommendation in the report of the Secretary-General of 23 May 2005 that a comprehensive review of the standards should be initiated in the summer of 2005. He stated that, in order to move ahead with that process, concrete and not imaginary progress was needed, and as such it would be counterproductive to open the status discussion before the standards — the basic provisions of resolution 1244 (1999) — had been substantively implemented.¹⁰⁶

Decision of 24 October 2005 (5290th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5289th meeting, on 24 October 2005, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 7 October 2005 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council,¹⁰⁷ in which the Secretary-General noted that he accepted the conclusion of his Special Envoy to undertake a comprehensive review of the situation in Kosovo, Ambassador Kai Eide, with regard to the commencement of the final status process of Kosovo and noted that he intended to initiate preparations for the possible appointment of a new special envoy to lead that process.

At that meeting, the Council heard briefings by the Special Envoy and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of UNMIK, and heard a statement by the Prime Minister of Serbia and Montenegro.

In his briefing, the Special Envoy said that, although there would never be a good moment for addressing the future status of Kosovo, the time had come to start the future status process. Arguing that it would be unlikely that postponing the future status process would lead to significant progress in the implementation of standards, he held that progress would be achieved only if the sense of a political perspective was maintained and if the international community was ready to mobilize greater political energy and pressure. The Special Envoy acknowledged that the determination of the future status of Kosovo was and would remain a highly sensitive political issue with serious regional and wider international implications.¹⁰⁸

In his briefing, the Special Representative observed that although the Security Council had been noting the positive developments in Kosovo, including improvements in security and in the fields of standards implementation, the Council had also underlined the need for further progress. The Special Representative held that the start of the status process would be a galvanizing moment in Kosovo and expressed confidence that the resolution of the final status would have a positive effect on the wider region, including Serbia, in terms of political stabilization, reconciliation and economic growth.

Guided by the report of the Special Envoy, UNMIK had identified six priority areas on which it intended to concentrate over the coming months, namely, to continue with the implementation of standards; to support the Provisional Institutions in pursuing a comprehensive reform of local government; to transfer competences from UNMIK to the Provisional Institutions within the security sector; to strengthen the capacity-building of the Provisional Institutions; and to continue to develop a phased and well-managed transition to eventual future arrangements, following, but without prejudice to, the outcome of status talks; and continue efforts to ensure the maintenance of a safe and secure environment for all communities in Kosovo. The Special Representative expressed the belief that the status process presented a chance for Belgrade and, importantly, for Kosovo Serbs to engage. Acknowledging that the Security Council had played a key role thus far, he noted that he could count on the continued support and active engagement of the members of the Council in the ongoing and next decisive phase of the implementation of resolution 1244 (1999).

In his statement to the Council, the Prime Minister of Serbia asserted that any solution to the final status of Kosovo must respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Serbia and Montenegro as an internationally recognized State, a member of the United Nations and other international organizations. He emphasized that the principle was supported by the basic sources of international law, including the Charter of the United Nations and the Helsinki Final Act, and in the particular case at hand was confirmed by resolution 1244 (1999), where the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Serbia and Montenegro were recognized expressis verbis.¹⁰⁹

At the 5290th meeting, on 24 October 2005,¹¹⁰ in which the Council again included in its agenda a letter dated 7 October 2005 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council,¹¹¹ the President (Romania) made a statement on behalf of the Council¹¹² by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the report prepared by the envoy of the Secretary-General, Mr. Kai Eide, on the comprehensive review of the implementation of standards, as well as of the overall situation in and relating to Kosovo, Serbia and Montenegro, forwarded by the Secretary-General on 7 October 2005;

Agreed with Mr. Eide's overall assessment that, notwithstanding the challenges still facing Kosovo and the wider region, the time had come to move to the next phase of the political process;

Supported the intention of the Secretary-General to start a political process to determine the future status of Kosovo, as foreseen in Council resolution 1244 (1999);

Requested that the Secretary-General provide regular updates on progress in determining the future status of Kosovo, as defined by Council resolution 1244 (1999), and would remain actively seized of the matter.

Deliberations of 14 February to 13 December 2006 (5373rd, 5470th, 5522nd and 5588th meetings)

At its 5373rd, 5470th, 5522nd and 5588th meetings,¹¹³ the Security Council included in its agenda the reports of the Secretary-General on UNMIK.¹¹⁴ In his reports, the Secretary-General noted, inter alia, that on 10 November 2005 the Council had endorsed the appointment of Marti Ahtisaari as his Special Envoy for the future status process of Kosovo¹¹⁵ and the Kosovo Albanian political and institutional leaders had welcomed the guiding principles of the Contact Group for a settlement of Kosovo.¹¹⁶ He observed that during the launching and proceeding of the political process to determine the future status of Kosovo, little common ground had to date been identified between the positions of the Serbian and Kosovo delegations, which had remained committed to “substantial autonomy” and “full independence” respectively, with minimal space for negotiation. The Secretary-General expressed concern over the continued incidents of violence targeting civilians and religious sites and, in September 2006, over the cessation of relations by the northern Kosovo Serb majority municipalities with the Provisional Institutions.¹¹⁷ The Secretary-General welcomed the activities of the European Union on the ground, which together with the efforts of other partner organizations would assist in a coherent transition following an eventual determination of the future status of Kosovo.

At the meetings, in addition to all members of the Council, statements were made by the representatives of Albania, Serbia and Montenegro, Turkey and Ukraine and, on behalf of the European Union, Austria¹¹⁸ and Finland.¹¹⁹ The Council heard briefings by the Special Representative on the above-mentioned reports of the Secretary-General.

Most speakers extended their continued support for the negotiation process under the auspices of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General.

The representative of the Russian Federation expressed the view that during the direct negotiation talks, the parties had to reach an agreement on the future status of Kosovo, without any decisions being imposed on them. He additionally noted that such an agreement needed to be backed up by a new Security Council resolution.¹²⁰

The President of the Republic of Serbia¹²¹ warned that to view Kosovo as an exception and a unique case was dangerous and politically unwise, however numerous the supporters of that idea might be.¹²²

The representative of the United States stressed the need to be realistic about the possible status outcomes, one possibility of which was independence. He further noted that any status outcome must be acceptable to the people of Kosovo. He expressed the need to keep in mind that the violent disintegration of Yugoslavia, the ethnic cleansing and humanitarian crises of 1999 and the extended period of international administration under resolution 1244 (1999) had made Kosovo a very special case.¹²³

The representative of Albania welcomed the guiding principles of the Contact Group for a settlement of the status of Kosovo,¹²⁴ which outlined that Kosovo should not return to the pre-March 1999 situation; that there be no changes in the current territory of Kosovo; no partition of Kosovo and no union with any other country or with part of any other country.¹²⁵

The representative of Finland, speaking on behalf of the European Union, noted that, depending on the future status settlement, the engagement of the European Union in Kosovo was to have three main components: the contribution to a possible future international civilian presence, a possible European Security and Defence Policy operation in the broader field of the rule of law, and a presence related to the European perspective on Kosovo. She further noted that preparations were well under way in all of those areas and that a planning team of the European Union had already been established and deployed in Kosovo to make preparations for those possibilities.¹²⁶

The representative of Ukraine stressed that the political process of determining the future status of Kosovo should be handled with the maximum level of responsibility by all the parties involved. Any imposed decision or hasty actions leading to a unilateral change of the borders of an internationally recognized democratic state in the Balkan region would destabilize the situation and set a dangerous precedent in Europe and the entire world. He therefore thought that it was particularly important to ensure that the eventual decision of the Council on the final status of Kosovo did not impose a solution, but was taken only with the clearly expressed consent of both parties concerned.¹²⁷

The representative of the United Kingdom said that it should be recognized that the growing consensus on the part of many observers was that any settlement was likely to be based on some form of independence for Kosovo, supervised by a robust international civilian and military presence and with cast-iron guarantees protecting the rights and security of the minority communities of Kosovo. She noted that such an outcome would be consistent with the guiding principles and ministerial statements of the Contact Group, echoed by many in the Council, regarding a settlement that would be acceptable to the majority of people in Kosovo.¹²⁸

The representative of China held that both the international community and the Council should be impartial on the question of the future status of Kosovo and encourage both sides to seek a mutually acceptable plan through constructive negotiations on the basis of the relevant resolutions of the Council.¹²⁹

In contrast to the representative of Serbia, who stressed that the issue of Kosovo was by its very essence a matter of precedent,¹³⁰ the representative of Finland, on behalf of the European Union, said that the European Union viewed the question of the status of Kosovo as sui generis. She stressed that the outcome of the status process would not set a precedent for other regions because its status was exceptional, having been based on resolution 1244 (1999).¹³¹ report, the Secretary-General noted that his Special Envoy on the future status of Kosovo had submitted a draft comprehensive proposal for the Kosovo status settlement to the parties on 2 February 2007 and had invited the parties to engage in a consultative process on the proposal.

At that meeting, the Council had an exchange of views with the President of the Coordination Centre of the Republic of Serbia for Kosovo and Metohija.

At its 5654th meeting, held in private on 3 April 2007, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 26 March 2007 from the Secretary-General,¹³³ transmitting the report of his Special Envoy on the future status of Kosovo and the comprehensive proposal for the Kosovo status settlement. In his report, the Special Envoy had concluded that the only viable option for Kosovo was independence, to be supervised for an initial period by the international community. As part of his comprehensive proposal, the Special Envoy had set forth those international supervisory structures which would provide the foundation for a viable, sustainable and stable future independent Kosovo, in which all communities and their members could live a peaceful and dignified existence. In his letter to the Council, the Secretary-General offered his full support for the recommendations put forward by his Special Envoy.

At that meeting, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General, a statement by the Prime Minister of Serbia and a statement by the Special Representative, speaking in part on behalf of the President of Kosovo.

31. The situation in Georgia

Decision of 30 January 2004 (4906th meeting):
resolution 1524 (2004)

At its 4906th meeting, on 30 January 2004,¹ the Security Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 14 January 2004 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.² In his report, the Secretary-General welcomed the momentum that the United Nations-led peace process had gained in the course of 2003, as well as the increased involvement of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General and the renewed willingness of the sides to engage constructively on practical matters in areas of key concern: economic cooperation, return of refugees and internally displaced persons, and political and security matters. He noted, however, that progress had remained painfully slow and that sustained efforts by the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG), supported by the Group of Friends, had been required to keep the sides focused on moving forward.

The Secretary-General observed that the increasingly complex political situation on both sides of the ceasefire line and the events that had led to the resignation of the President of Georgia in November 2003 had put the peace process temporarily on hold. He encouraged both sides to continue with the implementation of outstanding recommendations of the 2000 joint assessment mission³ and the 2002 security assessment mission.⁴ Two years after the finalization of the document entitled “Basic Principles for the Distribution of Competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi,” negotiations on the future political status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia had not yet started. The Secretary-General had appealed to the Abkhaz side to abandon its uncompromising position and take advantage of the change of leadership in Tbilisi to negotiate a mutually acceptable and lasting settlement. The Secretary-General recommended the further extension of the mandate of UNOMIG for six months, owing to his conviction that the presence of UNOMIG continued to remain critical for maintaining stability in the zone of conflict and enhancing the peace process towards a comprehensive political settlement.

The President (Chile) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁵ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1524 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Stressed its strong support for the document entitled “Basic Principles for the Distribution of Competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi”;

Urged the parties to participate in a more active, regular and structured manner in the task forces established at the first Geneva meeting and stressed that results-oriented activities in priority areas remained key to building common ground between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides and ultimately for concluding meaningful negotiations on a comprehensive political settlement;

Called upon the parties to spare no effort to overcome their ongoing mutual mistrust;

Called again upon the parties to ensure the necessary revitalization of the peace process in all its major aspects, including their work in the Coordinating Council and its relevant mechanisms;

Stressed the urgent need for progress on the question of the refugees and internally displaced persons;

Recalled that the Abkhaz side bore a particular responsibility to protect the returnees and to facilitate the return of the remaining displaced population;

Called upon both parties to publicly dissociate themselves from any militant rhetoric and demonstrations of support for military options or for the activities of illegal armed groups;

Urged the parties, once again, to take all necessary steps to identify those responsible for the shooting down of a UNOMIG helicopter on 8 October 2001, to bring them to justice, and to inform the Special Representative of the steps taken;

Decided to extend the mandate of UNOMIG for a new period terminating on 31 July 2004, subject to a review as appropriate of its mandate by the Council in the event of changes in the mandate of the collective peacekeeping force of the Commonwealth of Independent States.

Decision of 29 July 2004 (5013th meeting):
resolution 1554 (2004)

At its 4916th meeting, on 26 February 2004, at which no statements were made, the Council was briefed by the President of Georgia.

In his briefing, the President of Georgia expressed his unwavering commitment to the peaceful resolution of the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia. He called upon the people of Abkhazia to rise above the confrontation and seize the unique window of opportunity due to the recent developments and changes in Georgia. He expressed his readiness to guarantee the highest possible degree of autonomy to Abkhazia within the State of Georgia. With regard to relations with the Russian Federation, the President of Georgia stated, inter alia, that the policy of the Russian Federation of providing citizenship to the population of the conflict regions would have to end. Additionally, the visa-free regime in place in Abkhazia and the former South Ossetia would have to end, or be introduced for every individual inhabitant and citizen of Georgia in conjunction with the Georgian Central Government and the Georgian authorities — not unilaterally with unrecognized local authorities. The President stressed that the Geneva process, initiated in Sochi by the President of the Russian Federation, also had to advance, specifically the deployment of a civilian police unit in the Gali region as a necessary instrument for the return of the internally displaced persons and refugees.⁶

At its 4958th meeting, on 29 April 2004, at which the Prime Minister of Georgia made a statement, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, dated 20 April 2004.⁷ In his report, the Secretary-General observed, inter alia, that his Special Representative and UNOMIG had continued efforts to promote stability in a complex political environment and to assist the sides in renewing their dialogue and building common ground as a means of advancing the peace process. However, progress had remained painfully slow and no movement had been made by the Abkhaz side on the core political question and negotiations on a comprehensive political settlement had not yet begun. Cautious optimism was however expressed in view of the change of leadership in Tbilisi and the renewed efforts of the Government of Georgia to resolve the country's internal conflicts. The Secretary-General urged the Abkhaz side to permit the deployment of UNOMIG civilian police in the Gali sector, in line with its earlier commitments, to facilitate improved police practices and better cooperation between local law enforcement agencies and thereby to improve the overall security situation for all inhabitants of the area.

In his briefing to the Council, the Prime Minister of Georgia reiterated the position that his country remained committed to the peaceful resolution of the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia. With regard to the establishment of the civilian police component in the Gali region, the Prime Minister noted that the Abkhaz authorities had continued to obstruct the full formation and deployment of the units, which continued to create significant problems for the population in the Gali district. Regret was expressed over the fact that the Abkhaz side had refused to participate in the third meeting of the Geneva process in February 2004 and that the Council should thus pay more attention to the unconstructive position of the "separatists". He noted that three years had elapsed since the Group of Friends had agreed on and supported the Boden document on the distribution of constitutional competencies between Tbilisi and Sukhumi, and that the Russian Federation, as facilitator, had been trying to transmit the paper to the Abkhaz side, to little avail. Finally, the Prime Minister requested the international community, and in particular the Council, to reinvigorate their efforts to reach a comprehensive, peaceful resolution to the conflict.⁸

At its 5013th meeting, on 29 July 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 14 July 2004 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.⁹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed, inter alia, that, on the political front, while the Georgian and Abkhaz sides had continued with practical cooperation, particularly in the security domain, a substantive dialogue on the key issues of the conflict had still been lacking. He noted the widely held belief that the existing complex political situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, on the eve of the “presidential elections” scheduled for October 2004, had been one of the main factors negatively affecting the positions of the Abkhaz side in the Georgian-Abkhaz peace process and the pace of the peace process in general. He expressed his strong hope that, with time, the leadership in Sukhumi would reconsider its stance and respond constructively to the offer by the new Georgian leadership for a renewed and direct meaningful dialogue on all substantive issues of the conflict.

The Secretary-General noted that UNOMIG continued its efforts on the three issues identified as priority areas for advancing the peace process: political and security matters, return of refugees and internally displaced persons, and economic cooperation. The Group of Friends had continued to provide invaluable support to those efforts. However, it had remained clear that without a comprehensive settlement of the conflict, there would be neither lasting security nor economic prosperity.

The Secretary-General welcomed the discussions that had taken place between the parties on security guarantees and the return of refugees. With regard to the security of UNOMIG personnel, he stated that the readiness of both sides to provide meaningful assurances towards that end should be followed up with resolute action to identify and bring to justice the perpetrators of criminal acts against Mission personnel. The Secretary-General stated that the role played by UNOMIG with regard to preventing the resumption of hostilities and pursuing a lasting solution of the conflict remained relevant and important and recommended that the mandate of UNOMIG should be extended for a further period of six months.

The President (Romania) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 26 July 2004 from the representative of Georgia.¹⁰ The President then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹¹ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1554 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Called upon the parties to spare no effort to overcome their ongoing mutual mistrust, and underlined that the process of negotiation leading to a lasting political settlement acceptable to both sides would require concessions from both sides;

Urged the parties to participate in a more active, regular and structured manner in the task forces established at the first Geneva meeting (to address issues in the priority areas of economic cooperation, the return of internally displaced persons and refugees, and political and security matters);

Urged the parties to abide by the provisions of the protocols on security issues in the Gali sector signed on 8 October 2003 and 19 January 2004, to continue their regular meetings and to cooperate more closely with each other to improve security in the sector;

Decided to extend the mandate of UNOMIG for a new period terminating on 31 January 2005, subject to a review as appropriate of its mandate by the Council in the event of changes in the mandate of the collective peacekeeping force;

Requested the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Council regularly informed and to report three months from the date of the adoption of the resolution on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.

Decision of 28 January 2005 (5116th meeting):
resolution 1582 (2005)

At its 5116th meeting, on 28 January 2005, in which the representative of Georgia was invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 17 January 2005 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.¹² In his report, the Secretary-General observed, inter alia, that particularly the second half of 2004 had not been easy for the Georgian-Abkhaz peace process. While the parties had come together during the course of the year on some substantive issues, efforts to advance a dialogue had encountered serious challenges. Renewed tensions in the zone of conflict had led to a chain of events that had brought all contacts between the sides to a halt by mid-year, so that the Mission’s main efforts had focused on finding ways to re-establish the dialogue and avoid regression. The political uncertainty in Sukhumi had also seriously limited the possibility of continued dialogue. However, the Secretary-General noted that the high-level meeting of the Group of Friends, held on 13 and 14 December 2004 in Geneva, had been a timely opportunity to reflect on the overall state of the peace process and to discuss how best to address the challenges to the pursuit of a lasting and comprehensive solution to the conflict. The support of the Group of Friends had remained invaluable for the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative. Convinced that UNOMIG had continued to play a key role in preventing instability on the ground and in promoting a political settlement of the conflict, the Secretary-General, in his report, recommended that the mandate of UNOMIG be extended for a further six months.

The President (Argentina) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 26 January 2005 from the representative of Georgia,¹³ and to a draft resolution;¹⁴ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1582 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Commended and strongly supported the sustained efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative, with the assistance of the Russian Federation in its capacity as facilitator as well as of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General and of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, to promote the stabilization of the situation and the achievement of a comprehensive political settlement, which must include a settlement of the political status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia;

Urged the parties once again to implement the recommendations of the joint assessment mission of November 2000 to the Gali sector, regretted that there had been no progress to that effect despite the positive consideration by the parties given to those recommendations at the first Geneva meeting, and called again upon the Abkhaz side to agree to the opening as soon as possible of the Gali branch of the human rights office in Sukhumi and to provide security conditions for its unhindered functioning;

Decided to extend the mandate of UNOMIG for a new period terminating on 31 July 2005, subject to a review as appropriate of its mandate by the Council in the event of changes in the mandate of the collective peacekeeping force.

Decision of 29 July 2005 (5242nd meeting):

At its 5242nd meeting, on 29 July 2005,¹⁵ in which the representative of Georgia was invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 13 July 2005 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.¹⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General observed, inter alia, that resumed participation of the Georgian and Abkhaz sides in the United Nations-chaired Geneva meetings of the Group of Friends¹⁷ and in meetings addressing various practical aspects of the peace process after a prolonged suspension of direct contacts had been an encouraging development. He appealed to both sides to seize the new opportunities for dialogue, given the improving regional environment, to achieve concrete progress in priority areas and related confidence-building measures so that, as a starting point, negotiations on a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict could take place using the document entitled “Basic Principles for the Distribution of Competencies between Tbilisi and Sukhumi” and its transmittal letter.

The Secretary-General urged the Georgian side to be forthcoming in meeting Abkhaz security concerns and the Abkhaz side to effectively address practical and security concerns of the local population and returnees and honour previous commitments of accepting the deployment of UNOMIG police officers in the Gali district. He also urged the Abkhaz side to allow the opening of a human rights sub-office in Gali and the teaching of the local youth in their native Georgian language. As UNOMIG had continued to play an important role in preventing a destabilization of the situation on the ground in pursuing both practical activities and a lasting solution to the conflict, the Secretary-General recommended that the mandate of UNOMIG be extended for a further period of six months.

The President (Greece) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany, Romania, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States;¹⁸ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1615 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Commended and strongly supported the sustained efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative, with the assistance of the Russian Federation in its capacity as facilitator as well as of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General and of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, to promote the stabilization of the situation and the achievement of a comprehensive political settlement, which must include a settlement of the political status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia;

Deeply regretted the continuing refusal of the Abkhaz side to agree to a discussion on the substance of the document entitled "Basic Principles for the Distribution of Competencies between Tblisi and Sukhumi", again strongly urged the Abkhaz side to receive the document and its letter of transmittal, urged both parties thereafter to give them full and open consideration and to engage in constructive negotiations on their substance, and urged those having influence with the parties to promote that outcome;

Decided to extend the mandate of UNOMIG for a new period terminating on 31 January 2006, subject to a review as appropriate of its mandate by the Council in the event of changes in the mandate of the collective peacekeeping force.

Decision of 31 January 2006 (5363rd meeting):
resolution 1656 (2006)

At its 5363rd meeting, on 31 January 2006, in which the representatives of Georgia and Germany were invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 13 January 2006 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.¹⁹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed, inter alia, that the United Nations had remained committed to assisting the Georgian and Abkhaz sides in the search for a peaceful and comprehensive settlement. In an encouraging development, both sides had engaged constructively with the mediation of the Special Representative in exchanges on joint draft documents on the non-resumption of hostilities, as well as the safe and dignified return of refugees and internally displaced persons. He called upon both sides to refrain from actions or statements that could damage emerging opportunities in the peace process. The Georgian side was urged to take into due account the Abkhaz security concerns, and the Abkhaz side effectively to meet the security and human rights concerns of the local population and returnees to the Gali district. The Secretary-General noted that the reluctance of the Abkhaz side to implement the recommendations of the 2000 joint assessment mission²⁰ and the 2002 security assessment mission²¹ had not been conducive to progress. Stressing that the free movement of UNOMIG personnel had been of continuing concern, both sides were reminded of their obligation to ensure the safety of UNOMIG personnel at all times. Stating that UNOMIG had continued to play a key role in maintaining stability in the conflict zone and facilitating progress towards a sustainable political solution of the conflict, the Secretary-General recommended that the UNOMIG mandate be extended for a further six-month period.

The President (United Republic of Tanzania) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany, the Russian Federation, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States;²² it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1656 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia: decided to extend the mandate of UNOMIG until 31 March 2006; and decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 31 March 2006 (5405th meeting):
resolution 1666 (2006)

At its 5405th meeting, on 31 March 2006, in which the representatives of Georgia and Germany were invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 17 March 2006 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.²³ In his report, the Secretary-General observed, inter alia, that on 2 and 3 February 2006, senior representatives of the Group of Friends had met in Geneva, under the chairmanship of the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations. The Group of Friends had underlined the need for a peaceful settlement of the conflict in the framework of the relevant Council resolutions, and had reaffirmed their commitment to the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Georgia within its internationally recognized borders. They had agreed on the need to address the core political issues of the conflict, in addition to continuing work on confidence-building measures. The Secretary-General stated that was essential that the Georgian and Abkhaz sides actively follow up on the understandings reached at the Geneva meeting of the Group of Friends. In particular, early finalization of the documents on the non-use of force and on the return of internally displaced persons and refugees would be a strong indication of their commitment to make tangible progress in the peace process. As UNOMIG had continued to play a key role in maintaining stability in the conflict zone and in facilitating progress towards a sustainable political solution of the conflict, the Secretary-General recommended that the UNOMIG mandate be extended for a further six-month period.

The President (Argentina) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany, the Russian Federation, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States;²⁴ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1666 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Urged both parties to finalize without delay the package of documents on the non-use of violence and on the return of refugees and internally displaced persons for the Gali district and to take necessary steps to secure the protection and dignity of the civilian population, including the returnees;

Called upon both parties to follow up on their expressed readiness for a meeting of their highest authorities without preconditions; urged the Georgian side to address seriously legitimate Abkhaz security concerns;

Decided to extend the mandate of UNOMIG for a new period terminating on 15 October 2006;

Strongly supported the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, and called upon the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General to continue giving her their steadfast and unified support.

Decision of 13 October 2006 (5549th meeting):
resolution 1716 (2006)

At its 5549th meeting, on 13 October 2006,²⁵ in which the representatives of Georgia and Germany were invited to attend to participate, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 28 September 2006 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.²⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General observed, inter alia, that after expectations of a new momentum in the negotiation process had been raised by the resumption of the Coordinating Council on 15 May 2006²⁷ and exchanges of proposals between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides, a new and tense situation had emerged, in particular as a result of the Georgian special operation in the upper Kodori Valley on 25 July 2006. That operation, under the direction of the Ministers of Internal Affairs and Defence of Georgia, had the stated objective of restoring law and order in the area. Following this event, the Abkhaz side had called into question the usefulness of attempting to reach further agreements in the framework of the settlement process, and the de facto Abkhaz authorities had insisted on the resolution of the situation in the upper Kodori Valley as a precondition for the resumption of dialogue. Based on the experience of, inter alia, the event in the Kodori Valley, the Secretary-General identified several issues of special relevance: the commitment by both sides to provide advance notification and full transparency in the movement of those pieces of military equipment and armed personnel that were permitted under the Moscow Agreement; maintaining open channels of communication and dialogue; and agreement on the modalities for the monitoring of the Kodori Valley. The Secretary-General noted that as the developments during the reporting period had highlighted once again that the presence of UNOMIG remained essential for maintaining stability in the zone of conflict, promoting practical cooperation among the sides and facilitating progress towards a negotiated peaceful settlement of the conflict, he recommended the extension of the UNOMIG mandate for a further period of six months.

The President (Japan) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany, the Russian Federation, Slovakia and the United Kingdom;²⁸ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1716 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNOMIG for a new period terminating on 15 April 2007;

Requested the Secretary-General to include detailed information on developments in the Kodori Valley and on the progress on efforts for the return of refugees and internally displaced persons, particularly to the Gali district, in his next report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia;

Strongly supported the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, and called upon the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General to continue giving him their steadfast and unified support.

Decision of 13 April 2007 (5661st meeting):
resolution 1752 (2007)

At its 5661st meeting, on 13 April 2007,²⁹ in which the representatives of Georgia and Germany were invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 3 April 2007 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.³⁰ In his report, the Secretary-General observed, inter alia, that he welcomed the progress made by the two sides towards the implementation of resolution 1716 (2006). In particular, he welcomed the continuation of joint patrolling of the Kodori Valley by UNOMIG and the Commonwealth of Independent States peacekeeping force. He noted with satisfaction that no heavy weapons had been observed in the valley and that, compared with the situation observed by the joint patrol in October 2006, the number of armed personnel had decreased. The expansion of UNOMIG assistance to the Gali district in terms of both activities of the United Nations police advisers and the full-time presence there of the Human Rights Office in Abkhazia, Georgia, was also welcomed. However, the events of 11 March 2007 in the upper Kodori Valley³¹ had been a major setback which demonstrated the continued volatile situation. Expressing the belief that the presence of UNOMIG had continued to contribute to security in the conflict zone and international efforts to promote political dialogue between the parties, the Secretary-General recommended that the mandate of UNOMIG be extended for a further six-month period.

The President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States;³² it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1752 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned the attack on villages in the upper Kodori Valley on 11-12 March 2007, and urged all sides to extend full support to the ongoing investigation;

Decided to extend the mandate of UNOMIG for a new period terminating on 15 October 2007;

Requested the Secretary-General to make use of the extended mandate to support the parties in implementing measures to build confidence and to establish and intensive dialogue, and to inform the Council of progress made in his next report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia;

Strongly supported the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, and called upon the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General to continue giving him their steadfast and unified support.

Decision of 15 October 2007 (5759th meeting)
resolution 1781 (2007)

At its 5759th meeting, on 15 October 2007,³³ in which the representative of Germany was invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 3 October 2007 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.³⁴ In his report, the Secretary-General observed, inter alia, that while the relative calm observed in the zone of conflict during the previous reporting period had been in favourable contrast with previous periods, the deadly clash that had occurred on 20 September 2007 had been the most serious incident involving the Georgian and Abkhaz sides in many years. In the incident, which occurred outside the zone of conflict, seven Abkhaz personnel had been apprehended by the Georgian side, one had been wounded and two former Russian officers reportedly on contract with the Abkhaz forces had been killed. While the Abkhaz de facto authorities had claimed it had been a raid by Georgian Ministry of Internal Affairs personnel on the Abkhaz training camp co-located with a de facto border guard post at Bokhundjara, within Abkhaz-controlled territory, the Georgian side claimed that a group of Abkhaz “saboteurs” had entered Georgian-controlled territory to disrupt work on the road to the upper Kodori Valley, which was under construction, in an attempt to isolate the valley from the rest of Georgia. In the wake of this incident UNOMIG had, with the consent of both sides, initiated its own independent fact-finding efforts to clarify the circumstances of the incident.

The overall approach to the settlement of the conflict, remained that a successful dialogue on security, the return of internally displaced persons, refugees and economic rehabilitation and humanitarian issues would help to bring about a comprehensive political settlement, but the situation with regard to actual contact between the two sides remained disappointing and overshadowed by developments that had generated distrust. Observing that the presence of UNOMIG had continued to contribute to security in the conflict zone, and the international community had continued to promote a peaceful settlement of the conflict, the Secretary-General recommended the extension of the UNOMIG mandate for a further six-month period.

The President (Ghana) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany, the Russian Federation, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States;³⁵ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1781 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Urged the continued active engagement of both sides within the Joint Fact-finding Group and expressed its support for the report of the Joint Fact-finding Group on the rocket firing incident in the upper Kodori Valley on 11 March 2007;

Decided to extend the mandate of UNOMIG for a new period terminating on 15 April 2008;

Requested the Secretary-General to make use of the extended mandate to support the parties in implementing measures to build confidence and to establish an intensive and meaningful dialogue, and to inform the Council of progress made in his next report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia;

Strongly supported the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, and called upon the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General to continue giving him their steadfast and unified support.

32. Briefing by the Chairman-in-Office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe¹

Deliberations of 7 May 2004 to 28 September 2007 (4964th, 5134th, 5346th and 5751st meetings)

At its 4964th, 5134th, 5346th and 5751st meetings,² at which statements were made by the representatives of Argentina, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Pakistan, the Russian Federation, Slovakia, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States, the Security Council was briefed by the Chairman-in-Office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE). In those annual briefings to the Council, the Chairman-in-Office of OSCE underlined the importance of OSCE as the primary instrument for early warning, conflict prevention, crisis management and post-conflict rehabilitation, and outlined the priorities of the Organization within the politico-military, the economic and environmental and the human dimensions. Those priorities included counter-terrorism; control of the spread of small arms and light weapons; policing; border management and security; economic and environmental threats; election monitoring; democratization assistance; monitoring of the freedom of the media; promotion of tolerance and education; combating international crime; promotion of the rule of law; and conflict prevention with a special focus on Kosovo³ and unresolved conflicts such as those in

Transnistria, Moldova; South Ossetia and Abkhazia, Georgia; and Nagorny-Karabakh.⁴

The Chairman-in-Office urged the members of the Security Council, in particular those who were mediators in those conflicts or who had influence over the parties, to support the efforts of OSCE. Noting the difficulty for inter-State organizations to deal with non-State actors, even if in some cases they were the de facto authorities, he urged the Council to exert pressure in the context of OSCE mediation efforts to help resolve the above-mentioned long-standing conflicts.⁵

The Chairman-in-Office noted that OSCE, as a regional arrangement under Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, had been focusing on close and expanding cooperation with the United Nations, the European Union, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and other regional organizations with the aim of improving their ability to respond quickly and effectively in addressing major contemporary challenges.⁶ In that context, the Chairman-in-Office assured the Council of the full support of OSCE for the principles and recommendations contained in resolution 1631 (2005), which were aimed at strengthening cooperation and consultation between the United Nations and regional organizations, while recognizing the primary responsibility of the Security Council for international peace and security.⁷

Most speakers expressed appreciation of the cooperation between OSCE and the United Nations and generally endorsed the priorities outlined by the Chairman-in-Office during the period under review.

Middle East

33. The situation in the Middle East

A. United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

Decisions of 29 June 2004 to 14 December 2007: resolutions 1550 (2004), 1578 (2004), 1605 (2005), 1648 (2005), 1685 (2006), 1729 (2006), 1759 (2007) and 1788 (2007) and statements by the President

At each of its 4998th, 5101st, 5205th, 5339th, 5456th, 5596th, 5698th and 5802nd meetings,¹ the Security Council adopted unanimously and without a debate a resolution extending the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observation Force (UNDOF) for periods of six months on the basis of the reports of the Secretary-General.² In his reports, the Secretary-General observed that the situation in the Israeli-Syrian sector had remained generally quiet. He noted that, from 12 July to 14 August 2006, rockets originating from the area of operations of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) had hit close to UNDOF positions in the Shab'a area.³ In general, UNDOF continued to perform its role as supervisor of the ceasefire between the Syrian and Israeli forces. Despite the calm, he noted that the situation in the Middle East was tense and was likely to remain so unless a comprehensive settlement could be reached.

In the resolutions adopted during this period, the Council called upon all parties concerned to implement immediately its resolution 338 (1973) of 22 October 1973; renewed the mandate of UNDOF for successive

During this period, in addition to those meetings, the Council held a number of meetings in private with the troop-contributing countries to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, pursuant to annex II, sections A and B of resolution 1353 (2001). The meetings were held on 24 June 2004 (4996th), 10 December 2004 (5098th), 15 June 2005 (5200th), 16 December 2005 (5330th), 6 June 2006 (5452nd), 13 December 2006 (5587th), 12 June 2007 (5692nd) and 11 December 2007 (5797th).

six-month periods, the last mandate ending on 30 June 2008; and requested that the Secretary-General submit a report on developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement the resolutions.⁴

Complementary statements by the President were also released, in which it was stated that, despite the current quiet in the Israeli-Syrian sector, the situation in the Middle East continued to be potentially dangerous and was likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem could be reached.⁵

B. United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and developments in the Israel-Lebanon sector

Decisions of 30 January 2004 and 29 July 2004: resolutions 1525 (2004) and 1553 (2004)

At its 4907th and 5012th meetings,⁶ the Security Council adopted unanimously and without debate resolutions 1525 (2004) and 1553 (2004), respectively, extending the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) on the basis of the reports of the Secretary-General⁷ and the requests of Lebanon.⁸ In his reports, the Secretary-General observed that the situation in the UNIFIL area of operations during the period had been characterized by numerous armed encounters across the Blue Line, the majority of which were between Hizbullah and the Israel Defense Forces and some of which involved unknown or Palestinian actors. He noted that tensions were frequently high, and the situation was fragile. He also stated that the cycle of air violations by Israel, the firing of anti-aircraft rounds by Hizbullah, and air strikes by Israel against Hizbullah positions had added a serious new dimension to the conflict. The Secretary-General noted that the situation along the Blue Line was susceptible to volatile regional developments and underlined the need to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

At those meetings, the President⁹ drew the attention of the Council to documents submitted by Lebanon¹⁰ and Israel,¹¹ reporting violations of the Blue Line.

By resolutions 1525 (2004) and 1553 (2007), the Council renewed the mandate of UNIFIL for two six-month periods, the second mandate expiring on 31 January 2005; and stressed the importance of the continuing efforts by the Government of Lebanon to ensure the return of its effective authority throughout the south, including the deployment of Lebanese armed forces. The Council also reiterated its call on the parties to continue to fulfil the commitments they had given to fully respect the withdrawal line identified by the United Nations, and to exercise utmost restraint and cooperate fully with the United Nations and UNIFIL. The Council requested that the Secretary-General continue his consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned on the implementation of those resolutions.

Decision of 28 January 2005 (5117th meeting): resolution 1583 (2005)

At its 5117th meeting, on 28 January 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on UNIFIL dated 20 January 2005.¹² In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the UNIFIL area of operations had been relatively quiet but that serious incidents had occurred in the last weeks of the reporting period. On 9 January, a roadside bomb had hit an Israel Defense Force convoy, resulting in the death of one soldier and wounding three others. In the same incident, one United Nations observer and a French national had been killed and a Swedish national was injured. Retaliatory fire had ensued, claiming the life of one Hizbullah fighter and injuring another. The Secretary-General also noted that the Blue Line had enjoyed prolonged periods of relative quiet often followed by several episodes of hostilities. He stated that the resumption of military measures, for which Hizbullah took credit, and the disregard shown for the safety of the unarmed United Nations military observers, was troubling.

The President (Argentina) drew the attention of the Council to letters addressed to the Secretary-General by the Governments of Lebanon¹³ and Israel,¹⁴ reporting violations of the Blue Line. In another letter brought to the attention of the Council, the representative of Lebanon requested that the Council extend the mandate of UNIFIL for a further period of six months.¹⁵

The President then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹⁶ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1583 (2005), by which, the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNIFIL until 31 July 2005;

Called upon the Government of Lebanon to fully extend and exercise its sole and effective authority throughout the south, including through the deployment of sufficient numbers of Lebanese armed and security forces, to ensure a calm environment throughout the area;

Called on the parties to ensure UNIFIL was accorded full freedom of movement throughout its area of operation;

Condemned all acts of violence, including the recent incidents across the Blue Line that had resulted in the killing and wounding of United Nations military observers;

Supported the continued efforts of UNIFIL to maintain the ceasefire along the withdrawal line through mobile patrols and observation from fixed positions and through close contacts with the parties;

Welcomed the continued contribution of UNIFIL to operational mine clearance, encouraged further assistance in mine action by the United Nations to the Government of Lebanon in support of both the continued development of its national mine action capacity and clearance of the remaining mine/unexploded ordnance threat in the south.

After the vote, statements were made by the representatives of Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, China, France, Greece, Japan, Lebanon, the Russian Federation and the United States.

Most representatives condemned the violations of the Blue Line, whether by land or by air, and stressed that it was the responsibility of the parties to take the necessary measures to ensure respect for the Blue Line in its entirety and to prevent all violations. Several representatives maintained that Lebanon needed to re-establish its authority in the south, in particular by deploying its armed forces and disarming the militias. Many representatives stated that UNIFIL had contributed to the stability and security in the region, and that the persistence of violent incidents and violations along the length of the Blue Line underlined the importance of the presence on the ground of UNIFIL.

The representative of the United States further stated that the continually asserted position of the Government of Lebanon — that the Blue Line was not valid in the Shab'a farms area — was not compatible with Security Council resolutions and, in any case, was not an excuse for allowing Hizbullah to engage in violence along and across the Blue Line. She also noted that the failure of the Government of Lebanon to deploy its armed forces in sufficient numbers to ensure a calm environment throughout the area posed a grave threat to peace and security there.¹⁷

The representative of China stated that, even though the text was still not entirely satisfactory, the Chinese delegation, bearing in mind the overall situation, had voted in favour of the draft resolution.¹⁸

The representative of the Russian Federation noted that, throughout the history of United Nations peacekeeping forces, mandates had always been voted on unanimously, and he had not wanted to break that tradition. He stated that the resolution was not satisfactory to the Russian Federation as it was too politicized. It was geared not so much to enhancing the nature of the United Nations operation in southern Lebanon, but rather to bringing pressure to bear on Beirut and obliging it to endeavour to resolve questions that, for objective reasons and because of the overall situation in the Middle East, it simply could not resolve. He noted that the Russian Federation had introduced a number of amendments to try to make it more balanced when it was under consideration at the expert level, but those suggestions had not been accepted.¹⁹

The representative of Lebanon believed that it would have been desirable to draft a technical resolution to extend the mandate of UNIFIL without selectively highlighting passages from the report of the Secretary-General and without introducing any political elements into the resolution.²⁰

resolutions 1614 (2005) and 1655 (2006)

At its 5241st and 5362nd meetings,²¹ the Council adopted, unanimously and without debate, a resolution extending the mandate of UNIFIL on the basis of the reports of the Secretary-General²² and the request of the Government of Lebanon.²³ In his reports, the Secretary-General observed that a series of exchanges had occurred between the Israel Defense Forces and Hizbullah. In an incident on 29 June 2005, one Israeli soldier was killed and four were wounded, and two Hizbullah fighters were killed. Israeli aircraft continued to violate Lebanese airspace, and a number of Lebanese ground violations were recorded by UNIFIL. He also noted that, on 6 and 9 June 2005, the army of Lebanon had vacated two of its three checkpoints in the UNIFIL area of operations, which the Government of Lebanon had stated was part of an overall redeployment of the army throughout the country. In another incident on 21 November 2005, four Hizbullah fighters were killed and one Israeli civilian had been injured. The retaliatory aerial bombing by the Israeli Air Force had lasted nine hours, during which time 800 artillery, tank and mortar rounds and rockets had been fired; 12 Israeli soldiers, one Israeli civilian, and an unidentified number of Hizbullah fighters had been injured.

At those meetings, the President²⁴ drew the attention of the Council to documents submitted by Lebanon²⁵ and Israel,²⁶ which reported violations of the Blue Line.

By resolutions 1614 (2005) and 1655 (2006), the Council renewed the mandate of UNIFIL for successive six-month periods, the second mandate expiring on 31 July 2006. It condemned all acts of violence, including the incidents across the Blue Line that had resulted in deaths and injuries. The Council also supported the efforts of UNIFIL to maintain the ceasefire and requested that the Secretary-General continue to work with the Government of Lebanon to reinforce its authority in the south and to continue consultations with the parties concerned on the implementation of the resolutions.

Decision of 27 July 2006 (5497th meeting):
statement by the President

By identical letters dated 12 July 2006 addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council, the representative of Israel informed the Council that “Hizbullah terrorists” had unleashed a barrage of heavy artillery and rockets into Israel, causing a number of deaths.²⁷ The terrorists had also infiltrated Israel and kidnapped two Israeli soldiers, taking them into Lebanon. The representative stated that responsibility for this “belligerent act of war” lay with the Government of Lebanon, from whose territory the acts had been launched into Israel. The Government of Israel considered them to be “a clear declaration of war” and a violation of the Blue Line and Security Council resolutions 425 (1978), 1559 (2004) and 1680 (2006), and all other relevant resolutions. Therefore, Israel reserved the right to act in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations and exercise its right of self-defence. Israel would take the appropriate actions to secure the release of the kidnapped soldiers and bring an end to the shelling.

By a letter dated 13 July 2006 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Lebanon requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the grave situation resulting from the latest acts of “aggression” by Israel in Lebanon.²⁸

At its 5489th meeting, held on 14 July 2006, in response to the request of Lebanon, the Council included the letter dated 13 July 2006 in its agenda. In addition to all members of the Council, statements were made by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, and the representatives of Israel and Lebanon.

The President (France) drew the attention of the Council to the above-mentioned letter from the representative of Israel and two letters from the representative of Lebanon to the Secretary-General.²⁹ By the first letter, dated 13 July 2006, the representative of Lebanon informed the Secretary-General that the Lebanese Council of Ministers had held an emergency meeting on 12 July 2006, at which the Government had maintained that it was not aware of the events that had occurred on the international Lebanese border; that it was not responsible for the events nor did it endorse them; and that it condemned the “Israeli aggression”. In the second letter, also dated 13 July 2006, the Government of Lebanon informed the Secretary-General of the latest “Israeli aggressions” against Lebanon.

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations briefed the Council on the situation in the Middle East. He stated that the crisis between Israel and Lebanon was the most serious since the withdrawal of Israeli forces from southern Lebanon in 2000. The crisis had started on 12 July 2006 when Hizbullah launched several rocket attacks from Lebanese territory across the Blue Line towards the Israel Defense Forces, killing three soldiers, wounding two, and capturing two. An exchange of fire between the Israel Defense Forces and Hizbullah ensued, spanning the length of the Blue Line. On the afternoon of 12 July, the Government of Lebanon had requested that UNIFIL broker a ceasefire. The Government of Israel had responded that a ceasefire would be contingent upon the return of the captured soldiers. As a result of the assaults and the fact that the Israel Defense Forces had warned that any person moving close to the Blue Line would be shot at, including United Nations personnel, the ability of UNIFIL to monitor the area of operations was limited.³⁰

The Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs also briefed the Council, stating that parts of Lebanon were under blockade and heavy Israeli military action. He noted that the Secretary-General had condemned all actions which targeted civilians or which unduly endangered them owing to their disproportionate or indiscriminate character and called on all parties to adhere to their obligations under international law and international agreements and urged restraint to prevent the situation from spiralling even further out of control. He also informed the Council of the decision of the Secretary-General to send a mission to the Middle East to exercise good offices and help defuse the major crisis in the region.³¹

The representative of Lebanon stated that “widespread and barbaric aggression” by the Government of Israel was destroying the infrastructure of Lebanon and causing the deaths of innocent civilians. The forces of the Government of Israel had launched widespread military operations, deliberately bombing vital installations, destroying major bridges; fuel storage tanks at electrical power plants; the three runways at Beirut International Airport; and other civilian installations and residential buildings. He maintained that the Government of Israel held the Government of Lebanon responsible for the attack and the kidnapping of the two soldiers, even though the Government of Lebanon had issued a statement on 12 July 2006 declaring that it had not been aware of the incident and did not take responsibility or endorse it. He stated that the “Israeli aggression”³² hampered the efforts made by Lebanon towards fostering democracy and undermined the sovereignty of Lebanon as it endeavoured to exercise its authority over its territory. He welcomed the initiative of the Secretary-General to dispatch a delegation to reduce tensions, re-establish stability, and call for the protection of civilians and civilian infrastructure. He stressed that the disregard by Israel of the calls made by the Government of Lebanon expressing its complete willingness to negotiate through the United Nations and other parties to resolve the recent developments, the consequences of those developments and the reasons that led to them was “incontrovertible evidence of the intention of the Israelis to escalate the situation”. Finally, he called upon the Security Council to take a decision calling for an immediate ceasefire, the lifting of the air and sea blockade imposed against Lebanon and an end to “Israeli aggression”.

The representative of Israel stressed that the withdrawal of Israel from southern Lebanon, in accordance with resolution 425 (1978), an act acknowledged in the statement by the President of the Council of 18 June 2000,³³ had occurred so that a security zone could be constructed to prevent further terrorist attacks upon Israeli towns and villages. However, the Government of Lebanon had chosen to let its southern region “be occupied by terrorism, rather than disarm it”, and to relinquish control over its country rather than exercise its full sovereignty. As a result, Hizbullah terrorists, operating with impunity in southern Lebanon, had unleashed a sudden and unprovoked attack into Israeli territory, leaving Israel no choice but to react. The actions were in direct response to “an act of war from Lebanon” and although Israel held the Government of Lebanon responsible for the attacks, it was concentrating its response carefully, mainly on Hizbullah strongholds. He stressed the importance of the international community understanding that, while Hizbullah executed terrorism, it was “merely the finger on the blood-stained, long-reaching arms of Syria and Iran”. Finally, he called upon the Security Council and the international community to help the Lebanese people achieve the goal of a free, prosperous and democratic Lebanon.³⁴

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that his delegation viewed the Israeli military action as a disproportionate and inappropriate use of force that threatened both the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon and peace and security throughout the region. He called for urgent steps to be taken to halt the military escalation and urged that Israel end its incursions into Lebanon, its destruction of civilian infrastructure on Lebanese territory, and its blockade. He also stressed that Hizbullah needed to refrain from actions against Israel, release the Israeli soldiers, halt its rocket attacks and respect the Blue Line. Also, he expected the Government of Lebanon to provide all possible assistance in resolving the issues. The Russian Federation supported the decision of the

Secretary-General to dispatch a special mission to the region and had taken active steps to achieve a ceasefire by sending its own special representative of the Minister for Foreign Affairs to the region.³⁵

The representative of the United States stated that the incursion of Hizbullah across the Blue Line on 12 July was a deliberate and premeditated provocation intended to undermine regional stability. These provocations highlighted the urgent need for full and immediate compliance by the Syrian Arab Republic and Hizbullah with relevant Security Council resolutions, including 1559 (2004), 1583 (2005), 1655 (2006) and 1680 (2006). He made it clear that the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran needed to be held to account for supporting regional terrorism and their role in the current crisis, as the Syrian Arab Republic provided safe haven to the militant wing of Hamas and provided material support to Hizbullah, while the Islamic Republic of Iran provided sponsorship and financial and other support to Hizbullah. He underlined the importance of the presidential statement of 18 June 2000 and the conclusion of the Secretary-General that, as from 16 June 2000, Israel had withdrawn all its forces from Lebanon, in accordance with Security Council resolution 425 (1978), and had met the requirements defined in the report of the Secretary-General of 22 May 2000.³⁶ As a result, he maintained that all militias in Lebanon, including Hizbullah, needed to disarm and disband immediately, and the Government of Lebanon needed to extend and exercise its control over all its territory.³⁷

The representative of Qatar recognized that, while every State, including Lebanon, had the right to defend itself, the waging of a military campaign directly targeting civilians and hitting their infrastructure could in no way be consonant with that objective. He maintained that the “alleged right of Israel” to self-defence ended when the Security Council took the necessary measures to maintain international peace and security, and he called on the Council to take appropriate measures to end the “aggression”.³⁸

stop its current military actions, as well as lift the air, sea and land blockade against Lebanon. At the same time, China was against the practices of Hizbullah militias, and called on Hizbullah to release the abducted Israeli soldiers.³⁹

The representative of the United Kingdom urged all countries with influence over Hizbullah, particularly the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran, to “play their part”. He maintained that Israel had the right to act in self-defence, but it needed to exercise restraint, ensuring that its actions were proportionate and measured, conformed to international law, and avoided civilian death and suffering. He concluded that the crisis underlined the need for the full and sustainable implementation of resolution 1559 (2004).⁴⁰

The representative of France stated that Hizbullah bore the responsibility for the outbreak of hostilities. He stated that the Government of Lebanon had dissociated itself from this provocation and should shoulder its responsibilities and abide by the commitments it had taken before the Council and in accordance with the Taif Agreement and Security Council resolutions. He noted that Israel had the right to defend its territory and its citizens when they were attacked but condemned the disproportionate nature of the response. He stressed that the Lebanese people must not be taken hostage and that the freedom of movement for the population, as well as for foreigners in Lebanon, had to be restored.⁴¹

Most representatives welcomed the decision of the Secretary-General to send a special envoy and called for an immediate cessation of hostilities. A number of representatives condemned the attack on Israel and the kidnapping of the two Israeli soldiers, but stressed that the Israeli response had been disproportionate and that Israel had to act in accordance with the provisions of international humanitarian law. Previous commitments, agreements and Council resolutions, in particular 1559 (2004), also needed to be respected and fully implemented.⁴²

At its 5492nd meeting, on 20 July 2006, the Council heard a briefing by the Secretary-General on the conflict between Israel and Lebanon. He noted that over 300 Lebanese had been killed and more than 600 wounded and much of the infrastructure in Beirut and around the country had been destroyed. Lebanon remained under a blockade by sea and air by the Israeli military. He called for an urgent and immediate ceasefire to prevent further loss of life; allow full humanitarian access to those in need; and give diplomacy a chance to work out a practical package of actions that would provide a lasting solution to the current crisis. As a result of the continued fighting, UNIFIL had no freedom of movement and needed a window of time in which to bring stocks of food, water and fuel from Israel even for its own personnel. He noted that Israel had confirmed that its operation in Lebanon had wider, more far-reaching goals than the return of its captured soldiers and that the aim was to end the threat posed by Hizbullah by attacking their infrastructure and physical strength. However, the Government of Lebanon, which Israel wanted to extend its control throughout the country, had itself become a hostage and was less able than ever to deploy its forces in the areas necessary to control Hizbullah. He recommended several elements that needed to form the basis of any lasting ceasefire, including the return of the captured Israeli soldiers, an expanded peacekeeping force to help to stabilize the situation, the full implementation of resolutions 1559 (2004) and 1680 (2006), and the establishment of a mechanism, composed of key regional and international actors, to monitor and guarantee the implementation of a ceasefire agreement. Also, as the conditions for peacekeeping did not exist at that time, he called for the Security Council to decide what to do about UNIFIL, whose mandate would expire 31 July. He believed that the continuation of UNIFIL in its existing configuration and mandate would not be tenable.

At the 5497th meeting, on 27 July 2006, the representatives of Austria, Canada and Finland were invited to participate in the discussion. The President (France) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴³ in summary, by which the Council, inter alia:

Stated that it was deeply shocked and distressed by the firing by the Israel Defense Forces on a United Nations observer post in southern Lebanon on 25 July 2006, which caused the death of four United Nations military observers;

Called upon the Government of Israel to conduct a comprehensive inquiry into that incident, taking into account any relevant material from United Nations authorities, and to make the results public as soon as possible;

Stressed that Israel and all concerned parties must comply fully with their obligations under international humanitarian law related to the protection of United Nations and its associated personnel, and underlined the importance of ensuring that United Nations personnel were not the object of attack.

Decision of 30 July 2006 (5499th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5498th meeting, on 30 July 2006, statements were made by the representatives of Israel and Lebanon on the situation in the Middle East. The President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 29 July 2006 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council.⁴⁴ In his letter, the Secretary-General referred to the Israeli armed attacks on the Observer Group Lebanon of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization, in which four United Nations military observers were killed on 25 July 2006. He expressed his concern about the safety and security of the United Nations personnel as well as Israeli and Lebanese civilians and reiterated his call for an immediate cessation of hostilities.

The Secretary-General addressed the Council, and stated that, during the night of 29 July 2006, the Israeli air force had bombed the village of Qana, which was no longer in the area of operations of UNIFIL. Therefore, no United Nations personnel had been present to help clear the rubble and give treatment to survivors. Preliminary reports indicated that 54 Lebanese were killed, 37 of them were children. He expressed his deep dismay that his earlier calls for the immediate cessation of hostilities were not heeded. While several hundred Lebanese citizens had been killed as well as over 50 Israelis, he stressed that both sides bore a heavy responsibility and that there was a strong prima facie evidence that both sides had committed breaches of international humanitarian law. He called on the Council to come together on the most urgent point: an immediate cessation of hostilities.⁴⁵

The representative of Lebanon stated that Israel had committed war massacres which, regrettably, were yet to be addressed by resolutions of the Security Council. He noted that the Prime Minister of Lebanon, on behalf of the Government of Lebanon, had set forth his understanding of the seven-point plan, beginning with an immediate and comprehensive ceasefire, as no solutions could be considered before it was achieved. His country was calling on the Council to bring an end to the firing immediately, and to undertake an effective and serious investigation of that “massacre” and of the other “massacres” that Israel had perpetrated over the previous three weeks.⁴⁶

The representative of Israel acknowledged that women and children might have been killed in the tragic event, but stressed that they were victims of Hizbullah. He stressed that Israel had never targeted innocent people, and that women and children were hurt because they were being used as human shields by Hizbullah. He remarked that, if Lebanon had deployed its forces in the south or if the Security Council had enforced resolution 1559 (2004), the war would not have happened. He stressed that Hizbullah needed to be totally disarmed; otherwise, even if there was a ceasefire, it would “raise its ugly head again”. He concluded that “terror and Hizbullah must end” because until they did there would be hostilities and fire and “more innocents [would] pay the price”.⁴⁷

In his second intervention, the representative of Lebanon stated that it had been clear from the beginning that Lebanon, not Hizbullah, was the target and denied the allegation that rockets had been fired from near the area that had been bombed.⁴⁸

At the 5499th meeting,⁴⁹ on 30 July 2006, the President (France) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁵⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its extreme shock and distress at the shelling by the Israel Defense Forces of a residential building in Qana, in southern Lebanon, which had caused the killing of dozens of civilians, mostly children, and injured many others; and sent its deepest condolences to the families of the victims and to the Lebanese people;

Strongly deplored the loss of innocent lives and the killing of civilians in the conflict and requested the Secretary-General to report to it within one week on the circumstances of the tragic incident; deplored any action against United Nations personnel, and called for full respect for the safety and security of all United Nations personnel and premises;

Affirmed its determination to work without any further delay to adopt a resolution for a lasting settlement of the crisis, drawing on diplomatic efforts under way.

Decision of 31 July 2006 (5501st meeting):
resolution 1697 (2006)

At the 5501st meeting, on 31 July 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 21 July 2006 on UNIFIL.⁵¹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the hostilities between Israel and Hizbullah had radically changed the context in which UNIFIL operated, making the environment not conducive to United Nations peacekeeping. Although the representative of Lebanon had requested that the mandate of UNIFIL be extended for a further period of six months,⁵² the Secretary-General recommended that the Council extend the mandate of UNIFIL for a further period of one month as the status quo ante did not appear feasible.

The President (France) drew the attention of the Council to letters from Israel⁵³ and Lebanon,⁵⁴ concerning acts of aggression. The President further drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France;⁵⁵ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1697 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Urged all concerned parties to abide scrupulously by their obligation to respect the safety of UNIFIL and other United Nations personnel;

Called on them to allow UNIFIL to resupply its positions, conduct search and rescue operations on behalf of its personnel and take any other measures it deemed necessary to ensure the safety of its personnel;

Decided to extend the mandate of UNIFIL until 31 August 2006.

Decision of 11 August 2006 (5511th meeting):
resolution 1701 (2006)

At its 5503rd meeting, on 31 July 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 31 July 2006 addressed to the President of the Council by the representative of Lebanon,⁵⁶ in which Lebanon requested an urgent meeting to discuss the latest Israeli massacre in Qana and the continuous escalation of the conflict. At the meeting, statements were made by the representatives of Israel and Lebanon.

The representative of Lebanon reiterated the call of the Government of Lebanon for an immediate and comprehensive ceasefire, as well as a process of international investigation with regard to Qana, where a massacre had also occurred in 1996. He stated that the justification given by the Government of Israel that Hizbullah fighters were in the midst of the civilian population was a violation of international law, citing article 50 of Protocol I, of 1977, to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949. He also quoted from a text approved by the Lebanese Council of Ministers, which called for an immediate ceasefire, the release of prisoners by Lebanon and Israel, a withdrawal of the Israeli army behind the Blue Line, a commitment from the Security Council to place the Shab'a farms and the Kafr Shuba hills under United Nations jurisdiction; for Israel to surrender maps of all remaining landmines in southern Lebanon; and for the United Nations international force to be enhanced in numbers, equipment and scope of operations.⁵⁷

The representative of Israel agreed that there could not be a return to the status quo ante. He stated that Israel had no quarrel with Lebanon but with "the forces and the monstrosity" by which Lebanon had allowed itself to be taken hostage. He maintained that Lebanon had had several chances to exert its sovereignty, including one chance after Israel had left Lebanon completely, a fact that had been ratified by the Council. He reiterated that Israel only fought to protect itself against an act of war.⁵⁸

The representative of Lebanon made second and third interventions, mentioning the conference in Rome, which had issued a statement referring to Security Council resolution 425 (1978). Implicit in that reference was the fact that resolution 425 (1978) had not yet been fully implemented. He reiterated his statement that Lebanon needed the Shab'a farms area to be returned, the release of the Lebanese prisoners from Israeli prisons, and the maps of the landmines in southern Lebanon.⁵⁹

In his second intervention, the representative of Israel stated that Lebanon should have asked the Syrians for the Shab'a farms area, not Israel, because it was the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic which claimed that area.⁶⁰

At the 5508th meeting, on 8 August 2006, statements were made by the representatives of Israel, Lebanon and Qatar.⁶¹

The representative of Qatar stated that the draft resolution before the Council required that the Arab position as expressed in the seven-point plan adopted by the Council of Ministers of the League of Arab States on 7 August 2006 be carefully considered and taken into account. The Security Council should also take into account the sociopolitical structure of Lebanese society, as well as the interests, unity, stability and territorial integrity of Lebanon. Accordingly, he drew the attention of the Council to the repercussions of adopting a non-enforceable resolution, which would further complicate the situation on the ground and have grave ramifications for Lebanon, for other Arab countries and for all the countries of the region.⁶²

The representative of Lebanon maintained that the draft resolution fell short of meeting many of the requests of Lebanon and also would not achieve the results that the international community hoped for. He noted that the draft resolution did not call for "an immediate ceasefire", but "a cessation of hostilities", and stressed that Lebanon needed great clarity on many issues. Also, with reference to the language in the draft resolution calling for cessation by Israel of all offensive operations, he maintained that Israel had never conceded that its actions in Lebanon had been anything but defensive, and, in this respect, the draft resolution left Lebanon vulnerable to the "whims" of Israel. Calling for an immediate Israeli withdrawal, he reaffirmed that the Government of Lebanon was ready to deploy 15,000 troops in the south as the Israeli troops withdrew behind the Blue Line. The issue of the Shab'a farms also needed to be addressed and the proposal did not sufficiently reflect readiness by the international community to address that issue.⁶³

The representative of Israel stated that the question was not whether the Council could adopt a resolution but whether the Council and the international community could adopt a course of action which would end the threat that Hizbullah and its sponsors posed to the peoples of Israel and Lebanon and to the region as a whole. He maintained that the Government of Israel would continue to do whatever was necessary to protect the lives of its citizens, and it had to be able to defend itself against an enemy that not only deliberately targeted civilians but also hid among them as well as in mosques and the United Nations compounds. He believed that a significant part of the military capacity and infrastructure of Hizbullah had been destroyed, allowing for the Government of Lebanon and the international community to begin anew and repair the omissions that had led to the crisis. To accomplish this, a robust and effective international force would be needed to ensure the dismantling and disarming of all terrorist groups and the implementation of resolution 1559 (2004) in all its parts. It also required enforceable and effective measures that would prevent the continued supply and rearmament of weapons and ammunition; and for the Government of Lebanon to meet the basic obligations placed by international law and by the Council on Lebanon to end the use of its territory as a base to threaten the territory of others. He stated that Israel was ready to cease hostilities and to withdraw its forces if these effective measures were taken.⁶⁴

In their second interventions, the representatives of Qatar and Lebanon reiterated that resolutions needed to be adopted that took into account the reality of Lebanon or the international community would be faced with a civil war there. They also stressed that, in wanting to destroy the infrastructure of Hizbullah, Israel had in fact destroyed the infrastructure of Lebanon. There were two principles regarding civilians that needed to be adhered to, namely, the principle of distinction and the principle of proportionality, both of which Israel had systematically violated since 12 July 2006.⁶⁵

At the 5511th meeting, on 11 August 2006, the President (Ghana) drew the attention of the Council to a number of letters from the representative of Lebanon, transmitting lists of attacks by Israel and calling for a ceasefire.⁶⁶ He also drew attention to several other documents.⁶⁷ The Council then heard a briefing by the Secretary-General and statements from most members of the Council as well as the representatives of Israel and Lebanon.⁶⁸

The Secretary-General welcomed the draft resolution before the Council, which provided for a full and immediate cessation of hostilities. He believed that the draft resolution would make it possible to conclude a sustainable and lasting ceasefire agreement and begin the process of solving the political problems in the region. He expressed disappointment that the Council had not reached this point much earlier and that the inability of the Council to act sooner had badly shaken the faith of the world in the authority and integrity of the Council. He noted that since 12 July 2006, when Hizbullah launched an attack on Israel, more than 1,000 Lebanese had been killed and more than 3,600 wounded, and 41 Israeli civilians had been killed. The United Nations had also been a target of protest and violence, despite the Organization's humanitarian efforts, including those of UNIFIL, which had had to cope with a situation for which it was neither mandated nor equipped. The Secretary-General outlined the actions that would be needed to make the draft resolution fully effective on the ground. First, humanitarian convoys and relief workers must be guaranteed safe passage and access to those in need; and, second, the international community needed to give the Government of Lebanon all possible support, so that it could make its sovereignty effective, pursuant to Council resolutions 425 (1978), 1559 (2004) and 1680 (2006). The Secretary-General emphasized that the Government of Lebanon needed to have a monopoly of the use of force on its own territory, which required a full and swift withdrawal of Israeli forces, and the strengthening of the mandate and the numbers of UNIFIL. He maintained that Lebanon deserved the full support of the United Nations in its efforts to "cast off the chains of external interference and domestic strife", and this required a national consensus among Lebanese and constructive cooperation by all relevant parties and actors at the regional level, including the Governments of the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran.⁶⁹

The majority of the speakers expressed strong support for the draft resolution and called for an immediate and complete ceasefire, which focused on protecting civilians; assistance for Lebanon in expanding its sovereign authority; a new and improved UNIFIL mandate with a greater scope of operations, better equipment, and larger numbers; the cooperation of every State, particularly the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran, in respecting the sovereignty of Lebanon. Most speakers stressed that there could be no foreign forces, no weapons, and no authority in Lebanon other than those of the Government of Lebanon. They also called for the implementation of resolution 1680 (2006), which addressed the delineation of the border of Lebanon, including the Shab'a farms. A number of representatives stressed that the lack of a comprehensive settlement in the Middle East was a prime cause of the crisis and that it was essential to engage in a comprehensive consideration of all aspects of the Middle East situation.

The representative of the United States maintained that, since the conflict had begun, her country had sought an immediate end to the fighting, but had also insisted that a durable ceasefire had required a decisive change from the status quo that had produced the war. She maintained that, in addition to respecting the call in the draft resolution for a full cessation of hostilities,

all parties needed to take action to protect civilians. She urged the Governments of Lebanon and Israel to commit themselves to ending large-scale violence. Hizbullah faced a clear choice between war and peace, and the world needed to help ensure that that choice was the right one. She also noted, inter alia, that the international community would impose a binding embargo on all weapons heading into Lebanon without the consent of the Government and called on every State, especially the Islamic Republic of Iran and the Syrian Arab Republic, to respect the sovereignty of the Government of Lebanon and the will of the international community.⁷⁰

The representative of France stressed that the settlement needed to respect a twofold imperative. It needed to allow the sovereignty of Lebanon to be restored throughout its territory and it needed to guarantee the right of Israel to security.⁷¹

The representative of Qatar reiterated that the Security Council should have adopted a resolution providing for an immediate ceasefire from the very beginning of the hostilities. Moreover, the draft resolution lacked balance and failed to take into consideration the interests, unity and stability and territorial integrity of Lebanon. It did not clearly address the “horrors of destruction” caused by the “Israeli aggression” against innocent civilians and the Lebanese infrastructure; and it did not clearly spell out the legal and humanitarian responsibility of Israel for that destruction or address in a balanced manner the question of the Lebanese prisoners in Israel. He welcomed the fact that the draft resolution was limited to augmenting UNIFIL and that its mandate would continue to be subject to the provisions of Chapter VI of the Charter. He also noted that he had been assured that any references to international forces in the draft resolution meant UNIFIL.⁷²

The representative of the United Kingdom stressed that the Council had needed to adopt a resolution that looked beyond the short term and held out the prospect of a lasting solution, which meant agreeing upon a text that took sufficient account of the positions of both parties. While that had taken time and effort, the United Kingdom believed that it had been the right thing to do.⁷³

The representative of China condemned the excessive use of force and attacks on civilians, civilian facilities and United Nations personnel. He noted that his delegation had strongly advocated early Council action to achieve an immediate and comprehensive ceasefire, halt the current conflict, maintain peace and stability in the Middle East, and relieve the humanitarian disaster. He also expressed hope that the parties would implement the resolution and reach consensus on a comprehensive, lasting and fair framework for the political settlement of the conflict and restore local peace and stability as soon as possible.⁷⁴

The representative of the Russian Federation maintained that it had taken an “unjustifiably long time” to draft the Council resolution. His country had done everything it could to accelerate the process, both in contact with the parties and around the negotiating table. That had guided his delegation when they had proposed a draft resolution the previous day, calling for a humanitarian ceasefire in Lebanon and for urgent diplomatic efforts to resolve the crisis. But as it had proved possible to produce an agreed text of a broader resolution on Lebanon, the Russian Federation had decided to support it. It reflected the key demand for an immediate cessation of hostilities and it took into account the legitimate demands of Lebanon and it included provisions to meet the security interests of Israel.⁷⁵

The representatives of Greece, Argentina, Japan and the United Republic of Tanzania, maintained that they had called for an immediate ceasefire at the outbreak of hostilities and regretted that their calls were not heeded sooner and a resolution was not adopted quicker.⁷⁶

The representative of Lebanon maintained that although Israel stated that the war was against Hizbullah, it was actually a strategy of terror inflicted on all Lebanese. He said that the direct cause of more than 1,100 deaths and the wanton destruction of the infrastructure and economy of Lebanon was the disproportionate and unjustifiable Israeli retaliation.

Commenting that his country was not confident in the Israeli distinction between what was “defensive” and what was “offensive”, he stressed that the end to military operations needed to be unqualified and the lifting of the blockade immediate upon the cessation of hostilities. He maintained that the pattern of invasions of Lebanon by Israel demonstrated the continuing threat facing Lebanon and the need for a political solution rooted in international law. For such a solution to move forward, it needed to address the root causes of the war, including the continued Israeli occupation of the Shab’a farms, as well as the struggle of Lebanon to regain full sovereignty over all its territory. He stressed that the international community had a moral and political obligation under the terms of the Charter and the accepted norms of international law to defend the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon, as well as to protect the Lebanese people under the relevant provisions of international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions and the Protocols, thereto, which Israel had repeatedly and wilfully violated.⁷⁷

The representative of Israel reiterated that the way to have avoided the crisis between Israel and Lebanon had been clear: implementation of the unconditional obligations set out in resolutions 1559 (2004) and 1680 (2006). That clear path forward had required the disarming and disbanding of Hizbullah and other militias, and the exercise by Lebanon of control and authority over all its territory. In the face of the failure to ensure that the obligations set out in those resolutions were implemented, Israel had no choice but to do what Lebanon had failed to do. As a result, Hizbullah’s lethal capabilities had been dealt a major blow — bases had been dismantled and “stockpiles of Iranian missiles” had been destroyed and southern Lebanon had been substantially cleared of “the infrastructure of terrorism”. He stressed that Israel had the right to continue its efforts to complete the task of rooting out the terrorists and removing the threat they presented to the Israeli and Lebanese people. However, Israel was ready to respond to the calls of the Council and to give another chance to the Government of Lebanon and the international community to create “a new reality on the ground”. He noted that the resolution would, inter alia, establish a binding arms embargo requiring all States to prevent the supply of arms and weapons to militias and terrorists in Lebanon; and set out arrangements to ensure that Lebanese armed forces would deploy throughout Lebanese territory, including along the Blue Line. In conclusion, he stressed that Israel had “no greater wish than to live next to a peaceful and prosperous State of Lebanon, exercising its independence and sovereign responsibilities like any other State”.⁷⁸

The President drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Denmark, France, Ghana, Greece, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States;⁷⁹ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1701 (2006), by which the Council, determining that the situation in Lebanon constituted a threat to international peace and security, inter alia:

Called for a full cessation of hostilities based upon, in particular, the immediate cessation by Hizbullah of all attacks and the immediate cessation by Israel of all offensive military operations;

Upon full cessation of hostilities, called upon the Government of Lebanon and UNIFIL to deploy their forces together throughout the south and called upon the Government of Israel, as that deployment began, to withdraw all of its forces from southern Lebanon in parallel;

Called on the international community to take immediate steps to extend its financial and humanitarian assistance to the Lebanese people, including through facilitating the safe return of displaced persons and, under the authority of the Government of Lebanon;

Decided, in order to supplement and enhance the force in numbers, equipment, mandate and scope of operations, to authorize an increase in the force strength of UNIFIL to a maximum of 15,000 troops;

Called upon the Government of Lebanon to secure its borders and other entry points to prevent the entry in Lebanon without its consent of arms or related materiel;

Decided to extend the mandate of UNIFIL until 31 August 2007.

Decision of 12 December 2006 (5586th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5586th meeting on, 12 December 2006, in which Lebanon was invited to participate, the Security Council included in its agenda a letter addressed to the President of the Council from the Secretary-General.⁸⁰ In his letter the Secretary-General reported that the UNIFIL area of operations had stabilized and the cessation of hostilities had been maintained. Still, air violations by Israeli jets had occurred, with the Government of Israel maintaining that they were not violations as they were a necessary security measure. The Secretary-General noted that those overflights violated Lebanese sovereignty, in contradiction to resolution 1701 (2006). Israel also had yet to provide UNIFIL with the detailed firing data on its use of cluster munitions that would help operators on the ground to mitigate the threat to innocent civilians. As Israel continued to withdraw its forces, UNIFIL had finished the first phase, which involved a rapid response deployment, reinforcing UNIFIL troops on the ground for the purpose of stabilizing the security situation and facilitating the withdrawal of the Israel Defense Forces from Lebanon and the concomitant deployment of the Lebanese Armed Forces throughout the south. The second, augmentation phase was currently under way. The Secretary-General also informed the Council that he was making the unconditional release of the captured Israeli soldiers and the issue of the Lebanese prisoners his top priority and expected respect for the provisions of resolution 1710 (2006). A permanent solution of the border issue remained contingent upon the delineation of the border between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, in fulfilment of resolutions 1559 (2004), 1680 (2006) and 1701 (2006).

The President (Qatar) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁸¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its full support for the legitimate and democratically elected Government of Lebanon, called for full respect for the democratic institutions of the country, in conformity with the constitution, and condemned any effort to destabilize Lebanon;

Called for the full implementation of resolution 1701 (2006) and urged all concerned parties to cooperate fully with the Security Council and the Secretary-General to achieve this goal;

Reiterated its full support to UNIFIL and looked forward to the completion of its deployment;

Expressed deepest concern at the presence in very high numbers of unexploded ordnance in southern Lebanon, including cluster munitions;

Reaffirmed the urgent need for the unconditional release of the abducted Israeli soldiers.

Decision of 17 April 2007 (5664th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5664th meeting, on 17 April 2007, in which the representative of Lebanon was invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 14 March 2007 on the implementation of resolution 1701 (2006).⁸² In his report, the Secretary-General welcomed the continued commitment by both the Government of Lebanon and the Government of Israel, as well as the commitment of the Syrian Arab Republic, to the implementation of resolution 1701 (2006). In Israel there was growing criticism that resolution 1701 (2006) had not addressed the issues of most concern to Israelis, namely the return of its captured soldiers and reported arms movements to and within Lebanon. The Secretary-General urged the Government of Israel to continue to work to implement all aspects of the resolution without selectivity and to continue to review its policy of flights over Lebanese airspace. The Prime Minister of Lebanon had expressed the frustration of his country with the continuing Israeli overflights, the rising civilian toll caused by Israeli cluster bombs and the slow progress on the issue of the Shab'a farms. The Secretary-General welcomed the support to UNIFIL and to resolution 1701 (2006) that had been expressed publicly by all Lebanese parties, but expressed concern that the persistent political crisis in the country was overshadowing the implementation of the resolution. He called on all Lebanese parties to recommit themselves to the principles of the seven-point plan. In reference to incidents along the Blue Line early in February, he stressed that both parties shared responsibility for avoiding provocative actions likely to cause tensions to escalate along the Blue Line. He maintained that the Shab'a farms area remained a key issue in the implementation of resolution 1710 (2006), and its resolution required the full cooperation of Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and Israel.

The President (United Kingdom) then drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 11 April 2007 from the representative of Israel, addressed to the Secretary-General,⁸³ which raised a number of issues with regard to the report of the Secretary-General dated 14 March 2007 on the implementation of resolution 1701 (2006).

The President made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁸⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its full support for the legitimate and democratically elected Government of Lebanon;

Welcomed the completion of the second phase of the deployment of UNIFIL;

Urged the Governments of Israel and Lebanon to approve the temporary security arrangements for the northern part of the village of Ghajar and to further close liaison and coordination arrangements with UNIFIL;

Welcomed the measures taken by the Government of Lebanon to establish between the Blue Line and the Litani river an area free of any armed personnel;

Reiterated its deep concern at the continuing Israeli violations of Lebanese air space;

Expressed its serious concern at mounting information by Israel and another State of illegal movements of arms across the Lebanese-Syrian border in violation of resolution 1701 (2006);

Welcomed the Secretary-General's intention to evaluate the situation along the entire border;

Urged again all Member States to take all necessary measures to implement in full paragraph 15 of resolution 1701 (2006) to enforce the arms embargo;

Welcomed any request by the Government of Lebanon for assistance to enhance Lebanon's border security capacities;

Reiterated its call for disbanding and disarmament of all militias and armed groups in Lebanon;

Expressed deepest worry at the presence in very high numbers of unexploded ordnance in southern Lebanon;

Noted with profound concern that there has been no progress on the issue of the return of the two Israeli soldiers;

Encouraged efforts aimed at urgently settling the issue of the Lebanese prisoners detained in Israel;

Stressed the importance of, and the need to achieve, a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

Decision of 25 June 2007 (5704th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5704th meeting, on 25 June 2007, in which the representatives of Colombia, Lebanon and Spain were invited to participate, the President (Belgium) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁸⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest terms the terrorist attack on 24 June near the town of Khiyam in southern Lebanon, which targeted UNIFIL and killed six United Nations peacekeepers;

Extended its deepest condolences to the families of those victims;

Noted the condemnation of the attack by the Government of Lebanon and commended the determination and commitment of the Government of Lebanon to bring to justice the perpetrators of the attack;

Reaffirmed its full support to the Lebanese Government and army in their efforts to ensure security and stability throughout Lebanon;

Appealed to all parties concerned to abide scrupulously by their obligation to respect the safety of UNIFIL and other United Nations personnel;

Reaffirmed its full support to UNIFIL in carrying out its mandate to assist in the implementation of resolution 1701 (2006), and expressed its strong appreciation to Member States contributing troops.

Decision of 3 August 2007 (5728th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5728th meeting, on August 2007, in which the representatives of Israel and Lebanon were invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda a report of the Secretary-General dated 28 June 2007 on the implementation of resolution 1701 (2006).⁸⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General noted the rocket attack of 17 June 2007 from southern Lebanon against Israel, which constituted a serious breach of the cessation of hostilities. He welcomed the decision of the Government of Israel for its decision not to retaliate. He also noted the attack against UNIFIL on 24 June 2007, in which six UNIFIL personnel were killed and two others injured. He stated that he was disturbed by the persistent reports pointing to breaches of the arms embargo along the Lebanese-Syrian border and was concerned that the border was not sufficiently secure as Lebanese capabilities were lacking. He maintained that the border delineation remained a key issue in the implementation of resolution 1701 (2006).

The Council also included in its agenda a letter from the Secretary-General dated 26 June 2007, transmitting the report of the Lebanon Independent Border Assessment Team.⁸⁷ In the letter, the Secretary-General observed that the Team had concluded that the state of border security was insufficient to prevent smuggling, in particular the smuggling of arms, to any extent. The presence of armed Palestinian camps constituted a major obstacle, and the incomplete delineation of the border with the Syrian Arab Republic further hampered border control. A political agreement on the border issue was urgently needed. The Team made the following recommendations: to create a multi-agency mobile force focusing on arms smuggling with an intelligence and analysis component and international border security experts; to implement a dedicated border guard agency; to create standard operating procedures to establish full and absolute control over border crossing points; to establish training programmes; and to establish cooperation with Syrian counterparts, making border security management a joint effort to secure the border and prevent illegal cross-border activities.

The President (Congo) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁸⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its strong support for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity, and political independence of Lebanon and condemned any effort to destabilize Lebanon;

Reiterated its full support for the efforts carried out by the Lebanese Army to ensure security and stability throughout Lebanon and reaffirmed that there should be no weapons or authority in Lebanon other than that of the Lebanese State;

Reaffirmed its full support for UNIFIL, condemned all terrorist attacks against it, and called on all parties to abide by their obligation to respect the safety of United Nations personnel;

Expressed grave concern at persistent reports of breaches of the arms embargo along the border between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic;

Reiterated its call for the disbanding and disarmament of all militias and armed groups in Lebanon;

Requested that the Secretary-General continue to develop proposals to implement the relevant provisions of the Taif Accords, and resolutions 1559 (2004), 1680 (2006), including disarmament;

Stressed the importance of, and the need to achieve, a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, based on all its relevant resolutions.

Decision of 24 August 2007 (5733rd meeting): resolution 1773 (2007)

At its 5733rd meeting, on 24 August 2007, in which the representatives of Belgium, France, Ghana, Indonesia, Italy, Qatar, the Russian Federation, South Africa and the United States made statements,⁸⁹ the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 2 August 2007 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President, recommending the extension of the mandate of UNIFIL, which would expire on 31 August 2007, for a further interim period of 12 months.⁹⁰

The President (Congo) drew the attention of the Council to a letter from the Secretary-General, transmitting a letter dated 25 June 2007 from the Prime Minister of Lebanon to the Secretary-General.⁹¹ By that letter, the Government of Lebanon requested the extension of the mandate of UNIFIL for a further period of 12 months.

The representative of South Africa noted that his delegation would have preferred that the Council consider a draft resolution of a technical nature. There was no reason to have included in the draft resolution before the Council unrelated sensitive issues on which the Council commented in numerous resolutions and presidential statements. While he was not entirely satisfied with all of the elements of the draft resolution, he would vote in favour because he believed that UNIFIL had a positive role to play in bringing about long-term peace and security in Lebanon.⁹²

A draft resolution submitted by Belgium, France, Italy, Peru, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States⁹³ was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1773 (2007), by which the Council, determining that the situation in Lebanon constituted a threat to international peace and security, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNIFIL until 31 August 2008;

Urged all parties to cooperate fully with the United Nations and UNIFIL and to abide scrupulously by their obligation to respect the safety of UNIFIL and other United Nations personnel, including by avoiding any course of action which endangered United Nations personnel and by ensuring that UNIFIL was accorded full freedom of movement within its area of operations;

Requested the Secretary-General to continue to report to the Council on the implementation of resolution 1701 (2006) every four months, or at any time as he deemed appropriate.

Speaking after the vote, many speakers conveyed their gratification at the unanimous adoption of resolution 1773 (2007). Most speakers stressed that UNIFIL had helped to establish a new strategic military and security environment in southern Lebanon. They commented that it was imperative that UNIFIL was able to rely on the cooperation of all parties in order to carry out its mandate, particularly with respect to the cessation of hostilities and for the Blue Line in its entirety.

The representative of Indonesia announced regret that the resolution did not address the matter of continued violation of the airspace of the Government of Lebanon.⁹⁴

The representative of France noted that, despite improvements in the security situation in southern Lebanon, UNIFIL continued to operate in a difficult and unstable environment. Under those conditions, it was imperative that UNIFIL be able to rely on the cooperation of all parties in order to discharge its mandate. That required pursuing and strengthening the mechanism for cooperation in the field and the full implementation by the parties of the demands of the Council, in particular respect for the cessation of hostilities and for the Blue Line in its entirety and respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon.⁹⁵

The representative of the United States expressed his deep concern about the continued weapons transfers across the border between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, which was a violation of resolution 1701 (2006). He called on the Governments of the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran to honour the obligations under the arms embargo established under resolution 1701 (2006).⁹⁶

The representative of the Russian Federation opined that the resolution was a compromised text and that other issues raised, in particular the question of the weapons smuggling, did not relate to the text that had just been adopted. He stated that his delegation could also continue the list of problems, including with regard to cluster bombs.⁹⁷

C. Security Council resolution 1559 (2004)

Decision of 2 September 2004 (5028th meeting): resolution 1559 (2004)

At the 5028th meeting, on 2 September 2004, the President (Spain) drew the attention of the Security Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States⁹⁸ and to two sets of identical letters from the representative of Lebanon and from the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic, respectively, both addressed to the President and to the Secretary-General. The identical letters dated 30 August 2004 from the representative of Lebanon,⁹⁹ informed the Council that proceeding with the draft resolution under consideration would set a dangerous precedent. He said that the timing of the draft resolution interfered with the then forthcoming presidential elections and would adversely influence the electoral process, as the Security Council could be seen as a tool of intervention in the internal affairs of Lebanon; that the role of the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic in Lebanon had always been to support and strengthen the official security institutions of Lebanon; and that the presence of Syrian troops in Lebanon was linked to the Taif Agreement and other bilateral agreements between the Government of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, and that therefore no external entity was entitled to intervene in regard to its modalities or to impose changes.

The identical letters dated 1 September 2004 from the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic,¹⁰⁰ conveyed to the Council that the Syrian Arab Republic rejected in principle any discussion of the proposed draft resolution. He cited the following reasons: that the Government of Lebanon rejected the raising of the issue; that the discussion in the Security Council contradicted Article 2 (7) of the Charter, and that the issues raised were not linked to any disputes and did not constitute a threat to international peace and security.

Statements were made by the representatives of Algeria, Angola, Benin, Chile, China, France, Lebanon,¹⁰¹ Pakistan, the Philippines, the Russian Federation and the United States.

The representative of Lebanon, regarding the draft resolution, stated that although his delegation appreciated the interest shown by France, Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States, and their emphasis on Lebanon's sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence, he recalled that it was the Lebanese people who had a stake in those matters. He stressed that the country that had attacked Lebanon, continued to occupy parts of its territory and threatened its political independence — Israel — had been forced to leave the western Bekaa and the south by the Lebanese national resistance. He stated that there were no militias in Lebanon and that the Lebanese national resistance had appeared following the Israeli occupation of Lebanese territory and would remain there as long as the Israelis occupied parts of Lebanon. The resistance forces existed alongside the Lebanese national forces, and the military authorities determined their presence and size according to Lebanon's needs. He asserted that the authority of the Government of Lebanon extended over all of Lebanese territory except the Israeli-occupied areas. He maintained that the draft resolution confused two matters. First, it confused the unique relations between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, which was friendly to the Government of Lebanon. The Syrian Arab Republic helped maintain security and stability within the borders of Lebanon. He stressed that Syrian troops had come to Lebanon in response to his country's legitimate request, and that their presence was guided by the Taif Agreement, which had the support of the Security Council. To say that the Syrian Arab Republic supported radical movements in Lebanon was therefore untrue. The second matter, relating to the presidential electoral process, was purely internal. He maintained that the legitimacy of the United Nations, the Charter, and the rules of procedure of the Security Council did not provide justification for the draft resolution, which constituted interference in the internal affairs of a State

Member of the Organization. Moreover, the draft resolution also discussed bilateral relations between two countries, neither of which had filed any complaint with regard to those relations. He therefore called for the withdrawal of the draft resolution.¹⁰²

The draft resolution was put to the vote and was adopted by 9 votes to none, with 6 abstentions (Algeria, Brazil, China, Pakistan, Philippines, Russian Federation) as resolution 1559 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its call for the strict respect of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and political independence of Lebanon;

Called upon all remaining foreign forces to withdraw from Lebanon;

Called for the disbanding and disarmament of all Lebanese and non-Lebanese militias;

Supported the extension of the control of the Government of Lebanon over all Lebanese territory;

Declared its full support for a free and fair electoral process in Lebanon's upcoming presidential election conducted according to Lebanese constitutional rules devised without foreign interference or influence;

Called upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully and urgently with the Security Council for the full implementation of its resolutions;

Requested that the Secretary-General report to the Council within 30 days on the implementation by the parties of the resolution.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States stated that the Government of Lebanon should be allowed to determine its own future and assume control of its own territory. He maintained that the people of Lebanon were not able to exercise their rights. He stated that the sponsors of the resolution had asked for a vote, because the situation was moving very quickly. The Government of the Syrian Arab Republic had "imposed its political will on Lebanon" and "compelled the Cabinet and the Lebanese National Assembly to amend its Constitution and abort the electoral process by extending the term of the current President by three years". He maintained that it was clear that the parliamentarians of Lebanon had been "pressured, and even threatened" by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic and its agents. Expressing strong support for the extension of the control of the Government of Lebanon over all Lebanese territory, including southern Lebanon, he said that the continued presence of armed Hizbullah militia elements, as well as Syrian military and Iranian forces, hindered that goal.¹⁰³

The representative of France maintained that the future of Lebanon was being seriously threatened by the interference of the Syrian Arab Republic in the political life of the country and, in particular, in the electoral process. He stated that France was deeply concerned that Lebanon might retreat from the objectives that had been constantly reaffirmed by the international community, which was why a decisive response by the Security Council seemed essential. He stressed that the electoral process needed to proceed without any foreign interference. He maintained that the Council was not committing an act of interference, but that, if the Council refrained from taking action, it would be sanctioning the inadmissible interference by a State in the internal affairs of another sovereign State.¹⁰⁴

The representative of China stated that China had always been resolute in supporting the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Lebanon. In the view of his delegation, the questions concerning presidential elections in Lebanon fell within the purview of the internal affairs of Lebanon. China also respected the wishes of the Government of Lebanon, which had clearly stated its objection to the consideration of those questions by the Council. It was on the basis of that position that China had abstained from voting on the draft resolution.¹⁰⁵

The representative of Algeria stated that his delegation had abstained for five reasons. First, the situation in Lebanon did not appear to constitute a threat to international peace and security. Second, it was the Government of Israel that constituted a threat to international peace and security, and he wished that the Security Council would display the same firmness towards Israel as it showed with Lebanon. Third, the Council should not interfere with the internal affairs of States or in bilateral relations between States. Fourth, as a matter of principle, his delegation could not associate itself with a draft resolution that included "even implicit threats against fraternal countries". Lastly, he believed that only a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement based on respect for international law, the principle of land for peace and withdrawal of Israel from all occupied Palestinian and Arab lands could bring about a just and final peace throughout the region.¹⁰⁶

The representative of Pakistan stated that he had not supported the draft resolution as it was not consistent with the Security Council's functions and responsibilities and established no evidence of any urgent threat to peace. Moreover, there had been no complaint from the country whose sovereignty and integrity the resolution purported to uphold. He suggested that the resolution also addressed the wrong threat, and stated that his delegation construed the provisions of paragraph 2 as constituting a reference to those foreign forces which had entered Lebanon uninvited and by force. The resolution intervened in the internal affairs of Lebanon, which was unacceptable and contrary to Article 2 (7) of the Charter.¹⁰⁷ The representatives of Brazil and the Philippines also stated that they had abstained in the voting since the resolution could not be justified as part of the role given to the Security Council in the Charter, as it dealt with matters that were essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of Lebanon in violation of Article 2 (7), and the existence of a dispute likely to endanger international peace and security had not been properly characterized in the text.¹⁰⁸

The representative of the Russian Federation stressed that, in relation to Lebanon, any misstep could possibly exacerbate the situation in the region and lead to the emergence of a new pocket of instability or the upsetting of the fragile political balance in Lebanon itself. He recalled that his delegation had submitted amendments for the consideration of the Council in order to put the draft resolution more in the context of an overall Middle East settlement and to prevent it from being one-sided and from concentrating solely on domestic Lebanese affairs. As those proposals were not adopted, the Russian Federation had abstained from voting.¹⁰⁹

The representative of Chile also noted that the resolution showed a double standard in the Middle East conflict, as demonstrated by the "sad lack of political will" to deal with the occupation of Israel in the West

Bank, Gaza and the Golan and it was of concern that there was no mention of the peace plan for the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.¹¹⁰ The representative of Angola had voted in favour but believed that the Security Council could have been better balanced and could have taken into account the very delicate geostrategic realities of the region.¹¹¹ The representative of Benin reiterated his delegation's support for the efforts to bring about a comprehensive political settlement in the Middle East through the withdrawal of all foreign forces present in the countries of the region.¹¹²

Decision of 19 October 2004 (5058th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5058th meeting, on 19 October 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 1 October 2004.¹¹³ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the Syrian military and intelligence apparatus in Lebanon had not withdrawn as at 30 September 2004. He stated that the most significant remaining armed group was Hizbullah. The Government of Lebanon objected to the characterization of Hizbullah as a Lebanese militia and referred to it as a "national resistance group". Regarding the presidential election process, the Secretary-General informed the Council that the Chamber of Deputies had approved Constitutional Law 58, which extended the term of the President of Lebanon by three years. While the Government had informed the Secretary-General that the law had been adopted in accordance with Lebanese constitutional rules, it was widely contended in Lebanon, and it was "asserted by the co-sponsors of resolution 1559 (2004)" that the extension was the result of a direct intervention by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic. Ten members of the Chamber of Deputies had tabled a motion in the Chamber to abrogate the law. The Secretary-General stated that he could not certify that the requirements of resolution 1559 (2004) had been met. However, he noted that the Government of Lebanon and the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic had assured him of their respect for the Council and that they would not contest the resolution.

The President (United Kingdom) brought two documents to the attention of the Council.¹¹⁴ The President then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹¹⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the report of the Secretary-General of 1 October 2004 on the implementation of resolution 1559 (2004);

Reaffirmed its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized borders;

Noted with concern that the requirements set out in resolution 1559 (2004) had not been met, as reported by the Secretary-General;

Urged relevant parties to implement fully all provisions of that resolution, and welcomed the Secretary-General's readiness to assist the parties in that regard.

Decision of 4 May 2005 (5175th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5172nd meeting, on 29 April 2005, the Council included in its agenda the first semi-annual report of the Secretary-General, dated 26 April 2005, on the implementation of resolution 1559 (2004).¹¹⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the requirements of resolution 1559 (2004) had not yet been met. He noted the commitment of the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic to withdraw all its troops, military assets and the intelligence apparatus from Lebanon by 30 April 2005, as stated in a letter dated 26 April 2005. He also informed the Council that an agreement had been reached on a technical United Nations verification mission that would be dispatched in order to verify the full Syrian withdrawal. He stressed that he assigned the withdrawal of foreign forces from Lebanon his highest priority. He also stated that he had been discussing with the Government of Lebanon the possibility of extending United Nations technical assistance at the request of the Government of Lebanon in order to ensure that the elections could be conducted in a free and credible manner.

The Council heard a briefing by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General.¹¹⁷ He stated that 26 April 2005 represented a historic day for the Lebanese and Syrian people as it marked the visible withdrawal of Syrian forces from Lebanon and the reception of the formal notification from the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic that the Syrian Arab Republic had withdrawn all its troops, military assets and intelligence apparatus from Lebanon. A full Syrian withdrawal represented a significant and important action towards ending the foreign interference that had characterized Lebanese politics for decades. He maintained that the withdrawal of foreign forces was a precondition for the restoration of the full sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Lebanon. Another precondition was the holding of free and credible parliamentary elections. He stressed that, to verify the full and complete withdrawal of Syrian forces, the Secretary-General had dispatched a United Nations verification mission. The Governments of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic assured the United Nations that both Governments would assist the mission in its important task. He informed the Council that following the discussion with the Government of Lebanon the possibility of extending United Nations technical assistance to ensure free and credible parliamentary elections, United Nations electoral experts had been sent to assist the Government of Lebanon in its preparations. The Secretary-General also encouraged the idea that international electoral observers would be invited to monitor the elections.¹¹⁸

At its 5175th meeting, on 4 May 2005, the Council again included in its agenda the first semi-annual report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 1559 (2004). The President (Denmark) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹¹⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the first semi-annual report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 1559 (2004);

Acknowledged the letter dated 26 April 2005 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Syrian Arab Republic to the Secretary-General stating that the Syrian Arab Republic had completed the full withdrawal of its forces, military assets and the intelligence apparatus from Lebanon;

Called upon the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic and the Government of Lebanon to extend their full cooperation to the United Nations verification team;

Welcomed the decision of the Government of Lebanon to conduct elections beginning on 29 May 2005;

Encouraged the Secretary-General and the Government of Lebanon to reach arrangements for international assistance, including United Nations assistance, to ensure that such elections were conducted in a free and credible manner.

Decision of 7 June 2005 (5197th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5197th meeting, on 7 June 2005, the President (France) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹²⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned the terrorist bombing on 2 June 2005 in Beirut that killed a Lebanese journalist, and expressed its deepest sympathy and condolences to the family of the victim and to the people of Lebanon;

Welcomed the determination and commitment of the Government of Lebanon to bring to justice the perpetrators as that assassination constituted a pernicious effort to undermine security, stability, sovereignty, political independence and efforts aimed at preserving civil accord in the country;

Expressed concern about the destabilizing impact of political assassinations and other terrorist acts in Lebanon, and warned that the sponsors of recent terrorist acts should not be permitted to jeopardize the holding of parliamentary elections;

Reaffirmed its resolution 1559 (2004), and reiterated its call for the strict respect of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and political independence of Lebanon;

Urged all States to cooperate fully in the fight against terrorism.

Decision of 22 June 2005 (5212th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5212th meeting, on 22 June 2005, the President (France) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹²¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Commended the Government of Lebanon for the successful conduct of the elections and expressed its appreciation for the advice and technical support given to the Lebanese authorities by the United Nations Electoral Assistance

¹²¹ S/PRST/2005/26.

Division and the international observers, notably from the European Union;

Looked forward to the formation of a new government in the near future, and stressed that the establishment of that government in accordance with the constitutional rules and without any foreign interference would be another sign of the political independence and sovereignty of Lebanon;

Strongly condemned the recent terrorist acts in Lebanon, in particular the heinous assassination of former leader of the Communist Party George Hawi, and called for their perpetrators to be brought to justice;

Called upon the international community to stand ready to examine possible requests from the newly elected Lebanese authorities for enhanced assistance and cooperation;

Reiterated its call for the full implementation of all requirements of resolution 1559 (2004) and urged all concerned parties to cooperate fully to achieve this goal; also called for the full implementation of resolution 1595 (2005);

Reaffirmed its strong support for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized borders and under the sole and exclusive authority of the Government of Lebanon.

Decision of 12 December 2005 (5320th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5320th meeting, on 12 December 2005, the representative of Lebanon was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (United Kingdom) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹²² by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest terms the terrorist bombing on 12 December 2005 in the suburbs of Beirut that killed Lebanese member of Parliament, editor and journalist Gebrane Tueni, a patriot who was an outspoken symbol of freedom and the sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon, as well as three others; and expressed its deepest sympathy to the families of those killed and injured;

Reiterated its deepest concern about the destabilizing impact of political assassinations and other terrorist acts in Lebanon;

Reiterated also its warning that the sponsors of that and previous terrorist attacks against political leaders and leading members of civil society in Lebanon, whose obvious aim was to undermine Lebanon's security, stability, sovereignty, national unity, political independence and press freedom, would not be permitted to succeed and would finally be held accountable for their crimes;

Reaffirmed its resolution 1559 (2004), and reiterated once again its call for the strict respect of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and political independence of Lebanon.

Decision of 23 January 2006 (5352nd meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5352nd meeting, on 23 January 2006, the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for the implementation of resolution 1559 (2004) was invited to participate in the discussion. The Council included in its agenda a letter dated 26 October 2005 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council, transmitting his second semi-annual report on the implementation of resolution 1559 (2004).¹²³ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the requirements of the withdrawal of Syrian troops and military assets had been met. He also noted that complications had arisen from the lack of a clearly agreed upon and demarcated border between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. There had also been difficulties related to the control of the borderline between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic and the issue of the illegal transfer of arms and people towards armed groups in Lebanon. He noted that the next step in the process was for the Lebanese Armed Forces to provide continuous and effective security throughout the country at a time when the size of the army was being significantly reduced. The Secretary-General stated that he next planned to focus on working with the authorities of Lebanon on the complete exercise of governmental control and authority throughout all of Lebanon, unchallenged by the existence of independent and unsupervised Lebanese and non-Lebanese groups.

The President (United Republic of Tanzania) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹²⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Noted that significant further progress had been made towards the implementation of resolution 1559 (2004) but also noted that other provisions of that resolution had yet to be implemented;

Commended the Government of Lebanon for the dialogue it initiated in October 2005 with representatives of militias and for taking measures against movements of arms and people into Lebanese territory;

Condemned the continued terrorist attacks in Lebanon;

¹²³ S/2005/673, submitted pursuant to the statement by the President of 19 October 2004 (S/PRST/2004/36).

¹²⁴ S/PRST/2006/3.

Reiterated its call for the full implementation of all requirements of resolution 1559 (2004), and urged all concerned parties to cooperate fully with the Council and the Secretary-General to achieve that goal.

Decision of 17 May 2006 (5440th meeting):
resolution 1680 (2006)

At the 5417th meeting,¹²⁵ on 21 April 2006, statements were made by the representatives of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic.¹²⁶

The representative of Lebanon thanked the Security Council for all the support it had provided in enhancing the sovereignty and prosperity of Lebanon. He stated that the national dialogue conference, initiated in March 2006, had already achieved significant progress. Consensus had been reached on important matters such as relations with the Syrian Arab Republic, the delimitation of all common borders between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, including the Shab'a farms area, the policy towards the Palestinians in Lebanon, and the international investigation and judicial process relating to the assassination of the former Prime Minister, Rafiq Hariri. There was already unanimous agreement that the relations between the Governments of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic should be strong and positive based on mutual respect, parity and non-interference. A positive response by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic with regard to the steps agreed by all the parties in the national dialogue — including the establishment of diplomatic relations and the delineation of the border between the two countries — would be an indication that the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic was beginning to accept the idea that good relations between it and an independent Lebanon were possible. He stated that the delineation of the border in the Shab'a farms area was important in that context, because it had major implications for the ability of the Government of Lebanon to “liberate” that area. The representative of Lebanon further noted that he would wait for the confirmation of the specific steps required by the United Nations to recognize Lebanese sovereignty over the territory of the Shab'a farms. He noted that, in addition to implementing decisions already taken by the national dialogue conference, the other challenge was to reach agreement on two remaining issues. The first was the issue of the presidency of Lebanon. The majority in parliament considered the extension of the term of office of President Emile Lahoud to have been the result of interference and coercion by the Syrian Arab Republic. However, as the majority in parliament was not sufficient to constitutionally shorten the President's extended term, the issue had been referred to the national dialogue in the hope that consensus could be reached, although this had proved difficult so far. The other issues were Hizbullah's weapons and their role in the defence of Lebanon. He also expressed appreciation for the work of the International Independent Investigation Commission.¹²⁷

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic reaffirmed the special relationship between Lebanon and his country. He believed that there were no problems in regard to the demarcation of the border between the two countries, but the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic was willing to demarcate the border and had sent a letter on the issue to the Government of Lebanon. He stressed that the demarcation of the border in the Shab'a farms area could not occur until Israel withdrew from the area. He maintained that the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic had implemented the provisions of resolution 1559 (2004) pertaining to it when it withdrew all its troops and personnel from Lebanon on 26 April 2005. He rejected the idea proposed by other parties that the issues of the demarcation of the border and the exchange of ambassadors were part of resolution 1559 (2004), emphasizing that the matters of exchanging ambassadors and demarcating the border were sovereign matters for Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic and that the Council should not interfere in those matters, in accordance with Article 2 (7) of the Charter. He concluded by saying that some States had taken advantage of their membership in the Security Council to achieve certain objectives, which was contrary to the goal of peace and security in the region and would contribute to instability and tension.¹²⁸

At the 5440th meeting, on 17 May 2006, at which statements were made by the representatives of Argentina, China, Qatar and the Russian Federation,¹²⁹ the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 18 April 2006 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council, transmitting the third semi-annual report on the implementation of resolution 1559 (2004).¹³⁰ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that further significant progress had been made towards the implementation of all provisions of resolution 1559 (2004). The disbanding and disarmament of all Lebanese and non-Lebanese militias, the extension of the control of the Government of Lebanon over all Lebanese territory and the strict respect of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and political independence of Lebanon had yet to be achieved, however. He called for all parties to cooperate in implementing those provisions of resolution 1559 (2004). He called on the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic to accept the offer proposed by the Government of Lebanon, which would have both countries working together to establish embassies and delineate their mutual border.

The President (Congo) drew the attention of the Council to a letter from the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic.¹³¹ The President then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Denmark, France, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States;¹³² it was put to the vote and adopted by 13 votes to none, with 2 abstentions (China, Russian Federation), as resolution 1680 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its call for the full implementation of all requirements of resolution 1559 (2004);

Reiterated also its call upon all concerned States and parties to cooperate fully with the Government of Lebanon, the Security Council and the Secretary-General to achieve that goal;

Strongly encouraged the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic to respond positively to the request made by the Government of Lebanon to delineate their common border and to establish full diplomatic relations and representation;

Commended the Government of Lebanon for taking measures against movements of arms into Lebanese territory, and called upon the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic to take similar measures;

Reiterated its support to the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy in their efforts and dedication to facilitate and assist in the implementation of all provisions of resolution 1559 (2004).

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation stated that he advocated the strengthening of stability in Lebanon and the normalization of the situation in the Syrian Arab Republic. He was convinced that the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of Lebanon could be strengthened exclusively through dialogue between Damascus and Beirut. He emphasized that resolution 1680 (2006) was “a departure from the aforementioned tasks”. The Russian delegation did not see any particular need at this stage for any further substantive reaction on the part of the Council on issues related to Syrian-Lebanese relations. He also stated that the Russian Federation had found it impossible to support the resolution after its proposed amendments to the resolution had not been taken into account.¹³³

The representative of Argentina stated that the Government of Argentina did not believe it necessary to reinterpret the operative paragraphs of resolution 1559 (2004) or to keep saddling the parties with additional obligations. His delegation also believed that the language of the resolution needed to be interpreted in the light of the relevant provisions of international law on diplomatic affairs. The Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations was specific in its determination that diplomatic relations and mutual diplomatic representation had to be established through mutual consent of the States involved. His country did not believe that the Security Council should become involved in those matters, which were solely of a bilateral nature. Argentina believed that the paragraph on that subject did not establish a precedent that could be invoked in the future on this or other issues.¹³⁴

The representative of China stated that the Government of China fully understood and supported the desire and demand of Lebanon to establish ¹³¹ S/2006/259, dated 24 April 2006 and addressed to Secretary-General, in which it was stated that the report on the implementation of resolution 1559 (2004) had exceeded the mandate provided in that resolution and had focused on issues that fell within the domestic jurisdiction of both countries. It was also reaffirmed that all of the troops, military assets and security apparatus of the Syrian Arab Republic had been withdrawn from Lebanon on 26 April 2005.

diplomatic relations and to define its border with its neighbours and hoped that Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic would continue their bilateral dialogue. In that light, he had also hoped that the sponsors of the draft resolution would make corresponding changes so that a consensus could be achieved. As such changes had not been made, the Government of China had abstained from voting.¹³⁵

The representative of Qatar expressed regret that the resolution did not mention any breaches by Israel of the Blue Line, as those were among the elements that were hampering the full implementation of resolution 1559 (2004).¹³⁶

Decision of 30 October 2006 (5559th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5559th meeting, on 30 October 2006, in which the representative of Lebanon was invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda the fourth semi-annual report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 1559 (2004), dated 19 October 2006.¹³⁷ In his report, the Secretary-General noted that, in the six months since his previous report, Lebanon had witnessed a political standstill followed by a severe deterioration and prolonged instability, including the hostilities between Israel and Hizbullah, which had begun on 12 July.¹³⁸ Nonetheless, he observed that considerable progress had been achieved towards the implementation of resolution 1559 (2004). Free and fair legislative elections had been held, and progress had been made in reference to the extension of control by the Government of Lebanon over Lebanese territory. However, the disbanding and disarmament of all Lebanese and non-Lebanese militias had yet to be implemented in full. He stressed that this was a necessary element for Lebanon to consolidate its position as a sovereign and democratic State, and could only be achieved through an inclusive process that addressed the political and economic interests of all Lebanese and of those living in Lebanon. He also noted that the establishment of full diplomatic relations between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic and their delineation of the shared border, including the Shab'a farms area, through a bilateral agreement would constitute significant steps towards promoting peace and security in the region.

The President (Japan) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹³⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Noted that important progress had been made towards the implementation of resolution 1559 (2004) but also noted with regret that some other provisions of that resolution had yet to be implemented;

Commended the Government of Lebanon for extending its authority throughout its territory; reiterated its call for the full implementation of resolution 1559 (2004) and urged all concerned parties to fully cooperate to achieve that goal;

Reaffirmed its support to the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy in their efforts and dedication, and looked forward to the further recommendations of the Secretary-General on the relevant outstanding issues.

Decision of 11 June 2007 (5691st meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5691st meeting,¹⁴⁰ on 11 June 2007, the Council included in its agenda the fifth semi-annual report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 1559 (2004), dated 7 May 2007.¹⁴¹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that, while further progress had been made, resolution 1559 (2004) had yet to be achieved in full. He noted that the Government of Lebanon had continued to witness prolonged political uncertainty. The consultations among the political leaders in Lebanon to resolve their differences that had begun on 6 November 2006 had collapsed and the Shiite and other members of the Cabinet had resigned from the Government. He noted that the opposition, consisting of Amal, Hizbullah and the Free Patriotic Movement, as well as President Lahoud, had maintained that the Cabinet no longer enjoyed constitutional legitimacy. However, the Government had continued to meet and function, since it enjoyed the support of a parliamentary majority. In addition, the Government maintained that, since the Prime Minister had never formally accepted the resignations submitted to him, they were not valid. The enduring standoff had demonstrated that Lebanon was in need of a comprehensive and consensual political framework. He said that a resolution of the crisis would have to encompass discussion of an agreement on the issue of the Lebanese presidency. He also highlighted the need to address the allegations of illegal arms trafficking across the Syrian-Lebanese border, and reiterated the importance of the establishment of formal diplomatic relations between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The President (Belgium) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁴² by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its full support for the legitimate and democratically elected Government of Lebanon, called for full respect for the democratic institutions of the country, in conformity with its Constitution, condemned any effort to destabilize Lebanon, and called upon all Lebanese political parties to show responsibility with a view to preventing, through dialogue, further deterioration of the situation in Lebanon;

Reaffirmed its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty, unity and political independence of Lebanon; condemned the ongoing criminal and terrorist acts in Lebanon, including those perpetrated by Fatah al-Islam, and fully supported the efforts carried out by the Lebanese Government and army to ensure security and stability throughout Lebanon;

Underlined the need to protect and give assistance to the civilian population, notably the Palestinian refugees;

Reiterated that there should be no weapons in Lebanon without the consent of its Government; reiterated its deep concern at mounting information by Israel and other states of illegal movements of arms into Lebanon, and in particular across the Lebanese-Syrian border, and looked forward to the conclusions of the Lebanon Independent Border Assessment Team;

Reaffirmed its support to the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy in their efforts and dedication to facilitate and assist in the implementation of all provisions of resolutions 1559 (2004) and 1680 (2006) and looked forward to the next report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 1701 (2006) and to his further recommendations on the relevant outstanding issues.

Decision of 11 December 2007 (5799th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5799th meeting, on 11 December 2007, the President (Italy) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁴³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Stressed its deep concern at the repeated postponements of the presidential election in Lebanon;

Emphasized that the ongoing political impasse did not serve the interest of the Lebanese people and might lead to further deterioration of the situation in Lebanon;

Reiterated its call for the holding, without delay, of a free and fair presidential election in conformity with Lebanese constitutional rules, without any foreign interference or influence, and with full respect for democratic institutions;

Emphasized the importance of Lebanese constitutional institutions, including the Government of Lebanon, as well as the importance of the unity of the Lebanese people, in particular on the basis of reconciliation and political dialogue;

Called upon all Lebanese political parties to continue to exercise restraint and to show responsibility with a view to preventing, through dialogue, further deterioration of the situation in Lebanon;

Commended the course adopted by the democratically elected Government of Lebanon and the Lebanese Armed Forces in carrying out their respective responsibilities in the period until the presidential election occurred;

Reiterated its call for the full implementation of all its resolutions on Lebanon.

D. Security Council resolution 1595 (2005)

Decision of 15 February 2005 (5122nd meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5122nd meeting, on 15 February 2005, the President (Benin) made a statement on behalf of the Security Council,¹⁴⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Unequivocally condemned the terrorist bombing in Beirut on 14 February 2005 that killed former Prime Minister of Lebanon Rafiq Hariri and others, and caused serious injury to dozens of people, including former Minister Basil Fleihan;

Expressed its deepest sympathy and condolences to the people and Government of Lebanon and to the victims and their families;

Called upon the Government of Lebanon to bring to justice the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of this heinous terrorist act; stated that it was gravely concerned by the murder of the former Prime Minister of Lebanon and its possible impact on ongoing efforts by the people of Lebanon to solidify Lebanon's democracy, and concerned by the potential for further destabilization of Lebanon;

Decision of 7 April 2005 (5160th meeting):

By a letter dated 24 March 2005,¹⁴⁵ the Secretary-General submitted to the Council the report of the fact-finding mission to Lebanon inquiring into the causes, circumstances and consequences of the assassination of the former Prime Minister, Rafiq Hariri.

The report of the fact-finding mission detailed the incident of 14 February 2005, when an explosion in downtown Beirut killed 20 persons, among them the former Prime Minister, and the subsequent investigation. The report stressed that while the specific “causes” of the assassination of Mr. Hariri could not be reliably asserted until the perpetrators of the crime were brought to justice, it was clear that the assassination had taken place in a political and security context marked by acute polarization around the Syrian influence in Lebanon and the failure of the Lebanese State to provide adequate protection for its citizens. In detailing the political background of the incident, the report noted that the Prime Minister had resigned following the extension of the term of the President of Lebanon by three years. The report also noted that it was widely believed that Mr. Hariri had “lent active support” to resolution 1559 (2004). By the end of January 2005, there was a “formidable power bloc emerging in Lebanon”, bringing together the representatives of almost all political and religious communities with the noted exception of the Shiite groups Amal and Hizbullah. This power bloc had seemed confident of winning a clear majority in the upcoming elections and of “its ability to force the Syrian Arab Republic to implement its outstanding commitment under the Taif Agreement and/or Security Council resolution 1559 (2004)”. Prime Minister Hariri had stood as the perceived architect of this power bloc. The mission concluded that the Lebanese security services and the Syrian military intelligence bore the primary responsibility for the lack of security, protection and law and order in Lebanon. However, the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic bore the primary responsibility for the political tension that preceded the assassination of the former Prime Minister. The review of the investigation indicated that there was a distinct lack of commitment on the part of the Lebanese authorities to investigate the crime effectively and that the investigation had not been conducted in accordance with acceptable international standards. The mission also concluded that the restoration of the integrity and credibility of the Lebanese security apparatus was of vital importance to the security and stability of the country. Lastly, it was the view of the mission that international and regional support would be necessary to safeguard the national unity of the Government of Lebanon and to shield its fragile polity from unwarranted pressure. As a result, in his letter, the Secretary-General endorsed the conclusion of the mission that an independent investigation commission was needed to uncover the truth.

At its 5160th meeting, on 7 April 2005, the Council included the above-mentioned letter in its agenda. The President (China) drew the attention of the Council to a letter addressed to the Secretary-General dated 29 March 2005 from the representative of Lebanon,¹⁴⁶ approving of the decision of the Security Council to establish an international commission of inquiry into the assassination of Prime Minister Hariri; a letter addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council from the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic,¹⁴⁷ declaring that the results of the report “departed from objectivity”; and a letter from the representatives of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁴⁸ affirming the determination of both States to widen further the path of cooperation and coordination between them. The President also drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Denmark, France, Greece, Japan, the Philippines, Romania, the United Kingdom and the United States.¹⁴⁹ The draft resolution was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1595 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to establish an international independent investigation commission based in Lebanon to assist the Lebanese authorities in their investigation of all aspects of this terrorist act, including to help to identify its perpetrators, sponsors and organizers and their accomplices;

¹⁴⁸ S/2005/219.

¹⁴⁹ S/2005/227.

Called upon the government of Lebanon to ensure that the findings and conclusions of the investigation by the Commission were taken into account fully;

Decided that the Commission should enjoy the full cooperation of the Lebanese authorities; have the authority to collect any additional information and evidence; enjoy freedom of movement throughout the Lebanese territory; and be provided with the facilities and staff necessary to perform its functions;

Requested the Secretary-General to consult urgently with the Government of Lebanon with a view to facilitating the establishment and operation of the Commission, and requested also that he report to the Council accordingly and notify it of the date on which the Commission began its full operations;

Also requested the Secretary-General to undertake without delay the steps, measures and arrangements necessary for the speedy establishment and full functioning of the Commission;

Directed the Commission to determine procedures for carrying out its investigation;

Requested the Commission to complete its work within three months, authorized the Secretary-General to extend the operation of the Commission for a further period not exceeding three months, and requested that he inform the Security Council accordingly;

Requested the Commission to report to the Council on the conclusions of its investigation and requested the Secretary-General to update the Council orally on the progress of the Commission every two months during the operations of the Commission or more frequently as needed.

Decision of 31 October 2005 (5297th meeting):
resolution 1636 (2005)

At its 5292nd meeting, on 25 October 2005, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 20 October 2005 from the Secretary-General, transmitting the first report of the International Independent Investigation Commission.¹⁵⁰ In its report the Commission noted that the terrorist attack of 14 February 2005 had been carried out by an extensive organization with considerable resources and that it had been planned over the course of several months. The Commission described a convergence of evidence which suggested that there was “both Lebanese and Syrian involvement” in this terrorist act. It noted that it was “a well-known fact” that the military intelligence of the Syrian Arab Republic had a pervasive presence in Lebanon at least until the withdrawal of the Syrian forces pursuant to resolution 1559 (2004), and that the former senior security officials of Lebanon had been their appointees.

¹⁵⁰ S/2005/662.

“Given the infiltration of Lebanese institutions and society by the Syrian and Lebanese intelligence services working in tandem”, the Commission stated that “it would be difficult to envisage a scenario whereby such a complex assassination plot could have been carried out without their knowledge”. The Commission concluded that many leads pointed directly towards the involvement of Syrian security officials and it noted that several interviewees of the Syrian Arab Republic had tried to deliberately mislead the investigation by issuing false statements. The Commission concluded that the continuing investigation needed to be carried forward by the appropriate Lebanese judicial and security authorities. The explosion of 14 February needed to be assessed clearly against the sequence of explosions which preceded and followed it, since there could be links between some, if not all, of them.

The Council also included in its agenda a letter dated 14 October 2005 from the representative of Lebanon addressed to the Secretary-General, requesting an extension of the mandate of the Commission until December 2005.¹⁵¹ The Council heard a briefing by the Commissioner and statements by the representatives of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic.

In his briefing, the Commissioner reported that the Commission had become fully operational as from 16 June 2005. The Commissioner also enumerated various fact-finding missions, interviews, and raid and search operations which the Commission had conducted since its inception. He noted that the Commission had established close working links with the authorities of Lebanon and that arrangements had been made to facilitate the work and to give the Commission the backing it needed. However, he noted that the investigation could not be considered complete, and that it would be entirely normal for that type of case to take months or years to cover all aspects of the investigation with certitude and to prepare a case for prosecution.¹⁵²

The representative of Lebanon welcomed the establishment of the Commission and its progress. He called for the extension of its mandate to 15 December 2005. He called on all parties concerned to cooperate with the Commission.¹⁵³

¹⁵³ Ibid., pp. 4-5.

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic condemned the assassination and noted that “every paragraph of the report deserve[d] a comment to refute its content”. He stated that the report was clearly influenced by the political climate prevailing in Lebanon, and he rejected the report’s suggestion that “[g]iven the infiltration of Lebanese institutions and society by the Syrian and Lebanese intelligence services working in tandem, it would be difficult to envisage a scenario whereby such a complex assassination plot could have been carried out without their knowledge”. The representative explained that this charge “could be levelled against the security service of any country in the world on whose territory a terrorist crime or act has taken place”. The representative also rejected those conclusions of the report that pointed a finger at the Syrian Arab Republic, because they depended completely “on the credibility of the testimony of people with strongly declared antipathy to Syria”. He stated that some of the testimonies contradicted each other and that the report accused the Syrian Arab Republic before the investigation had been completed. The representative also rejected the accusation contained in the report that the Syrian Arab Republic had not sufficiently cooperated with the investigation and he enumerated several instances in which his country had cooperated with the Commission. He said that the investigation should have procured evidence before it accused any Member State, but affirmed that the Syrian Arab Republic would continue to cooperate with the investigation.¹⁵⁴

At its 5297th meeting, on 31 October 2005, the Council again included in its agenda the letter dated 20 October 2005 from the Secretary-General.¹⁵⁵ The President (Romania) drew the attention of the Council to the above-mentioned letter dated 14 October 2005 from the representative of Lebanon, requesting an extension of the mandate of the Commission until December 2005.¹⁵⁶ A draft resolution, submitted by France, the United Kingdom and the United States,¹⁵⁷ was then put to the vote. It was adopted unanimously as resolution 1636 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Took note with extreme concern of the conclusion of the Commission that there was converging evidence pointing at the involvement of both Lebanese and Syrian officials in this terrorist act;

Decided to establish a Committee of the Security Council consisting of all the members of the Council to undertake the tasks described in the annex to the resolution;

Welcomed the decision of the Secretary-General to extend the mandate of the Commission until 15 December 2005, as authorized by the Council in its resolution 1595 (2005), and decided that it would extend the mandate further if recommended by the Commission and requested by the Government of Lebanon;

Decided that the Syrian Arab Republic must detain those Syrian officials or individuals whom the Commission considered as suspected of involvement in the planning, sponsoring, organizing or perpetrating of the terrorist act, and make them fully available to the Commission; the Commission should have vis-à-vis the Syrian Arab Republic the same rights and authorities as mentioned in paragraph 3 of resolution 1595 (2005), and the Syrian Arab Republic must cooperate with the Commission fully and unconditionally on that basis; the Commission should have the authority to determine the location and modalities for interview of Syrian officials and individuals it deemed relevant to the inquiry;

Insisted that the Syrian Arab Republic not interfere in Lebanese domestic affairs, either directly or indirectly, refrain from any attempt aimed at destabilizing Lebanon, and respect scrupulously the sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and political independence of that country.

After the vote, all members of the Council and the representatives of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic made statements.¹⁵⁸ Most speakers expressed support for extending the mandate of the Commission for a period of six months and called for full cooperation with the Commission.

A number of speakers criticized the Syrian Arab Republic for not having cooperated in good faith with the Commission and called for full cooperation.¹⁵⁹ The representatives of France, the United Kingdom, the United States and Denmark emphasized the evidence which pointed to the involvement of Lebanese and Syrian officials in the terrorist attack against the former Prime Minister of Lebanon on 14 February 2005. They noted that it was difficult to envisage a scenario whereby a complex assassination plot could have been carried out without the knowledge of senior officials of the Syrian Arab Republic.¹⁶⁰ The representative of the United Kingdom stressed that, if the Syrian Arab Republic failed to cooperate fully, his delegation would consider further actions to ensure that the Council, through the Commission, could play its part in the determination of the Government of Lebanon to see justice done.¹⁶¹ The representative of the United States made it clear that the failure to comply with the demands of the Commission would lead to “serious consequences” for the Syrian Arab Republic. She also maintained that the Syrian Arab Republic had isolated itself from the international community through “its false statements, its support for terrorism, its interference in the affairs of its neighbours and its destabilizing behaviour in the Middle East”. She said that the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic needed to make a strategic decision to fundamentally change its behaviour.¹⁶²

Several speakers emphasized that the Commission’s report was not complete and that the Syrian Arab Republic should be given a presumption of innocence, and welcomed the stated willingness of the Syrian Arab Republic to cooperate with the Commission.¹⁶³ The representatives of Algeria, Brazil, China and the Russian Federation also stressed the fact that the resolution neither implied nor authorized the application of measures or sanctions against the Syrian Arab Republic in the absence of a collective decision by the Council.¹⁶⁴

The representative of the Russian Federation recalled that the initial version of the draft resolution had provided for an unprecedented procedure that would have automatically imposed sanctions against suspects purely at the discretion of the Commission. He noted that this “very dangerous precedent had been avoided”.¹⁶⁵ The representative of Algeria maintained that the Council had still given the Commission “excessive power in terms of the letter and spirit of resolution 1595 (2005)”, since the Commission had the ability to submit directly to the Council the names of suspects with a view to imposing sanctions on them or even of deciding on the venue and modalities for the interrogation of Syrian or other officials.¹⁶⁶

The representative of Lebanon welcomed the progress of the Commission in uncovering the truth regarding the Hariri assassination and called on all concerned parties to cooperate seriously with the Commission so that justice could take its proper course.¹⁶⁷

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic criticized the report of the Commission on the basis that it proceeded from the presumption that the Syrian Arab Republic was guilty of committing the crime, rather than the presumption of innocence. Responding to the accusation that the Syrian Arab Republic had cooperated in form but not in substance, he asserted that while his Government had acted in good faith, the Commission had not, and there had been an intention to point “a finger of accusation” to pave the way for the resolution adopted under Chapter VII. He cited evidence of the cooperation of the Syrian Arab Republic with the Commission, such as the legislative decree No. 96 of 29 October 2005 which had created a special judicial commission to cooperate with the Commission, as well as the judicial authorities of Lebanon, in all matters pertaining to the investigation. He stated that the objective of the resolution was not to uncover the truth behind the assassination, but rather to target the Syrian Arab Republic and its positions vis-à-vis issues that affected the present and future of the region.¹⁶⁸

Decision of 15 December 2005 (5329th meeting):

Investigation Commission.¹⁶⁹ In the report, the Commissioner observed, inter alia, that conclusions set out in the previous report remained valid and that the investigations during the reporting period had reinforced those conclusions. He maintained the view that there were a number of personal and political motives for the assassination of Mr. Hariri and recommended an extension of the Commission for a minimum period of six months.

The Commissioner and the representatives of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic made statements to the Council. The Commissioner explained that the investigation had been conducted on two tracks, one Lebanese and one Syrian. He welcomed the degree of cooperation received by the Commission from Lebanese authorities but stressed that cooperation from the Syrian Arab Republic had been marked by conflicting signals.¹⁷⁰

The representative of Lebanon welcomed the work of the Commission and requested an extension of its mandate. He also noted that international precedents had shown that the best way to judge those involved in serious crimes of this nature was to establish an international tribunal so that justice could be delivered through fair trials free of pressure and obstacles. Therefore, in accordance with paragraph 14 of resolution 1636 (2005), by which the Council expressed its readiness to consider any additional request for assistance from the Government of Lebanon, his delegation had asked the Council to establish an international tribunal, which could have its seat either in or outside Lebanon, and which would try all those who were involved in the crime. Noting that a Member of Parliament, Gebrane Tueni, had been killed in a terrorist attack on the previous day, he called attention to the fact that his Government had requested the Council to either extend the mandate of the Commission or establish another international investigation commission to help the authorities in the investigation of all other assassinations of political and media figures in Lebanon, starting with the attempted assassination of Marwan Hamadeh on 1 October 2004.¹⁷¹

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic reiterated his condemnation of the series of bombings, which in his view were aimed at destabilizing Lebanon and creating tensions between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, as part of a broader plan to destabilize the region. He reiterated that the Syrian Arab Republic would continue to cooperate with the Commission, although he complained that the Commission had violated the principle of confidentiality by leaking reports to the media. He also disagreed with the “imprecise statements” in the Commission’s report, specifically the ones which referred to the reluctance of the Syrian Arab Republic to fully cooperate with the Commission. He cited several examples of cooperation and reiterated that the conclusions of the report were suspect because they were based on the presumption of guilt and made prejudged accusations. He also called attention to several irregularities in the investigation, including witnesses who had subsequently changed their testimony.¹⁷²

At its 5329th meeting, on 15 December 2005, at which the representatives of Algeria, China and the Russian Federation, and those of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, made statements, the Council again included in its agenda the letter dated 12 December 2005 from the Secretary-General, transmitting the second report of the Commission.¹⁷³ The President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to two letters, dated 5 December and 13 December 2005, addressed to the Secretary-General by the representative of Lebanon;¹⁷⁴ in the former letter Lebanon requested an extension of the mandate of the Commission for a further period of six months, and in the latter requested the Council to establish an international tribunal to try all those responsible for the assassination of Rafiq Hariri. A draft resolution submitted by France, the United Kingdom and the United States¹⁷⁵ was put to the vote; it was adopted unanimously as resolution 1644 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided, as recommended by the Commission and requested by the Government of Lebanon, to extend the mandate of the Commission, as set forth in resolutions 1595 (2005) and 1636 (2005), initially until 15 June 2006;

Requested the Commission to report to the Council on the progress of the inquiry every three months from the adoption of the resolution, including on the cooperation received from the Syrian authorities, or anytime before that date if the Commission deemed that such cooperation did not meet the requirements of the resolution and of resolutions 1595 (2005) and 1636 (2005);

Authorized the Commission, following the request of the Government of Lebanon, to extend its technical assistance, as appropriate, to the Lebanese authorities with regard to their investigations of the terrorist attacks perpetrated in Lebanon since 1 October 2004, and requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commission and the Government of Lebanon, to present recommendations to expand the mandate of the Commission to include investigations of those other attacks;

Requested the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Commission with the support and resources necessary for the discharge of its duties.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of Algeria emphasized that the conclusions of the second report of the Commission were not final and that they needed to be corroborated, and consideration of the report needed to be free from any influence that could harm one party or another. Nonetheless, he explained that he had voted for an extension of the mandate because it was directly requested by the Government of Lebanon. He also noted that his delegation had obtained assurances that the Council would refrain from any premature or inappropriate action.¹⁷⁶ The representative of China stressed that the work of the Commission was not completed and that much remained to be done. He said that the main purpose of resolution 1644 (2005) was to extend the mandate of the Commission.¹⁷⁷ The representative of the Russian Federation stated that he had proposed an amendment to the draft resolution which made it more balanced in nature and that the Russian Federation would continue to oppose placing unwarranted pressure on Damascus, as well as interpretations with respect to the degree and nature of cooperation from the Syrian Arab Republic that were not in keeping with the conclusions of the Commission.¹⁷⁸

The representative of Lebanon welcomed the unanimous adoption of the resolution.¹⁷⁹ The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic reiterated his position that certain States had unwarrantedly insisted that the Syrian Arab Republic had not cooperated with the Commission. The representative reaffirmed the commitment of the Syrian Arab Republic to the Commission and stated that the Syrian Arab Republic had discharged its responsibilities in “a spirit of sincerity”.¹⁸⁰

Decision of 29 March 2006 (5401st meeting):
resolution 1664 (2006)

At its 5388th meeting, held on 16 March 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 14 March 2006 from the Secretary-General, transmitting the third report of the International Independent Investigation Commission.¹⁸¹ In its report, the Commission observed, inter alia, that significant progress had been made during the reporting period regarding the circumstances of the attack and that a significant number of new lines of enquiry had been established. It also described the cooperation from the Government of Lebanon as excellent and specified the groundwork for improved cooperation with the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Council heard a briefing by the Commissioner and statements by the representatives of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. The Commissioner elaborated on the progress of the Commission and noted several systematic improvements in the investigation. He explained that a balance needed to be reached between the need to provide transparency and the need to protect confidentiality in the investigation, and he stressed that improved and timely cooperation from the Syrian Arab Republic was a critical factor for the Commission to continue its work successfully.¹⁸²

The representative of Lebanon reiterated his appreciation for the work of the Commission and reaffirmed the commitment of Lebanon to establishing the truth about the assassination. He also noted that all Lebanese “agree to and demand the establishment of an international tribunal to try all those involved in that terrorist crime”.¹⁸³

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic reiterated his assurances that his country would continue to cooperate with the Commission, and that “the most dangerous thing” that the investigation was faced with was the fact that some parties had “encroached upon the investigation with a view to reaching preconceived, unsubstantiated evidence”. He also argued that it had become clear that a number of witnesses before the Commission had made false allegations in order to mislead the investigation and to lead it to conclusions based on “known political biases”. However, he expressed satisfaction with how the confidentiality of the investigation had been handled.¹⁸⁴

At its 5401st meeting, on 29 March 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 21 March 2006.¹⁸⁵ The President (Argentina) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, the United Kingdom and the United States;¹⁸⁶ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1664 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General to negotiate an agreement with the Government of Lebanon aimed at establishing a tribunal of an international character based on the highest international standards of criminal justice;

Acknowledged that the adoption of the legal basis of, and framework for, the tribunal, would not prejudice the gradual phasing-in of its various components and would not predetermine the timing of the commencement of its operations, which would depend on the progress of the investigation;

Requested the Secretary-General to update the Council on the progress of the negotiation as he deemed appropriate and to submit in a timely manner for the consideration of the Council a report on the implementation of the resolution, in particular on the draft agreement negotiated with the Government of Lebanon, including options for a funding mechanism appropriate to ensure the continued and effective functioning of the tribunal;

Decided to remain seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representative of Lebanon welcomed the resolution since it gave the Secretary-General a mandate to begin negotiations with Lebanon regarding the establishment of an international tribunal. He described the resolution as a clear indication of the international community’s strong commitment and determination to punish all those involved in the terrorist crime, and he noted that it would have a positive effect on deterring criminals and in promoting stability in Lebanon and the region.¹⁸⁷

Decision of 15 June 2006 (5461st meeting): resolution 1686 (2006)

At its 5458th meeting, on 14 June 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 10 June 2006 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council, transmitting the fourth report of the International Independent Investigation Commission.¹⁸⁸ The President (Denmark) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 5 May 2006 from the representative of Lebanon addressed to the Secretary-General, requesting an extension of the mandate of the Commission until June 2007.¹⁸⁹ In its report, the Commission observed, inter alia, that considerable progress had been achieved regarding the crime scene and the former Prime Minister’s convoy. The Commission also stated that matters related to the explosion, the container/carrier and the means of delivery were largely understood and that final conclusions pending forensic analyses were anticipated soon. The Commission had made progress and consolidated its organizational structure and capacity, but it still faced some challenges such as linking all the cases together and securing adequate resources. The Commission welcomed the initiative of the Government of Lebanon to recommend the extension of its mandate for one year, and also thanked the Government of Lebanon for its continuous substantive and logistical support.

The Council heard a briefing by the Commissioner, as well as statements by the representatives of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. The Commissioner elaborated on the report and detailed the progress that had been made in the investigation of the assassination. Based on the available evidence, he explained that the Commission had reached the following conclusions: that one above-ground explosion happened on 14 February 2005 at precisely 12.55 p.m.; that a large improvised explosive device, placed in a Mitsubishi truck, had been detonated as the Hariri convoy passed by; and that the detonation of the device was most likely initiated by an individual within or immediately in front of the Mitsubishi. The magnitude of the explosion, and the amount of TNT used (a minimum of 1,200 kg of TNT equivalent), elevated the attack to an almost “guaranteed” level: the magnitude of the explosion was designed to ensure the success of the operation even if the Hariri vehicle was not directly hit. The Commission had also adopted two working hypotheses: either that the attack was planned and executed in a compartmentalized manner, in which different people were responsible for the different stages of the attack (the planning, the reconnaissance, the acquisition of the Mitsubishi truck, etc.), or that the entire operation was planned and executed by a relatively small single team. The Commissioner also described the amount of assistance provided by the Syrian Arab Republic as “satisfactory”. He stated that the Syrian Arab Republic had responded to all of the Commission’s requests, and that it had done so in a timely manner. He described the Commission’s interactions with the authorities of Lebanon as excellent at all levels and stated that the modalities and circumstances of the attack were now largely understood.¹⁹⁰

The representative of Lebanon reiterated the request of his Government to extend the mandate of the Commission for an additional year and welcomed the Council’s close interest in matters that affected Lebanon. He also noted the ongoing consultations with the United Nations Secretariat on drafting the basic statute of an international court.¹⁹¹

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic welcomed the objectivity of the report and stressed that the cooperation of the Syrian Arab Republic with the Commission was based on its eagerness to uncover the truth about the assassination. He reiterated the assertion that the greatest threat to the investigation was the attempt by certain parties to exploit the findings of the Commission for purposes which were far removed from those for which the Commission was established. The Syrian Arab Republic welcomed the conclusion of the report that its cooperation with the Commission had been timely, comprehensive, and generally satisfactory. He also agreed with the importance of adequate time to complete the investigations and gather all the necessary solid evidence and proof before moving on to the next step.¹⁹²

At its 5461st meeting, on 15 June 2006, the Council again included in its agenda the letter dated 10 June 2006 from the Secretary-General transmitting the fourth report of the Commission. The President

(Denmark) again drew the attention of the Council to the letter dated 5 May 2006 from the representative of Lebanon addressed to the Secretary-General requesting an extension of the mandate of the Commission until mid-June 2007.¹⁹³ The President also drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹⁹⁴ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1686 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of the Commission until 15 June 2007;

Supported the intention of the Commission to extend further its technical assistance to the Lebanese authorities with regard to their investigations into the terrorist attacks perpetrated in Lebanon since 1 October 2004, and requested the Secretary-General to provide the Commission with the support and resources needed in that regard;

Requested the Commission to continue to report to the Council on the progress of the investigation on a quarterly basis, or at any other time as it deemed appropriate;

Decided to remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 21 November 2006 (5569th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5539th meeting, on 29 September 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 25 September 2006 from the Secretary-General transmitting the fifth report of the International Independent Investigation Commission.¹⁹⁵ In its report, the Commission observed, inter alia, that despite the fact that the reporting period had been marked by conflict in Lebanon,¹⁹⁶ during which the Commission’s international personnel had been required to temporarily leave Lebanon and relocate to Cyprus, it had made progress in its investigation. Forensic evidence collected at the scene of the crime enabled the Commission to corroborate previous findings that the person who detonated the improvised explosive device was in his early twenties and his dental records suggested that his origins were outside of Lebanon. The Commission once again welcomed the cooperation of the Governments of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic in the investigation.

The Council heard a briefing by the Commissioner and statements by the representatives of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic.

In his briefing, the Commissioner explained that the investigation had progressed in three primary areas, namely, forensic investigation, communication analysis and the conduct of interviews. He also noted that the cooperation of Lebanon with the Commission was outstanding and that the cooperation of the Syrian Arab Republic with the Commission continued to be timely, efficient and generally satisfactory in the reporting period.¹⁹⁷

The representative of Lebanon welcomed the progress of the investigation and explained that the Government of Lebanon, in cooperation with the Under-Secretary-General for Legal Affairs and his assistants, was working to set up a court of an international character, and she noted that the idea of such a court enjoyed “firm and wide unanimity in Lebanon”.¹⁹⁸

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic recapitulated the report’s conclusion that his Government had continued to cooperate with the Commission in an effective manner on all levels during the reporting period. He also reiterated the concern of the Syrian Arab Republic that the investigation was being used by some third parties for purposes other than those intended by the Commission, such as to apply pressure on his country. He enumerated many instances in which the Syrian Arab Republic had cooperated with the Commission, including, inter alia, the ad hoc judicial commission established to oversee cooperation and coordination with the Commission and the timely response to requests for interviews and documents.¹⁹⁹

At the 5569th meeting, on 21 November 2006, in which the representative of Lebanon was invited to participate, the President (Peru) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁰⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Unequivocally condemned the assassination in Beirut on 21 November 2006 of Minister for Industry Pierre Gemayel, a patriot who was a symbol of freedom and of the political independence of Lebanon;

Condemned any attempt to destabilize Lebanon through political assassination or other terrorist acts;

Called upon all parties in Lebanon and the region to show restraint and a sense of responsibility with a view to preventing any further deterioration of the situation in Lebanon;

Urged all States, in accordance with its resolutions 1373 (2001), 1566 (2004) and 1624 (2005), to cooperate fully in the fight against terrorism;

Welcomed the determination and commitment of the Government of Lebanon to bring to justice the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of this and other assassinations and underlined its determination to support the Government of Lebanon in its efforts to that end.

Decision of 27 March 2007 (5648th meeting):
resolution 1748 (2007)

At its 5597th meeting, on 18 December 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 12 December 2006 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the sixth report of the International Independent Investigation Commission.²⁰¹ In its report, the Commission observed, inter alia, that during the reporting period it had returned to Lebanon after have been temporarily relocated to Cyprus from 22 July to 13 October 2006 for security reasons, and that it had operated in a volatile political environment marked by the assassination on 21 November of Cabinet member Pierre Gemayel. During the reporting period, the Commission developed crime scene evidence, investigated potential perpetrators, and collected evidence related to the linkage and contextual aspects of the case. The Commission had also extended technical assistance to the authorities of Lebanon regarding the Gemayel case.

The Council heard a briefing by the Commissioner, following which statements were made by the representatives of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. The Commissioner elaborated on the report and noted that there had been large demonstrations following the assassination of Mr. Gemayel and that the complex political discourse surrounding the establishment of a special tribunal for Lebanon was ongoing. The Commissioner reiterated that the investigation into the Hariri case had remained focused on developing crime scene evidence and investigating potential perpetrators and their linkages to one another.

The Commissioner welcomed the cooperation received from the Government of Lebanon and noted that the Commission had started investigating the assassination of Mr. Gemayel and was considering possible links between that and other cases. The Commissioner also welcomed the cooperation received from the Syrian Arab Republic, which he described as timely, efficient and generally satisfactory. He noted that although most States that had been requested to cooperate with the Commission had responded positively, some States had provided late or incomplete responses which had impeded or slowed down the work of the Commission on several fronts. He trusted that the Commission would receive full and prompt cooperation from all States during the next period.²⁰²

The representative of Lebanon expressed full confidence in the work of the Commission and offered all necessary assistance to the investigation as it reached the important milestone of unmasking the perpetrators of the crimes and bringing them to justice before an international court. She noted that the draft statute of such a court had been drawn up.²⁰³

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic emphasized the positive information contained in the report concerning the ongoing efforts by the Syrian Arab Republic to meet its commitments and cooperate with the Commission. He once again reiterated that the cooperation of his country stemmed from a desire to uncover the truth about the assassination and he warned of efforts on behalf of third parties to politicize conclusions that were entirely unrelated to the investigation. He also asked which 10 Member States had not fully complied with the requests of the Commission and called on them to cooperate fully with the Commission.²⁰⁴

At its 5642nd meeting, on 21 March 2007, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 15 March 2007 from the Secretary-General transmitting the seventh report of the International Independent Investigation Commission.²⁰⁵ The President (South Africa) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 20 March 2007 from the representative of Lebanon addressed to the Secretary-General, requesting an extension of the mandate of the Commission until June 2008.²⁰⁶ In its report, the Commission observed, inter alia, that it had remained focused on its primary objective in the investigation of the Hariri case, as well as providing technical assistance to the authorities of Lebanon in the investigation of 16 other cases, including the assassination of Pierre Gemayel. The Commission had made progress in collecting new evidence, in expanding the forms of evidence collected and in establishing that the motive behind the crime was related to Mr. Hariri's political activities. The Commissioner described the situation in Lebanon as unstable and welcomed the request of the Government of Lebanon to extend the Commission for a period of one year.

Statements were made by the Commissioner and the representative of Lebanon. The Commissioner elaborated on the report and emphasized the significant progress that had been made in several areas by further developing crime-scene leads, expanding the forms of evidence relating to the perpetrators and in building the linkage and context aspects of the case. The Commission had continued to provide support for the authorities of Lebanon regarding the Gemayel assassination by conducting interviews, analysing witness statements, performing forensic work, conducting communications analysis, reconstructing crime scene events and conducting ballistic analysis. The Commissioner also welcomed the productive cooperation of Lebanon and described the cooperation with the Syrian Arab Republic as generally satisfactory. He noted that, in its previous report, the Commission had reported that the responses to requests from 10 Member States were overdue, but those 10 requests had been followed up on and almost all outstanding matters had been resolved to the Commission's satisfaction.²⁰⁷

The representative of Lebanon recalled that in the two-year period since the assassination of Rafiq Hariri, political killings, assassinations, and terrorist attacks in Lebanon had continued, which had only strengthened the resolve of the people of Lebanon to find out the truth and ensure that justice was done. She welcomed the progress of the Commission and requested that the mandate of the Commission be extended for one year.²⁰⁸

At its 5648th meeting, on 27 March 2007, the Council again included in its agenda the letter dated 15 March 2007 transmitting the seventh report of the Commission.²⁰⁹ The President (South Africa) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 20 March 2007 from the representative of Lebanon addressed to the Secretary-General, requesting an extension of the mandate of the Commission until June 2008.²¹⁰ The President also drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;²¹¹ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1748 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of the Commission until 15 June 2008, and declared its readiness to terminate the mandate earlier if the Commission reported that it had completed the implementation of its mandate;

Requested the Commission to continue to report to the Council on the progress of the investigation every four months, or at any other time as it deemed appropriate.

Decision of 30 May 2007 (5685th meeting):
resolution 1757 (2007)

At the 5685th meeting, on 30 May 2007, the President (United States) drew the attention of the Council to two letters dated 15 May and 16 May 2007, respectively, addressed to the President of the Council by the Secretary-General,²¹² and to a draft resolution submitted by Belgium, France, Italy, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States.²¹³

The former letter transmitted a letter dated 14 May 2007 from the Prime Minister of Lebanon stating that the impasse regarding the establishment of a tribunal in Lebanon had been caused by the refusal of the Speaker of Parliament to convene a session of parliament to formally ratify the statute of the Tribunal and the bilateral agreement with the United Nations even though a parliamentary majority had demonstrated support for the Tribunal. The Prime Minister said that for all practical purposes the domestic route to ratification had reached a dead end and that despite the stated support of the opposition for the establishment of a Tribunal, the opposition had declined to discuss any of their reservations on the agreed statute. He stressed that, therefore, the Government of Lebanon was requesting, as a matter of urgency, the Security Council to put the Special Tribunal into effect. He noted that a binding decision regarding the Tribunal on the part of the Council would be consistent with the importance that the United Nations had attached to that matter from the outset, and that further delays in setting up the Tribunal would be detrimental to the stability of Lebanon and peace and security in the region.²¹⁴

The latter letter transmitted a letter dated 15 May 2007 from the President of Lebanon that referred to the letter from the Prime Minister of Lebanon and expressed regret that he had resorted to falsifications and distortions of the facts in order to implicate the Security Council in action “alien to its objectives” and that the Prime Minister was endeavouring to secure “support for one Lebanese group over the other”. The President explained that, while he had been the first to ask for an international investigation, the Tribunal had not been approved in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution for approval of international treaties, including the provision that the President of the Republic had the sole authority to submit draft laws to Parliament. He added that the current Government had lost its legitimacy under the National Pact and the Constitution when a “significant sectarian bloc” had withdrawn from it. He stressed that the approval of the Tribunal directly by the Security Council would constitute “a transgression of the constitutional mechanism” and would result in “dire consequences for the stability and civil peace” of Lebanon.²¹⁵

Most members of the Council and the representative of Lebanon made statements at the meeting.²¹⁶

The representative of Qatar stated that, while his delegation supported the establishment of the Special Tribunal, the draft resolution before the Council entailed “legal encroachments”. He maintained that his delegation had been willing to consider the draft resolution but the insistence of the sponsors on submitting the draft resolution under Chapter VII of the Charter, despite the binding nature of all Council resolutions under Article 25,²¹⁷ went beyond the designated aim of endorsing the establishment of the Tribunal and could threaten stability in the country.²¹⁸

The representative of Indonesia explained his decision to abstain on the grounds that although the draft resolution had been based on a request of the Government of Lebanon, the Council needed to take into consideration that there was no unified voice among the leaders of Lebanon. He also argued that the draft resolution as it stood would bypass the constitutional procedures and national processes of Lebanon and that pursuant to Article 2 (7) of the Charter, the Council had no legal grounds to take over an issue that was essentially domestic in nature.²¹⁹ He stressed that forceful interference in the national constitutional process would not serve the greater interests of the people of Lebanon.²²⁰

The representative of South Africa expressed hope that the Lebanese parties could use the period specified in the draft resolution to voluntarily come to an agreement on the establishment of a tribunal rather than have it imposed on them by the Council. However, he said that it was not appropriate for the Council to impose this decision on Lebanon, especially under Chapter VII of the Charter, because it would bypass the procedures required by the Constitution of Lebanon, and thus disregard the need to respect the sovereignty of Lebanon. He also noted that the Council should not be seen as taking sides in the internal politics of Lebanon and that a decision to impose the Tribunal without the consent of all the parties concerned would detrimentally affect the political stability of Lebanon. He also warned of the precedent that the draft resolution would set.²²¹

The representative of China stressed that only if the Special Tribunal enjoyed universal support among all Lebanese factions could it genuinely play a role in contributing to the achievement of justice and the maintenance of peace and stability. He declared that the establishment of the Tribunal was, in essence, an internal affair of Lebanon. He was concerned with invoking Chapter VII of the Charter because it overrode the legislative organs of Lebanon by arbitrarily deciding on the date of the entry into force of the draft resolution. He also warned that the draft resolution would create a precedent of Security Council interference in the domestic and legislative independence of a sovereign State.²²²

The representative of the Russian Federation described the draft resolution as legally dubious since the treaty between the two entities — Lebanon and the United Nations — by definition could not enter into force on the basis of a decision by only one party. He stated that the reference to Chapter VII of the Charter was unwarranted and that the draft resolution represented an encroachment upon the sovereignty of Lebanon. He noted that Chapter VII had been invoked only for the International Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, which dealt with crimes of genocide and war crimes, which were international crimes. The jurisdiction of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon would not cover such crimes as it was a mixed body with the participation of the Government that operated on the basis of applicable criminal procedures in Lebanon. Stressing that the views of all the people of Lebanon needed to be heard, he maintained that it would have been justifiable to also have a reference to the letter from the President of Lebanon, in addition to the one from the Prime Minister.²²³

The President (South Africa) then put the draft resolution to the vote; it was adopted by 10 votes to none with 5 abstentions (China, Indonesia, Qatar, Russian Federation, South Africa) as resolution 1757 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of United Nations, that the provisions of the annexed document, including its attachment, on the establishment of a Special Tribunal for Lebanon should enter into force on 10 June 2007, unless the Government of Lebanon had provided notification under article 19 (1) of the annexed document before that date;

The location of the seat of the Tribunal should be determined in consultation with the Government of Lebanon and be subject to the conclusion of a headquarters agreement between the United Nations and the State that hosted the Tribunal;

Requested the Secretary-General, in coordination, when appropriate, with the Government of Lebanon, to take the steps and measures necessary to establish the Special Tribunal in a timely manner and to report to the Council within 90 days and thereafter periodically on the implementation of the resolution.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of France welcomed the adoption of the resolution, which he noted was in response to a request of the Government of Lebanon and would enter into force on 10 June 2007, unless an internal solution to the impasse was found. He also explained that the resolution was an important decision for three reasons: for justice, peace, and the credibility of the Security Council. He maintained that the Council could take pride in not having resigned itself to the ongoing impasse.²²⁴

The representative of the United Kingdom described the resolution as a considered response by the Council, properly taken, to a request of the Government of Lebanon for action to overcome a continuing impasse in the internal procedures of Lebanon. He said that the resolution was adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter in order to make it binding and the use of Chapter VII carried no other connotation.²²⁵

The representative of Peru described the resolution as the only way to overcome the legislative impasse regarding the establishment of the Tribunal in Lebanon. He expressed a hope that the parties in Lebanon would find an internal solution before the resolution came into effect, and stressed that the resolution should not constitute a precedent beyond this particular case.²²⁶

The representative of the United States said that by the adoption of the resolution the Security Council demonstrated its commitment to justice, to ending impunity and to deterring future political assassinations. It would have been preferable for the parties in Lebanon to ratify the agreement on the Tribunal and the statute themselves, but all possible means had been tried to convince the Speaker of Parliament to fulfil his constitutional responsibility to convene parliament so that final action on the Tribunal could be taken, to no avail.²²⁷

The representatives of Belgium, Italy and Slovakia expressed their support for resolution 1757 (2007).²²⁸

The representative of Lebanon, welcoming the resolution, thanked both the States that voted for the resolution and those that had abstained, as everyone had reaffirmed the commitment to the importance of the principle of justice and to preventing the undermining of the freedom and sovereignty of Lebanon. He reiterated that every opportunity had been taken to adopt the Tribunal in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of Lebanon, but Parliament had been unable to meet to discuss the establishment of the Tribunal, despite majority support. He stressed that the resolution did not reflect “the victory of one party over another”, but would help to strengthen the rule of law and bolster democracy and act as a deterrent to terrorist activities.²²⁹

Decision of 13 June 2007 (5694th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5694th meeting, on 13 June 2007, the President (Belgium) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²³⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Unequivocally condemned the terrorist attack in Beirut on 13 June 2007 which killed at least nine people including Member of Parliament Walid Eido, and injured several others;

Condemned any attempt to destabilize Lebanon, including through political assassination or other terrorist acts;

Called upon all parties in Lebanon and the region to show restraint and a sense of responsibility with a view to preventing any further deterioration of the situation in Lebanon;

Urged all States, in accordance with its resolutions 1373 (2001), 1566 (2004) and 1624 (2005), to cooperate fully in the fight against terrorism;

Requested the Secretary-General to continue to follow closely and report regularly to the Council on the situation in Lebanon.

Deliberations of 19 July 2007 (5719th meeting)

At its 5719th meeting, on 19 July 2007, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 12 July 2007 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council transmitting the eighth report of the International Independent Investigation Commission.²³¹ In its report, the Commission stated, inter alia, that it had completed a comprehensive review of all of its information, analysis and findings on all past and current investigations. In particular, the Commission had made some progress concerning the identity of the suicide bomber who detonated the improvised explosive device. The Commission also welcomed the cooperation of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic with the investigation.

The Council heard a briefing by the Commissioner and a statement by the representative of Lebanon. The Commissioner elaborated on the report and confirmed the conclusions of the Commission regarding the type and quantity of the explosives used in the attack on Rafiq Hariri, the initiating system and the container used to carry the improvised explosive device, as well as the exact circumstances of the blast. He reported that the Mitsubishi Canter van used to carry the device had been stolen in Japan before being shipped to the United Arab Emirates and transported to northern Lebanon. The Commissioner also noted that the investigation had narrowed down the possible motives for the assassination by concentrating on political activities such as the adoption of resolution 1559 (2004), the events surrounding the extension of the term of office of President Emile Lahoud and the perceived outcomes of the 2005 parliamentary election. He also reported that the Commission was cooperating with the authorities of Lebanon regarding the assassination on 13 June 2007 of Member of Parliament Walid Eido and seven other people in central Beirut. He welcomed the cooperation of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic with the investigation, in addition to several other States which provided support during the reporting period. He stated that a number of areas of the investigation had been resolved to the satisfaction of the Commission, and that a list of persons who may have been involved in some aspect of the crime had been drawn up. The Commissioner concluded by saying that that information would prove to be a useful starting point in the transition from the Commission to the Special Tribunal for Lebanon.²³²

The representative of Lebanon then commended the high professionalism of the Commission and welcomed the clear progress that it made with the investigation. He also thanked the Commission for providing assistance to the authorities of Lebanon on the terrorist crimes and assassinations which followed the assassination of Mr. Hariri.²³³

Decision of 20 September 2007 (5747th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5747th meeting, on 20 September 2007, the President (France) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²³⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Strongly condemned the terrorist attack in Beirut on 19 September 2007, which killed at least seven persons, including Member of Parliament Antoine Ghanem;

Condemned all targeted assassinations of Lebanese leaders, including since October 2004, and demanded an immediate end of the use of intimidation and violence against the representatives of the Lebanese people and institutions;

Called for the holding of a free and fair presidential election;

Reiterated its full support to all ongoing efforts in Lebanon to combat terrorism, solidify democratic institutions through national dialogue, and continue to extend the authority of the Government of Lebanon throughout its territory.

Deliberations of 5 December 2007 (5790th meeting)

At its 5790th meeting, held on 5 December 2007, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 28 November 2007 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the ninth report of the International Independent Investigation Commission.²³⁵ In its report, the Commission stated, inter alia, that the pace and progress of its activities had been encouraging and had allowed it to reach a satisfactory understanding in a number of investigative areas. The ninth report confirmed many of the previous report's findings, and made a more detailed description of the suicide bomber's identity: one principal hypothesis specified a particular area from the Middle East from which the unidentified male is thought to have originated; the bomber was exposed to a specific type of lead, possibly through proximity to military ammunition, which suggested that he lived close to either a conflict area or an area where weapons were used on a regular basis. The Commission also described its assistance to the authorities of Lebanon on 18 other cases and how the cases were linked together, and reported that the perpetrators of the crimes still had advanced and extensive operational capabilities available in Beirut.

²³³ Ibid., pp. 4-5.

²³⁵ S/2007/684.

The Council heard a briefing by the Commissioner and a statement by the representative of Lebanon. The Commissioner, elaborating on the report, noted that the Commission had been active in linking a growing list of cases such as the assassination on 19 September of Member of Parliament Antoine Ghanem, who was the sixth Member of Parliament killed in Lebanon since 2005. Regarding the linkages between the Hariri case and the 18 other cases, the Commissioner noted the existence of some potential commonalities between the nature of the attacks, the modus operandi, the profiles of the victims and possible motives. He explained that the Commission had also made progress in several key areas of the Hariri case, including the facts surrounding the two men who had bought the Mitsubishi van used in the attack; the geographical origin of the suicide bomber; how he might have entered into Lebanon; the facts regarding the container of the improvised explosive device and the trigger mechanism used; and information regarding the potential perpetrators of the crime. The Commissioner welcomed the cooperation of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic and explained that the Commission was working towards ensuring a smooth transition to the Office of the Prosecutor of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon.²³⁶

The representative of Lebanon welcomed the progress of the Commission. In particular, he stressed that the most serious point was that the investigation had established that the perpetrators of the crime were still able to move rapidly in Beirut and still had wide-ranging and well-developed operational capabilities.²³⁷

Decision of 12 December 2007 (5800th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5800th meeting, on 12 December 2007, the President (Italy) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²³⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest terms the terrorist attack in Baabda, Lebanon, on 12 December 2007 which killed Brigadier General Francois el-Hajj of the Lebanese Armed Forces and killed and injured several other persons;

Expressed its deepest sympathy and condolences to the families of the victims, to the Lebanese Armed Forces, and to the Government of Lebanon; expressed its strong condemnation of this attempt to destabilize Lebanese institutions, in this particular case the Lebanese Armed Forces;

Reiterated its condemnation of all targeted assassinations of Lebanese leaders, particularly since October 2004, and demanded an immediate end to the use of intimidation and violence against the representatives of the Lebanese people and institutions;

Stressed that it was of the highest importance that the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of this heinous crime were brought to justice and expressed its determination to support the efforts and commitment of the Government of Lebanon to this end;

Recalled its support for the efforts of the Secretary-General for the establishment of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon in a timely manner, as a means to put an end to impunity in Lebanon and deter further assassinations in Lebanon;

Underlined that no attempt to destabilize Lebanon should prevent the holding, without delay, of a free and fair presidential election in conformity with Lebanese constitutional rules, without any foreign interference or influence, and with full respect for democratic institutions.

E. Report of the Secretary-General on the Middle East

Decision of 12 December 2006 (5584th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5584th meeting, on 12 December 2006, the Security Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the Middle East.²³⁹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed, inter alia, that the instability that prevailed in the Middle East had been the greatest regional challenge to international peace and security and that, in particular, the failure to achieve a just and comprehensive solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict had remained the major underlying source of frustration and instability in the region. He explained that the road map prepared by the Quartet²⁴⁰ remained the only document of recent years accepted by the Palestinian and Israeli leaders alike, as well as by the Arab States and the Security Council. The Secretary-General implored the international community to find constructive responses to the challenge posed by the democratic choices of the peoples in the region and he advocated a stronger international presence on the ground. He concluded by noting that, although the region and its concerns needed to be treated as a whole, progress on one track should not be held hostage to progress on another.

The Council heard a briefing from the Secretary-General, following which statements were made by all members of the Council, as well as by the representative of Israel and the Permanent Observer of Palestine.

The Secretary-General elaborated on his report by explaining that the situation in the Middle East was more dangerous than it had been for a very long time. He said that the mistrust between the Israelis and Palestinians had reached new heights, especially since settlement activity had continued in the West Bank as had rocket attacks from Gaza into southern Israel. He noted that the situation in Lebanon remained precarious owing to a variety of internal and external factors; that the Syrian Golan Heights remained under Israeli occupation; that Iraq continued to be mired in “unrelenting violence”; and that the nuclear activities of the Islamic Republic of Iran were generating new security concerns in the region. The Secretary-General noted that the ultimate aim of the peace efforts was to establish “two States, Israel and Palestine, within secure, recognized and negotiated boundaries based on those of 4 June 1967”. He concluded by stating that the “fundamental aspirations of both peoples [could] be reconciled” and that the road map, endorsed by the Council in resolution 1515 (2003), was still the reference point for any effort to re-energize a political effort.²⁴¹

Most speakers made statements in favour of the peace proposal contained in the road map, which envisaged two States, Israel and Palestine, living side by side in peace within secure and internationally recognized borders. Most speakers also agreed that the solution to the problem in the Middle East had to be a comprehensive one which took into account the interests and concerns of all States in the region.

Several speakers supported a proposal for the establishment of an international peace conference, similar to the Madrid Conference of 1991, to further advance the peace process in the Middle East.²⁴²

Several speakers also expressed regret that the two sides had not solved the sensitive issue of the release of captured Israeli soldiers and the detention of Palestinians in Israel.²⁴³ Several speakers welcomed the fact that a ceasefire had been established between Israel and the Palestinians in the Gaza Strip and stated that it should be extended to cover the West Bank.²⁴⁴

The Permanent Observer of Palestine enumerated the essential components for peace in the Middle East: the relevant Security Council resolutions, the Arab Peace Initiative, the road map and the principle of land for peace. He explained that the main problem had been the lack of political will on behalf of the international community to implement and enforce the relevant resolutions. He also stated that “the continuing occupation of Arab territories by Israel” was an explosive factor which had fuelled conflict and led to all types of violence, including terrorism, and he advocated the sending of an international force to the region to monitor the ceasefire between Israel and the Palestinians. He concluded by noting that the Palestinian question was at the heart of efforts to reach a just, lasting and comprehensive solution to the Arab-Israeli problem.²⁴⁵

The representative of Israel stated that the Israeli-Palestinian conflict was erroneously identified by some as the source of all instability in the region. He explained, on the contrary, that the Israeli-Palestinian conflict was actually the consequence — not the cause — of extremism and radicalism in the region. He welcomed the formula for peace prescribed by the road map, but stressed the difference between extremists and moderates in the region. In that context, he reiterated the international community’s three conditions for Hamas: to recognize Israel, renounce violence and abide by previous agreements. He also stressed that the international community needed to insist on the full implementation of resolutions 1559 (2004) and 1701 (2006), to ensure the end of Hizbullah's "State within a State". He concluded that, despite the disengagement from the Gaza Strip the previous year, which had demonstrated the commitment of Israel to the peace process, the reason for the current stalemate in peace negotiations had been "the lack of an appropriate partner on the other side to confront the seeds of extremism and embrace moderation".²⁴⁶

The representative of the Russian Federation regretted the fact that the situation in the Middle East had deteriorated and he said that this had had a very negative effect on international stability and security. He also said that the current situation in the region was "dangerously unbalanced — a trend that was unfortunately growing". He stated that the region required an integrated and multilateral approach to peace, and that unilateral steps, especially ones which included the use of force, were only aggravating the situation. He called for the formation of a new coalition Palestinian Government which supported the principles of the road map, and he asserted that the ultimate strategic goal of the peace process was the creation of "a sovereign, democratic, territorially contiguous Palestinian State, existing side by side with Israel in peace and security".²⁴⁷

The representative of the United States reaffirmed his country's commitment to the two-State solution in Palestine and he expressed disappointment with the "politicized and biased" resolutions that had been debated by the Security Council and General Assembly, which had not enabled any progress towards the two-State solution in accordance with the road map. He stressed that the role of the international community, including the Council, needed to be to help create an environment that would enable the parties to come together to resolve their differences. He outlined the numerous efforts that the United States had made to facilitate security sector reform in the Palestinian Authority and to improve access and movement between the Gaza Strip and the West Bank. He explained that the war launched by Hizbullah in July had highlighted the necessity of disarming the militias in Lebanon — which were used as a tool for external Powers to establish influence in the region — and he added that the United States supported the efforts of the Government of Lebanon to reassert its sovereignty over all its territory.²⁴⁸

The representative of Argentina said that some Israeli practices had had an adverse effect on the prospect for peace in the area. They included the expansion of settlements, the construction of a separation barrier in the West Bank, extrajudicial executions, the excessive use of force, the arbitrary arrest of Palestinian officials and legislators and the stifling of the economy of the Gaza Strip. On the other hand, he stated that the inability or unwillingness of the Palestinians to maintain peace and order in Gaza, to prevent further rocket attacks against Israel, to release the Israeli soldier Gilad Shalit, to reform its institutions, to eradicate corruption and to combat violent extremism did not help to generate confidence in Israel regarding the need to negotiate with a Palestinian counterpart.²⁴⁹

The representative of the United Kingdom supported the Quartet's call for the establishment of a Palestinian Government which adhered to the three principles of renunciation of violence, recognition of Israel and acceptance of previous agreements. He expressed grave concern at the recent events in Beit Hanun during which numerous Palestinian civilians had been killed, as well as at the firing of Qassam rockets from Gaza into southern Israel. He also advised Israel to freeze all settlement activity.²⁵⁰

The representative of France also called for the establishment of a Palestinian Government which accepted the Quartet's principles, and encouraged Israel to halt its settlement activities and refrain from any unilateral action that would undermine the prospects for creating a politically, economically and geographically viable Palestinian State.²⁵¹

The representative of China said that events in the Middle East were intertwined and affected each other and that no country could respond to them single-handedly. He welcomed the efforts of the Palestinian Authority to establish a government of national unity and the willingness of Israel to engage in peace talks. He noted that the failure to find a solution to the problems in the Middle East, "the oldest item on the Council's agenda and the Council's biggest headache", had had a negative impact on the role and authority of the Council.²⁵²

The President (Qatar) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁵³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its deep concern over the situation in the Middle East, with its serious ramifications for peace and security, and underlined the need to intensify efforts to achieve a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the region;

Stressed that there could be no military solution to the problems of the region and that negotiation was the only viable way to bring peace and prosperity to peoples throughout the Middle East;

Expressed grave concern over the deteriorating humanitarian situation and called for the provision of emergency assistance to the Palestinian people through the Temporary International Mechanism, international organizations and other official channels;

Reiterated its call for the Palestinian Authority Government to accept the three Quartet principles; reaffirmed the vital role of the Quartet and looked forward to its continued active engagement;

Reiterated the importance of, and the need to achieve a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the Middle East, based on all its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 242 (1967), 338 (1973) and 1515 (2003), the Madrid terms of reference and the principle of land for peace.

34. The situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question Deliberations of 16 January, 18 February and 18 March 2004 (4895th, 4912th and 4927th meetings)

From January to March 2004, the Council heard monthly briefings from the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process and the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs on the situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question.¹ No other statements were made at the meetings.

In the briefings, it was reported that there had been little progress in the peace process as Israel had not fulfilled its commitment to remove all settlement outposts. In addition, Israel continued to build a wall around the West Bank and undertake extrajudicial killing of Palestinians, while the Palestinian Authority had failed to reinforce security. It was noted that violence continued, causing great harm to the Palestinian economy and leading to the deterioration of the humanitarian situation. Moreover, donor fatigue combined with Israeli obstruction to the delivery of humanitarian assistance had driven the Palestinian Authority to near bankruptcy.

¹ For more information on the discussion at the 4895th meeting, see chap. VI, part IV, sect. B, case 18, with regard to the relationship between the Security Council and the International Court of Justice.

The speakers noted however, that the possibility of peace remained opened. In particular, they welcomed the decision by the Prime Minister of Israel, Ariel Sharon, to disengage from Gaza as a confidence-building act and as a window of opportunity for the resumption of the peace process, although they emphasized that the withdrawal should occur within the context of the implementation of the performance-based road map to peace in the Middle East,² in cooperation with the Palestinian Authority and with assistance from the international community. They also called on the international community to remain involved in the peace process and urged the Quartet³ to re-engage with the parties and to revitalize itself.

Decision of 25 March 2004 (4934th meeting): rejection of a draft resolution

By a letter dated 23 March 2004 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁴ the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in his capacity as Chairman of the Group of Arab States, requested an urgent meeting of the Council to consider the extrajudicial killing of Hamas leader Sheikh Ahmed Yassin in Gaza city and the escalation of Israeli military attacks against Palestinians, and to take measures in this regard. In response to that request, the Council held its 4929th meeting on 23 March 2004 and included the letter in its agenda.¹

All Council members took the floor in addition to the representatives of Bahrain, Cuba, Egypt, Indonesia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union), Israel, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Morocco, Norway, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen, the Permanent Observer of Palestine, the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States, and the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People.⁵

The President (France) first drew the attention of the Council to a letter from the Permanent Observer of Palestine dated 22 March 2004 condemning the killing of Sheikh Yassin.⁶

The representative of Palestine expressed appreciation for the wide international condemnation of the crime, but deplored the fact that the Council had failed to take an urgent position in a presidential statement and hoped that it could adopt a draft resolution submitted by the Arab Group. He claimed that Israel's "counter-terrorism policies" were in fact breeding terrorism and were designed to shy away from implementing its road map obligations, such as putting an end to the occupation and accepting an independent Palestinian State. He criticized Israel's announced plans to disengage from Gaza as a unilateral action and called for the destruction of the illegal Israeli expansionist wall in the occupied Palestinian territory.⁷

The representative of Israel expressed regret at the fact that the Council never condemned or even convened to consider terrorist attacks conducted by Palestinian militants even though they killed hundreds of innocent Israeli civilians. He claimed that Sheikh Yassin was a murderer who had orchestrated many bombings and had called for the intensification of the armed struggle against Israelis and Jews everywhere. He stated that the Israeli operation constituted an important stride forward in Israel's fight against terrorism.⁸

Almost all speakers condemned the extrajudicial assassination of Sheikh Yassin, and expressed their concern that this could further deteriorate the situation. In particular, the representative of Spain held that "events such as those of yesterday de-legitimize the fight against terrorism in terms of the law"⁹ and the representative of France insisted that it could prove counter-productive as the political level.¹⁰ Most speakers also condemned terrorist acts and all other acts of violence and called for the implementation of the road map.

While recognizing that the killing of Sheikh Yassin had set back efforts to resume progress towards peace, the representative of the United States contended that Sheikh Yassin was the leader of a terrorist organization that proudly took credit for attacks against civilians and that he was opposed to the existence of Israel. The Council should therefore not support initiatives that ignored this reality.¹¹

Most speakers also deplored Israel's policy of occupation and other illegal practices. The representative of Tunisia for his part called for the deployment of an interposition force in the Palestinian territories to protect Palestinians.¹²

At its 4934th meeting, on 25 March 2004, the Council met to consider a draft resolution submitted by Algeria and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, by which the Council, inter alia, would condemn the killing of Sheikh Yassin; call for a complete cessation of extrajudicial executions; condemn acts of terrorism, provocation, incitement and destruction and call on all sides to cease those; call for the cessation of all illegal measures and for the respect for international humanitarian law; and call on both parties to fulfil their road map obligations.¹³ The draft resolution was put to a vote and was not adopted owing to pass due to the negative vote of the United States. Germany, Romania and the United Kingdom abstained.

The representatives of Algeria, Brazil, Chile, France, Germany, Israel, Romania, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States and the Permanent Observer of Palestine made statements.

The representative of the United States said that his country could not support the draft because it was one-sided and unbalanced as it failed to address terrorist atrocities committed by Hamas, and that it would not further the goals of peace and security in the region.¹⁴ The representative of Germany contended that the draft resolution did not address terrorism in an appropriate manner and was not in line with the declaration of the European Union. Similar concerns were expressed by the representatives of Romania and the United Kingdom,¹⁵ but the representative of Spain held that, on the contrary, the draft was in line with the position taken by the European Union.¹⁶

The representatives of Algeria, the Russian Federation and Chile, on the other hand, regretted that the Council was unable to respond to the development of events in the Palestinian territories resulting from the killing of Sheikh Ahmed Yassin.¹⁷ The representative of Palestine also regretted the Council's failure to assume its responsibilities in the maintenance of international peace and security, and emphasized that the draft contained a very clear condemnation of all terrorist attacks. He called on the United States to adopt more neutral, objective and fair positions to enable it to assume its natural role as the sponsor of the peace process.¹⁸

The representative of Israel, for his part, said that if the international community was serious about advancing the peace process for both Israelis and Palestinians, it needed to stop pretending that the defensive response to terrorism was worse than terrorism itself.¹⁹

Deliberations of 19 April 2004 (4945th meeting)

At its 4945th meeting, on 19 April 2004, the Council met in response to a request from the representative of Yemen, contained in a letter dated 19 April 2004 addressed to the President of the Council, to consider Israel's grave violations of international humanitarian law, in particular the extrajudicial execution in Gaza of Abdel Al-Rantisi, a Hamas political leader.²⁰

All Council members made statements, in addition to the representatives of Bahrain, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union), the Islamic Republic of Iran, Israel, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mauritania, Morocco, Norway, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen, the Permanent Observer of Palestine, the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States, and the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People.

The President (Germany) first drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 19 April 2004 from the Permanent Observer of Palestine noting that the recent failure of the Council to condemn the killing of Sheikh Yassin had emboldened Israel to continue carrying out illegal actions.²¹

The representative of Palestine deplored the fact that the Council had so far failed to protect the Palestinian civilian population. He strongly disapproved of Israel's attempt to impose a unilateral disengagement from Gaza as it fell short of any real withdrawal since Israel would keep controlling international borders, airspace and water. He called on the Council to adopt a new resolution to ensure compliance with its own resolutions and adherence to international law.²²

The representative of Israel affirmed that in the absence of implementation by the Palestinian Authority of its obligation to dismantle terrorist infrastructures, his Government had decided to fight terrorism. He specified that Al-Rantisi was a terrorist leader and that it had been impossible to arrest him because of the lack of cooperation from the Palestinian Authority. Finally, he lauded his country's plan to evacuate settlements and military installations in the Gaza Strip and parts of the West Bank as an opportunity to restart the road map towards a two-State solution.²³

Speakers unanimously condemned the assassination of Abdel Al-Rantisi as contrary to international law and damaging the prospects for peace. They also reaffirmed the need for the parties to re-engage in negotiations on the basis of the road map.

While many Council members welcomed the Israeli initiative to disengage from Gaza as long as it had the support of the international community and that it happened in the context of the implementation of the road map,²⁴ a few speakers expressed wariness. In particular, the representative of the Philippines asserted that the withdrawal plan was not a product of negotiation between the parties on the ground. The representative of Chile contended that the ultimate meaning of the withdrawal was not sufficiently clear, particularly its connection with the road map, while the representative of Lebanon asserted that Israel's withdrawal from Gaza would literally kill peace efforts.²⁵

Almost all non-members focused on Israeli violations of international law and reaffirmed their strong opposition to Israel's illegal occupation. They called on the Council to reassert its authority and shoulder its responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations by adopting a resolution by which it would condemn the extrajudicial killings by Israel. The representative of Yemen suggested a referral to the International Criminal Court, while the representative of the United Arab Emirates called on the Council to oblige Israel to dismantle settlements and fully withdraw from all Palestinian territories occupied since 1967.²⁶

Decision of 19 May 2004 (4972nd meeting):
resolution 1544 (2004)

At its 4951st meeting, on 23 April 2004, the Council met to hear a briefing by the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process and Personal Representative of the Secretary-General. No other speakers took the floor.

The Special Coordinator focused his briefing on the peace efforts. He first welcomed Israel's announcement of withdrawal from Gaza as a positive step that could lead to the revival of the peace process, but insisted that it needed to be full and complete, and that robust and reliable security and administrative arrangements would be necessary, perhaps in the form of a temporary and internationally supervised security arrangement, to respond to Israel's potential security concerns after the withdrawal. In addition, he pointed out that the Gaza withdrawal needed to be accompanied by the implementation of other Palestinian and Israeli obligations under the road map, such as fighting terrorism and freezing Israeli settlement activities, which both parties had so far failed to meet. Finally, while recognizing that the Council had taken ownership of the Middle East peace process, he encouraged it to become more vigorously involved.²⁷

At its 4972nd meeting, on 19 May 2004, the Council met in response to a request contained in a letter dated 17 May 2004 addressed to the President of the Council by the representative of Yemen in his capacity as Chairman of the Group of Arab States and on behalf of the members of the League of Arab States, to consider Israeli breaches of international law, in particular the widespread demolition of Palestinian homes in the Rafah area.²⁸ The Council included the letter in its agenda.

At the meeting, the representatives of Algeria, China, France, Israel, Pakistan, Romania, the Russian Federation, Spain and the United States, and the Permanent Observer of Palestine made statements.²⁹

The President (Pakistan) drew attention to a letter dated 17 May 2004 from the Permanent Observer of Palestine describing Israeli raids in the Rafah refugee camp and the destruction of dozens of homes, which constituted an illegal collective punishment.³⁰ He then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Algeria and Yemen.³¹ It was immediately put to the vote and was adopted by 14 votes, with 1 abstention (United States) as resolution 1544 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Called upon Israel to respect its obligations under international humanitarian law, and insisted, in particular, on its obligation not to undertake the demolition of homes contrary to that law;

Expressed grave concern regarding the humanitarian situation of Palestinians made homeless in the Rafah area, and called for the provision of emergency assistance to them;

Called for the cessation of violence and for respect of and adherence to legal obligations, including those under international humanitarian law;

Called upon both parties to immediately implement their obligations under the road map; and decided to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representatives of Algeria and Pakistan welcomed the fact that the Council had finally succeeded in sending a strong signal to Israel that it could not continue with impunity to flout the Council's authority and the norms of international law.³² The representatives of France and Spain explained that it was essential to react to the deterioration of the situation in Gaza and to call for the parties to exercise restraint. They cited the European Union's condemnation of Israel's demolition of Palestinian houses in Rafah as disproportionate and contrary to international law, in spite of Israel's right to self-defence.³³ The representative of Romania expressed satisfaction that the resolution reminded the parties of their obligation to prevent the escalation of violence.³⁴ The representative of Spain, echoed by the representative of China, deplored Israel's actions as jeopardizing the entire peace process.³⁵ At the same time, some speakers noted that efforts by the Palestinian Authority to deal with terrorist groups had so far been insufficient.³⁶

The representative of the United States justified his country's abstention on the grounds that the resolution failed to refer to the fact that the Palestinian Authority had not taken serious action to address the threat of weapons smuggling or put an end to terrorist acts. However, he also admitted that Israel's operations in Gaza had not contributed to enhancing Israel's security.³⁷

Finally, some speakers mentioned that their authorities were conducting diplomatic efforts to calm the situation and underlined the importance of renewed cooperation between the parties on security issues, and urged for an immediate ceasefire.³⁸

The representative of Palestine welcomed resolution 1544 (2004) and expressed the hope that the Council would follow up on its implementation. Characterizing Israel's actions as State terrorism, war crimes, collective punishment and systematic human rights violations, he argued that the international community had to act firmly and collectively to uphold international law.³⁹

The representative of Israel challenged the information concerning events in Rafah reported by the Palestinians and expressed disappointment that some members of the international community had been misled. He characterized resolution 1544 (2004) as one-sided and argued that the failure by the Council to also condemn actions by the Palestinians only emboldened terrorism.⁴⁰

From May to September 2004, the Council received monthly briefings by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs and the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process on the situation in the Middle East.⁴¹ No other statements were made during the briefings.

At the meetings, the speakers deplored the failure of both sides to implement their core commitments under the road map. In particular, they noted, the deterioration of the security situation with continuing Israeli strikes including incidents against United Nations personnel and the extrajudicial killings of Palestinians, and the resumption of Palestinian suicide bombings and launching of Qassam rockets into Israeli civilian areas; the continuing Israeli practice of Palestinian house demolition, imposition of curfews, road blocks and the closure of the Rafah crossing between the Gaza Strip and Egypt; the continuing expansion of Israeli settlements in Gaza and the West Bank; the increasing pace of construction of the Israeli barrier sealing off areas in and around Jerusalem, despite the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on 9 July 2004 determining that the barrier was in contradiction with international law; the stalling of peace negotiations; and the failure of the Palestinian Authority to improve the rule of law and act against terrorism, although some progress was made in reforming public administration and in planning local elections. In addition, the economic situation in the Palestinian territories continued to deteriorate, 47 per cent of the Palestinian population living in poverty.

It was emphasized that these developments had a negative impact on peace, and that full implementation of the road map was crucial as only a political settlement would stop the bloodshed.

Israel's plan to unilaterally withdraw from Gaza was also addressed by the speakers. They reported that the Middle East Quartet had supported the initiative as a unique opportunity to revive the peace process as long as it respected four fundamental requirements which were set out in a statement by the Quartet on 4 May 2004, namely: it must be full and complete; it must lead to an end of the occupation of the Gaza Strip and be accompanied by similar steps in the West Bank; it must take place within the framework of the road map and the two-State vision; and it must be fully coordinated with the Palestinian Authority and the Quartet. However, the speakers noted that if Israel pulled out of Gaza and then decided to seal off all crossings while the Palestinian Authority failed to maintain law and order, it could lead to a humanitarian disaster in Gaza. The involvement of the international community would therefore be crucial to an effective handover, and Council guidance and supervision could help the parties carry out their defined tasks.⁴²

Decision of 5 October 2004 (5051st meeting):
rejection of a draft resolution

At its 5049th meeting, on 4 October 2004, in response to a request contained in a letter dated 4 October 2004 from the representative of Tunisia, in his capacity as Chairman of the Group of Arab States and on behalf of the members of the League of Arab States, the Council met to consider "the Israeli aggression in northern Gaza".⁴³

At the outset of the meeting, the President (United Kingdom) first drew the attention of the Council to three letters from the Permanent Observer of Palestine denouncing Israeli attacks against civilians in Gaza as war crimes and calling for Israel to be held accountable.⁴⁴ The President of the Council also drew attention to a letter from the representative of Israel referring to another Palestinian suicide bombing in Jerusalem and calling on the international community to request the Palestinian Authority to dismantle terrorist organizations.⁴⁵

All Council members made statements, in addition to the representatives of Cuba, Egypt, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Israel, Japan, Jordan, Malaysia, the Netherlands (on behalf of the European Union), South Africa, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and Turkey, the Permanent Observer of Palestine, the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States and the Vice-Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People.

The representative of Palestine detailed recent Israeli aggressions that caused widespread destruction, as well as extrajudicial killings, the targeting of civilians and the continuation of the illegal construction of the separation wall. Noting that Israel's justification was response to the launching of rockets from Gaza, he said that the Palestinian Authority had repeatedly demanded that Palestinian groups stop this practice. He expressed his hope that the Council would become more engaged in the political process and called on Israel to halt military operations and withdraw from the northern Gaza Strip. Lastly, he urged the Council to vote on a draft resolution recently submitted.⁴⁶

The representative of Israel for his part denounced the fact that terrorist groups in Palestine were operating with complete freedom and immunity in violation of the road map and that, as a result, the Israeli forces had to take action in self-defence.⁴⁷

The majority of the speakers rejected the violence from both sides and called on the parties to exercise restraint. The representative of Malaysia specifically requested the international community to assist the Palestinian Authority in strengthening its security apparatus.⁴⁸ Other speakers condemned or expressed alarm at Israel's actions,⁴⁹ some characterized those acts as war crimes,⁵⁰ and called on the Council to prevail upon Israel to renounce its policy of occupation, settlement-building, killing and destruction and to compel it to return to the negotiating table.⁵¹ Some speakers also supported a draft resolution introduced by the Arab Group which called upon Israel to, inter alia, put an end to its military operations; withdraw from northern Gaza; respect international humanitarian law; stop obstructing humanitarian assistance to civilians; and respect the inviolability of United Nations facilities.⁵² The representatives of China, the Islamic Republic of Iran and the League of Arab States called on the Council to fulfil its responsibilities to protect civilians.⁵³ The representative of the United States, however, stressed that the draft resolution was not the road map to peace but rather a "road to nowhere".⁵⁴

Most speakers also reaffirmed their support for the road map and stressed the need for the parties to renew their commitments to its implementation. The representative of Malaysia reiterated his country's position that the Council should approve the deployment of an international peacekeeping force or an international monitoring mechanism to oversee the implementation.⁵⁵

Finally, a number of speakers expressed their views regarding Israel's plan to withdraw from Gaza. The representative of Chile emphasized that it had to take place within the framework of Council resolutions and the road map.⁵⁶ This was echoed by the representative of Jordan, who also stressed that the current plan to convert the Gaza Strip into a besieged province was contrary to the goal of ending the occupation.⁵⁷ The representative of Egypt contended that the current context was not conducive to a successful or secure withdrawal from Gaza.⁵⁸ The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic opined that the withdrawal plan constituted a violation of international law as it provided a pretext for Israel to kill more Palestinians.⁵⁹ The representative of Angola expressed the view that the current situation was inconsistent with the proclaimed Israeli intentions to withdraw from Gaza as well as with the proclaimed Palestinian intention to cooperate with Israel for such a withdrawal. He added that it was also inconsistent with international encouragements to make the Israeli withdrawal from Gaza a first step towards the end of the occupation of the Palestinian territories.⁶⁰ The representative of France concurred that the recent violence had imperilled the hope of peace brought by the prospects of a withdrawal from Gaza.⁶¹

The Council held its 5051st meeting on 5 October 2004 to consider a draft resolution submitted by Algeria, Pakistan and Tunisia, by which the Council, inter alia, would condemn the broad military incursion and attacks by the Israeli occupying forces in the northern Gaza strip; demand the immediate cessation of all military operations and the withdrawal of Israeli occupation forces in this area; reiterate its call for the cessation of violence and for adherence to legal obligations; call on Israel to ensure access and safety of United Nations personnel and all humanitarian workers to provide assistance to the civilian population; and call on both parties to implement their obligations under the road map while closely cooperating with the Quartet.⁶² The letter dated 4 October 2004 from the representative of Tunisia to the Council⁶³ was included in the agenda.

Statements were made by the representatives of Algeria, Brazil, Chile, China, France, Germany, Israel, Pakistan, the Philippines, Romania, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States and the Permanent Observer of Palestine.⁶⁴

The draft resolution was put to a vote and received 11 votes in favour and 1 against (United States), with 3 abstentions (Germany, Romania, United Kingdom), and was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member.

The representative of the United States explained that because the draft resolution was lopsided and unbalanced as it had omitted that the terrorists hide among Palestinian civilians, provoking their deaths, his country had decided to vote against it. He then emphasized that both sides needed to renounce violence, recommit themselves to the road map, and move quickly to establish a Palestinian State.⁶⁵

On the other hand, the representative of Algeria feared that the Council's failure to take on its responsibilities could reinforce the sentiment of impunity among Israeli leaders.⁶⁶ The representative of Pakistan hoped that those who did not support the draft resolution would use their bilateral influence to persuade Israel to cease its military operations in Gaza.⁶⁷ The representative of France also regretted that the Council had not reacted rapidly.⁶⁸ This was echoed by the representatives of Spain and China.⁶⁹ While recognizing that the draft should have been more balanced, the representative of the Russian Federation explained that his country voted in favour because the objective was to stop the violence.⁷⁰ The representative of Brazil supported the call for a ceasefire made by the Secretary-General on 3 October 2004 and hoped that peace talks would resume.⁷¹

A few speakers who had abstained in the voting stated that they could not support the text because it did not fairly describe the facts and responsibilities on both sides.⁷²

In closing, the representative of Palestine emphasized that Palestinian terrorist groups were acting against the will of the Palestinian Authority while Israel's war crimes were condoned by the Israeli Government. He also pointed out that the American veto had always provided a cover for the occupying Power.⁷³ The representative of Israel responded that the draft resolution was definitely unbalanced and would have contributed to embolden terrorists who acted with total impunity within the occupied territories.⁷⁴

Deliberations of 22 October, 15 November and 16 December 2004 (5060th, 5077th and 5102nd meetings)

From October to December 2004, the Council heard monthly briefings by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs and the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process. No other statements were made.

In October and November, the Council was informed about continued violence and the absence of implementation by both sides of their commitments under the road map. In particular, it was noted that Israel continued to resort to force, extrajudicial killings, frequent military operations and incursions, house demolitions, closures, restrictions on movement, the expansion of settlements, and the construction of the barrier, and temporarily reoccupied areas under Palestinian self-rule. The President of the Palestinian Authority, Yasser Arafat, remained confined to his compound, and this had convinced Palestinians that Israel did not really want peace. In addition, the United Nations agencies were severely affected in their operations by Israeli restrictions on movement and the Palestinian economy remained in tatters. However, Palestinians continued to resort to indiscriminate violence, as the Palestinian Authority failed to stop them. Internal Palestinian unrest also led to a number of incidents indicating that militants were increasingly bold in challenging the Palestinian Authority. These were factors that also led Israelis to believe that the Palestinians were not willing to share peaceful coexistence.

Following the death of President Yasser Arafat on 11 November 2004, the Palestinian Authority made great efforts to ensure that Palestinian elections scheduled for 9 January 2005 would be conducted in a free and fair manner, and the Palestine Liberation Organization pledged to end the “armed struggle”. Positive developments were noted such as the resumption of security cooperation between the two sides and the approval by the Israeli parliament in November of the Israeli Government’s initiative to withdraw from Gaza and parts of the West Bank. Overall, the emergence of optimism on both sides led to a sharp decline in violence in December.

During the briefings, the fact that the peace process had been in reverse since 2000 was deplored, although public opinion polls showing lasting support for the resumption of the peace process and Israeli support for the establishment of a Palestinian State proved that the underlying Oslo principles remained valid, namely, the principle of land for peace based on Council resolutions 242 (1967) and 338 (1973); the end of occupation; rejection of violence and terrorism; the need for security for both parties; a fair and agreed-upon solution to the plight of refugees; and Israel’s legitimate right to self-defence and to exist in security. The need for the international community to introduce the principle of end goals was stressed, which the parties would have to define more clearly and negotiate among themselves, as the lack of an end goal had been the main criticism of the Oslo process. The international community needed to outline the end of the road for the parties while providing guarantees that agreements reached would be firm and final. It was also reaffirmed that only a two-State solution could offer a viable way out of the conflict, and the hope was expressed that the Israeli planned withdrawal, which could be seen as a programmatic continuation of the Oslo process, would lead to the end of occupation.⁷⁵

Decision of 13 January 2005 (5111th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5111th meeting, on 13 January 2005, the Council received its monthly briefing on the situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question, by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs.

The Under-Secretary-General stated that there seemed to be an opportunity to begin the long-delayed implementation of the road map and move towards the settlement of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. He welcomed the recent free, fair and peaceful elections in Palestine which had led to the election of Mahmoud Abbas as the new representative of the Palestinian people, and announced that elections to the Palestinian Legislative Council would be held on 17 July 2005. He also noted that a new coalition government was now in place in Israel, and reiterated that the withdrawal from Gaza should be implemented as part of the road map and in coordination with the new Palestinian leadership. The Under-Secretary-General also informed the Council of a marked increase in Palestinian attacks against Israelis despite the public call of President Abbas to end rocket attacks and his long-standing position of advocating an end to the armed uprising. He stated that Israeli forces also continued to undertake military incursions into Gaza. The Under-Secretary-General called on both parties to exercise restraint and to take steps towards fulfilling their road map obligations.⁷⁶

The President (Argentina) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁷⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the Palestinian presidential election held on 9 January 2005;

Commended the credible and fair character of the vote and congratulated the Palestinian people who had demonstrated their commitment to democracy by participating in the election under challenging conditions;

Congratulated the newly elected President of the Palestinian Authority on his election;

Looked forward to the convening of the Palestinian legislative elections in the near future, and affirmed its support for the Palestinian people in their democratic process;

Supported the Palestinian Authority and its efforts to strengthen institutions, and underlined the importance of international assistance to the Palestinian people;

Stressed the need for the full implementation of the Quartet road map, as endorsed by the Council in its resolution 1515 (2003), for the creation of an independent, viable, democratic and sovereign State of Palestine living side by side with Israel in peace and security;

Called upon Israelis and Palestinians to relaunch a genuine political process.

Decision of 16 February 2005 (5126th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5126th meeting, on 16 February 2005, the President (Argentina) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁷⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the summit held in Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, on 8 February 2005, and the resumption of direct talks between the Prime Minister of Israel and the President of the Palestinian Authority;

Underlined the understandings reached by the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority, in particular that all Palestinians would stop all acts of violence against all Israelis everywhere and that Israel would cease all its military activities against all Palestinians everywhere;

Recognized those understandings as primary steps towards restoring confidence between the two parties and as a significant opportunity to enhance a new spirit of cooperation and to promote an atmosphere conducive to the establishment of peace and coexistence in the region;

Welcomed the initiative of the United Kingdom in convening an international meeting in London on 1 March 2005 to support Palestinian efforts to prepare the ground for a viable Palestinian State, and welcomed the meeting of the Quartet at the ministerial level which was to convene on the margins of the London meeting;

Looked forward to further engagement by the Quartet with the two parties to ensure continued progress in the peace process and the full implementation of the road map and relevant Council resolutions towards the creation of an independent, viable, democratic and sovereign State of Palestine living side by side with Israel in peace and security.

Decision of 9 March 2005 (5136th meeting): statement by the President

The Council held its 5128th meeting on 22 February 2005 to hear its monthly briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs.

The Under-Secretary-General welcomed positive developments in the region following the Sharm el-Sheikh summit meeting on 8 January 2005 of the President of the Palestinian Authority, Mahmoud Abbas, and the Prime Minister of Israel, Ariel Sharon, where the two leaders reaffirmed their commitment to the road map and agreed that Palestinians would stop all acts of violence against Israelis and that Israel would cease its military activity against Palestinians. Positive follow-up actions included, from the Israeli side, the release of 500 Palestinian prisoners, the announcement of withdrawal from five West Bank cities and surrounding areas, the decision to halt punitive house demolitions, the reopening of three crossing points into Gaza and the issuance of permits for Palestinians to work in Israel. On the Palestinian side, the Under-Secretary-General welcomed the determination of President Abbas to prevent future attacks and the agreement by Hamas and Islamic Jihad to a temporary ceasefire. He however noted that violence had continued and that the imposition of closures still negatively affected humanitarian operations. In addition, Israel continued to build the barrier in the West Bank. Finally, he announced that the meeting in London, on 1 March 2005, composed of the Quartet, the Group of Eight, key donors and the Palestinian Authority would be an opportunity for the international community to provide funds for short-term assistance.⁷⁹

At the 5136th meeting, on 9 March 2005, the President (Brazil) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁸⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the conclusions of the London meeting on supporting the Palestinian Authority held on 1 March 2005;

Hoped that the London meeting would be part of the longer-term process on international support to the Palestinian people and a contribution to helping both sides to implement the road map;

Stressed the crucial importance of security, good governance and development of the Palestinian economy, and stressed the key role of the international community in assisting the Palestinian Authority in taking forward its comprehensive plan presented at the London meeting;

Supported the joint statement of the Quartet issued following the meeting of the Quartet held on the margins of the London meeting, and looked forward to the Quartet's active engagement over the forthcoming period;

Reiterated its call for full respect by the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority of understandings reached at the Sharm el-Sheikh summit on 8 February 2005, in particular that all Palestinians would stop all acts of violence against all Israelis everywhere and that Israel would cease all its military activities against all Palestinians everywhere;

Reiterated its call upon both Israel and the Palestinian Authority to ensure continued progress in the peace process towards full implementation of the road map in direct contact with the Quartet; stressed the need for concerted and sustained action by the Palestinian Authority to fulfil its security-related commitments and welcomed President Abbas's commitment to exert every effort towards that end; also stressed the need for Israel to implement its road map commitments;

Reiterated its demand for immediate cessation of all acts of violence, including all acts of terror, provocation, incitement and destruction; and reiterated its commitment to the vision of two States, Israel and Palestine, living side by side in peace and security.

Deliberations of 24 March, 21 April, 18 May and 17 June 2005 (5149th, 5166th, 5181st and 5206th meetings)

From 24 March to 17 June 2005, the Council heard monthly briefings on the situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question, by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs. No other statements were made.

The briefings focused mainly on implementation by the parties of the road map and of their Sharm el-Sheikh commitments, in particular Israel's preparation for its disengagement from Gaza and the Palestinian Authority's reforms of the security services. They also provided reports on Quartet meetings, which concentrated in particular on how best to help the parties maintain the momentum.

Over the reporting period, the parties held meetings to coordinate the economic and civilian aspects of the implementation of Israel's initiative to withdraw from Gaza and parts of the West Bank. They were strongly supported by the international community, the Secretary-General and the Quartet in particular, as security for Israel and economic development for the Palestinians went hand in hand. However, it was noted that progress had been slow on implementation of the Sharm el-Sheikh understandings.

The Palestinian Authority continued efforts to institute comprehensive security reform, but was confronted with strong internal protests. A positive development in this context was Israel's approval of the deployment of armed Palestinian police in all West Bank cities in order to strengthen the Palestinian Authority ahead of the transfer of further areas to Palestinian security control.

However, towards the end of the reporting period, it became evident that increased violence and a low level of mutual trust continued to work against progress. Militants on both sides remained strong and exerted negative political influence. In particular, the Under-Secretary-General expressed concern that some Palestinian militias might not feel bound to their ceasefire pledge, and called on the Palestinian Authority to make more efforts to impose authority, with the help and cooperation of Israel.

Other preoccupying developments were the continuation of the construction by Israel of the defence barrier and settlement activity in contravention of Israel's road map commitments. The fact that Hamas won a substantial share of the vote in the second round of the municipal elections on 5 May 2005 was also perceived by the Under-Secretary-General as increasing popular frustration with the Palestinian Authority.⁸¹

By a letter dated 19 July 2005 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Kuwait, in his capacity as Chairman of the Group of Arab States and on behalf of the members of the League of Arab States, requested an immediate meeting of the Council to consider Israel's accelerated settlement activities in the occupied Palestinian territories.⁸²

At its 5230th meeting, held on 21 July 2005 in response to that request,⁸³ the Council included the above-mentioned letter in its agenda. All Council members made statements, as did the representatives of Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Israel, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Morocco, Norway, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and Yemen, the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process, the Permanent Observer of Palestine, the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, and the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Observer Mission of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC).

The Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process briefed the Council on the situation. He said that the forthcoming Israeli withdrawal from Gaza and parts of the West Bank was overshadowing other issues although it was considered to be an opportunity to re-energize the road map, and was broadly supported by the international community. While preparations continued at a rapid pace, there was considerable evidence that Israeli settlement activities and the construction of the defence barrier were still ongoing. He held that the driving force behind the Israeli Government's decision to remove settlers from Gaza was Israel's own interest, but that it still constituted a gain for the Palestinian side. He also described a gradual erosion of the quasi-ceasefire that had prevailed since the Sharm el-Sheikh summit despite the commitment of President Abbas to working towards "one authority, one gun", and pressed Israel to do more to support the Palestinian Authority on that front. Particularly disturbing were recent confrontations between Hamas and the Palestinian Authority as well as the continuation of attacks against Israel.⁸⁴

The representative of Palestine deplored the fact that, while the international community was directing its efforts towards the success of Israel's withdrawal, Israel was in fact accelerating its expansionist plan, speeding up settlement activities and the building of the wall to further isolate the occupied section of Jerusalem from the West Bank, thus imposing an illegitimate fait accompli. She also deplored the fact that the international community had been reluctant to exert pressure on Israel and hoped that the Council would take immediate measures.⁸⁵

⁸⁵ Ibid., pp. 8-9.

The representative of Israel described incessant Palestinian terrorist activities and Qassam rocket attacks resulting in the murder of innocent Israeli civilians. He added that preventing terror coming from Palestinian areas was the responsibility of the Palestinian Authority. Although Israel had transferred control of Palestinian cities to armed Palestinian security forces so that they could combat terror, the Palestinian Authority had failed and as a result Israel was forced to take defensive measures. He contended that, nevertheless, Israel was taking a courageous action to reinvigorate the peace process by planning to withdraw from the Gaza Strip and from four settlements in the West Bank.⁸⁶

Deliberations focused primarily on Israel's disengagement plan and on its recent decision to extend Israeli settlements in the West Bank and to step up the construction of the defence wall in a new area around Jerusalem. Almost all speakers denounced the settlements and the construction of the wall as unlawful, recalling the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice contending that the wall was against international law and should be dismantled.⁸⁷ Speakers also affirmed that the wall and the settlements were contrary to the road map, as they jeopardized the peace process because they adversely affected the final status of negotiations. In particular, most speakers recognized that the new route for the wall would cut through two densely populated Palestinian neighbourhoods thereby cutting off Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem from the rest of the city. Several speakers explicitly emphasized that they would not recognize any non-negotiated modifications of the borders established before 1967.⁸⁸ In particular, the representative of Algeria said that settlements were aimed at isolating the Palestinians and at imposing another fait accompli to impede the establishment of an independent and viable Palestinian State.⁸⁹ The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic wondered why the Israeli Government decided to establish more settlements if its action against the settlers in Gaza was genuine.⁹⁰ Many ⁸⁷ The General Assembly, by resolution ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004, demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, comply with its legal obligations as mentioned in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice. Most speakers referred to that resolution.

speakers openly called on the Council to take immediate action to compel Israel to put an end to the construction of the wall and to the creation of new settlements.⁹¹

Almost all speakers viewed Israel's planned withdrawal — if done successfully and consistently with the road map — as an initial stage towards achieving a fair, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East, except for the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, who expressed the view that Israel's unilateral disengagement from the Gaza Strip was “merely a manoeuvre to divert the international community's attention from its plans to annex more land and complete the separation wall”.⁹² The vast majority of speakers however insisted that Israel's withdrawal from the Gaza Strip needed to be genuine and complete and that both parties needed to cooperate towards its implementation. The representative of the United States emphasized that the international community needed to focus its efforts on working towards the successful implementation of the withdrawal plan as it held the potential to reinvigorate the road map.⁹³

Speakers also unanimously expressed some concern about the ongoing violence. However, while some of them called on both sides to exercise restraint and to prevent the ceasefire from falling apart,⁹⁴ others focused their statement on Israel's responsibility for the current violence.⁹⁵ The representatives of the United States and the United Republic of Tanzania, for their part, insisted on Palestinian terrorist attacks and stressed the need for the Palestinian Authority to reign in terrorist elements.⁹⁶

Finally, the representative of France evoked the possibility of holding an international conference at an appropriate time to assist the parties in carrying out their road map obligations,⁹⁷ and the representative of Pakistan expressed his hope that the Council would actively promote dialogue between Israelis and Palestinians.⁹⁸

Decision of 23 September 2005 (5270th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5250th and 5270th meetings, on 24 August and 23 September 2005 respectively, the Council heard briefings by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs and the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process on the situation in the Middle East. No other speakers took the floor.

The briefings concerned the Israeli disengagement from Gaza and four settlements in the West Bank, which was completed by 20 September despite some incidents. The briefers welcomed the fact that coordination between the two sides contributed to a relatively smooth withdrawal. They also focused on remaining challenges to implement the road map, and noted that, although the renewed commitment to the ceasefire by Palestinian armed groups had led to a decrease in violence, Hamas leaders had stated their intention to continue resistance in the West Bank, and small arms smuggling into the Gaza Strip had been discovered. In addition, Israeli settlement activity in the West Bank and the construction of the Israeli defence and severe limitations on Palestinian movement were still ongoing. The speakers noted that without the re-establishment of free movement inside the West Bank, a viable Palestinian economy was impossible. Furthermore, the speakers indicated that, while Israeli leaders demanded an end to violence as a precondition to addressing Palestinian concerns, Palestinian leaders were finding it difficult to restrain Palestinian extremism without a visible prospect that their legitimate goals would be met in the near future. The speakers therefore called on the parties to take advantage of the momentum gathered by the disengagement and discharge in parallel their respective obligations with regard to the road map. Finally, they announced that Palestinian legislative elections would be held as planned in January 2006.⁹⁹

At the end of the 5270th meeting, the President (Japan) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Supported the statement issued in New York on 20 September 2005 by the Quartet, annexed to the statement;

Urged the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority to cooperate, along with other parties concerned, with the efforts to achieve the goals set out in the Quartet statement; and called for renewed action in parallel by the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority on their obligations in accordance with the road map, to ensure continued progress towards the creation of an independent, sovereign, democratic and viable State of Palestine living side by side with Israel in peace and security.

Decision of 30 November 2005 (5713th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5287th and 5312th meetings, on 20 October and 30 November 2005,¹⁰¹ the Council heard briefings by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs on the situation in the Middle East.

The Under-Secretary-General welcomed the Agreement on Movement and Access between the Palestinian Authority and the Israeli Government reached on 15 November 2005, after several months of negotiations. The parties agreed that, inter alia, the Rafah crossing between Egypt and Gaza would be reopened, placed under Palestinian control and supervised by a European Union border assessment mission; all crossings between Gaza and Israel would operate continuously and the European Union would monitor Customs agreements; bus and truck convoys would resume; the Government of Israel would reduce movement restrictions in the West Bank; the construction of the Gaza seaport would resume; and discussions on the Gaza airport would continue. On the same day, the Rafah crossing was opened.

On the other hand, a number of challenges remained. In particular, construction of the defence barrier continued and Israeli checkpoints and settlements still dominated the landscape in the West Bank. The Under-Secretary-General cautioned that the economic and social situation in Gaza and the West Bank was still dire and that the rule of law remained weak in the areas under Palestinian control, as heavy armed clashes in Gaza between the Palestinian police and Hamas militants had occurred. The Under-Secretary-General also stressed that the Palestinian Authority had to implement proper restructuring of its security services and take action against individuals involved in violence, while Israel had to cease from complicating efforts that would achieve a two-State solution.

At the 5313th meeting, on 30 November 2005, the President (Russian Federation) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰² by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the Agreement on Movement and Access and the Agreed Principles for the Rafah Crossing reached between the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority on 15 November 2005;

Called upon the parties to take immediate action to implement the terms of both agreements according to the timelines established therein;

Called for renewed action in parallel by the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority on their obligations in accordance with the road map, to ensure continued progress towards the creation of a viable, democratic, sovereign, and contiguous Palestine living side by side with Israel in peace and security.

Decision of 3 February 2006 (5365th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5337th and 5361st meetings, held on 20 December 2005 and 31 January 2006, respectively, the Council heard briefings by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs and the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs.

The briefers first highlighted the adoption of a revised donor structure at a London conference of donors, which would strengthen the role of the Palestinian Authority in aid management. They also expressed concern about the security situation, in particular the continuation of Palestinian terrorist bombings, Israeli extrajudicial killings and deteriorating Palestinian internal security. In addition, there had been no change on the issue of Israeli settlement activities and the construction of the Israeli defence barrier. Finally, the briefers reported that on 4 January 2006, the Prime Minister of Israel, Ariel Sharon, had suffered a stroke and that Ehud Olmert had become Acting Prime Minister.

A major development was the Palestinian Legislative Council elections held on 25 January 2006, during which Hamas won a majority of seats. The Quartet then met in London on 30 January and expressed the view that all members of a future Palestinian government must be committed to non-violence, recognition of Israel and acceptance of previous agreements and obligations including the road map, and that any donor assistance would be subject to the Palestinian government's commitment to these principles. Lastly, the briefers deplored that the road map's target date for a final settlement of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict would not be met, but that it remained the general framework for peace in the Middle East.¹⁰³

At the 5365th meeting, on 3 February 2006, the President (United States) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Congratulated the Palestinian people on an electoral process that was free, fair, and secure; and commended all the parties for the preparation and conduct of the elections, particularly the Central Elections Commission and the Palestinian Authority security forces, for their professionalism;

Expressed its expectation that a new government would remain committed to realizing the aspirations of the Palestinian people for peace and statehood; and welcomed President Abbas's affirmation that the Palestinian Authority remained committed to the road map, previous agreements and obligations between the parties, and a negotiated two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict;

Reaffirmed its continuing interest in the fiscal stability of the caretaker government, and noted that major donors had indicated that they would review future assistance to a new Palestinian Authority government against the commitment of that government to the principles of non-violence, recognition of Israel, and acceptance of previous agreements and obligations, including the road map;

Reminded both parties of their obligation under the road map and on existing agreements, including on movement and access; and called upon both parties to avoid unilateral actions which prejudice final status issues.

Deliberations of 28 February and 30 March 2006 (5381st and 5404th meetings)

At its 5381st and 5404th meetings, held on 28 February and 30 March 2006, respectively, the Council heard briefings by the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process and the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs on the most recent developments in the region. No other statements were made at those meetings.

The briefers reported that a new government in the occupied Palestinian territory had been formed, following the recent elections. This government was led by Hamas, "a terrorist organization" that was still committed to the destruction of Israel. Subsequently, Israel halted the transfer of Customs and value added tax payments to the Palestinian Authority, although the President of the Palestinian Authority Mahmoud Abbas, had asked Hamas to align its political programme to that of the Palestinian presidency. The briefers also reported on Israeli elections which saw the success of the new Kadima party.

Negative developments during the reporting period included, inter alia, a recent increase in violence, in particular rocket attacks against Israel and Israeli military escalation in Nablus, Gaza and Jericho;¹⁰⁵ the proliferation of physical obstacles to Palestinian movement within the West Bank; and the closing of the Karni crossing to Gaza, deepening the humanitarian crisis in Gaza. They finally stressed that the Palestinian government should reassess its position on the Quartet's principles and added that the interest for negotiation expressed by both the Prime Minister of Israel and the Palestinian President should be seriously explored.¹⁰⁶

At the 5404th meeting, on 30 March 2006,¹⁰⁷ all Council members made statements, as did the representatives of Austria (on behalf of the European Union), Israel, Lebanon, Malaysia (on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries), the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen (on behalf of OIC), the Permanent Observer of Palestine and the Acting Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People.

The representative of Palestine noted that Israel had intensified unilateral attempts to define its borders and called on the international community to reject those actions, particularly the E-1 plan, which would isolate East Jerusalem from the West Bank. He added that since the occupied Palestinian territory including East Jerusalem constituted one single territorial entity, it should still be subject to the Fourth Geneva Convention despite Israeli withdrawal from Gaza. He reiterated the commitment made by President Abbas to abide by all obligations and agreements signed by the Palestine Liberation Organization including to a peaceful solution to the conflict. Finally, with respect to the economic situation in the Palestinian territories, he held that the Palestinian people should not be punished for exercising their democratic right to vote, and that Israel should release the Palestinian tax payments and abide by the Agreement on Movement and Access.¹⁰⁸

The representative of Israel affirmed that the Palestinians had elected a terrorist organization. He called on the international community to continue its fight against terrorism, and explained that the recent closing of the Karni crossing had been necessary because of terrorist threats. He also emphasized that, following a statement by Hamas contemplating the release of a number of terrorists from the Jericho prison, Israel had had no choice but to intervene. Finally, he drew attention to the constant threat to Israel by an “axis of terrorism” consisting of an alliance between the Islamic Republic of Iran, the Syrian Arab Republic and Palestinian terrorist organizations.¹⁰⁹

Deliberations focused on the international community’s response to the election of Hamas in Palestine, in particular whether the international community should continue to provide financial assistance to the Palestinian Authority even though Hamas had been recognized as a terrorist organization by many countries. Many speakers stressed that the international community was expecting the new Hamas-led Government to adhere to the Quartet principles as they were criteria that would be applied to any financial assistance to the Palestinian government.¹¹⁰ Many others speakers emphasized that it would be unfair to punish the Palestinian people for their democratic choice and that international aid needed to be maintained.¹¹¹ The representative of Denmark said that modalities for the provision of international assistance needed to be explored,¹¹² and the representative of the Russian Federation proposed to focus on joint efforts to establish a mechanism that would ensure reliable monitoring of donor assistance.¹¹³ The representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom, for their part, stressed that their countries remained committed to ensuring the continuing delivery of humanitarian aid, but that the international community needed to be entirely sure that funding was not being used in support of terrorism.¹¹⁴

Virtually all speakers expressed their support for the road map and emphasized the need for the parties to resume negotiations as soon as possible. The representative of Malaysia, echoed by the Acting Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, called on the Council to prevail upon Israel and Palestine to achieve their long-term goal of a just, lasting and comprehensive final settlement.¹¹⁵

Finally, the majority of speakers called on Israel to refrain from any unilateral measures in violation of the road map, in particular extrajudicial killings, the construction of the defence wall and the expansion of settlements. Some speakers even called on the Security Council to exert pressure on Israel.¹¹⁶ Several speakers, however, also denounced Palestinian terrorism.¹¹⁷

By letters dated 10, 11 and 12 April 2006 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representatives of Bahrain (in his capacity as Chairman of the Group of Arab States and on behalf of the League of Arab States), Yemen (on behalf of OIC), and Malaysia (in his capacity as Chairman of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries), respectively, requested a Council meeting to consider the recent developments in the occupied Palestinian territory.¹¹⁸ At its 5411th meeting, held on 17 April 2006 in response to those requests,¹¹⁹ the Council included the above-mentioned letters in its agenda.

All Council members made statements, in addition to the representatives of Algeria, Austria, Bahrain, Cuba, Egypt, Indonesia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Israel, Malaysia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) and Yemen, the Permanent Observer of Palestine, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States.

The representative of Palestine regretted that the Council had been unable to adopt a presidential statement on the violence in the region the week before.¹²⁰ He then deplored the fact that Israel had continued and intensified its military campaign against the Palestinian people in violation of international law, over the past month. He detailed the latest cases of aggression including the firing of missiles by Israel into the compound of the President of the Palestinian Authority, Mahmoud Abbas. He refuted Israel's argument that those actions were simply in response to violence coming from Palestine; instead they were aimed at inflicting maximum pain on civilians. Finally, he reminded the Council that President Abbas had been condemning terrorist attacks and he called on the Council to act firmly to stop Israel.¹²¹

The representative of Israel for his part focused on the danger that Palestinian terrorism constituted for Israel and reiterated that his country would not compromise the safety of its citizens. He urged the Council to take action to prevent the next murder.¹²²

The representative of the United States strongly regretted that Hamas, although part of the Palestinian government, had applauded the recent suicide bombing in Tel Aviv and cited a statement of 30 March 2006 by the Quartet expressing concern that the Palestinian government had not yet committed itself to the Quartet principles. He added that the United Nations had to remain even-handed as unbalanced decisions undermined the credibility of the Organization and its ability to be an honest broker. He also signalled his country's intention to administer humanitarian assistance to the Palestinians through non-Palestinian Authority actors.¹²³

A large number of speakers expressed concern about the humanitarian situation in the Palestinian territories, and repeated their call on Israel to stop the freeze on Palestinian Customs and tax funds. The representative of the Russian Federation noted that the provision of humanitarian aid to the Palestinian authority should continue free from political preferences,¹²⁴ and the representative of Pakistan specifically urged the United Nations and its agencies to increase their assistance.¹²⁵ The representatives of France and Austria (on behalf of the European Union), however, said that European humanitarian aid to the Palestinians would continue, but that direct budgetary assistance to the Palestinian Authority had been temporarily suspended until alternative channels were defined. This policy would be regularly reviewed in view of the Palestinian government's attitude towards the Quartet principles.¹²⁶ The representatives of Denmark and the United Kingdom underlined the need to ensure that funding would not be directed to terrorist purposes.¹²⁷

Most speakers condemned the terrorist bombing in Tel Aviv¹²⁸ and called on both parties to exercise restraint. While the majority of Council members also appealed to the parties to refrain from actions that could prejudice the outcome of final status negotiations, the majority of non-members called on the Council to pressure Israel to immediately stop its military escalation, the extrajudicial killings, settlement activity and the construction of the separation wall, those measures being contrary to international law. Most speakers also called on the Council and the Quartet to play a supportive role in assisting the parties to resume peace negotiations.

Deliberations of 24 April, 24 May and 21 June 2006 (5419th, 5443rd and 5472nd meetings)

At its 5419th, 5443rd and 5472nd meetings, held on 24 April, 24 May and 21 June 2006, respectively,¹²⁹ the Council heard briefings by the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process and the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs on the most recent developments in the region.

The briefers reported on a number of worrying developments. First, the new Palestinian government had failed to commit itself to the Quartet principles. As a result, key donors had withdrawn their direct support to the Palestinian Authority, and the Authority, facing a deep financial crisis, was unable to pay the salaries of civil servants and security forces or to provide basic services to the population. The fact that Israel continued to withhold tax clearance revenues that it collected on behalf of the Palestinian Authority further aggravated the situation. Another result was the designation by Israel of the Palestinian government as a "terrorist entity" and its refusal to interact with it. Second, Israeli closures continued. The Agreement on Movement and Access was not respected by Israel except for the opening of the Rafah crossing into Gaza. In addition, settlement activity and the construction of the Israeli barrier had accelerated. Third, the humanitarian situation in the Palestinian territories was still preoccupying. Meeting the basic needs of the Palestinians was identified as a major challenge and international donors expressed their desire to provide assistance to the people. As a result, on 17 June 2006 a temporary international mechanism developed by the European Union to facilitate direct needs-based assistance to the Palestinian people, circumventing the Palestinian Authority, was endorsed by the Quartet. Fourth, violence was still ongoing. The briefers reported on Palestinian terrorist bombings, for which Israel held the Palestinian Authority accountable despite President Abbas's repeated condemnations. Overall, prospects for achieving a two-State solution through the implementation of the road map were at their lowest point.

rejection of a draft resolution

By letters dated 29 June 2006 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representatives of Algeria (in his capacity as Chairman of the Group of Arab States and on behalf of the League of Arab States) and Qatar requested an immediate Council meeting to consider the situation in the occupied Palestinian territory including East Jerusalem, including Israeli practices affecting Palestinian civilians.¹³⁰ At its 5481st meeting, held on 30 June 2006 in response to those requests, the Council included the above-mentioned letters in its agenda.

All Council members made statements, as did the representatives of Algeria, Austria (on behalf of the European Union), Cuba, Egypt, Indonesia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, the Libyan

Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia (on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries), Morocco, Norway, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, the Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen and Zimbabwe (on behalf of the Group of African States), the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs and the Permanent Observer of Palestine.¹³¹

The President (Denmark) first drew the attention of the Council to two letters from the representative of Israel reporting on the infiltration by Hamas of Israeli territory on 25 June 2006 that led to the killing of two Israeli soldiers and the kidnapping of Corporal Gilad Shalit, as well as the continuing firing of Qassam rockets from the Gaza Strip into Israel. Israel deplored the fact that Gaza had turned into a terror base since the Israeli disengagement, and specified that Israel would take all necessary actions to release Corporal Shalit.¹³²

She also drew attention to a letter from the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic denouncing a flight of Israeli military aircraft over the Syrian coast on 28 June 2006 as constituting a violation of international law and an unjustified provocation against the Syrian Arab Republic,¹³³ and to two letters from the Permanent Observer of Palestine informing the Council of the launching by Israel on 28 June 2006 of a major air and ground military assault on the Gaza Strip, the raiding of several cities in the occupied Palestinian territory and the kidnapping of at least 64 Palestinians, and calling for the Israeli perpetrators of those war crimes to be brought to justice.¹³⁴

The Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs reported on the incursion by the Israel Defense Forces into Gaza, the airstrikes, the arrest of Palestinian Authority officials and of suspected militants, and the indiscriminate firing of rockets from Gaza. She insisted that the Palestinian Authority needed to act to stop the rocket attacks but also stressed that Palestinian civilians should not pay the price of militants' actions. She added that international efforts to secure the release of Corporal Shalit had been undertaken by Egypt, France and Jordan and that nothing justified the holding of hostages.¹³⁵

The representative of Palestine held that the Israeli operation had been premeditated before the capture of Corporal Shalit as the scope of the attack necessitated preparation. He said that President Abbas was working hard to secure the release of the soldier. He said that it was the Council's duty to condemn Israeli aggression, call for the immediate cessation of hostilities and compliance with international law, call for the withdrawal of Israeli forces and the release of Palestinian Authority officials, and exert pressure on the parties to resume the peace process.¹³⁶

The representative of Israel deplored the fact that Gaza had become a terror base actively supported by the elected Hamas government, and that terrorist attacks continued to be launched despite Israeli restraint in reaction to Qassam rocket attacks.¹³⁷

A majority of speakers expressed concern about the current situation and asked both parties to exercise restraint. However, almost all non-members, in addition to the representative of Algeria, denounced Israeli attacks against Palestinians and the recent violation of the airspace of the Syrian Arab Republic. They called on the Council to compel Israel to cease immediately.¹³⁸ All those speakers, and a few others, stated that the Israeli aggression was disproportionate and constituted unnecessary collective punishment of the Palestinian people.¹³⁹ Some even contended that the Israeli invasion was premeditated and that the kidnapping of Corporal Shalit had only been a pretext.¹⁴⁰ The representatives of Algeria, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Egypt and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya expressed their hope that the Council would provide international protection to the Palestinian people.¹⁴¹

While many speakers called on the Palestinian Authority to make all efforts necessary to obtain the release of Corporal Shalit,¹⁴² others specifically called for the release of the Palestinian Authority officials detained by Israel.¹⁴³ The representatives of Malaysia, Indonesia and Norway appealed for both to be released.¹⁴⁴

The representative of the United States asked the Council to avoid taking any steps that would exacerbate tensions. He also said that a prerequisite for ending the conflict would be for the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran to end their role as State sponsors of terror and unequivocally condemn the actions of Hamas.¹⁴⁵

At its 5488th meeting, held on 13 July 2006 in response to the requests contained in two letters dated 29 June 2006 addressed to the President of the Council by the representatives of Algeria and Qatar, the Council included the letters in its agenda.¹⁴⁶

At the meeting, the representatives of Denmark, Israel, Peru, Qatar, Slovakia and the United States and the Permanent Observer of Palestine made statements.

The President (France) first drew attention to a draft resolution submitted by Qatar,¹⁴⁷ by which the Council, inter alia, would condemn all acts of violence, terror and destruction; call for the release of the abducted Israeli soldier and of all detained Palestinian officials and other illegally detained Palestinian civilians; call upon Israel to halt its military operations and its disproportionate use of force and to withdraw to its original position outside the Gaza Strip; call upon the Palestinian Authority to take immediate action to bring an end to violence, including the firing of rockets on Israeli territory; urge all concerned parties to abide by their obligations and refrain from violence against the civilian population; call on the international community to provide emergency assistance to the Palestinian people and on Israel to restore the continuous supply of fuel to Gaza; call on both parties to create the necessary conditions for restarting the peace process; and request the Secretary-General to report back to the Security Council on the implementation of the resolution in a timely manner.

The draft resolution was put to the vote and received 10 votes in favour (Argentina, China, Congo, France, Ghana, Greece, Japan, Qatar, Russian Federation, United Republic of Tanzania) to 1 against (United States), with 4 abstentions (Denmark, Peru, Slovakia, United Kingdom) and was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member.

Explaining his country's vote, the representative of the United States stated that there had been new developments, referring to the major escalation by Hizbullah in southern Lebanon and the subsequent announcement by the Secretary-General that he would send a team to the region. He then contended that the draft resolution was unbalanced as it did not acknowledge that Israeli military actions were in response to rocket attacks and to the abduction of the Israeli soldier. Finally, he asserted that Hamas and Hizbullah were supported by the Islamic Republic of Iran and by the Syrian Arab Republic, and called upon the Syrian Arab Republic to arrest the Hamas leader Khalid Mishal who resided in Damascus.¹⁴⁸

The representative of Peru, echoed by the representative of Denmark, regretted that the draft resolution did not take into account the fact that Hizbullah had also kidnapped two Israeli soldiers and launched rockets at Israel, provoking a response from the Israel Defense Forces in Lebanon. The representative of Denmark added that the draft had not included a more thorough recognition of complexities on the ground, and this view was shared by the representative of the United Kingdom, who held that the text was not balanced.¹⁴⁹ The representative of

Slovakia for his part expressed disappointment that condemnation of terrorism was not sufficiently reflected.¹⁵⁰

The representatives of Qatar and Palestine expressed their disappointment at the Council's continued inability to act while Palestinian civilians were being killed by Israelis. They added that this was hurting the credibility of the Council and that it would contribute to exacerbating the situation.¹⁵¹

Finally, the representative of Israel denounced the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran as part of "an axis of terror" and added that those two countries constituted a threat to Israel, to the region and to the entire free world. He also emphasized that his country was doing what it could to balance its duty to protect its citizens with the wish to minimize the negative impact on the civilian population.¹⁵²

Deliberations of 21 July 2006 (5493rd meeting)

At its 5493rd meeting, on 21 July 2006, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on his recent mission to the Middle East, and a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator on the humanitarian situation in the region.

Following the briefings, all Council members made statements, as did the representatives of Algeria, Australia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Cuba, Djibouti, Egypt, Finland (on behalf of the European Union), Guatemala, India, Indonesia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, Malaysia (on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries), Mexico, Morocco, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, the Sudan, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) and Viet Nam, the Permanent Observer of Palestine, the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States and the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People.

The President (France) first drew the attention of the Council to four letters from the representative of Israel denouncing the infiltration of Israel by Hamas on 25 June 2006, via an underground tunnel, and the killing of two Israeli soldiers and the kidnapping of a third. The letters justified Israel's actions in the Palestinian territories as necessary to free the kidnapped soldier, and deplored the continuing firing of Qassam rockets into Israel.¹⁵³ In another letter, the representative of Israel protested against an infiltration by Hizbullah into Israeli territory on 12 July 2006 and the kidnapping of two Israeli soldiers, holding the Governments of the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran responsible as well as the Government of Lebanon for its inaction, and contended that Israel reserved itself the right to act in self-defence under Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations.¹⁵⁴

The President also drew attention to letters from the Permanent Observer of Palestine denouncing a major air and ground military assault on the Gaza Strip by Israel launched on 28 June 2006, collectively punishing the Palestinian civilian population for the capture of the Israeli soldier on 25 June 2006 despite calls from the Palestinian leadership to find a diplomatic solution. In the letters, the representative of Palestine also called on the Council to condemn Israel's war crimes, bring a halt to the military invasion and urge Israel to release Palestinian officials detained since the incident.¹⁵⁵ One of the letters contained the text of the Palestinian national conciliation document on the development and reactivation of the Palestine Liberation Organization and a comprehensive Palestinian national dialogue.¹⁵⁶

Reference was also made to a letter from the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic denouncing a flight of Israeli military aircraft over the Syrian coast on 28 June 2006 as constituting a violation of international law and an unjustified provocation, and to three letters from the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran denouncing Israel's military campaign against the Palestinians.¹⁵⁷

In other letters brought to the attention of Council members, the representative of Malaysia transmitted statements by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries condemning Israel's military assault against Palestinian civilians and its violation of Syrian airspace, expressing concern at the humanitarian situation in Gaza and in Lebanon, and calling on the Council to establish a comprehensive ceasefire in Lebanon.¹⁵⁸

A statement by the European Union reminding the parties of their responsibility to protect civilian lives was also submitted to the Council in a letter from the representative of Finland.¹⁵⁹

Finally, the President of the Council drew attention to eight letters from the representative of Lebanon in which the Government of Lebanon rejected responsibility for the events of 12 July 2006 on the Blue Line (its border with Israel), strongly condemned the Israeli aggressions and expressed its willingness to negotiate through the United Nations.¹⁶⁰

The Special Adviser to the Secretary-General provided an overview of the recent developments. In particular, he said that efforts to ensure the release of the Israeli soldier had thus far been unsuccessful and Israel's military operation had continued, killing many Palestinians and leading to a dramatic humanitarian situation as access into and out of Gaza was severely restricted. As regards his mission to the region regarding the conflict in Lebanon, he reported that the Prime Minister of Lebanon had insisted on the need for an immediate ceasefire but also affirmed that he was not in a position to negotiate a ceasefire as he had no involvement in the Hizbullah attacks. The Special Adviser also reported that the Prime Minister of Israel had stressed that Hizbullah, which was financed, armed and supported by its proxies the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran, was fully responsible for initiating the conflict, and that military operations would continue until Hizbullah was weakened. Only afterwards would Israel welcome a political framework that ensured no return to the status quo ante. The Special Adviser finally said that it was urgent to secure a cessation of hostilities and develop a political framework that would pave the way for a full and durable ceasefire. On that front, while the Government of Lebanon insisted that any step to defuse the crisis would require a Lebanese consensus, the Government of Israel was adamant that the prisoners be returned first. Finally, he said that the President of the Palestinian Authority had stressed the need to delink the crisis in Gaza from the one in Lebanon.¹⁶¹

The Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs reported that the humanitarian crisis in Lebanon continued to worsen with many civilian deaths, widespread destruction of public infrastructure and overwhelmed hospitals. He detailed the work of United Nations humanitarian agencies to respond to the crisis and requested the acceptance and guarantee by Israel of humanitarian corridors into and out of Lebanon. A humanitarian flash appeal would also address the most pressing humanitarian concerns for a period of three months.¹⁶²

The representative of Palestine first regretted the inaction of the Council regarding the situation in Gaza, which led to an increasing death toll. He called on the Council to condemn the Israeli actions, and to ensure an immediate cessation of hostilities, the withdrawal of Israeli forces, and the release of all Palestinian officials held by Israel.¹⁶³

The representative of Israel again asserted that the State of Israel had been attacked without any provocation by Hamas in Gaza and by Hizbullah in Lebanon, both terrorist organizations. He deplored the difficulty for the Israeli forces to distinguish Hizbullah militants from civilians, but expressed his Government's awareness of the humanitarian situation in Lebanon and announced that it had agreed to establish humanitarian corridors. Finally, he insisted that the international community needed to address terrorism in Lebanon and its sponsors before a cessation of hostilities could be contemplated.¹⁶⁴

The representative of Lebanon underlined that Lebanon was the victim of an aggression of a brutality that had gone beyond all previous similar acts. He appreciated the Secretary-General's support to Lebanon, called for an immediate ceasefire, and appealed to the international community to intervene immediately. He also held Israel responsible for the humanitarian and economic catastrophe in Lebanon and hoped Israel would be forced to provide compensation.¹⁶⁵

Most Council members called for immediate Council action, arguing that the Council's legitimacy would be undermined if it remained silent. In particular, the representative of Qatar deplored Israel's excessive use of military force against Lebanon under the pretext of self-defence, and called on the Council to adopt a resolution forthwith. He stressed the need for an immediate ceasefire, for the lifting of the Israeli blockade of Lebanon, for emergency humanitarian assistance and for full support to the Government of Lebanon and its institutions.¹⁶⁶ Several Council members condemned Hizbullah's attacks and recognized Israel's right to self-defence but also criticized Israel for reacting with excessive force.¹⁶⁷

The representative of the United Kingdom emphasized the need to create the necessary conditions for a lasting and effective ceasefire and expressed concern about the role of the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran, calling on them to stop supporting Hizbullah and interfering in Lebanon.¹⁶⁸ Several other Council members noted that a comprehensive and lasting solution to the underlying problems was necessary for creating the conditions for a lasting ceasefire. In this regard, implementation of resolution 1559 (2004) was crucial and the return to the status quo ante was impossible.¹⁶⁹ In particular, the representative of France stressed that it was "highly unlikely" that Hizbullah would be eliminated by force, adding that a strong Lebanese government would be essential.¹⁷⁰

The representative of the United States for his part insisted that lasting solutions to bring permanent peace in the Middle East were critical, in particular tackling terrorism and its sponsors in Tehran and Damascus. He said that if the Council was simply adopting stopgap measures without really addressing the violence it would be a "disservice" as Hizbullah would probably not honour the ceasefire. Finally, he indicated that his country was studying ideas to secure implementation of resolution 1559 (2004), including the deployment of an international stabilization force and how it would be empowered to deal with arms shipments to Hizbullah.¹⁷¹

During the debate, almost all non-members called for some Council action to respond to the crisis. Some speakers condemned all forms of violence including abductions and attacks against civilians.¹⁷² In particular, the representative of Switzerland reminded the parties to the conflict that international humanitarian law prohibited attacks on civilians and on civilian property,¹⁷³ and the representative of Guatemala said that the parties had a responsibility to protect civilians.¹⁷⁴ While several speakers condemned the attacks conducted by Hizbullah and called for the release of all abducted soldiers,¹⁷⁵ others focused specifically on Israel's military actions against the Lebanese and the Palestinian people and held that Israel's occupation of Arab land remained the root of the problem.¹⁷⁶ Some speakers referred to Israel's actions as "State terrorism"¹⁷⁷ and called on the Council to specifically pressure Israel to put an end to the aggression and to hold it accountable.¹⁷⁸ Many others recognized Israel's right to self-defence but called on it to exercise restraint.¹⁷⁹ Some of those speakers deplored Israel's reaction as disproportionate and amounting to collective punishment.¹⁸⁰

The representatives of the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand and Canada specifically called on the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran, or on "States with influence" to stop interfering into the internal affairs of Lebanon and providing help to Hizbullah.¹⁸¹ The representatives of the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran both denied these accusations.¹⁸²

Regarding the humanitarian situation many speakers expressed concern and called for humanitarian assistance, including the establishment of humanitarian corridors as requested by the Under-Secretary-General, as well as the lifting of the Israeli blockade on Lebanon.¹⁸³

Finally, regarding possible solutions to the current crisis, speakers almost unanimously called for an immediate ceasefire. However, many concurred that a return to diplomacy was essential as only a political process, including the resumption of the Middle East peace process, could bring lasting peace to the region.¹⁸⁴ The representative of Egypt, in particular, insisted that negotiations on a permanent settlement of the crisis first required a firm decision by the Council for an immediate and comprehensive ceasefire on both the Lebanese and Palestinian fronts.¹⁸⁵ A few speakers supported the idea of a reinforced international security and monitoring presence in Lebanon. The representative of Switzerland proposed that this presence be given the mandate to guarantee the ceasefire, secure the Israeli-Lebanese border, facilitate a negotiated settlement of territorial disputes, and temporarily take control of the Shab'a farms area.¹⁸⁶ The representative of Canada urged that it be accompanied by a political framework with the aim of creating conditions for stability. Lastly, many speakers stressed that the Lebanese State needed to reinforce its sovereignty and that resolution 1559 (2004) had to be implemented in full, in particular the disarmament of irregular forces operating in Lebanon.¹⁸⁷

Deliberations of 22 August 2006 (5515th meeting)

At its 5515th meeting, on 22 August 2006, the Council heard a briefing on the situation in the region by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, followed by a debate in which all Council members made statements, as did the representatives of Algeria, Brazil, Canada, Finland (on behalf of the European Union), the Islamic Republic of Iran, Israel, Lebanon, Norway, Pakistan, the Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Under-Secretary-General said that the vision of a two-State solution had slipped further away during the past year, in particular because of increasing violence and the creation of facts on the ground that would prejudice final status issues. In addition, while President Abbas had respected his platform for peace, the Hamas-led Palestinian Authority had not fully committed itself to the basic principles of the peace process. As for Israel, the Government had failed to implement its Quartet road map obligations. He expressed concern about the Palestinian economic situation and referred to Israeli closures and restrictions on movement as the largest obstacle to economic growth. He stressed that the root cause of the region's problems was the absence of a comprehensive solution and added that the recent tragedy in Lebanon should be converted into an opportunity to resolve the region's long-standing problems.¹⁸⁸

The representative of Palestine regretted that the 15-year-old peace process had not fulfilled its goals. He asserted that the situation had clearly deteriorated for the Palestinian people. He welcomed the intention of the Arab Foreign Ministers to seek a high-level Security Council meeting on the Palestinian question with a view to moving towards the implementation of relevant Council resolutions.¹⁸⁹

The representative of Israel declared that his country had been conscious of the humanitarian situation in Gaza but that it would be wrong to divert the Council's attention from the implementation of resolution 1701 (2006), as the resolution was the last opportunity for Lebanon to prevent Hizbullah from acting as "a State within a State".¹⁹⁰

The representative of Lebanon, for her part, deplored the fact that since the adoption of resolution 1701 (2006) Israel had continued its aggression, including air violations. She called on the Council to expedite the expansion and deployment of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) and to ensure Israeli compliance with its decisions.¹⁹¹

Most speakers agreed that the continued suffering of the Palestinians should not be overshadowed by the recent conflict in Lebanon. Several speakers reaffirmed that the Palestinian problem had been the core of all crises in the region, adding that unless it was resolved other problems would remain.¹⁹² However, the key issue for the representative of the United States was that Hamas had rejected peace by not abiding by the Quartet principles.¹⁹³ By contrast, the representatives of the Islamic Republic of Iran, Pakistan and the Syrian Arab Republic stressed that the central problem was the Israeli occupation of Arab lands.¹⁹⁴

A number of speakers welcomed the fact that the cessation of hostilities between Israel and Hizbullah had been generally maintained,¹⁹⁵ but many others voiced concern at the fragility of the situation on the ground, owing in part to an Israeli raid into the Bekaa valley, Lebanon, on 19 August 2006.¹⁹⁶ Because an illegal arms shipment had been the target during that operation, some said that it had underlined the importance of the full implementation of resolution 1701 (2006), in particular the arms embargo on Lebanon.¹⁹⁷ The representative of the United States insisted that resolution 1701 (2006) guaranteed Israel's right to self-defence and added that the arms embargo must be upheld by the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran.¹⁹⁸

Several speakers urged both Hizbullah and Israel to refrain from any action that might complicate the situation.¹⁹⁹ The representative of the Russian Federation observed that joint actions by the international community were needed to de-escalate tensions.²⁰⁰ In addition, many delegations urged Israel to immediately lift its air and sea blockade on Lebanon, the representative of Qatar urging the Council to specifically make this request.²⁰¹ The representative of Brazil expressed the hope that donors would step up their support for Lebanon at the conference to be held on 31 August 2006 in Stockholm.²⁰²

By a letter dated 30 August 2006 to the President of the Security Council,²⁰³ the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States transmitted two decisions adopted by the Council of the League of Arab States at a ministerial meeting in Cairo on 20 August 2006 calling on the Security Council to exert pressure on Israel for the immediate lifting of the air, land and sea blockage imposed on Lebanon, and supporting the “seven-point plan” to end the conflict in Lebanon presented by the Government of Lebanon on 26 July 2006.²⁰⁴ The League of Arab States also requested a Council meeting at the ministerial level to consider the settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict on all tracks.

At its 5530th meeting, held on 21 September 2006 in response to that request, the Council included the above-mentioned letters in its agenda. Statements were made by the Foreign Ministers of all Council members and the United States Secretary of State, in addition to the Foreign Minister of Bahrain (on behalf of the League of Arab States), the Foreign Minister of Finland (on behalf of the European Union), the President of the Palestinian Authority, the representative of Israel and the Secretary-General.

The Secretary-General affirmed that recent events in the region proved that the problems were all interconnected and that it was dangerous to leave the Arab-Israeli conflict unresolved. He welcomed the vital role played by the Council in the search for peace with the adoption of resolution 1701 (2006) and stressed that the problem of Israel and Palestine was at the heart of the conflict. He emphasized that large majorities of Israelis and Palestinians desired peace and understood that there was no military solution to the conflict. He called on the Quartet and the Council to work together to put in place a credible political process based on dialogue, parallel implementation of obligations and clarity as to the end goals.²⁰⁵

The representative of Bahrain stressed that the Arab-Israeli conflict was exhausting the resources of the region and creating instability. In order to revive the peace process, the Arab League proposed that the Council agree to, inter alia, initiate negotiations between the parties based on agreed terms of reference, with a set time frame and under its auspices; request the Secretary-General to prepare a report on appropriate mechanisms for resuming direct negotiations, including options for format, guarantees, time limits, parameters and the role of the Security Council and other third parties, and submit that report to the Council; and reconvene at the ministerial level in order to consider further measures.²⁰⁶

Highlighting his country’s commitment to peace, the representative of Israel said that the Israeli-Palestinian conflict was the consequence, not the cause, of an ideology of intolerance that had plagued the region and had now taken control of the Palestinian Authority through Hamas. He stressed that any progress should begin with the release of Israeli hostages and the end of terrorist attacks.²⁰⁷

Speakers unanimously affirmed the need to reinvigorate the Middle East peace process, reiterated their support to the Quartet’s efforts towards the two-State vision and welcomed the outcome of the Quartet meeting of 20 September 2006, which had identified measures to build confidence between the parties. The representatives of France and the Russian Federation specifically called for the convening of an international conference on the Middle East, which could be held in the context of the initiative of the League of Arab States and pave the way for a new regional framework for collective security and economic integration.²⁰⁸ Many speakers also welcomed the anticipated formation of a Palestinian Government of National Unity and advocated for providing President Abbas with vigorous support.²⁰⁹ The United States Secretary of State reaffirmed that the Palestinian Authority had to commit itself to the Quartet principles: renouncing terror, recognizing Israel’s right to exist and accepting previous peace agreements.²¹⁰

Most speakers also voiced their concern at the dire humanitarian situation in the Palestinian territory, particularly in Gaza, urged the immediate re-establishment of international aid and called on the Israeli authorities to transfer the withheld Palestinian tax and Customs revenues. The United States Secretary of State noted that her government had increased its direct assistance to $468 million and had agreed to expand the Temporary International Mechanism to ensure that the Palestinian people received that assistance.²¹¹ While the representatives of Slovakia and Finland called for the opening of the Rafah and Karni border crossings,²¹² the representative of China encouraged Israel to lift its blockade against Palestine, dismantle the separation wall and facilitate the supply of humanitarian assistance to Palestine.²¹³

On the Lebanese track, most delegations called for the full implementation of resolution 1701 (2006), in particular the deployment of the reinforced UNIFIL, the need for the Government of Lebanon to extend its sovereign authority throughout the country, and the release of the abducted Israeli soldiers. The representative of the Russian Federation also observed that the Syrian track needed to be brought back to life. He said that his recent contacts with the Syrian leadership had given him the impression that Damascus was interested in establishing peace.²¹⁴

At the close of the meeting, President Abbas stated that the Palestinian Authority was fully committed to peace through negotiations, international legitimacy, the road map and to living with its neighbours in peace and security.²¹⁵

Deliberations of 19 October 2006 (5552nd meeting)

At its 5552nd meeting, on 19 October 2006,²¹⁶ the Council heard a briefing by the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process. Following the briefing, all Council members made statements, as did the representatives of Bahrain (on behalf of the League of Arab States), Cuba (on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries), Finland (on behalf of the European Union), Israel, the Islamic Republic of Iran and the Syrian Arab Republic and the Permanent Observer of Palestine.

The Special Coordinator first stated that at the heart of the conflict in the Middle East was the problem of Israel and Palestine. He deplored the intensification of Israeli military operations in Gaza leading to many deaths and regretted that neither the violence nor the diplomatic efforts, led by Egypt, had led to the release of the captured Israeli soldiers and the cessation of rocket attacks against Israel. He noted that Israeli intelligence claimed that weapons had recently been smuggled into Gaza through tunnels. He then reported on the political crisis within the Palestinian Authority and the failure of the President and the Prime Minister to implement an agreement to form a national unity government. He warned that Palestinian society was teetering between national unity and civil conflict as tensions between Palestinian Authority security forces and Hamas militants led to armed clashes. The Special Coordinator welcomed the European Commission's renewal and expansion of the Temporary International Mechanism and encouraged the implementation of the Agreement on Movement and Access, which would allow the Palestinian economy to recover. Finally, the Special Coordinator noted that although the Prime Minister of Israel, Ehud Olmert, expressed an interest in holding direct talks with Lebanon, the Prime Minister of Lebanon, Fouad Siniora, had refused. Similarly, although the President of the Syrian Arab Republic had expressed his desire to negotiate with Israel to secure the return of the Golan Heights, the Prime Minister of Israel held that the Golan Heights would remain within Israel. He reaffirmed that peace between Israel and Palestine, the Syrian Arab Republic and Lebanon were part of the United Nations goal of comprehensive peace in the region and warned against a compartmentalized approach.²¹⁷

All speakers expressed concern about the violence and concurred that the peace process should be revived on the basis of previously agreed principles, including a two-State solution, the land-for-peace formula, the road map and relevant Security Council resolutions. Several speakers expressed support for the Palestinian President's efforts to form a government of national unity in order to restore law and order and improve the political climate,²¹⁸ but the representative of the United Kingdom specifically blamed Hamas for the failure to establish that government, and reaffirmed that President Abbas was the main partner for peace.²¹⁹ A few speakers urged the Palestinian leadership to bring an end to violence and terrorist activities, including the firing of rockets into Israeli territory,²²⁰ while others called on Israel to end disproportionate military operations and its violations of international humanitarian law.²²¹ To alleviate the economic crisis in the Palestinian territory, the representative of the United Kingdom, echoed by others, urged the international community to continue using the Temporary International Mechanism to channel financial assistance to Palestinians.²²²

Regarding the situation in Lebanon, while welcoming the progress made so far, most speakers reiterated that resolution 1701 (2006) must be fully implemented and that the two Israeli soldiers needed to be released immediately. The representatives of the United Kingdom, Slovakia and the United States urged the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran to comply with the arms embargo regime,²²³ while the representative of Denmark stated that the Syrian Arab Republic “must constructively play along”.²²⁴ Several speakers expressed concern about the continued existence of armed groups in Lebanon, threatening the State monopoly on the legitimate use of force, and urged for their disarmament.²²⁵ There were also concerns about violations of Lebanese airspace by the Israel Defense Forces.²²⁶

The representative of Palestine called on the Council to put an end to Israeli violence and protect civilians. He also affirmed that the Palestinians had chosen peace and called on Israel to make the same choice.²²⁷

While noting that the situation along the northern border had begun to stabilize, the representative of Israel for his part expressed concern about the smuggling of arms across the border between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. He also reiterated that his country would not enter into dialogue with Hamas before the latter had recognized the Quartet principles.²²⁸

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic denied allegations that weapons were being smuggled across its border with Lebanon and reiterated its commitment to the implementation of resolution 1701 (2006). He also stressed that without the restoration of the occupied Golan Heights to his country Israel would never enjoy peace.²²⁹

Decision of 11 November 2006 (5564th meeting): rejection of a draft resolution

By letters dated 6, 7 and 8 November 2006 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Qatar, in his capacity as Chairman of the Group of Arab States and on behalf of the members of the League of Arab States, the representative of Azerbaijan on behalf of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, and the representative of Cuba, on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, respectively, requested an urgent Council meeting to consider the situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question.²³⁰

At its 5564th meeting, held on 9 November 2006 in response to those requests, the Council included the above-mentioned letters in its agenda. The Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs briefed the Council on the situation in the region, following which statements were made by all Council members and the representatives of Algeria, Azerbaijan (on behalf of OIC), Brazil, Cuba (on behalf the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries), Egypt, Finland (on behalf of the European Union), Indonesia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Morocco, Norway, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, Spain, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen, the Permanent Observer of Palestine, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States.

The Assistant Secretary-General reported on an incident that occurred on 8 November 2006 during which Israeli forces shelled an area in Beit Hanoun, killing many Palestinian civilians. This occurred following a weeklong Israeli military operation in northern Gaza aimed at preventing the launching of rockets into Israel. She said that the Secretary-General had expressed shock about the incident. While the United Nations condemned the Palestinian rocket fire, it also reminded both sides of their obligation under international humanitarian law regarding the protection of civilians.²³¹

The representative of Palestine condemned Israeli “State terrorism” and “war crimes”, which had killed Palestinian civilians. He deplored the fact that the international community, particularly the Council, had failed to protect them, adding that the failure had created a culture of impunity in Israel. He called for a prompt investigation into the Beit Hanoun tragedy, as well as a mutual ceasefire monitored by a United Nations observer force and for the withdrawal of Israeli forces to the positions held prior to 28 June 2006.²³²

While regretting the civilian deaths, the representative of Israel maintained that the “accidental killing” in Beit Hanoun would have never happened had the Palestinians stopped firing rockets into Israel. He noted that his country, unsuccessfully, had alerted the Council of the rising threat in Gaza and had given moderate Palestinians enough time to take action. He said that the Palestinian Authority should be held accountable for what happened on its territory, and urged the moderate Palestinian leadership to take control. Turning to Lebanon, the representative stressed that despite recent positive developments in the south, lasting peace could only be achieved by fully implementing resolution 1701 (2006). He continued to express concern for the smuggling of arms across the border between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic.²³³

particular the incident in Beit Hanoun. Some speakers pointed out that the incident was even more worrisome as it occurred following the withdrawal announcement by Israel. On the other hand, the representative of the United States recalled attacks on Israel, adding that it was the responsibility of the Hamas-led Government to prevent terrorist attacks against Israel from the Palestinian territories. Many speakers also called for a cessation of Palestinian rocket attacks.²³⁴ The representative of Saudi Arabia urged Israel to resume negotiations in a context of simultaneous parallel commitments from the Palestinian side to stop the launching of rockets and the cessation of all Israeli military operations.²³⁵

Most speakers stressed that recent Israeli military operations in Gaza were disproportionate and constituted grave violations of international humanitarian law.²³⁶ In particular, the representative of the United Kingdom noted that it was difficult to understand what the action in Beit Hanoun had meant to achieve or how it could be justified.²³⁷

While many speakers welcomed the announcement by Israel that an investigation into the incident in Beit Hanoun would be conducted,²³⁸ others called for an independent investigation.²³⁹ In particular, the representative of France expressed his wish to see the Secretary-General set out the parameters for an independent inquiry.²⁴⁰ The Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States supported this call and hoped that the fact-finding commission would report back to the Council.²⁴¹ Many speakers urged the Council to dispatch an international observer mission, a monitoring mechanism or even a civilian protection force to the Palestinian territories.²⁴² The representative of Malaysia also proposed that the Council establish an interposing international protection mechanism.²⁴³

Several speakers stressed the importance of confidence-building measures to facilitate the resumption of the peace process.²⁴⁴ In that regard, most Council members called for the immediate and unconditional release of the kidnapped Israeli soldier, while most non-members urged Israel to release members of the Palestinian Cabinet and legislature, detained in Israel.

The representative of Qatar, in his capacity as Chairman of the Group of Arab States, called on the Council to assume its responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security. He urged the Secretary-General to prepare a report, to be submitted to the Council, on Israel's ongoing aggression in the occupied Palestinian territories, and called for an immediate ceasefire and the dispatch of an international observer force. He asked the Council to revive the stagnant Middle East peace process on all tracks. He called for full guarantees and incentives for all parties to implement previous peace agreements and for the removal of obstacles to a lasting and comprehensive peace. He noted that a draft resolution prepared by the Arab Group in this regard was before the Council.²⁴⁵ A number of speakers expressed their support for that draft resolution.

The Council held its 5565th meeting on 11 November 2006²⁴⁶ to consider a draft resolution submitted by Qatar,²⁴⁷ by which the Council, inter alia, would call upon Israel to cease its military operations and to withdraw its forces from within the Gaza Strip to positions held prior to 28 June 2006; call for an immediate halt of all acts of violence between the Israeli and Palestinian sides; request the Secretary-General to establish a fact-finding mission on the attack in Beit Hanoun within 30 days; call upon Israel to abide by its obligations under the Fourth Geneva Convention and on the Palestinian Authority to bring an end to violence, including the firing of rockets into Israeli territory; call for the provision of emergency humanitarian assistance to Palestinian people; call upon the international community to stabilize the situation, including through the establishment of an international mechanism for protection of civilians; call upon the parties to take immediate steps including confidence-building measures, with the objective of resuming peace negotiations; and request the Secretary-General to report back to the Council on the implementation of the resolution in a timely manner.

At the meeting, the representatives of the Congo, Denmark, Japan, Qatar, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States and the Permanent Observer of Palestine made statements.

The draft resolution was put to the vote and was not adopted, owing to the negative vote of the representative of the United States. The representatives of Denmark, Japan, Slovakia and the United Kingdom abstained.

The representative of the United States held that the draft resolution was unbalanced, biased against Israel and politically motivated. He deplored the fact that there was no reference to terrorism in it nor a condemnation of Hamas, and added that there was no need for the establishment of a fact-finding mission or an international civilian protection mechanism.²⁴⁸ The representative of the United Kingdom called on Israel to avoid harming civilians, and on the Palestinian leadership to bring an end to terrorist activities; she further called on the Syrian Arab Republic to use its influence constructively on Syrian-based Hamas leaders. She added that the text was not sufficiently balanced and that it did not reflect the complexity of the situation.²⁴⁹ The same reasons were advanced by the representatives of Denmark, Japan and Slovakia for abstaining.²⁵⁰ The representatives of the Congo, Qatar and Palestine expressed their disappointment at the failure to adopt the draft resolution.²⁵¹

Deliberations of 21 November 2006 (5568th meeting)

At its 5568th meeting, on 21 November 2006,²⁵² the Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs on the latest developments in the region. Following the briefing, all Council members made statements, as did the representatives of Cuba (on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries), Finland (on behalf of the European Union), the Islamic Republic of Iran and Israel and the Permanent Observer of Palestine.

The Under-Secretary-General reported that, during a month of mounting violence, confrontations between the Israeli forces and Palestinian militants had led to casualties on both sides. He expressed scepticism that an agreement on a national unity government in Palestine would be reached, despite continued efforts to that end by the President of the Palestinian Authority. He added that the economic and humanitarian situation in the Gaza Strip remained dire since Israeli authorities had not fully implemented the Agreement on Movement and Access. He insisted that a return to the political track was essential, adding that the intervention of a third party might help push the parties to move beyond the current impasse. Regarding the broader peace process in the Middle East, he was of the view that the Syrian Arab Republic could play a “critical” role in a number of areas.²⁵³

The representative of Palestine deplored the fact that the Council had, once again, let Palestinians down by failing to adopt the Qatar-sponsored draft resolution on 11 November 2006, and accused Israel of carrying out war crimes with a permanent member’s diplomatic protection. He reaffirmed that his government remained committed to a diplomatic solution to the crisis, and welcomed the recent initiative by France, Italy and Spain to revive the deadlocked peace process. Lastly, he reiterated his call for an immediate mutual ceasefire.²⁵⁴

The representative of Israel said that the situation on the ground could be changed “overnight” should the following happen: first, that the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran stopped supporting terrorism; that Hamas accepted the Quartet principles; that Palestinian militias ceased attacking Israeli targets; and that the three kidnapped Israeli soldiers were freed.²⁵⁵

Most speakers expressed concern at the worsening situation in the occupied Palestinian territory and urged all parties concerned to take action towards a just, lasting and negotiated solution by reinvigorating the peace process based on the two-State solution, relevant Council resolutions and the road map. A majority of speakers urged Israel to stop using disproportionate force against Palestinian civilians, and urged Palestinians to make more efforts to halt rocket firing against Israel.

Some speakers expressed disappointment at the Council’s failure to adopt the Qatar-sponsored draft resolution.²⁵⁶ The representative of China urged the Council to reflect on how it could better fulfil its responsibility.²⁵⁷ The representative of Cuba observed that interested States had to resort to the General Assembly following the Council’s inaction, and adopted a similar resolution²⁵⁸ on 17 November 2006 at an emergency special session.²⁵⁹ While welcoming that resolution, the representative of Qatar pointed out that it was not the adequate forum to address the problem, since the primary responsibility for maintaining world peace and security was in the hands of the Council.²⁶⁰ The representative of the United States held that it was yet another biased resolution that ignored the reality of the situation and did nothing to make progress towards peace in the region. She urged Member States to reject those “diplomatic theatrics” as “hastily-called meetings” and “polemical resolutions” were no substitute for the parties’ determination to take the needed steps towards peace.²⁶¹

Some speakers stressed that every possibility to involve regional stakeholders in the various peace processes under way in the region should be encouraged, and the Syrian Arab Republic was invited to become part of the solution.²⁶² The representative of the United States, however, expressed alarm at indications that the Syrian Arab Republic was working with Hizbullah and other Lebanese allies to destabilize the Government of Lebanon, and that it was not abiding by the arms embargo.²⁶³

The representative of Qatar indicated that his delegation would convene a ministerial-level Council meeting the following month to break the impasse of the Middle East peace process. He called on Member States, particularly Council members, to actively participate in the envisaged meeting.²⁶⁴

Deliberations of 25 January 2007 (5624th meeting)

At its 5624th meeting, on 25 January 2007, the Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs on the situation in the region. There were no additional statements.

The Under-Secretary-General said that the Secretary-General had presented his final report on the situation in the Middle East to the Council in December 2006.²⁶⁵ He noted that there had been positive developments, including a renewed sense of international urgency to find a political way ahead, in particular initiatives to revitalize the Quartet, visits to the region by Quartet members and calls by the Syrian Arab Republic to resume negotiations with Israel. The Prime Minister of Israel, Ehud Olmert, and the President of the Palestinian Authority, Mahmoud Abbas, had met in Jerusalem on 23 December 2006 and agreed to resume the work of the quadripartite security committee comparing Israel, the Palestinian Authority, Egypt and the United States. In addition, the ceasefire of November 2006 had held and Israel had agreed to upgrade crossings between the Gaza Strip and Israel and transfer the held Palestinian revenues.

However, he noted that dialogue between the two parties was complicated because of the political situations in Israel and Palestine. He reported on acute factional tensions in the occupied Palestinian territories and on the difficulties of the Israeli coalition government in forging a clear agenda, owing to political scandals. Since the Palestinian legislative elections had brought the Hamas-led Palestinian Authority Government to power, donor programmes had been reassessed, but international aid to the Palestinians had actually increased as it was bypassing the Palestinian Government.²⁶⁶

Deliberations of 13 February 2007 (5629th meeting)

At its 5629th meeting, on 13 February 2007, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process on the situation in the region. In addition to Council members, the representatives of Argentina, Azerbaijan (on behalf of OIC), Bangladesh, Cuba (on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries), Germany (on behalf of the European Union), the Islamic Republic of Iran, Israel, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait (on behalf of the Group of Arab States), Lebanon, Malaysia, Morocco, Norway, Pakistan, Senegal, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey and Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of), the Permanent Observer of Palestine and the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People made statements.

²⁶⁵ The Council held its 5584th meeting on 12 December 2006, on the item entitled “The situation in the Middle East”, to consider that report (S/2006/956), which

The Special Coordinator reported that under the auspices of King Abdullah of Saudi Arabia, an agreement had recently been reached in Mecca to form a Palestinian national unity government, and expressed the hope that it would lead to the formation of a government that donors could support. However, he acknowledged that many challenges remained, including the cessation of Palestinian internal clashes and Israeli-Palestinian violence. He also expressed deep concern at continued tensions over Israel's constructions and excavations in the Old City of Jerusalem, at the severe fiscal crisis of the Palestinian Authority, and at the lack of implementation of the Agreement on Movement and Access. He warned that without greater access, trade would continue to drop and the reliance on aid would continue to increase. On Lebanon, the Special Coordinator said that as the "domestic political impasse" continued, two buses had been bombed in the north-east of Beirut that morning. As for the recent incident between the Israel Defense Forces and the Lebanese Armed Forces, he stated that both sides had violated resolution 1701 (2006) and thus urged all parties to respect the resolution fully and use the tripartite mechanism to address concerns.²⁶⁷

Speakers generally emphasized the need for a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the crisis in the Middle East, with the Palestinian question at its heart, and stressed that such a settlement could be achieved only through peaceful dialogue and negotiation, based on relevant Council resolutions, the Quartet road map, the land for peace principle, the Madrid agreement and the Arab Peace Initiative. They further underlined that the ultimate goal remained the two-State vision. To that end, both Israelis and Palestinians needed to refrain from taking unilateral actions.

The representative of the United States noted that his Government was supportive of the upcoming discussions and that it would continue to assist the parties on issues such as security, movement and access.²⁶⁸

Most delegations welcomed the recent agreement between the two main Palestinian factions, Fatah and Hamas, which had been reached in Mecca and aimed to form a National Unity Government within weeks.²⁶⁹ They called for the prompt formation of such a new government on the basis of a platform reflecting the Quartet principles.²⁷⁰ Others also urged the lifting of the financial blockade against the Palestinian Authority as a way to encourage those efforts.²⁷¹

Regarding Israel's recent excavation and construction in Jerusalem, a large number of delegations were gravely concerned that this would damage the Al-Aqsa Mosque, the third holiest shrine of Islam, and that it would threaten the overall peace process.²⁷² Several speakers accused Israel of intending to change the legal status and demographic composition of Jerusalem, and called on the Council to take action.²⁷³

Turning to Lebanon, most delegations condemned the bombings of the two public buses and underlined that the perpetrators must be held accountable. The representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom urged the establishment of a tribunal of international character to bring terrorists to justice.²⁷⁴ Meanwhile, most speakers were satisfied that the Blue Line had been largely respected by both sides since the adoption of resolution 1701 (2006), but expressed deep concern about the recent firing incident between the Lebanese and Israeli forces. Although the representative of Israel insisted that his country was focusing on illicit arms trafficking,²⁷⁵ the representative of Lebanon strongly protested against Israel's refusal to resort to coordination and liaison channels to resolve issues around the Blue Line.²⁷⁶

The representative of Palestine noted that the Mecca agreement endorsed the cessation of internal strife among Palestinians. He also added that Palestinian leaders had pledged to eliminate the Israeli occupation and regain the national rights of the Palestinian people. Key issues, such as occupied East Jerusalem, Palestinian refugees, Palestinian prisoners, and the illegal construction by Israel of its wall and settlements would be given top priority. He insisted that the international community had an obligation to ensure that no unilateral measures would be taken by Israel that might endanger the prospect of peace.²⁷⁷

The representative of Israel for his part deplored the fact that the firing of rockets into Israeli territory and the smuggling of weapons into Gaza continued. He expressed scepticism regarding the Mecca agreement as Hamas was not ready to recognize Israel's right to exist, nor did the agreement condemn violence and terrorism. He insisted that the construction at the Temple Mount was for the benefit and safety of visitors to the area and, in any case, Israel was acting within its jurisdiction. Finally, he asserted that Hizbullah in Lebanon was rearming through arms trafficking across the Syrian-Lebanese border, and noted that the Lebanese army had intercepted a truckload of arms on its way to Hizbullah. He reiterated that the international community should urge the Islamic Republic of Iran and the Syrian Arab Republic to stop meddling in the region.²⁷⁸

Deliberations of 14 March 2007 (5638th meeting)

The Under-Secretary-General summarized positive and negative developments within the past month. He noted that the ceasefire agreed between Hamas and Fatah in Mecca had so far held and the new Government was expected to be finalized soon. He underlined the need for the new Government to work to prevent the smuggling of weapons and attacks against Israel, and to impose internal law and order. Other positive developments included recent meetings between the President of the Palestinian Authority and the Prime Minister of Israel (although there was no progress towards dialogue between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic), as well as signs of increased engagement by Arab countries. Challenges to peace, however, remained. In particular, he expressed concern about continued tension and violence, as a result of internal fighting and Israeli military operations. In Lebanon, he deplored increasing security threats but expressed cautious optimism regarding the political impasse.²⁷⁹

Deliberations of 25 April 2007 (5667th meeting)

At its 5667th meeting, on 25 April 2007,²⁸⁰ the Council, presided over by the Minister of State of the United Kingdom, heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs on the situation in the region. All Council members made statements, as did the representatives of Israel, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic and the Permanent Observer of Palestine.

While highlighting positive developments in the Middle East peace process, including the swearing-in of the Palestinian national unity Government on 17 March 2007, another meeting between President Abbas and Prime Minister Olmert, and the reactivation of the 2002 Arab Peace Initiative at the recent Arab League Summit in Riyadh, the Under-Secretary-General stressed that the lack of substantial improvement of the security situation could threaten this momentum. Rocket firing continued to increase and Israel continued to express concern at alleged weapons smuggling between Egypt and Gaza. On

Lebanon, he said that despite intensive efforts to ease the political situation, there had not been any breakthroughs on the formation of a national unity Government and on the establishment of a special tribunal.²⁸¹

Most speakers welcomed recent initiatives to promote peace in the Middle East, in particular the greater involvement of regional players, and hoped that the resumed dialogue would lead to reviving the peace process. While speakers stressed the need to assure the Palestinians of a political horizon, the representative of the United States added that Arab States should also clarify a political horizon for Israel. He held that the parties were not ready for final status negotiations, but should discuss ways to ensure Israel's security and the sustainability of a Palestinian State.²⁸² The representatives of France and the Russian Federation repeated their calls for an international conference, which could provide the necessary guarantees to allow the parties to engage in final status negotiations.²⁸³

A majority of speakers expressed serious concern about the humanitarian situation in the Palestinian territories. The representative of South Africa encouraged the international community to reflect on the crippling sanctions freezing Palestinian funding, as they had not been authorized by the Security Council or the General Assembly and they were undermining the new Government's ability to function properly.²⁸⁴

Several delegations expressed concern about the recent breach of the ceasefire in Gaza,²⁸⁵ which the representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom blamed on Hamas.²⁸⁶ Most delegations called on the Palestinians to end rocket firings into Israel and to release the kidnapped Israeli soldier. At the same time, concerns were expressed at Israeli military incursions into the Gaza Strip,²⁸⁷ and some speakers called for the urgent release by Israel of its Palestinian prisoners,²⁸⁸ for the reopening of crossings into

Gaza,²⁸⁹ and for an end to Israeli settlement activities and the construction of the separation wall.²⁹⁰

The representative of Palestine maintained that, despite efforts to resume direct negotiations, Israel continued to carry out illegal policies and practices aimed at sustaining its occupation. At the same time, acknowledging that there was still a window of opportunity, he stressed that the national unity Government had mandated President Abbas to negotiate a final peace settlement with Israel.²⁹¹

The representative of Israel for his part held that Palestinians had turned Gaza into an incubator of extremism and a "launch pad" to fire rockets into Israel. He said that Israel had always reserved the right to defend itself and its people and would continue to do so.²⁹²

On Lebanon, most Council members expressed concern about the ongoing internal dispute. The representatives of China and Italy warned however that too much pressure by the international community might not be conducive to reaching a political agreement.²⁹³ The representative of Lebanon looked forward to a permanent ceasefire that would guarantee Lebanon's stability and security.²⁹⁴ The representative of the United States, supported by a few others,²⁹⁵ expressed concern at reports of continued arms shipment to Hizbullah and called on all States to enforce the arms embargo.²⁹⁶ Several delegations reiterated their support for the dispatch of an independent assessment mission to monitor the Lebanese-Syrian border,²⁹⁷ and the representative of Italy called on the Syrian Arab Republic to engage on that issue.²⁹⁸

Deliberations of 24 May, 20 June and 25 July 2007 (5683rd, 5701st and 5723rd meetings)

At its 5683rd, 5701st and 5723rd meetings, held on 24 May, 20 June and 25 July 2007, respectively, the Council heard briefings by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs and the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process on the evolving situation in the region. No other statements were made at those meetings.

Over the three-month period, a number of important developments were noted. First, there was a violent insurrection by Hamas against Palestinian Authority security forces in June, which led to the seizure of the political authority in Gaza by Hamas, the replacement of the Palestinian unity government by a caretaker government led by Prime Minister Salam Fayyad, and the declaration of a state of emergency by President Abbas. Internal fighting led to movements of population including Fatah militants seeking to escape the violence, although all were denied entry into Egypt, and to clashes in the West Bank. However, there was tremendous diplomatic momentum on the part of the international community, including the Quartet, to reaffirm support for President Abbas and for the legitimate Palestinian institutions and to engage with the caretaker government, including through direct financial assistance by the donor community.

Secondly, violence between Israelis and Palestinians continued. While recognizing Israel's right to self-defence, the Secretary-General had called on Israel to ensure that its actions did not target civilians.

Thirdly, after a pause of several weeks in the Israeli-Palestinian dialogue, a bilateral meeting between the Israeli Prime Minister and the Palestinian Authority President was finally held on 16 July 2007. While efforts to promote the Arab Peace Initiative continued, the United States in July announced its intention to call for an international meeting with the participation of all regional players. The desire of the Syrian Arab Republic to take part in negotiations leading to peace with Israel was welcomed.

Fourthly, there had been no progress regarding the freeze of Israeli settlement constructions and the dismantlement of outposts, the construction of the separation wall was still ongoing and Israel's commitments to ease movement and access in the West Bank remained unmet. As a result, the humanitarian situation in Gaza continued to deteriorate.

Finally, major political challenges included the restoration of the unity of the Palestinian Authority and the prevention of the de facto division between Gaza and the West Bank (although there were no immediate prospects for reconciliation between Hamas and Fatah), and the need to further advance the political process between Israelis and Palestinians.

Regarding Lebanon, on 20 May 2007 heavy fighting erupted between the Lebanese Armed Forces and Fatah al-Islam gunmen in Tripoli near the Nahr al-Bared Palestinian refugee camp and continued during the whole period. The Government of Lebanon reaffirmed that only security forces should be allowed to carry weapons and remained determined to confront the militia. The overall security situation in Lebanon also continued to deteriorate with terrorist explosions, violations of the cessation of hostilities in the south and regular Israeli overflights.²⁹⁹

(5736th meeting)

At its 5736th meeting, on 29 August 2007,³⁰⁰ the Council received a briefing by the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process. In addition to all Council members, statements were made by the representatives of Algeria, Bangladesh, Brazil, Cuba (on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries), Indonesia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Israel, Japan, Jordan, Lebanon, Malaysia, Norway, Pakistan (on behalf of OIC), Portugal (on behalf of the European Union), the Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam and Yemen (on behalf of the Arab Group) and the Permanent Observer of Palestine.

The Special Coordinator expressed cautious optimism. He reported that a substantive dialogue between the President of the Palestinian Authority and the Prime Minister of Israel was developing and that nascent Palestinian security reform efforts had created expectations. However, while cooperation between Israel and the Palestinian Authority had started, closures on the West Bank remained and Israeli-Palestinian violence continued. He also expressed deep concern about the political, institutional and socioeconomic consequences of the split between Gaza and the West Bank. Although Hamas had called for dialogue, it continued to assert its military authority over the Gaza Strip. Reports of weapons smuggling from Egypt to Gaza was also a matter of concern. Finally, he deplored the shortage of essential commodities due to the closure of the main commercial crossing of Karni. Finally, in Lebanon, there was still a political deadlock, and confrontation between the Lebanese Forces and Fatah al-Islam continued, but the situation in the south had been relatively calm.³⁰¹

The representative of the United States reiterated his country's call for a conference to promote the two-State solution. He added that his country intended to provide substantial support for strengthening the Palestinian Authority's security sector.³⁰² Most delegations welcomed the upsurge in diplomatic initiatives to reinvigorate the peace process, and expressed their support for the Middle East conference scheduled later in the year. The representative of Jordan stressed the need for a workplan and a timetable in order to launch the political process with clearly defined directions and outcomes,³⁰³ and the representative of Palestine suggested that the conference be held under United Nations auspices.³⁰⁴ Several speakers also reiterated their support for the two-State solution and the Arab Peace Initiative, and many gave their support to President Abbas and Prime Minister Fayyad.³⁰⁵

Most speakers expressed strong concern about the deteriorating socioeconomic situation in the Palestinian territories, especially the Gaza Strip, where the economy was on the brink of collapse. Some delegations welcomed Israel's return of tax revenues to the Palestinian Authority as well as the release of a number of Palestinian prisoners,³⁰⁶ while others underlined that the lack of implementation of the Agreement on Movement and Access substantially contributed to the economic downfall in Gaza and called for its speedy implementation.³⁰⁷ The representative of Brazil expressed her belief in "qualitative change in the life of the Palestinian people as a condition for sustainability of the political process".³⁰⁸

Some speakers deplored the de facto split between Gaza and the West Bank. The representative of the Congo cautioned that this development could jeopardize the two-State solution,³⁰⁹ while the representative of the Russian Federation suggested that peace with Israel would require Palestinian unity.³¹⁰ The representative of Panama disagreed with any policy that would exacerbate the division of the Palestinian Authority, and this point was shared by the representatives of Qatar and Pakistan.³¹¹ For his part, the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran and others held that Hamas could not be completely excluded from the Palestinian political scene.³¹²

The representative of Palestine focused on continued Israeli aggressions against his people in violation of international humanitarian law, and stressed the need to push forward any diplomatic initiative aimed at the creation of a Palestinian State.³¹³

The representative of Israel argued that recent positive developments in the diplomatic arena, including openings between his Government and the Palestinian Authority, occurred against the backdrop of the continuing danger posed by Hamas and Hizbullah, backed by their "evil patrons" the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran. He deplored the smuggling of weapons by Hamas into Gaza but said that, nevertheless, his country was responding to humanitarian needs in Gaza.³¹⁴

On Lebanon, the representative of Israel cautioned that the situation remained precarious and unsettling, adding that the transfer of arms from the Islamic Republic of Iran and the Syrian Arab Republic to Hizbullah continued in blatant violation of the arms embargo. In addition, he called on the Council to increase efforts to ensure the release of the two Israeli soldiers kidnapped in July 2006.³¹⁵ While the representative of Lebanon pointed out that there had been no movement with regard to the issue of Lebanese prisoners detained in Israel, the representative of Israel argued that those two issues could not be compared, as many of the Lebanese detainees were “murderous terrorists”.³¹⁶ Finally, most speakers expressed concern about the political situation in Lebanon, and stressed the need to resume national dialogue prior to the upcoming presidential elections.

Deliberations of 20 September, 24 October, 30 November and 21 December 2007 (5746th, 5767th, 5788th and 5815th meetings)

From September to December 2007, the Council continued to receive monthly briefings by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs on developments in the region. No other statements were made at meetings held during that period.

The Under-Secretary-General generally reported on a dichotomy between progress on the diplomatic front and continued violence and deterioration of the humanitarian situation in the Palestinian territories. A major development was the Annapolis conference on the Middle East peace process, held on 27 November 2007 organized by the United States and bringing together regional and international players (Israel, the Palestinian Authority, the Secretary-General, the Quartet, the permanent members of the Security Council, the Group of Eight, representatives of the League of Arab States, as well as other donors and supporters), at the end of which the Prime Minister of Israel and the President of the Palestinian Authority issued a joint understanding. In it, they committed themselves to an intensive negotiating process with a view to concluding a peace agreement before the end of 2008 resolving all outstanding and core issues without exception. To that end, they agreed to form a joint steering committee to oversee the negotiations, and to meet on a biweekly basis. They also committed themselves to immediately implement their respective obligations under the road map and to form an American, Palestinian and Israeli mechanism, led by the United States, to follow up on implementation. This was hailed as the most significant breakthrough in the peace process in years. Bilateral negotiations commenced as scheduled on 12 December 2007. In addition, because economic recovery and the creation of a secure environment would be key to gaining popular confidence in the renewed process, the Annapolis conference was followed by an international donor conference in Paris on 17 December 2007, where $7.4 billion were pledged in assistance to the Palestinian Authority.

Other positive developments during the reporting period included the completion by the Palestinian Authority of the 2008-2010 Palestinian reform and development plan, and the deployment of Palestinian security forces to impose law and order in Nablus, in accordance with its road map obligations. In addition, active Arab diplomacy in the lead-up to the Annapolis conference led to an agreement to intensify cooperation to stop smuggling into the Gaza Strip.

However, the Under-Secretary-General also reported on continued violence between Israelis and Palestinians (with ongoing Palestinian militant rocket fire coming from Gaza and Israeli air strikes), and the intensification of factional fighting. He said that Hamas adopted increasingly repressive measures to solidify its control over Gaza. As a result, heavy clashes with other clans occurred and there were reports of mounting human rights abuses by paramilitary forces. Hamas also denounced the Annapolis conference as it said it opposed negotiations with Israel in the absence of Palestinian consensus.

In addition, the humanitarian situation in Gaza was still a source of acute concern as the main crossings for commercial goods (Karni) and for passengers (Rafah) remained closed. As a result, the flow of import and exports stopped. The Under-Secretary-General denounced collective punishment of Palestinians. There had also been no progress on the implementation by Israel of some of its road map obligations, including a freeze on settlements.

Referring to a positive development in Lebanon, the Under-Secretary-General noted that on 2 September 2007, after 15 weeks of fighting in and around the Nahr al-Bared refugee camp, the Lebanese Armed Forces declared victory over the militant group Fatah al-Islam. The situation in southern Lebanon remained calm although Israeli overflights continuously violated the Lebanese airspace — flights which, according to Israel, were aimed at countering breaches of the arms embargo. Political tensions in Lebanon remained high surrounding the presidential elections. Although the term of the current president expired without elections being conducted on time because of political fighting, at the end of December there seemed to be an agreement on the candidature of General Michel Suleiman. Disagreement between Lebanese factions remained, though, on whether the formation of the Government should occur before or after the elections. The Under-Secretary-General called for an open and genuine dialogue among the parties.³¹⁷

35. Items relating to Iraq

A. The situation between Iraq and Kuwait

Decision of 24 March 2004 (4930th meeting): statement by the President

At its 4914th meeting,¹ on 24 February 2004, the Security Council heard briefings by the representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States² regarding the situation in Iraq, following which all Council members made statements.

The representative of the United States highlighted the ongoing work by the Governing Council of Iraq to put in place a transitional administrative law defining basic tenets for the future transitional Government of Iraq, as well as fundamental protections for civil, religious and political liberties for every Iraqi, applicable during the time of transition to full democracy and until a permanent constitution came into force. He noted the different and significant challenges, in particular the continued climate of insecurity throughout the country, and the need for humanitarian and economic assistance to Iraq. Echoing the statement of the President of the United States that the United Nations had a vital role to play in Iraq, both before and after the transition of authority to the Iraqis in July, he welcomed the active engagement of the United Nations there, noting that much remained to be done before 30 June. He informed the Council that Saddam Hussein was in custody, and was to undergo trial for crimes committed against the Iraqi people and humanity.

On security, he said that former regime loyalists, foreign fighters and terrorists continued to attack police stations, religious gatherings, schools, infrastructure, Coalition partners, non-governmental organizations and the United Nations. Although information from Saddam Hussein after he was captured on 13 December 2003 in Tikrit had enabled the Coalition forces to disrupt insurgent activities, attacks against multinational force troops as well as Iraqi civilians had increased in the past two months. Nevertheless, the determination of the Iraqi people to assume primary responsibility for their own security remained undeterred. Thus, the number of Iraqis in the Civil Defence Corps, armed forces, border police and immigration and Customs services continued to grow significantly.

He noted that while Iraqis themselves were on the forefront in stabilizing Iraq, troops deployed from 35 countries participating in the multinational force were already supporting the Iraqi people, and other countries had taken political decisions as to deploying forces on the ground in Iraq.

The representative noted that the Coalition Provisional Authority continued to support a process of consultations and elections to enable Iraqis to elect representatives reflecting the make-up and character of their communities.

He welcomed the report of the United Nations fact-finding team, and noted that the mechanism for governing Iraq between the transfer of sovereignty, scheduled for 30 June 2004, and the national elections remained to be worked out. In its report, dated 23 February 2004,³ the United Nations fact-finding team had concluded that free and fair elections were not feasible prior to 30 June 2004, and that at least eight months were needed to prepare for elections after a legal and institutional framework had been established. The team had concluded that elections could be held by the end of 2004, or shortly thereafter.

² On behalf of the Coalition Provisional Authority in accordance with resolution 1483 (2003).

The report further highlighted that there was consensus among Iraqis that the deadline of 30 June 2004 for the transfer of sovereignty to a provisional government should be maintained. The resolution of the timing of the election would provide opportunity and space for Iraqis — both those on the Governing Council and those outside the political process — and the Coalition Provisional Authority to engage in a more focused dialogue on the mechanism to which sovereignty would be transferred on 30 June 2004.

With respect to the “oil-for-food” programme, the representative noted that it had been terminated as from 21 November 2003,⁴ and that the World Food Programme (WFP) was currently assisting the Coalition Provisional Authority and the Iraqi Ministry of Trade in keeping the public distribution system supplied with food baskets. The Ministry of Trade was to take full control of all aspects of that programme from 1 July 2004.

On the issues of search for and elimination of possible weapons of mass destruction in Iraq, he noted that the Iraq Survey Group had been unable to confirm some pre-war intelligence assessments by the United States and other countries about Iraq’s possible stockpiles of such weapons, but additional work remained before the question could be completely addressed. He further noted that the former head of the Iraq Survey Group had reported the discovery of clear evidence that the former regime had been hiding ongoing activities relating to weapons of mass destruction from the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC), and had thus concluded that Iraq was in violation of previous Security Council resolutions. He stated that it was clear that the former regime had been intent on deceiving, and had continued to deceive, the international community. Furthermore, some document analysis had been obstructed by the methodical destruction of documents and computers at some Iraqi facilities in the immediate post-conflict period. He further stated that the Iraq Survey Group would continue its important work in the country.⁵

The representative of the United Kingdom elaborated on the progress achieved by the Coalition Provisional Authority in the areas of development, delivery of basic social services, increase in healthcare salaries, oil production, establishment or rehabilitation of financial institutions, and efforts to create more jobs for Iraqis. In coordination with the Authority, the Iraqi Ministry of Justice had developed strategies and activities to ensure the establishment or reconstruction of basic Iraqi criminal justice facilities. The Authority had continued to support efforts to strengthen civil society and human rights education throughout Iraq. The new Iraqi Ministry of Human Rights would play an important role in shaping human rights developments in the country. He further stated that the Judicial Review Committee had completed its review of every judge and prosecutor in Iraq; membership in the Baath party and their complicity in human rights violations or corruption had been checked, with a resulting overall dismissal rate of 25 per cent.⁶

All Council members welcomed the conclusions and recommendations made by the Secretary-General in the report issued following the United Nations fact-finding mission to Iraq.⁷ Speakers unanimously expressed the need of ensuring a central role for the United Nations as an independent and neutral institution in the ongoing political process, including in the preparations and facilitation of future elections in Iraq. Most speakers stressed that Iraqi buy-in to the political process was necessary, and stressed the importance of meeting the date of 30 June for transfer of sovereignty to the Iraqis. All Council members expressed concern over the severe security situation in the country.

The representative of Brazil noted that the fact-finding mission, which was originally intended as a technical assessment mission on the feasibility of holding elections before the end of June, had acquired a dominant political relevance, as indicated by the designation of Lakhdar Brahimi to lead it, by the consultations in the Group of Friends of Iraq, and by the report of the Secretary-General.⁸

The representative of Algeria highlighted the difficult economic and social situation for Iraqis, and drew attention to the responsibilities of the occupying Power under the Fourth Geneva Convention to better ensure the protection of the population. He reiterated an appeal to end the occupation, and pointed to promoting human rights as key to ensuring the completion of the normalization process.⁹

While stressing that without United Nations involvement it would be difficult to see a lasting settlement or even an agreement on a political process, the representative of the Russian Federation stated that the United Nations should be ready to offer its assistance; the form and timing of that assistance however would be subject to security considerations determined by the Secretary-General given the deteriorating volatile situation in the country. He stated that it was the position of his Government that the mandates of UNMOVIC and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) in Iraq remained on the Council's agenda.¹⁰

With regard to establishing a secure environment, the representative of Germany stated that this would remain the responsibility of the Coalition Provisional Authority, in cooperation with Iraqi security structures.¹¹

The representative of France, while stressing that the 30 June deadline needed to lead to a genuine restoration of Iraqi sovereignty and a handover of authority and resources to the Iraqis, underlined that important decisions involving Iraq's future should be deferred to a future elected Iraqi government. Recalling that the Secretary-General had pointed out that the United Nations would require a clear and specific mandate that would guarantee its independence and take into account new circumstances, he questioned whether existing resolutions would provide an appropriate framework and suggested that a new Council resolution could prove necessary to support the restoration of Iraqi sovereignty and to support or define new arrangements.¹²

In response to a question, the representative of the United States noted that a role of the United Nations in the process of drafting the Transitional Administrative Law was not currently envisaged. Furthermore, given the time constraints and the scheduling issues, such a role was not likely.¹³

At its 4930th meeting, on 24 March 2004, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 18 March 2004 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁴ by the Secretary-General, informing the Council that the Governing Council of Iraq had requested the United Nations to assist in the formation of an interim Government of Iraq, to which sovereignty would be transferred on 30 June 2004, as well as in the preparations for direct elections to be held in January 2005. The Coalition Provisional Authority was fully supportive of the request and would cooperate closely with the United Nations in Iraq and ensure the security of that mission. The President then issued a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed and strongly supported the decision of the Secretary-General to dispatch to Iraq his Special Adviser Mr. Lakhdar Brahimi and his team, as well as an electoral assistance team, as soon as possible, in order to lend assistance and advice to the Iraqi people in the formation of an interim Iraqi government to which sovereignty would be transferred on 30 June 2004, as well as in the preparations for direct elections to be held before the end of January 2005;

Called on all parties in Iraq to cooperate fully with those United Nations teams, and welcomed the security and other support provided to them by the Governing Council of Iraq and the Coalition Provisional Authority.

Deliberations of 16 April 2004 (4944th meeting)

At its 4944th meeting, on 16 April 2004, the Council heard a briefing by the representative of the United States on behalf of the Member States contributing to the multinational force, on the efforts and progress of the force authorized under resolution 1511 (2003).¹⁶

The representative of the United States expressed his country's commitment to providing security to Iraq, in cooperation with the multinational force and Iraqi security forces, in spite of the increase in violence and attacks from insurgents. He informed the Council of the efforts made by the force to implement resolution 1511 (2003) through activities ranging from the provision of humanitarian assistance, reconstruction, restoration of basic infrastructure, assistance to civil local government and the detention of those suspected of posing a threat to security. He reported on significant progress in recruitment and training of the Iraqi security forces. He further reported that, with the support of the United Nations, the United States had initiated the soliciting of force contributions for the protection of a broad-based United Nations mission in Iraq. He urged Member States to contribute troops to carry out the function of security support for the United Nations. He noted that although the transfer of sovereignty to the Iraqi interim Government on 30 June 2004 would mark the beginning of a new era, the coalition forces would continue to provide needed support to Iraqi security forces until they could assume sole responsibility for security in Iraq.¹⁷

Decision of 21 April 2004 (4946th meeting):
resolution 1538 (2004)

At its 4946th meeting, on 21 April 2004,¹⁸ the Council had before it a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States in connection with the oil-for-food programme.¹⁹ The draft resolution was put to a vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1538 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the appointment of the independent high-level inquiry to investigate the administration and management of the oil-for-food programme;

Called upon the Coalition Provisional Authority, Iraq, and all other Member States, including their national regulatory authorities, to cooperate fully by all appropriate means with the inquiry;

Looked forward to receiving the final report of the inquiry.

Decision of 27 April 2004 (4953rd meeting):
statement by the President

At its 4952nd meeting, on 27 April 2004, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General, who had headed the United Nations mission to Iraq from 4 to 15 April in response to a request from the Governing Council of Iraq and the Coalition Provisional Authority for United Nations assistance and advice on the formation of an interim Government of Iraq, as well as the preparation of future elections. Underlining the necessity of the continuation of a credible political process in spite of the severe security concerns in Iraq, including the fighting in Fallujah, the Special Adviser outlined the main findings and recommendations of the mission.

He emphasized that the sooner a credible Iraqi government was in place to lead the way, the better, especially because the absence of such a sovereign government was part of the problem. Virtually every Iraqi with whom he had met urged that there be no delay in bringing an end to the occupation by 30 June. He stated that the elections scheduled for January 2005 were an important milestone, and reported that a United Nations team in Baghdad was currently working to assist that process. He noted that the interim Government should be led by a Prime Minister, with a President as Head of State and two Vice-Presidents. To avoid creating any impression that the appointees would use their position to the advantage of a particular political party or group, the Prime Minister, President and Vice-Presidents should not stand as candidates in the coming elections. He stressed that the interim Government had to be careful not to use its position to influence any political party or group. To prevent this, the interim Government should not have the power to enter into long-term commitments that could await decision from an elected Government. To that end, the Special Adviser suggested the establishment of a consultative council, which should serve as an advisory body to the interim Government, be appointed by a National Conference. Delegates to that Conference, representing all Iraqi provinces and groups, would be appointed by a preparatory committee comprising a small number of reputable Iraqis, including judges, who were not seeking political office. The National Conference should in addition address issues of national reconciliation, aspects of the Transitional Administrative Law, the “de-baathification” process and concerns regarding due process rights for current detainees.²⁰

At the 4953rd meeting, on 27 April 2004, the President issued a statement on behalf of the Council,²¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Strongly supported the efforts and the dedication of the Special Adviser and welcomed the provisional ideas he had submitted as a basis for the formation of an interim Iraqi government to which sovereignty would be transferred on 30 June 2004;

Encouraged the Secretary-General and his Special Adviser to continue diligently with the efforts that they were employing;

Deliberations of 19 May to 7 June 2004 (4971st, 4982nd and 4984th meetings)

At its 4971st meeting, on 19 May 2004, the Council heard a joint briefing by the representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom.²² While addressing the issue of abuse of Iraqi detainees in Abu Ghraib prison, the representative of the United States stated that seven United States military personnel had been charged with criminal offences, and that a number of investigations remained open. He affirmed that United States forces in Iraq were required to operate in accordance with the Geneva Conventions, and that immediate steps had been taken to reinforce military policies to ensure adherence to those standards. He added that his Government was committed to providing the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) access to detainees held by the United States in Iraq, and had worked with ICRC since the beginning of the war.

The representative of the United States reiterated that the Coalition Provisional Authority and the framework for occupation recognized under resolution 1483 (2003) would come to an end on 30 June, when the Governing Council of Iraq was to be replaced by an interim Government of Iraq. Elections for a transitional National Assembly were to be held no later than January 2005. However, Coalition forces would still be needed in Iraq after 30 June, owing to continued violent attacks by insurgents and the relative inexperience of Iraqi security forces. Coordination and consultative arrangements would be established between the Coalition forces and the sovereign interim Government of Iraq. He also stated that, with a view to enabling international United Nations personnel to return to Iraq, the Coalition was working to establish a unit within the multinational force under unified command to provide dedicated security for United Nations personnel and facilities.

With regard to the political transition, he recalled the Governing Council's approval in February of the Transitional Administrative Law and the framework it set out for the interim Government and national elections. He highlighted the important work being done by the United Nations in that regard, particularly Ambassador Brahimi's assistance in identifying an interim government, and the work of the electoral assistance team on developing the three main pillars of Iraq's electoral system: an independent election commission, an agreement on electoral modalities and a political party law.

He further noted that the Iraqi Board of Supreme Audit had collected "oil-for-food" documents in preparation for its own investigation of the programme, and had signalled its readiness to assist the United Nations in its investigations into alleged abuses.

He reported that the Iraq Survey Group was continuing its search for weapons of mass destruction and related infrastructure. The Survey Group had identified Iraqi research programmes with "potential applications" in a variety of programmes relating to weapons of mass destruction, and had reported numerous violations of Security Council resolutions, including "illicit Iraqi procurement efforts aimed at obtaining dual-use material". The Survey Group was also working to determine Saddam Hussein's strategic intentions with respect to weapons of mass destruction and the United Nations inspection regime.²³

While commenting on the issue of Abu Ghraib detainee abuse, the representative of the United Kingdom underlined that British personnel in Iraq were operating in accordance with the Geneva Conventions, an obligation which they took very seriously. He stated that his Government would not hesitate to act where British troops failed to uphold obligations under international humanitarian law, and had investigated every case brought to its attention by ICRC, as well as incidents where civilians had died in detention.

He then briefed the Council on progress made in the development of basic social services, including water, sanitation and electricity. Efforts were also made to improve airports, health-care systems and financial institutions, creation of new jobs and development of justice and human rights institutions. With respect to human rights abuses committed by the former regime,

he said that a documentation and evidence centre and a database were being established.²⁴

At its 4982nd meeting, on 3 June 2004, the Council heard a briefing by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq. The representatives of Algeria, Chile, China, France, Germany, Pakistan, the Philippines, Romania, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States delivered statements during the meeting.²⁵

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq encouraged the adoption of the draft resolution before the Council, but suggested some amendments which would bring it more fully into line with the wishes of the Iraqi people, and which unambiguously underlined the transfer of sovereignty to the people of Iraq and their representatives. He stressed that the resolution should endorse the establishment of the sovereign interim Government, reaffirm the need for Iraq to control its own natural resources, and recognize the need for a continued presence of the multinational force in partnership with Iraqi authorities, affording the interim Government control over security matters. He further reported plans to convene a National Conference by July 2004 to broaden participation in the political process, and stated that part of the mandate of the interim Government would be to work closely with the United Nations. He thanked the Coalition for its help to “liberate the Iraqi people” from the persecution of Saddam Hussein. He noted that owing to the collapse of the State and its institutions Iraq was not yet at a stage to maintain its own security, and stressed that any premature departure of international troops would lead to chaos and possibly civil war in Iraq.²⁶

Discussing a draft resolution submitted by the United States and the United Kingdom, most speakers expressed the view that it should clearly mark a genuine break from the occupation, and ensure that the interim Government of Iraq would assume sovereign authority in all areas, including security arrangements. Many speakers stated that the views of the interim Government of Iraq should be taken into consideration with respect to the text of the draft resolution, and requested the view and suggestions of the Foreign Minister of Iraq on various aspects of the text, in particular on the provisions relevant to the degree of sovereignty afforded to the interim Government of Iraq.²⁷ Several representatives reiterated that the role of the United Nations in Iraq would be vital in fostering acceptance of the interim Government of Iraq and in its exercise of full sovereignty.²⁸

The representative of the United States said that the draft resolution saluted a new moment in the history of Iraq: the occupation of Iraq would end, and the Iraqi people would assume full responsibility and authority for governing a proud nation. The timely adoption of the draft resolution would bear witness to a fundamental change in the relationship between the Security Council and Iraq nearly 14 years after Saddam Hussein’s invasion of Kuwait. He stated that his Government and the multinational force partners would engage the incoming Government of Iraq in discussing the nature of the security partnership, among other issues. That partnership would be founded on shared goals and tangible cooperation on all levels.²⁹

The representatives of China and France opined that the draft resolution should ensure that prior consultation and consent should be sought from the interim Iraqi Government on major military operations.³⁰ The representatives of Chile, France and Germany further underlined that the draft resolution should clearly express which principles were to govern the cooperation between the interim Government of Iraq and the multinational force, and ensure that the interim Government of Iraq would be free to extend or terminate the mandate of the multinational force.³¹

The representative of the United Kingdom stressed that the partnership between the multinational force and the Government of Iraq should be based on the understanding that a national security council should tackle the big issues. The Security Council would work to get agreement on broad strategic directions and precisely how the various operations were to be carried out. Nothing in that process would be inconsistent with Iraq having full sovereignty. He stressed that, in the opinion of his Government, if consent for the multinational force was withdrawn, then the pillar on which the force was based would also fall.³²

In response to various questions regarding the text of the draft resolution, the representative of Iraq stated that the current wording of the draft resolution on the nature of sovereignty and the terms of reference of the Government was “quite adequate”. He said that his understanding of sovereignty meant that it should be enjoyed by the people of Iraq, and that the Government of Iraq should be free to make its own decisions and have control over Iraqi security affairs, including control over national resources and finances. Reiterating that the multinational force was strongly needed in Iraq, he underlined the importance of Iraqi forces being under Iraqi control. A continued presence of the multinational force should however depend upon Iraqi approval, as opposed to what was mandated by resolution 1483 (2003) or 1511 (2003), according to which the multinational force were there as an occupying Power. He stressed that Iraq had become a main front for international terrorism, and that a collapse of the Iraqi State would have a huge impact on security in the region. He further stated that the Government of Iraq wanted a clear reference to the status of the multinational force and to their operations and cooperation with the interim Government of Iraq in a spirit of partnership. He emphasized that a call for immediate withdrawal of the multinational force or a fixed deadline for withdrawal would be “very unhelpful”, and might play into the hands of enemies that wanted to derail the political process in Iraq. He further welcomed a leading role of the United Nations in the political, electoral and reconstruction process. He stressed that the Government of Iraq should have a say in the duration of the mandate of the multinational force.³³

At its 4984th meeting, on 7 June 2004, the Council heard a statement by the Secretary-General, and a briefing by his Special Adviser. None of the Council members made statements during the meeting.

The Secretary-General stated it was no secret that the events leading up to the war in Iraq, and developments since then, had been among the most divisive that the Council had had to deal with since the end of the cold war. For many around the world, what was at stake was the way in which the international order and the system of collective security were being defined at the beginning of the new millennium.

He said that the interim Government would have the task of bringing the country together and of leading it effectively until the elections scheduled for January 2005. The Iraqi people would judge it by its actions and results, particularly regarding security. He appealed to the Council and to the international community at large, Iraq’s neighbours in particular, to respond favourably and generously to the interim Government’s request for assistance and support.

In connection with the draft resolution under discussion, the Secretary-General reaffirmed the United Nations readiness to do the utmost, as circumstances permitted, to contribute to the restoration of peace and stability in a unified, sovereign and democratic Iraq. To that end, he looked forward to a clear definition of the United Nations role and to the creation of all the conditions, including the provision of security for United Nations staff and adequate resources, which would allow the Organization to implement its mandate.³⁴

The Special Adviser briefed the Council on the United Nations engagement in the political process in Iraq, and in particular on recent facilitation efforts to select the interim Government of Iraq, following the conclusion that elections were not viable before the transfer of sovereignty on 30 June. During consultations with Iraqis representing various groups and factions, arguments were heard against involving any foreigners in the selection of the interim Government, as well as voices opposing the participation of the Coalition Provisional Authority or the Governing Council in that process. The Special Adviser, after having given a detailed account of the process of forming an interim Government, stated that the latter had a “great deal of talent” and was well positioned to bring the country together. While it deserved to be given a fair chance and full support, he observed that ultimately the Iraqi people would judge it on the basis of its actions.

The Special Adviser said he was encouraged to have heard that the Prime Minister had reached an agreement with concerned parties for the dissolution of militias, and said that an equally important issue was that of the prisoners detained in Abu Ghraib and elsewhere. However, he stressed that, according to the majority of Iraqis that the United Nations had consulted with, the security problem could not be solved through military means alone. The National Conference would provide an opportunity to start efforts towards consensus on how to address the prevailing insecurity.

³³ Ibid., pp. 12-15.

³⁴ S/PV.4984, pp. 2-4.

The Special Adviser stated that after a complicated and delicate process under less-than-optimal conditions, two essential institutions had been established in Iraq: an interim Government and a national Independent Electoral Commission. However, he pointed out that neither the interim Government nor the National Council expected to be chosen by the National Conference would be elected bodies, and only an elected Government and legislature could legitimately claim to represent Iraq. In concluding, he emphasized that the main focus of all work at that moment should be creating conditions for credible elections to be held by January 2005, a task in which Iraqis needed clear and united support from the international community, their neighbours and creditors and the United Nations.³⁵

Decision of 8 June 2004 (4987th meeting):
resolution 1546 (2004)

At the 4987th meeting, on 8 June 2004, the President (Philippines) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 7 June 2004 from the Secretary-General,³⁶ and a draft resolution submitted by Romania, United Kingdom and the United States.³⁷ The draft resolution was put to a vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1546 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, inter alia:

Endorsed the formation of a sovereign Interim Government of Iraq, as presented on 1 June 2004, which would assume full responsibility and authority by 30 June 2004 for governing Iraq while refraining from taking any actions affecting Iraq's destiny beyond the limited interim period until an elected Transitional Government of Iraq had assumed office;

Decided that, in implementing, as circumstances permitted, their mandate to assist the Iraqi people and government, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq, as requested by the Government of Iraq, inter alia, should play a leading role in advising and supporting the Independent Electoral Commission of Iraq, as well as the Interim Government of Iraq and the Transitional National Assembly, in the process for holding elections; promote national dialogue and consensus-building on the drafting of a national constitution by the people of Iraq; and contribute to the coordination and delivery of reconstruction, development and humanitarian assistance;

Decided that the multinational force should have the authority to take all necessary measures to contribute to the maintenance of security and stability in Iraq, and welcomed the letters annexed to the resolution;³⁸

Decided that the mandate of the multinational force would be reviewed at the request of the Government of Iraq or 12 months from the date of adoption of the resolution, and that the mandate would expire upon the completion of the political process set out in paragraph 4 of the resolution, and declared that it would terminate that mandate earlier if requested by the Government of Iraq;

Decided that the prohibitions related to the sale or supply to Iraq of arms and related materiel under previous resolutions would not to apply to arms or related materiel required by the Government of Iraq or the multinational force to serve the purposes of the resolution;

Decided that the interim Government would assume the rights, responsibilities and obligations relating to the oil-for-food programme.

After the adoption of resolution 1546 (2004), all Council members made statements.³⁹ Many speakers emphasized that the resolution marked the end of occupation and total restoration of full sovereignty to Iraq, as well as mandating the United Nations with a clearly defined and leading role in the political process of the country. Most speakers expressed appreciation for the flexibility shown by the sponsors in agreeing to take into account many of their concerns during the drafting process, particularly with respect to the nature of Iraq's sovereignty and the relationship between the Interim Government and the multinational force.

The representative of the United States said that the letters annexed to the resolution described the security partnership that was being put into place between the sovereign Government of Iraq and the multinational force.⁴⁰ The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the issue of the relationship between the Interim Government of Iraq and the multinational force, in particular with respect to security arrangements, had undeniably been the most complex issue in the negotiations. However, the resulting arrangements, stemming from discussion with the incoming interim Government, made clear that the Iraqi security forces, including armed forces, would be responsible to Iraqi ministers, and that an Iraqi-led forum would set the broad Iraqi security policy framework. National, regional and local coordination mechanisms would ensure unified command for those operations to which the Iraqi Government committed its troops. The aim would be to reach an agreement on the full range of fundamental security and policy issues and sensitive operations.⁴¹

The representative of France stated that he would have preferred that the text had clarified that the interim Government of Iraq had the final say in the undertaking of sensitive military operations, instead of indicating that the interim Government and the multinational force would have to reach an agreement, without specifying what would happen in the case of disagreement. However, as the interim Government of Iraq had not explicitly requested a provision to that effect, his Government had been satisfied at the final adjustment, and moreover could not imagine that the multinational force would go against the opinion of the sovereign Government of Iraq.⁴² The representative of the Russian Federation stated that it was important that the coordination mechanism which was to be developed between the new Iraqi leadership and the command of the multinational force not infringe on the sovereignty of the interim Government of Iraq, and the work of the force should be done with the agreement of the sovereign Iraqi authorities. He further stated that the resolution confirmed the need for a final clarification of issues related to proscribed Iraqi military programmes, which had been the reason for starting the war against Iraq and thus could not be left unattended. Moreover, he expected the Council to begin work on adapting the mandates of UNMOVIC and IAEA to the new conditions created by resolution 1546 (2004).⁴³ The representative of Spain noted that he would have wanted the United Nations to assume guidance over the political and military process in Iraq, and that the political transition could have been accelerated further to a normalized situation.⁴⁴

Several representatives highlighted the importance of a reference in the preambular part of the resolution to commitment of all armed parties in Iraq to adhere to international law, including international humanitarian law.⁴⁵ The representative of Spain stated that that provision should also have been included in the operative part of the resolution.⁴⁶

Decision of 12 August 2004 (5020th meeting):
resolution 1557 (2004)

At its 5020th meeting, on 12 August 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General of 5 August 2004.⁴⁷ None of the Council members made statements at the meeting.

In his report, the Secretary-General noted that owing to the security situation, international United Nations staff were not yet permanently based inside Iraq, operating instead from Amman and Kuwait, but nevertheless continued with a broad range of activities inside Iraq through the efforts of Iraqi national staff. The United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq (UNAMI) was in the process of identifying electoral commissioners.

The President (Russian Federation) drew the Council's attention to a letter dated 23 July 2004 from Egypt addressed to the President.⁴⁸ The President further drew attention to a draft resolution;⁴⁹ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1557 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia, extended the mandate of UNAMI for a period of 12 months with a view to reviewing the mandate of UNAMI in 12 months or sooner if requested by the Government of Iraq.

Deliberations of 14 September 2004
(5033rd meeting)

At its 5033rd meeting, on 14 September 2004, the President (Spain) drew the attention of the Council to the report of the Secretary-General dated 3 September 2004.⁵⁰ The Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Iraq and by the representative of the United States, speaking on behalf of the multinational force.⁵¹ The representative of Iraq made a statement after the briefings.

In his report, the Secretary-General noted that following the restoration of sovereignty to an interim government of Iraq on 28 June 2004, the convening of the National Conference marked another step in Iraq's political transition towards a constitutionally elected Government. The Conference was held in difficult circumstances and had many shortcomings. In particular, neither the Conference itself, nor the interim National Council which emerged from it, was as broad-based and as inclusive as most Iraqis would have wanted. The overall security environment had not seen any significant improvement. Coupled with a tragic pattern of hostage-takings and indiscriminate killings of innocent civilians, there had been renewed activity on the part of various insurgent groups throughout the country.

The Special Representative stated that he had arrived with his team in Baghdad on 13 August, and among his first tasks had been to address the National Conference, held from 15 to 18 August. Although the conference was attended by more than 1,000 delegates, he suggested it should be a matter of high priority for the Government of Iraq to include those groups which had felt excluded in the electoral process. He emphasized that the transfer of sovereignty to the interim Government had not been followed by an improvement in the security situation. He reiterated that security challenges could be resolved through political solutions, not only the use of force. The extent of UNAMI activity would be determined by the prevailing circumstances, including the security environment. UNAMI continued to facilitate a sustained effort, from inside and outside Iraq, to support the coordination efforts of the Iraqi authorities in capacity-building, humanitarian assistance, reconstruction and development. UNAMI was also liaising with Iraqi authorities, civil society and others to promote human rights and the rule of law. The security environment was far from conducive to the deployment of UNAMI international staff to Iraq, except in minimal numbers, and the movements of United Nations staff were limited to inside the Green Zone. UNAMI was working to generate its own internal security capacity, and the Secretary-General intended to write to the Council regarding the need to identify a distinct entity of the multinational force to provide security for the United Nations presence in Iraq. The Special Representative urged the Council to consider that letter at its earliest convenience. He also said that the support of the Security Council would be of vital importance to maintain progress in Iraq's future transition.⁵²

The representative of the United States, speaking on behalf of the multinational force, briefed the Council on the security situation, the effort to strengthen Iraq security forces, rebuilding infrastructure and on the expectations of the force regarding the future involvement of the United Nations in Iraq. He stated that the security situation in Iraq remained fragile, as insurgents had again increased their attacks against Government officials, civilian contractors, foreign nationals and the Iraqi people. Attacks on the multinational force had also increased, largely due to resumption of attacks by the Mahdi Army associated with Moqtada al-Sadr. In spite of these challenges, the multinational force, working closely with the Iraqi security forces, continued its efforts to improve security throughout the country. It continued to train and deploy Iraqi forces at an accelerated pace to counter insurgent activity. He reported that personnel assigned to the multinational force, in addition to improving security, were working to restore basic infrastructure and the creation of economic opportunities for the Iraqi people. With respect to the role of the United Nations, he stated that the Organization was crucial to meeting the challenges that remained before a stable Iraq could be created, as the multinational force remained committed to the timetable for holding national elections no later than January 2005.⁵³

The representative of Iraq stated that, in spite of an unprecedented rise in terrorist violence, the interim Government of Iraq had taken office ahead of schedule. A principal function of the Government now was to provide for elections, as required by the Transitional Administrative Law and affirmed in resolution 1546 (2004). He said that terrorists were determined to frustrate that process, and were therefore now working to delay elections. Keeping the United Nations and the world out of Iraq was one of the tactical goals of the terrorists, a goal which they unfortunately had met with some success. He stressed that more United Nations personnel than the current number in Iraq were needed to carry out the task to which they had been assigned. He appealed to the international community to provide the necessary security for United Nations staff.

In response to the severe security situation, his Government had announced a two-track approach. On the one hand, it was determined that no one would be able to achieve political ascendancy or legitimacy through force of arms. On the other hand, it encouraged individuals and movements which were willing to lay down their arms and abide by the rule of law and by the terms set forth by the Prime Minister to enter the political process. The Prime Minister had been in dialogue with groups that had until now not been in the political process. He said that those who had predicted an inter-ethnic or inter-confessional strife in post-war Iraq had been proved wrong, and that whatever problems Iraq was facing, a civil war was not one of them. He emphasized that Iraq needed the help of every Member State to help forge a unified, federal and democratic Iraq, and that failure to do so would be too great for the region and for the world.⁵⁴

Decision of 1 October 2004 (5047th meeting): letter from the President to the Secretary-General

At its 5047th meeting, on 1 October 2004,⁵⁵ the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 21 September 2004 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council.⁵⁶ In his letter, the Secretary-General outlined the planned integrated UNAMI security structure which would consist of four elements, namely, international security staff, protection coordination officers, personal security details and guard units. The United Nations security structure would be in addition to the protection provided by the multinational force. Three guards units, each consisting of 160 armed civilian police, paramilitary and military personnel, would be provided as contingents from Member States, and form part of UNAMI.

The President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to a draft reply to the letter, in which the President proposed to inform the Secretary-General that the Council welcomed the proposed arrangements. The Council decided to send the proposed letter.⁵⁷

At its 5092nd meeting, on 30 November 2004, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 26 November 2004 from the representative of the Netherlands transmitting a letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands to the President of the Security Council.⁵⁸ The President (United States) drew the attention of the Council to a draft reply, in which the President proposed to inform the Secretary-General that the Council endorsed the creation of a trust fund envisioned in his letter of 26 November 2004 to the Foreign Minister of the Netherlands, annexed to the aforementioned letter, and requesting him to establish such a fund without delay and no later than 3 December 2004. Decision of 16 February 2005 (5123rd meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5099th meeting, on 13 December 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 8 December 2004.⁶⁰ The Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Iraq, and by the representative of the United States, speaking on behalf of the multinational force.⁶¹ In his report, the Secretary-General noted that brutal violence prevailed in the central areas of Iraq, and that killings and abductions and hostage-taking were reported on a daily basis. In response, the interim Government of Iraq had declared a 60-day state of emergency in the country, except in the three northern governorates, with measures including revocation of weapons permits and disbandment of the local police in Fallujah and Ramadi, the imposition of curfew in those and other main cities, closures of the borders with the Syrian Arab Republic and Jordan, and temporary closure of Baghdad International Airport to civilian traffic. The state of emergency was to extend through a substantial period of the electoral process, including the certification process for political entities, the voter registration process, and the electoral campaign period. Furthermore, the interim Government of Iraq had authorized a joint military operation with Iraqi forces and the multinational force to regain control of Fallujah.

The Secretary-General reported that the United Nations continued to support the work of the Independent Electoral Commission of Iraq, and technical preparations remained on schedule, with elections announced for 30 January 2005. According to the Transitional Administrative Law, elections were to be held for the Transitional National Assembly, the governorate councils, and the Kurdistan National Assembly.

With respect to the security situation, the most recent review by the United Nations Security Coordinator assessed that the threat to United Nations personnel in Iraq remained in the critical category, necessitating continuation of the very extensive staff protection measures. Work to establish a distinct entity within the multinational force for the protection of the United Nations personnel in Iraq was ongoing.

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General stressed that, although there was a widespread desire among Iraqis to participate in elections, some important segments of the population still felt alienated or excluded from the transition. During the past three months, the United Nations had continued to engage in dialogue with a wide spectrum of Iraqi opinion, including people outside the political mainstream, with the aim of encouraging participation in the political process. The interim Government had made efforts to reach out to alienated elements. He also commended recent regional and international engagement that had brought together key actors, including the Sharm el-Sheikh Conference in November, and the subsequent meeting of regional interior ministers in Tehran.⁶²

The representative of the United States, speaking on behalf of the multinational force, stated that increased presence of the United Nations remained critical for the holding of successful elections in January 2005 and beyond, as well as for economic development and reconstruction. He said that the multinational force, in cooperation with the interim Iraqi Government, continued to combat terrorism, destroy weapons that threatened the stability of the country and gather intelligence. Progress had been made in creating conditions that would allow for free and fair elections. In the months since the last report, attacks against the multinational force by means of small arms, rocket-propelled grenades, mortars and explosive devices had increased. Insurgents had also attacked Iraqis who worked for their Government, as well as foreign workers.⁶³

The representative of Iraq pointed out that while the report of the Secretary-General referred to those who had called for the boycott of elections, there was no reason to assume that these persons spoke for a sizable contingent of Iraqis. He stressed that “promoting consensus”, as urged in the report, if in the sense of “unanimity”, would be an impossible task, although the Government was fully aware of the need for national reconciliation. Failure of the elections and their credibility was more likely to result not so much from a boycott as from the campaign of violence and intimidation directed at the population. While the report indirectly criticized the use of force to dislodge terrorists from Fallujah, it offered no alternative that had not already been tried for months to no avail. Despite the efforts to engage groups willing to talk, there was instead an increase of brutal killings of civilians. The interim Government of Iraq had thus concluded that those responsible for atrocities were not interested in negotiating and that those who were in dialogue were incapable of ending the violence. Hence, a responsible Government would have no other choice than depriving terrorists of their safe haven. While welcoming the decision of the Secretary-General to increase the number of United Nations election workers in Iraq, he noted that the shortfall of staff was still of concern, and might adversely affect Iraq's preparedness for elections. He was also critical of the United Nations preferred mode of interaction with Iraqi officials, which seemed to be videoconferencing, with most activities carried out in the confines of its premises or from outside Iraq. Although not forgetting the sacrifice of United Nations workers on 19 August 2003, it was critical for the United Nations to bolster its presence and intensify its activities in Iraq.⁶⁴

At its 5123rd meeting, on 16 February 2005,⁶⁵ the Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs. The representative of Iraq made a statement after the briefing.

The Under-Secretary-General stated that the holding of three simultaneous elections in Iraq on 30 January — for the Transitional National Assembly, 18 Governorates and the Kurdish National Assembly — was a momentous event for Iraqis and for the international community.⁶⁶ The elections met recognized standards in terms of election organization, regulations and procedures. Assessments of international observers indicated overall satisfaction with the conduct of the polls, and a relatively small number of complaints of irregularities that had been conveyed to the Independent Electoral Commission were being investigated. The turnout for the Transitional National Assembly was more than 8 million voters.

⁶⁴ Ibid., pp. 5-6.

The Under-Secretary-General stated that it was clear from the overall participation in the elections that the people of Iraq were committed to the political transition process, but regional variations were significant, and this needed to be addressed if there was to be more complete participation in the constitution-making process. Although daily attacks against foreigners and Iraqis had resumed, the Under-Secretary-General hoped that the elections would mark a water-shed, and that success in making the political process more inclusive would have a positive effect on the security situation. Iraq's most immediate challenge was to form a transitional government that would be broadly representative of all Iraqi constituencies. The prospect of a referendum in eight months should serve as an important incentive for an inclusive, participatory and transparent constitutional process, given that a two-thirds vote for rejection in three governorates would block the adoption of the new constitution.

The Under-Secretary-General said that prominent leaders in Iraq had indicated the possibility of inviting representatives of groups which might otherwise have been underrepresented in the Transitional Assembly owing to the low turnout in some regions, particularly among Sunni Arabs. Conversely, some political elements that had urged a boycott of elections now appeared to be insisting that their views must be included in any dialogue and the drafting of the constitution. He reiterated that the political transition had to be Iraqi owned, and the United Nations could best contribute in helping to create enabling conditions for all Iraqis to share and succeed in the political and economic reconstruction of their country. He noted that some of the issues to be negotiated by Iraqis in the constitution-making process would touch upon the security interests of neighbouring countries, and every effort should be made to normalize Iraq's relations with the region. It was especially important that Iraq's sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity be respected.⁶⁷

The representative of Iraq expressed his appreciation of the Independent Electoral Commission for the way the elections were organized, and commended the United Nations for its vital contribution, as well as the International Organization for Migration for facilitating elections for Iraqis abroad. He expressed regret that some parties chose not to participate in the elections, despite great efforts by the interim Government to convince them otherwise, but stated that all communities that opted for peace would be included in both the electoral processes and the constitution-making process. He assured the Council that Iraq was living in a new era that stood for principles of democracy, freedom of expression, respect for human rights, adherence to international law and building sound relations with neighbouring countries. He hoped that the efforts of the Council would be consolidated through a programmed and rapid removal of the punitive measures and restrictions that were imposed on Iraq because of the reckless policies of the previous regime.⁶⁸

At the 5123rd meeting, on 16 February 2005, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁶⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Affirmed its continuing support for the Iraqi people in their political transition and reaffirmed the independence, sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of Iraq;

Stressed the need for sustained political efforts aimed at making the next steps of the transition, in particular the coming constitutional process, as inclusive, participatory and transparent as possible;

Strongly encouraged the Transitional Government of Iraq and the Transitional National Assembly to reach out broadly to all segments of Iraqi society, with a view to promoting genuine political dialogue and national reconciliation and to ensuring that all Iraqis were duly represented and had a voice in the political process and the drafting of the Iraqi Constitution;

Reaffirmed the leading role of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and UNAMI set out in resolution 1546 (2004) in support of Iraq's own efforts and as requested by the Government of Iraq, to promote national dialogue and consensus-building on the drafting of a national constitution;

Urged the United Nations to prepare itself rapidly and encouraged the members of the international community to provide advisers and technical support to the United Nations to help it fulfil this role;

Condemned, in the strongest possible terms, acts of terrorism in Iraq, which should not be allowed to disrupt Iraq's political and economic transition;

Stressed the continued importance of Iraq's neighbouring countries and regional organizations in supporting the political process, cooperating with the Iraqi authorities to control transit across Iraq's borders and extending other support for the people of Iraq in their efforts to achieve security and prosperity.

Deliberations of 11 April 2005 (5161st meeting)

At its 5161st meeting, on 11 April 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 7 March 2005.⁷⁰ The Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Iraq, and by the representative of the United States on behalf of the multinational force.⁷¹ The representative of Iraq made a statement during the meeting.

In his report, the Secretary-General noted that 8.8 million Iraqis, of a voter population of more than 14 million, had participated in the national elections held on 30 January 2005. Security remained a major concern in Iraq, with large number of casualties also among Iraqi security forces. The Government of Iraq had extended the special measures, including curfew in some parts of the country. He expressed concern over potential political and humanitarian consequences of an escalation of the situation in Al-Anbar, after the multinational force and the Iraqi security forces had launched a large-scale counterinsurgency operation there.

The Special Representative stated that the convening of the Transitional Assembly on 16 March and the election of a new President and two Vice-Presidents were further testimony of Iraq's progress towards a democratic future. In spite of low voter turnout in some areas, all the major parties, including those that did not participate in the elections, had engaged in intensive negotiations for the formation of the Government and the constitution-making process. He said that the drafting of a national constitution provided a historic opportunity for Iraqis to come together, and that failure to pursue further dialogue and reconciliation would involve a higher price for the parties concerned than would the necessary compromise for reaching national consensus through peaceful means. He welcomed the assurances of prominent leaders against pursuing a sectarian agenda or imposing majoritarian views on issues in which all Iraqis had a stake, including issues related to the nature and character of the Iraqi State.

The Special Representative reiterated that a credible political process offered the best prospect for improving the security situation. He stressed that the human rights situation in Iraq continued to warrant close attention in some areas, including Fallujah, where the civilian population remained deprived of the protection afforded by international humanitarian law. Continuing reports of detentions and the absence of adequate arrangements for due process were issues that needed to be addressed. He stressed that the Security Council had a special responsibility to ensure that Iraq's relations with the region and the international community could be normalized expeditiously.⁷²

The representative of the United States reported that, on election day, some 130,000 Iraqi security personnel had been on duty, securing 5,200 polling stations. The United States Embassy and the leadership of the multinational force continued to attend, at the invitation of the Government of Iraq, Iraq's Ministerial Committee on National Security, which set a broad framework for Iraqi security policy, consistent with resolution 1546 (2004). She urged the United Nations to undertake preparations with a view to playing a leading role in promoting national dialogue and consensus-building on the drafting of the constitution.

She also reported that, consistent with resolution 1546 (2004), a distinct entity under the unified command of the multinational force had assumed the mission of providing security for the United Nations presence in Iraq. She also highlighted the importance of a broad-based participation in the drafting of the constitution of Iraq.⁷³

The representative of Iraq noted that the two-year anniversary of the fall of the previous regime had just been marked, marking the end of years of suffering caused by a regime which maintained power for 35 years against the will of the Iraqi people. The incoming transitional Government of Iraq would soon start the process of preparing to draft a permanent constitution, and complete the building of fully legitimate institutions of State. He noted that many countries that had expressed reservations about the decision to remove the previous regime by military force had risen to the challenge of assisting Iraq in their efforts to rebuild.

He highlighted two factors that would be vital for Iraq going forward. First, the resolute support of the international community and, secondly, that the Council revisit its pre-April 2003 resolutions on Iraq to dismantle the relevant legal, bureaucratic and other structures that had outlived their relevance.⁷⁴

B. The situation concerning Iraq

Initial proceedings

Deliberations of 31 May and 16 June 2005 (5189th and 5204th meetings)

At its 5189th meeting, on 31 May 2005, the Security Council included in its agenda without objection the item entitled "The situation concerning Iraq". The President (China) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 24 May 2005 from the representative of Iraq, transmitting a letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq addressed to the President of the Security Council, requesting the extension of the mandate of the multinational force in Iraq.⁷⁵ At the meeting, the representative of the United States, on behalf of the multinational force, gave a briefing to the Council,⁷⁶ and the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq made a statement.

The representative of the United States recalled that in resolution 1546 (2004), the Council had agreed to review the mandate of the multinational force either at the request of the Government of Iraq, or by 8 June 2005, and that the Foreign Minister of Iraq, in his letter of 24 May, had requested the Council to allow for the continuation of that mandate. A harsh security situation in Iraq confronted the new Government of Iraq. In spite of dramatic attacks against Iraqi citizens, Iraqis had been increasingly willing to help the multinational force, and also continued to volunteer to the Iraqi forces. She noted that Iraqis wanted to defend themselves, and the multinational force was making progress in its goal of helping Iraqi security forces move towards self-reliance. She also said that the United Nations had a leading and vital role to play in providing valuable assistance to the political transition in Iraq, and urged the United Nations to deploy the necessary experts as soon as possible to that end. She further stated that a specific timeline for the withdrawal of the multinational force could not be set, consistent with the Iraqi request. Any decision regarding force size would be driven by events on the ground. She also said that the degree to which the Iraqi people were satisfied with the way the Transitional National Assembly approached the constitutional process and worked to include all Iraqis would be of obvious relevance to the prospects of the future.⁷⁷

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq said that, in the formation of the transitional Government of Iraq, all communities had been reached out to in order to form a national unity Government that was inclusive and representative. Power had been shared also with those who boycotted or did not fare well in the January elections. However, political achievements had been made at a great cost to the Iraqi people, the Iraqi security forces and the multinational force. The Minister acknowledged that Iraq still faced a destructive campaign of terror and violence that aimed to derail the political process. Despite its efforts to build up its security forces, Iraq could not yet assume responsibility for maintaining law and order and the country needed the multinational force to continue providing its essential services. He reiterated the formal request of his Government for a continuation of the force's mandate.

The Minister stated that the Government of Iraq had repeatedly urged each of its neighbouring countries to abide by their obligations under resolution 1546 (2004) to prevent the transit of terrorists, and arms for terrorists to and from Iraq. To his regret, some had refused to translate their assurances into concrete action. He further stated that recently the Syrian Arab Republic had reported that it had stopped 1,000 foreign fighters from entering Iraq. He welcomed that action, but noted that it confirmed that the Syrian Arab Republic had been one of the main transit routes for foreign terrorists, as well as for the remnants of the previous regime. He urged the Syrian Arab Republic to do more to prevent the movement of extremist elements into Iraq. He emphasized that the mandate of the new transitional Government, outlined in resolution 1546 (2004), was to draft a new permanent constitution by 15 August. That constitution would be subject to a national referendum in October 2005. It would enshrine the ideas of any free people in its charter: pluralism, democratic rights, federalism, human rights and civil liberties, and it would embrace the diversity within the unity, reaffirming the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Iraq.

With respect to the role of the United Nations, the Minister said that the Organization had a history of experience that it could bring in advising the drafting committee, which had already begun its work. He urged the United Nations to appoint an electoral adviser to continue supporting the preparations for the general elections scheduled in December. On a separate note, he proposed that the mandate of the International Advisory and Monitoring Board, which was soon due for review, be extended until the end of the political process in Iraq.⁷⁸

At its 5204th meeting, on 16 June 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 7 June 2005 on the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq (UNAMI).⁷⁹ The Council heard a briefing by the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs. The representative of Iraq made a statement after the briefing.

In his report, the Secretary-General noted that the Transitional National Assembly had elected the transitional Government of Iraq, after prolonged negotiations between various political or ethnical factions. The transitional Government was expected to serve under a new permanent constitution leading to a constitutionally elected Government by 31 December 2005. He said that the Transitional National Assembly had also established a Constitution Drafting Committee, and that a draft constitution, finalized by 15 August, would be presented for a referendum by 15 October 2005.

These developments had occurred in a security environment that had shown no signs of improvement, with a significant increase in attacks against Iraqi civilians, as well as security forces and the multinational force. As the multinational force and Iraqi security forces had stepped up their counterinsurgency campaigns, there were reports of high casualty rates and alleged violations of civil liberties and human rights by all sides.

The Assistant Secretary-General in his briefing said that many inside and outside Iraq saw the political transition process as having entered a decisive phase in the process of national reconciliation. The experience of the United Nations around the world had demonstrated that national reconciliation and democratic processes were most successful when the majority allowed minorities the full exercise of their political rights and the opportunity to participate in governance and reconstruction. The Assistant Secretary-General further emphasized that advances in the political process would need to be complemented by tangible improvements in the reconstruction, development and humanitarian areas. The United Nations, through creative arrangements with Iraqi implementing partners and on the basis of Iraqi priorities, continued to deliver assistance in those areas inside Iraq.

⁷⁹ S/2005/373, the fourth report submitted pursuant to paragraph 30 of resolution 1546 (2004).

With respect to the security situation in Iraq, the Assistant Secretary-General highlighted as of particular concern the increasing sectarian logic that appeared to be inspiring much of the violence, with innocent Iraqi civilians bearing the brunt of the use of force. He stressed that it was incumbent upon all parties to fully respect their obligations under international humanitarian law and to ensure that the use of force was minimized in order to avoid civilian casualties.

He also said that UNAMI had already demonstrated that effectiveness could be achieved with limited capacity on the ground, but that the United Nations willingness to deliver on expectations had to be tempered by a realistic assessment of the prevailing security and operational conditions.⁸⁰

The representative of Iraq stated that his Government was keenly aware of the need to open the process of drafting the constitution to all segments of Iraqi society. He assured the Council that the Government of Iraq was also concerned about and committed to continually improving the state of human rights in Iraq. After 35 years of utter brutality, it would take some effort for State institutions to be acculturated towards respect for basic human rights, but the Government remained determined to reach that goal, which was so vital to the transition.

He recalled, as provided in resolution 1546 (2004), the Council's intention to revisit the mandates of the United Nations Monitoring Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). He stated that the discussion of the respective mandates should be guided by the fundamental consideration that Iraq had no desire to acquire, manufacture or stockpile weapons of mass destruction. As Iraq continued to reintegrate itself into the world system, including by accepting international norms governing such weapon systems, it expected to be treated no differently than any other Member State.⁸¹

Decision of 24 June 2005 (5214th meeting): letter from the President to the Secretary-General

At the 5214th meeting, on 24 June 2005, the President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 20 June 2005 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council,⁸² concerning the escrow account established under resolution 1284 (1999) and related resolutions, in which it was proposed that $220,256,697 would be transferred to the Development Fund for Iraq, and credited against assessments issued in respect of the obligations of the Government of Iraq for regular budget, peacekeeping and tribunal activities of the Organization. The President then presented a draft letter of response, in which the Council agreed to the proposal. The Council agreed on sending the letter.⁸³

Decision of 11 August 2005 (5247th meeting): resolution 1619 (2005)

At the 5247th meeting, on 11 August 2005, the President (Japan) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 3 August 2005,⁸⁴ in which the Secretary-General recommended the extension of the mandate of UNAMI, pursuant to resolution 1546 (2004), for another period of 12 months. The Secretary-General was present during the meeting. The President also drew attention to a draft resolution;⁸⁵ it was adopted unanimously as resolution 1619 (2005), by which the Council decided to extend the mandate of UNAMI for another period of 12 months and expressed its intention to review the mandate of UNAMI in 12 months or sooner, if requested by the Government of Iraq.

Deliberations of 7 September 2005

At its 5256th meeting, on 7 September 2005, the Council heard a briefing by the Chairman of the Independent Inquiry Committee into the United Nations Oil-for-Food Programme.⁸⁶ The Secretary-General, all Council members and the representative of Iraq made statements during the meeting.

In his briefing, the Chairman presented some of the main findings of the inquiry. He recalled that the assignment of the Committee had been to look for misadministration or maladministration in the oil-for-food programme and for evidence of corruption within the United Nations and by contractors. The Committee had, unhappily, found both, documented in great detail in the extensive report it had produced. The responsibility for the failures had to be broadly shared, starting with Member States and the Security Council itself. He stated that the programme had left too much initiative with Iraq, which had the means for manipulating the programme to its own end. That basic difficulty was compounded by a failure to clearly define the complex administrative responsibilities shared between the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661 (1990) and the Secretariat, and by continuing political differences. Those weaknesses were aggravated by unethical and corrupt behaviour at key points at the top of the Office of the Iraq Programme and in the purchasing department. There had been a pervasive absence of effective auditing and administrative controls.

He underlined that weak planning, sorely inadequate funding, the absence of truly independent status for the auditing, and too few professional staff were all characteristics of the process. Close cooperation among various United Nations organs apparently went against the grain for agencies with their own funding, management and oversight. In a complex programme that had required common funding and invoked common purpose, absence of full cooperation should not have been tolerated.

The Chairman also emphasized that an expert study commissioned by the Committee had confirmed that the programme had averted the clear and present danger of malnutrition and further collapse of medical services in Iraq, in addition to the support that the programme provided for maintaining the basic sanctions against Iraq. In its conclusions, the Committee suggested that a new chief operating officer be appointed with a clear mandate and authority for administration. The conclusions of the inquiry had underlined the need for strong and independent auditing control and investigatory functions. He said that the problems described in the report were symptomatic of deep-seated systemic issues, not something that could be smoothed over with patchwork changes. The problems had arisen in an organization designed over 60 years before for a simpler time, without the large and complex operational challenges alongside its political and diplomatic responsibilities. He emphasized that a United Nations programme carried with it — and should carry with it — a strong sense of international legitimacy, which no single nation or group would match. However, more than legitimacy was essential to success. He noted that support was in the end dependent on credibility and confidence that have been challenged by the travails of the oil-for-food programme. To some degree, the United Nations had been weakened. That is why reform was so urgent. In concluding, he urged the Council and the General Assembly to take action.⁸⁷

The Secretary-General recalled that it was on his initiative and with the support of the Council that the inquiry had been conducted. He said that few other organizations would have opened themselves to independent scrutiny as fully as the United Nations had done, and that indeed the truth as revealed in the successive reports of the inquiry was painful. He stated that he had no doubt that the United Nations would however benefit from the findings.

The Secretary-General said that he accepted full responsibility for his own failures and regretted his lack of diligence in pursuing investigations of alleged misdeeds. At the same time, he was gratified that the report had found that the oil-for-food programme had succeeded in restoring and maintaining minimal standards of nutrition and health in Iraq, while also helping to maintain the international effort to prevent Saddam Hussein from acquiring weapons of mass destruction. The most important conclusion of the report was the Committee's finding that the general management of the programme was characterized by weak administrative practices and inadequate control and auditing. Here too, he said, as chief administrative officer, he had to take responsibility for the failings revealed, both in the implementation of the programme and more generally in the functioning of the Secretariat. The Secretary-General further stated that many of the problems were rooted in an unclear demarcation of roles and responsibilities among the Council, the Committee established pursuant to resolution 661 (1990) and the Secretariat, and in particular in the Council's decision to retain substantial elements of operational control within the Committee, composed of national diplomats working under highly politicized instructions from their Governments.

He said that the findings underlined the vital importance of proposed management reforms, and that he had already embarked on new reforms in areas where he had the discretion to do so, with a view to strengthening management, oversight, accountability and transparency and ensuring the highest standards of ethics. He stressed however there were many key decisions that only the General Assembly could make. He also emphasized that the rules governing the budgetary and human resources must allow the United Nations to attract, develop and retain a cadre of professionals with appropriate skills to manage large-scale operations. Moreover, he should be allowed to carry out his functions effectively, taking day-to-day decisions on deployment of staff and resources without having to wait for prior approval from the General Assembly or the Council. In concluding, he stated that the findings of the report should be deeply embarrassing to all, and that reform was imperative if the United Nations was to regain and retain the measure of respect among the international community that its work required.⁸⁸

All Council members in their statements commended the efforts of the Independent Inquiry Committee. Most speakers said that in spite of its failings, the oil-for-food programme, guided by the humanitarian imperative, had nevertheless played a crucial role in alleviating sufferings and providing food and medicines to Iraqis.⁸⁹ Many speakers stressed that the responsibility for the failings must be shared by the Council itself, Member States and the Secretariat. Some representatives said that the Saddam Hussein regime, having exploited the good will of the United Nations for personal benefit, was the main culprit.⁹⁰ The representative of Algeria said that the Council, having created the programme, had to accept a great share of the responsibility for the failings,⁹¹ and in the same vein, the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania noted that all the wrongs had happened under the oversight of the Council.⁹² Most Council members said that the findings of the reports and the failures of the oil-for-food programme had epitomized the urgent need for reforms of the United Nations administration, in order to ensure better management, transparency and accountability,⁹³ and some in particular expressed support for the Secretary-General's reform efforts.⁹⁴ The representative of the United States lamented the fact that efforts to reform were often met by resistance from other Member States.⁹⁵

The representative of Iraq stated that from the conclusions in the report it was very clear that the Iraqi people had not received full value for their money, but had for various reasons been robbed of a great deal of what was theirs by right; thus they were the ones who had paid the price for the failings of the programme. He called upon the Council to consider the formation of a group, funded by the United Nations, to help Iraq pursue its assets which had been dispersed through the programme.⁹⁶

UNAMI.⁹⁷ The Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the representative of the United States, speaking on behalf of the multinational force.⁹⁸ The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq made a statement during the meeting.

In his report, the Secretary-General noted that delays in convening the Transitional National Assembly and forming the Transitional Government had reduced the time available for completing the draft constitution by the deadline of 15 August, as stipulated by the Transitional Administrative Law.

The Special Representative noted that the Transitional National Assembly had designated a draft national constitution, and that a national referendum was scheduled for 15 October, with general elections scheduled for 15 December. Among the major points of contention in the drafting process were the issues of federalism, modalities of the formation of regions in addition to the Kurdistan region, the identity of the State, the role of Islam as a source of law, and the distribution of powers with respect to national resources, including oil and water. He expressed concern over the high number of civilian casualties caused by the ongoing violence, as well as the deteriorating human rights situation in the country. He said that, in the experience of the United Nations, addressing both past and present abuses on basis of the rule of law and international norms could go a long way in promoting national reconciliation efforts.⁹⁹

The representative of the United States, in her briefing, stated that in spite of progress in Iraq's political transition insurgents remained capable of carrying out attacks against Iraqi civilians. Noting that the goal of the multinational force was to assist Iraqis to provide for their own security, she said the capacity of the Iraqi security forces was increasing, reducing the influence and effectiveness of insurgents and strengthening Iraq's rule of law capabilities. The multinational force, in close coordination with the Government of Iraq and the Coalition, was providing assistance to strengthen Iraq's law enforcement, justice and corrections systems. It was also working to complete critical infrastructure projects. Success would be achieved, however, when Iraqis themselves could guarantee their own liberty, security and prosperity.

She reported that, as at 19 September, 193,000 Iraqi security personnel had been trained and equipped, and the multinational force had transferred some security responsibilities in a limited number of areas and bases to the Iraqi security forces. She also stressed that the international community, particularly Iraq's neighbouring countries, especially the Syrian Arab Republic, had to do more to stop foreign terrorists entering Iraq and retarding efforts to stabilize and secure the country.¹⁰⁰

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq said that the constitution drafting committee had been expanded to better represent Iraqi society by including communities that did not take part or did not fare well in the January elections. The Minister encouraged the neighbours of Iraq to root out elements of terror and to join Iraq in regional strategic cooperation, according to resolution 1546 (2004). He also stated that, regrettably, the bulk of foreign fighters were entering across the Iraqi-Syrian border, and the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic had yet to demonstrate serious cooperation in helping Iraq to stop the transit.¹⁰¹

At the 5300th meeting, on 8 November 2005,¹⁰² the President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 31 October 2005 from the representative of Iraq addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁰³ transmitting a request by the Government of Iraq to extend the mandate of the multinational force in Iraq, and to a draft resolution submitted by Denmark, Japan, Romania, the United Kingdom and the United States.¹⁰⁴

The draft resolution was adopted unanimously as resolution 1637 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of United Nations, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of the multinational force as set forth in resolution 1546 (2004) until 31 December 2006;

¹⁰⁴ S/2005/704.

Decided that the mandate of the multinational force would be reviewed at the request of the Government of Iraq or no later than 15 June 2006, and declared that it would terminate the mandate earlier if requested by the Government of Iraq;

Decided to extend until 31 December 2006 the arrangements established in paragraph 20 of resolution 1483 (2003) for the depositing into the Development Fund for Iraq of proceeds from export sales of petroleum, petroleum products and natural gas and the arrangements referred to in paragraph 12 of resolution 1483 (2003) and paragraph 24 of resolution 1546 (2004) for the monitoring of the Development Fund for Iraq by the International Advisory and Monitoring Board;

Decided further that the above provisions would be reviewed at the request of the Government of Iraq or no later than 15 June 2006;

Requested that the Secretary-General continue to report to the Council on the operations in Iraq of UNAMI on a quarterly basis;

Requested that the United States, on behalf of the multinational force, continue to report to the Council on the efforts and progress of the force on a quarterly basis; and decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Several Council members and the representative of Iraq made statements after the adoption of the resolution. All speakers emphasized that the resolution was adopted according to the request and wishes of the Government of Iraq.¹⁰⁵ The representative of the United States emphasized that the unanimous adoption of the resolution showed the broad international support for a federal, pluralist and unified Iraq.¹⁰⁶ The representative of the United Kingdom appealed to all Member States, in particular to Iraq's neighbours, to help prevent terrorists, their weapons and financing from entering Iraq.¹⁰⁷ The representative of Denmark urged the Government of Iraq to do its utmost to ensure full respect for human rights by all Iraqi authorities, including security and police forces.¹⁰⁸ The representative of France said that the future government, at any time, would be able to request that the mandate be renewed or that it end. Unless a contrary decision was made by the Council, that mandate would expire on 31 December 2006. Moreover, the Council had foreseen that the mandate would be reviewed no later than 15 June 2006. In that time, the multinational force and the Iraqi forces would need to act in compliance with international law.¹⁰⁹ The representative of the Russian Federation said that UNAMI had its work cut out for it, and had to resolve the significant challenges of organizing the elections and promoting mutual understanding among various factions in Iraqi society.¹¹⁰ The representative of Iraq pledged the continued adherence of the Government of Iraq to the political process prescribed by the Council, and looked forward to country-wide elections on 15 December under a constitution that had been approved by the people of Iraq.¹¹¹

Decision of 9 November 2005 (5301st meeting): letter from the President to the Secretary-General

At the 5301st meeting, on 9 November 2005, the President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 2 November 2005 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council¹¹² concerning the status of funds in the escrow account established by resolution 1284 (1999). The President presented to the Council a draft response letter, approving the proposal contained in the Secretary-General's letter to transfer $2.2 million and €226,493 from the escrow account to be credited against assessments issued in respect of the obligations of the Government of Iraq for the budget of IAEA. The Council decided to send the letter.¹¹³

Deliberations of 14th December 2005 (5325th meeting)

At its 5325th meeting, on 14 December 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 7 December 2005 on UNAMI.¹¹⁴ The Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs and the representative of the United States, speaking on behalf of the multinational force,¹¹⁵ delivered briefings to the Council. The representative of Iraq made a statement during the meeting.

¹¹⁴ S/2005/766, the sixth report submitted pursuant to paragraph 30 of resolution 1546 (2004).

In his report, the Secretary-General noted that observations conveyed by various election observer groups were relatively positive on the conduct of the referendum, and that nation-wide elections were scheduled for 15 December 2005.

The Under-Secretary-General stated that the elections would bring to a conclusion the political transition process outlined in resolution 1546 (2004). He noted, however, that although the framework laid out in the resolution had been intended to promote national dialogue and reconciliation, and thus have a positive impact on the security situation, the latter had not occurred. He said that one of the most important tasks facing the new Council of Representatives which would be formed after the elections, would be to establish a constitutional review commission and enable it to undertake its work in a credible and effective manner. The result of the referendum had shown that a significant proportion of Iraqis could not support the draft constitution.

He noted that the Secretary-General had repeatedly drawn attention to the situation of human rights in Iraq, condemning terrorists, insurgent and paramilitary attacks against innocent civilians, and calling on all sides to strictly observe their obligations under international humanitarian law. The situation required urgent action, particularly by the Iraqi authorities and the multinational force. He welcomed the commitment by the multinational force to take initial corrective steps, particularly with regard to detainees. UNAMI would continue to encourage all concerned to ensure that the basic human rights of all Iraqis were respected. Equally important would be the ability of the new Government of Iraq to deliver quickly on the real needs and expectations of the Iraqi people, including tangible improvements of their everyday lives, and to normalize Iraq's status as a full and respected member of the international community. He emphasized that the capacity of the United Nations in Iraq depended on the commitment of the Member States. He noted that the agreement between the United Nations and the United States concerning the establishment of security for UNAMI had been signed, thus formalizing the existing security arrangements for the United Nations in Iraq.¹¹⁶

The representative of the United States stated that there had been an increase in insurgent attacks in the run-up to the referendum held in October. Attacks were concentrated in four of Iraq's 18 provinces: Baghdad, Ninewa, Al-Anbar and Salahaddin. He reported that about 80 per cent of attacks were directed against the multinational force, while 80 per cent of all casualties were suffered by the Iraqi population. He said that there had been a dramatic increase in intelligence tips provided by the Iraqi population in recent months, indicating increasing popular rejection of the insurgents. Despite persistent security challenges, the multinational force and Iraqi security forces had regained control in some areas previously held by the enemy.¹¹⁷

The representative of Iraq stated that the major challenge facing Iraq as it built its democracy and launched its reconstruction was standing up to terrorism. Defeating it could not be done without the support of the international community, particularly the countries neighbouring Iraq. Stressing that advances in the constitutional referendum and other areas would not have been achieved without great sacrifices by the Iraqi people and without the multinational force in support of political change, or without the United Nations, he said that those gains should not hide the fact that the United Nations presence in Iraq was inadequate. He further stated that it was high time to "close the disarmament file" on the previous regime and to close the UNMOVIC file.

With respect to the question of human rights violations in Iraq, he stated the incidents referred to in the Secretary-General's report had involved only a few individuals, and did not represent the systematic behaviour of the Iraqi forces. The Government of Iraq was addressing the issue, and had expressed desire for international support with a view to developing its institutions in accordance with internationally accepted regulations and norms in the area of human rights.¹¹⁸

Welcomed the announcement by the Independent Electoral Commission of Iraq of 10 February of the certified election results for the Iraqi Council of Representatives;

Stressed the importance of inclusiveness, national dialogue and unity as Iraq's political development moved forward; condemned acts of terrorism in Iraq;

Gave special recognition to the Independent Electoral Commission of Iraq for its role in organizing and administering the elections; also commended the Secretary-General and the United Nations for successfully assisting election preparations, and noted in particular the role of UNAMI; also appreciated the assistance given by other international actors;

Underlined the need for continued and enhanced international support from all States and relevant international organizations to assist Iraq's wide-ranging political, economic and social development;

Also looked forward to the continued efforts of the League of Arab States in support of the political process endorsed in Council resolutions 1546 (2004) and 1637 (2005);

Reaffirmed its support for a federal, democratic, pluralist and unified Iraq, in which there was full respect for human rights.

Decision of 24 May 2006 (5444th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5386th meeting, on 15 March 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 3 March 2006 on UNAMI.¹²⁰ The Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Iraq and the representative of the United States, on behalf of the multinational force.¹²¹ The representative of Iraq made a statement at the meeting.

In his report, the Secretary-General noted that the election held on 15 December 2005 had been the third major national electoral event in Iraq during the past year. A total of 307 political entities and 19 coalitions encompassing more than 7,500 candidates representing almost all Iraqi communities and political affiliations entered the contest for the 275 seats in the Council of Representatives. Despite security concerns, voter turnout was high throughout the country. A total of 12,191,133 valid votes were cast.¹²²

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General noted that Iraq continued to face enormous security, political and reconstruction challenges. In particular, the bombing of the Shia shrine in Samarra on 22 February 2006 and its violent aftermath¹²³ had demonstrated that the political transition in Iraq was increasingly threatened by inter-sectarian violence. Sectarian issues had come to dominate and almost define Iraqi politics and future prospects. He stated that overcoming the sectarian divide was, above all, the responsibility of the Government of Iraq, and warned that failure to take up that responsibility could severely undermine efforts to promote security. He urged all concerned to move swiftly to form a fully inclusive government in spite of recent developments that had made negotiations difficult. The Special Representative reiterated that more determined measures by the Government of Iraq were needed to address the deteriorating human rights situation, particularly with regard to de facto arbitrary detentions, torture and extrajudicial killings. The multinational force and Iraqi security forces had a particular responsibility in that regard. In the absence of such measures, efforts to strengthen national reconciliation and mutual trust might prove elusive.¹²⁴

The representative of the United States stated that insurgents and terrorists remained capable of carrying out attacks to destabilize the legitimately elected Government of Iraq. Although 80 per cent of attacks had been targeted against Coalition forces, the majority of victims were civilians. While December 2005 had seen an increase in attacks in the lead-up to the elections, the number of attacks had decreased from December to January, but risen again in February, owing to the destruction of houses of worship and religious sites. While the number of attacks had dropped, their severity had increased. He reported that 65 per cent of Baghdad was now under the control of detainees, hospital patients and members of Iraq's security forces. These figures translated into a voter participation rate of over 75 per cent, a significant increase from the voter turnout in the election of January 2005, which amounted to approximately 58 per cent (see S/2006/137, paras. 3-5).

Iraqi security forces, in addition to other areas. At the same time, the President of the United States had authorized a decrease in the number of United States combat units in Iraq from 17 to 15, a reduction of approximately 7,000 troops. Several coalition partners were taking or planning similar measures.¹²⁵

The representative of Iraq said that there was a sense among the political leadership of Iraq that formation of a national unity Government would help to improve the security climate, as it would allow all various groupings in Iraq to become enfranchised. On the human rights situation, he said his Government was committed to the respect for human rights and the rule of law, even as it acknowledged that there was still room for improvement. However, the Secretary-General's report did not take into account the extent to which the current security situation had contributed to the inability of the Government to implement its human rights agenda. It would have been appropriate for the report to note those steps taken by the Government to improve the human rights situation, such as the presence for the first time in 46 years of a vibrant and robust civil society sector with unfettered access to a variety of governmental agencies, including jails, prisons and courthouses.

The representative warmly welcomed the statement of the Secretary-General in which he had indicated that it was time to lift the barriers, including sanctions, to the full integration of Iraq into the community of nations.¹²⁶

At the 5444th meeting, on 24 May 2006, the President (Congo) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹²⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the inauguration on 20 May 2006 of Iraq's constitutionally elected Government and congratulated the people of Iraq on this milestone in their country's political transition;

Encouraged the new Government to work tirelessly to promote national reconciliation through dialogue and inclusion and to build an atmosphere in which sectarianism was rejected;

Condemned acts of terrorism in Iraq, including recent horrific attacks on civilians and religious sites aimed callously at provoking intercommunal tensions;

Reaffirmed the independence, sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of Iraq.

Deliberations of 15 June 2006 (5463rd meeting)

At its 5463rd meeting, on 15 June 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 2 June 2006 on UNAMI.¹²⁸ The President (Denmark) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 12 June 2006 from the Secretary-General, concerning the International Advisory and Monitoring Board,¹²⁹ and to a letter dated 9 June 2006 from the representative of Iraq, transmitting a letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq addressed to the President, in which he requested the continued assistance of the international community in providing security and stability in Iraq.¹³⁰ The Council heard briefings by the Assistant Secretary-General and by the representative of the United States, speaking on behalf of the multinational force.¹³¹ The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq made a statement during the meeting.

In his report, the Secretary-General noted that the formation of the first constitutionally elected Government of Iraq, on 20 May 2006, represented the culmination of Iraq's political transition process. However, the protracted nature of the negotiations and the serious deterioration of the security situation following the Samarra bombing in February 2006 indicated that the people of Iraq had arrived at an important turning point. He observed that, unless a strong positive dynamic towards national reconciliation was generated soon, there would be a grave danger of increased polarization, sectarian strife and, potentially, civil war.

The Assistant Secretary-General said that of particular concern was the mounting loss of civilian life as a result of high levels of violence and breakdown in law and order, with intercommunal violence and criminal activities compounding insurgent violence. She emphasized that the new Government must be empowered to heal the social and political divisions through dialogue and confidence-building, strengthen democratic institutions and the rule of law, and improve the living conditions for all Iraqis. She said that a promised review of anti-terror and debaathification legislation would help to shape a more conducive environment for national reconciliation. The Government's effectiveness would largely be defined by its ability to inspire the confidence of the Iraqi people, by taking immediate measures to improve security. That would require the new Government, first and foremost, to gradually take full ownership of its national affairs, including in the vital area of security, assisted, as necessary, by the international community.

The Assistant Secretary-General hoped that the new Government of Iraq would make it a priority to set a robust human rights agenda that addressed both past and current human rights violations, and reiterated that the United Nations remained particularly concerned about the large number of detainees held in detention centres without investigation or criminal charges. At the international level, she noted that there was now an opportunity to build a deeper consensus in support of Iraq's transition, including in the Security Council.¹³²

The representative of the United States stated that, on 7 June, the multinational force and Iraqi forces had killed the Al-Qaida terrorist leader Abu Musa al-Zarqawi and one of his key associates, Sheikh Abd al-Rahman. Although the original leader of Al-Qaida in Iraq was now dead, he had been replaced, and the terrorist organization still posed a threat, as its members would continue to attempt to intimidate the Iraqi people and threaten the country's Government as it moved towards greater stability and prosperity.¹³³

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq stated that the continued cooperation between Iraqi forces and the multinational force remained necessary to provide security in Iraq, and critical to attaining the goal of self-sufficiency in defending his country and securing peace. With the formation of a new, full-term government, and with the recent elimination of the most notorious terrorist, Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, who had been responsible for the bombing of the United Nations headquarters in Baghdad in August 2003, there was now a sense of great momentum among Iraqis and a chance to turn the situation around. He said that, contrary to media portrayal, there was no civil war in Iraq, but there was an increase in incidents of sectarian violence.

He further stated that the mandates of the Development Fund for Iraq and the International Advisory and Monitoring Board were due for review, and his Government proposed to continue the present arrangements according to resolution 1637 (2005). With respect to building international support for regional security and in order to enhance reconstruction plans for Iraq, he stated that the formation of an international contact group, involving the five permanent members of the Council, Iraq's neighbours, the United Nations and the League of Arab States, would be a useful means.¹³⁴

Decision of 10 August 2006 (5510th meeting):

At its 5510th meeting, on 10 August 2006,¹³⁵ the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 1 August 2006 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council.¹³⁶ The President (Ghana) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 3 August from the representative of Iraq addressed to the Secretary-General,¹³⁷ and to a draft resolution submitted by the United Kingdom and the United States.¹³⁸ The draft resolution was adopted unanimously by the Council as resolution 1700 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNAMI for another period of 12 months from the date of the resolution;

Requested the Secretary-General to update the Council on a regular basis on the latest developments of the International Compact with Iraq.

¹³² S/PV.5463, pp. 2-5. On 16 June 2006, the Secretary-General accepted the request of the Government of Iraq to provide support for the International Compact with Iraq, which was launched on 27 July 2006. The Compact was an initiative of the Government of Iraq for a new partnership with the international community, its purpose being to achieve a national vision of Iraq with the aim of consolidating peace and pursuing political, social and economical development. The Compact was chaired jointly by the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq and the Deputy Secretary-General (see S/2006/706, para. 13).

At its 5523rd meeting, on 14 September 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 1 September 2006 on UNAMI.¹³⁹ The Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Iraq and the representative of the United States, speaking on behalf of the multinational force.¹⁴⁰ All Council members and the representative of Iraq made statements at the meeting.

Presenting the report, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General stated that Iraq had become one of the most violent conflict areas in the world. In June the number of Iraqis killed was 3,149; in July the number was 3,438. Numerous attacks and mass kidnappings of civilians revealed a pattern of targeting based on sectarian affiliation, with a clear intent to provoke fear and take vengeance.¹⁴¹

Turning to political developments, he highlighted the International Compact with Iraq as an important vehicle for the international community in helping Iraq become a peaceful and stable country. The key challenge for the Government of Iraq was to develop a truly national agenda that was responsive to the needs and aspirations of all Iraqis. He noted that the Prime Minister had launched the National Reconciliation Plan with a view to addressing the challenges facing his country, and that the Government was also seeking to establish a dialogue with those who had remained outside the political process. He said that the International Compact with Iraq could help the country to become a peaceful, stable and prosperous partner with its neighbours and the wider international community.¹⁴²

The representative of the United States reported that, despite the full formation of a national unity Government in Iraq, violence had increased. He said that the multinational force had continued training and equipping the Iraqi security forces and Iraq police service. Noting that the United Nations contributions in Iraq were “vital”, he urged the Organization to continue to fulfil its mandate under resolution 1546 (2004). He stressed that the multinational force and its combined efforts with the Iraqi security forces continued to support an environment that would allow Iraq’s democratically elected Government to succeed, and for the Iraqi people to realize a brighter, secure and more prosperous future. He said that a joint committee to achieve Iraqi security self-reliance announced by the Prime Minister of Iraq and the President of the United States on 25 July would develop a conditions-based road map for a full transition of security responsibility to Iraqi forces.¹⁴³

Speakers unanimously expressed deep concern at the severe security situation and human rights violations prevailing in Iraq, and stressed the urgent need to address the situation. Most speakers commended the efforts undertaken by the Government of Iraq towards national reconciliation, and welcomed such actions as the National Reconciliation Plan, which was designed to ensure the unity of Iraq. At the same time, they encouraged the Government of Iraq to bolster its activities to ensure a participatory and inclusive political process, for example through the constitutional review process. Speakers also welcomed the launching of the International Compact with Iraq, expressing the hope that the high-level meeting to be held on 18 September would enable the Government of Iraq to present its plan for national reconstruction.¹⁴⁴

The representative of Iraq highlighted the national reconciliation efforts undertaken through the National Reconciliation Plan, aimed at addressing the most important issues that were preventing the achievement of internal peace in Iraq. In the security field, and parallel to the process of national reconciliation, he reported that the Government had adopted a security plan aimed at securing the capital, Baghdad. The Iraqi forces with the support of the multinational force were responsible for implementing the plan. He reported that the past 30 days had witnessed a decrease in violence and crime in comparison to the two months of June and July 2006. In concluding, he expressed the hope that UNAMI

At the 5574th meeting, on 28 November 2006, the President (Peru) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Denmark, Japan, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States.¹⁴⁶ He further drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 14 November from the representative of Iraq,¹⁴⁷ and a letter dated 17 November 2006 from the representative of the United States.¹⁴⁸ The Council unanimously adopted the draft resolution as resolution 1723 (2006), by which it, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of the multinational force as set forth in resolution 1546 (2004) until 31 December 2007;

Decided also to extend until 31 December 2007 the arrangements established in paragraph 20 of resolution 1483 (2003) for the deposit into the Development Fund for Iraq of proceeds from export sales of petroleum, petroleum products and natural gas and the arrangements referred to in paragraph 12 of resolution 1483 (2003) and paragraph 24 of resolution 1546 (2004) for the monitoring of the Development Fund for Iraq by the International Advisory and Monitoring Board;

Decided further that the provisions above for the deposit of proceeds into the Development Fund for Iraq and for the role of the International Advisory and Monitoring Board would be reviewed at the request of the Government of Iraq or no later than 15 June 2007;

Requested that the Secretary-General continue to report to the Council on the operations in Iraq of UNAMI on a quarterly basis;

Requested that the United States, on behalf of the multinational force, continue to report to the Council on the efforts and progress of the force on a quarterly basis.

The representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom, the Russian Federation and France made statements after the adoption of the resolution. The representative of the United States emphasized that the multinational force continued to play a vital role in the security and stability of Iraq.¹⁴⁹ The representative of the United Kingdom said that the resolution came with the important assurance that the Government of Iraq might, at any time, seek a review of the arrangements or the termination of the mandate of the multinational force.¹⁵⁰

The representative of the Russian Federation regretted that the resolution did not reflect his country's proposal on the importance of continuing the political process in Iraq, the foundation of which had been laid at conferences in Cairo and Sharm el-Sheikh.¹⁵¹

The representative of France stated that his delegation was pleased to note that the resolution integrated explicitly the prospect of withdrawal of the multinational force that would come under the sovereign decision of Iraq. He hoped that the progress in the national inter-Iraqi dialogue seen in the meetings in Sharm el-Sheikh in November 2004 and Cairo in November 2005 would continue.¹⁵²

Deliberations of 11 December 2006 and 15 March 2007 (5583rd and 5639th meetings)

At its 5583rd meeting, on 11 December 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 3 December 2006 on UNAMI.¹⁵³ The Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Iraq, and the representative of the United States, speaking on behalf of the Member States contributing to the multinational force.¹⁵⁴ All Council members and the representative of Iraq made statements during the meeting.

In his report, the Secretary-General noted a dramatic increase in violence in Iraq, including militia activities, causing an estimated 5,000 deaths a month, and warned that the prospect of an all-out civil war in Iraq had become more real.

The Special Representative highlighted, among the observations made by the Secretary-General in the report, that a broader and more inclusive political approach was required, that involved all the main neighbours of Iraq and the permanent members of the Security Council. The report also drew attention to how a constitutional review process could provide a framework for national reconciliation, and the fact that, to date, that opportunity had not been seized as effectively as the United Nations had hoped and advised. Iraq now faced three main challenges. First, it needed to develop a fully inclusive political process and ensure equitable access to power, State institutions and natural resources for all, through a process guided by national interest rather than the interest of particular constituencies. There was a particular need to promote confidence-building measures between communities in potential flashpoint areas, such as Kirkuk. Increased efforts were also needed to review the de-baathification process and to adopt an amnesty law without prejudice to the victims' rights to truth and reparation. Secondly, the Government of Iraq needed to establish its monopoly on the use of force. Thirdly, the Government of Iraq needed to cultivate a regional environment that was supportive of Iraq's transition. The Secretary-General also called for a negotiated settlement to break the cycle of violence that currently threatened to abort any political process.

The Special Representative stated that in his previous briefings to the Council he had repeatedly drawn attention to the fact that the achievements of the political transition process in meeting the benchmarks endorsed by the Council in resolution 1546 (2004) had not translated into an improved security or human rights situation, and that efforts made by the Government of Iraq and the multinational force had not prevented a continuous deterioration of the security situation, nor had other national or regional or international attempts at dialogue. He stated that the violence seemed out of control, and this had provoked widespread concern for the future of Iraq.

The Special Representative stated that vigorous efforts were under way to build up the security forces of Iraq, but that even under the most propitious of circumstances it would take years to complete that process. Moreover, excessive reliance on the use of force could indeed preclude national compromise. He emphasized that if Iraq were to stand any chance of avoiding a national catastrophe, a collective sense of urgency, resolve and compromise was necessary.¹⁵⁵

The representative of the United States cited some of the progress achieved, including the establishment of a constitutional review committee to explore options for amending the Iraqi constitution and the initiative to conclude the International Compact. She further stated that security remained a grave concern, as the number of attacks had increased by 22 per cent over the current reporting period. The rise in sectarian violence, 80 per cent of which occurred within a 35-mile radius of Baghdad, had become the greatest threat to stability. She emphasized that Iraq's stability and security was a regional issue, as well as an international one, in which Iraq's neighbours had an important role to play.¹⁵⁶

All members expressed alarm over the soaring number of casualties in Iraq, and emphasized the need to continue to work on a national, regional and international level to address the ongoing violence. Some representatives said that the approaches followed to resolve the situation in Iraq had not been efficient,¹⁵⁷ and endorsed the observations and recommendations in the report of the Secretary-General.¹⁵⁸

Speakers also emphasized the importance of the International Compact with Iraq, and expressed interest in the Secretary-General's proposal for an international conference that included all Iraqi protagonists and external actors concerned. Speakers also underlined the significance of enhancing regional dialogue.¹⁵⁹ The representative of the Russian Federation commended the Secretary-General's proposal to establish a regional group on Iraq that would include the five permanent members of the Security Council.¹⁶⁰

The representative of Iraq stated that his Government was fully aware of who was carrying out the increased acts of violence, namely the Saddam loyalists, the Takfir extremists and criminal gangs. The Government of Iraq would deal very forcefully and decisively with that challenge. He reiterated that the Government intended to broaden the political process, and recalled that the Prime Minister had recently announced a national conference in order to strengthen national reconciliation. However, he cautioned that such an idea would be unacceptable if its purpose was to circumvent the democratic gains achieved by the Iraqis and take the political process back to square one.

With respect to the human rights situation, he reiterated that the Government of Iraq was serious about addressing human rights, but collateral human rights violations resulting from confrontations with terrorists and criminal gangs could not be put on the same level as the deliberate violations perpetrated by terrorists.

Noting the call for a more active role by UNAMI, the representative of Iraq stressed the need to take into account the deteriorating security situation. He stated that the Mission had to put the security of its personnel above all other considerations. While the Mission would be there to assist the Government, because of the current security situation, the desired numbers were not yet possible.¹⁶¹

At its 5639th meeting, on 15 March 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 7 March 2007 on UNAMI.¹⁶² The Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Iraq and the representative of the United States, speaking on behalf of the multinational force, delivered briefings to the Council.¹⁶³ All Council members and the representative of Iraq¹⁶⁴ made statements during the meeting.

In his report, the Secretary-General noted that high levels of violence in Iraq continued to overshadow the political process and reconstruction efforts, and had had an adverse effect on the humanitarian and human rights situation in the country, as well as resulting in the numbers of internally displaced persons and refugees reaching new heights. As a result of insecurity and curfews, access to health service continued to be difficult, and school attendance was reported to have fallen dramatically, to 50 per cent. The Secretary-General warned that Iraq was experiencing a protection and human rights crisis that had the potential of turning into a full-scale humanitarian emergency if the prevailing climate of fear, impunity and disorder was not addressed in conjunction with efforts to meet basic material needs.

The Special Representative stated that the “ever-present menace” of political, sectarian and criminal violence, deepening the humanitarian and human rights crises, was a major feature of the report. He said that Iraq’s neighbours needed to agree on a shared strategy of support for the reform programme and reconciliation efforts of the Government of Iraq, and that a mechanism to achieve such a regional coordination needed to be considered.¹⁶⁵

The representative of the United States stated that in announcing a new way forward, the President of the United States on 10 January had declared the commitment of an additional 21,500 troops as a contribution to the Iraqi-led effort. He also said that the Government of Iraq had allocated about $150 million of its 2007 budget for the demobilization, disarmament and reintegration process for militias, which together with continued political progress on national reconciliation and the passage of a de-baathification law were important components in ensuring long-term stability.¹⁶⁶

All Council members expressed grave concern over the persisting violence, high number of casualties, increasing numbers of displaced and the deteriorating humanitarian situation, and urged enhanced national reconciliation efforts, and regional and international cooperation with a view to reducing the levels of violence in Iraq.

The representative of Indonesia reiterated a suggestion made by the President of Indonesia to deploy United Nations peacekeeping forces after a withdrawal of the multinational force.¹⁶⁷ That representative, as well as the representatives of China, the Russian Federation and France, urged that the multinational force establish a definite timetable to withdraw from Iraq.¹⁶⁸ The representative of South Africa emphasized that, notwithstanding the events that had led to the current situation in Iraq, the Security Council had a responsibility to ensure that the powers granted to the multinational force were exercised in a manner consistent with the decisions of the Council, and that international law and human rights were upheld and respected by all parties.¹⁶⁹

The Vice-President of Iraq noted that re-establishing security and rebuilding the political structure and economy were his country's two goals in 2007. To that end, the Iraqi authorities had adopted a security plan for Baghdad called "Operation imposing law", launched a national reconciliation process, and adopted a budget that would allocate $10 billion to investment. He further noted that while his Government did not want to be overly optimistic, "Operation imposing law" had shown some positive results in the marked reduction in the number of terrorist actions and casualties.¹⁷⁰

Decision of 23 May 2007 (5681st meeting): letter from the President to the Secretary-General

At the 5681st meeting, on 23 May 2007, the President (United States) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 7 May 2007 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council concerning the escrow account established under resolution 1284 (1999) and related resolutions.¹⁷¹ The President presented the draft of a letter to be sent to the Secretary-General in response, approving his proposal that €1,856,754 and $694,771 be transferred from the aforementioned escrow account to settle the arrears of the Government of Iraq to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and to meet its current obligation with respect to contributions to other United Nations activities. The Council decided to send the proposed letter.¹⁷²

Deliberations of 13 June 2007 (5693rd meeting)

At its 5693rd meeting, on 13 June 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 5 June 2007 on UNAMI.¹⁷³ The Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Iraq, and the representative of the United States speaking on behalf of the multinational force.¹⁷⁴ All members and the representative of Iraq made statements during the meeting.

The Secretary-General in his report noted that despite the initial success of stepped-up security measures in recent months, the situation in Iraq remained precarious. Insurgent attacks persisted and civilian casualties continued to mount as it appeared that militia forces were resuming their activities, including targeted killings and kidnappings. The threat that the violence posed to the political process was illustrated by the bombing in the Iraqi Parliament on 12 April that resulted in the death of one lawmaker and injured several others. Political tensions increased over the implementation of article 140 of the Constitution, which detailed the process leading to the determination of the final status of Kirkuk and other disputed territories, as well as over the draft hydrocarbon law, the constitutional review process and a new de-baathification law. The Secretary-General also reported that on 3 May the International Compact with Iraq was launched in Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt. The conference was co-chaired by the Prime Minister of Iraq and himself, and was attended by 75 delegations.

The Special Representative stated that Iraq was faced with an exceptional complex series of overlapping sectarian, political and ethnic conflicts that were beyond the capacity of any one actor or policy to resolve. While contentious issues had been discussed in several forums, the impact of bitter memories, fresh grievances, perceived discrimination, entrenched identity politics and, above all, the horrific and unending killings, had made constructive discussion leading to lasting reconciliation difficult.¹⁷⁵

The representative of the United States noted that there had been signs of a significant shift in the distribution of the violence. While high-profile terrorist attacks and attacks against coalition forces were still frequent, sectarian murders and attacks against civilians in Baghdad had decreased from levels seen previously. He noted that Iraqi security forces were recruiting in greater numbers in the Governorate of Al-Anbar, demonstrating the determination of the people there to participate in the fight against insurgents and Al-Qaida. He looked forward to the upcoming discussion on how to revise the mandate of UNAMI so as to encourage a robust presence to assist Iraq.¹⁷⁶

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq stated that while Iraqis would always be grateful for their liberation from an “absolute despot”, no Iraqi Government official — or citizen — wanted the presence of foreign troops on Iraqi soil one day longer than was vitally necessary. However today, and for the foreseeable future, the presence of multinational force troops was vitally necessary to safeguard Iraqi and regional security and stability. He noted that tribal chiefs and ordinary citizens in the Al-Anbar and Diyala provinces, provinces which for too long had been a haven for Al-Qaida terrorists, had shown signs of taking up arms and standing up against Al-Qaida. He also said that, as a cornerstone of the reconciliation process, work was being done to reverse “overly aggressive” de-baathification, as past practices, commencing in 2003, had failed to differentiate between criminals and non-criminals, and failed to distinguish between those who were ideological members of the party and those who had joined it simply to be able to support their families.¹⁷⁷

All Council members expressed deep concern over the ongoing violence in Iraq, and in particular condemned the bombing targeting the holy shrine in Samarra, which had happened the same day. Many welcomed the International Compact with Iraq as an international framework for building stability and enhancing development and reconstruction in Iraq. Furthermore, they encouraged continued work towards a national reconciliation process in Iraq, including constitutional review, revision of the de-baathification legislation, promotion of human rights and reintegration of militias into the regular armed forces. Council members also welcomed the possibility of expanding the role of the United Nations in Iraq.

Decision of 29 June 2007 (5710th meeting):

At the 5710th meeting, on 29 June 2007, the President (Belgium) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United Kingdom and the United States.¹⁷⁸ The Council heard briefings by the Acting Executive Chairman of UNMOVIC and the representative of the Director General of the IAEA office at United Nations Headquarters in New York. The representatives of China, France, Indonesia, Qatar, South Africa, the United Kingdom, the United States and the Russian Federation, and the representative of Iraq made statements during the meeting.

The Acting Executive Chairman of UNMOVIC cautioned that in the light of the present security environment of Iraq the possibility should not be discounted that non-State actors might seek to acquire and utilize toxic agents or chemical precursors in small quantities, and the possibility of non-State actors getting their hands on other, more toxic, agents was real. He recalled that, after extensive inspections early in 2003, UNMOVIC had not found evidence of the continuation or resumption of programmes of weapons of mass destruction or significant quantities of proscribed items from before the adoption of resolution 687 (1991), but it had identified capabilities that might still remain in Iraq, including scientists, technicians and dual-use equipment. He stressed that under the present circumstances the remaining outstanding issues could not be resolved and therefore contributed to a “residue of uncertainty”. Had Iraq already acceded to the Chemical Weapons Convention, the uncertainty with regard to its chemical weapons programme would have been reduced. It was, of course, up to the Council, exercising its judgement, to determine whether it would accept that “residue of uncertainty” when taking the decision to close the file on Iraq disarmament.¹⁷⁹

The representative of IAEA recalled his report of 7 March 2003, in which he had informed the Council that IAEA had found no evidence or plausible indication of the revival of a nuclear weapons programme in Iraq. Since 17 March 2003, however, the Agency had not been able to carry out most of its activities in the country.¹⁸⁰

¹⁸⁰ Ibid., p. 7.

The representative of the United States noted that the Iraq Survey Group had taken all possible steps to investigate all credible reports of weapons of mass destruction in Iraq and had demonstrated that the current Government of Iraq did not possess any such weapons or delivery systems. He also noted that, since 2003, the Survey Group associated with the multinational force had demonstrated that no significant stockpile of weapons of mass destruction existed in Iraq. The multinational force, however, continued to find residual materials, which it disposed of in cooperation with the Government. It had also found evidence of the capacity of the Saddam Hussein regime to produce long-range missiles and biological weapons. He stated that in summary, with the findings of the Iraq Survey Group and the “aggressive corrective actions” taken by the current Government of Iraq, there was no longer any reason to believe that significant quantities of Saddam-era weapons of mass destruction remained undiscovered in Iraq and, perhaps most importantly, Iraq was no longer a country that had any political intent or military plan to utilize such weapons.¹⁸¹

The representative of the United Kingdom welcomed the commitment made by the Government of Iraq to respect and apply existing international commitments and obligations to the non-proliferation of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons. He also welcomed the Government of Iraq’s full constitutional commitment to taking disarmament forward, and the establishment of a National Monitoring Directorate to oversee and control the movement of dual-use items.¹⁸²

The representative of France noted that while not all issues had been resolved there was only a low level of uncertainty. He stressed the need to ensure that the new Government of Iraq was prepared to take over the relevant mandate of the United Nations inspections monitoring bodies, with a view to ensuring that non-proliferation efforts moved forward. He underlined the need to strengthen regional security and ensure compliance with international non-proliferation obligations.¹⁸³

The representative of Iraq said that the termination of the UNMOVIC and IAEA mandates marked the end of an “appalling chapter” in the history of Iraq. The Iraqi people had paid a very heavy price during that period of time due to the regime’s possession of weapons of mass destruction and its refusal to cooperate with the relevant international bodies responsible for their elimination. He said that, in addition to reiterating its commitment to non-proliferation obligations mentioned in the letter dated 8 April from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq, annexed to the draft resolution before the Council, a draft law on Iraq’s accession to the Chemical Weapons Convention was currently before the Parliament. He stated that Iraq considered the Council’s adoption of the draft resolution as a reaffirmation that all prohibitions related to trade with Iraq and provisions of financial or economic resources to Iraq established by the relevant resolutions — in particular resolutions 661 (1990) and 687 (1999) — were no longer to apply.¹⁸⁴

The representative of South Africa, echoed by the representative of China, recalled that the efforts of the Security Council to disarm Iraq had a regional dimension, and that the Council was bound by its resolutions to create a Middle East free of weapons of mass destruction.¹⁸⁵

The draft resolution was then put to a vote, and was adopted by 14 votes, with 1 abstention (Russian Federation), as resolution 1762 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to terminate immediately the mandates of UNMOVIC and IAEA under the relevant resolutions;

Reaffirmed Iraq’s disarmament obligations under relevant resolutions, acknowledged Iraq’s constitutional commitment to the non-proliferation, non-development, non-production and non-use of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and associated equipment, material and technologies;

Invited the Government of Iraq to report to the Security Council within one year on progress made in adhering to all applicable disarmament and non-proliferation treaties and related international agreements;

Took note of the summary briefings provided by UNMOVIC/the United Nations Special Commission and IAEA on their respective activities in Iraq since 1991;

Requested the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to provide for the appropriate disposition of the archives and other property of UNMOVIC;

Also requested the Secretary-General to transfer to the Government of Iraq through the Development Fund for Iraq all remaining unencumbered funds in the account established pursuant to paragraph 8 (e) of resolution 986 (1995), after returning to Member States, at their request, contributions made by them pursuant to paragraph 4 of resolution 699 (1991).

The representative of the Russian Federation explained that he had abstained from voting because there was no provision for certification by UNMOVIC regarding the closing of the Iraq disarmament file and questions remained about the fate of existing weapons in Iraq, including missiles that had not been destroyed. There had also been no clear answers regarding the presence of weapons of mass destruction. Those concerns had not been fully reflected in the text of the resolution.¹⁸⁶

Decision of 10 August 2007 (5729th meeting):
resolution 1770 (2007)

At the 5729th meeting, on 10 August 2007, the President (Congo) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Italy, Panama, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States.¹⁸⁷ The Secretary-General was present at the meeting. The draft resolution was put to a vote, and adopted unanimously as resolution 1770 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNAMI for another period of 12 months from the date of the resolution;

Decided also that the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and UNAMI, at the request of the Government of Iraq, should advise, support and assist the Government and people of Iraq on advancing their political dialogue and national reconciliation; and promote, support and facilitate the coordination of humanitarian assistance, donor coordination, and capacity-building; and promote the protection of human rights and judicial and legal reform in order to strengthen the rule of law in Iraq;

Requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council within three months and on a quarterly basis thereafter on the progress made towards the fulfilment of all the responsibilities of UNAMI.

After the adoption of the draft resolution, statements were made by the Secretary-General, the representatives of China, France, Indonesia, Italy, Qatar, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States, as well as by the representative of Iraq.

¹⁸⁶ Ibid., p. 14.

The Secretary-General welcomed the Council's decision to renew and strengthen the mandate of UNAMI, and stated that the United Nations would be increasing its role and looked forward to working in "close partnership" with the Government and people of Iraq to enhance assistance in crucial areas such as national reconciliation, regional dialogue, humanitarian assistance and human rights.¹⁸⁸

Most speakers expressed concern over the security situation in Iraq and welcomed the broadened mandate of UNAMI provided by resolution 1770 (2007).

The representative of the United States noted that the resolution marked an important new phase in the role of UNAMI in Iraq, and expanded United Nations involvement in Iraq by providing assistance and expertise to the Iraqi people and Government on domestic reconciliation, by promoting regional understanding in support of reconciliation, and by marshalling resources to help Iraqis affected by the humanitarian crisis. He said that the resolution underlined a widespread belief that what happened in Iraq had strategic implications not only for the region but for the entire world.¹⁸⁹

The representative of the United Kingdom underlined that the Council, having the specific task of maintenance of international peace and security, could not shirk its responsibilities, even though its tasks were difficult. Moreover, adopting resolutions and statements was not enough, it was also necessary to work for implementation on the ground and for real impact on people's lives through delivering security and peace. He also stressed that that required parallel progress on the political and economic tracks.¹⁹⁰

The representative of France highlighted the responsibility of the Government of Iraq to protect affected populations, as well as the United Nations and associated personnel.¹⁹¹ The representative of Qatar stressed the need to implement resolution 1770 (2007) in close cooperation with Iraq and without undermining the mandate of the Coalition forces in Iraq, which had the responsibility to ensure peace and stability, in accordance with international law, including the Fourth Geneva Convention.¹⁹²

While welcoming resolution 1770 (2007), the representative of Iraq stated that his country was trying to overcome the many obstacles it faced. With regard to regional stability, he believed that its neighbours and the international community had obligations in terms of assisting Iraq to combat terrorism, establish security and stability, carry out reconstruction and cope with humanitarian challenges. While Iraq acknowledged that those were national responsibilities, he emphasized that his Government required the assistance of the international community, as represented by UNAMI. Iraq therefore encouraged UNAMI to play an active role in helping to build a prosperous and stable State living at peace with itself and the world.¹⁹³

Deliberations of 19 October 2007 (5763rd meeting)

At its 5763rd meeting, on 19 October 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 15 October on UNAMI.¹⁹⁴ The Council heard briefings by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs and the representative of the United States, speaking on behalf of the multinational force.¹⁹⁵ All Council members, as well as the representative of Iraq, made statements during the meeting.

In his report the Secretary-General noted that against a backdrop of daily attacks, continued high levels of displacement and political gridlock, there had been some positive signs during the month of September, as the level of Iraqi casualties had decreased significantly. The Prime Minister had consolidated a four-way alliance with the major Shiite and Kurdish parties in Parliament and discussions continued on legislation that was central to the process of national reconciliation. The Secretary-General further noted that the status-of-mission agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Iraq had been signed in June 2005. Article XII of that agreement stipulated that it would enter into force on the date of exchange of notes between the parties confirming the approval of the agreement by their respective competent authorities. Although the United Nations had submitted its note in 2005, the Government of Iraq had not yet completed the ratification process and had not delivered the note.

The Under-Secretary-General stated that September had witnessed the lowest number of Iraqi casualties that year. A ceasefire declared by one militia, the pact reached by two other groups, and the efforts of the multinational force and the Iraqi security forces all appeared to have contributed to that effect. Those events, he said, represented a political opportunity to transform military-political developments into a basis for achieving broad national reconciliation.

The Under-Secretary-General noted that resolution 1770 (2007) envisaged a strengthened United Nations role in assisting the Government of Iraq in promoting the constructive engagement of regional countries. The high-level meeting co-hosted by the Secretary-General and the Prime Minister of Iraq on 22 September, as well as the regional dialogue initiated at Sharm el-Sheikh, were encouraging developments.

He stressed the importance, first, of affording the United Nations the necessary political and humanitarian space to implement the new mandate, and second, of protecting and respecting the ability of the Organization to talk with all sides. Noting the new mandate, he urged Member States to provide additional financial and logistical resources for the Mission. Of immediate concern was the status of the trust fund established to support the distinct entity that provided protection for the United Nations in accordance with resolution 1546 (2004) and was required at least until 2008. However, the trust fund would be exhausted the following month, and without immediate financial assistance the ability of the United Nations to operate in Iraq could be severely compromised.¹⁹⁶

The representative of the United States reported that security gains in the provinces of Al-Anbar and Diyala had enabled provincial councils to hold regular meetings, which had in turn led to progress in restoring services, developing the economy and executing provincial budgets. He emphasized that after Iraqis had started mobilizing to evict Al-Qaida and extremist forces from their communities, Al-Anbar and parts of Ninewa and Diyala had seen extraordinary security progress in the past seven months. He said that the Government of Iraq had placed some 21,000 Anbaris on police rolls. He emphasized that international and regional engagement for Iraq was improving and, with the adoption of resolution 1770 (2007), the International Compact with Iraq was also moving forward. He stated that, unfortunately, while claiming to support Iraq, the Islamic Republic of Iran had provided lethal aid to both radical Shia and Sunni militants inside Iraq. The Syrian Arab Republic continued to provide a safe haven for elements of the former regime, who now served as key financiers and leaders of the insurgency.

With respect to the security situation, he stated that the 2007 surge had given besieged communities the confidence to work with the multinational force to defeat Al-Qaida and violent extremists. The overall number of security incidents and civilian deaths had declined in 2007, although they were still at unacceptable levels. Iraqi security forces continued to grow, amid continuing concerns about the sectarian tendencies of some elements in their ranks. The multinational force had employed counterinsurgency practices that underlined importance of units living among the people they were securing, and accordingly dozens of security stations manned by the multinational force and Iraqi forces had been established in Baghdad and across Iraq.¹⁹⁷

Most speakers expressed grave concern over the humanitarian, human rights and displacement situations in the country. Many speakers strongly supported an expanded role for the United Nations in Iraq and welcomed recent initiatives for the constructive engagement of neighbouring countries and other States in the region. Some representatives highlighted the urgent need for accountability for personnel of private security companies, in view of recent incidents of civilian casualties during armed operations including such actors.¹⁹⁸ The representative of the Russian Federation emphasized the need to resolve sensitive political issues pertaining to the future of Kirkuk and tensions on the Iraq-Turkey border, and reiterated that there needed to be a time schedule for the withdrawal of the multinational force from Iraq; he also underlined the right of the United Nations to freely interact with all relevant actors in Iraq.¹⁹⁹ The representative of Italy emphasized that the United Nations was uniquely suited to identify gray areas that could accommodate all the legitimate concerns of the participants in the political process, and that it was up to “all of us to empower it to do so”.²⁰⁰

The representative of Iraq outlined some of the positive developments with respect to main challenges facing the Government of Iraq; levels of terrorist activities had been reduced, and plans for reconstruction and investment had been reinforced. A newly completed accountability and justice bill had been presented to the Council of Representatives as a substitute for the de-baathification laws. Tens of thousands of officials of the former Government had returned to their former positions regardless of their political affiliation. The Government of Iraq had also worked hard to create suitable conditions for the return of refugees and internally displaced persons. With respect to human rights, the representative was pleased to see positive signals in the report of the Secretary-General on the cooperation with Iraqi authorities, and hoped that the upcoming visit of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on torture and other inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment would achieve positive results in reinforcing the protection of human rights in Iraq. He reiterated that Iraq was still suffering from the heavy burden of compensating for the invasion of Kuwait by the Saddam regime, and drew attention to previous requests made by the Government of Iraq to suspend or reduce payments that Iraq could maintain in its current situation.²⁰¹

Decision of 18 December 2007 (5808th meeting):
resolution 1790 (2007)

At the 5808th meeting, on 18 December 2007, the President (Italy) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States.²⁰² The representatives of Iraq, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States made statements during the meeting. The Council heard a briefing by the Assistant Secretary-General, Controller, as the representative of the Secretary-General on the International Advisory and Monitoring Board.

¹⁹⁹ Ibid., p. 7.

The Assistant Secretary-General recalled that the International Advisory and Monitoring Board, as the audit oversight body of the Development Fund for Iraq, had been established to fulfil the mandate set out in resolution 1483 (2003), and subsequently extended under resolutions 1546 (2004), 1637 (2005) and 1723 (2006). The Development Fund had also been established pursuant to resolution 1483 (2003) and held the proceeds of petroleum export sales from Iraq, as well as the transferred balances from the United Nations oil-for-food programme and other frozen Iraqi assets. The Board helped to ensure that the Fund was used in a transparent manner for the benefit of the people in Iraq, and that export sales of petroleum, petroleum products and natural gas from Iraq were made consistent with prevailing international market best practices.

The Assistant Secretary-General highlighted major findings in terms of control weaknesses related to oil revenues. They included the absence of a metering system for oil at oil fields, storage facilities and refineries, the use of barter transactions, inadequate controls over expenditures, unaccounted oil resources in the Fund which were smuggled, as well as contractual practices including exceptions from normal procurement practices. He also stated that the Council of Ministers of Iraq had established a Committee of Financial Experts to prepare for the time when the functions of the Board would need to be undertaken by the Government of Iraq. The Committee had worked alongside the Board to oversee the interim audit in 2007.²⁰³

Recalling that while the Fund and the Board had not been established by the Council, but worked, inter alia, to facilitate the implementation of Council resolutions, the representative of the Russian Federation expressed regret that the Council had not received reports on this matter since June 2006. He expressed his delegation's strong support for a briefing by the Fund in Washington, and urged the Assistant Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to organize such a briefing.²⁰⁴

The Council then proceeded to vote on the draft resolution; it was adopted unanimously as resolution 1790 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Noted that the presence of the multinational force in Iraq was at the request of the Government of Iraq, and reaffirmed the authorization for the multinational force and decided to extend its mandate;

Decided that the mandate of the multinational force should be reviewed at the request of the Government of Iraq or no later than 15 June 2008, and declared that it would terminate the mandate earlier if requested by the Government of Iraq;

Decided that the provisions of the resolution for the deposit of proceeds into the Development Fund for Iraq and for the role of the International Advisory and Monitoring Board and the provisions of paragraph 22 of resolution 1483 (2003) should be reviewed at the request of the Government of Iraq or no later than 15 June 2008;

Requested that the United States, on behalf of the multinational force, continue to report to the Council on the efforts and progress of the force on a quarterly basis.

Annexed to the resolution were a letter dated 7 December 2007 from the Prime Minister of Iraq and a letter dated 10 December 2007 from the Secretary of State of the United States, both addressed to the President of the Security Council.

The representative of the United States welcomed the Council's decision to unanimously support the Government of Iraq's request to sustain the current momentum and renew the mandate of the multinational force. He held that the vote reflected the recognition by the international community of the importance of support for Iraqi efforts to establish a stable and peaceful democracy. Calling on the Iraqi leaders to make progress on national reconciliation, he reiterated the United States commitment to assisting the Government of Iraq in achieving the objectives that it had set out for itself.²⁰⁵

The representative of the United Kingdom stressed that resolution 1790 (2007) came with the assurance that the Government of Iraq could at any time seek a review or termination of the mandate. He informed the Council that the security responsibility for Basrah, the last of provinces previously controlled by the United Kingdom, had been transferred to Iraqi control. He noted that his Government's forces would continue to operate in an overwatch capacity, providing training, mentoring and advice into the future, retaining the capability to intervene in support of the Iraqi security forces, if required.²⁰⁶

²⁰⁶ Ibid., p. 5.

The representative of Iraq emphasized the positive developments that his country had undergone in the past few months, including the establishment of a permanent, democratic constitution, legal institutions and a national unity government comprising all political parties. He reported that his Government continued its efforts to achieve national reconciliation, expanded political participation, respect for human rights and sustainable economic growth, including through implementation of the International Compact with Iraq. While reaffirming the importance of the role of the multinational force, alongside Iraqi national forces, in contributing to the efforts to establish security and the rule of law, he requested that the Security Council should consider extending the mandate of the multinational force in the light of Iraq's achievements over the past few years, namely the strengthened capacity of its army and security forces and significant successes in the security, political and economic spheres. That progress called for a review of the role and authority of the multinational force in order to strike a balance between the need to extend the mandate of the force one last time and the progress made by Iraq in the area of security.

He also said that it was essential for the Government of Iraq to be treated as that of an independent and fully sovereign State. He stated that his Government welcomed resolution 1790 (2007) on the understanding that the functions of recruiting, training and equipping the Iraqi army and security forces were the responsibility of the Government of Iraq.

He further stated that the Government of Iraq welcomed resolution 1790 (2007) on the understanding that this was the final extension of the mandate of the multinational force, and it expected that, in future, the Council would be able to deal with the situation in Iraq without the need to act under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

Stressing the importance of development programmes and reconstruction, the representative of Iraq held that his country should release itself from the legacy of the former regime and be liberated from the financial burdens associated therewith. In that regard, he urged the Council to review its resolutions²⁰⁷ on the Compensation Fund for Kuwait with a view to reducing the current rate of 5 per cent of the Iraqi proceeds from oil to be deposited into the Fund.²⁰⁸

V, part I, sect. D.

Decision of 26 March 2004 (4935th meeting):
resolution 1534 (2004)

At the 4935th meeting, on 26 March 2004, the President (France) drew the attention of the Security Council to a draft resolution;² it was adopted unanimously as resolution 1534 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed the necessity of trial of persons indicted by the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, reiterated its call upon all States, especially Serbia and Montenegro, Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, and on the Republika Srpska within Bosnia and Herzegovina, to intensify cooperation with and render all necessary assistance to the Tribunal, particularly to bring Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić, as well as Ante Gotovina and all other indictees, to the Tribunal and called upon all at-large indictees of the Tribunal to surrender to it;

Requested each Tribunal to provide to the Council, by 31 May 2004 and every six months thereafter, assessments by its President and Prosecutor of the progress made towards implementation of the completion strategy of the Tribunal;

Declared its determination to review the situation, and, in the light of the assessments received, to ensure that the time frames set out in the completion strategies and endorsed in resolution 1503 (2003) can be met.

Deliberations of 29 June 2004 (4999th meeting)

At its 4999th meeting, on 29 June 2004, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 21 May 2004 from the President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia³ and letter dated 30 April 2004 from the President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda,⁴ which in accordance with resolution 1534 (2004) detailed the Tribunals' progress towards implementation of their completion strategies, including what measures had been taken to implement the strategies and what measures remained.

At the meeting, all Council members made statements, in addition to the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Rwanda and Serbia and Montenegro. The Council also heard statements by the President and Prosecutor of each Tribunal.

In his briefing, the President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia noted that in cases involving 59 defendants, the Tribunal had either completed trials, was holding trials or, in the case of guilty pleas, holding sentencing proceedings. Another 33 accused individuals in 17 cases were awaiting trial. He stated that to help ensure that the completion strategy deadlines were met, the Tribunal had taken additional steps, including amending the Tribunal's Rules of Procedure and Evidence to, inter alia, allow referral of intermediate and lower rank accused to "adequately prepared" national jurisdictions. This rule was also no longer limited to States in which the accused was arrested or on whose territory the alleged crime had been committed, but could also be other States having jurisdiction, and which were willing and able to accept such cases. He stressed that those referrals would take place only if the Tribunal was assured that the conduct of trials, detention facilities and treatment of detainees met with applicable international standards. While the Tribunal was committed to supporting the achievement of credible war crimes trials in all States of the former Yugoslavia, neither Croatia nor Serbia and Montenegro currently satisfied such criteria. The Tribunal could try all accused individuals currently in its custody before the end of 2008, and capacity could be increased if some of those entered guilty pleas or were transferred to national jurisdictions. With respect to measures required to maintain and improve the Tribunal's productivity, the President of the Tribunal stressed that staffing, election of judges and cooperation of Member States deserved special attention.

He further explained that the arrears in Member States' contributions had led to a "recruitment freeze" in May 2004, and could lead to the Tribunal being forced to delay, suspend or stop trials. He therefore appealed to those in arrears to make immediate payment of their assessments. He cautioned that if some of the Tribunal's permanent judges were not re-elected to a new mandate beginning 17 November 2005, disruption of the Tribunal's work would be unavoidable. The Secretary-General had accepted his suggestion that judicial elections be held in November 2004 rather than March 2005 as previously scheduled. This would enable the assignment of longer trials to newly elected judges and help avoid disruption of cases. Ad litem judges were another concern that required attention, since their mandate would expire on 11 June 2005 and they could not be re-elected under the present statute. With respect to the need for improved cooperation by Member States, the failure of the States of the former Yugoslavia to arrest and transfer Radovan

Karadžić, Ratko Mladić and Ante Gotovina was a major impediment to the Tribunal's work.⁵

The President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda stated that the Tribunal was on schedule, noting that by the end of 2004 the number of persons whose trials had been completed or were in progress would have reached 48, as projected in the completion strategy. The most important development had been the increase in the number of ad litem judges that could sit at any one time from four to nine, and that had significantly increased the Tribunal's efficiency and flexibility. He noted that the main challenge facing the Tribunal was to ensure progress in the five multi-accused cases involving a total of 22 accused. He stressed that the deadline set by resolution 1503 (2003) would be respected, provided the Tribunal had the necessary resources. The fact that some States had not paid their contributions could threaten the completion strategy and the present freeze in recruitment might have serious consequences for all branches of the Tribunal, he cautioned. He invited the Security Council's informal working group on Tribunals to pay a visit to Arusha "in order to get the full picture of what we are achieving there".⁶

The Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia highlighted her Office's commitment to the deadlines. She noted that the Tribunal would continue to streamline its trials and appeals, and that a number of measures had already been taken to improve the efficiency of the prosecution. She stressed that the transfer of mid- and low-level cases to domestic jurisdictions would free court resources for senior accused leaders, but efforts had yet to be invested in establishing domestic jurisdictions capable of trying war criminals. Among key challenges to ensuring that the Tribunal's mandate was properly and successfully achieved, there were many exigencies beyond its control and which required the participation and cooperation of States, including in the arrest of fugitives, the appearance of witnesses, provision of resources to address the Tribunal's critical financial situation, and the emergence of crucial evidence. She stressed, inter alia, that the failure of the Republika Srpska in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Serbia and Montenegro to arrest or obtain the surrender of 20 indicted persons prevented the Tribunal from joining cases that could be tried together. Highlighting the Tribunals' dire budgetary and financial situation, she stated that her Office had been badly hit by the deferred consideration of the 2005 budget for investigative support for trials and appeals. Regarding cooperation, she said that beyond the arrest of indicted criminals, States had the obligation to grant access to witnesses and documents. While the Croatian authorities had been fully cooperative, Serbia and Montenegro had become a safe haven for fugitives. She also deplored that Karadžić and Mladić had been at large for almost 10 years. In closing, she urged Council members to continue their support for the Tribunal and to ensure that it was given the means necessary to fulfil its full potential.⁷

The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda stressed that the number of accused who remained to be prosecuted at Arusha by 2008 was greater than the number of those whose cases had been concluded in the period from the Tribunal's inception to date. Meeting that challenge required new strategies, and ways had been sought to streamline the processes, eliminate duplication, and improve coordination, focus and efficiency in prosecutions. Noting that the transfer of cases was an important component of the completion strategy, he stated that a draft agreement on the transfer of cases was being prepared as a basis for negotiations with interested countries, including Rwanda. The Prosecutor stressed that the discharge of the Tribunal's mandate depended to a large extent on the level of international cooperation it received to have in place a full complement of prosecuting staff with adequate budgetary support. He noted that the state and level of cooperation with Rwanda continued to be satisfactory. In closing, he further stressed that the Tribunal continued to require assistance in respect of the tracking and apprehension of suspects and accused persons, in the acceptance by States of cases for prosecution within their national jurisdictions, and in the relocation and protection of witnesses. Above all the Tribunal required support in the provision by States of resources, both human and material, which were necessary for the Tribunal to finish its task properly and on time.⁸

In their reactions to the briefings and assessments of the two Tribunals, speakers were pleased to note that the authorities of the two Tribunals were making every effort to complete their work within the time frames set out under resolutions 1503 (2003) and 1534 (2004). Delegations stressed that the exit strategy of resolution 1503 (2003) could be successful only if the international community was fully mobilized and worked to take specific steps to achieve that goal. Speakers expressed concern about factors that could jeopardize the Council's time frames for completion of the proceedings by 2010. Among the different obstacles before the Tribunals, speakers highlighted, inter alia, the lack of resources resulting from Member States' non-payment of their contributions and the need for Member States' full cooperation with the Tribunals in bringing accused individuals to account.

The representative of France, supported by several speakers, opined that to avoid impeding the completion strategies the Tribunals would need the full cooperation of all States, particularly Rwanda and the States of the former Yugoslavia.⁹ He further stated that the arrest and transfer of accused individuals to The Hague or Arusha, access to witnesses and the provision of documents was obligatory under the statutes of the Tribunals. The statutes, in turn, had been adopted by the Council in resolutions adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.¹⁰ While welcoming Croatia's increased cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, the representatives of France, the United Kingdom and Germany called on the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Serbia and Montenegro to cooperate fully with the Tribunal.¹¹ In this regard, the representative of the United Kingdom stressed that his country would maintain appropriate pressure on all concerned States to meet their obligations, and that continued non-compliance with Security Council resolutions by Bosnia and Serbia and Montenegro would "frustrate any aspirations" of integration with Euro-Atlantic structures.¹²

With respect to the shortfall in Member States' contributions to the Tribunals, most speakers urged those concerned to make good on their commitments. The representative of France held that the Tribunals should not be expected to implement their completion strategies without proper funding.¹³ The representative of Brazil assured the Council that his country was making every effort to fulfil his country's outstanding commitments.¹⁴

Turning to the election of permanent judges of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia whose terms would expire in November 2005, several speakers voiced concern at the likely disruption to the Tribunal's work should some of these not be re-elected and expressed their willingness to resolve the issue. The representative of Benin called for the reconciliation of the judges' mandates with the length of trials.¹⁵ The representative of the United Kingdom opined that the Council should consider allowing judges who were not re-elected to complete their cases when such cases were over six months old.¹⁶ In the view of the representative of the Russian Federation, in resolving the issue it was essential to maintain "universally accepted norms".¹⁷ Any "legitimate solution" to the problem, added the representative of Brazil, should be approved by the General Assembly in the light of its "prerogatives" on the subject.¹⁸

Council members generally stressed the importance of the transfer of intermediate and lower rank accused to suitable national jurisdictions, which was an important element in meeting the timelines of the completion strategies. They underlined that prior to such transfers the national jurisdictions concerned must meet the relevant international standards of justice, and noted that the establishment of the special war crimes court in Bosnia and Herzegovina was a positive step in this direction.

The representative of the United Kingdom welcomed the plans of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia to conduct a further review of cases for possible referrals in 2005, but, together with the representatives of Chile and the United States, emphasized that key accused individuals, including Karadžić, Mladić and Gotovina, had to be tried directly by the Tribunal.¹⁹ As to the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, he noted the importance of exploring the possibility of transferring cases to African States where certain suspects were being detained, and hoped that Rwanda would soon meet the requisite standards for such referrals.²⁰ The representative of Benin was of the view that the Tribunals should also pay close attention to the “cultural environment” of those States they referred cases to.²¹ The representative of Romania held that the concept of senior perpetrators could be further adjusted, as provided for in resolution 1534 (2004). This would allow an even greater number of cases to be transferred to national jurisdictions.²²

The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina stated that “in all fairness”, his country had “done a lot” when it came to cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia since the last report of the President and the Prosecutor of the Tribunal.²³ The representative of Rwanda, while noting that the number of suspects considered to be “most responsible” had decreased from 300 to less than 50, requested the Council to ensure that there would be no impunity and that suspects no longer pursued by the Tribunal would face justice. He believed that the international community, and the Council in particular, had a responsibility to bring those suspects to justice, whether at the ICTR or elsewhere. He also urged the Council to recognize the difficulties faced by genocide survivors, including women who had contracted HIV as a result of rapes. While those responsible for those crimes received treatment in United Nations detention facilities, their victims — who were often expected to testify in the cases — were not given the necessary attention.²⁴

The representative of Serbia and Montenegro, while stating that his Government’s cooperation with the office of the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia had been of somewhat “lower intensity” owing to circumstances stemming from the political situation in the country, stressed that the Council could “rest assured” that his Government in the near future would continue to cooperate with the Tribunal.²⁵

At its 5016th meeting, on 4 August 2004, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 21 May 2004 from the President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia²⁶ and a letter dated 30 April 2004 from the President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda to the Security Council,²⁷ which in accordance with resolution 1534 (2004) detailed the Tribunals’ progress towards implementation of their respective completion strategies.

The President (Russian Federation) then read out a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its support for the two Tribunals and welcomed their efforts to carry out their completion strategies;

Strongly encouraged the Tribunals to make every effort to ensure that they remained on track to meet the target dates of the completion strategies;

Stressed that the full cooperation of all States with the Tribunals was not only a mandatory obligation of all States but also was an essential element in realizing the completion strategies;

Reiterated its call upon all States to intensify cooperation with and render all necessary assistance to the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, in particular to bring Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić, as well as Ante Gotovina and all other such indictees to the Tribunal;

Reiterated its call upon all States to intensify cooperation with and render all necessary assistance to the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, including in investigations of the Rwandan Patriotic Army and efforts to bring Félicien Kabuga and all other such indictees to the Tribunal;

Noted with concern that the shortfall in financial contributions from Member States was having a disruptive effect on the work of the Tribunals and urged Member States to fulfil their commitments in a timely manner.

Deliberations of 23 November 2004 (5086th meeting)

At its 5086th meeting, on 23 November 2004, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 23 November 2004 from the President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia,²⁹ and a letter dated 19 November 2004 from the President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda,³⁰ transmitting assessments and reports regarding the implementation of the completion strategies of the two Tribunals, pursuant to resolution 1534 (2004). The Council heard statements by the Presidents and Prosecutors of the two Tribunals. All Council members, as well as the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Rwanda and Serbia and Montenegro took the floor.

The President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia reported that the Tribunal's trial chambers continued to work at full capacity. The Tribunal's ability to adhere to its completion strategy, he noted, centred on referring cases to national courts, improved cooperation by the States of the former Yugoslavia and a continued focus of resources on the most senior-level accused. Rule 11 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence gave the Tribunal's trial chambers the power to refer indictments to the authorities of certain States, although the Tribunal would retain jurisdiction over the most high-level defendants and the most serious crimes. The States of the former Yugoslavia were at varied stages of readiness to receive transfers, he added, with a special chamber of the State Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina expected to become operational by January 2005. He reported a wide variation in the willingness of the above-mentioned States to cooperate with the Tribunal, although the cooperation of Bosnia and Herzegovina remained positive. Concerning the status of the completion strategy, he noted that "significant revision" of the assessment estimates of May 2004 would not be required. The current hiring freeze could nevertheless affect the Tribunal's ability to successfully implement the completion strategy.³¹

The President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda said that the Tribunal intended to complete all its trials by 2008 in line with its completion strategy, but underlined that it could only comply with the strategy time frames if it was provided with sufficient resources. He noted that the shortfall in assessed contributions had required that a hiring freeze be imposed. He noted Rwanda's continued cooperation with the Tribunal, providing relevant documentation and allowing a "steady flow of witnesses" to Arusha.³²

The Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia addressed obstacles that could derail the Tribunal's completion strategy and which were "outside" its control, chief among them a lack of cooperation of States, particularly in the arrest and transfer of indictees, including Radovan Karadžić, Ratko Mladić and Ante Gotovina. The Tribunal's objectives, she underlined, would not be fulfilled unless these and other high-level accused were tried at The Hague. Most fugitives, she reported, had found a "safe haven" in Serbia and Montenegro, while some still resided in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Ante Gotovina had recently been "seen repeatedly" in Croatia. As for the latter's "stepped up" efforts to locate Gotovina, who appeared to benefit from a well-organized support network, the Prosecutor noted that those efforts had yet to produce concrete results. Should such high-level indictees not be arrested and transferred to The Hague "in the months to come", she cautioned, the target dates of the completion strategy might have to be revised. Concerning the "financial crisis" in the Tribunal and the hiring freeze imposed by the Secretariat in May 2004, she stressed that this had already impeded the Tribunal's work and could soon affect the efficiency of the trials.³³

The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda reported that progress had been made on several fronts since his last briefing on 29 June; as projected, all investigations would be completed by the end of 2004. He further reported that discussions were under way with Rwanda and other States concerning the transfer of medium- and lower-level cases. Apart from the former, however, it was proving difficult to find States "ready, able and willing" to take on such cases. The Prosecutor stressed that 14 indictees remained at large, the majority located in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Efforts at dialogue with the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in that respect were ongoing.³⁴

Delegations noted with appreciation the progress made by the two Tribunals since the last presentations. Such progress, they agreed, kept on course the goal of the completion strategies to conclude trials by 2008 and appeals by 2010. They also appreciated the improvement in the efficiency of the Tribunals. Many delegations expressed their support for the idea of referring medium- and lower-level indictees to national jurisdictions. The representative of the United Kingdom praised the Tribunals for doing an excellent job in preparing national courts to receive such cases, as evidenced by the establishment of a war crimes chamber in Bosnia and Herzegovina.³⁵

Concerns were voiced by some delegations, however. The representative of Brazil, echoed by the representative of Benin, held that the transfer of cases to local courts should reflect the actual conditions of those judicial institutions, and that international principles and standards of due process must be respected by the third-party Tribunals.³⁶ The representative of France was concerned about the “climate of intimidation” and, in general, the climate in which the authority of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia was challenged, which put in doubt the environment in which some national jurisdictions were to try cases.³⁷

The representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia expressed their readiness to assume part of the Tribunal’s work, the former calling upon Member States to provide technical and financial support to that end.³⁸ The representative of Croatia stated that his country had started a programme with the support of the Netherlands to train legal experts in prosecuting war crimes. The representative of Rwanda considered the transfer of cases to its national jurisdiction to be a key factor in ensuring that all major perpetrators of genocide faced justice, even after the completion of the Tribunal’s mandate.³⁹

Delegations shared the concern that a number of problems, if left unresolved, might hamper the smooth implementation of the completion strategies. Of particular concern was the lack of cooperation from some States in terms of the arrest of indictees as well as access to witnesses and documentary evidence. At the same time, speakers were in agreement that, as long as the indictees remained at large, in particular those at high levels, the Tribunals would not be able to complete their mandates. The representatives of Brazil and Spain hinted that the Council might eventually need to adjust the completion strategies.⁴⁰

On the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, the representative of the United States, echoed by the representative of the United Kingdom, reiterated that Serbia and Montenegro, Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Croatia must fulfil their legal obligation to cooperate fully with the Tribunal by apprehending all indictees.⁴¹ It was disturbing, said the representative of France, to learn that effective and well-placed networks still protected those responsible for major crimes.⁴² On the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, the representative of the United States urged the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Kenya to fulfil their obligations to apprehend the indictees. Those fugitives, he said, continued to incite conflict in the Great Lakes region.⁴³

The representative of Croatia contended that his Government was in no way evading its responsibility.⁴⁴ Without directly responding to the charges of non-cooperation, the representative of Serbia and Montenegro reiterated his country’s willingness to cooperate with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.⁴⁵ The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina regretted that the most recent activities of the authorities of his country were not recognized by the Tribunal, including the arrests of eight indictees.⁴⁶

At its 5199th meeting, on 13 June 2005, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 25 May 2005 from the President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia⁴⁷ and a letter dated 19 November 2005 from the President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda,⁴⁸ transmitting assessments of the completion strategies of the Tribunals by their Presidents and Prosecutors. Council members and the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Rwanda and Serbia and Montenegro made statements. The Council heard statements by the Presidents and Prosecutors of the two Tribunals.

Highlighting the main points in his report, the President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia stressed that the Tribunal had been working to meet the goals of the completion strategy at an “unrelenting” pace. On the referral of cases to national jurisdictions, he stated that the War Crimes Chamber of the State Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina was now ready to accept cases. He noted a “dramatic increase” in the number of indictees and fugitives transferred to the Tribunal, thanks mostly to the efforts of the authorities of Serbia and Montenegro, sometimes together with the authorities of the Republika Srpska. However, he reminded Croatia, the Republika Srpska and Serbia and Montenegro of their obligation to locate and arrest Ante Gotovina, Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić. He reiterated that the Tribunal would not have fulfilled its historic mission until those three fugitives were in The Hague.⁴⁹

The President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda reported on the progress made at the Tribunal, and stated that the number of accused in completed and ongoing cases was 50, including one prime minister, 11 government ministers, and many other high-ranking individuals. This illustrated the importance of the Tribunal in establishing the guilt or innocence of the alleged leaders of the 1994 genocide who would probably otherwise not have been brought before a court. He confirmed that the Tribunal was on schedule to complete its trials by the end of 2008, as called for by the completion strategy.⁵⁰

The Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia cited as positive developments the fact that no less than 20 accused had been surrendered since November, including 10 who had been fugitives for an extended period. However, those developments were overshadowed by the continuing failure of the relevant authorities to arrest and transfer 10 remaining fugitives. This created uncertainties that were hampering a proper planning of the trials, and might oblige the Tribunal to conduct separate trials where a joined trial would have been possible. She reiterated that the assets of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and the European Force (EUFOR) would be invaluable in bringing Karadžić and others to justice.⁵¹

The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda stated that with the completion of all the remaining investigations in 2004, the focus of the prosecution would be the courtroom prosecution of the cases of the 25 accused, and the preparation of cases regarding the 16 remaining detainees and others indicted. The prosecution would carry out as a high priority a “more effective tracking and apprehension strategy” for the 14 fugitives. For this purpose, he had agreed to establish a joint mechanism with each of the five African countries in which the remaining fugitives were thought to be located. He also had useful discussions with the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) and the African Union on modalities of tracking the fugitives. On the referral of cases, he said that Rwanda continued to be the country primarily interested in such referral while three European countries had also expressed an interest in taking on some cases.⁵²

Most Council members reaffirmed the need for the two Tribunals to abide by their completion strategies, noting with satisfaction the progress made in this respect. They welcomed the establishment of the War Crimes Chamber of the State Court in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The representative of Japan voiced concern, however, at the indication that the trial activities of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia might run into 2009.⁵³ This concern was shared by the representative of Denmark, who maintained that it was crucial that the Tribunals finalized their work on time.⁵⁴ On the other hand, the representative of Brazil was of the view that insisting on rigid deadlines as set out in the completion strategy could frustrate the pursuit of justice and the goal of ending impunity.⁵⁵ The representative of France insisted that the timetable given to the Tribunals should not result in impunity by default.⁵⁶

The representative of the United Kingdom welcomed the commitment of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) to monitor the conduct of cases referred to national jurisdictions. On the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, he raised concern about questions concerning the death penalty and local capacity.⁵⁷

The representative of Denmark made clear that for the countries of the former Yugoslavia full cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia was a precondition for their integration into European and trans-Atlantic structures.⁵⁸ The representatives of Croatia and Serbia and Montenegro reaffirmed their countries' willingness to cooperate with the Tribunal. As a sign "illustrating the scope of cooperation" with the Tribunal, the representative of Serbia and Montenegro cited the fact that as many as 13 indicted persons from Serbia and two from the Republika Srpska had voluntarily turned themselves in to the Tribunal since November 2004.⁵⁹ The representative of Croatia stated that to close the "last remaining issue" in cooperation with the Tribunal, it had begun implementing its action plan, which had been presented to the European Union task force in April.⁶⁰ The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina maintained anew that lasting peace and stability could not be achieved in the region as long as major indictees, in particular Karadžić and Mladić, remained at large.⁶¹ The representative of Rwanda voiced concern about the completion strategy, stating that it should not be seen as an exit strategy for the obligations of the international community to bring all the suspects to justice. On the referral of cases, he reaffirmed Rwanda's willingness to enter into agreement with the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda not to seek the death penalty in any of the transferred cases.⁶²

At its 5328th meeting, on 15 December 2005, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 30 November 2005 from the President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia,⁶³ and a letter dated 5 December 2005 from the President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda,⁶⁴ transmitting the annual reports on the implementation of the completion strategies of the Tribunals. The Council heard statements by the Presidents and Prosecutors of the Tribunals. All Council members, as well as the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Rwanda and Serbia and Montenegro, made statements.

The President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia stated that Ante Gotovina, one of the Tribunal's highest ranking accused, had been arrested in Spain and had been transferred to the Tribunal on 10 December. He also informed the Council that one case had been referred to Croatia, two had been referred to the War Crimes Chamber of the State Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and more referral motions were pending final decision. He further stated that the failure to arrest the remaining six indictees at large remained a "major concern", citing insufficient cooperation by the Republika Srpska in providing information leading to the arrest of the two "most wanted fugitives", Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić.⁶⁵ The Prosecutor of the Tribunal stressed that the failure to bring Karadžić and Mladić into the Tribunal's custody was the "major impediment" to the success of its work.⁶⁶

The President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda reported that considerable work remained to be done, and stressed the need for cooperation by States in relation to the transfer of cases and arrest of fugitives, stressing that impunity for perpetrators of mass atrocities was not a viable option.⁶⁷ The Prosecutor of the Tribunal elaborated on a number of significant developments that had occurred in the implementation of the Tribunal's completion strategy. He noted that 30 case files had been handed over to the Rwandan Prosecutor General to consider prosecution before the Rwandan courts, while two cases had been referred to a European jurisdiction which had agreed to consider the targets for prosecution, and one prosecution had already commenced in a European jurisdiction. He further noted that 19 indictees remained at large, many of whom, according to his sources, continued to hide in inaccessible areas of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Félicien Kabuga had been located in Kenya by the Tribunal's tracking team and other sources. He therefore stressed that the Government of Kenya should be "encouraged to make more intensive efforts" to arrest and hand him over.⁶⁸

The Council members welcomed the arrest and transfer of Ante Gotovina to the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, and the cooperation of the Croatian and Spanish authorities in that regard. At the same time, a number of delegations called on the Serbian authorities to intensify their efforts to apprehend the remaining high-ranking indictees. The representative of the United States reiterated that full cooperation with the Tribunal remained a condition for further integration into Euro-Atlantic institutions for the States of the former Yugoslavia, and called on Kenya to transfer Kabuga to the Tribunal for Rwanda, stressing that those fugitives continued to foment conflict in the Great Lakes region.⁶⁹

The representative of Rwanda stated that his country had the capacity to handle all cases transferred from the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda.⁷⁰ The representative of Bosnia and Herzegovina reiterated his country's strong commitment that all those indicted for war crimes must be brought to justice.⁷¹ The representative of Serbia and Montenegro reiterated the readiness and full political will of his country's highest authorities to do all in their power to transfer the remaining indictees to the custody of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.⁷²

At its 5453rd meeting on 7 June 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 29 May 2006 from the President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia⁷³ and a letter dated 29 May 2006 from the President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda,⁷⁴ transmitting reports on the progress made with respect to the completion strategies of the Tribunals. The Council heard statements by the Presidents and Prosecutors of the Tribunals. All Council members and the representatives of Rwanda and Serbia⁷⁵ made statements.

With respect to the completion strategy, the President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia confirmed that trials would run into 2009 and reiterated that the estimate of all trials finishing by that date might hold, provided that the multi-accused trials ran smoothly; the cases referred to the former Yugoslavia were not deferred back to the Tribunal; the new amendment to rule 73 bis was effectively implemented so that indictments were more focused; and the six remaining high-level fugitives would shortly be transferred to the jurisdiction of the Tribunal. He also updated the Council about the latest developments following the deaths of Milan Babić and Slobodan Milošević.⁷⁶

The Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia informed the Council that she had filed 13 motions requesting the transfer of cases to the domestic jurisdictions of the former Yugoslavia, after assessing that the local judiciaries would be capable of trying such cases. She called on Serbia to do much more to arrest and transfer Mladić, while she stated that the arrest of Karadžić was the shared responsibility of Serbia, the Republika Srpska, NATO and EUFOR. She also expressed disappointment that the investigation by Russian authorities had failed to produce results on the whereabouts of Vlastimir Djordjević, accused of being responsible for serious crimes committed in Kosovo by Serbian forces, and the "long and unexplained delay" in the transfer by Russian authorities of a fugitive detained in the Russian Federation, Dragan Zelenović. This did "not allow for optimism regarding the future of the Tribunal's cooperation with the Russian Federation", she said.⁷⁷

The President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda stressed that, to ensure the successful implementation of the Tribunal's completion strategy, continuity and maximum efficiency were essential, and it was preferable in that regard to extend the judges' mandate for about 19 months instead of electing new judges in 2007.⁷⁸ The Prosecutor of the Tribunal for Rwanda drew attention to the referral of cases to national jurisdictions, which continued to be a slow and challenging process, and the large number of remaining fugitives. He reiterated that the Government of Kenya needed to be encouraged to make more intensive efforts to arrest Félicien Kabuga, who according to intelligence continued to reside in Kenya.⁷⁹

The Council members encouraged the two Tribunals to meet their completion strategies by exploring all necessary and appropriate measures. Many delegations welcomed the recommendations made by the working group on speeding up of trials of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, as well as the specific measures taken by the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda to ensure that work progressed in a timely fashion. The representative of the United States stressed that the international community could ensure the success of the completion strategy of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia by supporting the Tribunal's efforts towards creating the capacity for domestic trials of low- and medium-level cases.⁸⁰ Members generally supported the extension of the terms of office of the 11 permanent judges of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda from the point of view of fulfilling its completion strategy. The President (Denmark) recalled that she had circulated a draft resolution to that effect for the Council's consideration, and expressed the hope that the Council would be able to adopt the text shortly.⁸¹

With regard to the inquiries into the deaths of Milan Babić and Slobodan Milošević, the representative of the United States believed that the inquiries initiated by the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia were "thorough and appropriate responses," and commended the Tribunal's commitment to implementing the recommendations of the inquiries.⁸² The representative of the Russian Federation questioned why Slobodan Milošević, in spite of his deteriorating health, had not been admitted to a clinic in the Netherlands, claiming that his health problems had not been properly monitored. Further, he stated that his delegation "did not accept the negative assessment" by the Prosecutor of the cooperation between the Russian Federation and the Tribunal, and stressed that his country had made "necessary efforts" to meet the Tribunal's request for assistance. Finally, pointing to the Tribunal's increased budget, he said that the Tribunal must strictly comply with its completion strategy.⁸³

The representative of the United Kingdom hoped that the Russian authorities would continue to make every effort to resolve difficulties so that Zelenovic could quickly be transferred to The Hague. He also looked forward to the Russian authorities continuing to do all they could to trace Djordjevic, and, if found, immediately transfer him to The Hague.⁸⁴

The representative of Serbia reiterated the readiness and full political will of his country's authorities to do all in their power to transfer the remaining indictees to the custody of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.⁸⁵ The representative of Rwanda said that his Government would welcome appropriate measures that would ensure that all accused were brought to justice, even after that Tribunal's mandate had expired.⁸⁶

At its 5594th meeting, on 15 December 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 15 November 2006 from the President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia⁸⁷ and a letter dated 30 November 2006 from the President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda,⁸⁸ transmitting reports on the progress made with respect to the completion strategies of the Tribunals. The Council heard statements by the Presidents and Prosecutors of the two Tribunals. In addition to all the Council members, statements were made by the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Rwanda and Serbia.

Tribunal, and gave an updated prognosis for the implementation of the completion strategy. He noted that, barring any unforeseen difficulties, all trials of accused in custody of the Tribunal were scheduled to be completed by 2009.⁸⁹ The Prosecutor of the Tribunal stated that the recent decision of NATO to allow Bosnia and Herzegovina and Serbia into the Partnership for Peace, was “a powerful signal that the international support for the Tribunal was decreasing”. She therefore wished to request the Council to consider whether the Tribunal should stay open until Karadžić and Mladić were tried in The Hague. She stressed the importance of this for the tens of thousands of victims who had placed their hope in the justice provided by the United Nations.⁹⁰

The President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda drew attention to the situation of some of the persons acquitted by the Tribunal, some of whom were at this time under the protection of the Tribunal in Arusha, and were in need of a new country of residence.⁹¹ The Prosecutor of the Tribunal noted that, increasingly, many States had become willing to share the burden of prosecuting alleged génocidaires who had taken up residence within their country. Those countries included Canada, the United States and several States in Europe.⁹²

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the question of the NATO invitation to Bosnia and Herzegovina and Serbia into the Partnership for Peace should not be construed as a weakening of support for the Tribunal. She noted that their further integration with European Union and NATO would depend on the extent of progress with respect to the Tribunal.⁹³

The representative of Serbia emphasized his country’s determination to cooperate with the Tribunal, pointing out that 16 indictees had been transferred to The Hague since January 2005 thanks to its “outstanding efforts”.⁹⁴

The representatives of the United Republic of Tanzania and China called for international support for national jurisdictions to improve their capacities to prosecute cases transferred to them.⁹⁵ The representative of Rwanda reiterated his country’s desire to receive more referrals, saying that it was time for it to assume “full national responsibility”.⁹⁶

Speakers stressed the need to implement the completion strategy on time. The representative of France stressed that it constituted goals but not cut-off dates and that, for his delegation, it was clear that the mission of the Tribunals could not be considered complete as long as the principal fugitive accused had not been judged.⁹⁷ Similarly, the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania said that the arrests and trials of high-ranking fugitives needed to be factored into the completion strategy.⁹⁸ The representative of the United States agreed, suggesting that the Council should begin discussions as to how best to guarantee that those fugitives faced justice “no matter when they were apprehended”. Supported by the representative of the United Kingdom, she said that the Tribunal’s doors would “remain open for Mladić and Karadžić”.⁹⁹

On the other hand, the representative of Japan noted that if the Tribunals should choose to await their arrests, “it would be very difficult to justify and sustain our support” to them through the regular budget. He reiterated that possible funding beyond the deadline should be met through voluntary contributions by States concerned.¹⁰⁰ The representative of the Russian Federation insisted that the Tribunals should strictly implement the completion strategy, which had been approved by the Council. The fact that Mladić and others had not been brought to the Tribunal could not justify the indefinite duration of its work, in his opinion.¹⁰¹

2007 from the President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda,¹⁰³ transmitting assessments of progress made towards the implementation of the completion strategies of the Tribunals. In addition to all Council members, statements were made by the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Montenegro,¹⁰⁴ Rwanda and Serbia. The Council heard statements by the Presidents and the Prosecutors of the two Tribunals.

The President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia elaborated on recent progress made in making trials more efficient. This included the effective use of rule 73 bis, according to which the Prosecutor could be requested or ordered to reduce the indictment in some of the cases.¹⁰⁵ The Prosecutor of the Tribunal highlighted some positive developments in Serbia's cooperation with the Tribunal, while stressing that the continued impunity enjoyed by Mladić and Karadžić undermined all efforts to bring justice to the victims, while affecting the credibility of the Tribunal.¹⁰⁶

The President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda reiterated the obstacles to the completion strategy, including the 18 accused persons that remained at large.¹⁰⁷ The Prosecutor of the Tribunal noted that 6 of the 18 fugitives had been earmarked for trial because of their respective leadership roles in the genocide of 1994. He stressed that in the event that those fugitives were arrested too late for their trials to conclude by the end of 2008, or if they remained at large by that date, the Council's guidance would be needed regarding how to deal with their cases. In that context, he noted that Félicien Kabuga had been seen by independent sources in Nairobi as late as April 2007, and that most of the remaining fugitives were reported to be in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. He further noted that Rwanda had enacted legislation, which had come into force, and which excluded the application of the death penalty in cases referred from the Tribunal. He considered that that, in addition to other measures taken, had made Rwanda eligible for referral of cases under rule 11 bis of the Tribunal's rules.¹⁰⁸

Most speakers commended the recent arrests of General Zdravko Tolimir and General Vlastimir Djordjevic that had been facilitated by the Serbian, Montenegrin and Republika Srpska authorities. They highlighted the need to bring all indictees to justice, particularly Radovan Karadžić, Ratko Mladić and Félicien Kabuga.

The representative of the Russian Federation highlighted the fact that General Djordjevic had been arrested in Montenegro, not in his country.¹⁰⁹ The Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia responded that that did not mean that General Djordjevic had never been in the Russian Federation, adding that, following General Tolimir's arrest, it had been confirmed that General Djordjevic had also been in the Russian Federation in 2005.¹¹⁰

On the obligation of States to cooperate with the Tribunals, the representative of the United Kingdom stressed that the ongoing process aimed at integrating Serbia into the European Union did not mean that the European Union had put less emphasis on Serbia's cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.¹¹¹ In response, the representative of Serbia stated that his Government had responded to the Tribunal's 1,600 requests in a timely and speedy manner, leaving only 2 to 3 per cent of those requests still pending.¹¹²

With respect to the residual issues remaining after the expiration of the mandates of the Tribunals, the representative of Panama believed that the Council needed to consider a possible transfer of the Tribunals' work to the International Criminal Court.¹¹³ Specifically, the representative of Rwanda requested that after the mandate of the Tribunal for Rwanda had expired, all its pending cases be transferred to the national jurisdiction of his country, and called on the Council to adopt a resolution which would obligate States to fully cooperate with Rwanda in prosecuting the pending cases. He also stressed that convicted persons needed to serve their sentences in Rwanda, and said he was surprised by the information provided by the President and Prosecutor that the Tribunal was considering transferring cases and sending convicted persons to France.¹¹⁴

Speakers remained divided about the implementation of the timetable for the Tribunals to complete their work by 2008. The representatives of France and the United States opined that all indictees must be prosecuted even after the envisaged deadline, with the latter, echoed by the representative of the United Kingdom, declaring that the fugitives could not be allowed to escape justice by “outlasting the Tribunals”.¹¹⁵ On the other hand, the representative of the Russian Federation made clear that his country opposed unlimited extensions of the Tribunals’ work.¹¹⁶ The representative of China noted that, as the Tribunals were wrapping up their work, any follow-up actions by the Council must be in line with the principles contained in the completion strategies.¹¹⁷

Regarding the legacy of the two Tribunals, many speakers maintained that, in addition to the prosecutions and judgements they had made, as well as the residual functions they were still performing, the Tribunals had set an international legal precedent which could guide future courts in similar situations.

Deliberations of 10 December 2007 (5796th meeting)

At its 5796th meeting, on 10 December 2007, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 12 November 2007 from the President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia¹¹⁸ and a letter dated 16 November 2007 from the President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda,¹¹⁹ transmitting reports on the progress of the completion strategies of the Tribunals. The Council heard statements by the Presidents and Prosecutors of the two Tribunals. In addition to Council members, statements were made by the representatives of Croatia, Rwanda and Serbia.

The President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia highlighted the significant progress made in achieving the objectives of the completion strategy.¹²⁰ The President of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda reported steady progress in the judicial output, and stated that the Tribunal had continued to help strengthen the capacity of the judicial system in Rwanda.¹²¹

Referring to Mladić and Karadžić, the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia reiterated that it was a “stain” on the Tribunal’s work that the two individuals were still at large. She reiterated her criticism of Serbia for not fully cooperating with her office, pointing to “serious deficiencies” in its approach as well as “wilful obstruction”. She called on the European Union to maintain its principled position by insisting on Serbia’s full cooperation with the Tribunal as a condition in the European Union pre-accession and accession processes.¹²² The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda reported that, thanks to the recent arrests in France and Germany, the number of fugitives had dropped from 18 to 14. Of the remaining 14, four were considered sufficiently high level for trial in Arusha, including Félicien Kabuga. He cautioned that, if new arrests were to be made in 2008, it would add to the Tribunal’s workload and the Council would have to decide whether to enable the Tribunal to continue.¹²³

Speakers called on Serbia to make all efforts to arrest and hand over all the remaining fugitives without any delay, and many urged Kenya to cooperate with the Tribunal for Rwanda in apprehending Kabuga. The representative of the United Kingdom called on the Democratic Republic of the Congo to arrest, with the full the support of MONUC, a number of the fugitives believed to be in the eastern part of that country.¹²⁴

The representative of the Russian Federation maintained that both Tribunals must be guided by the deadlines established by the Council so that their work would be completed by the end of 2010. The fact that some indictees were not present could not be a reason for a possible mandate extension. National jurisdiction should take over, he said. He also expressed concern over information that one of the indictees of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia seemed to enjoy protection by the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo, and that the Mission did not sufficiently cooperate with the Tribunal.¹²⁵

Many speakers addressed the issue of a residual mechanism to take over after the two Tribunals had closed down. Important aspects of such a mechanism highlighted were future prosecutions of indictees still at large, the involvement of national jurisdictions in such prosecutions, and the issue of the invaluable judicial legacy of the jurisprudence of the Tribunals. Members expressed appreciation for the proposals made by the Tribunals so far, and called for prompt and serious consideration and development of such mechanisms. The representative of Croatia called on the Council to give greater attention to the role that national legal systems in the region could play in carrying out the residual functions of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.¹²⁶

The representative of Rwanda opined that court archives, documents and material of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda should be transferred to his country, since they constituted an important part of the country's history and were of critical importance to reconciliation and civic policies.¹²⁷

In response to the comments of the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, the representative of Serbia asserted that his Government cooperated consistently with the Tribunal to the best of its ability, and reiterated its full commitment to bring the cooperation to a successful end. While stating that all those who committed war crimes should be indicted by the Tribunal, he expressed his belief that the four remaining fugitives "will be located and apprehended in the nearest future".¹²⁸

37. Children and armed conflict

Deliberations of 20 January 2004 (4898th meeting)

On 10 November 2003, the Secretary-General submitted a report on children and armed conflict,¹ in which he reported on advances made towards the protection of children affected by armed conflict and the follow-up to resolution 1460 (2003) and issued a set of recommendations. The recommendations related to systematically incorporating children's issues into peace negotiations, peace accords, post-conflict programmes and also including them in the mandate of all United Nations peace operations. He further recommended giving serious consideration to deploying child protection advisers in every operation, developing a systematic and concerted monitoring and reporting mechanism, and ending impunity. Annexed to the Secretary-General's report for the first time was a list of parties that recruit or use children in situations of armed conflict not on the agenda of the Security Council.

¹ S/2003/1053 and Corr.1 and 2, submitted pursuant to paragraph 16 of resolution 1460 (2003).

At its 4898th meeting, on 20 January 2004, the Security Council included the above-mentioned report in its agenda. The Council was briefed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Statements were made by all Council members as well as by the representatives of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Egypt, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union),² Israel, Japan, Kenya, Liechtenstein, Mali (on behalf of the Human Security Network), Mexico, Monaco, Myanmar, Norway, Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda and Ukraine.

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General stated that significant and concrete progress had been made, mainly as concerned advocacy, development of standards and innovative initiatives, but that this created a “cruel dichotomy” when contrasted to the general situation for children on the ground, which remained grave and unacceptable. He therefore urged the Council to lead the way into an “era of application”. He called in particular for the establishment of a systematic, coordinated monitoring and reporting mechanism to provide reliable reports on violations against children, which could serve as “triggers for action”. He stated that, in this regard, the Council must lead the way and was the most important destination for action because of its primary responsibility for peace and security. He stressed that, in the annexes to the Secretary-General’s report which listed parties to conflicts that continued to recruit and exploit children, the Council had before it all information necessary for action and urged the Council to respond to the lists with concrete action. This required, besides increased political and material support for field programmes, that the protection and rehabilitation of children be systematically incorporated into all stages of peace processes, and that the United Nations cooperate with regional and subregional organizations, as well as local efforts, to strengthen their advocacy and programme activities.³

The Executive Director of UNICEF explained why the United Nations efforts so far had fallen short of what was required to protect children. She reported that rights of children were not only violated by recruiting child soldiers but that sexual violence, particularly in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, had a devastating impact. UNICEF was working with various partners to provide care and support for survivors of sexual violence and to demobilize child soldiers. With regard to engaging in dialogue with groups and Governments using child soldiers, the Secretary-General’s lists of parties to conflicts that continue to recruit and exploit children as child soldiers had been a valuable advocacy tool. She also drew attention to a new tool, the Guide to the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict, issued that day, which had been prepared jointly by UNICEF and the Coalition to Stop the Use of Child Soldiers. Noting that improving monitoring and reporting would create an essential foundation for pursuing justice, accountability and ultimately reconciliation, the Executive Director considered the

Secretary-General’s lists to be a vital step forward and affirmed that UNICEF, together with its partner agencies, stood ready to provide the Council with more systematic, analytical information on children in armed conflict. She also encouraged the Council to request regularly that information on child protection issues be included in all peacekeeping mandates, as well as country-specific and thematic reports.⁴

In the debate that followed, speakers welcomed the Secretary-General’s call for an “era of application” and his recommendations. Since efforts still fell short of what was needed and since there was no improvement on the ground, speakers in general made clear that implementation, not new norms, was needed. As summarized by the representative of the United Kingdom, the Council needed to establish a plan detailing practical steps to achieve measurable progress by the time the next report was written.⁵ In the words of the representative of Japan it was time to “move from advocacy to implementation”.⁶

Discussing concrete action for implementation, speakers broadly supported the creation of a monitoring and reporting mechanism. The representative of Chile recalled the proposal made in the context of implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) on women and peace and security, which suggested that every year a member of the Council be requested to monitor, together with the Secretariat, the implementation of Council decisions.⁷ The representative of Pakistan pointed out that such a mechanism should be of an intergovernmental nature and that, rather than creating a new mechanism, the existing mechanisms should be enforced.⁸

Speakers in general considered the lists provided in the annex to the Secretary-General’s report as capable of greatly improving the situation. The representative of Brazil stated that the lists must be made as precise as possible through continuous updating and refinement. This entailed the creation of institutional mechanisms capable of leading the process of engagement with the parties responsible for the involvement of children in armed conflict. Those mechanisms should also be reporting mechanisms and consist of members of the Special Representative's office, UNICEF and other field presences and child protection advisers.⁹ The representative of Norway also called for updating and refinement.¹⁰ The representative of Fiji noted that the lists needed to reflect yearly feedback from the parties listed.¹¹ The representative of the United States supported the request that the Secretary-General submit another list to the Council the following year and supported the active monitoring of Governments and armed groups that already were on the lists.¹² The representative of Spain cautioned that criteria for the inclusion of groups in the lists must be studied in detail,¹³ and the representative of Egypt pointed out that the lists required further study in order to ascertain the way to deal with parties that violated the rights of children.¹⁴

A number of speakers were in favour of applying targeted sanctions with regard to parties that failed to adopt measures to end violations concerning children and armed conflict.¹⁵ Some speakers reiterated that such measures must rely on precise information and must be finely tuned.¹⁶ The representative of Germany suggested that parties that did respond positively should be rewarded by technical and other assistance.¹⁷ Several representatives maintained that sanctions would be effective only when complemented by parallel measures, such as increasing resources for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes and monitoring mechanisms.¹⁸ The representative of Colombia, explaining that in his country most violations of children's rights were perpetrated by illegal armed groups that recruited child soldiers, requested that "gradual and targeted pressure" be exerted on those groups.¹⁹

Representatives encouraged the integration of child rights protection into peacekeeping missions and making children's issues essential components of post-conflict programmes, peace negotiations and agreements or demobilization and reintegration plans.²⁰ Stating that there was no conflict that did not affect children, the representative of Germany called for examining every conflict on the Council's agenda from a child rights perspective.²¹

While the issue of child soldiers was at the centre of the debate, some speakers reminded the Council that other egregious violations and abuses in conflict situations must also be addressed, specifically referring to sexual violence and killing and maiming, kidnapping or attacks against schools and hospitals.²² Some speakers therefore justified the extension of the list to other egregious violations.²³ Others emphasized that the proliferation of small arms and light weapons had aggravated the use of children in armed conflict.²⁴

As his country was among those listed in an annex to the Secretary-General's report, the representative of Colombia informed the Council of the positive results of his Government's "democratic security policy" to protect the human rights of all Colombians, particularly children.²⁵ The representative of Myanmar, affirming that procedures were in place in his country for preventing the recruitment of child soldiers, disputed allegations made against the Myanmar army in the Secretary-General's report, stating that it was insurgent groups that were recruiting child soldiers.²⁶ The representative of Uganda, stating that the policy not to recruit anyone under the age of 18 into its armed forces was strictly observed, expressed its outrage about allegations against the Uganda People's Defence Forces and alleged that the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict had a "hostile attitude", relying on hearsay information.²⁷ The representative of India questioned the usefulness of the Council's debate on the issue of children and armed conflict while the Council did not discuss the vulnerability of children with regard to other issues such as malaria or AIDS. He emphasized that in the Convention on the Rights of the Child and other relevant norms no role was envisaged for the Council in promoting their implementation. He also was against the inclusion of child protection advisers in peacekeeping operations since an assessment of their work undertaken so far was missing. He was hesitant about establishing a monitoring and reporting mechanism since such a new mechanism could duplicate and overlap with existing mechanisms. He stated that "by taking a continuously expansionist role for itself", the Council would overlap its functioning with that of other mandated United Nations bodies.²⁸ The representative of Liechtenstein, on the other hand, pointed out that it was exactly the Council that, given its primary role in the area of international peace and security, had a special responsibility for setting up an effective system of monitoring and follow-up action by coordinating all players at Headquarters and in the field.²⁹

Some speakers voiced the need for training of peacekeeping personnel in child protection in order to prevent sexual violence against children practised by peacekeeping personnel.³⁰

Decision of 22 April 2004 (4948th meeting):
resolution 1539 (2004)

At its 4948th meeting, on 22 April 2004, the Council included again in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict.³¹ The President (Germany) drew attention to a draft resolution;³² it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1539 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Strongly condemned the recruitment and use of child soldiers by parties to armed conflict in violation of international obligations applicable to them;

Decided to continue the inclusion of specific provisions for the protection of children in the mandates of United Nations peacekeeping operations, including, on a case-by-case basis, the deployment of child protection advisers, and requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the need for and the number and roles of child protection advisers were systematically assessed during the preparation for each United Nations peacekeeping operation;

Reiterated its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that, in all his reports on country-specific situations, the protection of children was included as a specific aspect of the report, and expressed its intention to give its full attention to the information provided therein when dealing with those situations on its agenda, and in this regard stressed the primary responsibility of United Nations peacekeeping missions and United Nations country teams, consistent within their respective mandates, to ensure effective follow-up to the resolution and other resolutions.

Decision of 23 February 2005 (5129th meeting):
statement by the President

On 9 February 2005, the Secretary-General submitted a report on children and armed conflict,³³ in which he provided information on compliance and progress in ending the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict by those parties mentioned in his earlier report,³⁴ including information on other grave violations and abuses according to paragraph 15 (a) of resolution 1539 (2004). He recommended that the Security Council take targeted and concrete measures where insufficient or no progress had been made by parties named in the lists annexed to his reports, in accordance with its resolutions 1379 (2001), 1460 (2003) and 1539 (2004). Such measures should include the imposition of travel restrictions on leaders and their exclusion from any governance structures and amnesty provisions, the imposition of arms embargoes, a ban on military assistance and restrictions on the flow of financial resources to the parties concerned. Furthermore, in response to the request of the Council in paragraph 2 of resolution 1539 (2004), the report contained an action plan for a systematic and comprehensive monitoring, reporting and compliance mechanism.

At its 5129th meeting, on 23 February 2005, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned report.³⁵ The Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, the Deputy Executive Director of UNICEF and the Special Adviser on Child Protection to the Executive Secretary of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS). Statements were made by all members of the Council,³⁵ as well as by the representatives of Canada, Gabon, Guinea, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg (on behalf of the European Union),³⁶ Mali, Myanmar, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Senegal, Sri Lanka and Uganda.

Introducing the report, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General stated that, following the adoption of resolution 1539 (2004), the heads of United Nations field teams had monitored its implementation and coordinated the United Nations response to concerns related to the issue of children and armed conflict. The field teams had, therefore, been the primary sources of information for the present report. He noted, however, that they had encountered a number of constraints including security problems, lack of access, non-cooperation of the parties and, most significantly, the absence of a functioning monitoring and reporting mechanism at the country level. He considered the present report as “turning point” in the campaign for the “era of application”, instituting a structured “compliance and enforcement regime” consisting of the following key components: review of the conduct of parties to conflict, resulting in the naming and listing of offending parties; ensuring accountability for those offending parties, particularly through the imposition of concrete and targeted measures; and the establishment of a monitoring and reporting mechanism. The Special Representative informed the Council that 54 parties had been held responsible for the recruitment and use of child soldiers in the report. He encouraged Council members to “make good” on their promise to take targeted measures against them, including the imposition of travel restrictions and arms embargoes. He proposed a “four-pronged” response to ending impunity, through, first, the imposition of targeted sanctions; secondly, the establishment of a committee of the Council to review and oversee the imposition of specific measures; thirdly, a demand that the parties prepare, in collaboration with United Nations field teams and within six months, time-bound action plans to end the violations; and fourthly, an endorsement of the monitoring and reporting mechanism to enable it to become operational quickly. On allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse by United Nations peacekeeping personnel, he called for a fundamental and comprehensive review. Regarding the monitoring and reporting mechanism, he pointed to the importance of the compilation of information as a trigger for action, and called upon the Security Council to be the primary “destination for action” in this regard.³⁷

The Deputy Executive Director of UNICEF emphasized the ability of the Council to take decisive action by translating the commitments of international legal and other standards into action and considered the targeted measures mentioned in the Secretary-General’s report to be helpful to the realization of that objective. She considered it crucial to better address accountability, and for that, the development of a monitoring and reporting mechanism was a significant step. Regarding the recruitment of children into the armed forces, she stated that disarmament, demobilization and reintegration was important to end their recruitment. She called for two immediate actions to be taken to ensure the protection of children whose rights had been violated, namely, the referral of the situation in Darfur to the International Criminal Court and the inclusion of child protection in all aspects of peacekeeping operations, including the operation to be established in Darfur.³⁸

The Special Adviser on Child Protection to the Executive Secretary of ECOWAS briefed the Council on the experiences of ECOWAS in the field of child protection. He noted that children continued to be used in armed conflict, including on the front lines. He stated that ECOWAS had adopted a number of instruments designed to ensure the protection of children and was giving training to its armed forces, as well as judges. In addition, ECOWAS was monitoring the welfare of children by visiting those who had returned to their families, as well as demobilization sites.³⁹

Speakers in general, while acknowledging the progress made in recent years in promoting the children and armed conflict agenda, particularly the adoption of clear and rigorous international child protection standards, underlined the need to move to the implementation of those standards. The measures needed to ensure the implementation of the legal framework already outlined by the Security Council, but awaited “activation”. The first of these, a monitoring, reporting and compliance mechanism, aimed at providing the systematic gathering of objective, specific and reliable information on grave violations committed against children in situations of armed conflict, was seen as crucial in making the “era of application” a reality. Speakers welcomed the Secretary-General’s plan of action for establishing such a mechanism, as requested in paragraph 2 of resolution 1539 (2004).

The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania, while welcoming the Secretary-General’s report, expressed concern regarding difficulties that might be encountered in the collection of information for monitoring and reporting purposes. She therefore saw a need for United Nations country teams to have a dialogue with concerned Governments on the need to provide information.⁴⁰ The representatives of the Philippines and Myanmar expressed concern about the Secretary-General’s suggestion that the practice of initiating direct contact by United Nations actors with non-State actors be generally applied as part of the mechanism at the country level because such engagement could undermine existing peace processes and be counter-productive.⁴¹ The representative of Japan emphasized that in the compilation of information and the assessment of the situation by the future mechanism, voices on the ground must be adequately reflected.⁴² The representative of the United States believed that “greater clarity and selectivity” was needed in the partnership that formed the basis of country-level reporting in the proposed mechanism and which included national Governments, civil society and the United Nations.⁴³ The representative of Uganda called for rigorous and transparent consultations between the Secretary-General and Member States during the collection of information.⁴⁴

Stressing that the current situation was unacceptable, the representative of France considered targeted measures to be necessary but at the same time stressed that they should be part of a comprehensive mechanism of monitoring and reporting, consisting also of reintegration of child soldiers.⁴⁵ Along the same lines, the representative of the United Kingdom noted that monitoring and review was not an end in itself and that it must lead to effective action when progress was inadequate. Extracting compliance from parties to armed conflict would require the right institutional framework, as proposed in the Secretary-General’s report. He, together with other speakers,⁴⁶ also considered disarmament, demobilization and reintegration to be a vital element of post-conflict peacebuilding.⁴⁷

While the majority of speakers were strongly supportive of the use of targeted measures, some speakers expressed concern. The representative of the United States worried about the “possible unanticipated policy and resource implications” of a new thematic sanctions committee of the Council.⁴⁸ The representative of the Russian Federation emphasized the need to determine the legally correct interpretation of the mandate of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, “to avoid any broadening of its interpretation”, and pointed to the need for appropriate coordination to avoid redundancies.⁴⁹ The representative of Canada called for the Secretary-General to encourage consolidated reporting and assessment requirements where overlap with the protection of civilians and the women and peace and security agenda was apparent.⁵⁰ The representative of Argentina urged the Council to be careful in defining the scope of implementation of the proposed action plan since the categorization of violations that could be monitored might vary according to each particular situation. Furthermore, he called for a better coordination between the Council and the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council: the General Assembly could consider the follow-up and the Economic and Social Council could hold high-level sessions on the issue of children and armed conflict.⁵¹

While supporting targeted measures against non-compliant parties, the representative of Canada suggested coupling those measures with the establishment of base indicators and standards.⁵²

The representative of India believed the establishment of a reporting mechanism was the least practical of all the key components that encompassed the Secretary-General's concept of the "era of application" since the nature of situations of conflict, particularly in Africa, was such that the models of monitoring, reporting and compliance were impractical and therefore ineffective. He criticized the fact that the report did not address the fundamental and critical issue of how to hold non-State actors accountable.⁵³

Addressing the issue of fighting impunity with regard to serious crimes against children, some speakers underlined the important role the International Criminal Court could play in bringing those in violation of international norms to justice.⁵⁴ The representative of Greece noted that the Rome Statute provided a clear legal basis for the Court's involvement, stipulating that use of children under 15 as soldiers constituted a war crime. Pointing out that States already had a complete set of the necessary legal and judicial tools at their disposal, he, together with the representative of Senegal,⁵⁵ urged States to become parties to and implement the provisions of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child.⁵⁶ With regard to legal standards, the representative of Benin supported a move to reclassify the use of child soldiers from a war crime to a crime against humanity, and proposed the establishment of an open-ended working group of the General Assembly to that end.⁵⁷

Several speakers pointed to the linkage between illicit cross-border activities such as proliferation of small arms and the recruitment of children.⁵⁸ Some speakers emphasized the need also to address the so-called "supply-side" dimension of the child soldier issue, referring to the interlinkage between security and development and the importance of tackling the root causes of conflict.⁵⁹

With regard to the conflict situations referred to in the report, the concerned countries believed it could have given a more comprehensive account of all situations, the representative of Myanmar expressing dismay over the "high degree of selectivity and double standards" contained therein and regretting the "degree of politicization" involved in drafting the lists.⁶⁰ The representative of the Philippines believed that the lists of violating parties did not "seem to be as complete and accurate" as they should have been.⁶¹ The representative of Uganda objected to the "mischaracterization" contained in the report regarding his country.⁶²

The President then made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁶³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its strong condemnation of the recruitment and use of child soldiers by parties to armed conflict in violation of international obligations applicable to them and of all other violations and abuses committed against children in situations of armed conflict;

Urged all parties to armed conflict to halt immediately such intolerable practices;

Reiterated the crucial need for a systematic and comprehensive monitoring and reporting mechanism, and its determination to ensure compliance and to put an end to impunity;

Further reiterated its intention to complete expeditiously the process of the establishment of the mechanism.

Decision of 26 July 2005 (5235th meeting):
resolution 1612 (2005)

At its 5235th meeting, on 26 July 2005, the Council included again in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict.⁶⁴ The President (Greece) drew attention to a draft resolution;⁶⁵ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1612 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Strongly condemned the recruitment and use of child soldiers by parties to armed conflict;

Took note of the action plan presented by the Secretary-General relating to the establishment of a monitoring and reporting mechanism on children and armed conflict;

Requested the Secretary-General to implement, without delay, the above-mentioned monitoring and reporting mechanism, beginning with its application, within existing resources;

Expressed serious concern regarding the lack of progress in development and implementation of the action plans called for in paragraph 5 (a) of its resolution 1539 (2004);

Decided to establish a working group of the Security Council consisting of all members of the Council to review the reports of the mechanism referred to above;

Decided to continue the inclusion of specific provisions for the protection of children in the mandates of United Nations peacekeeping operations, including the deployment, on a case-by-case basis, of child protection advisers;

Urged all parties concerned, including Member States, United Nations entities and financial institutions, to support the development and strengthening of the capacities of national institutions and local civil society networks for the advocacy, protection and rehabilitation of children affected by armed conflict to ensure the sustainability of local child-protection initiatives.

Decision of 24 July 2006 (5494th meeting):
statement by the President

On 10 July 2006, the President of the Council transmitted a letter dated 10 July 2006 addressed to him by the Chairman of the Working Group of the Security Council on Children and Armed Conflict⁶⁶ and transmitting the report on the activities of the Group since the adoption of resolution 1612 (2005). The Working Group had begun its work with consideration of the Secretary-General's first report on a specific situation of armed conflict on the agenda of the Security Council and in which grave violations of the rights of the child were committed, namely his report on children and armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁶⁷ That report was presented to the Working Group by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, who noted its three main conclusions. First, it was the responsibility of all regional actors, including the neighbouring States, to bring the violations to an end; groups and individuals that totally disregarded Security Council decisions should be denied access to ways and means of continuing their crimes; their freedom of movement throughout Congolese territory and towards neighbouring countries such as Rwanda must be ended. Secondly, the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo must be supported in its efforts to discharge its obligation to protect children affected by the armed conflict, including against sexual violence; it must strengthen the military and civilian systems of justice and put an end to impunity. Thirdly, the international community must provide the resources needed to support the reintegration of children into their communities of origin.

At its 5494th meeting, on 24 July 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 6 July 2006 from the representative of France to the Secretary-General,⁶⁸ transmitting a concept paper to guide the discussion on children and armed conflict at that meeting.

The Council was briefed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, the Executive Director of UNICEF, the Associate Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Acting Director for Social Development and Manager of the Conflict Prevention and Reconstruction Unit of the World Bank, and the representative of Watchlist on Children and Armed Conflict. Statements were made by all Council members and the representatives of Benin, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Egypt, Finland (on behalf of the European Union),⁶⁹ Guatemala, Israel, Liberia, Myanmar, San Marino, Slovenia (on behalf of the Human Security Network), Sri Lanka, Uganda and Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of), and the Permanent Observer of Palestine.⁷⁰

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict welcomed the adoption of resolution 1612 (2005) as a landmark in the field of protection of children. However, she noted that despite the groundswell of support for the resolution, children continued to suffer. She said that more than 250,000 children continued to be exploited as child soldiers by armed forces and groups around the world, while since 2003 more than 14 million had been forcibly displaced within and outside their home countries and abductions were becoming more widespread and systematic. Noting that the first phase of the implementation of resolution 1612 (2005) was coming to an end, she stressed that it was time to broaden the geographical scope of the monitoring and reporting mechanism to all situations of concern. In addition, she called on the international community to begin looking at long-term solutions for children affected by armed conflict.⁷¹

The Executive Director of UNICEF reported that, despite the Council's active involvement in the issue over the years, much remained to be done. In addition to the need for an effective monitoring and reporting mechanism, she cited three areas of particular concern that were directly relevant to resolution 1612 (2005): the use of children by armed forces and groups, gender-based violence, and small arms and light weapons. She emphasized that comprehensive prevention, demobilization and reintegration needed to be comprehensive by also providing children with education and protection against persecution or exploitation.⁷²

young people to contribute to lasting peace through various projects of reintegration.⁷³

The Acting Director for Social Development and Manager of the Conflict Prevention and Reconstruction Unit of the World Bank stated that the World Bank, over the past 10 years, had considerably expanded its work on armed conflict. He reported about analytical work undertaken by the Bank, indicating that in recent studies it had sought to provide guidance on the demobilization and reintegration of child soldiers in Africa. He also discussed operations of the World Bank related to children in conflict and immediate post-conflict situations, such as in Côte d'Ivoire and the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁷⁴

The representative of Watchlist on Children and Armed Conflict reported that in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of the Congo grave violations of children's rights continued and were even intensifying. He stated that monitoring and reporting of abuses was an essential starting point for protection but that violations needed to be prosecuted by the Security Council and the United Nations system as a whole. He equally called on the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to ensure implementation of the sanctions imposed by the Council.⁷⁵

Speakers in general pointed to the significance of resolution 1612 (2005) and stressed the importance of its timely implementation. They welcomed the establishment of the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict, the appointment of the new Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and the ongoing implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism. As stated by the representative of the Russian Federation, it was now necessary to ensure the effective functioning of those combined instruments and to guarantee the reliability and integrity of the information being received by the Security Council through the multi-tier mechanism from elements of the reporting and monitoring mechanism on the ground.⁷⁶

The representative of Denmark emphasized that with the adoption of resolution 1612 (2005) the Council had managed to achieve what many had already discarded as impossible: to propel the subject of a thematic debate from an issue of general, if somewhat uncommitted concern to a matter with very concrete and operational implications for the work of the Security Council. She, together with the representative of Canada,⁷⁷ hoped that the determination the Council had shown on the topic would be present on other related issues, such as the protection of civilians and women and peace and security.⁷⁸ The representative of the Congo stated that the direct role of the Security Council in the area of the protection of children as part of its responsibility to maintain international peace and security was now well established.⁷⁹ The representative of San Marino, referring to Article 24 of the Charter of the United Nations, stated that he could not think of a more compelling duty for the Council.⁸⁰ On the other hand, the representative of Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) stressed that the work of the Council was complementary to the primary role of the General Assembly in the overall handling of the situation of children in the world.⁸¹

While the representative of the Russian Federation stressed that resolution 1612 (2005) provided for the priority establishment of the monitoring and reporting mechanism in situations on the Council's agenda,⁸² some speakers said that further extending the work of the mechanism to countries not on the Council's agenda should be considered.⁸³ With regard to the work of the Working Group, the representative of Sri Lanka called for it to put its primary focus on non-State actors, in order to ensure that States were not burdened with multiple reporting responsibilities and that non-State actors were brought under a punitive regime.⁸⁴ The representative of Egypt demanded that the Council immediately take a decision to broaden the scope of the work of the Working Group to include children in the occupied Palestinian territories and Lebanon.⁸⁵

A number of speakers called for an end to impunity for those who abused children.⁸⁶ The representatives of Argentina and Qatar urged the Working Group to work closely with the sanctions committees to consider the possibility of imposing sanctions against those responsible for the most flagrant violations against children.⁸⁷ The representative of Ghana stressed the need to "isolate and apply sanctions" against those who abused children, arguing that compilation of information would be of little relevance if it did not serve as a trigger for action.⁸⁸ The representative of Finland, speaking on behalf of the European Union, held that in order to end impunity, grave and persistent violations must lead to targeted and concrete measures in response.⁸⁹ According to the representative of France, the Council must be ready, as explicitly stated in its resolutions, to use the full arsenal of available measures to punish those who defied its authority by refusing to comply with its resolutions.⁹⁰ This was also encouraged by the representative of Canada.⁹¹ Some speakers furthermore emphasized the important role of the International Criminal Court in bringing abusers to justice.⁹²

Many speakers urged the Council to give special attention to affected children in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes. A number of speakers stressed the importance of reunification of families, medical support, education and vocational training.⁹³ The representative of France pointed out that without reintegration, children were potential factors in the resurgence of crises.⁹⁴

Some speakers reiterated the importance of development in addressing the question of war-affected children,⁹⁵ the representative of Brazil calling for a comprehensive approach encompassing social, economic, security and human rights perspectives.⁹⁶ The role of conflict prevention in this context was emphasized by several speakers.⁹⁷

The representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo stated that the latest report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in her country⁹⁸ objectively described the situation there, and pointed out that the violations highlighted in the report were mainly perpetrated by elements of armed groups. She reported on progress that the Government had made in the fight against the use of children in armed conflict.⁹⁹

The President made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the appointment of a new Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, Ms. Radhika Coomaraswamy;

Welcomed the ongoing implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism on children and armed conflict, and invited the Secretary-General to accelerate it in accordance with resolution 1612 (2005);

Welcomed the activities of its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict, as outlined in the report submitted by its Chairman;

Called for a reinvigorated effort by the international community to enhance the protection of children affected by armed conflict; which he, inter alia, reported on progress made in the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism and progress made in the development and implementation of action plans called for in paragraph 5 (a) of resolution 1539 (2004). The report contained a number of recommendations, inter alia, that the Council consider expanding its focus and give equal care and attention to children affected by armed conflict in all situations of concern; and give equal weight to all categories of grave violations beyond the recruitment and use of child soldiers to include the killing and maiming of children, rape and other grave sexual violence, abductions, attacks against schools or hospitals, and denial of humanitarian access for children.

Looked forward to the next report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 1612 (2005) and its previous resolutions on children affected by armed conflict.

At its 5573rd meeting, on 28 November 2006, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned report. It heard briefings by the Secretary-General, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, the Executive Director of UNICEF and the representative of Save the Children. Statements were made by all members of the Council as well as by the representatives of Australia, Bangladesh, Benin, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Egypt, Finland (on behalf of the European Union),¹⁰² Guatemala, Honduras, Indonesia, Iraq, Israel, Lebanon, Liechtenstein, Myanmar, Nepal, New Zealand, Norway, Slovenia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Thailand and Uganda.¹⁰³

The Secretary-General stated that the protection of children in armed conflict, while remaining among his main priorities, had gained greater visibility since 1998. Important gains had been made in the elaboration of international legal standards, and the Council had played a crucial role in that progress by highlighting the six categories of grave violations against children. With these legal standards in place, the Secretary-General noted that now the international community was shifting its focus to providing real protection to children, including targeted measures against offenders. He urged the international community to sustain the political and practical momentum and hoped that the Council would consolidate the gains that had been made and would move forward to cover all situations of concern and all grave violations.¹⁰⁴

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict reported a number of successes since the last report of the Secretary-General, including the fact that peace agreements signed over the past years had included provisions for child protection and frameworks for child demobilization. Still, she acknowledged that implementation on the ground was not satisfactory and that the issue needed proper mainstreaming within the United Nations system. She called for expanding the focus to all situations of armed conflict so that there was equal treatment of children regardless of where they lived. She considered several grave violations to be of particular concern, including sexual violence as an instrument of war and the migration of child soldiers and their “recycling” within conflict zones.¹⁰⁵

The Executive Director of UNICEF stated that, by naming the parties that continued to recruit or use child soldiers, the Security Council had demonstrated its determination to match words with deeds. She remained deeply concerned about the ongoing conflicts in several countries highlighted in the recent report of the Secretary-General, in particular referring to the occupied Palestinian territories, Chad and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. She reported that UNICEF, working closely with many partners, continued to negotiate for humanitarian access and to engage in dialogue with parties to end the recruitment and use of children associated with fighting forces. She furthermore emphasized the major role of education, pointing out that experience in countries where demobilization exercises and justice-sector reforms had neglected to include children had shown a negative effect on young people themselves, and could also undermine the peacebuilding effort.¹⁰⁶

The representative of Save the Children also pointed to the importance of education, which should be funded and programmed as part of every humanitarian response. More generally, he stated that three themes had been neglected in international responses: stronger pressure for humanitarian access; special attention to girls; and better response to reports of violations against children. He said that with the knowledge gained through the monitoring and reporting mechanism came increased responsibility and that appropriate and concrete responses to the reports should be the next step.¹⁰⁷

Speakers welcomed the progress made in implementing resolution 1612 (2005), particularly the work of the monitoring and reporting mechanism and the Working Group, as well as the advances in formulating time-bound country-specific action plans. At the same time, they expressed concern at the continuing recruitment and use of children by parties to armed conflict and agreed that a great deal remained to be done.

The representative of France said that since 1999 no other thematic issue on the Council’s agenda had been the subject of such sustained and operational attention. Summarizing the existing tools, he stated that these were initial encouraging signs that should motivate States to redouble their efforts to narrow the gap “between our actions here and the concrete results of those actions in conflict situations”.¹⁰⁸

Speakers in general expressed support for the recommendations contained in the Secretary-General’s report. Specifically, the majority of speakers supported expanding the Council’s focus to all categories of grave violations against children, including killing and maiming of children, rape and other sexual violence, abductions, denial of humanitarian access to children, and attacks against schools and hospitals.

A number of speakers said that equal attention and weight should be given to all situations of concern, the representative of Denmark stressing that the scope of both the monitoring and reporting mechanism and the Working Group must, as envisaged in resolution 1612 (2005), be “truly thematic in nature”.¹⁰⁹ However, other speakers believed that the Council should remain focused on the situations on its agenda.¹¹⁰ The representative of China stated that the Council should follow a different approach in dealing with the situations on its agenda and those that were not, since they were “essentially different” from each other. The Council should try to allay the concerns of countries not on the agenda by engaging them in dialogue and cooperation.¹¹¹ The representative of the Russian Federation considered it necessary to clarify whether the report’s recommendations applied to the annexed lists only, or also to all conflict situations worldwide.¹¹² The representatives of Sri Lanka and Nepal were of the view that certain recommendations could be ideally taken up by other bodies and mechanisms of the United Nations, not by the Council itself.¹¹³ The representative of Uganda stated that the mandate of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict should not extend beyond situations that appeared on the agenda of the Council.¹¹⁴

Many speakers stressed that the Council must take action against parties that continued to violate children’s rights and hold them accountable if violations did not stop. To that end, several speakers called for applying targeted sanctions.¹¹⁵ At the same time, the representative of China reiterated however that China had always advised against the frequent resort to sanctions or threats of sanctions by the Security Council, and considered caution to be especially necessary with regard to the question of children and armed conflict. Since every conflict situation was different, there could be no generalizations or one-size-fits-all approach.¹¹⁶

The representative of Greece said that by adopting six resolutions since 1999, the Council had contributed to the international recognition of the responsibility to protect the human rights of children in armed conflict.¹¹⁷ As to covering all situations of concern and other types of violations than the recruiting of child soldiers, the representative of the Congo referred to the responsibility to protect.¹¹⁸

A number of delegations reiterated the importance of taking into account the interlinkage between security and development when dealing with the issue.¹¹⁹

The President then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹²⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Commended the work carried out by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, Ms. Radhika Coomaraswamy, including her field activities in situations of armed conflict;

Also commended the work carried out by UNICEF and the child protection advisers of peacekeeping operations in cooperation with other relevant United Nations entities;

Strongly condemned the continuing recruitment and use of children in armed conflict in violation of applicable international law, the killing and maiming of children, rape and other sexual violence, abductions, the denial of humanitarian access to children and attacks against schools and hospitals by parties to armed conflict;

Reiterated its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security;

Reiterated its invitation to relevant States affected by armed conflict that were not yet involved in the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism to join it on a voluntary basis, in cooperation with the Special Representative and UNICEF.

38. Threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts

Deliberations of 12 January 2004 (4892nd meeting)

At its 4892nd meeting, on 12 January 2004, the Security Council heard a briefing by the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities. Statements were made by most members of the Council¹ and the representatives of Indonesia, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union),² Japan, Liechtenstein, Switzerland and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The President (Chile) drew the attention of Council members to a letter dated 1 December 2003 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999), transmitting the second report of the Monitoring Group established pursuant to resolution 1363 (2001) and extended by resolutions 1390 (2002) and 1455 (2003).³ The report provided an in-depth analysis of specific problems associated with the implementation by States of sanctions measures against Al-Qaida, the Taliban and individuals and entities associated with them and contained an assessment of the reports submitted by States. The Monitoring Group observed that Al-Qaida ideology continued to spread and be a threat to international peace and security, for instance in Iraq, and drew attention to the risk of its members acquiring weapons of mass destruction. Regarding the asset freeze, the Monitoring Group reported that progress had been made towards cutting off Al-Qaida financing but that controlling charities used for the purpose of supporting terrorism was proving extremely difficult; other areas which needed improvement were the provision by States of names of individuals and entities to be put on the Consolidated List, the implementation of the travel ban and the monitoring of and reporting on the implementation of the arms embargo. Based on the review of the implementation of the measures, the Monitoring Group concluded that without a tougher and more comprehensive resolution which obligated States to take the mandated measures, the role played by the United Nations in the battle risked becoming marginalized. The Monitoring Group therefore provided a list of recommendations for improvement.

In his briefing, the Chairman of the Committee described the visits carried out by the Monitoring Group by himself to selected countries as an important part of establishing a dialogue to raise mutual understanding between the Committee and States in implementing the measures. He pointed out serious reservations expressed by some European States during his visit regarding the topics of defining and freezing non-financial and other economic resources pursuant to the resolution, the challenges posed in implementing the travel ban and concerns regarding the Committee's Consolidated List, human rights and due process and hoped that the Council might take those concerns into account in preparing future resolutions. He stated that his visits had helped to foster commitments made by several States to submit additional information, including updated country reports and names for inclusion in the Consolidated List.

The Chairman of the Committee also reported that the freezing of assets other than bank accounts needed improvement. A more proactive approach in locating and freezing such assets and the establishment of the needed legal provisions by, for instance, promoting the universal ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism might be useful. He also called for renewed efforts to cut the growing links between drug trafficking and terrorist financing. He further opined that only enhanced quality and credibility of the Consolidated List and increased technical capacity of States could lead to implementing the travel ban more effectively. He underlined that the arms embargo was the measure most difficult to implement because of differing interpretations of its scope, and stressed the need for defining the arms embargo in a more specific and targeted way.

³ S/2003/1070, submitted pursuant to paragraph 13 of resolution 1455 (2003).

While stating that a total of 93 reports had been submitted under resolution 1455 (2003), he emphasized that 98 States — 51 per cent — had not submitted a report. The fact that reports had been submitted by fewer than half of the Member States had seriously hampered the Committee in accomplishing its task of carrying out the requested assessments. The Committee remained determined to complete the assessment and intended to analyse and address the reasons why some States had not submitted reports. He also expressed the view that such States needed to be identified as States having failed to comply with Security Council resolutions.⁴

In their statements, speakers welcomed the work undertaken by the Committee and commended the visits it had carried out. They also pointed out the role of the United Nations sanctions regime against Al-Qaida and the Taliban as the main tool in combating terrorism. A number of speakers stressed the need for continuous improvement of the sanctions regime and looked forward to the adoption of a new resolution.⁵

The representative of Spain stressed that with the year 2004 a new phase had begun in which greater effect would be given to the asset freeze, the travel ban and the arms embargo imposed on individuals and entities linked to Al-Qaida and the Taliban. Those measures must be refined and the Consolidated List must continue to be improved.⁶

The representative of the United States called for the future work of the Committee to become more focused, emphasizing the necessity to explore key issues and examine Al-Qaida hotspots in more detail as some States and some issues warranted close Committee attention.⁷ Similarly, the representative of the Russian Federation advocated a greater use of targeted and selective approaches in determining countries whose efforts in implementing sanctions required careful study, while such an approach should be impartial and objective. According to the representative of Pakistan, the Committee should continue to operate within its mandate to ensure States' compliance with relevant resolutions in order to maintain its credibility and legitimacy.⁸

While speakers agreed on the utility of the Consolidated List, some underlined that States should be encouraged to submit names and relevant information in order to make the List more operable and comprehensive.⁹ The representative of the United Kingdom encouraged the Committee to make it clear that there was no stigma attached to acknowledging the existence of Al-Qaida or the Taliban in the territory of a given country and that rather such acknowledgement would be a sign of the State's seriousness about its commitment to fight terrorism.¹⁰ Others stressed the need for improving the listing and delisting process.¹¹

Speakers in general emphasized that strengthened international cooperation was necessary, first and foremost by Member States. Some also supported further cooperation and coordination between the Committee and the Counter-Terrorism Committee,¹² INTERPOL¹³ or regional organizations.¹⁴

With regard to the cooperation between States and the Committee, many speakers deplored the reporting failures and several speakers called for a more proactive approach by the Committee to provide technical assistance to States that had not implemented sanctions and fulfilled their reporting duties¹⁵ and to analyse the reasons behind their non-compliance.¹⁶ The representative of Ireland, speaking on behalf of the European Union, reminded the Council that resolution 1455 (2003) requesting the reports from States had been adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations and therefore was mandatory and obligated all States to implement the measures set forth therein.¹⁷

In addition, several speakers reiterated the importance of respect for human rights and the rule of law while combating terrorism¹⁸ and underlined that introducing elements of due process in the sanctions regime would increase its credibility and effectiveness.¹⁹ The representative of Brazil referred to the importance of ensuring that measures adopted to fight terrorism were in conformity with international law and with the commitments undertaken by Member States in that regard.²⁰ Other speakers also touched upon, inter alia, the need for addressing the root causes of terrorism²¹ and called for greater transparency in the working methods of the Monitoring Group.²²

Decision of 30 January 2004 (4908th meeting):
resolution 1526 (2004)

At the 4908th meeting, on 30 January 2004, the President (Chile) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;²³ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1526 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to improve the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 4 (b) of resolution 1267 (1999), paragraph 8 (c) of resolution 1333 (2000) and paragraphs 1 and 2 of resolution 1390 (2002);

Decided also to strengthen the mandate of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999);

Decided further that the measures referred to above would be further improved in 18 months, or sooner if necessary;

Decided to establish for a period of 18 months an Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team with the responsibilities enumerated in the annex to the resolution;

Requested the Secretary-General to appoint eight members of the Monitoring Team;

Requested the Monitoring Team to submit three comprehensive reports to the Committee, by 31 July 2004, 15 December 2004 and 30 June 2005;

Requested the Committee, through its Chairman, to report orally to the Council in detail at least every 120 days on the overall work of the Committee.

Deliberations of 4 March 2004 (4921st meeting)

At its 4921st meeting, on 4 March 2004, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 19 February 2004 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373 (2001) concerning counter-terrorism (the Counter-Terrorism Committee) to the President of the Council,²⁴ transmitting the report of the Committee on its revitalization.

The Council heard a briefing by the Chairman of the Committee, following which statements were made by all members of the Council and the representatives of Argentina (on behalf of the Rio Group), Belarus, Cameroon, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union),²⁵ Israel, Japan, Kazakhstan, Liechtenstein, Mexico, New Zealand (on behalf of the Pacific Islands Forum), the Republic of Korea, South Africa, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic and Ukraine.

In his briefing, the Chairman of the Committee informed the Council about the work undertaken the previous three months, presented the work plan for the upcoming three months²⁶ and commented on the Committee's report on its revitalization. Given that terrorism was one of the major threats to international peace and security and given that the United Nations must continue to play the lead role in the fight against that threat, he explained that the goal of the revitalization of the Committee was to become more operational, more proactive and more visible. In order to reach those goals, it was necessary to strengthen, inter alia, the monitoring of the implementation of all aspects of resolution 1373 (2001) through dialogue on the basis of cooperation, transparency and even-handedness, the facilitation of technical assistance to States and contacts and coordination with other United Nations bodies and among international and regional organizations. This should be done by adding to the current structure of the Committee an executive directorate under which the current experts and Secretariat personnel would be reorganized. He elaborated that the directorate would be the executive branch of the Committee and part of the Secretariat; that it would not set a precedent for other bodies of the Council and would not have a permanent structure since a sunset clause for 31 December 2007 should be established. He also stated that, to implement the revitalization, a Council resolution would be required which would not modify resolution 1373 (2001) or other relevant resolutions.²⁷

In their statements, speakers reflected on the work undertaken by the Committee so far and the road ahead, including the proposal on its revitalization. They welcomed the proposal and agreed that there was a need for the Committee to develop further, having regard to the interconnected and transnational threats of terrorism which required a multilateral response by the United Nations.

The representative of Algeria considered it urgent to “debureaucratize” the Committee’s structure in order to give it more flexibility when carrying out its work.²⁸ Several other speakers opined that the revitalization would enhance the Committee’s ability to fulfil its mandate, including monitoring of implementation of resolution 1373 (2001).²⁹ Some speakers said that the revitalization proposal did not modify resolution 1373 (2001) or the mandate of the Committee, as defined by that resolution.³⁰

With regard to the relationship between the proposed directorate and the Committee, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that the former would offer guidance and help to implement the Committee’s wishes. He explained that the directorate would be responsible to the Committee, while the

Committee would direct the work of the directorate.³¹ The representative of China shared a similar understanding.³²

Several delegations held that the creation of an executive directorate would not set a precedent and welcomed the fact that it was intended to be limited in time.³³ The representative of Mexico asked, given the administrative nature of the revitalization of the Committee, if a resolution on the topic needed to be adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter.³⁴

Most speakers also stressed the importance of coordination and cooperation with relevant international, regional or subregional organizations as well as specialized bodies such as the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime. In the words of the representative of Switzerland, there was a need for synergy among those bodies.³⁵ A large number of speakers referred to the importance of facilitating technical assistance to and capacity-building for Member States and hoped for a more proactive role to be played by the Committee.³⁶

Some speakers also stressed that the revitalization must take place in conformity with the Charter³⁷ and without interfering with the responsibilities of the General Assembly.³⁸ As to the relationship with the Secretariat, a number of speakers stressed the existing consultation with it regarding the proposal,³⁹ while others called for close cooperation with and preservation of the integrity of the Secretariat.⁴⁰ The representative of Switzerland asked if the fight against terrorism within the United Nations should continue to be the primary responsibility of a subsidiary body of the Council and proposed the establishment of a central office under the authority of the Secretary-General as a possible alternative.⁴¹

In stressing the obligation to ensure that anti-terrorism measures complied with international law, including norms related to human rights, several speakers welcomed the fact that the proposed structure was to establish a liaison with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other relevant human rights organizations in matters related to counter-terrorism.⁴² Some speakers also proposed the appointment of a human rights specialist in an executive directorate.⁴³

resolution 1530 (2004)

At the 4923rd meeting, on 11 March 2004, the President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution.⁴⁴ On behalf of the Council, he expressed outrage at the terrorist attack that had occurred earlier that day in Madrid, killing more than 190 people and wounding over 1,000. The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1530 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest terms the bomb attacks in Madrid perpetrated by the terrorist group Euskadi ta Askatasuna (ETA) on 11 March 2004;

Expressed its deepest sympathy and condolences to the people and Government of Spain and to the victims of the terrorist attacks and their families;

Urged all States to cooperate actively in efforts to find and bring to justice the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of those terrorist attacks;

Expressed its reinforced determination to combat all forms of terrorism.

Decision of 26 March 2004 (4936th meeting):
resolution 1535 (2004)

At its 4936th meeting, on 26 March 2004, the Council again included in its agenda the letter dated 19 February 2004 from the Chairman of the Counter-Terrorism Committee to the President of the Council, transmitting the report of the Committee on its revitalization.⁴⁵ The President drew attention to a draft resolution;⁴⁶ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1535 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Endorsed the report of the Counter-Terrorism Committee on its revitalization;

Decided that the revitalized Committee would consist of the Plenary and the Bureau;

Decided further that the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate, headed by an Executive Director, would be responsible for the tasks stated in the report of the Committee, and requested the Secretary-General to appoint an Executive Director who would take up office as soon as possible;

Requested the Executive Director to submit to the Plenary, for its endorsement, an organizational plan for the Directorate, consistent with the Committee's report and United Nations rules and regulations, including its structure, staffing requirements, budget needs, management guidelines, recruitment procedures;

Decided that the Committee would continue to report to the Council on a regular basis.

Decision of 30 March 2004 (4939th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 4939th meeting, on 30 March 2004, the President (France) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

statement by the President

At the 4966th meeting, on 10 May 2004, the President (Pakistan) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Unequivocally condemned the terrorist bomb attack that had taken place on 9 May 2004 in Grozny, Russian Federation, as a result of which many people were injured and killed, including the President of the Chechen Republic of the Russian Federation, Ahmad Kadyrov;

Condemned also in the strongest terms the perpetrators of that heinous act;

Expressed its deepest sympathy and condolences to the people and to the Government of the Russian Federation and to the victims and their families;

Urged all States to cooperate with Russian authorities in their efforts to bring to justice the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of the attack;

Reaffirmed that terrorism constituted one of the most serious threats to international peace and security;

Expressed its determination to combat all forms of terrorism.

Deliberations of 25 May 2004 (4976th meeting)

At its 4976th meeting, on 25 May 2004, the Council heard a briefing by the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities. Statements were made by most members of the Council⁵⁰ and the representatives of Costa Rica, India, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union)⁵¹ and Japan.

The President (Pakistan) drew the attention of Council members to a letter dated 27 April 2004 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999),⁵² transmitting the list of those States that had not submitted, by 31 March 2004, reports pursuant to paragraph 6 of resolution 1455 (2003), as well as an analytical summary of the reasons put forward by States for not reporting.

In his briefing, the Chairman of the Committee informed the Council about the overall work of the Committee and the Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team, which constituted the first of the 120-day oral assessments of the Committee as required by resolution 1526 (2004). He noted an increase in States' reporting compliance, pursuant to resolution 1455 (2003), leading to a total of 126 reports. He reported that the Committee had started to discuss a working paper containing definitions of terms used in resolution 1526 (2004) and other relevant resolutions, particularly the definition of the freezing of funds or other financial assets or economic resources, with the purpose of providing more clarity and precision to the Committee regarding the performance of its monitoring functions, as well as to Member States in their implementation efforts. He stated that since 1 January 2004 the names of 19 individuals and 6 entities had been placed on the Committee's List, which continued to play a crucial role in the implementation of the sanctions measures. The Committee had also established a contact list similar to the one used by the Counter-Terrorism Committee which would allow the Committee secretariat to automatically inform competent officials in Member States about amendments to the Committee's List. As to the Monitoring Team, which had begun its work in April 2004, it continued to develop its relationship with the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate to ensure minimum overlap and maximum synergy. He said that, in a preliminary assessment, the Monitoring Team had found an uneven quality in States' reports. The Team also found that regarding the implementation of sanctions against Al-Qaida and the Taliban, many States did not see a need to adopt new specific laws. For the purpose of asset freezing, the Consolidated List continued to have limited distribution only to the banks in general, while most States had reported new regulations governing charities. Most States integrated the List into their border-control systems in order to implement the travel ban. He then reported about his recent mission pursuant to paragraph 10 of resolution 1526 (2004) to Algeria, Tunisia, Spain and Senegal, which he described as “tremendously useful” for the future work of the Committee and highlighted the need for cooperation and information-sharing among States, especially between European and Maghreb States. He drew attention to several recommendations following his visit, including the improvement of cooperation between the Committee and the Counter-Terrorism Committee in view of a continuing need for assistance in a number of countries. Turning to the analysis of the reasons for not reporting, the Chairman held that many of those States lacked the capacity or the resources to fulfil their reporting obligations. Some also lacked awareness of the different roles of the Committee and the Counter-Terrorism Committee and therefore had an impression that submission of reports to the latter satisfied their reporting obligations in relation to the sanctions committee. The Team also found a lack of supervisory and coordination mechanisms at the national level.⁵³

Speakers commended the work of the Committee and the Monitoring Team and stressed the important role of the Monitoring Team in supporting the Committee in its work. Speakers considered resolution 1526 (2004) to be one important step in further improving the provisions for combating terrorism. They acknowledged the instrument of field visits as an important component of the dialogue between the Committee and States. The representative of Ireland, speaking on behalf of the European Union, emphasized the role of the Monitoring Group not only in improving the rate of reporting compliance but also in assessing the effectiveness of existing resolutions, legislation and controls in combating terrorist financing, hindering the movement of terrorists and upholding arms embargoes.⁵⁴

Speakers agreed that, since terrorism was a continuing threat and had taken on various forms, the fight against it necessitated increased cooperation of the international community. Some of them called for the continuous development of the Committee’s work in order to efficiently tackle the varying strategies and techniques of terrorism.⁵⁵ Some speakers, inter alia, focused on particular challenges facing the international community: the representative of France referred to the controlling of financial flows as a priority in the fight against Al-Qaida and stressed the need to develop mechanisms for registering fund transfers so as to prevent the abuse of informal systems such as the hawala or human cash couriers.⁵⁶

Many speakers referred to the urgency of the submission of overdue reports and some called upon the Committee to mobilize assistance.⁵⁷ The representative of Costa Rica pointed to the reporting burdens that had arisen for States which had to answer increasingly detailed and lengthy questions. She therefore called for a better coordination among the various United Nations bodies responsible for counter-terrorism activities.⁵⁸ A number of other speakers also encouraged the Committee to improve cooperation and work in synergy with the Counter-Terrorism Committee and its Executive Directorate to avoid duplication in their closely related work.⁵⁹

Speakers in general considered the Consolidated List as one of the most effective instruments the Council had at hand in the fight against terrorism. At the same time, they saw a need for improving the quality of the information provided to assist national authorities in proceeding against the listed individuals and entities. Some speakers considered this information as being sometimes insufficient to stand up in a judicial process.⁶⁰ The representative of the Russian Federation called for a more careful approach to the List,⁶¹ and the representative of the United Kingdom welcomed the improvement proposals foreseen in the new work programme.⁶²

The importance of respecting human rights and the rule of law when enacting counter-terrorism measures was reiterated by several speakers.⁶³ The representative of the United Kingdom held that ensuring the respect for international human rights and refugee and humanitarian law added to the legitimacy of the sanctions regime. He further drew attention to the

Decision of 19 July 2004 (5006th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5006th meeting, on 19 July 2004, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 1 July 2004 from the Chairman of the Counter-Terrorism Committee to the President of the Council, transmitting the work programme of the Committee for the period from 1 July to 30 September 2004.⁶⁵

The Council heard a briefing by the new Chairman of the Counter-Terrorism Committee, following which statements were made by most members of the Council⁶⁶ and the representatives of Côte d'Ivoire, Indonesia, Israel, Japan, Kazakhstan (on behalf of the Collective Security Treaty Organization), Liechtenstein, the Netherlands (on behalf of the European Union),⁶⁷ the Syrian Arab Republic and Uzbekistan.

In his briefing, the Chairman first reported on the implementation of the Committee's previous work programme, which was characterized by the process of revitalization started by resolution 1535 (2004). In this transitional period, attention had been paid to reform efforts and to short-term activities at the same time and therefore, a slowdown in the review of States' reports could not be avoided. The Committee had begun and would continue to work on country assessments of assistance needs. He reported that encouraging States to become parties to the relevant conventions and protocols related to terrorism and to implement them in their national legislation had remained one of the Committee's priorities; and that it had continued to develop cooperation and coordination with international, regional and subregional organizations as well as with United Nations bodies, namely the Committees established pursuant to resolutions 1267 (1999) and 1540 (2004). He reminded States that had not submitted reports to submit them as soon as possible and expressed the Committee's readiness to assist those States encountering problems in submitting their reports. He stressed that the main task in the coming months was the implementation of resolution 1535 (2004) and that the Committee was about to consider the draft organizational plan for its Executive Directorate submitted by its Executive Director and present it to the Council for its endorsement.⁶⁸

In their statements, speakers welcomed the newly appointed Executive Director of the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate. The representative of the United Kingdom considered the appointment as giving reason "to take activity to a new level".⁶⁹ Many delegations considered the establishment of the Directorate as an essential part of the revitalization process and stressed the urgency of making it operational as soon as possible.⁷⁰

In identifying different challenges for the future work of the Counter-Terrorism Committee, speakers highlighted a need for it to improve its technical assistance to States by addressing their assistance needs more vigorously.⁷¹ Most delegations agreed that the planned visits of the Committee to States with their consent would be most useful in enhancing an open dialogue with them and enable the Committee to verify the implementation of resolution 1373 (2001).⁷² According to the representative of Brazil, the biggest challenge for the Committee and its Executive Directorate was to persuade countries that it was in their own interest to take advantage of the various sources of cooperation made available to them, including with the Committee.⁷³ The delegation of Kazakhstan, speaking on behalf of the Collective Security Treaty Organization, called for linking technical assistance to the strengthening of interaction with international and regional organizations.⁷⁴

A number of speakers identified strengthening the cooperation with international, regional and subregional organizations as another major aspect of the future work of the Committee.⁷⁵ Several speakers in this context appreciated the special meeting of the Committee with those organizations to be held in Cairo later in 2004 and to be hosted by the League of Arab States.⁷⁶ Many speakers also emphasized the need to further develop any inter-institutional cooperation, in particular with the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban.⁷⁷ The representative of Chile as Chairman of that Committee expressed his determination to enhance cooperation between the two committees and reported that an informal meeting between the two Chairmen had been held. He stated that a new area of cooperation had been proposed, namely, the holding of regular meetings of the two Chairmen and the experts.⁷⁸

Regarding other remaining challenges, the representative of Côte d'Ivoire stated that universal agreement on the definition of acts of terrorism was a prerequisite for any collective strategy to fight terrorism.⁷⁹ Some speakers saw newly emerging threats in drug trafficking as a means of financing terrorism and in the access of terrorists to weapons of mass destruction.⁸⁰ The delegation of Israel said that terrorism was becoming increasingly sophisticated and that the Committee and States had to anticipate new directions it might take and pay careful attention to emerging trends.⁸¹ The representative of Romania, in his capacity as Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004), expressed his readiness to discuss possible synergies between his Committee and the Counter-Terrorism Committee.⁸²

Following the discussion, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁸³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Invited the Counter-Terrorism Committee to pursue its agenda as set out in the work programme for the twelfth 90-day period, focusing on practical measures to implement resolution 1535 (2004) on the revitalization of the Committee, including by considering the organizational plan for the newly established Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate;

Noted the importance of continuing the efforts of the Committee aimed at increasing the capabilities of Member States to combat terrorism, to identify and address the problems faced by States in implementing resolution 1373 (2001), to facilitate the provision of technical assistance adjusted to the countries' needs, to encourage the largest possible number of States to become parties to the international conventions and protocols related to counter-terrorism, and to strengthen its dialogue and cooperation with international, regional and subregional organizations acting in the areas outlined by resolution 1373 (2001);

Noted that, as of 30 June 2004, 71 States had not met the deadline for submission of their respective reports to the Committee as set out in resolution 1373 (2001); and called upon them urgently to do so, in order to maintain the universality of response which resolution 1373 (2001) required.

Decision of 1 September 2004 (5026th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5026th meeting, on 1 September 2004, the President (Spain) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁸⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest terms the heinous terrorist act involving the taking of hostages at a secondary school in the town of Beslan, Russian Federation, on 1 September 2004, as well as other terrorist attacks committed recently against innocent civilians in Moscow and on two Russian airliners, in which many lives were lost and people injured;

Demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all hostages in the terrorist attack;

Expressed its deepest sympathy and condolences to the people and the Government of the Russian Federation and to the victims of the terrorist acts and their families;

Deliberations of 13 September 2004 (5031st meeting)

At its 5031st meeting, on 13 September 2004, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 23 August 2004 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities addressed to the President of the Council,⁸⁵ transmitting the first report of the Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team established pursuant to resolution 1526 (2004).

The Council heard a briefing by the Chairman of the Committee, following which statements were made by most members of the Council⁸⁶ and the representatives of Australia, India, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, the Netherlands (on behalf of the European Union)⁸⁷ and Singapore.

In his briefing, the Chairman, reiterating that terrorism constituted one of the most serious threats to international peace and security, informed the Council of the activities which the Committee and its Monitoring Team had undertaken since his last briefing in May 2004. The Committee had discussed an informal document on non-mandatory measures contained in resolution 1526 (2004) that were important for the implementation of the sanctions regime. These included measures seeking to cut the flow of funds and other financial assets to and from individuals and entities on the Committee's List, to improve the List and to strengthen cooperation in capacity-building for implementation. He said that the Committee realized that some measures might become mandatory in the future if deemed appropriate and necessary. He reported also that the Committee had revised the guidelines for the conduct of its work; added new names to the List; established a fully operational list of contact points regarding notification to Member States of changes in the List; established an active working relationship with the Chairman of the Counter-Terrorism Committee and the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate. He reported that the Monitoring Team, for the past four months, had focused on establishing a close and effective working relationship with the Committee and Member States as well as with the Counter-Terrorism Committee. The Team had worked on improving the Committee's List by requesting additional information from States and had undertaken several country visits to assess the evolution of the threat posed by Al-Qaida, to seek suggestions on how to improve the List, to discuss ideas for making sanctions more effective and to encourage States to add names to the List. The Chairman commended the fact that the Team's first report,⁸⁸ currently under consideration by the Committee, contained fresh ideas and would give new impetus to the work of the Committee. He said that the Team had foreshadowed a number of measures that might be taken to improve the functionality and credibility of the List and to strengthen the effectiveness of the existing financial sanctions, arms embargo and travel ban. The Team had noted that the nature of the threat from Al-Qaida and the Taliban was constantly evolving and that therefore a creative and effective response of the international community was required. He pointed out that continued cooperation with Member States remained the most important aspect of the Committee's work and that in this context improving the quality of the List, the opportunity provided for in resolution 1526 (2004) for States to meet with the Committee, and the country visits of the Committee were three issues of specific interest. He strongly encouraged all States to submit new names to the List, which currently contained only a small fraction of individuals and entities associated with Al-Qaida and the Taliban. He also explained that the Committee was aware of the fact that States had concerns regarding due process, the delisting of certain names and the potential stigmatization of listed persons, and announced that the Committee would ask the Monitoring Team to explore the reasons for non-submission of names. He emphasized that sanctions implementation, including in the context of delisting procedures, must take place in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and international law. With regard to meetings between the Committee and Member States, he deplored that no such meetings had been held and underlined that the purpose of those meetings was to learn more about States' experiences and concerns and to explore ways to improve the sanctions regime. Country visits also were an invaluable tool in improving cooperation between the Committee and Member States.

The Chairman highlighted some concrete tasks before the Committee, namely, improving the quality of the List; a closer focus on the results of States' enforcement activities to detect problems faced by States; boosting the Committee's work in the area of delisting and exceptions pursuant to resolution 1452 (2002); continuing country visits in order to constantly evaluate the application of sanctions measures on the ground; enhanced dialogue with Member States in order to be able to give them the needed assistance; increased cooperation and coordination with the Counter-Terrorism Committee and its Executive Directorate, the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004) and all relevant international agencies or organizations.⁸⁹

Speakers concurred with the Monitoring Team's assessment regarding the changing nature of the threat posed by Al-Qaida and the Taliban and saw a need to constantly refine and adjust sanctions measures to that changing nature. Country visits of the Chairman on behalf of the Committee were praised as particularly useful for fostering a dialogue and promoting transparency.⁹⁰

Closer cooperation with other bodies, particularly with the Counter-Terrorism Committee and its Executive Directorate, was emphasized by many delegations, most of them welcoming the development of further cooperation with the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004).⁹¹ In the context of greater cooperation, the representative of India proposed that visits by the Committee to States to enhance coordination and information exchange could involve the Counter-Terrorism Committee and its Executive Directorate.⁹²

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the Consolidated List was not for use by the Council or the Committee alone but belonged to every Member State. He encouraged States to take ownership of the List, most importantly by submitting names for inclusion on that List.⁹³ Several other delegations reaffirmed the need for the List to be constantly completed and updated and stated that it could only be as good as the data provided by States.⁹⁴ The representative of Pakistan pointed to the completeness and accuracy of the List as being essential for the success of sanctions.⁹⁵ He also warned about financial sanctions unduly targeting Islamic charities and about an expansive interpretation of the term "associates".⁹⁶

The representative of the Russian Federation opined that rather than discuss the flaws of the List, Member States should support the Committee by submitting additional information.⁹⁷ The representative of Algeria believed that it would be ill-advised to suspend or remove names from the List because of insufficient information but instead the focus should be put on the threat those individuals or entities posed.⁹⁸

Regarding the issue of delisting, the delegation of Germany pointed to its growing importance, particularly with regard to justly listed individuals who later turned their backs on terrorism. He stated that delisting was not only an issue of due process in relation to concerned individuals but that it had a positive potential in the sense that it could provide an incentive for those individuals to cooperate with counter-terrorism investigations.⁹⁹ The representative of Angola stated that while Member States should submit names, the Committee for its part should consider procedures for delisting.¹⁰⁰ The representative of Brazil proposed that the Committee should derive benefit from the measures to improve the functionality and credibility of the List which had been proposed by the Monitoring Team in its report and requested it to present specific suggestions to the Committee. He also found that specific proposals with regard to due process issues could be of help to the Committee.¹⁰¹ The representative of Pakistan also asked the Committee to further improve the delisting procedures and address due process concerns.¹⁰² The representative of Spain stressed the need to improve the basic identifying data for individuals and entities included on the List and proposed approaching other international organizations experienced in fighting transnational organized crime, explicitly naming INTERPOL. He also pointed to the need to establish a procedure for delisting which he considered a key issue if the Council was to preserve the universal legitimacy of the work of the Committee.¹⁰³ The representative of India proposed that the Committee should hold those States that harboured listed individuals or entities accountable for non-compliance with the relevant Chapter VII resolutions.¹⁰⁴

The representative of France stressed that counter-terrorism measures must not undermine the rule of law and fundamental rights of citizens and that therefore his delegation would remain vigilant to ensure that both effectiveness and respect for the rule of law were complied with.¹⁰⁵ Similarly, several other speakers emphasized the need to respect international law in combating terrorism.¹⁰⁶

The representative of Algeria stated that the right to asylum was abusively granted to terrorist organizations and individuals involved in acts of terrorism in their country of origin, and that this led to conveying impunity to those organizations or individuals. He therefore called for encouraging States to fully cooperate in the field of extradition. This could be done by making better use of the opportunities provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter. He expressed his wish for the Monitoring Team to address this issue in order to strengthen international judicial cooperation in the area of extradition.¹⁰⁷

Decision of 8 October 2004 (5053rd meeting):
resolution 1566 (2004)

At the 5053rd meeting, on 8 October 2004, the President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution.¹⁰⁸ Statements were made by all members of the Council, and the representative of Turkey, on behalf of the Organization of the Islamic Conference.

The draft resolution was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1566 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest terms all acts of terrorism as one of the most serious threats to peace and security;

Called upon States to cooperate fully in the fight against terrorism;

Called upon all States to become party to the relevant international conventions and protocols;

Called upon relevant international, regional and subregional organizations to strengthen international cooperation in the fight against terrorism;

Requested the Counter-Terrorism Committee to develop a set of best practices to assist States in implementing the provisions of resolution 1373 (2001) related to the financing of terrorism;

Directed the Committee to start visits to States in order to enhance the monitoring of the implementation of resolution 1373 (2001);

Decided to establish a working group to consider and submit recommendations to the Council on practical measures to be imposed upon individuals, groups or entities involved in or associated with terrorist activities;

Requested the working group to consider the possibility of establishing an international fund to compensate victims of terrorist acts;

Requested the Secretary-General to take appropriate steps to make the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate fully operational and to inform the Council by 15 November 2004.

Speakers in general believed that the resolution strengthened the central role of the United Nations in the fight against terrorism and that it would further intensify the international cooperation required for countering terrorism effectively. Some stressed that the resolution would strengthen cooperation with regard to fighting international terrorism beyond cooperation against Al-Qaida and the Taliban.¹⁰⁹ In addition, speakers emphasized that the fight against terrorism must comply with the Charter and with States' obligations under international law, especially human rights, refugee and humanitarian law.

Discussing specific paragraphs in resolution 1566 (2004), speakers touched upon the issue of self-determination and acts of terrorism in connection with operative paragraph 3.¹¹⁰ The representative of Brazil made clear that that paragraph reflected compromise language that contained a clear political message, but that it was not an attempt to define the concept of terrorism.¹¹¹

With regard to future tasks of the working group established by the resolution, which included looking into ways and means to identify individuals, groups and entities involved in terrorist activities, many delegations proposed setting up a list as the most appropriate means to identify the relevant individuals, groups and entities.¹¹² Some speakers emphasized the need for those new measures proposed by the working group to observe international law and international humanitarian law and the provisions of due process.¹¹³

The representative of Brazil was of the view that the Council, in its current practice, was excessively resorting to the use of Chapter VII of the Charter. The adoption of the entire operative part of resolution 1566 (2004) under Chapter VII suggested, in his opinion, that not enough emphasis had been given to possibilities of international cooperative action. He held that such a tendency was both unnecessary and counterproductive, particularly with regard to the appeal to Member States contained in operative paragraph 5.¹¹⁴ Referring to Article 24 (2) of the Charter, the representative of Benin held that no provision of the resolution should be interpreted in such a manner as to violate the principles of the Charter and urged Member States to implement the resolution in that spirit.¹¹⁵

Decision of 19 October 2004 (5059th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5059th meeting, on 19 October 2004, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 15 October 2004 from the Chairman of the Counter-Terrorism Committee addressed to the President of the Council, transmitting the work programme of the Committee for the period from 1 October to 31 December 2004.¹¹⁶

The Council heard a briefing by the Chairman of the Committee and by the Executive Director of the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate. Statements were made by most members of the Council¹¹⁷ and the representatives of Bangladesh, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Egypt, El Salvador, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Israel, Japan, Liechtenstein, Malaysia, Nepal, the Netherlands (on behalf of the European Union),¹¹⁸ Nigeria, Peru, the Republic of Korea, Samoa (on behalf of the Pacific Islands Forum), Switzerland, Thailand, Uganda and Ukraine (on behalf also of Azerbaijan, Georgia, Moldova and Uzbekistan).¹¹⁹

In his briefing, the Chairman of the Counter-Terrorism Committee updated the Council on the Committee's activities of the past three months, which marked the beginning of the revitalization process initiated in resolution 1535 (2004) subsequent to the endorsement of the organizational plan for the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate by the Council. He announced that the new work programme would build on the main achievements of the previous three months in order to finalize the transition to the new organizational structure. He reported that the work of the group of experts enabled the Committee to speed up the process of reviewing Member States' reports. The Committee had continued to integrate an analysis and assessment of each country's assistance needs into the review process and approved a guidance document for making those assessments, which, with the consent of the concerned States, could be shared with interested donor States and organizations. Furthermore, a database of needed and available assistance was maintained by the Committee. The provision of information from States was a vital tool to help those States that sought technical assistance. He said that the Committee had concentrated on the preparation of its visits to Member States and had been engaged in the preparation of the fourth special meeting with international, regional and subregional organizations. With regard to future activities, the Chairman announced that the Committee intended to implement the relevant provisions of resolution 1566 (2004) which had prioritized its main tasks, namely, closer cooperation with other Security Council bodies dealing with counter-terrorism, strengthening cooperation with international, regional and subregional organizations, speeding up the revitalization process on the basis of the organizational plan of its Executive Directorate, and enhancing dialogue and exchange with Member States and facilitating technical assistance. He also announced that, pursuant to resolution 1566 (2004), the Committee, in consultation with the relevant international, regional and subregional organizations and United Nations bodies, would prepare a set of best practices to assist States in implementing the provisions of resolution 1373 (2001) related to the financing of terrorism.¹²⁰

The Executive Director of the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate briefed the Council on the steps taken to make the Directorate operational. He reported that administratively he prepared the budget and arranged the contracting of experts and other personnel. He had also initiated contacts with a wide range of international organizations of primary relevance to the future work of the Directorate. Elaborating on priorities, he stated that, once it was fully operational, the Directorate would intensify dialogue with Member States to identify their needs and obtain the assistance they required, by conducting periodic evaluations and country visits and working with international organizations that could help detect the needs of the State and coordinate assistance.¹²¹

Speakers expressed their hope to see the Directorate in operation as soon as possible. They fully concurred with and further elaborated on the four priorities enumerated by the Chairman of the Counter-Terrorism Committee. They furthermore concurred that terrorism remained one of the most serious threats to international peace and security, referring to incidents not only rising in numbers but also leaving growing damage.

Several delegations regretted that some States had missed the deadline for submitting reports to the Committee and urged them to meet their obligations as soon as possible.¹²² The representative of Chile suggested that those States request the technical assistance that the Committee, international organizations and donor countries were ready to provide.¹²³ The representative of the United Kingdom called upon them to inform the Committee of the problems that they were facing.¹²⁴ The representative of Brazil, pointing out that the Committee, and by extension its Executive Directorate, was not to be likened to a sanctions committee, recommended that States examine the possibility of approaching those bodies in order to discuss ways of increasing cooperation.¹²⁵ The representative of Samoa, speaking on behalf of the Pacific Islands Forum group of countries, opined that the group, which consisted mainly of developing and small island States, often lacked resources and technical expertise to fulfil its obligations. He therefore welcomed consultations between Member States and the Counter-Terrorism Committee that aimed at extending assistance to small and developing States and encouraged the Committee to consider the option of a Pacific regional report with which small island countries could meet their obligations.¹²⁶

Several delegations, while acknowledging the accomplishments of the current Committee Chairman and the Executive Director, explicitly called for providing technical assistance more actively.¹²⁷ The representative of Romania saw the increase in the number of States that belatedly submitted reports as an incentive for the Committee to make facilitation of technical assistance a top priority in the near future;¹²⁸ other speakers urged the Committee to identify the reasons for the backlog.¹²⁹

The representative of France considered country visits as a future priority for the Committee and proposed initial visits to those countries in which the needs for complying with resolution 1373 (2001) appeared to be the greatest.¹³⁰ The representative of Japan hoped that after the visits the Committee would share its views with Member States regarding the achievements of each visit and what it was expected to produce.¹³¹

A number of speakers pointed to the significance of enlarging the number of signatures of international treaties on counter-terrorism. Many appealed to States that were not yet parties to those treaties to become parties to them and to implement legislation.¹³² Other speakers referred to the urgency of completing the work on the draft comprehensive convention against terrorism.¹³³ The representative of Algeria stressed the complementarity of regional instruments to the international arrangements for strengthening cooperation in the fight against terrorism.¹³⁴ The representative of the United States made clear that joining regional conventions could not be viewed as an alternative to joining international ones as stated in resolution 1566 (2004).¹³⁵

with terrorism¹³⁶ and of coordination with other parts of the United Nations system.¹³⁷ Referring to the newly established working group pursuant to resolution 1566 (2004), the representative of Japan called for thoroughly elucidating the relationship between that group and the existing organs in order for the group to contribute to the strengthening of counter-terrorism policy.¹³⁸ The representative of the United Kingdom proposed that the group remained in close contact with the existing bodies to draw on their expertise.¹³⁹

Speakers in general welcomed the adoption of resolution 1566 (2004), with some delegations reiterating their positions expressed at the 5053rd meeting. Some delegations emphasized that defining terrorism fell under the functions and powers of the General Assembly.¹⁴⁰ The representatives of Brazil and Costa Rica repeated that resolution 1566 (2004) reflected compromise language that contained a clear important political message, but that it was not an attempt to define the concept of terrorism in a legal sense.¹⁴¹ The representative of Cuba was of the opinion that resolution 1566 (2004) was designed to define terrorism in a manner that was biased and that it demonstrated the “Council’s tendency to legislate under Chapter VII of the Charter”.¹⁴² The representative of Egypt stressed that, during the consultations on resolution 1566 (2004), Member States had emphasized the importance of relying on international conventions aimed at international cooperation, rather than increasingly resorting to Chapter VII of the Charter in this matter.¹⁴³ The representatives of Liechtenstein and Switzerland pointed out that the definition of involvement in terrorist acts was unclear and so was the attempt to define terrorist acts; this would also raise questions as to the relationship between the work of the Council and the efforts under way in the General Assembly to agree on a definition of terrorism.¹⁴⁴ The representative of Switzerland further held that formulations of a legislative nature in resolution 1566 (2004) did not comply with the principle of legality in criminal law.¹⁴⁵

While the representative of Brazil supported the establishment of a working group dealing with terrorism outside Al-Qaida, he spoke against the idea of establishing a Consolidated List of individuals and organizations classified as terrorists since this could lead to politicization of the body.¹⁴⁶ The representative of Switzerland called for all States, and not the Council alone, to be included when deciding on the content of such a list. Furthermore, he proposed creating an opportunity for those people and entities on the List to challenge such a listing.¹⁴⁷ The representative of Liechtenstein reiterated the view that the new regime foreseen in resolution 1566 (2004) to impose measures on individuals or entities not falling under resolution 1267 (1999) must be equipped with a mechanism to establish facts objectively and to review decisions in a fair and independent manner in order to comply with due process standards.¹⁴⁸

At the end of the meeting, the President (United Kingdom) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁴⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constituted one of the most serious threats to peace and security;

Invited the Counter-Terrorism Committee to pursue its agenda as set out in the work programme for the thirteenth 90-day period focusing on practical measures to implement resolution 1535 (2004) on the revitalization of the Committee, including implementation of the organizational plan for the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate, and resolution 1566 (2004);

Invited the Committee to continue preparing and begin sending to Member States assessments of their assistance needs for eventual sharing with interested donor States and organizations;

Invited the Committee to start to develop a set of best practices to assist States in implementing the provisions of resolution 1373 (2001) related to the financing of terrorism.

Deliberations of 17 December 2004 (5104th meeting)

At its 5104th meeting, on 17 December 2004, the Council heard a briefing by the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities. Statements were made by most members of the Council¹⁵⁰ and the representatives of Indonesia, Japan and Thailand.

In his briefing, the Chairman reported on the Committee's work during the past three months and explained how the Committee had shifted its focus from comprehensive reporting by States on their implementation to active dialogue with States. This was done by encouraging Member States to meet with the Committee and by conducting country visits during which there was an intensive dialogue on, inter alia, the quality of the Consolidated List, human rights questions related to the List including the due process standards applied by the Committee, the need for technical assistance or the possibility of providing technical assistance. He reported that the Monitoring Team had assisted the Committee in the monitoring of the implementation of sanctions measures by States and submitted a large number of technical corrections to the List, most of which the Committee had widely approved.

The Chairman identified the following tasks as priorities on the future agenda of the Committee: encouraging Member States to be proactive in proposing names for inclusion on the List, and further improving the quality of the List; monitoring sanctions enforcement activities by States, with the assistance of the Monitoring Team and with a view to detecting possible problems and suggesting actions to remedy those problems; and considering how to improve delisting procedures and exceptions pursuant to resolution 1452 (2002). He announced that the Committee would further intensify its dialogue with Member States, including through regular briefings to delegations and further country visits, and further increase cooperation with the Counter-Terrorism Committee and its Executive Directorate, the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540

(2004) and with all relevant international agencies and organizations.¹⁵¹

Speakers commended the outgoing Chairman for the achievements of the Committee under his leadership. The representative of France said that the Chairman had been able to identify the changing and more diffuse character of Al-Qaida, had improved cooperation with States through dialogue which had been stepped up, and strengthened the commitment of States in implementing sanctions.^{152,153}

Speakers generally agreed that priority should be given to improving the quality and credibility of the List, establishing clear delisting procedures, conducting on-site visits and dialogue with States, cooperating with the Counter-Terrorism Committee, the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004) and other relevant bodies. The representative of Germany concurred with the view issued recently by the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change in its report¹⁵⁴ that current rules on listing and delisting fell far short of international legal standards and needed to be revised with a view to enhancing their transparency and their even-handed applicability.¹⁵⁵

Referring to States that had not fulfilled their reporting or implementation obligations, the representative of the United States reminded States that, when the Council invoked Chapter VII of the Charter in response to threats against international peace and security, there could be no satisfactory outcome other than complete compliance by Member States in implementing the measures authorized by the Security Council.¹⁵⁶

Decision of 18 January 2005 (5113th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5113th meeting, on 18 January 2005, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 13 January 2005 from the Chairman of the Counter-Terrorism Committee to the President of the Council, transmitting the work programme of the Committee for the period from 1 January to 31 March 2005.¹⁵⁷

The Council heard a briefing by the Chairman of the Committee, following which statements were made by most members of the Council¹⁵⁸ and the representatives of Kazakhstan, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg (on behalf of the European Union)¹⁵⁹ and Paraguay.

In his briefing, the Chairman reported on the Committee's activities during the past three months and introduced the work programme for the next three months. He said first that the Council in 2004 had created a new and more comprehensive agenda regarding counter-terrorism and that its focus on various aspects of counter-terrorism had created additional challenges for the Committee. The focus of the Committee had been to develop new ways and means for a more effective monitoring of the implementation of resolution 1373 (2001), the primary means of monitoring until then being the review of States' reports and maintenance of a regular dialogue with them. He said that, owing to a shortage of experts, the Committee was not able to maintain the same number of reviewed reports as in the previous three-month period, which he hoped to be resolved once the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate became operational. With regard to developing new approaches to providing technical assistance to States, the Committee had initiated analytical work to assess the assistance needs of States.

The Chairman also reported that the Committee had completed its preparations for the first visits to Member States, had prepared for its fourth special meeting with international, regional and subregional organizations, and had broadened its interaction with other United Nations structures by participating together with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in a seminar on a draft resolution on counter-terrorism held in Paraguay late in 2004. The holding of informal meetings among the Chairmen of all Security Council committees dealing with terrorism had contributed to a greater agreement on the implementation of a single, comprehensive strategy of the Council in the fight against terrorism. Implementing the visits to Member States and holding the fourth special meeting with international, regional and subregional organizations in Almaty were the issues of priority in the work of the Committee during the coming three months. He made it clear that the goals set out in the new work programme could only be achieved if the Executive Directorate became fully operational in the shortest possible time.¹⁶⁰

Speakers supported the new work programme. At the same time, speakers were concerned about the growing number of countries not meeting their reporting obligations,¹⁶¹ the representative of Denmark seeing reports as “the backbone” of the Committee’s ability to monitor implementation. While stressing that the responsibility for implementation lay with States, he also called for the Committee to develop ways to assist countries to overcome problems.¹⁶² Speakers emphasized the role of the Committee in respect of assessing States’ assistance needs.¹⁶³ Other delegations also pointed out the significance of country visits to generate greater understanding.¹⁶⁴

Many speakers regarded it as essential to enhance cooperation with international and regional organizations¹⁶⁵ and to further strengthen the coordination among counter-terrorism bodies of the Security Council.¹⁶⁶ The representative of the United States proposed, as concrete steps, to hold regular meetings among the experts assigned to support the Council’s terrorism-related bodies, to hold regular joint and open meetings of the Committee Chairmen for the wider United Nations membership and to draw up joint work programmes of the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate and the Monitoring Team.¹⁶⁷ The representative of Romania encouraged the Council to envisage joint visits of the Committees.¹⁶⁸ According to the representative of Algeria, coordinating the schedule of visits deserved particular attention.¹⁶⁹

In the context of enhancing cooperation among United Nations bodies, several delegations supported the recommendations of the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change with regard to the role of the United Nations in developing a comprehensive and global strategy to fight terrorism.¹⁷⁰

At the end of the meeting, the President (Argentina) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁷¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constituted one of the most serious threats to peace and security;

Invited the Counter-Terrorism Committee to pursue its agenda as set out in the work programme for the fourteenth 90-day period;

Noted the importance of continuing the efforts of the Committee in the following key areas: to enhance the capabilities of Member States to combat terrorism, to identify and address the problems faced by States in implementing resolution 1373 (2001), to facilitate the provision of technical assistance and cooperation adjusted to the recipient countries’ needs, to encourage the largest possible number of States to become parties to the international conventions and protocols related to counter-terrorism, and to strengthen its dialogue and cooperation with international, regional and subregional organizations acting in the areas outlined in resolution 1373 (2001);

Noted that, as of 16 December 2004, 75 States had not submitted their respective reports to the Committee in time, and called upon them to do so.

Decision of 7 July 2005 (5223rd meeting):
resolution 1611 (2005)

At the 5223rd meeting, on 7 July 2005, the President (Greece) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹⁷² it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1611 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned without reservation the terrorist attacks in London on 7 July 2005;

Expressed its deepest sympathy and condolences to the victims of those terrorist attacks and their families, and to the people and Government of the United Kingdom;

Urged all States to cooperate actively in efforts to find and bring to justice the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of those barbaric acts;

Expressed its utmost determination to combat terrorism in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations.

Decision of 8 July 2005 (5224th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5224th meeting, on 8 July 2005, the President (Greece) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 7 July 2005 from the representative of Egypt to the President of the Council, in which he reported that the recently appointed Head of the Egyptian Mission to Iraq had been killed on 7 July 2005, four days after his kidnapping in Baghdad by a group of terrorists who had claimed responsibility for that act.¹⁷³ The President then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁷⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest possible terms the assassination of the Head of the Egyptian Mission to Iraq and expressed its condolences to the family of the victim and to the Government and people of Egypt;

Also condemned all terrorist attacks in Iraq, including the attempted assassinations of diplomats from Bahrain and Pakistan and attacks against other civilian personnel;

Emphasized that there could be no justification for such terrorist acts and underlined the need to bring to justice the perpetrators;

Reaffirmed its unwavering support for the Iraqi people in their political transition;

Recognized the important role of Egypt and other neighbouring countries in supporting the political process, helping to control transit across Iraq's borders, and extending other support to the Iraqi people.

statement by the President

At the 5239th meeting, on 27 July 2005, the President (Greece) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁷⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Unequivocally condemned the terrorist attacks that had taken place in Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, on 23 July 2005, underlined the need to bring those responsible to justice and urged all States to cooperate actively with the Egyptian authorities in this regard;

Reiterated its determination to combat all forms of terrorism in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter.

Decision of 27 July 2005 (5240th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5240th meeting, on 27 July 2005, the President (Greece) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁷⁶ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest possible terms the assassination, on 27 July 2005, of the two Algerian diplomats accredited to the Algerian Embassy to Iraq, and expressed its condolences to the families of the victims and to the Government and people of Algeria;

Emphasized that there could be no justification for such terrorist acts and underlined the need to bring to justice the perpetrators;

Reaffirmed its unwavering support for the Iraqi people in their political transition, as outlined in resolution 1546 (2004); and also reaffirmed the independence, sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of Iraq and called upon the international community to stand by the Iraqi people in their pursuit of peace, stability and democracy.

At the 5244th meeting, on 29 July 2005, the President (Greece) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹⁷⁷ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1617 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that all States should take the measures as previously imposed with respect to Al-Qaida, Osama bin Laden and the Taliban and other individuals, groups, undertakings and entities associated with them, namely, (a) freeze without delay the funds and other financial assets or economic resources of those individuals; (b) prevent the entry into or the transit through their territories of those individuals; (c) prevent the direct or indirect supply, sale or transfer, to those individuals, groups, undertakings and entities of arms and related materiel of all types;

Also decided that acts or activities indicating that an individual, group, undertaking or entity was "associated with" Al-Qaida, Osama bin Laden or the Taliban included participating in the supplying, selling or transferring of arms to, recruiting for, or otherwise supporting acts or activities of Al-Qaida, Osama bin Laden or the Taliban;

Decided that, when proposing names for the Consolidated List, States should act in accordance with paragraph 17 of resolution 1526 (2004);

Decided that the statement of case submitted by the designating State might be used by the Committee in responding to queries from Member States whose nationals, residents or entities had been included on the Consolidated List; decided also that the Committee might decide on a case-by-case basis to release the information to other parties, with the prior consent of the designating State; decided further that States might continue to provide additional information which should be kept on a confidential basis within the Committee;

Decided, in order to assist the Committee in the fulfilment of its mandate, to extend the mandate of the New York-based Monitoring Team for a period of 17 months, under the direction of the Committee, with the responsibilities outlined in annex I to the resolution;

Requested the Secretary-General, upon adoption of the resolution and acting in close consultation with the Committee, to appoint, consistent with United Nations rules and procedures, no more than eight members, including a coordinator, to the Monitoring Team;

Decided to review the measures described above with a view to their possible further strengthening in 17 months, or sooner if necessary.

Decision of 4 August 2005 (5246th meeting): resolution 1618 (2005)

At the 5246th meeting, on 4 August 2005, the President (Japan) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution.¹⁷⁸ Statements were made by several Council members¹⁷⁹ as well as by the representative of Iraq.

The draft resolution was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1618 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest terms the terrorist attacks that had taken place in Iraq, and regarded any act of terrorism as a threat to peace and security;

Took note in particular of the attacks in recent weeks which had resulted in over one hundred deaths;

Noted with great concern that attacks on foreign diplomats in Iraq had increased in number and had resulted in the murder or kidnapping of such diplomats;

Expressed its deepest sympathy and condolences to the victims of those terrorist attacks and their families;

Affirmed that acts of terrorism must not be allowed to disrupt Iraq's political and economic transition currently taking place; urged Member States to prevent the transit of terrorists to and from Iraq, arms for terrorists, and financing that would support terrorists; and re-emphasized the importance of strengthening the cooperation of the countries in the region;

Urged all States to cooperate actively in efforts to find and bring to justice the perpetrators of those acts;

Expressed its utmost determination to combat terrorism, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter;

Called upon the international community to support fully the Government of Iraq in exercising its responsibilities to provide protection to the diplomatic community, United Nations staff and other foreign civilian personnel working in Iraq.

Speakers strongly condemned the series of attacks that had taken place in Iraq. They referred to the crucial period ahead in the transition of Iraq for which the completion of a draft constitution was seen as a milestone. Speakers concurred that a draft had to be finalized by way of an inclusive process and should reflect consensus among all segments of the Iraqi population.

The representative of the United States saw the importance of resolution 1618 (2005) in, inter alia, its illustration of the similarity of terrorist threats in Iraq to those in many other parts of the world and the importance it attached to cooperation among all Member States to halt the flow of terrorists, weapons and terrorist financing to Iraq.¹⁸⁰ The representative of Algeria stated that combating terrorism in Iraq must go hand in hand with heightened efforts to conclude the political process and to ensure a transition that would enable Iraq to “regain its full sovereignty”.¹⁸¹

Some speakers emphasized the special role that the neighbouring countries, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Islamic Republic of Iran, played: the representative of the United States called on those countries to adhere to the relevant Council resolutions and to implement their pledges of support to the stability in Iraq. The representative of the United Kingdom held that they could and should do more.¹⁸²

The representative of Iraq stated that while terrorism had emerged as one of the greatest challenges to international peace and security, nowhere was it as virulent and persistent as in Iraq currently. He called for efforts to agree on a comprehensive definition of terrorism and for greater allocation of resources to study and analyse terrorism, particularly the phenomenon of suicide bombers.¹⁸³

Decision of 4 October 2005 (5274th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5274th meeting, on 4 October 2005, the representative of Indonesia was invited to participate. He expressed his Government’s determination to continue to cooperate with other countries to develop a comprehensive response to terrorism.¹⁸⁴ The President (Romania) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁸⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest terms the terrorist bombings that had taken place on 1 October 2005 in Bali, Indonesia, which had again fallen victim to a heinous act of terrorism;

Underlined the need to bring the perpetrators, organizers, financiers and sponsors of those intolerable acts to justice, and urged all States to cooperate with and provide support and assistance, as appropriate, to the Government of Indonesia in this regard;

Reaffirmed that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constituted one of the most serious threats to international peace and security, and that any acts of terrorism were criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, wherever, whenever and by whomsoever committed;

Further reaffirmed the need to combat by all means threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts.

Decision of 31 October 2005 (5298th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5298th meeting, on 31 October 2005, the President (Romania) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁸⁶ by which the Council, inter alia:

Strongly condemned the series of bomb attacks that had occurred in New Delhi, India on 29 October 2005, causing numerous deaths and injuries, and expressed its deepest condolences to the victims of those heinous acts of terrorism and their families, and to the people and the Government of India;

Stressed the importance of bringing the perpetrators, organizers, financiers and sponsors of those reprehensible acts of violence to justice, and urged all States to cooperate actively with the Indian authorities in this regard;

Reaffirmed that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constituted one of the most serious threats to international peace and security, and that any acts of terrorism were criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, wherever, whenever and by whomsoever committed;

Reiterated its determination to combat all forms of terrorism, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter.

Decision of 10 November 2005 (5303rd meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5303rd meeting, on 10 November 2005, the representative of Jordan was invited to participate. He reaffirmed his country’s commitment to cooperating with the Council and to stepping up its efforts to combat terrorism, in accordance with the Charter and resolutions 1373 (2001) and 1624 (2005).¹⁸⁷ The President (Russian Federation) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁸⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its determination to combat all forms of terrorism, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter.

Decision of 21 December 2005 (5338th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5338th meeting, on 21 December 2005, the President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 15 December 2005 from the Chairman of the Counter-Terrorism Committee to the President of the Council.¹⁸⁹ He then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁹⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the fact that the Counter-Terrorism Committee, in consultation with the Secretary-General, had decided to declare the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate operational on 15 December 2005;

Recalled that mandate of the Directorate flowed from that of the Committee and reaffirmed that the Committee had the sole responsibility for providing policy guidance to the Directorate;

Agreed with the Secretary-General and with the Committee that there was a need to clarify the Directorate's reporting lines, within the framework of resolution 1535 (2004), and welcomed the Secretary-General's initiative in this regard;

Welcomed the integration into the work of the Counter-Terrorism Committee of the issue of implementation by Member States of resolution 1624 (2005).

Decision of 25 April 2006 (5424th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5424th meeting, on 25 April 2006, the representative of Egypt was invited to participate. The President (China) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁹¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest terms the terrorist bombings that had taken place in Dahab, Egypt, on 24 April 2006;

Underlined the need to bring the perpetrators, organizers, financiers and sponsors of those intolerable acts to justice, and urged all States to cooperate with and provide support and assistance, as appropriate, to the Government of Egypt in this regard;

Reaffirmed that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constituted one of the most serious threats to international peace and security, and that any acts of terrorism were criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, wherever, whenever and by whomsoever committed;

Further reaffirmed the need to combat by all means, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts.

Deliberations of 30 May 2006 (5446th meeting)

At the 5446th meeting, on 30 May 2006, for the first time, the Council heard joint briefings by the Chairs of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban, the Counter-Terrorism Committee and the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004). Statements were made by most members of the Council¹⁹² and the representatives of Austria (on behalf of the European Union and associated countries), Cuba, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Israel, Liechtenstein, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Ukraine (on behalf also of Azerbaijan, Georgia and the Republic of Moldova) and Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of).

The Chair of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999) reported on the work of the Committee during the past three months and named the improvement of the quality of the List as one of the Committee's priorities. He reported about his visits to Qatar, Yemen and Saudi Arabia pursuant to resolution 1617 (2005) and the Monitoring Team's visits to Africa, Asia and Europe to discuss issues related to the effective implementation of the sanctions regime. He renewed the invitation to States to send representatives to a Committee meeting to be informed about problems that States might experience when dealing with the implementation of sanctions, and reported that a group of States had already taken this opportunity. He also elaborated on two notes verbales the Committee had sent to States with an aim to improving their implementation efforts and which provided clarifications regarding the exceptions provided for in the asset freeze and the delisting procedure for deceased individuals. He stated that the Monitoring Team continued to provide professional assistance to the Committee, by presenting proposals for further improving the List and strengthening its links with relevant international and regional organizations and other United Nations bodies, including coordination of its travel plans with the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate. As to future work, he announced that the Committee would, inter alia, revise its procedures for the listing and delisting of names and continue to discuss how to enhance cooperation with the Counter-Terrorism Committee and the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004).¹⁹³

The Chair of the Counter-Terrorism Committee briefed the Council on the Committee's activities since February 2006 and presented the work programme for the three-month period ending 30 June 2006. Referring to States' concerns about extensive reporting requests, she stated that the Committee continued to discuss how to enhance cooperation with the other two Committees with regard to revising the reporting regime. She emphasized that the reports were the solid foundation of and indispensable for the Committee's work in advising and assisting States in their implementation of resolution 1373 (2001). She reported on an analytical tool currently being tested that would monitor the extent to which States had implemented their obligations, stating that it was also created to ease their reporting burdens. Country visits continued to be an important part of enhancing dialogue with Member States, and the Committee had strengthened its relationship with several African regional and subregional organizations, the Caribbean Community and the Pacific Islands Forum. Referring to the concerted efforts of the Pacific Islands Forum and donors to ensure that its members reported to the Committee on time, she said she considered this type of regional cooperation to be very fruitful and hoped that other regions could be inspired by such cooperation.¹⁹⁴

The Chair of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004) noted the need for a lasting effort by the Council to monitor and support the efforts of States to fully implement the resolution and stated that the Council had extended the Committee's mandate for two years until 27 April 2008. The Committee would focus on facilitation of reporting and conduct of outreach activities to promote States' reporting and implementation of resolution 1540 (2004). He announced that the Committee, through its experts, would continue to act as a clearing house for assistance, including by collecting up-to-date information on the issue. He also announced that, in order to contribute to capacity-building, the Committee would invite States offering assistance and States requesting assistance to take a proactive approach on a bilateral basis, including making use of offers by international organizations.¹⁹⁵

Representatives, in view of the gravity of the threat that terrorism was posing, called for the adoption of a global and comprehensive counter-terrorism strategy such as recently proposed by the Secretary-General. They welcomed the work that the Committees had carried out so far and supported the future priorities outlined by the Chairs.

Regarding the work of the Committee concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban, speakers welcomed its visits as productive and encouraging but strongly reiterated the need to address the issue of procedural fairness in listing and delisting persons or entities. Speakers in general called for ensuring legality and transparency in the listing and delisting process. On due process guarantees and the issue of delisting, the representative of Denmark reminded the Council of her proposal made previously to establish an independent review mechanism in the form of an ombudsman to which individuals and entities on that Committee's List would have direct access and which would make independent recommendations to the Committee for its consideration.¹⁹⁶ The representative of France proposed setting up a focal point within the Secretariat which would directly receive requests for delisting or exemption from listed individuals. He considered that the setting up of a single focal point for the various sanctions committees would make the procedures “more accessible, clearer and more standardized”.¹⁹⁷

The representative of Qatar stated that there was a need to move from comprehensive sanctions to targeted sanctions¹⁹⁸ and that these were not only a political but also a legal tool for which the Council must take human rights into consideration.¹⁹⁹ The representative of Switzerland presented the main findings and recommendations of a report that his Government together with Germany and Sweden had commissioned on strengthening the implementation of targeted sanctions by addressing concerns of due process.²⁰⁰ That report concluded, inter alia, that, despite many improvements in sanctions measures over time, shortcomings remained with regard to listing, delisting, notification of individuals and entities and especially the right to an effective remedy and that those shortcomings might violate basic principles of human rights protection. The representative of Switzerland proposed addressing those issues step by step, starting with the most urgent issues. Those included the development of standards for statements of case, a periodic review of listings and the designation of a focal point to deal with all delisting and exemption requests as well as to notify targets of listing.²⁰¹

Regarding the work of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004), speakers welcomed the extension of its mandate and the outreach activities it had been planning. They saw a need to strengthen the monitoring system on the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

Referring to the work of the Counter-Terrorism Committee, delegations welcomed the new preliminary assessment tool and expressed their appreciation for the fact that the Committee had started to shift its focus from reporting by States on their implementation to active dialogue with States.

Most speakers called for continuing to strengthen cooperation among the three Committees since this would, as the representative of Ghana pointed out, enhance the international community’s effort to address “the ever-evolving nature of terrorism”.²⁰² The representative of Japan proposed consolidating visits of the committees. He said that rationalizing visits would not only ease the burden on the States visited but would also create an enhanced cooperative relationship between the Committees and those States.²⁰³ The representative of the United States said that the Committees should speak with one voice to succeed in counter-terrorism efforts, and to do so, the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate and the Monitoring Team must conduct more joint visits or at least coordinate their visits and share information obtained on the visits and coordinate the follow-up.²⁰⁴

Among the delegations that elaborated on being directly affected by terrorist acts, the representatives of Cuba and Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) accused the United States of supporting impunity for terrorist acts by providing a safe haven to persons accused in their respective countries of having committed terrorist acts.²⁰⁵ The representative of Israel accused the Islamic Republic of Iran and the Syrian Arab Republic of providing finance and a safe haven to organizations that committed terrorist activities in Israel.²⁰⁶ On the other hand, the representatives of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the Syrian Arab Republic stated that the Arab region was suffering from terrorism in general and from “State terrorism” by Israel.²⁰⁷

Decision of 29 June 2006 (5477th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5477th meeting, on 29 June 2006, the President (Denmark) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁰⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

[Stated that it] was appalled by the horrific death of members of the Russian diplomatic mission in Iraq;

Condemned in the strongest possible terms that crime committed by the terrorists and conveyed its deepest sympathy and condolences to the families of the deceased, and the people and the Government of the Russian Federation;

Confirmed that no cause could justify such acts of terror as that crime and previous attacks on foreign diplomats committed by the terrorists, and reaffirmed its utmost determination to combat terrorism;

Urged all States to cooperate actively in efforts to find and bring to justice the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of those barbaric acts;

Called upon the international community to support the Government of Iraq in exercising its responsibility to provide protection to the diplomatic community in Iraq;

Underlined the importance of continuing the efforts of the Government of Iraq and the multinational force in combating terrorism and improving security in Iraq;

Commended the Government of Iraq for initiating the Reconciliation and National Dialogue Plan;

Reaffirmed the independence, sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of Iraq.

Decision of 12 July 2006 (5484th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5484th meeting, on 12 July 2006, the representative of India was invited to participate. The President (France) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁰⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest terms the series of bomb attacks that had occurred in different parts of India, including Mumbai, on 11 July 2006, causing numerous deaths and injuries, and expressed its deepest sympathy and condolences to the victims of those heinous acts of terrorism and their families, and to the people and the Government of India;

Underlined the need to bring the perpetrators, organizers, financiers and sponsors of those reprehensible acts of terrorism to justice, and urged all States to cooperate actively with the Indian authorities in this regard;

Reaffirmed that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constituted one of the most serious threats to international peace and security, and that any acts of terrorism were criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, wherever, whenever and by whomsoever committed;

Reiterated its determination to combat all forms of terrorism, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter.

Decision of 20 December 2006 (5600th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5600th meeting, on 20 December 2006, the President (Qatar) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 18 December 2006 from the Chairman of the Counter-Terrorism Committee.²¹⁰ He then made a statement on behalf of the Council,²¹¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed that terrorism constituted one of the most serious threats to international peace and security, and that any acts of terrorism were criminal and unjustifiable;

Reiterated its call upon States to become parties to all relevant international conventions and protocols relating to terrorism, and to make full use of the sources of assistance and guidance which were available;

Reminded States that they must ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism complied with all their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law;

Called upon the relevant United Nations departments, programmes and specialized agencies to consider how to pursue counter-terrorism objectives;

Encouraged the Counter-Terrorism Committee to report to the Council on any outstanding issues;

Stressed that the mandate of the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate flowed from that of the Committee;

Endorsed the recommendation of the Committee with regard to the Directorate's reporting lines so that the Directorate would thenceforth present its draft work programmes and its semi-annual reports directly to the Committee.

Decision of 22 December 2006 (5609th meeting): resolution 1735 (2006)

At the 5609th meeting, on 22 December 2006, at which the representative of Qatar made a statement, the President (Qatar) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, Denmark, France, Greece, Japan, Peru, the Russian Federation, Slovakia, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States.²¹² The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1735 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that all States should take the measures previously imposed by paragraph 4 (b) of resolution 1267 (1999), paragraph 8 (c) of resolution 1333 (2000) and paragraphs 1 and 2 of resolution 1390 (2002), with respect to

Al-Qaida, Osama bin Laden and the Taliban and other individuals, groups, undertakings and entities associated with them;

Decided that, when proposing names to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999) for inclusion on the Consolidated List, States should act in accordance with paragraph 17 of resolution 1526 (2004) and paragraph 4 of resolution 1617 (2005) and provide a statement of case; the statement of case should provide as much detail as possible on the basis(es) for the listing;

Decided that the Committee should continue to develop, adopt and apply guidelines regarding the delisting of individuals and entities on the Consolidated List;

Decided to extend the period for consideration by the Committee of notifications submitted pursuant to paragraph 1 (a) of resolution 1452 (2002) from 48 hours to three working days;

Decided, in order to assist the Committee in the fulfilment of its mandate, to extend the mandate of the current New York-based Monitoring Team, appointed by the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraph 20 of resolution 1617 (2005), for a further period of 18 months.

The representative of Qatar expressed concern about the appointment of the members of the Monitoring Team, stating that in this respect the resolution went beyond the established United Nations rules of procedure and beyond the authority and mandate of the sanctions committees. He stressed that it disregarded methods of dialogue, consultation and cooperation that should govern the selection of the members. He said that certain elements enjoying a preponderant role in the Team did not display the required degree of professionalism and transparency and that some of the Team's methods harmed the interests of certain States or religions. He concluded that the resolution should not serve as a precedent for appointing experts to monitoring teams created by sanctions committees.²¹³

Decision of 12 April 2007 (5659th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5659th meeting, on 12 April 2007, the representative of Algeria was invited to participate. The President (United Kingdom) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²¹⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest terms the two suicide attacks that had occurred in Algiers on 11 April 2007, causing numerous deaths and injuries, and expressed its deep sympathy and

statement by the President

At the 5738th meeting, on 7 September 2007, the representative of Algeria was invited to participate. The President (France) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²¹⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest terms the terrorist attack that had occurred in Batna, Algeria, on 6 September 2007, causing numerous deaths and injuries;

Underlined the need to bring perpetrators, organizers, financiers and sponsors of that reprehensible act of terrorism to justice;

Reaffirmed that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constituted one of the most serious threats to international peace and security, and that any acts of terrorism were criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, wherever, whenever and by whomsoever committed;

Reiterated its determination to combat all forms of terrorism, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter.

Decision of 5 October 2007 (5754th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5754th meeting, on 5 October 2007, the representative of Poland was invited to participate. The President (Ghana) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²¹⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned the attack in Baghdad against the Ambassador of Poland to Iraq on 3 October 2007, which had resulted in the wounding of the Ambassador, the killing of one member of his personal security detachment team and injuries to two others;

Expressed its deepest sympathy and condolences to the victims of the attack and to their families, and to the Government of the Republic of Poland;

Reaffirmed that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constituted one of the most serious threats to international peace and security and that any acts of terrorism were criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, wherever, whenever and by whomsoever committed;

Further reaffirmed the need to combat by all means threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts.

Decision of 22 October 2007 (5764th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5764th meeting, on 22 October 2007, the representative of Pakistan was invited to participate. The President (Ghana) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²¹⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest terms the bomb attacks that had occurred in Karachi, Pakistan, on 18 October 2007, causing numerous deaths and injuries, and expressed its deep sympathy and condolences to the victims of that heinous act of terrorism and their families, and to the people and the Government of Pakistan;

Underlined the need to bring perpetrators, organizers, financiers and sponsors of that reprehensible act of terrorism to justice;

Reaffirmed that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constituted one of the most serious threats to international peace and security, and that any acts of terrorism were criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, wherever, whenever and by whomsoever committed;

Further reaffirmed the need to combat by all means threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts; and reminded States that they must ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism complied with all their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law.

Decision of 10 December 2007 (5795th meeting):
resolution 1787 (2007)

At the 5795th meeting, on 10 December 2007, at which statements were made by the representatives of Panama and Qatar, the President (Italy) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Belgium, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, France, Italy, Panama, the Russian Federation, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States.²²⁰ The draft resolution was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1787 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

²¹⁸ S/PRST/2007/36.

Decided to extend the initial period referred to in paragraph 2 of resolution 1535 (2004) until 31 March 2008;

Requested the Executive Director of the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate, within 60 days of the adoption of the resolution and in consultation with members of the Council, to recommend such changes as he deemed appropriate to the organizational plan referred to in paragraph 4 of resolution 1535 (2004), and to submit them to the Counter-Terrorism Committee for its consideration and endorsement prior to the expiration of the period referred to above.

The representative of Panama said that the decision to postpone the review of the mandate of the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate was justified because of the recent appointment of the new Executive Director.²²¹

The representative of Qatar was of the opinion that the Council did not work with a clear definition of terrorism and failed to deal with its root causes. He therefore reiterated his call to the Council and its relevant committees to work to find a clear definition of this phenomenon and its root causes. Furthermore, he stressed the need to seriously consider the future of the Executive Directorate and the possibility of annexing it to the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force since he saw a lack of accuracy and balance in the evaluation by the Counter-Terrorism Committee and the Directorate of the efforts of Member States to implement resolution 1373 (2001) and an imbalance in the coordination of visits to countries of the South in comparison with countries of the North. He also saw a particular focus on the technical assistance provided by countries of the North and a lack of attention to the extent to which they were committed to the rules and norms of international law and human rights law and the implementation of resolution 1373 (2001).²²²

Decision of 11 December 2007 (5798th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5798th meeting, on 11 December 2007, the representative of Algeria was invited to participate. The President (Italy) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²²³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Underlined the need to bring perpetrators, organizers, financiers and sponsors of that reprehensible act of terrorism to justice;

Reaffirmed that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constituted one of the most serious threats to international peace and security, and that any acts of terrorism were criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, wherever, whenever and by whomsoever committed;

Reaffirmed the need to combat by all means threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts;

Reiterated its determination to combat all forms of terrorism, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter.

Decision of 27 December 2007 (5816th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5816th meeting, on 27 December 2007, the representative of Pakistan was invited to participate. The President (Italy) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²²⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned in the strongest terms the terrorist suicide attack by extremists that had occurred in Rawalpindi, Pakistan, on 27 December 2007, causing the death of former Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto and numerous other casualties, and expressed its deep sympathy and condolences to the victims of that heinous act of terrorism and their families, and to the people and the Government of Pakistan;

Reaffirmed the need to combat by all means, in accordance with the Charter of United Nations, threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts; and reminded States that they must ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism complied with all their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law.

39. Protection of civilians in armed conflict

Deliberations of 14 June 2004 (4990th meeting)

At its 4990th meeting, on 14 June 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda a report of the Secretary-General on the protection of civilians in armed conflict.¹ The Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator. Following the briefing, statements were made by all Council members and 20 other speakers.²

In his report, the Secretary-General recalled that, in December 2003, the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs had presented to the Security Council the elements of a 10-point platform on the protection of civilians in armed conflict. The platform embodied many of the key issues set out in the broader protection framework provided by the aide-memoire on the protection of civilians, an updated version of which the Council had adopted on 15 December 2003.³ The report examined the issues outlined in the platform and identified specific ways in which performance could be improved. Among other points, the Secretary-General observed that, in line with Council resolution 1296 (2000) of 19 April 2000, mandates of peacekeeping operations had been broadened to allow troops to physically protect civilians under imminent threat of violence, as seen in the mandates of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL);⁴ the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC);⁵ the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL);⁶ the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI);⁷ and the United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB).⁸ The inclusion of programmes for the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and rehabilitation of combatants in the mandates of UNAMSIL, the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan,⁹ and further in the mandates of MONUC, UNMIL, UNOCI and ONUB; and of measures to protect refugees and returnees in decisions relating to UNOCI and ONUB was also key to meeting protection needs. Furthermore, by stressing in its resolutions that human rights violations and denial of humanitarian access were unacceptable, the Council had reinforced a message which humanitarian and other actors on the ground could use. The Secretary-General noted that the Council should continue to systematically emphasize these concerns. He stressed that efforts to deter war crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide and to break the prevailing culture of impunity in situations of armed conflict had been boosted by the establishment of the International Criminal Court and the jurisprudence of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, as well as the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

The Secretary-General recalled in his report that the Council had made a number of important commitments to the protection of civilians, by its resolutions 1265 (1999) and 1296 (2000). Issues already identified by the Council, which formed the basis of the 10-point platform, were (a) improving humanitarian access; (b) improving the safety and security of humanitarian personnel; (c) improving measures to respond to the security needs of refugees and internally displaced persons; (d) ensuring that the special protection and assistance requirements of children in armed conflict were fully addressed; (e) ensuring that the special protection and assistance requirements of women in armed conflict were fully addressed; (f) addressing shortcomings in the approach to disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and rehabilitation; (g) addressing the impact of small arms and light weapons on civilians; (h) combating impunity; (i) developing further measures to promote the responsibility of armed groups and non-State actors; and (j) ensuring the provision of the necessary resources to address the needs of vulnerable populations in “forgotten emergencies”. In his concluding observations, the Secretary-General noted that, in the five years since the framework to strengthen the protection of civilians in armed conflict was initiated, the system of public international order had been under unprecedented strain. He urged the international community to recommit itself to the principles of international law based on justice, peaceful settlement of disputes and respect for human dignity.

Presenting the report of the Secretary-General, the Under-Secretary-General stated that the tenth anniversary of the “collective failure to protect 800,000 defenceless men, women and children” from the brutal deaths they had suffered in Rwanda provided a chilling impetus to reflect on ways to better protect vulnerable civilian populations during crises and their immediate aftermath. He stressed that the Council’s renewed commitment to act decisively to protect civilians in armed conflict was needed now more than ever. In the years since the Council adopted its first resolution on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, peacekeeping mandates had been broadened and had assumed a stronger protection focus. Those mandates had also been complemented by swifter deployments of peacekeeping troops to avert immediate crises of protection and to restore order. In concluding, the Under-Secretary-General reiterated the Secretary-General’s recommendation in his report that the Council should consider adopting a new resolution on the protection of civilians in armed conflict. To that end, the Secretary-General had set forth a number of recommendations, including measures to enable the humanitarian community to assist in the Council’s response through more systematic provision of information on key protection issues and earlier reporting on situations of concern.¹⁰

In the ensuing debate, speakers welcomed the advances made in the protection of civilians in armed conflict, especially with regard to swifter deployment of peacekeeping forces and entrusting greater responsibility for the protection of civilians to regional organizations, but cautioned that continued impunity and increased attacks against humanitarian personnel, as well as acts of terrorism and sexual violence against civilians posed challenges that had to be addressed. Moreover, many stressed that all parties, including United Nations peacekeepers and humanitarian personnel, must demonstrate respect for human dignity and uphold the principles of international humanitarian and human rights law. Speakers also highlighted the important role which regional organizations could play in the efforts to enhance the protection of civilians. Speakers further described the protection of civilians as one of the core issues on the Council’s agenda and fundamental to the precepts of the Charter of the United Nations, owing to its link to the maintenance of international peace and security. Most speakers also highlighted, as a main challenge for the protection of civilians, the need for non-State actors to comply with international humanitarian law.

The representative of the United States encouraged the Secretary-General, the Under-Secretary-General and other key actors to present country-specific recommendations for the Council’s consideration.¹¹ The representatives of Spain, the United Kingdom, Brazil and Fiji highlighted the need for cross-cutting integration of the protection of civilians into all United Nations activities, so that that issue was not seen as an isolated one.¹²

Speakers emphasized the significant role the International Criminal Court could play in the international community’s fight against impunity, the representative of the United Kingdom noting the potential for the Council to make referrals to the Court’s Prosecutor for investigation.¹³ The representative of Ireland, speaking on behalf of the European Union, concurring with the Secretary-General’s observation that impunity could be a dangerous recipe for sliding back into conflict, stated that while amnesties could provide a measure for dealing with lesser crimes, they must never be granted for serious violations of international humanitarian and human rights law.¹⁴

The representative of Romania stated that although the responsibility to protect its citizens rested with States, it was up to the Security Council to intervene when Governments were unwilling or unable to take responsibility for protecting civilians in armed conflict.¹⁵

The representative of Norway highlighted the need to achieve a clear division of labour between humanitarian actors on the one hand, and political and military actors on the other in the ongoing debate about integrated United Nations missions. While striving for greater coherence, he cautioned that humanitarian integrity must not be compromised. He urged the United Nations system and Member States to take into account the guidelines on civil-military relationships in complex emergencies elaborated by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in the planning and implementation of international operations.¹⁶

The representative of Romania stressed that the emergence of non-State actors had presented the United Nations with the choice of either opening channels of dialogue to engage such armed groups in humanitarian negotiations, thus legitimizing groups with sometimes dangerous agendas, or to keep them at a distance, thus relinquishing the possibility of exercising positive leverage.¹⁷ The representative of Germany, while noting that constructive engagement with non-State armed actors was needed more than ever, cautioned that such constructive engagement required flexibility and realism, and should not come at the expense of the need to address impunity.¹⁸

The representative of Colombia warned that negotiating with terrorist organizations, traffickers of illicit drugs and criminals in order to gain access to specific populations not only legitimized such organizations but also strengthened their operations. He said that such political negotiations between humanitarian organizations and illegal armed groups violated the basic principles of neutrality, impartiality and transparency of humanitarian work.¹⁹

The representative of China acknowledged that, due to continued conflict in some regions, including Africa, the Middle East and Iraq, much remained to be accomplished in pursuit of the goal of protecting civilians in armed conflict. He opined that, to mitigate the difficult situations faced by those civilians, the international community should adopt a comprehensive strategy that addressed both root causes and symptoms of conflict.²⁰

Decision of 14 December 2004 (5100th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5100th meeting, on 14 December 2004, the Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator. At the meeting, all Council members and 16 other representatives made statements.²¹

In his briefing, the Under-Secretary-General updated the Council on developments over the previous six months in terms of the implementation of the 10-point platform he had presented to the Security Council the preceding year.²² He listed seven key challenges: humanitarian access to civilians in need; the security of humanitarian personnel; protection of women and children, including against sexual violence and forcible recruitment of child soldiers; protection of refugees and internally displaced persons; compliance with international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law; disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and rehabilitation of former fighters; and neglected emergencies.

Turning to seven areas of action which he believed would strengthen the ability and enhance the United Nations response to the challenges outlined, the Under-Secretary-General highlighted the need to strengthen the overall response capacity of the humanitarian community to provide both effective and timely humanitarian assistance and protection. Secondly, he recalled that in his most recent report on protection of civilians in armed conflict²³ the Secretary-General had called for a mechanism that would provide better information in order to inform and facilitate the Council's deliberations. He stated that work had begun with United Nations agencies to develop a systematic methodology which would allow better comparative analysis and monitoring of protection trends. Thirdly, the Under-Secretary-General pointed to the need to ensure a more consistent response to crises and to highlight neglected emergencies. Fourthly, he stated that it was essential to place greater emphasis on the role of national actors, including through developing approaches and tools that would strengthen their ability to provide protection. Fifthly, he stated that it was essential to assess and mitigate any potential humanitarian consequences of sanctions. His Office, in collaboration with the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, had developed a methodology to assess the human impact of sanctions. He strongly encouraged the Council members to use that methodology during their deliberations to enhance sanctions as a tool. As a sixth point, he stressed the importance of regional organizations in providing protection in armed conflicts. Finally, with respect to incidence of sexual abuse and exploitation by peacekeeping and humanitarian personnel, he appealed to contributing Member States to give that issue their urgent attention and ensure that appropriate accountability mechanisms were in place.²⁴

During the ensuing debate, most speakers expressed support for the 10-point platform presented by the Secretary-General in his report. Speakers expressed concern over the continued plight of civilians in armed conflict, in particular the continuation of sexual violence against women during armed conflict, and the recruitment of child soldiers. They called for ending impunity through effective use of national and international legal institutions, and also expressed concern with respect to the frequency of attacks on United Nations and other humanitarian personnel.

The representative of France proposed that the reports of the Secretary-General on the protection of civilians should be presented annually, instead of every 18 months. He stated that the report should list particularly serious situations pertaining to the refusal to grant humanitarian access and cases in which camps for refugees or displaced persons were attacked by armed elements, as well as provide more specific information with respect to those victimized by sexual violence and used as a weapon of war.²⁵

The representative of the United Kingdom, while stressing the need to strengthen the collaborative approach to protection, noted “a serious lack” of results-based reporting on protection objectives in humanitarian programmes, and proposed that this could be considered along with the Secretary-General’s proposal for a mechanism to provide better facts and statistics on protection.²⁶ The representative of Chile expressed support for the initiative to establish an ad hoc group on the protection of civilians, which would make recommendations and provide follow-up to the decisions taken by the Council.²⁷

Many speakers addressed the issue of the principle of the “responsibility to protect”. Welcoming the endorsement by the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change of the collective international responsibility to protect,²⁸ the representative of Canada, echoed by the representative of Peru, believed that the Council should review the criteria presented by the Panel for the authorization of the use of force in that context, with a view to adopting them.²⁹ The representatives of France and Spain contended that if a Government did not have the ability to protect its own population, or was not willing to do so, the international community, and in particular the United Nations, must fulfil that protective function. The representative of France further stated that the Council should deal directly with massive violations of international humanitarian law and that, in the most dramatic situations, a military intervention might be the only option to avoid or stop substantial loss of human life.³⁰ The representative of the United Kingdom, echoed by the representative of Liechtenstein, contended that the Council should engage more directly in the commitment to prevent and in the responsibility to protect.³¹ The representative of New Zealand welcomed the Panel’s recommendations with respect to internal threats and the responsibility to protect, and urged Council members and the wider United Nations membership to give them serious consideration.³² The representative of Costa Rica, also referring to the report of the Panel, regretted that the Security Council had not shown itself to be willing or able to protect civilians effectively, and appealed to the Council to commit itself thereto.³³

The representative of Colombia contended that concepts like “humanitarian intervention” and “responsibility to protect” should be “managed carefully and responsibly”, and that humanitarian assistance efforts must be undertaken with the full cooperation, coordination and consent of the Government.³⁴

The representative of Canada stated that the Council must be steadfast and consistent in the messages it sent in response to war crimes and crimes against humanity, and must ensure follow-through when it threatened to impose measures unless conditions were met. Citing the situation in Darfur as one example, he further stressed that in cases in which measures were imposed, those measures must be monitored, and the Council must not tolerate a failure by parties to comply with its resolutions.³⁵

With respect to addressing sexual abuse perpetrated by United Nations personnel, the representative of Costa Rica held that rules of confidentiality included in the Secretary-General’s bulletin on sexual exploitation³⁶ created “an atmosphere of impunity”, and called for all measures taken against alleged perpetrators to be taken with the greatest amount of transparency possible. She also contended that individuals involved should be subject to the jurisdiction of the territory in which the events occurred, or to that of the victim’s home country.³⁷

After the debate, the President (Algeria) made a statement on behalf of the Council,³⁸ by which, the Council, inter alia:

[Stated that it was] gravely concerned that civilians were increasingly targeted by combatants and armed elements during armed conflict, in particular women, children and other vulnerable groups, including refugees and internally displaced persons, and recognized the negative impact this would have on durable peace and national reconciliation;

Reiterated its call to all parties to armed conflict to take all necessary measures to ensure security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated personnel as well as personnel of humanitarian organizations;

Stressed the need for regional cooperation in order to address cross-border issues such as disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and rehabilitation, cross-border movement of refugees and combatants, human trafficking, illicit flow of small arms and illegal exploitation of natural resources and post-conflict situations;

Condemned the increased use of sexual and gender-based violence as a weapon of war as well as the recruitment and use of child soldiers by parties to armed conflict in violation of international obligations applicable to them;

Urged the international community to ensure adequate and timely funding in response to humanitarian need across crises, so as to provide sufficient humanitarian assistance in alleviating the suffering of civilian populations, in particular those in areas affected by armed conflict or emerging from a situation of conflict.

Decision of 21 June 2005 (5209th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5209th meeting, on 21 June 2005, the Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator. Statements were made by all Council members and eight other representatives.³⁹ The Under-Secretary-General recalled that, five years earlier, the Council had adopted resolution 1296 (2000) and since then had been increasingly seized of the protection of civilians in armed conflict. Despite some progress, challenges associated with protecting civilians remained numerous and complex.

Recalling his 10-point plan, the Under-Secretary-General highlighted some key areas where the need to take action was particularly urgent. His first concern was the frequency and scale of deliberate displacement both within and across borders. He stressed that more had to be done to prevent and end displacement, and that the creation of a secure environment for displaced populations should be a primary objective for peacekeeping operations. Secondly, he stated that the recurrent use of sexual violence was arguably one of the worst global protection challenges, owing to its scale, prevalence and profound impact, and information indicated that more and more women were being attacked. He cited the situation in North Kivu in the Democratic Republic of the Congo as a place where sexual violence had become endemic, warning that, if not stopped, such violence would have terrible long-term ramifications for the society, threatening future peace and stability. While expressing concern about the issue of humanitarian access and the interrelated issue of safety and security of humanitarian personnel, the Under-Secretary-General opined that a key objective of peacekeeping missions should be the creation of secure environments to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance, safeguard humanitarian staff and protect essential services. He also stressed the need to develop appropriate guidance which maximized the capacity to provide physical protection while upholding humanitarian principles and safeguarding humanitarian space. He further reiterated that tackling impunity lay at the heart of protection concerns, and that the process of indictments by the International Criminal Court in Uganda, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Darfur should signal a climate in which impunity would no longer be tolerated. At the same time, he said, “we must remain aware of the potential impact of such legal action on humanitarian operations, including the potential for reprisals against humanitarian staff”.

The Under-Secretary-General emphasized the critical role that regional and intergovernmental organizations had to play in terms of strengthening protection response. His office had developed a workplan which was to be presented at the forthcoming sixth high-level meeting of the Secretary-General with heads of regional and other intergovernmental organizations. Finally, pointing to the need to develop more systematic reporting to the Security Council to facilitate its deliberations and ensure that protection concerns were more fully reflected in its proceedings, he said that, under the guidance of the Executive Committee on Humanitarian Affairs, efforts were focused on establishing criteria and indicators to generate current overviews and trend analysis.⁴⁰

In the ensuing debate, speakers expressed grave concern about the limited progress on the ground in ensuring the effective protection of civilians in situations of armed conflict, and drew attention to a number of major “protection gaps”. These included the need to provide better physical protection for displaced populations, in particular women and children. Speakers considered that contributing to the establishment of a secure environment for vulnerable populations should be a key objective of peacekeeping operations. While the need to respond to sexual and gender-based violence was stressed, speakers also pointed to the proliferation of small arms and light weapons as another area that needed to be addressed.

Many speakers reiterated the need to strengthen the legal framework for the protection of humanitarian personnel. The representative of Canada called on the Council to encourage the General Assembly to conclude discussions on expanding the scope of the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, and to remove the “exceptional risk” requirement.⁴¹

Speakers further called for more reliable and predictable resources to assist those in need, noting the disparity between current funding levels and current requirements. Finally, speakers pointed to the need to ensure that humanitarian assistance was carried out in a non-discriminatory, balanced and proportionate manner.

At the end of the meeting, the President (France) issued a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴² by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its commitment to address the widespread impact of armed conflict on civilian populations;

Reaffirmed its strong condemnation of the deliberate targeting of civilians or other protected persons in situations of armed conflict, and called upon all parties to put an end to such practices; and expressed, in particular, its deep concern at the use of sexual violence as a weapon of war; and called upon all States to put an end to impunity in this regard;

Stressed the urgent need for providing better physical protection for displaced populations as well as for other vulnerable groups, in particular women and children;

Invited the Secretary-General to include in his next report recommendations on ways to better address the persisting and emerging protection challenges in the evolving peacekeeping environment; and expressed its intention to take further action to strengthen and to enhance the protection of civilians in armed conflict, including, if necessary, the possible adoption of a resolution in this regard.

Deliberations of 9 December 2005 (5319th meeting)

At its 5319th meeting, on 9 December 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the protection of civilians in armed conflict.⁴³ The Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator and the Vice-President of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). In addition to all Council members, statements were made by 19 other representatives.⁴⁴

The Under-Secretary-General said that much headway had been made in the six years since the Council had adopted its first resolution on the protection of civilians. This included the Council's expansion of peacekeeping mandates to include protection measures (although those should be augmented by "concrete measures" to facilitate a secure environment), and its focus on key protection concerns; engagement of regional and subregional organizations; strengthening of humanitarian assistance; increased ratifications of relevant international instruments; and the establishment of the International Criminal Court. Still, he stressed, civilians continued to bear the brunt of armed conflicts. The Under-Secretary-General lamented that only half of the 26 countries now in armed conflict were party to Additional Protocol II to the Geneva Conventions, which was the "most relevant" instrument on non-international conflicts. While noting that in many situations humanitarian actors operated in very insecure environments, he stressed that the presence of aid workers should not be used as an "alibi to camouflage" the absence of genuine efforts for lasting political solutions. The Under-Secretary-General highlighted three recommendations for action mentioned by the Secretary-General in his report. First, the current civilian protection framework needed to be updated to reflect the current environment of conflict.

He urged the Council to adopt a resolution on the subject that included the "strongest possible language". Second, the collation of empirical data on specific and global trends should be improved to facilitate the Council's decision-making process. Third, he said that much more emphasis and support should be devoted to peacemaking, with all such efforts reflecting the needs of the civilian populations.⁴⁵

The Vice-President of ICRC said that the lack of political will to fully respect humanitarian law was the major impediment to protecting civilians during conflict. He noted that ICRC took account of the specific needs of vulnerable populations, including internally displaced persons, and stressed the importance to enhance cooperation among humanitarian organizations to protect those populations. He further highlighted the need for neutrality and independence of such organizations, including ICRC, as that "added value" for protecting civilians. He also emphasized the need to address the root causes of conflict, so that renewal of hostilities would become less likely.⁴⁶

In the debate that followed, most speakers expressed concern with the increased targeting of civilians in warfare, and stressed the need to protect vulnerable groups, particularly internally displaced persons, women and children. Many speakers cited the responsibility of the international community and of the Security Council, in particular, to protect populations from genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity if a State failed to do so.⁴⁷ The representative of Peru held that the permanent members of the Council should agree not to use their right to veto when such serious violations were involved.⁴⁸ The representative of the Russian Federation opined that it was "clearly premature" to advance the concept of responsibility to protect in Security Council documents.⁴⁹ Several representatives were also of the opinion that the concept should be discussed more in depth by the General Assembly before it was considered by the Council.⁵⁰

While agreeing that the concept would be refined within the framework of the General Assembly, the representative of France believed that it “would not be unusual for the Security Council to refer to that notion”, because it had the consensus among State leaders, and further opined that the notion should guide the work of the Council, particularly in its role on the protection of populations.⁵¹

The representative of China, while noting that the World Summit Outcome⁵² clearly referred to the responsibility to protect populations from genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity, held that a “cautious approach” should be taken in determining whether a Government was able or willing to protect its citizens. Arbitrary and hasty intervention should be avoided, as that might complicate situations and result in greater harm to innocent civilians. He also believed that constructive assistance should be provided to States in order to avoid violating State sovereignty and respect the will of the parties concerned.⁵³

The representative of Egypt opined that the Council should not expand its authority by establishing general policies for dealing with humanitarian issues and human rights, as this fell within the mandate of the General Assembly. He was thus concerned at the mention in the report of the Secretary-General of the Council’s role in legislating and taking action under the “so-called responsibility to protect”. He also opposed the idea of imposing targeted sanctions under Chapter VII on States in order to ensure humanitarian access, as proposed in the report of the Secretary-General.⁵⁴

In connection with the responsibility to protect, speakers stressed the role of regional organizations in humanitarian assistance and peacekeeping and the need to enhance cooperation with them and their funding.⁵⁵

Several speakers noted with concern that access of humanitarian workers to the most vulnerable groups was often restricted. The majority of speakers called for strengthening humanitarian access and civilian protection in peacekeeping mandates. Referring to peacekeeping missions mandated with multiple tasks, the representative of Switzerland stressed that humanitarian work “must be carried out by civilians” in order to guarantee the observance of humanitarian principles. Noting the lack of clarity sometimes seen on the ground with respect to the respective roles of humanitarian and military actors, he called on the Council to follow the Guidelines on the Use of Military and Civil Defence Assets to Support United Nations Humanitarian Activities in Complex Emergencies.⁵⁶

The representative of Uganda contradicted references made to his country in the Secretary-General’s report, including in terms of the number of internally displaced persons in northern Uganda and his Government’s limitations on the freedom of movement in that region. He then appealed for the assistance of the international community in executing the warrants issued by the International Criminal Court for the leaders of the Lord’s Resistance Army.⁵⁷

The representative of the United Kingdom noted that it was time to take stock of the recommendations made by the Secretary-General over the past five years on how the Council could further improve the protection of civilians in armed conflict. His delegation had initiated a draft resolution to address the gaps as to prevention, protection and humanitarian access. Filling those gaps, he said, could only be done with combined action by parties to conflicts, individual States concerned and the international community.⁵⁸ resolution;⁶⁰ it was then put to a vote and adopted as resolution 1674 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed the provisions of paragraphs 138 and 139 of the 2005 World Summit Outcome⁶¹ regarding the responsibility to protect populations from genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity;

Demanded that all parties concerned comply strictly with the obligations applicable to them under international law;

Called upon States that had not already done so to consider ratifying the instruments of international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law, and to take appropriate legislative, judicial and administrative measures to implement their obligations under those instruments;

Demanded that all States fully implement all relevant decisions of the Council, and in this regard cooperate fully with United Nations peacekeeping missions and country teams in the follow-up and implementation of those decisions;

Called upon all parties concerned to ensure that all peace processes, peace agreements and post-conflict recovery and reconstruction planning have regard for the special needs of women and children;

Urged the international community to provide support and assistance to enable States to fulfil their responsibilities regarding the protection of refugees and other persons protected under international humanitarian law;

Urged all those concerned, as set forth in international humanitarian law, to allow full unimpeded access by humanitarian personnel to civilians in need of assistance in situations of armed conflict, and to make available all necessary facilities for their operations, and to promote the safety, security and freedom of movement of humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel and their assets;

Requested the Secretary-General to submit his next report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict within 18 months of the date of the resolution.

Deliberations of 28 June 2006 (5476th meeting)

At its 5476th meeting, on 28 June 2006, the Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator. In addition to all Council members, statements were made by eight representatives.⁶²

⁶⁰ S/2006/267.

⁶² The representatives of Austria (on behalf of the European Union), Canada, Colombia, Guatemala, Iraq, Liechtenstein, Slovenia and Uganda.

In his briefing, the Under-Secretary-General stated that although resolution 1674 (2006) was fundamental to progress in the protection of civilians, it had failed to ensure a predictable response to the massive suffering of vulnerable civilians. He stated that the United Nations, and the Security Council specifically, had the responsibility to protect, as reaffirmed in resolution 1674 (2006). However, he noted, there were too many times when the United Nations did not come to the defence of civilian populations in need. Acknowledging that there were signs of progress in efforts to better protect civilians caught in conflict, he emphasized that civilians continued to bear the full “brunt of armed conflict and terror”, in particular in Iraq, the Sudan, Uganda, Somalia, Afghanistan and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. He stressed the importance of using the range of protection tools at the Council’s disposal more effectively, including to make resolution 1674 (2006) a “real platform for action”. He said that peacekeeping missions must be equipped with better, more comprehensive mandates and the means to fulfil them. In addition, peacekeepers must be given tools, guidance and support if they were to respond to threats and provide better protection. Furthermore, he observed that targeted sanctions should be employed at the earliest opportunity, where violations against civilians prevailed, to signal international concern and serve as a first step to protect.⁶³

Most speakers welcomed the recent adoption of resolution 1674 (2006), which they opined contained a number of crucial elements for improving the international protection regime for civilians in armed conflict. The representative of the United Kingdom, echoed by the representatives of Ghana and the Congo, stressed that efforts to protect civilians from the effect of armed conflict must be at the heart of the Council’s work, which was why the Council had reaffirmed in resolution 1674 (2006) that it had a shared responsibility to protect populations from large-scale abuses and, in particular, from crimes against humanity, including the prospect of genocide.⁶⁴

Speakers expressed concern in particular about the ongoing crisis in Darfur, and especially the impact of conflict on civilians in that region. The representative of the United States said that the situation in Darfur illustrated the urgent role that States must play to safeguard civilians.⁶⁵ The representative of the United Kingdom expressed the view that “politically and practically”, a United Nations mission could not be deployed to Darfur unless the protection of civilians was tackled and provided.⁶⁶

While welcoming resolution 1674 (2006), the representative of Liechtenstein stated that he would have welcomed clear language on the role that the Security Council was willing to assume with regard to the responsibility to protect populations from genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity. He also expressed his disappointment at the fact that the resolution did not contain a reference to the vital role of the International Criminal Court.⁶⁷

In order to promote the protection of civilians, speakers generally highlighted the need to pay closer attention to efforts to prevent conflict; to bring those responsible for crimes against civilians to justice, thereby ending the culture of impunity; and to bolster the role of peacekeeping missions in providing protection for civilians. They stressed that peacekeepers should be provided with a realistic, but also a clear and robust, mandate to protect civilians and facilitate a secure environment.

The representative of the Russian Federation said that it was necessary to establish systematic and coordinated measures at national, regional and international levels for protecting civilians from instances of armed conflict.⁶⁸ The representative of France said that when peacekeeping mandates were being drawn up, they should spell out responsibilities towards civilians in a precise manner. At the same time, he stressed the importance of ensuring that mandates were realistic, so that the United Nations peacekeepers did not find themselves helplessly watching massacres of civilians. Echoed by the representatives of Austria and Canada, the representative of France further stated that peacekeeping operations must be given the mandates and resources to discharge their mission to protect people.⁶⁹

The representative of Slovenia, speaking on behalf of the Human Security Network, expressed the Network’s commitment to further promoting the understanding of the notion of “responsibility to protect”, and in that context encouraged the permanent members of the Council to refrain from exercising their right to veto powers with regard to genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity and ethnic cleansing. He also expressed full support for the mandate of the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on the Prevention of Genocide.⁷⁰

The representative of China stated that the international community, while providing assistance and support, should not undermine the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the countries concerned.⁷¹

The representative of Japan noted that sometimes when a peacekeeping mission had a protection mandate, the mandate was interpreted differently by battalions drawn from different countries. For example, Council resolutions occasionally authorized a protection mandate for “civilians under imminent threat”, but there was a lack of clarity as to what sort of situation constituted an imminent threat. In order to address the problem, he suggested that the Secretariat should develop practical guidance on the day-to-day activities of peacekeeping troops.⁷²

The representative of Ghana believed that in the event of the failure by both governments and armed groups to abide by their commitments under international humanitarian law, it behoved the United Nations to intervene and protect innocent populations against human rights violations. He also believed that the International Criminal Court could contribute immensely towards containing and combating crimes against innocent populations in conflict areas.⁷³

The representative of the Congo, echoed by the representatives of Argentina and Guatemala, believed that the Council must put in place a multi-sectoral monitoring and follow-up mechanism to make it possible to collect all the information necessary to assess and respond to the need to protect civilians in countries on the Council’s agenda.⁷⁴

Deliberations of 4 December 2006
(5577th meeting)

At its 5577th meeting, on 4 December 2006, the Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator. All Council members and seven other representatives made statements during the meeting.⁷⁵

In his briefing, the Under-Secretary-General said that, over the past three years, he had been encouraged to see that the protection of civilians had steadily gained prominence in the Council's deliberations, and had been reflected in United Nations humanitarian and peace operations. He opined that the real measure of the success of the United Nations would be judged by the extent to which its actions had made a difference in securing the protection, the rights and the freedoms of the civilian population. He recalled that the Council had solemnly pledged to accept the responsibility to protect civilian populations, but lamented that this responsibility was far from being translated into predictable and adequate action to provide protection for all beleaguered and threatened communities. He then pointed to some situations, such as Liberia, Sierra Leone, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and South Sudan in which the United Nations had succeeded in providing security for civilians when the Council was united. Conversely, he stated, there had not been the same unity of purpose and action in places like Darfur or Gaza. He further stressed that violent attacks against non-combatants had increased by 55 per cent from 1989 to 2005, and that the key concerns for the protection of civilians remained the same as those listed in his 10-point action plan. He noted that humanitarian access, the situation of internally displaced persons and refugees, sexual violence, the protection of children, and direct attacks on civilians continued to cause grave concern. In concluding, the Under-Secretary-General suggested five issues as future priorities for the Council. First, the continuation of thematic briefings, Arria formula meetings and other means to ensure adequate information and analysis of the situation; secondly, effective use of mechanisms at the Council's disposal to prevent violations of international human rights and humanitarian law, including targeted sanctions; thirdly, conflict mediation and the timely and effective use of good offices; fourthly, enhancement of comprehensive and predictable funding; and fifthly, ensuring sufficient guidance and support to peacekeeping operations.⁷⁶

In the ensuing debate, speakers expressed grave concern at the continuing attacks on civilians in armed conflict, including sexual violence against women and the forced recruitment of child soldiers. They also expressed concern at the increase in attacks on humanitarian workers, which exacerbated the impediments to humanitarian access, and called for an end to impunity for violations of international humanitarian and human rights law. Speakers also stressed that the increase in attacks on journalists and media workers in conflict areas was of grave concern, and drew attention to the suffering of civilians caused by the proliferation of small arms and light weapons, and by the use of landmines and cluster munitions.

Many speakers called for the full implementation of resolution 1674 (2006), including the principles for the responsibility to protect as laid out in that resolution. The representative of China stressed the importance of humanitarian agencies respecting the principles of impartiality, neutrality, objectivity and independence, in order to maintain the humanitarian nature of their operations and to avoid becoming involved in local political disputes or negatively affecting a peace process.⁷⁷ The representative of the United States reiterated that in situations of violent conflict where a State was unwilling or unable to its civilians, the international community had "a distinct role".⁷⁸

Condemned intentional attacks against journalists, media professionals and associated personnel, as such, in situations of armed conflict, and called upon all parties to put an end to such practices;

Reaffirmed its condemnation of all incitements to violence against civilians in situations of armed conflict, further reaffirmed the need to bring to justice, in accordance with applicable international law, individuals who incited such violence;

Recalled its demand that all parties to an armed conflict comply fully with the obligations applicable to them under international law related to the protection of civilians in armed conflict, including journalists, media professionals and associated personnel;

Urged States and all other parties to an armed conflict to do their utmost to prevent violations of international humanitarian law against civilians, including journalists, media professionals and associated personnel;

Urged all parties involved in situations of armed conflict to respect the professional independence and rights of journalists, media professionals and associated personnel as civilians;

Requested the Secretary-General to include as a sub-item in his next reports on the protection of civilians in armed conflict the issue of the safety and security of journalists, media professionals and associated personnel.

Deliberations of 22 June and 20 November 2007 (5703rd and 5781st meetings)

At its 5703rd meeting, on 22 June 2007, the Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator. In addition to all Council members, statements were made by 14 representatives.⁸⁰

In his briefing, while highlighting some improvements in the protection of civilians in armed conflict in several areas, the Under-Secretary-General stressed that in many places the picture remained “sombre and profoundly worrying”. He elaborated on three main areas of concern, namely, the issue of targeting of civilians; the continuing displacement of civilians as a result of conflict; and the lack of access to people in need and of security for humanitarian workers. He highlighted that the Council had taken important steps towards better protection of civilians, exemplified by more robust peacekeeping and more strategic and protection-related deployment of peacekeepers in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. For future peacekeeping deployments, he suggested drawing lessons from the practical effect that the inclusion of protection of civilians in a number of peacekeeping mandates had had on the ground.

He recalled the General Assembly’s agreement at the 2005 World Summit on a fundamental “responsibility to protect” as a norm that not only emphasized the primary responsibility of States to protect its citizens and those within its jurisdiction against genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity but also recognized the role of the international community and the United Nations in helping States to exercise that responsibility. He urged the Council to invest more in conflict prevention and in post-conflict measures to prevent rapid relapse into conflict. He also said he would continue to ensure that protection concerns were fully integrated into peacekeeping efforts, and bring situations of grave humanitarian concern to the Council’s attention.⁸¹

While noting the progress achieved in the protection of civilians in armed conflict, speakers stressed that much remained to be done to comprehensively protect them and to ensure the protection and promotion of their human rights. Speakers were concerned in particular about the growing number of refugees and internally displaced persons worldwide. Many delegations expressed particular concern over the declining security situation in Darfur, despite the agreement on the hybrid force, and over the humanitarian situations in the Gaza Strip, Afghanistan, Somalia and Sri Lanka, among other areas, where civilians continued to be the victims of conflicts.

Reiterating resolution 1674 (2006), and while acknowledging that the parties to armed conflict bore the primary responsibility to protect civilians, a number of speakers stated that when those parties failed to do so, the international community had the duty to intervene.⁸² Many delegations shared the view that efforts to protect civilians must be placed at the heart of the Council’s work, and called on the Council and the Organization as a whole to do more to promote the principle of the “responsibility to protect”.

The representative of the Russian Federation said that while the responsibility for the protection of civilians fell on the Governments of States where conflict was occurring, such responsibility “should also be kept in mind by other parties that might be drawn into various conflict situations”. The concept of the responsibility to protect must be interpreted in strict compliance with the 2005 World Summit Outcome, and its implications must be considered by the General Assembly on the basis of the principles of the Charter and international law.⁸³

The representative of China reiterated that the concept of the responsibility to protect should be understood and applied “correctly”. He recalled that the 2005 World Summit Outcome had requested the General Assembly to continue its consideration and enrichment of the concept. He stressed that there were still differing understandings and interpretations of the concept among Member States, and that the Security Council should therefore refrain from invoking the concept of the responsibility to protect.⁸⁴

In order to promote the protection of civilians, many delegations called for the steady implementation of resolution 1674 (2006), through better monitoring and other measures. The representatives of France and the United Kingdom opined that the Council could continue to ensure that, where appropriate, United Nations peacekeepers were given robust mandates and necessary support to protect civilians from violence, and that the doctrine of protection of civilians in peacekeeping operations should be elaborated.⁸⁵ The representative of Canada called for the development of clear guidance for the implementation of resolution 1674 (2006).⁸⁶ The representative of the Republic of Korea believed that, because each conflict was different, the Council should develop a mechanism for case-by-case analysis of the situation of the respective civilian populations.⁸⁷

At its 5781st meeting, on 20 November 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the protection of civilians in armed conflict.⁸⁸ The Council heard statements by the Secretary-General, the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator, and the Director General of ICRC. In addition to Council members, statements were made by 20 representatives.⁸⁹

In his report, the Secretary-General outlined the persistent challenges to the protection of civilians in various conflicts around the world. The report contained an update on progress made in implementing resolution 1674 (2006) and on strengthening the framework for the protection of civilians elaborated by the Council and other partners in recent years. He observed that a critical and consequential next step towards operationalizing resolution 1674 (2006) and ensuring action that would have a tangible impact on the ground would be more systematic attention in the daily deliberations of the Council to the concerns and recommendations made in this and previous reports on the protection of civilians.

The Secretary-General highlighted in his report four challenges of particular importance, and in regard to which the Council and Member States could take action to ensure a more systematic and robust response, and for which he also introduced a set of recommended actions. To face the first challenge, ensuring access to civilians in need, the Secretary-General recommended the establishment of arrangements to agree upon the routes and timing of humanitarian convoys and airlifts to avoid accidental strikes on humanitarian operations; high-level diplomacy to promote humanitarian corridors and days of tranquillity; and the development of a standard moratorium on visa requirements and travel permits for humanitarian workers, and on Customs duties and import restrictions on humanitarian goods and equipment. The moratorium could be activated upon the recommendation of the Emergency Relief Coordinator where there was a need for rapid and life-saving assistance. For the second challenge, ensuring a more robust response to sexual violence, he called first on Member States to ensure that incidents of sexual violence were investigated and punished, including through the deployment of the principle of command responsibility and amending national legal systems to that effect; secondly, he called on prevention and response activities by humanitarian actors to be strengthened and better coordinated, including through the establishment of a clear and dedicated “institutional home” within the United Nations to coordinate activities, ensure provision of expertise in the field, develop system-wide advocacy and act as a repository of best practices. Regarding the third challenge, ensuring a more effective response to housing, land and property issues, he recommended relevant parties, including United Nations peacekeeping operations to take the following actions: preventive and deterrent actions, including strategic deployment of peacekeepers to prevent evictions and illegal expropriations, and the identification and prosecution by national courts or the International Criminal Court of those criminally responsible for the illegal appropriation or destruction of land and property; preparatory actions, such as early identification and registration of land and property abandoned by internally displaced persons and refugees to facilitate restitution or compensation, and the issuance of ownership documentation where this has been lost or destroyed; and restorative actions, such as the inclusion of the right to return and restitution of housing, land or property in all future peace agreements and all relevant Council resolutions, and the inclusion of housing, land and property issues as an integral part of future peacekeeping and other relevant missions. Lastly, with respect to the fourth challenge identified, eliminating the humanitarian impact of cluster munitions, the Secretary-General called on Member States to conclude a treaty which prohibited the use, production and stockpiling of such munitions, required the destruction of current stockpiles, and provided for clearance and other risk-mitigating activities; and, until such a treaty was concluded, to immediately freeze the use and transfer of cluster munitions. In concluding, the Secretary-General recommended the establishment of a dedicated, expert-level working group to facilitate the systematic and sustained consideration and analysis of protection concerns, and ensuring consistent application of the aide-memoire for the consideration of issues pertaining to the protection of civilians⁹⁰ in Council deliberations on the mandates of United Nations peacekeeping and other missions, draft resolutions and presidential statements and other relevant tasks.

In his opening remarks, the Secretary-General noted that the protection of civilians remained an “absolute priority” for the United Nations, and above all for the Member States with whom the primary responsibility for protecting civilians rested. He stated that there had been some progress in recent years, but the establishment of a Security Council working group on the protection of civilians was almost an “inevitable next step”. He noted that thousands of children had been killed and wounded in conflict each year, and that the new monitoring mechanisms and a dedicated Special Representative were vital tools to help remedy that situation.⁹¹

Introducing the report of the Secretary-General, the Under-Secretary-General stated that its recommendations for action would be critical for a more systematic consideration by the Council of protection of civilians concerned, and the implementation of the Council’s landmark resolution 1674 (2000). He then described the appalling conditions and threats facing civilians around the world, including the increasing trend of suicide attacks, which often directly targeted civilians.⁹²

The Director General of the International Committee of the Red Cross stated that despite recent operational initiatives and developments in international legal norms, the world’s response to forced displacements, forced disappearances and sexual violence remained inadequate. Recognizing that Council resolutions incorporated the protection of civilians as a standard aspect of peacekeeping operations, he stressed that their protection by United Nations peacekeepers implied a military and security dimension which must be clearly distinguished from protection activities carried out by humanitarian actors.⁹³

In the ensuing debate, speakers expressed concern about restrictions imposed on humanitarian organizations to access the civilian population in conflict areas, and called upon parties to the conflict to comply with the relevant humanitarian laws. Stressing the importance of unhindered access to civilian populations in armed conflict, speakers expressed support for the Secretary-General's proposal to report problems of access to the Council.

In order to improve the work of the protection of civilians in armed conflict, speakers noted the need for the Council to ensure that parties to the conflict and peacekeeping complied with international humanitarian law and human rights. Most speakers condemned sexual violence and shared the view that those responsible for that crime should be brought to justice. The representative of the United States applauded the adoption by the Third Committee of the General Assembly of a draft resolution calling on States to end impunity by prosecuting those responsible for sexual violence.⁹⁴ The representative of the United Kingdom emphasized that United Nations peacekeeping missions should have a crucial role in tackling sexual violence,⁹⁵ and several speakers expressed concern about acts of sexual exploitation and abuse by United Nations peacekeepers. The representative of South Africa stressed that it was important to ensure that all peacekeepers were adequately trained before deployment to address the specific needs of women and children.⁹⁶

With regard to the functions of the proposed special representative on the prevention of genocide and mass atrocities, the representative of the Russian Federation requested that the Secretary-General provide more details on the broadening mandate of the Special Representative. He stated that this would help the Council to clarify what exactly was meant by the term "mass atrocities" and how the new mandate would interface with the work of other agencies in the United Nations system.⁹⁷

Regarding the proposed establishment of a working group on protection of civilians, the representatives of France, Italy, Slovakia, Liechtenstein and Senegal welcomed the initiative.⁹⁸ The representative of Panama emphasized that, before developing new structures, there was a need to address the Council's working methods.⁹⁹ The representative of the Russian Federation expressed reservations, however, because he felt it was a bureaucratic step, and that instead of developing new bureaucratic structures the United Nations should be ready to act quickly in alignment with international humanitarian law and decisions of the Security Council.¹⁰⁰ While welcoming the idea of inviting Council members to informal briefings by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the representative of the United States was not convinced that a formal working group was necessary.¹⁰¹

A number of speakers expressed concern about the impact of cluster munitions on civilians and supported measures aimed at restricting their use. Noting that cluster munitions continued to be legitimate weapons when employed properly and in accordance with existing international humanitarian law, the representative of the United States opined that the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons was the right framework in which to take up that issue.¹⁰²

40. Small arms

Decision of 19 January 2004 (4896th meeting): statement by the President

At its 4896th meeting, on 19 January 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on small arms of 31 December 2003.¹ The report reflected initiatives undertaken to implement the recommendations of the Secretary-General on ways and means in which the Council could contribute to dealing with the question of illicit trade in small arms and light weapons in situations under its consideration.²

² Recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's report on small arms of 20 September 2002 (S/2002/1053).

In his report, the Secretary-General noted significant progress in developing an international instrument to enable States to identify and trace illicit small arms and light weapons; recognizing the importance of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in post-conflict situations; encouraging States to establish the necessary legislation to ensure effective control over the export and transit of small arms and light weapons; and enhancing transparency in armaments. He also pointed out encouraging indications in Member States' efforts to provide technical and financial support to the INTERPOL Weapons and Explosives Tracking System; assist the Secretariat in establishing the small arms advisory service; and identify the links between the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons and the illicit exploitation of natural and other resources. Nonetheless, the Secretary-General noted limited progress in coordination between the Council and the General Assembly, as a structured interaction had not yet been established. The Secretary-General also called for further efforts from Member States to enforce all Council resolutions on sanctions, including those imposing arms embargoes; bring their national legislation into compliance with the Council's measures on sanctions; and establish monitoring mechanisms to identify and allow coercive measures against States that deliberately violated arms embargoes. The Secretary-General stated that the implementation of the recommendation for a more vigorous and expeditious pursuit of arms embargoes against countries or regions threatened by armed conflict presented a mixed picture, where some arms embargoes had been effectively deployed, although the restriction on the supply of ammunition to areas of instability required more attention. He also noted that the need to finance disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes through the assessed budget for peacekeeping remained an issue of concern.

Statements were made by all members of the Council and the representatives of Armenia, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union),³ Japan, Mali, ³ Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Croatia, Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Iceland, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Malta, Poland, Romania, Serbia and Montenegro, Slovakia, Slovenia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Turkey aligned themselves with the statement.

The Council was briefed by the Under-Secretary-General for Disarmament Affairs, who expressed hope that the meeting, which was being held in the wake of the first biennial meeting of States to consider the implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, as well as the establishment of an open-ended working group to negotiate an international instrument to enable States to identify and trace illicit small arms and light weapons, would contribute to strengthening the achievements obtained.⁵

Most speakers acknowledged that small arms and light weapons posed a grave threat to international peace and security, and welcomed the report of the Secretary-General. The majority of the speakers called for full implementation of the Programme of Action, and expressed support for the open-ended working group created by the General Assembly to negotiate an international instrument on tracing illicit small arms and light weapons.⁶ A number of speakers advocated closer interaction between the Security Council and the General Assembly; concurred with the Secretary-General's emphasis on the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants in post-conflict areas; pointed out the link between the illicit trade in small arms and exploitation of natural resources; and underlined the need for a monitoring mechanism to assure stricter enforcement and compliance with arms embargoes and other sanctions in place.

The representative of Algeria affirmed that the Council should make further use of the means of action conferred on it by the Charter of the United Nations to fight the illicit trade in small arms, and that it should remind Member States of their obligation to enforce arms embargoes more rigorously and effectively in conformity with Article 41 of the Charter.⁷

The representative of South Africa expressed the belief that the negotiations in the General Assembly would produce a practical and effective instrument that would assist Member States in tracing the origin of weapons, and would also facilitate the effective implementation of arms embargoes, as mandated under Chapter VII of the Charter.⁸ The representative of the Philippines stated that the General Assembly's focus on establishing universal norms and making rules to control the proliferation of small arms and light weapons was not mutually exclusive of the Council's concerns regarding practical measures such as arms embargoes and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in conflict situations. He advised that the Council should not be overburdened with the same issues already under consideration by the Assembly, and, endorsed by Brazil, supported the holding of consultations between the presidencies of the Council and the Assembly to identify complementarities and avoid duplication in their work.⁹ The representative of Colombia argued that while there was a lack of compliance with arms embargoes by Member States and no significant progress on legislation to ensure effective control, there had been even less progress in the recommendations whose implementation depended directly on the Council, including failure to enhance interaction with the General Assembly. He also raised the question whether the Council could deal with illicit trade in small arms under Chapter VII of the Charter in the same way as it used resolution 1373 (2006) to fight terrorism, bearing in mind that the former constituted an equal or even greater threat to international peace and security.¹⁰

Several speakers remarked on States' legal use of small arms and light weapons for defence purposes. The representative of Algeria suggested that a precise analysis of the factors generating and developing the trade in small arms would help to clarify the concepts and prevent lumping illegal flows together with the legal trade in small arms covered by Article 51 of the Charter.¹¹ Similarly, the representative of Costa Rica proposed that there was a need to adopt binding norms defining when the use of weapons was legitimate and under what conditions arms transfers could be authorized.¹² The representative of Colombia asserted that export control mechanisms should not be based on criteria that took into account only the views and interests of the countries that produced and exported small arms, without considering the interests of importing countries, particularly those countries affected by the illicit trade in small arms. He stressed that criteria such as respect for human rights, existence of internal conflicts, and imbalances between defence and development expenditures were by their very nature subjective criteria and, if applied by exporting countries, could violate the right of all States to import and possess small arms for their self-defence in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter. The use of such criteria also tended to violate the principle of non-intervention, as they had the effect of deciding unilaterally what should be the security and defence needs of the importing country.¹³ The representative of Romania acknowledged that countries had the right to self-defence and that arms production and transfers were therefore legitimate, but stressed that such transfers needed to be carefully controlled by government policies and regulations, and that clear and strict criteria on arms exports should be implemented.¹⁴

The President (Chile) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed all efforts already undertaken by Member States, and called upon them to fully implement at the national, regional and international levels the recommendations contained in the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, adopted on 20 July 2001 by the United Nations Conference on the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects;

Reiterated its call upon all Member States to effectively implement arms embargoes and other sanction measures imposed by the Council in its relevant resolutions, and urged Member States in a position to do so to provide assistance to interested States in strengthening their capacity to fulfil their obligations in this regard; encouraged Members to undertake vigorous actions aimed at restricting the supply of small arms, light weapons and ammunitions to areas of instability; further encouraged Member States to provide the sanctions Committees

Decision of 17 February 2005 (5127th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5127th meeting, on 17 February 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on small arms of 7 February 2005,¹⁶ which elaborated on further implementation of his 12 recommendations. In his report, the Secretary-General commended progress in the areas of tracing illicit small arms and light weapons; enforcement of Council resolutions on sanctions; disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in post-conflict situations; illicit brokering in small arms and light weapons; and participation in reporting instruments on arms transparency. He also expressed support for the practice of establishing mechanisms to support, monitor and assess the implementation of sanctions and to provide technical advice to sanctions committees, and a more vigorous effort by the Council to adopt measures to identify and punish those who violated arms embargoes. The Secretary-General, however, noted that no assistance had yet been received from Member States for the establishment of the small arms advisory service, and stated that more remained to be done on the links between illicit small arms and light weapons and the illicit exploitation of natural resources. He recommended that the Council and the General Assembly establish a committee for further cooperation between the two organs. He called for the Council to adopt a comprehensive and regional approach to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and address cross-border activities; not only the political and security aspects but also the social and economic aspects of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration needed to be addressed.

The Council was briefed by the Under-Secretary-General for Disarmament Affairs and statements were made by all members¹⁷ and the representatives of Australia, Canada, Costa Rica, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Luxembourg (on behalf of the European Union),¹⁸ Mali, Mexico, Nigeria, Norway, Peru, the Republic of Korea, the Republic of Moldova, Senegal, South Africa, Switzerland, Turkey, Ukraine, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) and Zambia.

The Under-Secretary-General provided an overview of the report and stated that although the open-ended working group to negotiate an international instrument to enable States to identify and trace illicit small arms and light weapons was moving closer to reaching an agreement, it was far from reaching consensus on issues such as the nature of the international instrument.¹⁹

Most speakers welcomed the report and called for the Council's continued attention to small arms and light weapons. The speakers emphasized, inter alia, the need to establish a group of governmental experts to consider further steps to enhance international cooperation in preventing, combating and eradicating illicit brokering; encourage all States to establish legislative measures to ensure effective control over the export and transfer of small arms; address the link between the illicit trade in small arms and the exploitation of natural resources; respect the right of States to self-defence and self-determination; and adopt a stronger monitoring mechanism to identify violators of arms embargoes. The representative of Greece added that countries would have to exert restraint when exporting to conflict areas, even when an arms embargo had not been imposed.²⁰

A number of speakers called for a comprehensive approach to the complex consequences of small arms proliferation, which included, but were not limited to, diversion to terrorist groups, human rights violations, and interruption of development, human security and democracy. As part of such an approach, the speakers suggested that the Council should include provisions relating to the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants in the mandates of peacekeeping operations. The representative of Costa Rica asserted that the transfer of military material should be banned from States whose military units or security forces participated in systematic violation of human rights, and expressed regret that the Secretary-General's report made no reference to the need for an international and legally binding instrument to stop transfers of weapons that contributed to such violations. He added that the Council had not exercised its responsibility stemming from Article 26 of the Charter, which recognized the link between development and disarmament and called for the least diversion of human and economic resources for armaments.²¹

The majority of the speakers welcomed the discussion on a draft international instrument to identify and trace illicit small arms during two sessions of the open-ended working group, and hoped for further progress in overcoming the disagreements on the nature of the instrument and the inclusion of ammunition. A number of speakers stated that the instrument should be legally binding,²² while the representative of the Philippines asserted that the question of legal obligation should not be a wedge issue because the illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons was already criminalized in many jurisdictions.²³ The representative of Mexico argued that the instrument should be legally binding not only to ensure its effectiveness but also to set a positive precedent for future negotiations on other issues related to small arms and light weapons in the United Nations.²⁴ Others voiced their opinion that the instrument should be both legally binding and include ammunition.²⁵

The representative of the United States warned that the international instrument under discussion should be practical and effective, and that it should not interfere with existing commitments in other forums.²⁶ The representative of Ukraine added that each element in the tracing of illicit small arms and light weapons should remain a national prerogative, and that any arrangement to be established or strengthened by a new international instrument on tracing should not duplicate, complicate, or diminish the effectiveness of existing mechanisms.²⁷

The speakers also supported the Secretary-General's recommendation of greater interaction with the General Assembly and INTERPOL. The representative of Switzerland suggested that the presidential statement to be issued would gain from mentioning the need for increased cooperation with INTERPOL in tracing small arms and light weapons.²⁸ The representative of South Africa expressed his view that, although the General Assembly bore the primary responsibility for overseeing and monitoring initiatives on illicit brokering of small arms and light weapons within the framework of the Programme of Action, the Council should continue its involvement in the issue.²⁹ The representative of Egypt noted that for a better coordination in the strategies of the two entities the Council should take into account the distinction between its mandate and the more comprehensive role of the General Assembly. He also believed that before establishing a committee to oversee that effort as proposed by the Secretary-General, it was necessary to take steps to achieve the required transparency in the work of the Security Council committees on arms embargoes against particular regions.³⁰ On the other hand, the representative of India expressed the view that thematic debates should have no place in the Council and were best left to the General Assembly.³¹

The President (Benin) made a statement on behalf of the Council,³² by which the Council, inter alia:

Recognized that the dissemination of illicit small arms and light weapons had hampered the peaceful settlement of disputes, fuelled such disputes into armed conflicts and contributed to the prolongation of such armed conflicts;

Encouraged the arms-exporting countries to exercise the highest degree of responsibility in small arms and light weapons transactions according to their existing responsibilities under relevant international law;

Noted with appreciation that regional actions on illicit trade in small arms and light weapons in all its aspects had been strengthened in recent years;

Welcomed the ongoing efforts by the open-ended working group established by the General Assembly in resolution 58/241 to negotiate an international instrument to enable States to identify and trace, in a timely and reliable manner, illicit small arms and light weapons;

Welcomed the inclusion of man-portable air defence systems, on an exceptional basis, in the United Nations Register on Conventional Arms;

Called upon all Member States to enforce all Council resolutions on sanctions, including those imposing arms embargoes, and to bring their own domestic implementation into compliance with the Council's measures on sanctions;

Underlined the fact that the issue of the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons must be addressed together with the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process in the post-conflict phases.

Deliberations of 20 March 2006 (5390th meeting)

At its 5390th meeting, on 20 March 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on small arms of 17 February 2006,³³ concerning the initiatives undertaken to implement his recommendations. In his report, the Secretary-General commended the adoption of the International Instrument to Enable States to Identify and Trace, in a Timely and Reliable Manner, Illicit Small Arms and Light Weapons; noted the enhancement of the INTERPOL Weapons Electronic Tracing System; welcomed the emphasis on the importance of inter-mission cooperation; and recommended that the Council explicitly articulate the role of peacekeeping missions regarding disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in the mandates of peacekeeping operations. The Secretary-General also supported the continuing attention paid by the Council to the links between the illicit exploitation of natural resources and the illicit trade in small arms; the initiatives on control over the export and transit of small and light weapons; the practice of establishing mechanisms to support, monitor and assess the implementation of sanctions and provide technical advice to sanctions committees; and the growing participation of Member States in the reporting instruments on armaments.

The Council heard a briefing by the Officer-in-Charge of the Department for Disarmament Affairs and statements were made by all Council members³⁴ and the representatives of Australia, Austria (on behalf of the European Union), Brazil, Cambodia, Canada, Colombia, Egypt, Fiji, Guatemala, Guyana (on behalf of the Rio Group),³⁵ Indonesia, Nigeria, Norway, Papua New Guinea (on behalf of the Pacific Islands Forum),³⁶ the Republic of Korea, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Senegal, Sierra Leone, South Africa, Ukraine and Uruguay.

The Officer-in-Charge of the Department for Disarmament Affairs welcomed the adoption of a politically binding international instrument to enable States to trace illicit small arms, but stressed that the challenge was to take the necessary steps to ensure the full implementation of the instrument. She welcomed the fact that the General Assembly had decided to establish a group of governmental experts to consider further steps to enhance international cooperation to prevent, combat and eradicate illicit brokering. She also noted that the wide diversity of views expressed in debates during the preparatory session for the United Nations conference to review progress made in the implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects showed the complexity of the challenges posed by illicit small arms.³⁷

Most speakers called for more effective implementation of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes, and supported the Council's decision to include provisions for such programmes in the mandates of United Nations peacekeeping operations. The speakers emphasized, inter alia, the need to address cooperation with the General Assembly, INTERPOL, civil society, and non-governmental organizations; issues regarding women and children in the areas of conflict; the link between illicit small arms and exploitation of natural resources; the establishment of a monitoring system to enhance the implementation of arms embargoes; the creation of national legislation to stop the diversion of legal weapons; and the root causes of small arms proliferation, such as a weak State, porous borders, unemployment, poverty and social injustice. Speakers also welcomed the establishment of a group of governmental experts to consider further steps to enhance international cooperation to prevent illicit brokering in small arms and light weapons, and hoped for more progress in the upcoming United Nations conference to review progress made in the implementation of the Programme of Action. The representative of the Russian Federation expressed his belief that the Programme of Action was aimed at preventing and eradicating the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons, and therefore it was too early to consider extending its scope to monitoring the legal transfer of weapons.³⁸ The representative of Indonesia stated that, although he commended the Council's commitment to eradicating the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons, it was necessary to remind the Council that the problem was of a broader dimension than the mandate of the Council and that a tremendous amount of work was being done in the General Assembly.³⁹

Most speakers welcomed the adoption of the international instrument by the General Assembly as an important achievement and called for commitments from Member States for its full implementation. A number of speakers, however, expressed regret at the non-binding nature of the instrument and hoped it would develop into a legally binding international mechanism.⁴⁰ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania stated that the Council could not afford "to remain aloof" when its intensive efforts in conflict prevention or peacekeeping were undermined by the proliferation of small arms and light weapons. He also asserted that because presidential statements had brought little change in the conduct of actors on the ground, a universal, binding framework on small arms and light weapons would best serve the Council's resolve to act.⁴¹ The representative of Ghana also expressed his reservations regarding the instrument's purely political and voluntary nature.⁴² Several speakers added that the instrument should have included provisions on ammunition,⁴³ and others concurred on the need for stricter controls on the supply and transfer of ammunition.⁴⁴

Several speakers encouraged the Council to support negotiations on an arms trade treaty, which would include legally binding standards for transfers of all conventional arms, including heavy weapons, small arms and light weapons, and which would also have the effect of strengthening the effectiveness of arms embargoes imposed by the Council.⁴⁵ A number of speakers welcomed the proposal by Argentina for a draft resolution on small arms and light weapons, and expressed their belief that such a resolution would strengthen the Council's position on the issue.⁴⁶ The representative of Sierra Leone, echoing the statement by the representative of Argentina, asserted that the Council should not continue to issue presidential statements but needed to go beyond its expression of grave concern in resolution 1209 (1998). Decision of 29 June 2007 (5709th meeting):

statement by the President

At the 5709th meeting, on 29 June 2007, the President (Belgium) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Recalled its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security;

⁴⁷ S/PV.5390, p. 22 (Argentina); and p. 27 (Sierra Leone).

⁴⁸ S/PRST/2007/24.

Noted with grave concern that the destabilizing accumulation and illicit manufacture, trade and circulation of small arms and light weapons in many regions of the world increased the intensity and duration of armed conflicts;

Reaffirmed the inherent right to individual or collective self-defence consistent with Article 51 of the Charter;

Underlined the need to address this issue and, in this regard, requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Council on a biennale basis a report on small arms;

Stressed the need to implement the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects and the International Instrument to Enable States to Identify and Trace, in a Timely and Reliable Manner, Illicit Small Arms and Light Weapons;

Encouraged increased efforts to end the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons at the national, regional and international levels;

Called upon all Member States to abide by their obligations to observe the arms embargoes established under relevant Council resolutions.

41. General issues relating to sanctions

Decision of 8 August 2006 (5507th meeting):
resolution 1699 (2006)

At its 5507th meeting, held on 8 August 2006, the Security Council considered the item entitled "General issues relating to sanctions".¹ The President (Ghana) drew attention to a draft resolution, submitted by Argentina, Denmark, France, Japan, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States;² it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1699 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to increase cooperation between the United Nations and INTERPOL in order to provide the sanctions Committees with better tools, to fulfil their mandates more effectively and to give Member States better optional tools to implement those measures adopted by the Security Council and monitored by the Committees, as well as similar measures that might be adopted by the Council in the future, particularly the freezing of assets, travel bans and arms embargoes;

Encouraged Member States to use the tools offered by INTERPOL, particularly the I-24/7 global police communications system, to reinforce the implementation of such measures and similar measures that might be adopted by the Council in the future.

Decision of 19 December 2006 (5599th meeting):
resolution 1730 (2006)

At the 5599th meeting, held on 19 December 2006,³ the President (Qatar) drew attention to a draft resolution, submitted by Argentina, Denmark, France, Greece, Japan, Peru, the Russian Federation, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States;⁴ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1730 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Adopted the delisting procedure set forth in the annex to the resolution, and requested the Secretary-General to establish within the Secretariat (Security Council Subsidiary Organs Branch), a focal point to receive delisting requests and to perform the tasks described in the annex;

³ For more information on the discussion at this meeting, see chap. XI, part III, sect. B, with regard to Article 41 (1) of the Charter.

Directed the sanctions committees established by the Security Council, including those established pursuant to resolutions 751 (1992), 918 (1994), 1132 (1997), 1267 (1999), 1518 (2003), 1521 (2005), 1533 (2004), 1572 (2004), 1591 (2005), 1636 (2005) and 1718 (2006) to revise their guidelines accordingly; and decided to remain seized of the matter.

The representatives of France, Denmark and Greece emphasized that the procedure just adopted enabled individuals and entities that had been listed for sanctions to present their petitions for delisting directly to a focal point created to that end within the Secretariat, and expressed hope that the new procedure would strengthen the support of States for the sanctions regimes.⁵ The representatives of Denmark, Greece and Qatar strongly urged the Security Council to continue its work on ensuring fair and clear procedures for listing and delisting.⁶ The representative of Argentina noted that the changes represented progress in the defence of human rights and in awareness-raising among all members of the Council on the need to operate in respect for the law and human rights.⁷

The representative of Qatar expressed concern that the resolution failed to respect many legal norms and standards that should be respected and applied by both the Security Council and its sanctions committees in the delisting of individuals. He continued that the Council had established a focal point that lacked independence, neutrality, standards or controls for delisting. He expressed his country's regret that the sponsors of the resolutions did not take up its proposal to allow legal representatives of listed persons to petition for delisting, particularly since some listed persons were now deceased and could not submit their own petitions. He expressed hope that the Council would review the annex and the entire issue, and that there would be transparency, objectivity and independence in the consideration of delisting requests.⁸

Decision of 21 December 2006 (5605th meeting):
resolution 1732 (2006)

At the 5605th meeting, on 21 December 2006, the President (Qatar) drew attention to a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, Denmark, France, Japan, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States.⁹ He also drew attention to the report of the Informal Working Group on General Issues of Sanctions,¹⁰ which provided the best practices with respect to sanctions that had been approved by the Committee in the areas of sanctions design, implementation, evaluation and follow-up, committee working methods, monitoring and enforcement, and methodological standards and reporting format for expert groups.

The draft resolution was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1732 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the report of the Informal Working Group on General Issues of Sanctions, established pursuant to paragraph 3 of the note by the President of the Security Council dated 17 April 2000;¹¹

Decided that the Working Group had fulfilled its mandate as contained in the note by the President of the Security Council dated 29 December 2005,¹² to develop general recommendations on how to improve the effectiveness of United Nations sanctions;

Took note with interest of the best practices and methods contained in the report of the Working Group and requested its subsidiary bodies to take note as well.

42. Items relating to the maintenance of international peace and security

A. The maintenance of international peace and security: the role of the Security Council in humanitarian crises — challenges, lessons learned and the way ahead

Initial proceedings

Decision of 12 July 2005 (5225th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5225th meeting, on 12 July 2005, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled “The maintenance of international peace and security: the role of the Security Council in humanitarian crises — challenges, lessons learned and the way ahead” and a letter from the representative of Greece to the Secretary-General, transmitting a discussion paper prepared by the presidency on the topic.¹

Statements were made by all members of the Council,² the Secretary-General, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations and the representatives of Canada, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Norway, Peru and Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of).³

Opening the meeting, the President (Greece), speaking in his national capacity, stated that the early prevention of humanitarian crises had become a political and moral imperative for the Security Council, and called for the United Nations to strengthen its capacity to move from reaction to prevention of crises. While the duty and responsibility for the protection of civilians rested primarily with the States concerned, in cases of extreme violations and atrocities against human beings, the international community had an obligation to the victims of such violence. He held that to prevent the re-emergence of humanitarian suffering and the potential recurrence of the conflict, three key fields of post-conflict security had to be adequately addressed: the promotion of the rule of law; the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants; and security sector reform. However, any measures adopted in those fields could be successful only if local ownership was ensured.⁴

The Secretary-General noted that almost the entire Council agenda and almost every crisis it had to deal with had a humanitarian dimension. The task should be to prevent suffering, and all too often efforts failed because the gravity of the threat was not recognized until it was too late. That was why he believed that Member States should recognize that whenever a particular State was unable or unwilling to protect its citizens against extreme violence, there was a collective responsibility for all States to do so, a responsibility that must be assumed by the Council.⁵

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations stressed that if peace was to be lasting, the short-, medium- and long-term security and justice needs of both the State and its population must be addressed equally. On that front, there were several areas that deserved further study and potential improvements. First, insufficient attention was accorded to a comprehensive national security review process to identify the threats to State and human security and the development of a security architecture that was responsive to identified threats. Secondly, international efforts related to the security and justice sectors were often disjointed. Thirdly, within the United Nations, there was no agreement on a single, system-wide approach on those issues. Fourthly, international approaches in support of security sector reform in post-conflict countries often applied foreign models and standards, which might be unsuitable in the light of the realities on the ground. He made clear that the United Nations system must continue to work on rationalizing its approaches, integrating its resources and capacities, and delivering a single and comprehensive United Nations response for the Governments and peoples it was called on to assist.⁶

Speakers agreed that the three fundamental pillars of lasting peacebuilding — promotion of the rule of law, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; and security sector reform were most suitable to address the fundamental causes of most conflicts and that those pillars needed to be further strengthened. They emphasized that there was no one-size-fits-all approach, and the representative of Denmark pointed out that “as a supervisor of its own decisions”, the Council must always stand ready to re-examine a conflict situation on the basis of relevant advice and adjust its mandate accordingly.⁷

Most speakers acknowledged the link between security and development. The representative of the Philippines reminded States that the Security Council had recognized the link between security and human rights, as the peacekeeping mandates for El Salvador, Cambodia, Angola, Liberia and Georgia had included a human rights component, and the protection of civilians had been enshrined in resolution 1296 (2000), among others.⁸ Speakers in general agreed that a greater role of the Council in tackling root causes of conflicts would contribute to conflict prevention. The representative of the Philippines stated that there was “a more ideal role for the Council” to prevent the onset of humanitarian crises.⁹ Most speakers welcomed the proposed creation of a peacebuilding commission, as they saw a need for a more coordinated and comprehensive approach to and a coherent vision of peacebuilding.

The representative of Canada emphasized that the international community already had at its disposal the necessary tools and powers to exercise its responsibility to protect civilian populations — they were in the Charter of the United Nations. However, he held that a framework was needed to guide that responsibility, and the “responsibility to protect” provided such a framework.¹⁰ The representative of France maintained that a consensus was emerging on the concept of a “responsibility to protect”,¹¹ which was in no way synonymous with interference and was not so different from the current practice of the Security Council.¹² The representative of Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) said that the “responsibility to protect” was rooted in the belief that the international community had the right to intervene in any Member State in “a false rescue operation on behalf of the people supposedly afflicted by State repression”, and that it had no basis in the Charter or international law.¹³

The representative of Benin pointed to the need to promote the political settlement of conflicts from which humanitarian crises resulted.¹⁴ Other speakers stressed the need for the Council to be provided with credible, reliable and verifiable information to ensure that it took the correct actions and initiated early action.¹⁵ Some speakers stressed an early warning capability of the Secretariat¹⁶ or called for the Council itself to act as an early warning mechanism.¹⁷ The representative of the United Kingdom said that the Council should be prepared from the earliest stage to make a leading contribution to international efforts to avert a descent into conflict and humanitarian suffering.¹⁸

The representative of India stated that the topic of the debate belonged more to the General Assembly.¹⁹ Along the same lines, the representative of Algeria held that, as the Council could not always try to do everything everywhere, the Peacebuilding Commission could be the appropriate body for crafting and implementing strategies for addressing pre-conflict and post-conflict situations.²⁰ The representative of Malaysia maintained that, with regard to the interconnectedness of threats and challenges faced by the international community, the role played by the Security Council could certainly be augmented by debate in the other principal organs of the United Nations, namely, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.²¹ The representative of Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) maintained that, while peacekeeping operations were the responsibility of the Security Council and, on a subsidiary basis, the General Assembly, peacebuilding operations were exclusively the responsibility of the people of the country afflicted by conflict. The United Nations was obliged to respect the self-determination of peoples and therefore its sole task was to support the process through international cooperation and on the basis of the parameters, norms and principles freely established by the people concerned.²²

The representative of China stressed that the Security Council, as the organ of the United Nations bearing the primary responsibility for international peace and security, should, as a matter of course, play a lead role in conflict prevention and management; effective conflict prevention and resolution, as well as post-conflict reconstruction, were the primary functions of the Security Council in response to humanitarian crises. At the same time, he emphasized that all the participants in post-conflict reconstruction efforts should abide by the purposes and principles of the Charter and universally recognized norms of international law and should respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the countries concerned.²³

The representative of Peru believed that, to improve the Security Council's response to humanitarian crises, its five permanent members could arrive at a gentleman's agreement not to use the veto when it was a question of crises involving crimes against humanity, such as massive violations of human rights, ethnic cleansing and genocide.²⁴

The President made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and bore in mind its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security;

Remained deeply concerned by the devastating humanitarian, political and economic consequences of armed conflicts; stressed the political and moral imperatives to prevent the outbreak and escalation of armed conflicts and humanitarian crises, and the benefits therein for peace and development and friendly relations among States;

Reiterated the importance it attached to the urgent restoration of justice and the rule of law in post-conflict societies and in promoting national reconciliation, democratic development, and human rights;

Recognized the increasing importance of civilian aspects of conflict management in addressing complex crisis situations and in preventing the recurrence of conflict and acknowledged the importance of civilian-military cooperation in crisis management;

Took note with interest of the important proposal by the Secretary-General to establish a peacebuilding commission;

Acknowledged that in post-conflict societies successful peacebuilding rested on the premise that protection of civilians, the promotion of the rule of law and transitional justice, disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, reintegration and rehabilitation of former combatants, security sector and democratic, economic and social reform were integrated elements and that national ownership played an important role which should be supported by the international community.

B. The responsibility of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security: HIV/AIDS and international peacekeeping operations

Decision of 18 July 2005 (5228th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5228th meeting, on 18 July 2005,²⁶ the Security Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations and the Executive Director of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS). Statements were made by all members of the Council.

The Under-Secretary-General said that some had initially wondered whether resolution 1308 (2000) belonged on the agenda of the Council,²⁷ but the resolution had helped AIDS gain the attention it deserved from the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, and the Department had developed a comprehensive strategy since the adoption of the resolution to reduce the risk of peacekeepers contracting or transmitting the virus. The Under-Secretary-General discussed, inter alia, the support of

Member States that had contributed to the success of the Department's AIDS programmes; the Department's strategy; cooperation between the Department, UNAIDS, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), and the United Nations Volunteers; outreach projects that targeted local communities and a survey undertaken to assess the Department's training programme, which showed that awareness was high but support from the command structure was low. He emphasized the need to ensure that AIDS awareness was considered a command responsibility, moving beyond rhetoric to engagement at the highest levels. The Department focused not only on how to reduce the risk of HIV transmission, but also on training peacekeepers in gender awareness, human rights and child protection to enhance their ability to recognize and respond to sexual violence and exploitation. The Under-Secretary-General reiterated that addressing HIV/AIDS initiatives in peacekeeping should be a joint effort involving Member States, troop-contributing countries, the United Nations and host communities.²⁸

The Executive Director of UNAIDS stated that the Council had transformed how the world viewed AIDS through resolution 1380 (2000), which underlined that the spread of HIV/AIDS might pose a risk to stability and security. He expressed regret that, despite the implementation of large-scale programmes on HIV prevention and treatment, the threat posed by the AIDS epidemic remained high. He commended the achievements of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations in mainstreaming AIDS responses into every United Nations peacekeeping mission. He also noted that a small but growing number of defence, military and political leaders fully understood the need to address AIDS and had begun to make investments. However, strong leadership was required in the Council and in every single country in order to make the consideration of AIDS a part of core military business everywhere. He expressed the hope that the Council would make an explicit and time-bound goal, and ensure that peacekeeping missions were given the means to meet their responsibilities with respect to HIV.²⁹

Council members acknowledged the threat posed by AIDS to the stability, socio-economic development, and security of affected countries, and expressed support for the initiatives and recommendations of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and UNAIDS on the implementation of resolution 1308 (2000). The speakers, inter alia, called for a comprehensive international commitment, advocated stronger cooperation between the Department and UNAIDS and supported further expansion of HIV/AIDS prevention activities in uniformed populations more generally.

Several speakers commented on the role of the Security Council. The representative of Algeria stated that a comprehensive, unified and time-bound effort to combat HIV/AIDS should be devised and carried out by the General Assembly, given the limited mandate of the Council, and the actions of the Council needed to be fully integrated into a coordinated undertaking.³⁰ The representative of the Russian Federation, on the other hand, acknowledged the importance of addressing HIV/AIDS in the Security Council in the context of peacekeeping operations, given the exceptional urgency and complex nature of the problem.³¹

The representative of the United Kingdom asserted that while the meeting focused on HIV and AIDS in military and other uniformed services, there were links that could not be ignored among the issues of tackling AIDS in conflict and post-conflict situations and in humanitarian emergencies; AIDS, conflict and gender; and AIDS and fragile States.³²

The President (Greece) made a statement on behalf of the Council,³³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its commitment to the full implementation of resolution 1308 (2000); also recalled the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS adopted at the twenty-sixth special session of the General Assembly on 27 June 2001;

Recognized that men and women in the uniformed services were vital elements in the fight against HIV/AIDS; welcomed the efforts by Member States to counter the spread of the disease;

Recognized that United Nations peacekeeping personnel could be important contributors to the response to HIV/AIDS;

Recognized that significant progress had been made in implementation of resolution 1308 (2000) but that many challenges remained; expressed its readiness to further promote and support the implementation of this resolution;

Welcomed regular briefings by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and UNAIDS on the progress made; reaffirmed its intention to contribute, within its competence, to the attainment of the relevant objectives in the Declaration adopted at the twenty-sixth special session of the General Assembly in carrying out the Council's work, in particular in its follow-up to resolution 1308 (2000).

C. The maintenance of international peace and security: role of the Security Council in supporting security sector reform

Initial proceedings

Decision of 20 February 2007 (5632nd meeting): statement by the President

At its 5632nd meeting, on 20 February 2007,³⁴ the Security Council included in its agenda a letter dated 8 February 2007 from the representative of Slovakia addressed to the Secretary-General, which contained a concept paper for the open debate on the role of the Council in supporting security sector reform.³⁵

According to the paper, even though the United Nations system had been engaged in a wide range of security sector reform activities, it lacked a comprehensive, coherent and coordinated approach. The open debate was to provide the opportunity for the Council members and the wider membership of the United Nations to articulate their views and propose recommendations on the role of the Council in security sector reform. Defining the overarching objective as ensuring that the security institutions performed their statutory functions efficiently and effectively, the paper emphasized that security sector reform should guarantee national ownership; adopt a holistic approach that engaged non-military parts of the security sector and non-State actors; be context-specific and receive a long-term commitment that balanced institutional capacity, affordability and sustainability of programmes, sequencing, timing and flexibility. While the United Nations had a crucial role to play in security sector reform given its mandate, legitimacy, experience, and service on the ground, it required a common understanding and a comprehensive policy framework. The immediate priorities for the United Nations were reaching consensus on a concept of security sector reform; determining an appropriate allocation of roles and responsibilities among the various United Nations entities; generating lessons learned, norms, standards, and best practices and establishing coordinating mechanisms within the United Nations system and with actors in partner countries.

Statements were made by all members of the Council³⁶ and the representatives of Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Canada, Cuba (on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement), Egypt, Germany (on behalf of the European Union),³⁷ Guatemala, Honduras, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, the Republic of Korea, the Sudan, Switzerland and Uruguay.

The Council also heard briefings by the Secretary-General, the President of the General Assembly, the President of the Economic and Social Council, and the Chairman of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission.

The Secretary-General said that peacekeeping operations were making progress in ensuring that peace agreements and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration contributed to the restoration of sustainable security. The operations had developed mediation capacities to support peace negotiations and elaborated comprehensive, system-wide integrated standards and programmes for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration. Emphasizing the importance of addressing the needs and perspectives of the State and the communities within it, the Secretary-General stated that United Nations efforts were focused on supporting national authorities in their efforts to establish sustainable security. Because of its universality and its legitimacy, the United Nations had a contribution to make, particularly coordinating many capacities within the system and engaging external actors, such as Member States and regional organizations.³⁸

The President of the General Assembly said that because the United Nations had a comparative multilateral advantage over other organizations, owing to its universal legitimacy, it was uniquely positioned to play a leading role in policy formation and capacity-building. She stressed that better coordination of the collective efforts at the international level and within the Organization was necessary. She underlined the need to adopt a common policy within the framework of the General Assembly to define such concepts and coordinate the efforts throughout the Organization and its departments and agencies in the field. She also noted the important coordinating and substantive role that the Peacebuilding Commission could play.³⁹

The President of the Economic and Social Council asserted that the traditional division between security issues and development issues was both artificial and unsustainable, as recovery, reconstruction, and sustainable development were impossible without a secure environment.⁴⁰ The Chairman of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission noted that the Peacebuilding Commission had recognized that effective peacebuilding required meticulous reform of the security sector and had spared no effort to address the question in the countries on its agenda.⁴¹

Most speakers expressed support for the concept paper's emphasis on national ownership and an integrated, comprehensive, coordinated approach, acknowledging that a malfunctioning security sector posed a complex threat to lasting peace, development and human rights. A number of speakers also stressed the complementary roles of the Peacebuilding Commission and the Council.

The representative of South Africa pointed out that the fact that the Security Council included security sector reform elements when authorizing peacekeeping missions should not be misunderstood to imply that the Council had precedence over other United Nations organs. He added that the various contexts in which security sector reform was carried out would not always be in line with the mandate of the Council.⁴² The representative of the Sudan stated that, although all Member States should carry out an in-depth study on security sector reform, such a study should neither prejudice other organs of the United Nations with a stake in the matter nor fuel the impression that the Council was increasingly interfering in legislative matters that fell within the mandates of other United Nations bodies.⁴³

The representative of Cuba asserted that the lack of clarity in how to assess the ineffectiveness of the security sector could lead to arbitrary implementation and infringement upon the concept of sovereignty. He added that it was not the prerogative of the international community to prescribe the road that countries emerging from conflict should follow. The Security Council, with its limited membership, was not the appropriate framework to plan or direct inter-agency coordination. The Peacebuilding Commission was a better agency for coordinating the works of the United Nations bodies, as the rehabilitation of the security sector was a matter of capacity-building, not reform. He warned that the Council should not repeat the past mistake of attempting to impose reforms on the judicial and security sectors without the prior consent of the concerned State.⁴⁴

The representative of Egypt claimed that the debate on security sector reform was an attempt by the Council to strengthen its control of an issue that fell primarily within the prerogatives of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. He warned that controversial ideas linked to security sector reform, such as the "responsibility to protect" and "human security", sought to utilize humanitarian concepts to codify interference in the internal affairs of States. Echoed by the representative of Honduras, the representative of Egypt called for a comprehensive debate in the General Assembly to reach consensus on the objective of security sector reform and the scope of its application. The Security Council could then discuss its limited role in supporting the national will of States to reform their own security sectors, only in areas affecting the maintenance of international peace and security. He added that the adoption of a presidential statement by the Council before a debate by the general membership of the United Nations would not send a positive signal.⁴⁵

The President (Slovakia) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴⁶ by which the Council, inter alia:

Underlined that it was the sovereign right and the primary responsibility of the country concerned to determine the national approach and priorities of security sector reform;

Recognized the need, when mandating a United Nations operation, to consider the national security sector reform priorities, while laying the foundation for peace consolidation, which could, inter alia, subsequently enable timely withdrawal of international peacekeepers;

Emphasized the important role that the Peacebuilding Commission could play in ensuring continuous international support to countries emerging from conflict;

Emphasized that security sector reform must be context-driven and that the needs would vary from situation to situation; encouraged States to formulate their security sector reform programmes in a holistic way that encompassed strategic planning, institutional structures, resource management, operational capacity, civilian oversight and good governance;

Acknowledged the need for a comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on United Nations approaches to security sector reform, to foster its implementation in post-conflict environments, and expressed its readiness to consider such a report within the scope of its prerogatives under the Charter.

D. Maintenance of international peace and security

Initial proceedings

Decision of 25 June 2007 (5705th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5705th meeting, on 25 June 2007,⁴⁷ the Security Council included in its agenda a letter dated 6 June 2007 from the representative of Belgium addressed to the Secretary-General on natural resources and conflict, transmitting a concept paper for an open debate.⁴⁸

It was recognized in the paper that the Council was already dealing with conflict situations linked to natural resources through its peacekeeping operations and sanctions. The representative of Belgium, in the paper, stated that the debate at the Council, inter alia, aimed to explore how the effectiveness of the Council's action in the area could be strengthened. The paper also provided information on the Kimberley Process, a joint effort by States, the private sector and civil society to put in place a global system of certificates of origin for rough diamonds. The questions to be considered included the role of the Council in encouraging existing initiatives and in early identification, given that improving the governance of natural resources in the absence of conflict was not the primary responsibility of the Council; lessons learned from peacekeeping operations and ways to give their mandates adequate capacity to deal with sanctions; and the transition from a sanctions-driven approach to a reconstruction-oriented one for the natural resources sector in post-conflict situations, during which the Council should hand over its responsibilities to other bodies.

Statements were made by all members of the Council⁴⁹ and the representatives of Argentina, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Canada (on behalf also of Australia and New Zealand), the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Egypt, Germany (on behalf of the European Union),⁵⁰ Iceland, India, Japan, Liechtenstein, Norway, Pakistan, Senegal, Switzerland and Tunisia (on behalf of the Group of African States).⁵¹

The Council was briefed by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, the President of the General Assembly and the President of the Economic and Social Council.

The Under-Secretary-General drew attention to resolution 1625 (2005), in which the Council recognized the link between illegal exploitation of natural resources and conflict. He noted that targeted measures imposed by the Council were playing a crucial role in sustaining peace processes, and that peacekeeping operations could be vital in monitoring developments on the ground, enforcing sanctions and embargoes, and supporting State capacity. As neither sanctions nor peacekeeping operations alone could produce sustainable solutions to the problem, however, a commitment from all stakeholders to the equitable sharing of natural resources and to good governance, accountability and transparency was required. He called for enhanced crisis-prevention strategies; inclusion of natural resources management in peace processes and constitutions; and efforts by regional organizations, Member States, and non-governmental organizations to regulate business practices and promote corporate social responsibility and attention to the potential for the natural resource challenge to provide opportunities for national cooperation.⁵²

The President of the General Assembly emphasized the need for greater cooperation and coordination between the Council and the General Assembly and added that, while the international community should respect the sovereign rights of all Member States, it should encourage a more rationalized and effective use of natural resources.⁵³

The President of the Economic and Social Council asserted that conflicts induced by natural resources required integrated, multidisciplinary approaches as such conflicts were rooted in economic and social structures. The United Nations system could support timely action by making natural resources a factor of stability and development, promoting diversification of the economy and helping to build a strong and accountable Government. He suggested the establishment of a format for the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council to discuss development-oriented approaches to the use of natural resources.⁵⁴

Most speakers acknowledged the potential of natural resources in inducing, exacerbating and prolonging conflict and reiterated the view that the lack of development was an underlying cause of such conflicts. They emphasized the need for transparency and good governance in natural resource management; called for enhanced conflict-prevention capacity and advocated a holistic approach based on coordination by the United Nations bodies, particularly the General Assembly and the Peacebuilding Commission. A number of speakers also called for a broader definition of accountability for conflicts induced by natural resources, which included not only the supply but also the demand. Speakers also, inter alia, discussed ways to improve the effectiveness of targeted sanctions; the limitations and benefits of the Kimberley Process for diamonds and the appropriate balance of responsibility between the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly and the Security Council.

A number of speakers reiterated the emphasis on the sovereignty of States over their natural resources in the interest of development and well-being of their people.⁵⁵ The representative of Qatar asserted that endowing the Council with authority over natural resources contravened international law and diminished the sovereignty of States over their natural resources, as stated in General Assembly resolution 1803 (XVII).⁵⁶ The representatives of Peru and Egypt suggested that the Council should strengthen national capacities for the sovereign management of natural resources agreed on in peace accords.⁵⁷

The President (Belgium) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁵⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Emphasized the importance of improving the work of and strengthening the contributions made by existing sanctions committees and the various groups and panels of experts established by the Council in dealing with the impact of illegal exploitation of natural resources on conflicts in the countries under its consideration; also recalled the work done by the Informal Working Group of the Council on General Issues of Sanctions (2006) and referred in this regard to its report;⁵⁹

Acknowledged the crucial role that the Peacebuilding Commission, together with other United Nations and non-United Nations actors, could play, in post-conflict situations, in assisting Governments, upon their request, in ensuring that natural resources became an engine for sustainable development;

Noted the important contribution that voluntary principles and standards played in encouraging multinational enterprises to

Stressed the important role, in the context of security sector reform in post-conflict environments, of transparent and effective national security and Customs structures for the effective control and management of natural resources by preventing the illegal access to and the trade and exploitation of those resources;

Recognized, in armed conflict and post-conflict situations, the need for a more coordinated approach by the United Nations, regional organizations and Governments concerned, in particular the empowerment of Governments in post-conflict situations to better manage their resources.

Decision of 28 August 2007 (5735th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5735th meeting, on 28 August 2007,⁶⁰ the Council included in its agenda the item entitled “Maintenance of international peace and security: role of the Security Council in conflict prevention and resolution, in particular in Africa”, and a letter dated 14 August 2007 from the representative of the Congo transmitting a concept paper on the topic.⁶¹ In it, the representative of the Congo reaffirmed resolution 1625 (2005), in which the Council had expressed its determination to enhance the effectiveness of the United Nations in the prevention of armed conflicts. He then noted that the debate intended to promote a comprehensive strategy for conflict prevention that would take advantage of existing international, regional and subregional mechanisms. While deploring that too often the Council had been reactive to conflicts rather than preventive, he suggested a number of points of discussion such as the role of the Council in institutionalizing conflict prevention within the United Nations system and how to guarantee the coherence and functionality of existing African conflict resolution mechanisms.

Statements were made by all Council members, as well as the Secretary-General, the representative of Haiti on behalf of the President of the General Assembly, the representative of Ghana in his capacity as Acting Chairperson of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission, and the representatives of Algeria, Argentina, Benin, Canada, Croatia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Gabon, Guatemala, Honduras, Japan, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Namibia, Norway, Portugal (on behalf of the European Union and others), the Sudan, Switzerland, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Viet Nam.

Opening the debate, the Secretary-General stressed that more resources should be devoted to conflict prevention and mediation. Although there had been a 40 per cent drop in armed conflicts since 1990, owing partly to expanded United Nations peacekeeping, peacemaking and other conflict-prevention activities, he called for sustained international political will to reinforce preventive action in its broadest sense. In particular, he announced that in the coming months he would present proposals for strengthening the capabilities of the Department of Political Affairs with the goal of making more effective use of his good offices, as he believed in engagement and dialogue as opposed to confrontation. He added that regional organizations could also contribute and asserted that sustainable development and the building of peace in countries emerging from conflict were crucial.⁶²

The representative of Haiti, speaking on behalf of the President of the General Assembly, emphasized that there was still room for progress in enhancing cooperation and coordination between the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Secretary-General. The creation in 2005 of the Peacebuilding Commission however constituted a step forward in the field of conflict prevention. He affirmed that, in the end, it was up to each State to take responsibility to prevent conflict.⁶³

The Acting Chairperson of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission called for increased cooperation between the Council and the Peacebuilding Commission. He recognized that the focus of the debate on Africa was particularly relevant as the centre of the Commission’s attention had so far been on African countries. He then acknowledged the work of the

Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention of the Security Council over the past 10 years and stressed that he looked forward to examining ways to better engage the Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.⁶⁴

Speakers were unanimous in reaffirming the importance of preventing conflict in a comprehensive and strategic manner and renewed their commitment to enhancing the Council's role in preventing and resolving conflict in all its forms.

Several speakers however deplored the Council's tendency to examine the root causes of conflict only after fighting had broken out.⁶⁵ For the representative of Gabon, while conflict prevention should be the primary function of the Security Council, in recent years it had had limited success in this field.⁶⁶ The representative of Kenya noted that too often the Council had been stuck in its traditional approach of peacekeeping, and added that, because peacekeeping was more expensive, energies should be channelled to conflict prevention.⁶⁷ This idea was shared by the representative of Algeria.⁶⁸ The representative of Slovakia for his part called for a switch from the "culture of reaction" to the "culture of prevention".⁶⁹ The representative of the Sudan suggested that it would be beneficial for the Council to include the question of political settlement among its priorities.⁷⁰ Citing the example of the "destabilizing effects" of Zimbabwe's economic and governance crisis on the region, the representative of Canada called for intensified regional diplomacy and urged the Council to receive regular briefings on "this steadily deteriorating situation".⁷¹

The representative of China, and others, also noted that preventive diplomacy needed to be strengthened.⁷² The representative of the Russian Federation proposed the establishment of an effective pan-African security architecture that aimed both at conflict prevention and resolution and at post-conflict reconstruction issues, as a key component of a strategy to strengthen peace.⁷³

The representative of Uganda focused his intervention on peacekeeping. Citing the example of Somalia, he urged the Council to put a halt to the practice of not authorizing peacekeeping operations when there was no peace to keep, and to provide countries that were undertaking peacekeeping operations on its behalf with logistical and financial support.⁷⁴ This was supported by the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁷⁵ On this issue, the representative of Japan added that, on the contrary, in principle every organization should be responsible for its own costs, and that, when examining the possibility of offering financial support, the Council should do so on a case-by-case basis, "taking into account whether such support would be consistent with the principles that govern United Nations peacekeeping operations".⁷⁶

In order to strengthen conflict prevention strategies, many speakers called for effective coordination between and within United Nations organs, including the Security Council, the programmes, funds and agencies and the Peacebuilding Commission in policy formulation and implementation, risk assessment, early warning and best practices.⁷⁷ The representative of Portugal, speaking on behalf of the European Union, argued that more cooperation and coherence was needed in the field, not only among the main bodies of the United Nations but also with international and regional actors, including non-governmental organizations.⁷⁸ In fact, several delegations affirmed that supporting civil society was crucial as it was an important partner in preventing conflicts.⁷⁹ The representative of Norway added that for the United Nations to succeed in security operations it was absolutely necessary that the Organization be perceived as a single unified actor and be able to act as one.⁸⁰ The idea of the institutionalization of the relationship between the Security Council and all entities participating in conflict prevention was also raised by the representative of Namibia.⁸¹ The representative of Japan suggested that the Council should refer to the Peacebuilding Commission the task of following up on problems relating to the consolidation of peace discussed in relevant thematic debates.⁸²

Many speakers also agreed on the need to enhance the capacity and the mandate of the Secretariat to prevent conflicts. The representative of the United Kingdom called for more Secretariat capacity in political analysis and conflict assessment, as well as for a “joined-up approach” across the system for early warning.⁸³ This was echoed by the representative of France who added that the Secretariat should be given the means to be better and more quickly informed of the precursors of a crisis,⁸⁴ and the representative of Benin suggested specific prevention measures such as awareness raising political missions, mediation missions and preventive deployment.⁸⁵ The representative of Switzerland however indicated that strengthening capacities for mediation and good offices could not depend on the good will of contributors and that new assessed contributions would have to be specifically dedicated.⁸⁶ While the representative of China called for an enhanced role of the Secretary-General in good offices,⁸⁷ the representative of Algeria thought that the Secretary-General also had a role of coordination among all actors of conflict prevention,⁸⁸ and the representative of Peru called on the Council to use such tools as early warning mechanisms provided by the Secretary-General.⁸⁹ The representative of Guatemala however warned against the institutionalization of the Group of Friends for the prevention of conflict proposed by the Secretary-General, as strengthening coherence within the United Nations system was the priority.⁹⁰ The representative of Slovakia said that conflict prevention should be given serious consideration in the current reforms of the United Nations system.⁹¹

A number of speakers specifically supported strengthening the capacity of the Department of Political Affairs in conflict prevention and mediation. The representative of Italy in particular stressed the importance of enhancing political missions in crisis situations.⁹² Several representatives welcomed the establishment of a mediation support unit within the Department as a first step towards the fulfilment of its conflict prevention mandate,⁹³ and the representative of Japan considered it important for the envisaged unit to enhance its own partnership with regional organizations.⁹⁴ By contrast, the representative of Guatemala believed it was premature to discuss the role of the unit since it had not yet been established and called on the Secretary-General to explain the role it might play in conflict prevention in his forthcoming report to the General Assembly.⁹⁵

Speakers were in full agreement on the need to reinforce cooperation between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations. In particular, most speakers called for a stronger and more structured relationship between the Council and the African Union Peace and Security Council in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter and welcomed the recent adoption of a comprehensive framework of the two bodies in this regard.⁹⁶ The representative of Algeria expressed the hope that the African Union would soon be able to improve its system of early warning, collection and analysis of information and mediation.⁹⁷ The representative of Portugal announced that a joint strategy of the European Union and Africa for the next decade was currently under negotiation,⁹⁸ and the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania thought that it was time for the Council and the Secretary-General to consider the establishment of a mechanism similar to the Peacebuilding Commission to develop a comprehensive strategy for conflict prevention, in partnership with regional organizations.⁹⁹

Almost all speakers also reaffirmed the need to address the root causes of conflicts in Africa, such as poverty, lack of development, lack of democracy, human rights violations, socio-economic issues, environmental issues, cultural and ethnic tensions, illicit trafficking in small arms and mismanagement of natural resources, by adopting a comprehensive approach. The representative of Peru was of the view that effective preventive efforts in Africa had to take into account the most basic needs of the population.¹⁰⁰ This was echoed by many who reaffirmed the importance of implementing the Millennium Development Goals as part of the conflict prevention strategy.¹⁰¹ The representative of Qatar expressed the view that analysing the experiences of past conflicts in Africa could be helpful.¹⁰² The representative of Canada held that the Peacebuilding Commission should expand its agenda to include additional States at risk as well as such cross-cutting themes as children affected by armed conflict and the role of women in peace and security.¹⁰³

The representative of France stressed that the protection of civilians, women and children, combating impunity and human rights violations were essential factors in preventing the resurgence of conflicts, and held that health and climate change issues had an impact on stability in Africa.¹⁰⁴ The representative of Namibia, echoed by others, also focused on the need for more efforts in the fields of disarmament, the strengthening of judicial systems, transitional justice, reconciliation and security sector reform.¹⁰⁵

While stressing the need for the Security Council to pay attention to the underlying causes of conflicts in Africa, the representative of Ghana also remarked that this raised the question as to what problems should and should not be discussed by the Council.¹⁰⁶ Similarly, the representative of Qatar, echoed by the representative of China, noted that the Council must be able to deal with African issues transparently, while respecting States' sovereignty and territorial integrity.¹⁰⁷ The representative of Indonesia also pointed out that preventive measures called for by the international community often fell under the jurisdiction of States as most African conflicts were intra-State conflicts.¹⁰⁸

Finally, a number of speakers specifically recalled the 2005 World Summit Outcome, which codified the responsibility to protect, and others more generally reaffirmed the primary responsibility for national authorities in conflict prevention. The representative of Slovakia was of the view that this also implied the responsibility to identify potential risks and ask for the assistance of the international community.¹⁰⁹ The representative of Portugal, echoed by a few others, also affirmed that the International Criminal Court could play a role in preventing the use of force.¹¹⁰ The representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo called for the establishment of an international criminal tribunal for his country, where millions had lost their lives due to conflict.¹¹¹

At the end of the meeting, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹¹² by which the Council, inter alia:

Recalled that the prevention of conflict remained a primary responsibility of Member States;

Requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council within 60 days on options for the further implementation of resolution 1625 (2005);

Stressed the need to carry out efforts to increase women's participation as contributors and beneficiaries in conflict prevention and peacebuilding, and called for the further implementation of its resolution 1325 (2000);

Supported the comprehensive and global approach recommended by the Secretary-General in his report on the prevention of armed conflict,¹¹³ namely, structural prevention, to address the root causes of conflict; operational prevention, to ensure the effective operation of early warning mechanisms, mediation, humanitarian access and response, the protection of civilians and targeted sanctions in the face of immediate crises; and systemic prevention, to prevent existing conflicts from spilling over into other States;

Recognized that effective coordination between and within United Nations organs was vital for ensuring better coherence of the existing mechanisms and the appropriate balance between peacekeeping operations and preventive activities;

Welcomed recent developments regarding the long-term prevention of conflict, including policy work on security sector reform, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, transitional justice and the rule of law, electoral practices, peacebuilding, democratic governance, development, humanitarian assistance and protection, and safe and voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons;

Encouraged the Secretary-General to continue efforts in order to improve the United Nations early warning, mediation support and other preventive activities;

Stressed the importance of a regional approach to conflict prevention and welcomed the growing contribution being made by regional organizations;

Underlined the need for a stronger and more structured relationship between the Security Council and the Peace and Security Council of the African Union;

Encouraged Member States to make further efforts to ensure adequate consultation between civil society and national institutions, on the one hand, and the United Nations and the international community, on the other hand, so as to be better equipped to address the global character of questions of peace and security.

43. Women and peace and security

Decision of 28 October 2004 (5066th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5066th meeting, on 28 October 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on women and peace and security.¹ At the meeting, all Council members and 27 other representatives made statements.²

Pursuant to a statement by the President of the Council of 31 October 2002,³ the report of the Secretary-General was a follow-up report on the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000), in which he presented recommendations for enhanced implementation of the resolution in the areas of intergovernmental processes; conflict prevention and early warning; peace processes and negotiation; peacekeeping operations; humanitarian response; post-conflict reconstruction; disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; and preventing and responding to gender-based violence in armed conflict. He also stated his intention to present a system-wide action plan to increase attention to gender perspectives in conflict prevention and peacekeeping operations.

At the meeting, statements were made by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations; the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, and Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA). Statements were made by the representative of the Women's Network for the Protection of Human Rights and Peace; the Executive Director of the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM); the Deputy Secretary-General of the Commonwealth Secretariat; and Director of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW).

Introducing the report of the Secretary-General, the Under-Secretary-General cited as remaining challenges the following points with respect to women and security: more effective coordination among the United Nations, non-governmental organizations and civil society; better truth and reconciliation processes; better utilization of women's knowledge and experience in conflict prevention and early warning; the need to enhance female representation in peace processes and negotiations; and the need to strengthen the ability to prevent and respond to gender-based violence. He stressed that, to attain sustainable results, gender-based violence, whether manifested in the form of mass rapes, sexual exploitation of women and girls, domestic violence or trafficking, must not be treated in isolation. What was lacking was the commitment to preventing and responding to gender-based violence as a critical priority in any framework for post-conflict peacebuilding. He reaffirmed that his Department was taking seriously the issue of sexual abuse and exploitation by humanitarian and peacekeeping personnel, adding that "our work cannot be considered complete on that front for as long as sexual exploitation or abuse is being committed by a single peacekeeper or humanitarian worker". To stop these abhorrent acts, he said that the United Nations system needed to work hand in hand with Member States.⁴

Stressing that the violations women experienced would never be dealt with appropriately until justice issues received sufficient attention both nationally and internationally, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights argued that the international community and national Governments must address more effectively impunity and the reconstruction of the justice system. She called on the Council to provide explicitly, wherever relevant, for compliance with all aspects of resolution 1325 (2000), particularly the obligations to protect women and girls during conflict; to ensure the equal participation of women in peace negotiations as well as conflict prevention; to ensure access to justice for women; and to integrate a gender perspective into all peacekeeping and humanitarian activities. She urged the Council to combat impunity for gender-based violence by advocating the training of security forces and law enforcement agencies in accordance with international humanitarian law and human rights law, in particular women's rights.⁵

The Executive Director of UNFPA called for the following actions to be taken immediately in order to respond to the victims of gender-based violence: increasing political will to ensure that women and girls received real protection from gender-based violence in their homes, in refugee camps or other locations; increasing the collection of evidence of sexual violence, and bringing perpetrators to justice; ensuring that peacekeeping and humanitarian personnel were trained to respond to gender-based violence; ensuring training of health personnel in caring for victims of sexual violence; providing victims with adequate legal, psychological and reproductive health services; and targeting community leaders with programmes on the importance of not stigmatizing victims of sexual violence. She also pointed to the devastating consequences of the transmission of HIV/AIDS through sexual violence. She called for increased funding to programmes addressing gender-based violence.⁶

The representative of the Women's Network for the Protection of Human Rights and Peace recommended that funding be increased to the human rights and gender sections of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) so that the Mission could establish a genuine partnership with women's groups, especially in the most backward, rural regions of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. She also urged that MONUC be strengthened so that it would have the capacity to locate girl soldiers and ensure their inclusion in disarmament, demobilization, rehabilitation and reintegration programmes.⁷

The Executive Director of UNIFEM asserted that the world was at a historical crossroads where the opportunity now existed to make the rule of law and the gender equality perspective central to peace and reconstruction processes. To this end, she urged that the participation of women, and the incorporation of gender dimensions, be increased in all stages of the conceptualization, planning and implementation of United Nations peacekeeping operations. With respect to post-crisis situations, she recommended that the United Nations should have a central mechanism to focus on coordinated assistance for gender justice.⁸

The Deputy Secretary-General of the Commonwealth Secretariat observed that, notwithstanding the fact that women and children remained deliberate targets in armed conflicts, women had continued to play a crucial role in maintaining and rebuilding the social fabric during conflicts and their aftermath. Highlighting the integrated approach developed by the Commonwealth Secretariat involving men, women and young persons, he affirmed that only through education in support of peace could conflicts be prevented and their harmful effects on women be avoided.⁹

The Director of INSTRAW contended that the designation of a focal point and an expert-level working group on the integration of resolution 1325 (2000) in the Security Council's work, the establishment of a United Nations system-wide action plan as well as national action plans, and annual reporting were initiatives that deserved consideration and support.¹⁰

Speakers were unanimous in welcoming the progress made since the adoption of resolution 1325 (2000) four years previously. They noted that women had achieved greater equality and were better represented in the area of peace and security. Specific actions had been taken by the United Nations, civil society and non-governmental organizations in this respect. Furthermore, there was now a better understanding of the serious and disproportionate effects of armed conflicts on women and girls. At the same time, however, all speakers agreed that much remained to be done for further progress, stressing the urgent need to narrow a wide gap between the realities and the objectives envisioned in resolution 1325 (2000).

Speakers expressed deep concern about the increasing trend of sexual violence against women and girls, particularly when this type of violence was used as an instrument of war. They maintained that the international community should assist countries in need in bringing an end to impunity to gender-based crimes. Pointing out that the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court defined rape and other forms of violence against women as war crimes and crimes against humanity, many speakers hoped that the Court would play an important role in prosecuting those accused of serious gender-based violence.¹¹

In the same vein, most speakers argued that the United Nations must enhance its response to gender-based violence not only during conflicts but also in pre-conflict as well as post-conflict situations. The representative of Germany stated that gender-based violence could only be overcome by empowering women in all aspects of public and private life.¹² The representatives of Chile and the United Republic of Tanzania emphasized that more women needed to be included in peace agreements and peacekeeping operations.¹³ The representative of the Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the European Union, praised the gender resources package of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations as an "impressive piece of work".¹⁴ The representative of Liechtenstein observed that the United Nations "should lead by example" in the appointment of women as special envoys, special representatives and other senior operational officials.¹⁵ However, the representative of India cautioned that, while increasing the number of women in high-level positions was essential, attempts to artificially raise the number of women in peace negotiations would not necessarily guarantee enduring results.¹⁶

The representatives of Benin and the Philippines suggested that all United Nations structures should develop comprehensive strategies to combat gender-based violence.¹⁷ The representatives of France and Canada, speaking for the Human Security Network, emphasized the need to ensure the systematic inclusion of gender-specific contents in the mandates of peacekeeping operations.¹⁸ While supporting the need for a comprehensive strategy, the representative of the Russian Federation cautioned against "general stereotypical recommendations", adding that preparing such an inclusive approach should not impede the search for solutions to specific problems in specific situations.¹⁹

The representatives of Angola and the Philippines suggested that a monitoring system should be established to ensure the implementation of resolution

1325 (2000) in the field.²⁰ As part of such a monitoring system, the representative of Romania suggested that a mechanism should be developed to monitor human trafficking.²¹ However, the representative of Algeria cautioned that such a measure might run the risk of going beyond resolution 1325 (2000), raising the question whether the Council was the best place to carry out such a multidimensional activity.²²

Most speakers expressed concern about the conduct of peacekeepers and other United Nations personnel in the field, welcomed the commitment of the United Nations to zero tolerance of trafficking in every peace operation, and sought a similar commitment to zero tolerance of prostitution. The representative of Germany held that all substantive units of a peacekeeping operation should include specialists with gender expertise.²³ The representative of Sweden contended that abused women must have the opportunity to interact with female members of a peacekeeping operation, and suggested that civilian observers be included in military observer teams, which often constituted the only presence of a peacekeeping operation in a given area.²⁴ The representative of Nigeria regretted that the Office of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues was not adequately staffed and funded.²⁵

The representative of the United States agreed with the point made by the High Commissioner for Human Rights that human trafficking was often worsened by the upheaval of post-conflict situations.²⁶

As follow-up measures, the representative of France suggested that the Council should meet periodically, perhaps at the expert level, to discuss the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000).²⁷ The representative of the United Kingdom stressed the importance for the Council to maintain cooperation with non-governmental organizations and civil society representatives.²⁸ Most delegations voiced support for the Secretary-General's proposal of a comprehensive strategy and action plan for mainstreaming a gender perspective into peacekeeping activities. The representative of Sweden recommended that such an action plan should have specific timelines, resource implications, and clear targets and responsibilities, adding that the focal point might be supplemented by a working group.²⁹ The representative of Pakistan suggested that issues of women and peace and security should be included in the terms of reference for all Council missions, and that the Council should periodically hold Arria-formula meetings with non-governmental organizations and civil society representatives on the question.³⁰

After the debate, the President (United Kingdom) made a statement on behalf of the Council,³¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Strongly condemned the continued acts of gender-based violence in situations of armed conflict; requested the Secretary-General to ensure that human rights monitors and members of commissions of inquiry had the necessary expertise and training in gender-based crimes and in the conduct of investigations, including in a culturally sensitive manner favourable to the needs, dignity and rights of the victims;

Reaffirmed the important role of women in the prevention of conflict and supported the Secretary-General's intention to develop a comprehensive system-wide strategy and action plan for increasing attention to gender perspectives in conflict prevention;

Considered that an increase in the representation of women in all aspects of conflict prevention, peacekeeping and peacebuilding operations and humanitarian response was urgently needed;

Recognized the vital contribution of women in promoting peace and their role in reconstruction processes.

Decision of 27 October 2005 (5294th meeting): statement by the President

Regional Adviser for West Africa of the Network of African Women for Peace, the Gender Adviser of the Commonwealth Secretariat, and the Secretary-General of the Inter-Parliamentary Union.

All Council members and 25 other representatives made statements during the meeting.³³

In his report, the Secretary-General presented a United Nations system-wide action plan on the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000), as requested by the Council in its presidential statement of 28 October 2004.³⁴ The action plan would be used by United Nations entities to formulate concrete strategies, actions and programmes, in a consistent and effective manner, to advance the role of women in peace and security areas; ensure more efficient support to Member States and other actors in national and regional-level implementation of resolution 1325 (2000); strengthen the commitment and accountability of the United Nations system at the highest levels; and enhance inter-agency cooperation. In the framework of enhanced coordination and accountability, the action plan would be utilized by intergovernmental and inter-agency bodies as a yardstick against which to assess periodically the United Nations system's efforts. The Secretary-General further proposed in his report that the plan would cover the period from 2005 to 2007. In keeping with the mandates given by the Security Council in resolution 1325 (2000) and the relevant presidential statements, the plan had been structured according to the following 12 areas of action: conflict prevention and early warning; peacemaking and peacebuilding; peacekeeping operations; humanitarian response; post-conflict reconstruction and rehabilitation; disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; preventing and responding to gender-based violence in armed conflict; preventing and responding to sexual exploitation and abuse by United Nations staff, related personnel and United Nations partners; gender balance; coordination and partnership; monitoring and reporting; and financial resources.

³⁴ S/PRST/2004/40.

At the outset, the Deputy Secretary-General stated that five years after the adoption of resolution 1325 (2000), women were still not adequately represented at the negotiating table, the Cabinet table or the conference table. Governments clearly needed to redouble their efforts, and the United Nations needed to be more proactive. She underlined that the United Nations needed to develop a more systematic approach to consulting with women in the earliest stages of a peace process, including in discussions on constitutional development, judicial reform and reconciliation. The Organization also needed to maintain the utmost vigilance in preventing further instances of sexual exploitation and abuse by United Nations peacekeepers and personnel.³⁵

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations agreed that major challenges remained, such as the shameful engagement of some peacekeepers in sexual exploitation. He intended to vigorously address the remaining challenges in the coming years, focusing on the broadening of responsibility for gender mainstreaming and ensuring that all policies were consistent with resolution 1325 (2000). He would work towards increasing the number of women in peacekeeping and refine the partnership frameworks that guided collaboration with United Nations agencies and Member States in the implementation of the resolution.³⁶

The Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women, presenting the Secretary-General's United Nations system-wide action plan for implementing resolution 1325 (2000), said the Council's historic resolution had fundamentally changed the image of women from that of exclusively victims of war to that of active participants as peacemakers, peacebuilders and negotiators. Despite the progress achieved, many gaps remained to be filled. Women's and girls' bodies had become battlegrounds, and they shouldered the main burden of post-conflict problems and were the primary victims of unspeakable sexual and gender-based violence.³⁷

The Executive Director of UNIFEM gave many examples of the Fund's activities to enhance women's situation in conflict-affected societies. In terms of achieving justice for women, she stated that peace agreements often fell short of providing any strategy or resources to ensure implementation or measures to sanction non-action, especially with regard to issues affecting women. At the heart of the implementation of any real justice in countries recovering from conflict was the demand that human rights violations against women and girls be regarded and treated as crimes by the criminal justice system, and not be left to the rules of customary and traditional legal systems. In terms of moving forward, she suggested that the United Nations needed to adopt a more holistic one-system approach to systematically address the needs and capabilities of women throughout all phases from conflict to peace.³⁸

³⁷ Ibid., pp. 6-8.

Given the unfinished agenda for Afghan women, the Country Director for Afghanistan of Women for Women International urged the international community to support the rule of law, not the rule of individuals, warlords or fundamentalists in her country. She urged the Council to consider extending the mandate of the International Security Assistance Force and expanding its work throughout Afghanistan.³⁹

The Regional Adviser for West Africa of the Network of African Women for Peace pointed out that a number of peace agreements in Côte d'Ivoire were agreed without the effective participation of women. She called for better implementation of resolution 1325 (2000), and for enhanced efforts to increase women's awareness of the resolution.⁴⁰

In the discussion that followed, speakers emphasized the need for vigilance in addressing the "disgraceful" issue of sexual exploitation. Agreeing that many gaps remained in implementing the resolution, most speakers agreed that the establishment of the Peacebuilding Commission, as well as the Secretary-General's proposed United Nations system-wide action plan, would provide an opportunity to capitalize on gains already achieved, including by systematically incorporating women at the earliest stages of peace processes.

Welcoming the proposed United Nations system-wide action plan, many representatives opined that the plan responded to the need for more systematic and coordinated implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) in all United Nations activities related to conflict and for greater coordination throughout the United Nations system.⁴¹

The representatives of Romania, Namibia and Iceland believed that the action plan would be a useful tool and framework of action for gender mainstreaming in all activities being carried out by the United Nations system.⁴² The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania opined that the action plan presented an implementation framework that would allow for coordination and collaboration among the various United Nations bodies. It would also provide a monitoring framework upon which to measure results.⁴³

At the close of the meeting, the President (Romania) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the system-wide action plan for the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) across the United Nations system, and requested the Secretary-General to update, monitor and review its implementation and integration on an annual basis, and report to the Council, starting in October 2006; urged the Secretary-General to proceed with the appointment of a gender adviser within the Department of Political Affairs and to continue to identify women candidates for senior-level positions within the United Nations system, including as special representatives;

Requested the Secretary-General to ensure that all peace accords concluded with United Nations assistance addressed the specific effects of armed conflict on women and girls, as well as their specific needs and priorities in the post-conflict context;

Called upon all parties to armed conflict to ensure full and effective protection of women and emphasized the necessity to end impunity of those responsible for gender-based violence;

Urged troop-contributing countries to take appropriate preventive action, including conducting predeployment awareness training, and to take disciplinary action and other action to ensure full accountability in cases of misconduct involving their personnel.

Decision of 26 October 2006 (5556th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5556th meeting, on 26 October 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 27 September 2006.⁴⁵ The President (Japan) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 4 October 2006 from the representative of Japan addressed to the Secretary-General, transmitting a concept paper for the meeting.⁴⁶ The Council heard briefings by the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women, the Under-Secretary General for Peacekeeping Operations, the Executive Director of UNIFEM and the Assistant Secretary-General in the Peacebuilding Support Office. In addition to all Council members, 29 representatives made statements.⁴⁷

In his report, the Secretary-General stated that a significant amount of work to implement resolution 1325 (2000) was under way. Many activities were relevant, effective, innovative and important. Progress in implementing a wide array of activities envisaged in the system-wide action plan had been achieved, albeit to a different extent in each area of action. Despite overall positive assessment of the stage of the implementation plan, the review identified a number of gaps and challenges that generally arose in situations of conflict and post-conflict, namely, lack of stability and security; violence, including gender-based violence; poverty, discrimination, democracy deficits, impunity and weak public institutions. In addition, a number of common institutional gaps and challenges to the systematic implementation of the action plan were identified.

The Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women, presenting the report of the Secretary-General, said that the collective efforts to ensure women's equal participation in peace consolidation had generally fallen short in the past year. From the Democratic Republic of the Congo to the Sudan, and from Somalia to Timor-Leste, women continued to be exposed to violence and to be marginalized in formal processes. While States had a vested interest in maintaining peace and security, it was no secret that, even with political will at the top and pressure from women's groups below, many Governments were hesitant to challenge pre-conflict societal values. The full and effective implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) would require all the will and creativity the international community could muster.⁴⁸

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations stressed three priority issues facing peacekeeping missions as they endeavoured to provide support for women's participation in transitional processes and beyond, and which required the urgent attention of the Council. First, he highlighted the problem of insecurity and the use of sexual violence as a way to control the movement and actions of women and girls as they worked to rebuild their homes and communities, also after the guns fell silent. Secondly, he emphasized the need to ensure sustained support for women in the political arena in order that they might be part of the decision-making process. To date, the most notable successes in electing women to political office had been achieved in situations where constitutional guarantees had been put in place, establishing quotas regarding the participation of women. Thirdly, he stressed the need to amend and reform discriminatory laws that undermined equality of rights so as to enable the effective participation of women in peacebuilding processes. He further noted that, despite the efforts of his Department to implement resolution 1325 (2000), real gaps remained. He recognized the need to build a critical mass of male champions to advocate and support the translation into practice of commitments to gender equality. Thus, he believed his Department needed a senior male envoy to support the political advocacy efforts. With a view to engaging more effectively with the local population, he suggested that deploying a greater number of women peacekeepers would be an operational imperative.⁴⁹

The Executive Director of UNIFEM, describing peace consolidation as an uncertain enterprise, stated that peace consolidation must include ending impunity for sexual violence and raising the political and economic costs to those who engaged in it. On the ground in places like Iraq, Afghanistan and Somalia, UNIFEM was seeing the public space for women shrink. Women were becoming targets for assassination when they defended their rights in public decision-making, and violence was brought into homes and communities after conflicts had ended.⁵⁰

The Assistant Secretary-General in the Peacebuilding Support Office stressed the need to support women's roles in the fabric of communities and as agents of change in peacebuilding support. For that reason, her Office was exploring ways to further engage women's civil society organizations in reconstruction efforts. In her view, the Peacebuilding Commission provided an unprecedented opportunity to improve on past practices. Indeed, resolution 1325 (2000) was one of the underpinnings of the Commission's architecture. She opined that as women were disproportionately affected by conflict they must be given disproportionate attention as well.⁵¹

The Coordinator of the Dushirehamwe Association said that Burundian women had long committed themselves to peace. Highlighting the most pressing issues facing women, she said the 30 per cent quota for women's participation in decision-making should not only be raised to 50 per cent, but should also be applied to women at the local level. With women unable to inherit land, she hoped that the Peacebuilding Commission would consider support for Burundi's land commission as one of its top priorities. Appealing for women not to be held hostage to the political situation in Burundi, she stated that women should be enabled to have direct access to financing that allowed them to undertake and consolidate the work that they had been doing at the grassroots level.⁵²

Speaking of the situation for women in Timor-Leste, the President of Rede Feto urged the United Nations to set up formal mechanisms for consultation that would enable women and young people of both sexes to be heard.⁵³

Speakers welcomed the positive developments in the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000), such as increased participation of women in the peace processes in western Africa as well as the Democratic Republic of the Congo and other places. The representative of South Africa noted with appreciation that women had come together in the Great Lakes region and the Mano River Basin to decide on their own future and to organize their participation in national reconciliation. Also encouraging was the fact that an increasing number of countries had adopted their own national programmes with a view to implementing the resolution.⁵⁴ Speakers were unanimous, however, in acknowledging that much remained to be done at all levels, and called for a more coherent and systematic approach to address the requirements and obligations of the resolution.

The representative of Ghana lamented that the international community had only "paid lip service" to the aspirations underpinning the "epoch-making" resolution, through inconsistent implementation, especially in most developing countries.⁵⁵ The representative of Uganda regretted that not much had been done to implement resolution 1325 (2000), in particular in elaborating on reporting and monitoring mechanisms.⁵⁶ Speakers highlighted the Council's role in supervising the resolution's full and speedy implementation. As the resolution reaffirmed the role of women in preventing and resolving conflicts, the representative of Australia stated that it had made "gender equality and a gender perspective relevant to all Security Council actions".⁵⁷ The representative of Slovenia called for the creation of a mechanism for the Council to monitor its own actions in integrating resolution 1325 (2000) into its work.⁵⁸ For the Council to assess progress in a systematic way, the representative of the United Kingdom stressed the need to develop an action plan for each country with the agreement of the Government, which would ensure that all funds, programmes and agencies assumed particular responsibility for the separate elements of the resolution.⁵⁹ The representative of Indonesia suggested that a focal point or working group of the Council should be considered.⁶⁰

Speakers reaffirmed the need to ensure women's full participation in all phases of the peace processes. Noting that there remained resistance to the notion that women could make a difference, the representative of the United States argued that exclusion in leadership roles was a result of deeply engrained perceptions and change would require deliberate efforts by all.⁶¹ The representative of the United Kingdom noted with concern that, thus far, gender had not been included in a systematic way in peacekeeping missions.⁶²

Together with the representative of China, the representative of the United Kingdom called on the Peacebuilding Commission to accord priority to women in post-conflict situations.⁶³ The representative of Canada urged the Commission to develop modalities to ensure the active participation of civil society, particularly women's groups.⁶⁴ The representative of the Congo maintained that gender issues should be a human rights issue first and foremost and that discrimination must be erased in development programmes as well as post-conflict reconstruction.⁶⁵ The representative of Norway considered it necessary for United Nations country teams to strive for a fully integrated gender plan that reflected the objectives of the resolution, including clear accountability, division of labour and specific actions to be taken.⁶⁶

Most speakers voiced concern at the continuation of sexually based violence in conflict areas, and called for further implementation of the system-wide action plan.

At the end of the meeting, the President (Japan) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁶⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General to collect and compile good practices and lessons learned and identify remaining gaps and challenges in order to further promote the efficient and effective implementation of resolution 1325 (2000);

Decision of 23 October 2007 (5766th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5766th meeting, on 23 October 2007, the Council held an open debate on the item. The Council included in its agenda a report of the Secretary-General dated 12 September 2007,⁷⁰ and a letter dated 8 October 2007 from the representative of Ghana addressed to the Secretary-General.⁷¹

The Council heard statements by the Secretary-General, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women, the Ad Interim Executive Director of UNIFEM, and the Coordinator of the NGO Working Group on Women, Peace and Security. In addition to Council members, 38 representatives made statements.⁷²

In his report, the Secretary-General stated that analysis of the responses received from United Nations entities during the second implementation review had revealed that important groundwork had been laid for a longer-term effort by the United Nations system towards the full implementation of resolution 1325 (2000). Many entities had reported an increased political commitment to gender equality and women's empowerment in peace processes; strengthened capacity-building, an enhanced institutional environment; improved advocacy, enhanced leadership and greater support by senior officials; and better engagement with Member States and partnerships with national machineries for women, women's associations and networks.

Opening the debate, the Secretary-General said that, since the adoption of the landmark resolution, women had increasingly participated at all levels of peacemaking and peacebuilding, and peace processes had increasingly empowered women and advanced gender equality. However, countries in conflict or those emerging from it needed to establish their own national action plans and take ownership of the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000). He stressed that the collective and individual response to violence against women, which had reached hideous and pandemic proportions, must be strengthened. The Secretary-General reiterated his call that the Security Council establish a mechanism dedicated to monitoring violence against women and girls. For their part, Member States should actively consider proposals to strengthen the Organization's gender architecture, replacing several current structures with one dynamic United Nations entity.⁷³

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations said that 2007 had seen a number of significant advances in the contribution of women to the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peacebuilding. Some of those advances had occurred in countries where peacekeeping operations were deployed, such as Haiti and Liberia. On the implementation of resolution 1325 (2006), he noted that in November 2006, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations had adopted a policy directive on gender equality in peacekeeping operations that obliged all uniformed and civilian staff to ensure the equal participation of women, men, boys and girls in all peacekeeping activities. In addition, since February, the number of women in senior civilian positions had increased by almost 40 per cent, and included the appointment of Ellen Margrethe Løj as Special Representative of the Secretary-General to lead the United Nations Mission in Liberia. He stated that over the past seven years the Department's strategy had been to focus on implementation of the individual parts of resolution 1325 (2000). However, a concerted, integrated approach was needed to address rape and sexual violence in conflicts and in post-conflict situations. While rape was used as a weapon of war in situations like those in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Darfur, addressing that war crime required going beyond political compromise, and power- and resource-sharing agreements. In combating such crimes, the role of the Security Council was important in ensuring that the mandates and resources it authorized took into account the situation faced by women and girls on the ground.⁷⁴

The Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women, presenting the report of the Secretary-General, stressed that it was imperative for international organizations, national Governments and civil society to work together to identify priorities and develop a practical approach to implementation strategies on women and peace and security. She said that resolution 1325 (2000) was primarily about how to make the world safe for equal participation by women and girls in matters of peace and security. Impunity for perpetrators and an insufficient response to the needs of survivors were morally reprehensible and unacceptable. She stressed that the Council could help by establishing a dedicated mechanism to monitor the situation of women and girls in conflict situations and hold parties to conflicts accountable for sexual and gender-based violence.⁷⁵

The Ad Interim Executive Director of UNIFEM highlighted three main challenges in the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000). First, while there were positive exceptions, women's access to peace processes in conflict-affected countries had been highly uneven. Secondly, enhanced efforts were required to ensure women's representation in democratic institutions in post-conflict contexts. Thirdly, she stressed the need to address sexual violence. She presented two suggestions to which she hoped the Council would give due consideration: to call for more holistic and concerted action by Member States and regional organizations to protect women and girls from gender-based violence; and to request more detailed reporting on the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000).⁷⁶

⁷⁶ Ibid., pp. 7-8.

The Coordinator of the NGO Working Group on Women, Peace and Security said was unfortunate that the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) could not be said to be coherent and effective, but at the same time noted that the opportunity to discuss that assessment was nevertheless valuable. The integration of resolution 1325 (2000) into the Security Council's work had been inconsistent. Resolutions should contain gender-specific language and standard provisions for regular and adequate monitoring of and reporting on the implementation of the resolution by field missions.⁷⁷

Speakers welcomed the progress made since the adoption of resolution 1325 (2000), but acknowledged that much remained to be done to fulfil the objectives contained therein. They expressed deep concern that armed conflicts still persisted and civilians, particularly women and children, continued to account for the vast majority of victims of violence, in particular of sexual violence.

The representative of Portugal, speaking on behalf of the European Union, stated that the European Union was extremely concerned about recent reports on the "appalling and unprecedented phenomenon of systematic rape and brutality against women" in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁷⁸ The representatives of Slovakia, France, Liechtenstein, Austria, the Republic of Korea and Croatia supported the idea of establishing a comprehensive and effective monitoring and reporting mechanism that would help the Council to identify the victims, patterns, scale and perpetrators of sexual violence in armed conflicts.⁷⁹ The representatives of Canada, Malawi and Bangladesh called for the creation of a Security Council mechanism to monitor the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000).⁸⁰

The representative of the Russian Federation maintained however that the Council's work should not duplicate the activities of other United Nations bodies, such as the Human Rights Council, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Peacebuilding Commission and the General Assembly. He stated that his delegation did not agree with the proposal to create a Council machinery for monitoring the implementation of the resolution, as that would duplicate efforts of other United Nations bodies.⁸¹ The representative of Colombia did not think it appropriate for the Council to set up a monitoring mechanism, because it would eventually result in the creation of a mechanism whereby the Council would single out countries on the basis of thematic issues that should, according to the Charter, be discussed and dealt with in the General Assembly.⁸² Similarly, the representative of Egypt doubted the merit of creating a mechanism that would be “scrutinizing” Member States.⁸³ The representative of China stated that the Council should work within its terms of competence, focusing on conflict prevention, peacekeeping and post-conflict reconstruction. He further stated that countries should be encouraged to formulate national action plans for the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000), with support from the United Nations.⁸⁴

The representative of Indonesia noted that in many conflicts women were marginalized in the political process.⁸⁵ The representative of Qatar called on the international community to provide generous support to countries in their efforts to align their national legal systems with international standards and to build their national capacity in the fight against gender-based crimes.⁸⁶ The representative of Myanmar categorically rejected the “unfounded allegations” made by the United Kingdom regarding sexual violence reportedly committed by the Burmese military. He claimed that the military had been falsely accused of gang rape based on reports of the expatriate Shan Women’s Action Network, the Shan Human Rights Foundation and the Kareni Human Rights Group, pointing out that the two latter entities had been identified in the 2002 country report of the United States State Department as organizations associated with the insurgency. He noted that separate investigations into those allegations had been carried out by the authorities and organizations concerned, including the Myanmar Women’s Affairs Federation, and, in “genuine cases”, perpetrators were prosecuted in accordance with the law.⁸⁷

The representative of the Sudan stressed that, at the national level, the empowerment of women had been one of the country’s top priorities, as its traditions and values accorded women a particularly prominent position. He assured the Council that as the Sudan was preparing for the Darfur peace talks to be held in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in less than a week, the participation of women in the peace process would undoubtedly give dynamism and direction needed for the success of the talks.⁸⁸

The representatives of France and the United Kingdom regretted that some Council members had resisted the inclusion in the draft presidential statement of a request for the submission of a special report of the Secretary-General on gender violence within six months. The representative of the United Kingdom hoped that the reporting of other bodies would fill the resulting gap.⁸⁹ The representative of Italy asked whether the presidential statement to be adopted could really be seen, from the point of view of those who suffered on the ground, as a message of hope. There was no need for more messages and more information to stop their suffering.⁹⁰

At the end of the meeting, the President (Ghana) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁹¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its commitment to the full and effective implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) on women and peace and security;

Recognized the importance of ensuring respect for the equal rights of women and, in this regard, reaffirmed the importance of the equal role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peacebuilding, and stressed the need for their full and equal participation in peace processes at all levels;

Remained concerned about the low number of women appointed as Special Representatives or Special Envoys of the Secretary-General to peace missions; urged the Secretary-General to appoint, taking into account the principle of equitable geographical representation, more women to pursue good offices on his behalf;

44. Post-conflict national reconciliation: role of the United Nations

Initial proceedings

Decision of 26 January 2004 (4903rd meeting): statement by the President

At its 4903rd meeting, on 26 January 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled “Post-conflict national reconciliation: role of the United Nations”. The Council was briefed by the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the Deputy Emergency Relief Coordinator. Statements were made by all Council members and the representatives of Afghanistan, Argentina, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, Cameroon, Costa Rica, Côte d’Ivoire, Croatia, Egypt, Guatemala, India, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union),¹ Japan, Liechtenstein, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Peru, the Republic of Korea, Rwanda, Serbia and Montenegro, Sierra Leone and South Africa.

In her introductory remarks, the President (Chile) underlined that post-conflict national reconciliation, which lay at “the intersection of the ethical responsibility and the political responsibility of the international community”, should be systematically integrated in the United Nations in order to prevent the resurgence of conflicts. She highlighted the involvement of the United Nations in post-conflict situations and said that the questions which should be asked were what role the United Nations should have in processes of national reconciliation; whether the need for reconciliation could be incorporated into exit strategies for post-conflict situations; whether the United Nations should design strategies for reconciliation; and what should be the role of other principal United Nations organs.²

In his briefing, the Assistant Secretary-General noted that, for reconciliation to last, it would require the settling of the past, an accounting of prior wrongs and an acceptance of responsibility for abuses. The achievement of those requirements would vary according to specific national circumstances. He observed that the pursuit of justice, accounting for past atrocities, restitution for victims and regeneration of severed bonds of trust and civility should not be overlooked when dealing with pressing matters of restoring stability and must be borne in mind when peace agreements were being negotiated. Such tensions between peace and justice were common in post-conflict societies and the international community should play a key role in helping war-shattered people to resolve those tensions. He further referred to a number of instruments such as tribunals, truth and reconciliation commissions, amnesties and return of displaced populations employed by the international community in addressing reconciliation in post-conflict situations and stated that those instruments needed to be “combined in a social process of catharsis” for them to be successful. Noting that the particular formula for any given country should be determined on the basis of appropriately facilitated national consultation, he stated that the international community could offer assistance, outline options and provide information about what other countries in similar circumstances had done. While amnesties could sometimes be seen as the price to be paid for peace agreements to succeed, he warned that the United Nations could not condone agreements arrived at through negotiations that violated the principles of the Charter.³

The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme referred to the issue of building democracy as part of the political economy of reconciliation and cautioned that moving too quickly from an armed competition to a democratic one without addressing the underlying causes of conflict could drive the parties further apart. He emphasized that a dialogue that brought together different civil society groups with the political leadership could supplement or in some cases temporarily be substituted for a more formal democratic process. It could also, critically, lay the groundwork for a later democratic exercise which would enjoy broader support. He added that reconciliation and peacebuilding was hard to achieve, unless citizens felt that their personal security was being met by effective policing of their streets and communities, and in this connection pointed to the United Nations costly but essential police training efforts. Comparing the situation to that of a heart attack victim, he challenged the Security Council to expand the focus of its activities beyond the “operating theatre”, bearing in mind that the real statistics of peacebuilding demonstrated that the most critical interventions were in the preventive and rehabilitation phases.⁴

In her briefing, the Deputy Emergency Relief Coordinator opined that post-conflict reconciliation should be nurtured in the immediate humanitarian response phase of a conflict. She was of the view that, while formal reconciliation processes were undeniably critical to sustainable peace, some of the most powerful forms of reconciliation, in terms of restoring the social fabric and regaining national unity, were to be found in everyday life. In critical situations, she said that a starting point must be to ensure that adequate levels of humanitarian assistance were available and noted that sadly it was in the “forgotten” emergencies that the risks were greatest. Pointing to the fact that the legitimacy of a faction’s engagement in peace processes should be based on its commitment to unhindered humanitarian access, she suggested that humanitarian assistance should be delivered in a way that did not perpetuate grievance or hamper longer-term societal and institutional development, the restoration of livelihoods and the strengthening of State legitimacy. She also raised the concern that longer- or medium-term tools of reconciliation such as education, health care and demobilization and disarmament were often underfunded and could perpetuate social divisions. In terms of the work of the Security Council, she noted that peace processes tended to ignore “the vast swath of communities that have been affected by the crisis and that have a stake in the future” and should also “be at the table”. She emphasized that the needs and concerns of women, and the reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons and child soldiers should be brought into humanitarian planning and post-conflict responses at the strategic level.⁵

A majority of the speakers shared the view that post-conflict reconciliation represented a long-term process which required sustained commitment and support of the United Nations and the international community, and further pointed to the broad expertise of the United Nations in the fields of disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and rehabilitation. Some speakers encouraged cooperation among the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in promoting a coherent approach in resolving complex crisis situations. Other speakers stressed that the United Nations should take the role of a neutral facilitator, create a favourable environment, and offer political advice and technical assistance in the areas of justice and truth-seeking.⁶ Some delegations also highlighted the importance of adequate financial and political support for the United Nations peacekeeping operations, as well as more robust mandates to monitor human rights violations and provide institutional support to the parties concerned.⁷ Most delegations also shared the view that a variety of approaches were applicable, depending on the country-specific context. The representatives of Germany and Pakistan noted that there was no “one-size-fits-all” solution to promoting post-conflict national reconciliation.⁸ Several speakers highlighted the importance of justice and the rule of law in post-conflict reconciliation,⁹ and cautioned that the premature holding of elections without the re-establishment of the rule of law, consideration of State institutions and stabilization of the post-conflict economy could prove to be ineffective and even counterproductive.¹⁰

A number of speakers pointed to the delicate balance between punishment and maintenance of peace and stability in a post-conflict environment and the fact that, while impunity for serious human rights violations could not be tolerated and perpetrators had to be held accountable, the quest for justice should not become an obstacle to peace.¹¹

The representatives of Germany, Spain and France stressed the importance of the supportive role of the International Criminal Court in the achievement of justice, effective humanitarian standards and strengthening peace and security throughout the world.¹² Pointing to their specific national experiences, the representatives of Angola and Benin made reference to truth and reconciliation commissions, amnesties, collective apologies and financial reparations as a means to end conflicts and set in motion processes of national reconciliation.¹³

A. The role of business in conflict prevention, peacekeeping and post-conflict peacebuilding

Initial proceedings

Deliberations of 15 April 2004 (4943rd meeting)

At its 4943rd meeting, on 15 April 2004, the Security Council heard briefings by the President of the World Bank, the President and Chief Executive Officer of Siemens, the President of the Economic and Social Council, and the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on African Countries Emerging from Conflict. Statements were made by the Secretary-General and by all Council members.

In his introductory statement, the Secretary-General recalled that the Council had set up expert panels to assess the role of political economy in triggering or prolonging conflict. It had authorized some peacekeeping missions to assist in the monitoring of economic sanctions and arms embargoes and to support efforts to re-establish national authority over natural resources. He elaborated on various efforts and initiatives undertaken to address the economic dimensions of armed conflict and stressed that the time had come to translate those ad hoc efforts into a more systematic approach. In his view, such an approach would promote greater cooperation and interaction between the United Nations security and development arms and ensure that the economic dynamics of armed conflict were reflected in efforts to prevent conflict, in peace agreements and in peacekeeping mandates. The Secretary-General informed the Council that he had established an inter-agency group on the political economy of armed conflict, chaired by the Department of Political Affairs, which would be offering recommendations to both the United Nations system and Member States.¹

Recalling the efforts made by the World Bank in different regions, the President of the World Bank highlighted the positive role which could be played by business in conflict prevention and reconstruction. He noted that lack of economic opportunity and resulting competition for scarce resources was at the root of most conflicts. Giving people hope through restoring business was the best way to avoid conflict.²

The President and Chief Executive Officer of Siemens underlined the crucial role which could be played by the private sector in post-conflict peacebuilding and reconstruction, as in the cases of Afghanistan and Iraq. He pointed to security, infrastructure, financing, post-conflict planning and visible progress as critically important factors for business participation in post-conflict situations.³

The President of the Economic and Social Council emphasized the primary responsibility of the private sector in building economic and social well-being. She also drew attention to the fact that the private sector sometimes contributed to instability and conflict, and stressed the need to create a favourable environment to attract private business into post-conflict areas to contribute to stabilizing social situations. In her view, the public sector itself must assume responsibility to help prevent and mitigate conflict. Acknowledging the collaborative efforts of the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, she stressed that much more could be done to develop a comprehensive and long-term perspective towards both sustainable development and conflict prevention.⁴

The Chairman of the Ad hoc Advisory Group on African Countries Emerging from Conflict noted the inescapable linkage between peace and economic development. Only when there was peace could the private sector make its contribution towards creating economic growth and prosperity. He further believed that the international community was the most important player in creating the political environment in which the private sector could do business.⁵

Most Council members concurred that it was timely and appropriate for the Council to discuss the role of business in conflict prevention, peacekeeping and post-conflict peacebuilding. They held that sustainable economic growth could be a key to conflict prevention and reconstruction, while at other times economic factors could contribute to the genesis of many violent conflicts. Some representatives noted that business activity, as important as it was, was not a substitute for the essential role played by public authorities, which had the primary responsibility for providing incentives for economic activity and investment.⁶ Speakers agreed that, because many war-torn States were vulnerable to continued instability and poverty, the business sector must participate responsibly in post-conflict reconstruction. Some speakers said that business should actively participate in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process and post-conflict peacebuilding.⁷

Many speakers commended the Secretary-General's Global Compact Initiative, which set out principles to help businesses contribute to global sustainable development. They applauded its role in bringing together businesses, United Nations agencies and civil society groups in a common effort to promote corporate citizenship and increase corporate support for responsible practices, thus reducing the risk of crisis situations.⁸

Several Council members considered it was important to prevent the negative involvement of business actors in conflict situations, and to ensure that businesses operated appropriately and did not make matters worse.⁹ Several representatives stressed that it was essential that businesses did not participate in human rights abuses and refrained from any improper involvement in local political activities, thus making a direct contribution to preventing and overcoming conflicts.¹⁰ The representative of Chile expressed the need to develop codes of conduct and monitoring standards applicable to business activities.¹¹ The representatives of the United States and Pakistan believed that companies could provide leadership through setting examples of corporate citizenship such as adopting corporate codes of conduct or choosing to participate in voluntary international codes regarding corporate behaviour.¹² The representative of China stated that private business should scrupulously abide by the relevant Security Council and General Assembly resolutions and other codes of conduct.¹³

Council members agreed on the need to build on the experience accumulated in managing economic factors as a source of conflict. The representatives of France and Benin expressed interest in the report of the inter-agency group established by the Secretary-General.¹⁴ The representative of Romania suggested that the Secretariat put together a report highlighting the significance of the broader regional and global dimensions of the political economy of contemporary intra-State conflict. A major part of that report could focus on the political economy of post-conflict transformation since it was at that stage that business involvement could take on a really strong positive connotation.¹⁵ The representative of Chile suggested that the report should focus on the complex interrelationships between the private sector and conflict and make recommendations on prevention and post-conflict reconstruction that could be taken up by the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council for implementation in future peace operations.¹⁶

Several speakers drew attention to the role of the United Nations in monitoring international business activity, illegal or legal. The representative of France said that it might be timely for the Council to systematize its approach for taking into account economic factors in conflict zones and crisis situations by the establishment of a mechanism using independent experts.¹⁷

The majority of the speakers welcomed the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme as a significant contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security.¹⁸ The representative of China appreciated its contribution to severing the link between the illegal trade in diamonds and armed conflicts.¹⁹

Noting that the need for private sector involvement was particularly acute in conflict zones in Africa, several Council members commended the New Partnership for Africa's Development, which had acknowledged the importance of creating the conditions for investment and business, and stressed the importance of international support for that initiative, particularly in the form of private investment in economic development.²⁰

The representative of Algeria observed that, at the end of the emergency reconstruction phase of countries emerging from conflict, the international community was faced with a lack of any significant investment, which was the only thing that could lead to sustained and lasting growth.²¹

B. Role of civil society in post-conflict peacebuilding

Initial proceedings

Deliberations of 22 June 2004 (4993rd meeting)

At its 4993rd meeting, on 22 June 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled "Role of civil society in post-conflict peacebuilding". The President (Philippines) drew attention to a letter dated 1 June 2004 from the representative of the Philippines, transmitting a background paper on the item.²² Statements were made by all members of the Council and the representatives of Australia, Bangladesh, Canada, Egypt, Ireland, Japan, Nepal, Peru, the Republic of Korea, Senegal, Sierra Leone and Uganda.²³

In his introductory statement, the Secretary-General noted that the growth of the partnership between the United Nations and civil society reflected the need for the latter to contribute to post-conflict decision-making in an era of globalization and State fragmentation. While welcoming the Council's efforts to strengthen its informal relations with civil society, he felt it was now necessary for the Council to deepen its dialogue and place its relationship with such groups on a more firm footing. He asked the Council to pay serious attention to the recommendations contained in the report of the Panel of Eminent Persons on United Nations-Civil Society Relations.²⁴ The Council, he added, should view inputs by civil society as a way to add quality and value to its decisions, rather than as attempts to usurp the role of governments.²⁵

The President of the Economic and Social Council stated that non-governmental organizations were significant actors in crisis and post-crisis situations, and their number and diverse mandates made it essential for United Nations agencies to coordinate with them to ensure the coherence and impact of their combined efforts. She said that, through its subsidiary bodies, including the Commission on the Status of Women, the Economic and Social Council had established close contacts with non-governmental organizations and other private entities to discuss topics that the intergovernmental bodies were addressing. Furthermore, the ad hoc advisory groups on Guinea-Bissau and Burundi had engaged civil society organizations in their efforts to consolidate peacebuilding in those countries.²⁶

The Secretary-General of CARE International noted that the central lesson of peacekeeping and conflict-resolution efforts was that many peace efforts faltered from the outbreak of local conflicts. To prevent such local conflicts from undermining national peace agreements, peacekeeping mandates needed to go beyond their traditional focus on the national level, to the heart of local communities. He urged the Council to demonstrate its leadership in the form of a strong presidential statement expressing its commitment to engage civil society representatives in all phases of peace processes.²⁷

The Vice-President of the International Center for Transnational Justice stressed the need for direct access of civil society to the Council, not only in New York but also whenever the Council went on a mission to post-conflict countries, and expressed his strong support for the recommendations by the Panel of Eminent Persons on United Nations-Civil Society Relations. He stressed that peacebuilding missions and agencies also needed to be more open to the advice and involvement of local civil societies.²⁸

Speakers, including Council members, agreed that most contemporary conflicts were complex in nature, requiring an integrated and coherent response, with civil society playing an increasingly important role. They shared the view that civil society not only had a role to play in providing humanitarian relief and advocating national reconciliation, but could also contribute towards identifying, understanding and addressing the root causes of conflict. While recognizing the critical role of civil society organizations, including local and global non-governmental organizations, at the national and local levels, several speakers also advocated their involvement at the regional level. Most speakers welcomed the report of the Panel of Eminent Persons, agreeing that improved collaboration with civil society was a necessity for the United Nations, and should be promoted to make peacebuilding activities more productive, sustainable and cost-effective.

Several speakers stressed that the main responsibility for conflict reconstruction, however, should be borne by the United Nations and other international and regional organizations, and the Governments concerned. Civil society organizations, for their part, should support the central role of the United Nations and enhance coordination and cooperation with its various agencies. The representative of China stated that civil society organizations should be guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, as was expected from Governments.²⁹ The representative of Egypt emphasized that what was required in future were norms, rules and mechanisms that would set limits and determine the responsibilities of all partners.³⁰

Several speakers shared the view that in order to preserve the strength of its contributions, it was important to respect civil society's independence from Government, while respecting the principle of sovereignty of States and non-interference in domestic affairs. The representative of the United States observed that civil society organizations could only flourish in societies where good governance and the rule of law were applied; where civil institutions were strong and civil and political rights were recognized; and where participation in the electoral process was guaranteed, and where human rights and freedom of expression were accepted.³¹

Several speakers focused on how to empower civil society to become an even more active partner in peacebuilding, and generally agreed on the need to strengthen communication, in particular through consolidating the dialogue between the Council and civil society, with a view to establishing a two-way flow of information. Several speakers supported the recommendations of the Panel on making better use of Arria-formula meetings and field visits.³² Several speakers also emphasized the need to strengthen the capacity of, and assistance to, civil society organizations so as to make those actors real and effective partners.

While speakers generally agreed on the role of the Security Council in strengthening cooperation between civil society and the United Nations, the representative of Bangladesh emphasized that the Economic and Social Council should be the lead institution in involving civil society organizations in post-conflict peacebuilding policy recommendations, by engaging non-governmental organizations effectively through its consultative mechanisms, its subsidiary commissions and its ad hoc advisory groups on post-conflict countries.³³ The representative of Nepal expressed the hope that the Council would work coherently with other United Nations organs and agencies, such as the Economic and Social Council, which had mandates and competence in the domain of development, and not usurp their roles.³⁴

C. The role of civil society in conflict prevention and the pacific settlement of disputes

Initial proceedings

Decision of 20 September 2005 (5264th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5264th meeting, on 20 September 2005, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled

“The role of civil society in conflict prevention and the pacific settlement of disputes”. The President (Philippines) drew attention to a letter dated 7 September 2005 from the representative of the Philippines, transmitting a concept paper to guide the discussion.³⁵

The Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs made a statement on behalf of the Secretary-General. The Council then heard briefings by the Executive Director of the European Centre for Conflict Prevention; the Chair of the Columbia University Seminar on Conflict Resolution and Faculty Coordinator of the Columbia University Conflict Resolution Network; and the founder and Executive Director of the African Centre for the Constructive Resolution of Disputes. Statements were made by all Council members and the representatives of Canada, Peru, Slovakia and Switzerland.³⁶

The Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs read out a statement by the Secretary-General emphasizing the important role of civil society in conflict prevention. He noted that both the United Nations and regional organizations had to do more to tap into civil society’s comparative advantages, namely a strong local presence and experience on the ground. He pointed out that civil society had the capability to identify new threats and concerns faster than the United Nations system could and the fact that they were indispensable in “track-two” and “people-to-people” diplomacy, which was often integral to successful post-conflict political and reconciliation processes. Civil society organizations could also reach parties on the ground that Governments could not reach, as well as complement the work of the United Nations by offering valuable analyses originating from the field. For those reasons, he further stated, civil society organizations would have an important role to play in the deliberations concerning the establishment of the Peacebuilding Commission. He urged Governments, international financial institutions, regional organizations and civil society to work together as partners to improve the effectiveness of conflict prevention and peacebuilding strategies.³⁷

The Executive Director of the European Centre for Conflict Prevention highlighted the necessity of a partnership between the United Nations and civil society. He called for a fundamental change in dealing with conflict and to shift resources from “reaction to prevention”. He made several proposals aimed at producing a coherent and integrated approach on conflict prevention involving input from regional organizations and civil society.³⁸

The Chair of the Columbia University Seminar on Conflict Resolution and Faculty Coordinator of the Columbia University Conflict Resolution Network presented the perspective of academic centres as part of civil society’s contribution to conflict prevention and the pacific settlement of disputes. He highlighted the roles played by academic institutions in conflict prevention and added that it was a contribution involving understanding and experimentation. He also stated that universities had frequently used their autonomy to foster a human search beyond the constraints of institutionalized politics and hoped that the Security Council would continue to keep its openness to academic learning.³⁹

The founder and Executive Director of the African Centre for the Constructive Resolution of Disputes touched on a number of issues about civil society and reiterated the importance of partnership between States, civil society and the private sector in conflict resolution and prevention. He expressed the view that civil society should remain outside the formal structures of the United Nations since its strength, legitimacy and flexibility were derived from its independence.⁴⁰

Council members stressed that the essential responsibility for conflict prevention rested with national Governments, but agreed on the important role of civil society in support of conflict prevention and the pacific settlement of disputes, in line with Chapter VI of the Charter. They urged the United Nations and the international community to support national efforts for conflict prevention and assist in building national capacity in this field. Speakers noted that a well functioning civil society had the advantage of specialized knowledge, capabilities, experience, links with key constituencies, influence among local actors and resources. Council members also underlined the role that these actors could play in providing a bridge to dialogue and other confidence-building measures between parties in conflict.

Several speakers expressed views on how the Council could better engage civil society in resolving conflicts and cited the newly established Peacebuilding Commission as a valuable tool for interaction with civil society.⁴¹ Some delegations underlined their support for the report of the Panel of Eminent Persons on United Nations-Civil Society Relations,²⁴ and believed it was a means to better integrate civil society into the overall work of the United Nations.⁴²

Several speakers supported the Arria-formula meeting as a suitable mechanism for consulting civil society since it provided the Council with independent information concerning situations that could potentially destabilize a country.⁴³ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania argued that Arria-formula relationships would enable the Council to make “more and better informed decisions”,⁴⁴ while the representative of Argentina maintained that frequent use of the formula would undoubtedly “strengthen the Council’s preventive role”.⁴⁵

Delegations also raised the issue of the involvement or non-involvement of civil society in conflict resolution and prevention. According to the representative of Greece the capacity of civil society and particularly that of local actors was relatively weak and therefore closer and better coordination and cooperation with the United Nations and with regional and subregional organizations was necessary.⁴⁶ The representative of Peru stated that when its voice was silenced, civil society could end up caught in the “problem of confrontation and polarization” that generated violence, while the social fabric that it represented and in which it functioned was torn apart.⁴⁷ Similarly, the representative of France highlighted the danger of civil society becoming the “vector of violent, criminal action”.⁴⁸ The representative of the United States urged the United Nations to support countries seeking self-government by encouraging the development of free institutions.⁴⁹

At the end of the debate, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁵⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Underlined the need for a broad strategy for conflict prevention and pacific settlement of disputes;

Reaffirmed the need for this strategy to be based on engagement with Governments, regional and subregional organizations as well as civil society organizations;

Underlined the potential contributions of a vibrant and diverse civil society in conflict prevention, as well as in the peaceful settlement of disputes; and noted that a well-functioning civil society has the advantage of specialized knowledge, capabilities, experience, links with key constituencies, influence and resources, which could assist parties in conflict to achieve peaceful solution to disputes;

Noted that a vigorous and inclusive civil society could provide community leadership, help to shape public opinion, and facilitate as well as contribute to reconciliation between conflicting communities;

[Stated that it] would strengthen its relationship with civil society, including, as appropriate, through, inter alia, the use of “Arria-formula” meetings and meetings with local civil society organizations during Council missions.

46. Items relating to non-proliferation

A. Non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction

Initial proceedings

Decision of 28 April 2004 (4956th meeting): resolution 1540 (2004)

At the 4950th meeting, on 22 April 2004,¹ statements were made by all members of the Security Council and the representatives of Albania, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belarus, Canada, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union),² Israel, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Liechtenstein, Lebanon, Malaysia (on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement), Mexico, Namibia, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Peru, the Republic of Korea, Singapore, South Africa, Sweden, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan and Thailand.

The majority of speakers acknowledged that the acquisition of weapons of mass destruction by non-State actors posed a serious threat to international peace and security and pointed out that the non-proliferation regimes did not address the issue of how to prevent access by non-State actors to such weapons. Speakers discussed a draft resolution before the Council that would, inter alia, require States to take effective measures and establish domestic controls to prevent the proliferation of weapons and their means of delivery, as well as prevent States from assisting non-State groups in acquiring weapons of mass destruction. A number of representatives questioned the necessity of adopting the draft resolution under Chapter VII of the Charter, raising issues related to the binding nature of Council action.³ The representative of Brazil, among others, argued that as Article 25 made all Council resolutions binding, the use of Chapter VII was unnecessary.⁴ The representative of Egypt noted the danger of using Chapter VII with respect to problems that were beyond the control of Member States.⁵ Others stressed that Chapter VII would underline the serious and binding nature of the resolution.⁶ A number of delegations also discussed the Council's right to assume the role of prescribing legislative action and the Council's legislative authority, some arguing that the Council was going beyond its mandate⁷ and others stressing that, as a clear threat to international peace and security, the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction fell squarely within the Council's mandate.⁸

A number of representatives said that the draft resolution, if adopted, should not undermine existing multilateral treaties on weapons of mass destruction,⁹ while other speakers believed that no such conflict would arise.¹⁰ A number of speakers suggested including more references to disarmament in the text of the draft resolution;¹¹ others indicated that such references could dilute the text's objective.¹²

The representative of the Philippines, echoed by the representatives of Brazil and Egypt, asked for details regarding the mandate of the committee to be established to monitor the implementation of the draft resolution.¹³ The representative of Pakistan declared that the creation of a Council committee was unnecessary and stressed that it could be utilized in the future to replace the role of existing treaty regimes and to "harass countries".¹⁴ In contrast, other speakers believed that the committee should be given a two-year mandate¹⁵ or sufficient time to carry out its objectives.¹⁶

Several representatives opined that a number of concepts contained in the draft resolution were not sufficiently precise and asked for clarifications on the definition of terms such as "means of delivery" and "related materials".¹⁷ The representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran said that the draft resolution contained certain concepts and definitions that were either inadequately elaborated or inconsistent with the terms and definitions embodied in existing international instruments on nuclear, biological and chemical weapons. He gave as an example the fact that the definition for "means of delivery" failed to refer to fighters capable of delivering such weapons.¹⁸

At the 4956th meeting, on 28 April 2004, statements were made by most members of the Council.¹⁹ The President (Germany) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 27 April 2004 from the representative of India,²⁰ conveying his Government's support for the draft resolution under consideration and its commitment to preventing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, as well as its determination not to accept externally prescribed norms against its national interests or sovereignty on matters within the jurisdiction of its parliament.

While a number of representatives welcomed the improvements over the initial draft of the resolution,²¹

some speakers indicated their preference for a stronger reference to disarmament in the revised text.²² The representative of Germany expressed regret that it had not been possible to introduce explicit language on the importance of verification, security assurances and regional security arrangements, and on the leading role the Council had to play in the context of the resolution.²³

The representative of Brazil reiterated his belief that there was no need to put the whole resolution under Chapter VII of the Charter.²⁴ The representative of Pakistan explained his delegation's favourable vote by pointing to the fact that the legally binding obligations adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter offered reassurance that the provisions of the resolution would not serve to impose non-proliferation obligations on States or to transfer the general responsibility for global non-proliferation and disarmament to the Council.²⁵

The draft resolution²⁶ was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1540 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, inter alia:

Decided that all States should refrain from providing any form of support to non-State actors that attempted to develop, acquire, manufacture, possess, transport, transfer or use nuclear, chemical or biological weapons and their means of delivery;

Decided also that all States, in accordance with their national procedures, should adopt and enforce appropriate effective laws;

Decided further that all States should take and enforce effective measures to establish domestic controls to prevent the proliferation of nuclear, chemical or biological weapons and their means of delivery;

Decided to establish, for a period of no longer than two years, a Committee of the Security Council which would report to the Council for its examination, on the implementation of the resolution;

Decision of 27 April 2006 (5429th meeting): resolution 1673 (2006)

At its 5097th meeting, on 9 December 2004, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 8 December 2004 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004) addressed to the President of the Council,²⁷ transmitting the Committee's first report on activities undertaken with respect to the non-proliferation of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons, and a list of States that had submitted their national reports as at 7 December 2004. During the meeting, statements were made by most members of the Council.²⁸

In his briefing, the Chairman of the Committee declared that cooperation with international organizations such as the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) was foreseen as the Committee might require future technical assistance. He also announced that the Committee planned to recruit experts from the Asian and African regional groups to help in its evaluation of reports submitted by States.²⁹

A number of speakers appealed to the States that had not yet submitted national reports to submit them as soon as possible.³⁰ Several representatives agreed on the need for the Committee to work in close cooperation with organizations with expertise in non-proliferation.³¹

Several speakers mentioned the importance of transparency in the work of the Committee.³² The representative of Pakistan pointed out that the Committee's work was made difficult by, inter alia, the lack of agreed international standards in areas in which the Committee would be examining the actions to be taken by States and its limited expertise. He further stressed that the Committee would have to ensure that it did not infringe upon, or duplicate, the work of established treaty regimes or seek to enlarge its scope beyond its mandate.³³

At its 5429th meeting, on 27 April 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 25 April 2006 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004),³⁴ transmitting the Committee's report with recommendations designed to enable the Council's monitoring of the implementation of resolution 1540 (2004), and enable States to continue fulfilling the requirements set by the resolution.

The President (China) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;³⁵ it was put to vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1673 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004) for a period of two years, with the continued assistance of experts, until 27 April 2008;

Decided that the Committee should intensify its efforts to promote the full implementation by all States of resolution 1540 (2004) through a work programme which should include the compilation of information on the status of the implementation by States of all aspects of resolution 1540 (2004);

Decided that the Committee would submit to the Security Council a report no later than 27 April 2008 on compliance with resolution 1540 (2004) through the achievement of the implementation of its requirements.

Decision of 23 February 2007 (5635th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5635th meeting, on 23 February 2007, the Council included in its agenda the question of the implementation of resolutions 1540 (2004) and 1673 (2006), and a letter dated 12 February 2007 from the representative of Slovakia addressed to the Secretary-General,³⁶ transmitting a concept paper in preparation of the scheduled open debate on cooperation between the Council and international organizations in the implementation of the aforementioned resolutions. During the meeting, statements were made by all Council members and the representatives of Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Belarus (on behalf of the Collective Security Treaty Organization),³⁷ Brazil, Cuba, El Salvador, Germany (on behalf of the European Union),³⁸ Guatemala, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Israel, Japan, New Zealand (on behalf of the Pacific Islands Forum),³⁹ Norway, Pakistan, the Republic of Korea, Uruguay and Viet Nam. The Under-Secretary-General for Disarmament Affairs, the Director-General of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, the Representative of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the United Nations, and the Director of Compliance and Facilitation of the World Customs Organization briefed the Council about the work of their respective organizations in the area of non-proliferation.

The majority of the representatives underlined the need for international cooperation in the implementation of the resolutions and expressed support for enhanced coordination within multilateral regimes. A number of speakers noted that States required assistance for carrying out their obligations under the resolutions,⁴⁰ while other speakers believed that the Committee should consider national priorities when evaluating the capacity of States to meet the requirements specified in the resolutions.⁴¹

The representative of South Africa said that since the adoption of resolution 1540 (2004) no credible efforts had been made to close the gap in the international regimes.⁴² The representative of France observed that resolution 1540 (2004) had not established any norms regarding export controls but merely requested States to implement them. view, the urgency of the issue demanded that the existing gaps in legislation be addressed.⁴³

The representatives of the Congo and Panama called for attention to the threat posed by the proliferation of small arms and light weapons.⁴⁴ The representative of Israel believed that resolution 1540 (2004) could also apply to conventional arms, as in the case of transfer of rockets to non-State actors.⁴⁵

The President (Slovakia) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴⁶ by which the Council, inter alia:

Affirmed its determination to promote increased multilateral cooperation, as an important means of enhancing implementation by States of resolution 1540 (2004);

Acknowledged with appreciation the activities of international organizations with expertise in the field of non-proliferation of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and their means of delivery covered by resolution 1540 (2004), especially in providing assistance in the implementation of that resolution, without altering their mandates and responsibilities;

Reiterated its determination to enhance its cooperation with international organizations and to develop preferred mechanisms for cooperating with those organizations on a case-by-case basis.

B. Non-proliferation

Initial proceedings

Decision of 29 March 2006 (5403rd meeting): statement by the President

At its 5403rd meeting, on 29 March 2006, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled “Non-proliferation”. The President (Argentina) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its commitment to the Treaty on the Non-proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and recalled the right of States parties, in conformity with articles I and II of the Treaty, to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination;

Noted with serious concern the many reports and resolutions of IAEA relating to the Islamic Republic of Iran’s nuclear programme reported to it by the IAEA Director General, including resolution GOV/2006/14 adopted on 4 February 2006 by the Board of Governors of IAEA;

Called upon the Islamic Republic of Iran to take the steps required by the Board of Governors;

Strongly supported the role of the Board of Governors and commended and encouraged the Director General and the secretariat of IAEA for their ongoing professional and impartial efforts to resolve outstanding issues in the Islamic Republic of Iran, and underline the necessity of IAEA continuing its work to clarify all outstanding issues relating to the Islamic Republic of Iran’s nuclear programme.

Decision of 31 July 2006 (5500th meeting): resolution 1696 (2006)

At the 5500th meeting, on 31 July 2006,⁴⁸ statements were made by the representatives of Argentina, China, France, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Japan, Qatar, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States. The President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany and the United Kingdom.⁴⁹ He also drew attention to two letters from the representative of France dated 13 July and 25 July 2006, respectively.⁵⁰ The letter dated 13 July 2006 transmitted the proposals of China, France, Germany, the United Kingdom, the United States and the Russian Federation, with the support of the High Representative of the European Union, for a comprehensive long-term arrangement that would allow for cooperation with the Islamic Republic of Iran based on the establishment of international confidence in the “exclusively peaceful” nature of its nuclear programme. In order to create the right conditions for a fresh start in the negotiations, the Council, inter alia, would agree to suspend discussion of the Islamic Republic of Iran’s nuclear programme in the Security Council and support the building of new light water reactors in the Islamic Republic of Iran through international joint projects, if the Islamic Republic of Iran would, inter alia, commit itself to addressing all the outstanding concerns of IAEA and suspend all enrichment-related and reprocessing activities. The letter dated 26 July 2006 transmitted a statement on behalf of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of China, France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States, and the High Representative of the European Union, which noted that the Islamic Republic of Iran had given no indication at all that it was “ready to engage seriously on the substance” of the proposals and had failed to take the steps needed to allow negotiations to begin, specifically the suspension of all enrichment-related and reprocessing activities. The authors of the statement had agreed to seek a Council resolution to make the IAEA-required suspension mandatory, and if the Islamic Republic of Iran did not comply they would work for the adoption of measures under Chapter VII, Article 41, of the Charter.

The President also drew attention to a letter dated 8 March 2006 and a note by the President of the Security Council dated 28 April 2006,⁵¹ transmitting the reports of the Director General of IAEA on the implementation of the Safeguards Agreement in the Islamic Republic of Iran, which discussed the uncertainties regarding the source of enrichment-related equipment in the nuclear energy programme of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the consequent inability of IAEA to make a conclusion about the scope, content and intent of the programme.

The President then put the draft resolution to the vote; it received 14 votes in favour and 1 against (Qatar), and was adopted as resolution 1696 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Called upon the Islamic Republic of Iran without further delay to take the steps required by IAEA Board of Governors in its resolution GOV/2006/14;

Demanded, in this context, that the Islamic Republic of Iran suspend all enrichment-related and reprocessing activities, including research and development, to be verified by IAEA;

Called upon all States, in accordance with their national legal authorities and legislation and consistent with international law, to exercise vigilance and prevent the transfer of any items, materials, goods and technology that could contribute to the Islamic Republic of Iran’s enrichment-related and reprocessing activities and ballistic missile programmes;

Expressed its determination to reinforce the authority of the IAEA process and strongly supported the role of the Board of Governors;

Requested, by 31 August 2006, a report from the Director General primarily on whether the Islamic Republic of Iran had established full and sustained suspension of all activities mentioned in the resolution, as well as on the process of Iranian compliance with all the steps required by the Board of Governors and with the above provisions of the resolution, to the Board and, in parallel, to the Council for its consideration;

Expressed its intention, in the event that the Islamic Republic of Iran had not by that date complied with the resolution, then to adopt appropriate measures under Article 41 of Chapter VII of the Charter to persuade the Islamic Republic of Iran to comply with the resolution and the requirements of IAEA, and underlined that further decisions would be required should such additional measures be necessary;

Confirmed that such additional measures would not be necessary in the event that the Islamic Republic of Iran complied with the resolution;

Decided to remain seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representative of Qatar, while stressing that the demands of the Council were legitimate, maintained that the Council should have waited a few more days to exhaust all possible ways and means to determine the real intentions and willingness of the Islamic Republic of Iran to cooperate, especially since it had asked for time to consider the package that had been offered to it. He further stated that the resolution would only intensify the situation in the Middle East.⁵²

The representative of the United States stated that nearly two months had passed since the European Union plus three countries⁵³ had made their offer and invited the Islamic Republic of Iran to enter into negotiations to avoid further action by the Council. He stated that the Islamic Republic of Iran had remained non-compliant with the Non-Proliferation Treaty and the IAEA Safeguards Agreement for the preceding three years. He argued that the continued pursuit of nuclear weapons by the Islamic Republic of Iran constituted a direct threat to international peace and security and demanded a binding resolution from the Council. He commented that the resolution just adopted called upon Member States to prevent the transfer of resources to the Islamic Republic of Iran’s nuclear and missile programmes, and that his country and other Member States would ensure that the financial transactions associated with such proliferation activities would be subject to scrutiny. While expressing the hope that the Islamic Republic of Iran would renounce the pursuit of programmes of weapons of mass destruction, he stressed the expressed intention of the United States and other Member States to adopt measures under Article 41 in the event that the Islamic Republic of Iran did not comply with resolution 1696 (2006).⁵⁴

The representative of the United Kingdom commented that the “history of concealment” of nuclear activities of the Islamic Republic of Iran raised questions about whether they were solely for civilian purposes. He felt that, given the concern about its ambitions, the Islamic Republic of Iran could not be allowed to continue its enrichment-related and reprocessing activities, including research, that would allow it to develop the capabilities to produce fissile material suitable for use in nuclear weapons, but he stressed that suspension would not hinder the development of a modern, civil nuclear power industry.⁵⁵

The representative of the Russian Federation however viewed the suspension of enrichment activities as merely an interim measure during the period necessary to resolve the issue and restore trust in the Islamic Republic of Iran’s nuclear programme. While noting that the resolution made the IAEA demand for suspension of enrichment activities mandatory under Article 40 of the Charter, he emphasized that any additional measures to implement the resolution should rule out the use of military force.⁵⁶

The representative of China stated that the purpose of the Council reviewing the issue was to safeguard the international nuclear non-proliferation mechanism and strengthen the role of IAEA among other objectives. He regretted that the Islamic Republic of Iran had failed to respond to the requests of the IAEA Board of Governors and the calls of the Council, but felt that the delay in finding an appropriate solution to the issue was due to lack of trust among the main parties involved. He said that the Council could not handle this issue “single-handedly” and that IAEA needed to always be the main mechanism for dealing with the issue. He reminded the Islamic Republic of Iran that Article 25 obliged all Member States to accept and carry out Council resolutions and urged it to practise restraint and lend importance to the appeals of the international community. He called for any ideas and efforts conducive to breaking the stalemate and facilitating compromises on the issue. He emphasized that this was a sensitive period and that the Islamic Republic of Iran and all other parties should not take any steps that would harm the diplomatic efforts or lead to “complications or loss of control”.⁵⁷

The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania stressed the right of the people of the Islamic Republic of Iran to civilian nuclear energy and said that the resolution did not constrain that right in any way but sought to bring any such programme under a verifiable inspection regime. However, while regretting that the offer of the Islamic Republic of Iran to respond to the package of proposals by 22 August 2006 had not been accommodated, he urged all parties including IAEA to continue engaging the Islamic Republic of Iran. He also noted that his delegation had voted for the resolution because it “preclude[d] the use of force as an option in engaging the Islamic Republic of Iran”.⁵⁸

The representative of France stated that the resolution was made necessary by the fact that three meetings between the Commissioner of the European Union and the chief negotiator of the Islamic Republic of Iran had resulted in no substantial discussion on the proposals made on 6 June by the permanent members of the Council and Germany, leaving the latter no choice but to resume action in the Security Council. He reiterated the possibility of adopting measures under Article 41 of Chapter VII in case the Islamic Republic of Iran refused to comply with the resolution.⁵⁹

The representatives of Japan and Argentina stressed the importance of resolving the issue of non-proliferation through diplomatic and peaceful means.⁶⁰

The representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran expressed his frustration at the fact that his requests to the President to address the Council, dated 29 March 2006 and 28 July 2006, had both been denied and that the Council had adopted several decisions without hearing the views of the concerned party. He recalled the history of resolutions against the Islamic Republic of Iran at the Council by some “Powers permanently represented at the Council”. He said that the Council had been prevented from acting against the “aggression against Palestinian and Lebanese peoples” and the threats of force including threat of using nuclear weapons issued daily against the Islamic Republic of Iran by representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom and the “Israeli regime”, in violation of Article 2 (4) of the Charter. He felt that a few “big Powers” had spared no effort in turning the Council into a tool to prevent the Islamic Republic of Iran from exercising its inalienable right to nuclear technology for peaceful purposes. He said that having been recent victims of weapons of mass destruction during the 1980-1988 war with Iraq, the people of the Islamic Republic of Iran had rejected all development of those weapons on ideological as well as strategic grounds and that the leader of the Islamic Republic had issued a public and religious decree against the production or use of nuclear weapons. He pointed out that since November 2003 all reports of IAEA had indicated the peaceful nature of the nuclear programme of the Islamic Republic of Iran. Since the peaceful programme posed no threat to international peace and security, there was no legal basis or utility in addressing it in the Council. He maintained that the right to enrich uranium was recognized under the Non-Proliferation Treaty and that upholding the rights of States parties to international treaties was as essential as ensuring respect for their obligations. He spoke of a dangerous trend in which, when “it suit[ed] the United States”, even the acquisition of nuclear weapons by Member States not parties to the Treaty was seen as “legitimate”, and questioned how Israel could complain of the peaceful nuclear programme of the Islamic Republic of Iran while its own “nuclear arsenal” had been repeatedly recognized, including by Treaty Review Conferences, as a “threat to regional and international peace and security”. He also said that the imposition of arbitrary thresholds was a function of bilateral considerations rather than objective or technical criteria and observed that the United States had begun efforts to deny the Islamic Republic of Iran any kind of nuclear activity by urging the Russian Federation to cease all cooperation, including assistance to the light water reactor at Bushehr. He remarked that intervention by the Council would only hinder cooperation of the Islamic Republic of Iran with IAEA since it was designed as an instrument of pressure. He indicated the willingness of the Islamic Republic of Iran to negotiate. He noted that it had taken the European Union plus three Member States nearly five months to consider a proposal made by the Islamic Republic of Iran in 2005 and asked why the resolution had been “rushed” through the Council.⁶¹

Decision of 23 December 2006 (5612th meeting):

At the 5612th meeting, on 23 December 2006, the President (Qatar) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany and the United Kingdom.⁶² The President also drew attention to several letters from the representative of France,⁶³ and a letter dated 7 December 2006 from the representative of the United Kingdom.⁶⁴ He also drew the attention of the Council to various reports from the Director General of IAEA, which stated, inter alia, that the Islamic Republic of Iran had not provided the necessary transparency to remove uncertainties associated with some of its activities or suspended its enrichment-related activities. The reports noted that IAEA would continue to pursue its investigation of all remaining outstanding issues but it remained unable to make further progress in its efforts to verify the correctness and completeness of the declarations to confirm the peaceful nature of the nuclear programme.⁶⁵

At the meeting, statements were made by representatives of Argentina, China, France, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Japan, Qatar, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States.

⁶⁵ S/2006/150 and S/2006/270 (see above), and the report dated 31 August 2006, transmitted in a note by the President of the Council of the same date (S/2006/702).

Most speakers stressed their commitment to a diplomatic, negotiated solution to the crisis, but noted that the failure of the Islamic Republic of Iran to meet the deadline for suspending enrichment-related and reprocessing activities had meant that the Council had needed to adopt measures under Chapter VII. They stressed that if the Islamic Republic of Iran did suspend its activities the measures would be suspended and negotiations could resume, but if it did not then the Council would consider other measures under Article 41. A number of speakers noted that the sanctions were proportionate and reversible.

Several speakers also underlined that the right of all States to the peaceful use of nuclear energy needed to be respected and protected.⁶⁶ The representative of Qatar stressed that his country had “no suspicions concerning the sincerity of Iran’s intentions as regards the peaceful nature of its nuclear programme”. Calling on the Islamic Republic of Iran to respond to the draft resolution before the Council, he stressed that his delegation’s vote for the draft resolution was prompted by concerns over the safety of the nuclear facilities. He maintained that the potential benefits of cooperation with IAEA in guaranteeing nuclear safety could not be risked, particularly since the resolution would impede delivery of equipment necessary for the nuclear programme, which could have “dangerous repercussions for the nuclear safety issue”.⁶⁷

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that the main thrust of the draft resolution was to support the activities of IAEA through the authority of the Council. He stressed that the restrictions being introduced on cooperation only applied to those areas that caused IAEA concern. His delegation firmly believed that cooperation with the Islamic Republic of Iran in areas that were not restricted by the draft resolution should not be subject to the draft resolution’s restrictions.⁶⁸ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania agreed that the provisions of the draft resolution should not constrain other legal and commercial transactions that had no bearing on non-proliferation.⁶⁹

The representatives of the Russian Federation and Argentina also maintained that an effective solution to the problem needed to be found within a political, diplomatic and legal framework and that the measures were taken in accordance with Article 41, which allowed no recourse to the use of force.⁷⁰

The representative of the United States, noting that the Islamic Republic of Iran had continued to defy the international community, maintained that the draft resolution was clear and “not open to interpretation” on the fact that it would compel all Member States to take all measures necessary to deny equipment, technology, technical and financial assistance that would contribute to the enrichment, reprocessing, heavy water or nuclear-weapon delivery programmes of the Islamic Republic of Iran. He stressed that his Government would insist on “absolute adherence” to its requirements and would also take steps under domestic law to put in place appropriate measures against individuals and entities involved in the nuclear programme and call on other countries to follow suit.⁷¹

The representative of China commented that the Council could not handle this issue “single-handedly”, and that IAEA remained the principal mechanism for dealing with the issue. He said that diplomatic efforts outside the Council needed to be strengthened and called on all the parties concerned to adopt a constructive attitude, “remain calm, practise restraint, and refrain from taking any steps that would harm diplomatic efforts and lead to a deterioration of the situation”.⁷²

The representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran, referring to recent statements made by Israel regarding its nuclear weapons, questioned the rationale of the Council in imposing sanctions on the Islamic Republic of Iran, which had “never attacked or threatened to use force” against any Member of the United Nations; had rejected the development of nuclear weapons on ideological grounds; was prepared to provide guarantees that it would never withdraw from the Non-Proliferation Treaty; had allowed IAEA inspections; had suspended its lawful enrichment activities for over two years and was ready to resume implementation of the Additional Protocol. He argued that the Council was obliged to respond to the “Israeli regime's unlawful possession of nuclear weapons" under Article 24 of the Charter. He said that finding solutions to the issue was never among the objectives of the resolutions proposed by "a few of [the Council's] permanent members, particularly the United States" as they had not seriously considered the proposals of the Islamic Republic of Iran, but were only trying to use the Council to "compel Iran to abandon its rights".⁷³

The draft resolution was put to the vote and adopted unanimously by the Council as resolution 1737 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,⁷⁴ inter alia:

Decided that the Islamic Republic of Iran should without further delay suspend its proliferation-sensitive nuclear activities;

Decided also that all States should take the necessary measures to prevent the supply, sale or transfer directly or indirectly from their territories of all items, materials, equipment, goods and technology which could contribute to the Islamic Republic of Iran's enrichment-related, reprocessing or heavy water-related activities;

Decided that all States should also take the necessary measures to prevent the provision to the Islamic Republic of Iran of any technical assistance or training, financial assistance, investment, brokering or other services, and the transfer of financial resources or services, related to the supply, sale, transfer, manufacture or use of the prohibited items, materials, equipment, goods and technology;

Decided that the Islamic Republic of Iran should not export any of the items in documents S/2006/814 and S/2006/815 and that all Member States should prohibit the procurement of such items from the Islamic Republic of Iran by their nationals;

Decided that the Islamic Republic of Iran should provide such access and cooperation as IAEA requested to be able to verify the suspension outlined in the resolution and to resolve all outstanding issues;

Decided that all States should freeze the funds, other financial assets and economic resources which were on their territories at the date of adoption of the resolution or at any time thereafter, that were owned or controlled by the persons or entities designated in the annex to the resolution, as well as those of additional persons or entities designated by the Council or by the Committee as being engaged in, directly associated with or providing support for the Islamic Republic of Iran's proliferation-sensitive nuclear activities;

Decided that technical cooperation provided to the Islamic Republic of Iran by IAEA or under its auspices should only be for food, agricultural, medical, safety or other humanitarian purposes;

Decided to establish a Committee of the Security Council to implement the resolution;

Requested within 60 days a report from the Director General of IAEA on whether the Islamic Republic of Iran had established full and sustained suspension of all activities mentioned in the resolution.

Decision of 24 March 2007 (5647th meeting):
resolution 1747 (2007)

At its 5646th meeting, on 23 March 2007, the Council considered the item entitled "Briefing by the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1737 (2006)". In addition to the briefing by the Chairman of the Committee, a statement was made by the representative of the United States.

The Chairman stated that he had instructed the Committee not to resort to interpretations of resolution 1737 (2006), and to instead implement the resolution as worded and ensure that it was correctly implemented. He then provided an overview of the activities of the Committee.⁷⁵

The representative of the United States expressed satisfaction that many Member States had submitted reports on their implementation of the sanctions measures, but expressed concern that some reports provided inadequate details on steps that had been taken to enforce or enact laws or regulations to implement resolution 1737 (2006). He stressed that it was essential for Member States to provide comprehensive descriptions of their actions to meet the obligations of the resolution. Moreover, he also expressed concern that about 70 per cent of Member States had not yet submitted their reports to the Committee.⁷⁶

At the 5647th meeting, on 24 March 2007, the President (South Africa) drew the attention of the Council to a note by the President of the Council dated 22 February 2007,⁷⁷ transmitting the report of the Director General of IAEA, which stated that the Islamic Republic of Iran had continued its enrichment-related activities and that IAEA remained unable to report progress in its efforts to verify the past development of the nuclear programme and was therefore not able to provide assurances about the absence of undeclared nuclear material and activities in the Islamic Republic of Iran or about the exclusively peaceful nature of that programme.

At the meeting, statements were made by most members of the Council,⁷⁸ and the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran.

Most speakers expressed regret that the Council had needed to impose new sanctions on the Islamic Republic of Iran and urged its Government to cooperate fully with IAEA so that the peaceful nature of the nuclear programme could be verified, while stressing the need to find a peaceful solution to the impasse. Emphasizing the importance of efforts to stop non-proliferation, they also expressed strong support for the Non-Proliferation Treaty and called on all States to adhere to it.

Several speakers emphasized that the inalienable right of signatory States to develop and have access to nuclear energy for peaceful purposes was a cornerstone of the Treaty.⁷⁹ Others noted the importance of working towards the eventual disarmament of all nuclear-weapon States,⁸⁰ or specifically called for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East.⁸¹ Other speakers expressed concern that even after several years of investigation IAEA was still unable to provide the international community with the assurance it required with respect to the strictly peaceful nature of the programme and noted that questions that had military implications remained unanswered.⁸²

Several representatives also stressed that the draft resolution before the Council did not introduce any change to the provisions of paragraph 15 of resolution

1737 (2006).⁸³ The asset freeze, therefore, did not prevent a person or an entity designated in the annexes to Security Council resolution 1737 (2006) and to the current draft resolution from making payments due under a contract that entered into force before that person or entity was listed in cases covered by paragraph 15.⁸⁴ The representative of the Russian Federation added that this meant that the activities authorized by the Security Council in the area of trade and economic cooperation could continue.⁸⁵

The representatives of the Congo, Indonesia and China concurred that the vote should not be seen as a punitive measure and that the role of the Security Council was not to become an “instrument of coercion”. Rather, the draft resolution was a way to persuade the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to comply with previous resolutions and resolve outstanding issues with IAEA.⁸⁶

The representative of South Africa stated that his delegation would vote in favour of the draft resolution although it was far from ideal. He believed that coercive measures such as sanctions should be utilized with great caution and only to support the resumption of political dialogue and negotiations. He criticized the sponsors of the draft resolution for acting as if the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran itself posed a threat to international peace and security, whereas the question was whether the nuclear programme of the Islamic Republic of Iran was a threat. He added that South Africa had proposed a number of constructive amendments to the draft resolution so that it would be “proportionate, incremental, and reversible” and was disappointed that all the proposals had not been accommodated.⁸⁷

The representative of the United Kingdom read out the text of a joint statement of the Foreign Ministers of China, France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States that deplored the failure of the Islamic Republic of Iran to comply with the earlier resolutions of the Security Council and IAEA. It also reaffirmed the “suspension-for-suspension” proposal which stated that for the duration of negotiations the Islamic Republic of Iran would maintain an IAEA-verified suspension of uranium enrichment, simultaneous to which Security Council discussion of the nuclear programme and the implementations of the measures adopted under the relevant Council resolutions would also be suspended.⁸⁸

The representatives of the United Kingdom and France maintained that by adopting the resolution, the Council continued its “incremental and proportionate” approach to the stance of the Islamic Republic of Iran.⁸⁹

The representative of the United States stated that the measures being taken were not meant to punish the civilian population and were tailored to target institutions and individuals who supported the nuclear and missile programmes of the Islamic Republic of Iran. He rejected the claim of the leadership of the Islamic Republic of Iran that the Council had sought to deprive it of its right to peaceful nuclear energy and pointed out the proposal made in June 2006 to render assistance in the construction of civilian light-water nuclear power plants. He said that the rejection of that offer had sent a “deeply troubling” signal to the international community. Noting that the leadership of the Islamic Republic of Iran had called the Council “illegal”, he stressed that Article 25 of the Charter placed binding obligations on all Member States to carry out the decisions of the Council. He also noted that the calls by the Islamic Republic of Iran to have Israel “wiped off the map” were a violation of Article 2 of the Charter, which made clear that all Members should refrain from the threat of force in international relations.⁹⁰

The representative of the Russian Federation highlighted that the measures imposed under resolution 1747 (2007) had been imposed according to Article 41 of the Charter and therefore precluded the possibility of the use of force.⁹¹ The representative of the Congo also stressed that the solution to the crisis needed to be found exclusively through dialogue, without any threats to use force.⁹²

The representative of China stated that in handling the nuclear issue no action should deviate from the goal of safeguarding international non-proliferation mechanisms and maintaining peace and stability. It was also essential to keep the process on a path of dialogue and negotiation and insist on a peaceful solution. Therefore, it was important to reinforce diplomatic efforts outside the Security Council.⁹³

In response, the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran alleged that the Member States who had initiated the resolution had first “manipulated the Board of Governors” of IAEA and then taken advantage of their “power to pressure and manipulate the Security Council to adopt three unwarranted resolutions”, which were trying to deprive his nation of its “inalienable right” to develop nuclear technology for peaceful purposes. He also argued that his country’s peaceful nuclear programme posed no threat to international peace and security and therefore fell outside the Charter-based mandate of the Council. He noted that IAEA had stated in its report that all nuclear material inside the Islamic Republic of Iran had been accounted for, verified that none of the declared nuclear material had been diverted, and indicated that it had not seen any industrial capacity to produce weapon-usable nuclear material. Nonetheless, the Council was “punishing a country” that had fulfilled all its commitments under the Non-Proliferation Treaty and the IAEA safeguards. Moreover, the resolution departed “from the stated claims of its sponsors” by targeting defence, economic and educational institutions, it was clearly pursuing objectives “far beyond Iran’s peaceful nuclear programme”. Finally, he reiterated that his country had always been ready for “time-bound and unconditional negotiations”, but that the only way forward was to “abandon unwise preconditions”, stressing that suspension was “neither an option nor a solution”.⁹⁴

The President then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany and the United Kingdom;⁹⁵ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1747 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,⁹⁶ inter alia:

Decided that all States should notify the Committee of the entry into or transit through their territories of the persons designated in the annex I to the resolution 1737 (2006) or annex I to the resolution;

Decided that the measures specified in paragraphs 12, 13, 14 and 15 of resolution 1737 (2006) should apply also to the persons and entities listed in annex I to the resolution;

Decided that the Islamic Republic of Iran should not supply, sell or transfer directly or indirectly from its territory or by its nationals or using its flag vessels or aircraft any arms or related materiel, and that all States should prohibit the procurement of such items from the Islamic Republic of Iran by their nationals, or using their flag vessels or aircraft, and whether or not originating in the territory Islamic Republic of Iran;

Called upon all States and international financial institutions not to enter into new commitments for grants, financial assistance and concessional loans to the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, except for humanitarian and development purposes;

Called upon all States to report to the Committee within 60 days of the adoption of the resolution on the steps they had taken with a view to implementing effectively paragraphs 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7;

Requested within 60 days a further report from the Director General of IAEA on whether the Islamic Republic of Iran had established full and sustained suspension of all activities mentioned in resolution 1737 (2006), as well as on the process of Iranian compliance with all the steps required by the Board of Governors and with the other provisions of resolution 1737 (2006) and of the current resolution, to the Board and, in parallel, to the Council for its consideration.

At its 5702nd, 5743rd and 5807th meetings,⁹⁷ the Council considered the item entitled “Briefing by the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1737 (2006)”. At those meetings, statements were made by the representatives of the United States and Qatar.

In his briefing at the 5702nd meeting, the Chairman recalled that after his report of 24 March 2007, the Council had, by resolution 1747 (2007), imposed additional measures including a ban on arms export from the Islamic Republic of Iran, asset freeze and travel ban on additional individuals. The Chairman then provided an overview of the work of the Committee.⁹⁸

At the same meeting, the representative of the United States referred the report of the Director General of IAEA to the Council confirming the failure of the Islamic Republic of Iran to suspend its uranium enrichment and heavy water-related activities, while limiting the access of IAEA to the Arak heavy water reactor. She reiterated the “generous offer” of China, France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States to the Islamic Republic of Iran. She cautioned that Member States should be prudent in applying exemptions to the asset freeze called for by the resolution.⁹⁹

At the briefings at the 5743rd and 5807th meetings, the Chairman of the Committee provided overviews of the work of the Committee during that period.¹⁰⁰

At those meetings, the representative of the United States reiterated his call on the Islamic Republic of Iran to change its confrontational course, suspend its proliferation-sensitive nuclear activities and cooperate fully and unconditionally with IAEA.¹⁰¹

At the 5807th meeting, the representative of the United States added that his Government endorsed the supply of enriched uranium by the Russian Federation to the nuclear power plant being constructed by the Islamic Republic of Iran in Bushehr, as it demonstrated that the Islamic Republic of Iran did not need to pursue uranium enrichment and other sensitive aspects of the nuclear fuel cycle to have access to nuclear power. He reiterated that the United States, the United Kingdom, France, China, the Russian Federation and Germany could offer the Islamic Republic of Iran assistance in the development of a civil nuclear power programme if it complied with the requirements of the Council.¹⁰²

At the same meeting, the representative of Qatar commented that it was important that the Non-Proliferation Treaty was implemented for all States in the Middle East without selectivity or discrimination. He welcomed the work plan agreement of August 2007 between the Islamic Republic of Iran and IAEA regarding the IAEA safeguards regime and urged all parties to the debate to maintain restraint and not attempt to affect the independence of IAEA.¹⁰³

C. Non-proliferation/Democratic People's Republic of Korea

Initial proceedings

Decision of 14 October 2006 (5551st meeting): resolution 1718 (2006)

At the 5551st meeting, on 14 October 2006,¹⁰⁴ statements were made by the representatives of Argentina, China, France, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States and the representatives of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea. The President (Japan) drew the attention of the Council to a letter transmitting a statement by the spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.¹⁰⁵ In the letter, the spokesman stated that the underground nuclear test conducted on 9 October 2006 was a measure to bolster the self-defence capacity of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and "was entirely attributable to the United States nuclear threat, sanctions and pressure". He complained that as soon as the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, which had already pulled out of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, had declared that it had conducted a nuclear test "the United States manipulated the Security Council to issue a resolution pressurizing Pyongyang, an indication of the disturbing moves to impose collective sanctions upon it". Nonetheless, while the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had conducted the nuclear test, he declared that his country maintained its will to denuclearize the Korean peninsula through dialogue and negotiations. However, if the United States increased pressure upon the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, it would continue to take physical countermeasures, and consider it as a declaration of war. The President also drew attention to three letters dated 13 October 2006 from the representative of France,¹⁰⁶ transmitting lists of items, materials, equipment, goods and technology related to nuclear, ballistic missile and other weapons of mass destruction.

The President drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹⁰⁷ it was put to vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1718 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter and taking measures under its Article 41:

Demanded that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea not conduct any further nuclear test or launch of a ballistic missile;

Demanded that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea immediately retract its announcement of withdrawal from the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

Decided that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea should suspend all activities related to its ballistic missile programme;

Decided that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea should abandon all nuclear weapons and existing nuclear programmes in a complete, verifiable and irreversible manner;

Decided also that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea should abandon all other existing weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missile programmes in a complete, verifiable and irreversible manner;

Decided to impose measures relating to the export or import from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea of certain goods and materials.

Most members of the Council welcomed the resolution and stressed the need to respond firmly and swiftly to the irresponsible actions of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. They stressed that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, inter alia, needed to implement the provisions of all Council resolutions, including resolution 1695 (2006), by which the Council had demanded suspension of the ballistic missile programme and verifiable dismantlement of nuclear development in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and return to the six-party talks. Most representatives stressed that if the Democratic People's Republic of Korea implemented the relevant provisions of the resolution, the sanctions measures would be suspended or lifted. The representatives of the Russian Federation and Japan¹⁰⁸ expressed regret that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had ignored the message in the statement by the President of the Security Council of 6 October 2006.¹⁰⁹ A number of members also commented on humanitarian concerns, stating that the sanctions were not targeted towards the suffering people in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.¹¹⁰

The representative of the United States said that the proclaimed test of a nuclear device by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea posed one of the gravest threats to international peace and security ever confronted by the Security Council. He stressed that the strong and clear message sent to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea extended to "other would-be proliferators", and expressed disappointment that the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had broken its word again. Underlining that the Council needed to be prepared if the Democratic People's Republic of Korea again decided to ignore the resolutions, he stated that the United States and other members could, at any point in time, strengthen the measures against the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and return to the Council for further action. He concluded by reassuring the allies of the United States in the region that his Government remained committed to their security and that it sought to increase defence cooperation with its allies, including cooperation on ballistic missile defence.¹¹¹

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the Council had a duty to condemn provocative behaviour which constituted a threat to international peace and security.¹¹²

The representative of Japan stressed that the combination of ballistic missile capacity and nuclear capability of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, with its proven record of reckless behaviour as a proliferator, constituted a grave threat to peace and security. He expressed regret that the test violated the Japan-Democratic People's Republic of Korea Pyongyang Declaration, the Joint Statement of 19 September 2005 and other agreements. Mentioning that the Government of Japan had announced firm measures in protest of the nuclear test including denial of permission to enter Japanese ports to all vessels of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, he urged other members to swiftly implement the provisions of the resolution.¹¹³

The representative of China expressed firm opposition to the nuclear test and support for the firm and appropriate response of the Council. However, he voiced disapproval against the practice of inspecting cargo to and from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and, therefore, expressed reservations about the relevant provisions of the resolution. He strongly urged the members to adopt a prudent and responsible attitude to prevent provocative steps that might intensify the tension. He emphasized that the Government of China remained committed to a peaceful solution to the nuclear issue in the Korean peninsula, and expressed his belief in the six-party talks as a realistic measure. He voiced firm opposition to the use of force, and expressed satisfaction that the parties concerned had indicated the importance of diplomatic efforts.¹¹⁴

The representative of the Russian Federation called for a strong but carefully vetted response to prevent further escalation of tension. He stressed that any sanctions measures should not remain in place indefinitely, and that goals such as bringing the Democratic People's Republic of Korea back to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons could be achieved only through political and diplomatic means.¹¹⁵

The representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea rejected the resolution, asserting that it was "gangster-like" for the Council to adopt a coercive measure, while neglecting the nuclear threat, moves for sanctions and pressure of the United States against his country. He claimed that even though the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had made every effort to settle the nuclear issue through dialogue and negotiations, the United States Administration had responded to its patient and sincere effort with a policy of sanctions and blockade. He also stated that the denuclearization of the Korean peninsula was the ultimate goal of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. The representative concluded that the nuclear test did not contradict the Joint Statement of 19 September 2005, under which it had committed itself to dismantling its nuclear weapons and to abandoning its existing nuclear programme, because his Government had clarified that it would not need nuclear weapons once the United States had dropped its hostile policy and confidence had been built between the two countries.¹¹⁶

The representative of the Republic of Korea stated that the nuclear test was an unacceptable breach of the Joint Statement of 19 September 2005 and the Joint Declaration on the Denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula signed in 1991. He concluded that the acts of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea would never be condoned and that their impact on inter-Korean relations could be only negative.¹¹⁷

The representative of Argentina pointed out that the letters dated 13 October 2006 from the representative of France¹¹⁶ had been circulated only to identify the items referred to in the resolution and not to legislate on the control of dual-use material and technologies in areas covered by specific treaties.¹¹⁸

Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1718 (2006) on the activities of the Committee from 14 October 2006 to 11 January 2007. The representatives of France, the United Kingdom and the United States made statements.

The Chairman informed the Council that the Committee had revised the chemical and biological programmes list. He said that the Committee had received reports from 46 countries and the European Union on the steps that they had taken with a view to implementing effectively the provisions of paragraph 8 of resolution 1718 (2006). He also noted that the Committee had received letters from the International Air Transport Association and the Permanent Mission of Ukraine to the United Nations, seeking guidance on or providing notification of cooperation with the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. He noted that the Committee had concluded that any definition of luxury goods would be the national responsibility of individual Member States, and that the resolution did not intend to have a negative humanitarian impact on the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.¹¹⁹

The representative of the United States called for a prompt adoption of amendments to the lists of items, materials, equipment, goods and technology prohibited from export to or import from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. She added that the Committee guidelines should be adopted no later than the end of January, but that their adoption was not a precondition for Committee or Council action.¹²⁰

The representative of France asked the Committee to begin work on identifying individuals and entities covered by the measures of freezing assets and restricting travel; consider adding articles to the lists; and specify that the resolution's provisions did not ban vaccines or basic products.¹²¹

The representative of the United Kingdom urged the remaining 146 Member States of the United Nations to submit reports on the steps they had taken to implement the terms of the resolution.¹²²

47. United Nations peacekeeping operations

Decision of 17 May 2004 (4970th meeting): statement by the President

At its 4970th meeting, held on 17 May 2004, the Security Council, presided over by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Pakistan, held a thematic open debate on United Nations peacekeeping operations.¹ All Council members made statements, in addition to the Secretary-General, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, and the representatives of Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Bangladesh, Canada, Côte d'Ivoire, Egypt, Fiji, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Japan, Kazakhstan, Lebanon, Malaysia, Namibia, Nepal, New Zealand, Peru, the Republic of Korea, the Republic of Moldova, Serbia and Montenegro, South Africa, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and Ukraine.

The Council had before it a letter dated 10 May 2004 from the representative of Pakistan,² including a non-paper suggesting that the discussion focus on the following elements: the forthcoming challenges for the United Nations system to generate sufficient levels of political, financial, human and logistical support from Member States in the wake of the recent surge in demand for United Nations peacekeeping operations; the evaluation of the progress made in United Nations peacekeeping since the Brahimi reforms;³ and the assessment of future trends in the strategic and operational aspects of peacekeeping operations. The letter was included in the agenda.

In his opening statement, the Secretary-General highlighted the surging demand for peacekeeping operations, including an increasing number of multi-dimensional operations, the mandates of which went beyond the traditional military functions. He noted that to absorb costs for the new and enhanced missions the United Nations might need an extra

$1 billion beyond the current peacekeeping budget of $2.82 billion. He then underlined a number of key challenges to operations, including, growing expectations of what multi-dimensional missions could achieve; increasing violence against peacekeepers by peace spoilers; the need for all United Nations departments, agencies and programmes to play their part in the peacekeeping process; the need for the Security Council to show commitment and solidarity and to provide clear, implementable and achievable mandates; and the need to provide peacekeeping operations with adequate resources, including specialized military capacities. Finally, he urged Member States to back-up peacekeeping operations with troops and political commitment.⁴

Speakers welcomed the marked progress that had been achieved in reforming and strengthening peacekeeping operations in recent years as a result of reforms carried out since the adoption of the Brahimi report. At the same time, they agreed that peacekeeping operations mandates had become increasingly complex, multifaceted and multidimensional, and that the United Nations Secretariat was faced with increasing difficulties in staffing new missions on short notice, as that depended entirely on the willingness of Member States.

Speakers concurred that enhanced operational effectiveness could be met through improvements in planning, training, logistics and management. They also stressed the need to strengthen the rapid deployment capacity to respond to urgent crises and that, for that purpose, adequate political and financial support was necessary. A few speakers welcomed recent initiatives at pre-deployment training. Other delegations pointed out the necessity to reinforce conflict prevention initiatives through an early warning mechanism.

Other points of agreement included the need to further strengthen the relationship between the Security Council, the Secretariat and the troop contributors, as well as between the United Nations and regional organizations and between the Security Council and the wider United Nations membership, especially since a more integrated approach to peacebuilding was required. Along those lines, a number of delegations stressed the importance of increasing coordination between peacekeeping operations in the same region and subregion. Speakers also concurred that it was imperative for each peacekeeping operation to have an exit strategy and a strategy for long-term developments, possibly through the establishment from the outset of clear substantive benchmarks, while at the same time avoiding precipitate withdrawals.

Regarding the mandate of peacekeeping operations, many speakers made specific recommendations, including restricting the use of Chapter VII mandates by the Security Council; providing clear-cut, timely, effective and impartial mandates; providing sufficiently robust rules of engagement while keeping the principle of the non-use of force except in self-defence; better ensuring the safety of peacekeepers, including by preventing the spread of HIV/AIDS; tailoring the tasks to what peacekeepers were able to do; enhancing their capacity to collect, analyse and disseminate intelligence; incorporating a gender perspective as well as protection of children tasks into all mandates; and formulating standardized codes of conduct applicable to all mission personnel.

At the end of the meeting, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Called upon Member States to ensure that the United Nations was provided with full political and financial support to meet the challenges [presented by the demand for new peacekeeping operations] effectively; and stressed that it was also important to ensure that, while meeting that demand, the resources available for and effective management of the existing operations were not adversely affected;

Called upon Member States to contribute sufficient levels of trained troops, police and civilian personnel, including those with specialized capabilities and skills, bearing in mind the need for an increased percentage of female personnel at all decision-making levels, as well as mobilization of logistic and administrative support;

Stressed the need for improved integrated mission planning, as well as enhanced capacity for rapid deployment of personnel and materiel to ensure efficient start-up of peacekeeping operations;

Recognized its responsibility to provide clear, realistic and achievable mandates for peacekeeping missions;

[Stated that] troop-contributing countries, through their experience and expertise, could greatly contribute to the planning process and assist the Council in taking appropriate, effective and timely decisions on peacekeeping operations;

Stressed that, in challenging environments, United Nations peacekeepers might need to be provided with sufficiently robust rules of engagement and the necessary military resources to enable them to fulfil their mandate and, if necessary, to defend themselves;

Encouraged Special Representatives of the Secretary-General to explore synergies to ensure effective management of peacekeeping missions in the same regions or subregions;

Stressed the need to regularly assess the size, mandate and structure of peacekeeping operations with a view to making the necessary adjustments, including downsizing, where appropriate;

Recognized that effective peacekeeping operations should be part of an overall strategy to consolidate and sustain peace, and stressed the need to ensure from the outset coordination, coherence and continuity, in particular between peacekeeping and on the one hand and peacebuilding on the other hand; to that end, it encouraged closer cooperation between all relevant United Nations agencies, funds and programmes and international financial institutions, regional and subregional organizations and the private sector.

Decision of 31 May 2005 (5191st meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5191st meeting, on 31 May 2005, the Council was briefed by the Adviser to the Secretary-General on Sexual Exploitation and Abuse by United Nations Peacekeeping Personnel. The Council also heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations.

The President (Denmark) drew attention to a letter dated 24 March 2005 from the Secretary-General,⁶ transmitting the report of the Adviser to the Secretary-General on Sexual Exploitation and Abuse by United Nations Peacekeeping Personnel, entitled “A comprehensive strategy to eliminate future sexual exploitation and abuse in United Nations peacekeeping operations”. The report identified four areas of concern: the current rules on standards of conduct; the investigative process; organizational, managerial and command accountability; and individual disciplinary, financial and criminal accountability. The letter was included in the agenda.

⁶ A/59/710.

The President also drew attention to the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and its Working Group,⁷ containing urgent recommendations regarding problem of sexual exploitation and abuse in peacekeeping contexts. The recommendations included measures in the areas of the adoption of standards of conduct, training, participation of women in peacekeeping operations, planning, management and command responsibility, welfare and recreation, data management, investigations, and victim assistance.

The Adviser to the Secretary-General noted that sexual exploitation (predominantly prostitution) appeared to be widespread in some United Nations operations, whereas sexual abuse (when the exploitation becomes criminal) was more difficult to gauge. He added that the level of abuse was probably more serious than previously thought and expressed concern at how certain United Nations civilian personnel could enjoy impunity. He then lamented that the issue had been unresolved for so long, even though ill-discipline of peacekeeping personnel was already a problem in 1960, pointing at sentiments of pride and embarrassment, and at the refusal of Member States to have a “public discourse” on the issue. He looked forward to the Secretary-General’s appointment of a group of legal experts that would advise on how to ensure that peacekeepers would not be exempt from the consequences of their criminal acts, or unjustly penalized. He emphasized that more allegations would be likely to emerge in the near term as the Secretariat strengthened the systems to lodge complaints. He concluded by saying that such abuses struck at the very credibility of the United Nations as a whole and, if unresolved, would carry the most serious consequences for the future of peacekeeping.⁸

The Under-Secretary-General affirmed that sexual abuse and exploitation undermined the ability to implement Council mandates. Since the first allegations surfaced in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in mid-2004, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations had made significant progress in its investigations and was putting in place “wide-ranging” measures to prevent it, which had already been implemented by field missions. At Headquarters, a task force established by the Department was developing guidelines and tools to effectively address this problem, with the aim of creating an “organizational culture” that prevented sexual exploitation and abuse. The Under-Secretary-General particularly highlighted the need for the inclusion of specific provisions in Council mandates for peacekeeping operations to address misconduct.⁹

At the end of the meeting, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned, in the strongest terms, all acts of sexual abuse and exploitation committed by United Nations peacekeeping personnel, and reiterated that sexual exploitation and abuse are unacceptable and have a detrimental effect on the fulfilment of mission mandates;

While confirming that the conduct and discipline of troops is primarily the responsibility of troop-contributing countries, recognized the shared responsibility of the Secretary-General and all Member States to take every measure within their purview to prevent sexual exploitation and abuse by all categories of personnel in United Nations peacekeeping missions;

Underlined the fact that the provision of an environment in which sexual exploitation and abuse are not tolerated is primarily the responsibility of managers and commanders;

Urged the Secretary-General and troop-contributing countries to ensure that the recommendations of the Special Committee which fall within their respective responsibilities are implemented without delay;

[Stated that it] would consider including relevant provisions for prevention, monitoring, investigation and reporting of misconduct cases in its resolutions establishing new mandates or renewing existing mandates and called upon the Secretary-General to include, in his regular reporting on peacekeeping missions, a summary of the preventive measures taken to implement a zero-tolerance policy and of the outcome of actions taken against personnel found culpable of sexual exploitation and abuse.

Deliberations of 22 February 2006 (5376th meeting)

At its 5376th meeting, on 22 February 2006, the Council heard a briefing by the Chef de Cabinet of the Executive Office of the Secretary-General on the issue of peacekeeping procurement.¹¹ All Council members made statements as did the representatives of Austria (on behalf of the European Union), Malaysia (on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement), Sierra Leone (on behalf of the Group of African States), Singapore and South Africa (on behalf of the Group of 77).

The President (United States) drew attention to letters dated 3 and 15 February 2006 from the representative of Malaysia on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, a letter dated 17 February 2006 from the representative of South Africa on behalf of the Group of 77, and a letter dated 20 February from the representative of Sierra Leone, on behalf of the African States, expressing concern about the continuing encroachment by the Council on the functions and powers of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council through addressing issues which traditionally fell within the competence of the latter organs. In particular, the authors that issues involving the management and procurement of peacekeeping operations and sexual abuse within peacekeeping operations were scheduled to be discussed by the Council even though those issues were still under active consideration by the General Assembly.¹²

The Chef de Cabinet briefed the Council on the steps currently undertaken by the Secretariat to improve procurement systems for peacekeeping operations and to crack down on waste, fraud and other potential abuse. He recalled that, with the growth of peacekeeping itself, peacekeeping-related procurement had been growing fast also, with a 70 per cent increase in the number of military personnel deployed. He then turned to a recent audit by the Office of Internal Oversight Services of peacekeeping procurement, which found that the Organization was exposed to serious risks of financial loss, and that there were indications of serious potential irregularities including conflict of interest with vendors, and evidence of $300 million in fraud. The Chef de Cabinet specified then that actually there was only “likelihood” of fraud. He added that there was strong disagreement between Office of Internal Oversight Services and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations about the methodology and quality of some parts of the report, but that nevertheless it was clear that a very serious response was required. As a first step he had placed eight staff members on special leave while the issues raised in the audit were looked into more fully. He said that the Secretariat had prepared proposals on management reform which would be presented in a week, and added that the whole process had also underlined the need for a stronger Office of Internal Oversight Services.¹³

The speakers were unanimous in expressing grave concern at the allegations of fraud and waste in the procurement for peacekeeping operations, as contained in the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services. They were also in full support for the ongoing efforts to investigate those allegations and to make necessary improvements in the procurement system.

A number of speakers supported the Council’s initiative in convening such a public meeting.¹⁴ The representative of the United States in particular affirmed that the Council had a responsibility to look at the flaws of peacekeeping management, so that problems could be rectified and stronger, more effective operations could be built.¹⁵

Other speakers however questioned the appropriateness of the Council’s initiating a discussion on the issue of peacekeeping operations management and/or procurement as this represented an encroachment by the Council on the General Assembly’s powers in contradiction with Article 24 of the Charter of the United Nations.¹⁶ The representative of South Africa expressed concern that, if peacekeeping management were left to the Council, developing countries would be left out of the decision-making process. He contended that monetary contributions should not have any effect on the decision-making role of Member States, and rejected “the insinuation that developing countries might somehow be tolerant of corruption, mismanagement and fraud”.¹⁷ The representative of China also stated that matters related to the use of peacekeeping funds and procurement management should be discussed by the General Assembly.¹⁸

The representative of Singapore deplored the fact that the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services had been leaked to the press, and that a senior Secretariat official had called a press conference and spoken of apparent fraud and corruption in the United Nations, bypassing the General Assembly. He also raised questions about due process in the placement on leave of some staff members and about equal treatment.¹⁹

While expressing appreciation for the work of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, the representative of Austria, speaking on behalf of the European Union, said that one should not forget that it was often under the most difficult circumstances and under enormous time pressure that the United Nations was called upon to set up peacekeeping operations.²⁰

In response, the Chef de Cabinet confirmed that he had requested a senior official to speak to the press following the leak of the report. As for the concern expressed by the representative of Singapore that a senior official in charge of management had been treated differently from those who had been suspended, he noted that this was inaccurate because the official had not been involved in the same case. He added that he was extremely concerned that this public debate might become a “kind of showdown” between the Council and the General Assembly over their respective roles.²¹

At its 5379th meeting, on 23 February 2006, the Council heard briefings by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations and the Adviser to the Secretary-General on Sexual Exploitation and Abuse by United Nations Peacekeeping Personnel. In addition to all Council members, statements were made by the representatives of Austria (on behalf of the European Union), Brazil, Canada and Singapore.

The Under-Secretary-General reported on progress accomplished regarding the strategy of preventing sexual exploitation and abuse in peacekeeping operations and enforcement of the zero-tolerance policy. He said that there had been some progress, in particular regarding the training of police and military personnel. In addition, it had been made easier for the local population to bring those breaches of conduct to the attention of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, and many investigations had been completed, thanks to the means received from Member States. He also reported that multidisciplinary conduct and discipline teams at Headquarters and in the field had been established. He then turned to the policy of “remediation” and support to victims with the establishment of a United Nations-wide task force with that aim. He said that there was still a great deal to be done and he called on Member States not to conflate the issues of procurement procedures with financial fraud and sexual exploitation, adding that acts of serious misconduct by some should not be allowed to betray the good work of peacekeepers.²²

The Adviser to the Secretary-General said that the Secretariat and Member States were about to complete the changes called for by the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations.²³ He said that a difficulty for the United Nations was that often neither the host State nor the sending States were in a position to exercise their jurisdiction when there was suspected criminal conduct by civilian staff, but added that a group of legal experts was currently working on this and would submit a report to the General Assembly soon. He stated that the number of allegations currently being registered was still quite high, and that the Member States had to exert greater efforts to draw those numbers down and tackle the culture of dismissiveness.²⁴

Speakers condemned all acts of sexual abuse and exploitation and reaffirmed their support for the comprehensive strategy to eliminate sexual exploitation and abuse in peacekeeping operations and subsequent steps taken by the Secretary-General to combat those abuses. They affirmed that this would certainly contribute to re-establishing the credibility of the Organization after repeated scandals had tarnished the image of the United Nations. Speakers also, inter alia, called for all abuse to be resolutely punished and for the implementation of the zero-tolerance and zero-complacency policy; reaffirmed that peacekeeping operations were the most effective means to deal with conflict situations and were primarily composed of dedicated and professional men and women; stressed the need to expand protection and assistance to victims and welcomed the bold and comprehensive United Nations policy in this regard; called for a comprehensive and system-wide approach to the issue of sexual abuse with all United Nations agencies present on the ground involved; welcomed progress made in the training of personnel and reaffirmed the need for the highest standards of discipline and conduct, as prevention was the best tool for avoiding crime; also welcomed progress in establishing a professional and independent investigative capacity in the Office of Internal Oversight Services; and called for a complete commitment on the part of Member States to tackle this issue.

Some speakers also specifically urged the revision of the memorandums of understanding between troop-contributing countries and the United Nations to provide and disseminate codes of conduct that personnel must observe, and even the adoption of a model memorandum for that purpose. Other suggestions included, inter alia, the provision of welfare and recreational facilities for troops as a potential solution to the abuses; the establishment of a mechanism to ensure accountability with respect to the investigations conducted and the measures taken in order to make sure that silence could be broken at all levels of hierarchies; and more efforts towards gender mainstreaming into all policies and programmes at the national and international level in line with resolution 1325 (2000).

48. Complex crises and United Nations response

Initial proceedings

Deliberations of 28 May 2004 (4980th meeting)

At its 4980th meeting, on 28 May 2004,¹ the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled “Complex crises and United Nations response”. The Council also included in its agenda a letter dated 24 May 2004 from the representative of Pakistan.² The Council heard briefings by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator and the President of the Economic and Social Council. All Council members made statements during the meeting.

In his briefing, the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator emphasized that complex crises and their aftermath embodied not only military and security dimensions but fundamental political, economic, social and humanitarian dimensions as well, as they were longer-running crises where the very process of conflict had had a dramatic impact on societal structures, government institutions and the ability of families and communities to support each other. He held that greater use should be made both of resolution 1296 (2000), by which the Council had requested the Secretary-General to bring to its attention situations of grave concern in respect of the protection of civilians in armed conflict, and of resolution 1366 (2001), in which the Council encouraged the Secretary-General to convey to it his assessment of potential threats to international peace and security. He added, however, that there was no point to early warnings if resources were lacking to do something in response.³

The President of the Economic and Social Council pointed to that body’s contribution to the United Nations response to countries in crisis, including recent initiatives in African countries emerging from conflict. She stressed that, in order to ensure coherence, such initiatives by the Economic and Social Council must be linked to the work of the Security Council. She was thus pleased that the two Councils were interacting in a more frequent and coherent way, as illustrated by the reference to the advisory groups of the Economic and Social Council in the statements by the President of the Security Council on issues of common concern.⁴

In their statements, Council members focused on conflict prevention and early warning. The representative of Spain, echoed by the representatives of the United Kingdom and Benin, observed that, while there were many early warning systems within the United Nations, the time had come to give serious consideration to how they could be coordinated so that the information could contribute more effectively and immediately to the decision-making process.⁵ The representatives of Spain, Benin, Chile and the United Kingdom made reference to Article 99 of the Charter of the United Nations.⁶ The representatives of Spain and the United Kingdom said that the Secretary-General's intention to appoint a special adviser for the prevention of genocide would ensure that relevant information reached the highest decision-making bodies early enough.⁷

The representative of the Philippines expressed support for establishing an information exchange mechanism for early warning analysis.⁸ The representative of the United Kingdom remarked that the United Nations system might also make better use of the early warning capacities of non-governmental organizations, the private sector, regional organizations and academic institutions. In turn, despite sensitivities about including new crisis situations in its agenda, the Council, in his view, should invite briefings on complex crises not already under consideration where appropriate, a tool provided for under resolution 1366 (2001).⁹

The representative of China called on the Council to formulate an integrated preventive strategy suited to the characteristics of complex crises.¹⁰ Stressing that, whenever peacekeeping was needed, conflict prevention had been needed before, the representative of Brazil suggested that the Council might eventually establish "conflict-avoiding operations".¹¹ The representatives of Benin, France and Romania commented that greater use could also be made of groups of friends.¹² Additionally, the representative of Benin advocated that the Council took another look at the preventive instruments already available to it, including general or targeted sanctions, commissions of inquiry, observation missions, preventive disarmament and the establishment of demilitarized zones.¹³ The representative of Brazil similarly asserted that the instrumentalities of Chapters VI, VII and VIII of the Charter should be urgently revisited.¹⁴

A number of Council members underlined the need to make greater use of existing decisions, agreements and reports in addressing complex crises.¹⁵ The representative of the Philippines advocated developing a practical road map to implement the recommendations of the Secretary-General's seminal reports on conflict prevention and post-conflict peacebuilding, and to follow up on those mechanisms that had already been identified.¹⁶

Members concurred that providing a consistent and integrated response to complex crises would require increased coordination between the Security Council, other major United Nations bodies and agencies, the High Commissioners for Refugees and Human Rights, the international financial institutions and the International Court of Justice. Many members pointed to the growing cooperation between the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council as an example of what could be accomplished through joint efforts, and noted in particular the contribution being made by the ad hoc advisory groups on Burundi and Guinea-Bissau.

¹⁶ S/PV.4980, pp. 14-16.

To improve the synergy within the United Nations system, the representative of France suggested that the Special Representatives of the Secretary General might be involved at an earlier stage of the planning for peacekeeping missions, together with those in charge of humanitarian action and development. He further recommended that the Secretariat, United Nations agencies and international financial institutions define a framework that could then be applied according to specific situations, and added that broadly devised political and administrative follow-up mechanisms would also be critical.¹⁷ The representative of Brazil encouraged the General Assembly to play a larger role in considering the general principles of cooperation in the maintenance of international peace and security, in drawing the attention of the Security Council to situations likely to endanger peace and security, and in promoting political cooperation, and he urged that appropriate recommendations be made to that effect. He further called for an updating of the working methods of the General Assembly and its revitalization through greater use of Articles 10, 11 and 13 of the Charter.¹⁸ The representatives of Spain and the United Kingdom advocated greater use of Article 65 of the Charter, whereby the Economic and Social Council may furnish information to, and assist, the Security Council upon its request.¹⁹ The representative of Pakistan indicated that he would be circulating a non-paper outlining his earlier proposal for ad hoc composite committees of the three principal United Nations organs.²⁰

Council members were virtually unanimous in stressing the indissoluble link between development and the resolution of complex crises. Contending that economic reconstruction had not been stressed enough in Security Council resolutions, the representative of Algeria called for development to be made as integral a part of United Nations missions as humanitarian and human rights dimensions had become.²¹ Noting that there was no universally applicable formula for addressing complex crises, members emphasized that any solution must be tailored to local conditions, varying cultures and historical backgrounds. The representative of China stressed that the will of the people concerned should be respected and their views fully sought.²² The representatives of the United States and Germany similarly held that the potential contribution to be made by civil society and national Governments affected should not be underestimated, but rather their capacity for response should be strengthened.²³

Most speakers referred to the contribution to be made by regional organizations in responding to complex crises, the representative of Brazil opining that, because such organizations were closer to the source of conflict, they were in a better position than the United Nations to detect the early symptoms of conflict and act promptly.²⁴ The representative of China urged the Security Council to seek the views of regional organizations on a wider basis and to share information with them, and further suggested that the special envoys of the Secretary-General and the African Union and other regional organizations should undertake joint good offices and mediation efforts.²⁵ A number of speakers stated that regional organizations should be given sufficient financial assistance to enhance their capacities for early warning and peacekeeping.

49. Items relating to the role of regional and subregional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security

A. Cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in stabilization processes

Initial proceedings

Decision of 20 July 2004 (5007th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5007th meeting, on 20 July 2004,¹ the Security Council held a thematic debate on the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in stabilization processes", presided over by the Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Minister of Romania. All Council members made statements, as did the representatives of Mexico and the Netherlands, the Secretary-General, the Commissioner for Peace, Security and Political Affairs of the African Union, the Deputy Director-General of European Security and Defence Policy of the European Union, the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, the Chairperson of the Standing Committee of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), the Deputy Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), the Deputy Executive Secretary of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), the Permanent Observer of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Bulgaria and Chairman-in-Office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), the representative of the Chair of the African Union and the representative of the Chair of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS).

The President (Romania) drew attention to a letter dated 8 July 2004 transmitting a non-paper prepared by the presidency to help guide the discussion. The focus was primarily on the enhancement of cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in stabilization processes.²

The Secretary-General reaffirmed the need to create a network of effective and mutually reinforcing regional and global mechanisms that would be both flexible and responsive to current peace and security challenges. He noted that the United Nations currently was cooperating with regional organizations in stabilization processes in a number of countries, because regional organizations were swifter to deploy on the ground than the United Nations. However, since not all regional organizations could sustain their deployments over a long period, United Nations operations were often needed for longer-term sustainability. While enhancing cooperation, one had to consider more thoroughly the comparative strengths of different organizations and start creating strategic partnerships. He advocated a shift from ad hoc cooperation towards more institutionalized channels.³

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Mexico underlined the growing importance of regional organizations as United Nations partners in the prevention, management and settlement of conflicts, as well as in peacebuilding and stabilization processes. He believed that, based on complementarity, more rational and effective use of the comparative advantages of each organization could be made. He suggested that the Council, when renewing peacekeeping operation mandates, include elements that promoted long-term stability. He urged the identification of innovative forms of cooperation with the United Nations.⁴

The representatives of regional organizations, in their statements, focused on the regional efforts of their respective organizations, their cooperation with the United Nations system, as well as prospects for future collaboration.

Speakers unanimously affirmed the need to reinforce the collaboration between the United Nations and regional organizations, as well as build strategic partnerships. Most speakers were also of the view that the international security framework as defined in the Charter of the United Nations should be adapted to better address new challenges, such as internal conflicts, the existence of “failed States”, terrorism, the spread of weapons of mass destruction, the trafficking in small arms and organized crime. Many specifically recognized that, in this context, regional organizations were increasingly becoming partners to the United Nations because of the need to adopt a regional approach to crises.⁵ The representative of France noted that, given the growing needs in peacekeeping, regional organizations had a pivotal role to play in backing the United Nations.⁶ This was echoed by the representative of Chile, who said that the increase in demands related to peacekeeping had exceeded the capacity of the United Nations, and added that association and cooperation with regional organizations were one way of enhancing the legitimacy of actions to maintain peace and security.⁷

While supporting the need for stronger partnership, however, several speakers called for a flexible and pragmatic approach to regional cooperation as regional arrangements had various configurations.⁸ The representative of Germany stated that the division of labour could only be successful if the following conditions were met: all relevant actors were involved, one actor took the lead in integrated planning and coordinated implementation, and funding problems were resolved.⁹

While reaffirming the prominent role provided to regional organizations in Chapter VIII of the Charter, many speakers insisted on the principle of complementarity with respect to the relationship between regional organizations and the Security Council.¹⁰ Others emphasized the principle of subsidiarity — namely, that regional organizations were expected to react to a regional conflict first and that United Nations peacekeeping operations would be deployed only in the face of an increased threat that could not be dealt with through regional mobilization alone.¹¹ The representative of France stated that it was “certainly not desirable” for the United Nations to always be called on to come to the rescue.¹²

Several speakers emphasized that the prerogatives of the Council should be preserved and the division of labour rationalized, as the Council remained the chief forum for international conflict management.¹³ The representative of Benin, echoed by a few others, stressed the relevance of the principle enshrined in Article 53 of the Charter that Council authorization was a prerequisite to enforcement action by regional organizations. He however added that a strategy for more effective interaction should be established on the basis of the comparative advantage that regional organizations could offer in view of their capacity to intervene more rapidly in threatening situations.¹⁴ This was supported by several speakers.¹⁵ The representative of the United States added that although a regional troop contributor might share a common understanding with the host country, it might also have its own agenda. He urged caution in this regard, given the goal of long-term regional peace and stability.¹⁶

A large number of speakers urged more periodic dialogue between the United Nations and regional organizations with the aim of strengthening the relationship and welcomed the practice of high-level meetings of the Secretariat with heads of regional organizations.¹⁷ The representative of China also recalled that regional organizations were required under the Charter to maintain close contact with the Security Council on their initiatives and actions.¹⁸

Several speakers said that the United Nations should provide logistical and financial support as well as personnel and training to regional organizations.¹⁹ The representative of the United States also urged the provision of rapid response capabilities.²⁰ This was echoed by the representative of ECOWAS, who added that his organization's policy on conflict resolution and management was actually geared towards creating rapid response and sustained peacekeeping capabilities.²¹

A number of speakers made specific recommendations. The representative of Chile encouraged the incorporation of the vision of regional organizations into Security Council debates relating to Chapter VI and Chapter VII of the Charter. He also urged the Secretariat to support and coordinate the activities of regional organizations, including coordination and facilitation of resources from international financial bodies to enhance response capacity at the regional level.²²

The representative of the European Union specifically asked to whether the assistance of the European Union in force generation or bridging operations in support of United Nations operations would come at the expense of traditional contributions by European Union members to United Nations-led operations. He further noted that, with stagnant defence budgets, the number of deployable police and military troops under United Nations command was too limited given the increasing demand. However, if there was political will, this could be overcome.²³

At the end of the meeting, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Acknowledged the important role that could be played by regional organizations in the prevention, resolution and management of conflicts, including by addressing their root causes;

[Noted that Member States and heads of regional organizations] stressed their interest in enhancing cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security, and considered that regular dialogue on specific issues between the Council and regional organizations would bring significant added value;

Invited the Secretary-General to give consideration to the relevant views expressed in the debate preparation of the next high-level meeting;

Invited regional organizations to take the necessary steps to increase collaboration with the United Nations in order to maximize efficiency in stabilization processes;

Also invited all Members of the United Nations to contribute to the strengthening of the capacity of regional and subregional organizations.

B. Cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in maintaining international peace and security

Initial proceedings

Decision of 17 October 2005 (5282nd meeting): resolution 1631 (2005)

At its 5282nd meeting, on 17 October 2005,²⁵ the Security Council held a thematic debate on "Cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in maintaining international peace and security" and included in its agenda a letter from the representative of Romania, transmitting a discussion paper prepared by the presidency for the debate.²⁶ The paper noted that the purpose of the debate was to find ways to enhance the relationship of the United Nations with regional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security, in particular in conflict management and post-conflict stabilization, and identified key discussion points to be addressed.

At the meeting, chaired by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Romania, all Council members made statements, in addition to the Secretary-General, the Acting Executive Secretary and representative of the Chairperson of the African Union Commission, the Chairman of the New York Committee of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, the Deputy Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Commonwealth of Independent States, the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe, the representative of the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs and Security Policy of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, the Assistant Secretary-General of the Organization of American States and the Secretary-General of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. The representative of Greece made a statement on behalf of the Chairman-in-Office of the South-East European Cooperation Process.

The President (Romania), speaking in his national capacity, said that his country had taken up the issue of cooperation with regional organizations because the regional dimension was a hallmark of its long-standing foreign policy. He expressed his country's conviction that the right degree of "complementarity" and "subsidiarity" between the United Nations and regional action could generate a pool of resources assigned to peace and security.²⁷

The Secretary-General emphasized the dramatic growth in the range and types of partnerships between regional organizations and the United Nations, in the peacekeeping and peacemaking fields, such as the transition from regional to United Nations peacekeeping operations, the provision of support to United Nations operations, the coordination of separate missions side by side and the provision of United Nations support to operations of regional organizations.²⁸

Most speakers agreed that cooperation with regional organizations should be strengthened, including through a closer working partnership with the Security Council and through a more structured approach in the areas of democracy, development, security, conflict prevention and peacebuilding. They also favoured the strengthening of institutional cooperation and information-sharing. Most speakers welcomed the creation of the Peacebuilding Commission, the 2005 World Summit Outcome and the sixth high-level meeting of the United Nations and regional organizations as positive steps towards increased cooperation.

Representatives of regional organizations elaborated on their respective activities in connection with their relationship with the United Nations, and highlighted their comparative advantages for maintaining regional peace and security. The existence of these unique advantages for regional organizations in dealing with regional issues and for identifying the root causes of conflicts were recognized by many speakers.²⁹ The representative of Brazil added that regional organizations were also key players in involving civil society in peacebuilding.³⁰

A number of suggestions were made regarding the need to reinforce the partnership between the United Nations and regional organizations. Some speakers proposed the establishment of a framework agreement with the United Nations.³¹ The representative of OAS suggested that the Security Council should consider inviting regional organizations on an annual basis to present key findings from their respective peacebuilding and post-conflict initiatives.³² The representatives of CIS and Greece urged closer cooperation in the political and military spheres as these areas were brought into play in the peacekeeping and stabilization processes.³³ The representative of Japan, echoed by others, welcomed the increased involvement of regional organizations in the work of the Security Council, such as briefings by regional organizations to the Security Council on their activities and the holding of meetings with regional organizations during the Security Council's mission to the field; and called for a stronger role of regional organizations in peacekeeping missions through the development of rapid deployment capacities.³⁴ The representative of the Philippines suggested that the United Nations enhance its support to regional seminars on peacebuilding and conflict prevention.³⁵ The representative of the United Kingdom, and some other speakers, advocated the sharing of early warning information by the United Nations and regional organizations.³⁶

The representative of Brazil warned against overstressing the limited resources of some of the regional organizations and said that, in strengthening cooperation with them, one should be mindful of their respective competences.³⁷ The representative of Algeria deplored the insufficient resources and sometimes lack of political will on the part of Member States in helping regional organizations to build their own capacity for intervention.³⁸ This was echoed by the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania, who called on the United Nations to support standby arrangements,³⁹ and the representatives of the European Union and Benin, who urged capacity-building for regional organizations.⁴⁰ The representative of China, echoed by the representatives of Denmark and Japan, pointed out that more attention was needed for Africa, as many issues on the Council's agenda related to that continent.⁴¹

The issue of improving cooperation through the development of a mechanism for coordination in stabilization processes and post-conflict peacebuilding was also raised.⁴² Some speakers called for a flexible approach to cooperation between the two sides as regional situations varied greatly.⁴³ Some speakers reaffirmed that the Security Council remained at the heart of the international machinery for collective security and that the Council had the prerogative to sanction the use of force by the international community.⁴⁴

At the end of the debate, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1631 (2005), by which it, inter alia:

Expressed its determination to take appropriate steps for the further development of cooperation between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations in maintaining international peace and security;

Urged all States and relevant international organizations to contribute to strengthening the capacity of regional and subregional organizations, in particular of African regional and subregional organizations;

Stressed the importance for the United Nations of developing the ability of regional and subregional organizations to deploy peacekeeping forces rapidly in support of United Nations peacekeeping operations or other operations mandated by the Security Council;

Stressed the potential role of regional and subregional organizations in addressing the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons;

Reiterated the need to encourage regional cooperation;

Welcomed the efforts undertaken by its subsidiary bodies with responsibilities in counter-terrorism to foster cooperation with regional and subregional organizations;

Expressed its intention to hold regular meetings, as appropriate, with heads of regional and subregional organizations in order to strengthen the interaction and cooperation with those organizations in maintaining international peace and security;

Recommended better communication between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations;

Reiterated the obligation for regional organizations, under Article 54 of the Charter, to keep the Council fully informed of their activities for the maintenance of international peace and security;

Invited the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council on the opportunities and challenges facing the cooperation between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations in maintaining international peace and security;

Requested the Secretary-General to include, in his regular reporting to the Council on peacekeeping and peacebuilding operations, assessments of progress on the cooperation between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations.

Decision of 20 September 2006 (5529th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5529th meeting, on 20 September 2006,⁴⁵ the Council held a thematic debate at the ministerial level on cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in maintaining international peace and security. All Council members made statements, in addition to the Secretary-General, the representative of the presidency of the European Union, the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, the Chairman of the New York Committee of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, the Chairman-in-Office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Commonwealth of Independent States, the Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Secretary-General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, the Secretary-General of the Collective Security Treaty Organization and the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe.⁴⁶

The meeting was presided over by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Greece, who drew attention to the report of the Secretary-General dated 28 July 2006 on a regional-global security partnership: challenges and opportunities.⁴⁷ In the report, the Secretary-General made a number of recommendations to strengthen cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other intergovernmental organizations in the fields of conflict prevention, peacemaking, peacekeeping, peacebuilding, disarmament and non-proliferation. On the nature of the overall partnership between the United Nations and regional organizations, the Secretary-General suggested that, as an initial step, partner organizations should consider entering into agreements on a general statement of principles as this could provide a guiding mechanism for future collaboration with and between all signatories and the United Nations.

The President also drew attention to a letter dated 6 September 2006 from the representative of Greece, transmitting a background paper prepared by the presidency to help guide the discussion.⁴⁸ The paper suggested discussion points, including the identification of partner organizations — regional organizations acting under Chapter VIII of the Charter and intergovernmental organizations acting under other provisions of the Charter, as well as Council assistance to operations of regional organizations.

Speaking in his national capacity, the President of the Council welcomed the opportunity to discuss developments that took place since the adoption of resolution 1631 (2005) and the vision of creating a regional-global security mechanism. He said that greater involvement by international organizations in conflict prevention and management was required and that this could increase the legitimacy of the Council itself. Finally, he highlighted the need to clarify the membership and the mandate of regional and other organizations to ensure a clearer collective effort.⁴⁹

The Secretary-General specifically stressed the need for further cooperation between the Security Council and regional organizations. He noted several recent positive developments such as the six high-level meetings with heads of partner organizations and noted that this could pave the way for a stronger partnership. He also noted the increased emphasis on prevention and mediation and welcomed the tangible results on the ground that the involvement of regional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security had achieved. He affirmed that the regional-global partnership needed to reach a new level of clarity, practicality and seriousness.⁵⁰

All speakers recognized the need to consolidate a collective approach to peace and security issues. Most of them stressed that further involvement of African organizations in peace efforts was necessary. Many speakers shared the view that regional and subregional organizations were better placed to determine the best way of dealing with conflicts in their own regions.⁵¹ Several speakers insisted on the need to encourage regional ownership in conflict management and post-conflict processes.⁵² The representative of Qatar also noted that the interaction between the United Nations and regional organizations could even strengthen the role played by organizations in a regional context.⁵³

While recognizing that the United Nations and regional organizations had comparative advantages and unique characteristics in the areas of confidence-building, conflict prevention, crisis management and peacekeeping, many speakers urged that the partnership be based on complementarity as opposed to duplication of efforts.⁵⁴ The representative of Denmark specifically called for a practical division of labour between organizations involved in different issues.⁵⁵ While affirming that conflict prevention remained the prerogative of Member States, the representative of the Congo also welcomed the establishment of conflict prevention centres by the African Union, OSCE and the European Union.⁵⁶ Some speakers focused on the important role that regional organizations played in combating terrorism, the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and transnational crime.⁵⁷ The representative of Slovakia in particular deemed very important the cooperation of regional organizations in helping States to implement national legislation in line with resolution 1540 (2004).⁵⁸

Many speakers called for a results-based and flexible cooperation that would not remain confined to a particular mechanism as organizations were different from one another.⁵⁹ In order to determine the comparative advantages of the organizations, the representative of ASEAN suggested the conduct of a region-to-region study.⁶⁰

Another focus of the discussion was the issue of capacity-building for regional organizations. Many speakers concurred that enhancing capacity at the regional level was a good way to end or prevent conflicts, particularly in the field of regional peacekeeping.⁶¹ In this context, the representative of the Congo, speaking on behalf of the Chairman of the African Union, recalled that in order to strengthen its capacity for intervention through standby arrangements, the African Union had called for the establishment of five brigades of 3,500 to 5,000 men by the year 2010. He expressed the hope that the international community would support that initiative.⁶² The representative of Ghana, however, expressed concern at existing weaknesses in the planning and management capabilities and at inadequate financial resources that were plaguing regionally-led peacekeeping operations.⁶³

While speakers were unanimous in their call to reinforce the partnership, the representative of China, echoed by the representative of the Collective Security Treaty Organization, held that the basic principle underlying this partnership should be to ensure that the Security Council played a leading role.⁶⁴ Others recalled that interventions by regional organizations in conflicts must be done under the legitimate authority of the Security Council.⁶⁵ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania also affirmed that it was the Security Council's prerogative to advance the cooperation with regional organizations to a higher level.⁶⁶

The representative of Ghana expressed concern at the recent lack of cooperation by a few members of the African Union with the United Nations. He called for an end of the restrictions placed on the work of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea and for the rapid deployment of a United Nations presence in Darfur as, he added, regional entities "have an obligation to strengthen the hand of the United Nations in peacekeeping" by ensuring that international peace efforts are not obstructed.⁶⁷ For his part, the representative of OIC said that it was necessary to move away from the "mono-dimensional" approach to tackling crises, looking solely at the security element, and instead concentrate on root causes of conflicts such as political grievances.⁶⁸

Many speakers called for more systematic interaction between regional organizations and the Security Council.⁶⁹ While the representative of the Russian Federation believed that it was urgent to hold regular meetings of the Secretary-General and the leaders of regional organizations,⁷⁰ the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania, echoed by others, suggested an institutionalized approach to allow for more substantive and regularized cooperation.⁷¹ By contrast, the representative of the United States believed that increased cooperation between the Security Council, the Secretariat and regional organizations should remain informal so as not to “detract from the important relationship among the Member States within the United Nations”, and feared that an institutionalized cooperation could limit the United Nations ability in a time of crisis.⁷² Similarly, the representative of the European Union considered that flexibility, pragmatism and light structures should define the cooperation.⁷³

The representative of Argentina contended that organizations needed to define themselves in terms of the Charter provisions under which they operated.⁷⁴ The representative of the Congo noted that only after determining the nature and capacity for action of regional organizations would it be possible to define their operational scope of action. He then suggested that international, regional and subregional organizations be asked to conclude a formal agreement with the Secretary-General on their cooperation with the United Nations.⁷⁵ The representative of the Council of Europe warned however against attempts to categorize organizations that could not be categorized.⁷⁶

At the end of the debate, the President of the Council issued a statement on behalf of the Council,⁷⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Recalled its previous relevant resolutions and the statements by its President on cooperation with regional and subregional organizations and its three previous meetings on the subject, held on 11 April 2003 under the presidency of Mexico and on 20 July 2004 and 17 October 2005 under the presidency of Romania;

Stressed the benefits of closer cooperation with regional and subregional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the brokering of peace agreements in conflict situations; in this regard, it had agreed, in the recently adopted note by the President,⁷⁸ to expand consultation and cooperation with regional and subregional organizations by inviting relevant regional and subregional organizations to participate in the public and private meetings of the Council, when appropriate; continuing to consult informally with regional and subregional organizations when drafting resolutions, presidential statements and press statements; and by drawing the attention of representatives of regional and subregional organizations to relevant resolutions, presidential statements and press statements;

Encouraged regional and subregional organizations to convey their perspectives and analysis to the Council prior to its examination of regionally relevant agenda items;

Invited the Secretariat and regional and subregional organizations to explore further information-sharing on respective capabilities and lessons learned in peacekeeping by expanding the scope of the website of the Peacekeeping Best Practices Section of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations to cover the deployment experiences of all regional and subregional organizations and all experiences of cooperation in peacekeeping between the United Nations and those organizations;

Urged the Secretariat and United Nations agencies, as well as all States and other relevant international organizations, to continue their efforts to contribute to the capacity-building of regional and subregional organizations, in particular of the African Union and African subregional organizations;

[Stated that it] intended to consider further steps to promote closer and more operational cooperation between the United Nations and regional, subregional and other intergovernmental organizations participating in the high-level meetings convened by the Secretary-General, in particular in the field of conflict prevention, peacebuilding and peacekeeping.

C. Relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations, in particular the African Union, in the maintenance of international peace and security

Initial proceedings

Decision of 28 March 2007 (5649th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5649th meeting, on 28 March 2007,⁷⁹ presided over by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa, the Security Council held a thematic debate on the item entitled “Relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations, in particular the African Union, in the maintenance of international peace and security”. The Council first heard briefings by the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations and the Commissioner for Peace and Security of the African Union. In addition to all Council members, statements were made by the representatives of Algeria, Australia, Benin, Burkina Faso, Egypt, Germany (on behalf of the European Union), Japan, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Namibia, Norway, Rwanda, the Sudan, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay and Viet Nam, the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States and the Permanent Observer of the Organization of the Islamic Conference.

The President (South Africa) drew attention to a letter dated 14 March 2007 from the representative of South Africa,⁸⁰ transmitting a concept paper for the open debate. The paper recognized that regional organizations must play an important role in the maintenance of international peace and security, and that the relationship between the Security Council and the African Union Peace and Security Council needed to be strengthened. It also noted that the African Union had initiated its own missions in Burundi, Darfur and Somalia, as United Nations interventions had sometimes taken a long time to operationalize even after being authorized by the Security Council, but that further action by the African Union had been hampered by lack of resources.

Opening the debate, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa hoped that her country could contribute to better articulation and clarification of the issue of strengthening cooperation with regional organizations under Chapter VIII of the Charter, which had been reiterated at the most recent summit of the African Union and at the 2005 World Summit. She highlighted the positive synergies between the United Nations and regional organizations from ad hoc arrangements to co-deployment of peacekeeping operations. For instance, the African Union had been able to intervene in situations where rapid deployment by the United Nations was impossible, sometimes with retrospective endorsement by the Security Council. A key question to be addressed was then how the decisions of the African Union Peace and Security Council could relate to those of the Security Council as they had complementary agendas. She insisted on the need for more “predictability” and for a clearer form of “burden-sharing”.⁸¹

The Assistant Secretary-General stressed that Chapter VIII of the Charter provided clear guidance for the relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations. Affirming that the partnership with the African Union was among the most intense of all peacekeeping partnerships, he highlighted the development of a joint action plan to guide this partnership with the ultimate goal of operationalizing the African standby force by 2010. Noting the enhanced cooperation between the African Union and the United Nations in Somalia and Darfur, he believed that in the future African countries would be able to play an even greater role in peacekeeping operations and that the Security Council had a vital role to play in facilitating partnerships.⁸²

Pointing to the African Union’s request for United Nations funding for African Union peacekeeping operations, the Commissioner for Peace and Security of the Africa Union observed that the African Union had the right to intervene in its Member States. He argued that, with Security Council approval, the African Union would feel that it was acting on behalf of the international community, and stressed that ad hoc arrangements could not replace the mechanism in Chapter VIII of the Charter. He called for a revision of the rules for the United Nations peacekeeping budgets to that end and hoped that the Security Council would establish a follow-up mechanism to pursue this question.⁸³

Most speakers welcomed the growing contributions by the African Union and the resolve of its leaders to address and solve conflicts on the African continent. The memorandum of understanding of November 2006 between the United Nations and the African Union was widely welcomed and received as a foundation for a more formal cooperation mechanism. Speakers also reiterated their support for the World Summit Outcome,⁸⁴ which recognized the important role of regional organizations in contributing to stabilizing conflict situations due to their proximity to conflict zones.

While many speakers stressed that regional arrangements would not substitute for the Council's primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security,⁸⁵ the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya noted that there could be no question of eliminating the regional role so as to replace it with an international role, and insisted that the United Nations and regional organizations had a joint responsibility for maintaining peace and preventing armed conflict.⁸⁶

Speakers agreed that regional organizations could play an important role in helping the Council to fulfil this responsibility. The representative of France, in particular, noted that the Council had benefited from the efforts made by regional organizations in terms of managing crises in Africa and deploying peacekeeping forces there.⁸⁷ Most speakers underlined the need to strengthen cooperation with regional organizations in the areas of planning and management of conflict situations, including conflict prevention and peacebuilding, as well as in training, logistical support and financial assistance. While the representative of the Sudan called for an effective strategic partnership limited to the provisions of Chapter VIII,⁸⁸ the representative of Uruguay noted that it would be difficult under Chapter VIII to maintain peacekeeping operations with contributions only by regional organizations.⁸⁹ The representative of Germany drew attention to the European Union's financial support for African Union peace operations and urged the United Nations to provide similar assistance.⁹⁰ The representative of the United States stressed that United Nations assessed contributions should only be used for United Nations-mandated operations, under the Security Council and well-established United Nations command and control mechanisms.⁹¹

Commenting on the challenges facing the United Nations and the African Union, the representative of the Congo, echoed by the representative of Ghana, stressed that more coherence was needed in joint actions in conflict prevention and resolution, arguing that the cost of prevention was far less than the cost of peacekeeping.⁹² Several speakers underlined the urgent need for more capacity-building of the African Union to deal with crisis situations like Darfur and Somalia. In this regard, many urged President Al-Bashir to extend full cooperation to the United Nations and the African Union in their joint efforts to bring lasting peace and stability to the Sudan.⁹³ The representative of the United Kingdom further noted that the Council should accelerate action on Zimbabwe, to match that of the African Union.⁹⁴ The representative of the Sudan stressed that the United Nations and the African Union needed to overcome regional technical and logistical shortcomings and that the expertise and capacities of regional organizations should be the focus of the discussion.⁹⁵

On improving the relationship between the United Nations and the African Union, many speakers encouraged the development of an institutional relationship between the Security Council and the African Union Peace and Security Council.⁹⁶ While the representative of China insisted on the need for the United Nations to boost the training of personnel to ensure that African Union peace missions were able to play their unique role,⁹⁷ the representative of Namibia proposed that the United Nations and the African Union enter into an agreement that would provide for a defined time frame for the transformation of regional peacekeeping operations to United Nations missions, so as to avoid putting pressure on regional organizations to continue running such missions with limited logistical and financial resources.⁹⁸ The representative of Algeria welcomed the fact that the Security Council took into account the viewpoint and the decisions of the African Union in the decisions it must take relating to African conflicts and hoped this could continue.⁹⁹

Some speakers affirmed that, in the end, the best way to guarantee effective international action was to maintain a credible African standby force which could be deployed rapidly. They urged more efforts to ready the force by 2010.¹⁰⁰

At the end of the meeting, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

Recognized the important role of regional organizations in the prevention, management and resolution of conflicts in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter, and recalled that that cooperation between the United Nations and the regional arrangements was an integral part of collective security;

Recognized that regional organizations were well positioned to understand the root causes of many conflicts closer to home and to influence the prevention or resolution, owing to their knowledge of the region;

Urged the Secretary-General, in consultation and in cooperation with the relevant regional and subregional bodies, to resolve regional conflicts in Africa by using existing United Nations capacities as effectively as possible; to support regional early warning and mediation, in particular in Africa; to assess the risk of conflict at regional level and prioritize those areas of highest risk; and to highlight possible methods at a regional level in combating illegal exploitation and trafficking of natural resources;

Invited further collaboration with the Peace and Security Council of the African Union in order to help to build the latter's capacity to undertake, inter alia, rapid and appropriate responses to emerging situations and to develop effective strategies for conflict prevention, peacekeeping and peacebuilding.

D. The role of regional and subregional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security

Initial proceedings

Decision of 6 November 2007 (5776th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5776th meeting, on 6 November 2007,¹⁰² the Security Council held an open debate on the item entitled "The role of regional and subregional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security", presided over by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Indonesia. In addition to all Council members, statements were made by the Secretary-General, the representatives of Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Benin, Guatemala, Guinea, Honduras, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan (on behalf of the Collective Security Treaty Organization), Malaysia, Norway, the Philippines, Portugal (on behalf of the European Union), Singapore, Solomon Islands, Spain, Thailand, Uruguay and Viet Nam, the League of Arab States, the Organization of the Islamic Conference and the African Union.

The President first drew attention to a letter dated 29 October 2007 from the representative of Indonesia,¹⁰³ transmitting a concept paper on the item under consideration. The concept paper suggested that the discussion focus, among other subjects, on the current capacities of the regional and subregional organizations in the fields of promotion of dialogue and confidence-building measures, norms-shaping and sharing, conflict prevention, conflict resolution, peacemaking, peacekeeping and post-conflict peacebuilding, with the aim of determining how best practices drawn from the experiences of regional organizations could be shared and made useful to resolving local conflicts.

The Secretary-General noted that partnerships between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations were stronger than ever. Commenting on their comparative advantages, he suggested that those organizations could help the United Nations to respond to crises and provide lessons for the future. In that regard, he said that his proposals to strengthen the Departments of Political Affairs and Peacekeeping Operations would enhance the United Nations capability to work with regional organizations as well as improve the mediation capacity of the Secretariat.¹⁰⁴

Speakers unanimously agreed that stronger partnership could only be beneficial in resolving issues related to peace and security. While reaffirming that the primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security rested with the Security Council, speakers believed that, because of their comparative advantages, regional organizations had a role to play in all stages of peacekeeping, peacebuilding, conflict prevention and conflict resolution, and were better suited to address root causes of conflicts. Some delegations supported, inter alia, the provision of financial and logistical assistance to regional organizations engaged in conflict resolution as well as capacity-building; the institutionalization of cooperation not only between the United Nations and the regional organizations but also among the regional organizations themselves; improving mediation capacities of regional organizations; the central coordinating role of the United Nations between various regional organizations; and encouraging regional organizations to also become involved in issues that did not pose a threat to international peace and security. Many speakers also reaffirmed that interaction with regional and subregional organizations must follow the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter.

Divergent views were sometimes expressed regarding the institutionalization of the relations between the United Nations and regional organizations and the creation of structured funding mechanisms,¹⁰⁵ as opposed to creating pragmatic and flexible synergies and specific coordination mechanisms on a case-by-case basis.¹⁰⁶

At the end of the meeting, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Recognized the important role of regional and subregional organizations in the prevention, management and resolution of conflicts;

Emphasized that the growing contribution made by regional and subregional organizations in cooperation with United Nations could usefully support the work of the Organization in maintaining international peace and security;

Recalled its determination to take appropriate steps to further the development of cooperation between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations in maintaining international peace and security;

Encouraged regional and subregional organizations to strengthen and increase cooperation among them, and underlined the importance of the United Nations political support and technical expertise in this regard;

Encouraged regional cooperation, including through the involvement of regional and subregional organizations in the peaceful settlement of disputes, and intended to consult closely with them on their role in future peacekeeping operations as well as political and integrated missions authorized by the Council;

Stressed the need to develop effective partnership between the Council and regional and subregional organizations in order to enable early response to disputes and emerging crises;

Underlined the importance of exploring the potential and existing capacities of regional and subregional organizations in the field of peace and security;

Stressed the potential role of regional and subregional organizations in addressing the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons and the need to take into account in the mandates

50. Civilian aspects of conflict management and peacebuilding

Initial proceedings

Decision of 22 September 2004 (5041st meeting): statement by the President

At its 5041st meeting, on 22 September 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled “Civilian aspects of conflict management and peacebuilding” a letter dated 8 September 2004 from the representative of Spain to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,¹ transmitting a discussion paper on the topic. Statements were made by the Secretary-General, the Commissioner for Peace and Security of the African Union, the High Representative for the European Union Common Foreign and Security Policy and the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, as well as by all members of the Council.²

In his introductory statement, the Secretary-General stressed that, for the maintenance of international peace and security, restoration of the rule of law was vital in war-torn societies. He said that in the complex business of peacebuilding, a clear political strategy that included benchmarks for progress towards building legitimate and effective States was necessary. He expressed the view that the Council’s sustained interest and focus was needed to address current challenges, since disinterest and division within the Council resulted in unfulfilled mandates and unsolved problems. Furthermore, the United Nations, other intergovernmental organizations, bilateral donors and non-governmental organizations should work more closely together on the basis of shared goals and priorities, since peacebuilding was interdependent and failure in one sector could result in failure in other sectors. In addition, in efforts at peacebuilding, a highly skilled cadre of civilian staff were needed that would include both technical experts and individuals who brought together diverse perspectives on conflict management, State-building, development and transitional justice. In regard to the security of United Nations civilian staff, the Secretary-General underlined that there must be a reasonable balance between the risks they took and the substantive contributions they were called on to make.³

The Commissioner for Peace and Security of the African Union stated that the Protocol establishing the African Union Peace and Security Council outlined its responsibilities for bringing peace, security and stability to Africa. He noted that the African Union’s limited experience in Darfur with the deployment of the African Union Mission in the Sudan had revealed the need to expand the mission to include civilian components in order to address the civilian, human rights and humanitarian aspects of the crisis. He also stressed the need to devote attention to linkages with civil society organizations. Finally, he noted that the Protocol also provided for the creation of a standby force comprising civilian and military components ready for rapid deployment at appropriate notice by 2010. However, he stressed that the African Union would rely on the continued support of the United Nations to develop the force.⁴

The High Representative for the European Union Common Foreign and Security Policy noted that civilian aspects had in recent years taken on primary importance in crisis management. In addition to the political and security dimensions of rebuilding a State, a third dimension entailed establishing institutions in which a given population could have confidence. He stated that over a very brief period the European Union had developed concepts and established structures capable of sustaining the deployment of civilian elements. He observed that the European Union's security policy architecture ensured that it was able to deploy civilian instruments in a sustained manner and, of the six operations undertaken by the European Union in recent years, three were civilian. Considering the difficulties of building up civilian personnel for deployment to crisis areas, the international community must establish mechanisms to properly train civilian staff for rapid deployment in the civilian component of crisis management operations. In addition, he affirmed that a new culture of coordination between the military and civilian components of such operations must be developed. The European Union had set up a civilian-military planning cell to encompass the planning of both aspects.⁵

The Secretary-General of the League of Arab States stated that the Council's consideration of the current item showed the importance it attached to developing the partnership of the United Nations with international and regional organizations under Chapter VIII of the Charter. Cooperation between the United Nations and the Council on the one hand, and regional organizations on the other, was fundamentally governed by the Charter and solid norms for such cooperation had been established by General Assembly resolutions and agreements. He stressed that a second fundamental principle was that threats and challenges in the international arena needed to be dealt with collectively, in a multilateral manner, addressing both civilian and political aspects, and that political solutions, not military solutions, must be the first choice in dealing with crises.⁶

Most Council members stressed the growing importance of civilian aspects of conflict management and acknowledged the importance of civil-military cooperation, as well as coordination within the United Nations system and at the regional and subregional levels. They held that an environment made safe by the military and civilian police was absolutely essential for civilian reconstruction and rehabilitation activities undertaken by civilians. Moreover, members recognized the need to improve and strengthen coordination mechanisms between military forces and civilian actors. Members expressed support for efforts to develop wider capabilities — including in the key areas of police, justice and the rule of law, preparation of electoral processes, electoral observation, civil protection and public administration — and highlighted the importance of involving local actors in policy-making processes.

Speakers called for the further development of common strategies and operational policies and urged that the civilian component of conflict management be accorded adequate and sustained support. Specifically, the representatives of Chile and Spain recommended that Member States should develop their capabilities in the areas of police and civil administration and, with a view to their possible use within the framework of peacekeeping operations, establish national registers of human and material resources.⁷ Some members called for the establishment of rapid deployment units not only for civilian police but also for judges and human rights experts.⁸

Most speakers highlighted the importance of promoting cooperation among the United Nations, its agencies and programmes, regional organizations and Member States in order to increase the availability of human and material resources for the management of the civilian aspects of peacekeeping operations. The representative of France hoped that the high-level panel established by the Secretary-General would produce concrete proposals for creating permanent mechanisms to coordinate among world and regional institutions, non-governmental organizations and the private sector.⁹ A number of representatives emphasized the need for a greater role to be given to the Economic and Social Council and to improve cooperation between it and the Security Council,¹⁰ while the representative of Pakistan reiterated the proposal by his Government for establishing ad hoc composite committees of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.¹¹

Several speakers recognized the importance of an efficient civilian police force, emphasizing that, while military peacekeepers can help to stabilize a post-conflict country, the establishment of a competent, impartial and adequately resourced civilian police mission was crucial to maintaining security. The representative of the United States believed that civilian police should be linked with assistance to the judicial and penal systems, lest policing become nothing more than a continuation of the peacekeeping function.¹²

The President (Spain) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹³ which read, in part:

The Security Council met at the ministerial level on 22 September 2004 to consider “Civilian aspects of conflict management and peacebuilding”;

Ministers recognized the increasing importance of civilian aspects of conflict management in addressing complex crisis situations and in preventing the recurrence of conflict; they affirmed the importance of conflict resolution in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter;

Ministers also acknowledged the importance of civilian-military cooperation in crisis management;

Ministers recognized the increasing role of some regional and subregional and other international organizations in crisis management;

Ministers supported the efforts by Member States to continue to develop their own civilian crisis management capabilities, and they also supported their initiatives to make those capabilities available to United Nations and other relevant regional or subregional organizations, as a contribution to their efforts in the maintenance of international peace and security.

51. Items relating to the rule of law

A. Justice and the rule of law: the United Nations role

Decision of 6 October 2004 (5052nd meeting): statement by the President

At its 5052nd meeting, on 6 October 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the rule of law and transitional justice in conflict and post-conflict societies.¹ In his report, the Secretary-General highlighted that justice, peace and democracy were not mutually exclusive objectives, but were rather mutually reinforcing imperatives. He advocated for truth commissions, vetting processes, reparation programmes, international norms and standards, and providing the necessary resources to support such programmes. He underlined the particular ability of the Security Council to refer situations to the International Criminal Court, “even in cases where the countries concerned are not States parties to the Statute of the Court”, and encouraged the further ratification of its Statute. Finally, he emphasized that strengthening United Nations support would require enhancing coordination among all actors; developing rosters of experts and technical tools; keeping more systematic records; and analysing and applying those lessons in Security Council mandates, peace processes and the operations of United Nations peace missions.

At the same meeting, the Council heard briefings by the Secretary-General, the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on the Prevention of Genocide and Director of the International Centre for Transitional Justice, and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme; following which statements were made by all Council members and the representatives of Argentina, Australia, Austria,

Belarus, Burundi, Canada, Costa Rica, Fiji, Finland, India, Indonesia, Japan, Jordan, Liechtenstein, Mexico, the Netherlands (on behalf of the European Union),² Nigeria, Peru, the Republic of Korea, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sierra Leone, Singapore, South Africa, Sweden, Switzerland and Uganda and the Permanent Observer of Palestine.

The Secretary-General said that peace and stability could prevail only if the “causes of conflict” were addressed in a “legitimate and fair manner”. He suggested that the approach to justice needed to be comprehensive, including the police, prisons and courts, and that a nationally determined combination of mechanisms would generally work better, including traditional justice mechanisms, where appropriate. He commented that while international or mixed tribunals had brought a measure of justice, they had also been expensive and had not contributed adequately to building sustainable national capacity for the administration of justice.³

The Special Adviser on the Prevention of Genocide and Director of the International Centre for Transitional Justice affirmed that atrocities were often met “by de jure or de facto impunity”, but there could be no transition to a more humane, just and democratic order unless impunity was broken through prosecution, trial, and eventual punishment. He stressed that reconciliation needed to be viewed as the ultimate object and condition of the legitimacy of efforts to achieve transitional justice. He commended the report’s rejection of amnesty for international crimes such as genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity. He expressed the view that it was important for future peacemaking to end the “easy resort to blackmail” embodied in the “promise of loose amnesties and other rewards for atrocities”. He suggested that the Security Council could play a large role in enhancing the legitimacy of this evolving doctrine. He therefore recalled that, when international tribunals were created under Chapter VII of the Charter, there was an explicit obligation on the part of all Member States to cooperate with their investigations, detentions and evidence-gathering, and, even when not acting under Chapter VII, the Council could explicitly mandate cooperation with mixed or hybrid courts and the International Criminal Court.⁴

The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme said that the rule of law was “too important to be left to lawyers”, but needed to be rooted in the social and political context of a nation. He observed that international assistance needed to aim at building indigenous support for reform, and in particular the United Nations needed to facilitate negotiations among national stakeholders in order to build a political will for rule of law reform.⁵

Most delegations welcomed the report of the Secretary-General and endorsed its recommendations. Many participants expressed support for, inter alia, effective integration of justice and rule of law elements in United Nations missions and mandates; local consultation and ownership; addressing the causes of conflict; the formulation of a list of experts as well as the provision of necessary financial resources; the establishment of international tribunals, including the International Criminal Court; further cooperation with regional organizations and non-governmental organizations; promotion of international standards; and reinforcing capacity-building. A number of representatives urged the Executive Committee on Peace and Security to focus on possible institutional changes. Several speakers welcomed the relationship agreement on cooperation and consultation between the United Nations and the International Criminal Court and urged those States that had not yet done so to ratify the Rome Statute.

The representatives of Germany, Finland and Jordan said there was a need to create a new entity within the United Nations Secretariat, enabling the United Nations to operate more effectively in the area of the rule of law and transitional justice.⁶ The representative of the Russian Federation, while not rejecting the idea of establishing a new coordinating structure within the United Nations on issues relating to the rule of law and transitional justice, suggested that increasing the number of bureaucratic mechanisms did not always lead to enhanced functioning and effectiveness of the system. He therefore urged the Executive Committee on Peace and Security to focus on finding ways to improve coordination within existing mechanisms.⁷

The representative of the Philippines underlined that the religious sector was well situated to deal with community-based issues, such as justice and the rule of law. Consequently, he advocated for the creation of an inter-religious council or a specific unit on inter-faith understanding in the United Nations system.⁸

The representative of Chile believed that the report's approach to reconciliation, as an extrajudicial means of transitional justice, did not reflect the fact that reconciliation was a process.⁹

The representative of the United States stressed that his delegation did not endorse the report's embrace of the International Criminal Court, to which the United States had fundamental objections, and argued that the report did not properly respect national decisions about criminal justice, particularly sentences a particular society might deem appropriate. He expressed the view that the International Criminal Court should not have jurisdiction over citizens of States that were not parties to the Rome Statute; and that the Statute did not reflect due process of law as understood in the United States, as it, among other things, allowed multiple jeopardy and did not provide for jury trials. He argued that the Court also ran a high risk of politicization and was not accountable.¹⁰

The representative of Belarus stressed that the involvement of the Council in forming rules of international law could be justified only by exceptional and extraordinary circumstances that constituted a threat to international peace and security. He also said that the Council's practice of including in resolutions "political elements that contradict existing international law" challenged the idea of the supremacy of law.¹¹

The representative of China stressed that all parties needed to respect the Charter and the universally recognized norms of international law with regard to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the country in question, and refrain from interfering in internal disputes and differences.¹²

The representative of Uganda maintained that sovereignty should not be used as a cloak to cover gross human rights abuses by nations.¹³

The President (United Kingdom) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Urged the Secretariat to make proposals for implementation of the recommendations set out in paragraph 65 of the report of the Secretary-General;¹

Recalled the important statement made by the Secretary-General to the fifty-ninth session of the General Assembly on 21 September 2004;

Underlined the importance of assessing the particular justice and rule of law needs in each host country;

Emphasized that ending the climate of impunity was essential to the efforts of a conflict and post-conflict society to come to terms with past abuses and in preventing future abuses;

Recalled that justice and the rule of law at the international level are of key importance for promoting and maintaining peace, stability and development in the world;

Welcomed the Secretary-General's decision to make the United Nations work to strengthen the rule of law and transitional justice in conflict and post-conflict societies a priority for the remainder of his tenure; and invited the Secretary-General to keep it informed on the Secretariat's progress in taking forward the recommendations set out in paragraph 65 of the report and expressed the intention to consider the matter again within six months.

B. Strengthening international law: rule of law and maintenance of international peace and security

Initial proceedings

Decision of 22 June 2006 (5474th meeting): statement by the President transmitting a non-paper to help guide the discussion. The non-paper identified three specific issues for special attention: the promotion of the rule of law in conflict and post-conflict situations, ending impunity for international crimes, and enhancing the efficiency and credibility of United Nations sanctions regimes. The Council heard briefings by the Legal Counsel of the United Nations and the President of the International Court of Justice, following which statements were made by all Council members¹⁶ and the representatives of Austria (on behalf of the European Union),¹⁷ Azerbaijan, Canada (on behalf also of Australia and New Zealand), Egypt, Guatemala, Iraq, Liechtenstein, Mexico, Nigeria, Norway, Sierra Leone, South Africa, Switzerland and Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) and the Permanent Observer of Palestine.

The Legal Counsel recalled the imminent establishment of the Organizational Committee of the new Peacebuilding Commission, and noted that in that context the Secretariat was tasked with identifying more precisely the means it already possessed to support actions to promote the rule of law and the best way of organizing those resources effectively. With regard to the question of impunity, he pointed out that justice and peace needed to be regarded as complementary requirements. He believed that the rejection of amnesty for international crimes needed to be enshrined as a “standard to be enforced”. On the question of improving sanctions, he recalled the views of the Secretary-General concerning listing and delisting of individuals and entities on sanctions lists, who stressed that minimum standards were required to ensure that the procedures were fair and transparent, including a review by an efficient mechanism.¹⁸

The President of the International Court of Justice observed that “strengthening international law” meant, first, the widening and deepening of the content of international law; and second, the fortifying of the mechanisms for securing compliance with or enforcement of international law. She affirmed that the tool contained in Article 36 (3) of the Charter, by which the Security Council should take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the Court, needed to be brought to life and made a central policy of the Security Council.¹⁹

Most representatives expressed appreciation for the establishment of the Peacebuilding Commission and noted, inter alia, the importance of combating impunity; the Council’s referral of the situation in Darfur to the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court; and the need for analysis of the root causes of conflict. Many delegations stressed the need for temporal, fair and clear procedures for listing and delisting on sanctions as well as granting humanitarian exceptions; the establishment of a rule of law assistance unit within the Secretariat; an early-warning system to reduce the incidence of conflicts; better cooperation among United Nations units; the credible practice of the “responsibility to protect” concept; and universal jurisdiction and competence of the International Criminal Court. A few speakers urged the Secretariat to prepare a report containing proposals concerning the implementation of the recommendations in the report of the Secretary-General on the rule of law and transitional justice in conflict and post-conflict societies.²⁰ A number of representatives shared the opinion that the credibility of the Council rested on its commitment to operate within the framework of international law.

The representative of South Africa also opined that if the Council was to realize its full potential to strengthen international law and to help instil the rule of law, comprehensive reform would be required, reform that addressed both its composition and its working methods.²¹

The representative of Mexico expressed the view that all disputes between States stemmed from differences concerning the interpretation of some rule of international law. He advised the Council to refrain from taking decisions of a “legislative nature”, and rejected the validity of the argument about the “Council’s residual, implicit or subsidiary powers”.²² The representative of Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) declared that the Council needed to avoid the practice of using its authority to “impose legislative requirements on

The President (Denmark) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its commitment to the Charter of United Nations and international law; underscored its conviction that international law plays a critical role in fostering stability and order in international relations and in providing a framework for cooperation among States in addressing common challenges, thus contributing to the maintenance of international peace and security;

Emphasized the important role of the International Court of Justice, the principal judicial organ of United Nations, in adjudicating disputes among States;

Attached vital importance to promoting justice and the rule of law; supported the idea of establishing a rule of law assistance unit within the Secretariat and looked forward to receiving the proposals of the Secretariat for implementation of the recommendations set out in paragraph 65 of the report of the Secretary-General on the rule of law and transitional justice in conflict and post-conflict societies;²⁰

Emphasized the responsibility of States to comply with their obligations to end impunity and to prosecute those responsible for genocide, crimes against humanity and serious violations of international humanitarian law;

Considered sanctions an important tool in the maintenance and restoration of international peace and security; and resolved to ensure that sanctions were carefully targeted in support of clear objectives and implemented in ways that balance effectiveness against possible adverse consequences.

52. Post-conflict peacebuilding

Initial proceedings

Decision of 26 May 2005 (5187th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5187th meeting, on 26 May 2005, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled “Post-conflict peacebuilding” and a letter dated 16 May 2005 from the representative of Denmark to the Secretary-General,¹ transmitting a discussion paper for the open debate on the item.

Statements were made by all members of the Council and the Deputy Secretary-General, the President of the World Bank and the representatives of Australia, Chile, Côte d’Ivoire, Egypt, Ghana, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Luxembourg (on behalf of the European Union),² Malaysia, Morocco, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Peru, the Republic of Korea, Sierra Leone, Slovakia, South Africa, Switzerland and Ukraine.³

² Albania, Bulgaria, Croatia, Romania, Serbia and Montenegro, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkey and Ukraine aligned themselves with the statement.

³ The representative of Sweden was invited to participate but did not make a statement.

In his statement, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Denmark elaborated on some aspects of the discussion paper submitted by his country. He referred to the nexus between security and development, issues which had both to be addressed in order to build lasting peace. He saw the greatest danger of insufficient efforts in the post-crisis phase, particularly in Africa, resulting in a relapse into conflict. He said this danger could best be reduced through action in three different fields. First, in the policy field, local ownership must be ensured since the country in question and its people carried the main responsibility for their future, and a regional perspective was indispensable to address the specifics of a conflict. He therefore welcomed and encouraged the development by which regional organizations were taking on continuously greater responsibilities. Turning to the institutional field, he called for more coordination and better knowledge management between the different United Nations actors at Headquarters and in the field. Lastly, he emphasized that ensuring long-term funding was equally indispensable for successful peacebuilding.⁴

The Deputy Secretary-General said that it was essential for the United Nations to improve upon its strategies for ending wars by also tackling the question of relapse, as almost half of all wars that came to an end relapsed into violence. She stressed that it was important to ensure that peace agreements were implemented in a sustainable manner. Besides the aspects addressed by the representative of Denmark such as national ownership, a coherent United Nations approach and resource issues, she called for the involvement of international financial institutions and bilateral donors. She stated that the proposed Peacebuilding Commission would fill a gap within the United Nations system and focus attention on the vital task of peacebuilding and harmonize peacebuilding activity across the multilateral system.⁵

The Minister for Foreign Affairs and Trade of New Zealand pointed to the importance of long-term commitment if peacebuilding was to be successful. He also touched upon the need for flexibility, economic progress, cultural sensitivity including local ownership and the role of civil society. He welcomed the evolving practice of the Council to mandate “complex” missions which encompassed policing, legal, human rights, governance and development components. In a proposed Peacebuilding Commission he saw a much-needed forum to achieve greater strategic and institutional coherence.⁶

Participating via videolink, the President of the World Bank underlined that the World Bank would work closely with the Peacebuilding Commission and agreed that there was a need for such a body since it was essential to change the balance, also in financial terms, that existed between peacemaking and peacebuilding. He stressed that the World Bank recognized the interdependence it had in this regard with the United Nations. Essential for successful peacebuilding, he considered, was capacity-building, establishing a functioning legal order and financial framework and addressing the issue of corruption.⁷

Elaborating on the notion of peacebuilding, speakers agreed that peacebuilding must aim at addressing the root causes of conflicts and at preventing a relapse into conflict. Therefore, seeking a lasting settlement of conflicts and achieving sustainable peace and stability was crucial. While representatives acknowledged the efforts of the United Nations with regard to its peacekeeping activities, the limited success of the United Nations in the area of peacebuilding was made clear by a relapse into conflict. Such a relapse could oftentimes not be prevented, because of lack of coordination of all the different actors involved in the process, including a lack of coordination within the United Nations system and the lack of a single strategy.

Most speakers considered peace and development to be interlinked, and stated that actors in several fields like disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants, eradication of poverty, sustainable development, human rights and strengthening the rule of law were involved in the peacebuilding process. At the same time, speakers conceded that every conflict had specific characteristics and agreed that regional organizations must be fully involved in the process since they had the best expertise in a region. Speakers therefore supported a further strengthening of United Nations cooperation with regional organizations. The representative of Norway called for basing the division of labour between the United Nations and regional organizations on the principle of subsidiarity.⁸

Most speakers called strongly for encouraging local ownership since, according to some, the primary responsibility for peacebuilding lay with the country and the people emerging from conflict.⁹

Speakers also agreed that peacebuilding as a long-term process required not only coordination among all United Nations entities and regional and subregional organizations, but also with affected States, troop-contributing and donor countries and international financial institutions. The representative of France referred to programmes of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration included in previous Council resolutions which often had lacked coordination between the various actors and therefore had not yet achieved the hoped-for results.¹⁰ Speakers in general stated that the need for coordinating the work and the strategies could best be addressed by a future peacebuilding commission which would, as the Secretary-General had stated in his report entitled “In larger freedom”,¹¹ fill an institutional gap. With regard to the role of the Council in the peacebuilding process, several speakers made it clear that peacebuilding activities, due to their mixed nature, were not to be the Council's sole responsibility and pointed to the role of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.¹²

Some representatives made different proposals concerning the relationship between the Peacebuilding Commission and the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly as well as the functions of the Commission. The representative of Morocco called for the Peacebuilding Commission to be attached to the Council and the Economic and Social Council and possibly to the General Assembly.¹³ The representative of Egypt held that the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council should be entrusted with monitoring the work of the Commission.¹⁴ The representative of Algeria wanted the Commission to be an intermediary organ between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council that was to be "created, set up and given a mandate by the General Assembly".¹⁵ The representative of Ghana called for the Commission to be established by the General Assembly but to be put under the joint authority of the Council and the Economic and Social Council to which it should report sequentially and not jointly in order to avoid duplication. He further held that the Commission should be of an advisory nature and not have decision-making powers.¹⁶ The representative of the United States considered the Peacebuilding Commission as an advisory body operating on a consensus basis to provide expertise and a coordination capacity to the principal United Nations bodies. He opined that as long as the security of a country was on its agenda, the Security Council should be the body that invoked the Commission's structure, wisdom and capacity, and that once the Council determined that a post-conflict situation no longer required its oversight, the Commission could so inform other agencies and organs.¹⁷ On the other hand, according to the representative of India, it was essential that the Commission be made accountable to the General Assembly, a body with general membership. He further stressed that criteria on the basis of which a particular country under the Commission would move from the Council to the Economic and Social Council needed to be formulated, pointing out that setting the transition from the Council to the Economic and Social Council after the removal of that agenda item was somewhat unrealistic since a country at times remained on the Council's agenda for several years before it was removed.¹⁸

Many speakers agreed that peacebuilding required long-term, predictable and more rapid disbursement of funding and that therefore coordinating resource mobilization was crucial. Some delegations called for a discussion to distinguish between activities funded by voluntary contributions and those funded by assessed contributions.¹⁹ Some representatives of African States called for a funding of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration activities through the regular United Nations budget.²⁰ The representative of Norway expressed the view that all post-conflict peacebuilding activities included in mandates of peace operations should be financed by assessed contributions.²¹ The representative of the United States stated that simply increasing assessed contributions would be overly simplistic and was contrary to its national budgeting process. The representative of Japan added that financing all peacebuilding activities through assessed contributions would hinder local ownership. Therefore, both speakers advocated analysis on a case-by-case basis.²² Other speakers proposed the establishment of a voluntary revolving fund²³ or a standing fund for peacebuilding.²⁴

With regard to regional priorities, some speakers called for Africa to become a focus of the peacebuilding activities of the United Nations and pointed to the relevance of the proposed Peacebuilding Commission especially for Africa²⁵ or referred to the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration activities which needed to be consolidated.²⁶ They supported a wider strategy of conflict prevention, crisis management and peacebuilding with regard to spillover effects which conflicts in African countries had experienced in the past.²⁷

At the end of the meeting, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its commitment to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and recalled its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security;

Acknowledged that serious attention to the longer-term process of peacebuilding in all its multiple dimensions was critically important and that adequate support for peacebuilding activities could help to prevent countries from relapsing into conflict;

Underlined the fact that for countries emerging from conflict, significant international assistance for economic and social rehabilitation and reconstruction was indispensable;

Recognized the crucial role of regional and subregional organizations in post-conflict peacebuilding and their involvement at the earliest possible stage;

Stressed the special needs of Africa in post-conflict situations and encouraged the international community to pay particular attention to those needs.

Decisions of 20 December 2005 (5335th meeting):
resolutions 1645 (2005) and 1646 (2005)

At the 5335th meeting, on 20 December 2005,²⁹ at which the representatives of Algeria, Argentina, Benin, Brazil and the United States made statements, the President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to two draft resolutions which were then put to the vote. The first draft resolution³⁰ was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1645 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided, acting concurrently with the General Assembly, to establish the Peacebuilding Commission as an intergovernmental advisory body;

Also decided that the following should be the main purposes of the Commission: (a) to bring together all relevant actors to marshal resources and to advise on and propose integrated strategies for post-conflict peacebuilding and recovery; (b) to focus attention on the reconstruction and institution-building efforts necessary for recovery from conflict and to support the development of integrated strategies in order to lay the foundation for sustainable development; (c) to provide recommendations and information to improve the coordination of all relevant actors within and outside the United Nations;

Further decided that the Commission should meet in various configurations;

Decided that the Commission should have a standing Organizational Committee, responsible for developing its own rules of procedure and working methods;

Decided that members of the Organizational Committee should serve for renewable terms of two years, as applicable;

Decided that the Organizational Committee should establish the agenda of the Commission;

Also decided that the Commission should make the outcome of its discussions and recommendations publicly available as United Nations documents to all relevant bodies and actors, including the international financial institutions;

Decided that the Commission should submit an annual report to the General Assembly and that the Assembly should hold an annual debate to review the report;

Decided that the Commission should act in all matters on the basis of consensus of its members;

Requested the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly on the arrangements for establishing the peacebuilding fund during its sixtieth session;

Decided that the arrangements set out above would be reviewed five years after the adoption of the resolution.

The second draft resolution³¹ was adopted by 13 votes to none, with 2 abstentions (Argentina, Brazil), as resolution 1646 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided, pursuant to resolution 1645 (2005), that the permanent members listed in Article 23 (1) of the Charter should be members of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission and that, in addition, the Council should select annually two of its elected members to participate in the Organizational Committee;

Decided that the annual report referred to in resolution 1645 (2005) should also be submitted to the Council for an annual debate.

In their statements, the representatives of Brazil, Argentina and Algeria said that the composition of the Peacebuilding Commission lacked representativeness and legal equality of States. The representative of Brazil held that the resolution failed to adequately reflect the role of the Economic and Social Council in peacebuilding activities.³² The representative of Benin said that it was inappropriate to have submitted the resolution under the current agenda item since it did not adequately reflect the mandate of the Commission, which encompassed both conflict prevention and post-conflict peacebuilding. He felt that the current agenda item might prejudice the implementation of the conflict prevention mandate.³³

Deliberations of 31 January 2007 (5627th meeting)

At its 5627th meeting, on 31 January 2007, the Council heard briefings by the President of the Economic and Social Council, the Chairman of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission, the Assistant Secretary-General in the Peacebuilding Support Office, the representative of the World Bank, and the representative of the International Monetary Fund. Statements were made by all members of the Council and the representatives of Afghanistan, Argentina, Brazil, Burundi, Canada (on behalf also of Australia and New Zealand), Chile, Croatia, Egypt, El Salvador, Germany (on behalf of the European Union),³⁴ Guatemala, Jamaica (on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement), Japan, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, the Republic of Korea, Senegal, Sierra Leone and Uruguay.

The President of the Economic and Social Council, the Chairman of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission and the Assistant Secretary-General elaborated on the relationship of the Commission with the Economic and Social Council or the Security Council.³⁵ Referring to the issue of funding, the Chairman of the Organizational Committee emphasized that a long-term commitment was needed and, while being pleased with recent contributions to the Peacebuilding Fund, made clear that they were not sufficient to meet the needs of the two assigned countries, Burundi and Sierra Leone.³⁶ The Assistant Secretary-General said that the Fund was an extremely useful start but that it could only act as a catalyst. She stated that her Office would support the Commission by extracting lessons learned and becoming the repository for peacebuilding advice within the Secretariat. According to her, in the long run, peacebuilding must not be another layer of work for Governments, the United Nations or donors on the ground but should define the way in which all different actors framed their interventions.³⁷

The representative of Norway, in his capacity as Chairperson of the Burundi configuration, pointed out that successful peacebuilding — besides national ownership — required sustained political and material support from all the different actors, which included the United Nations system, the international financial institutions, donors, civil society and regional actors.³⁸

The representative of the Netherlands, in his capacity as Chairperson of the Sierra Leone configuration, also regarded it as essential to ensure local ownership and close coordination between New York and national actors as well as to involve all stakeholders.³⁹

The representative of the World Bank expressed the full support of the World Bank to the work of the Peacebuilding Commission and underlined its commitment to cooperate even more closely both at Headquarters and in the field. He saw the Commission as a useful and effective instrument to deepen the engagement of both institutions in a coordinated manner.⁴⁰

The representative of the International Monetary Fund also affirmed the usefulness of the Peacebuilding Commission as a forum where all aspects of peacebuilding could be addressed comprehensively and expressed readiness to actively cooperate with the Commission.⁴¹

In their first assessment of the Peacebuilding Commission, speakers conceded that it was still in its “teething phase” but commended the two country-specific meetings and considered that it had widely ensured local ownership in practice.

The representative of Sierra Leone considered the Commission to be a “supplementary but effective instrument for facilitating the process of early post-conflict recovery”. He emphasized how crucial funding was to ensure that his country would not relapse into conflict.⁴² The importance of financial contributions was also pointed out by the representative of Burundi, who announced his country’s intention to organize a donor round table.⁴³ The representative of Qatar stressed that the Commission and the Peacebuilding Fund together constituted an integrated mechanism and appealed to the international community to donate generously.⁴⁴ Other speakers also renewed appeals for funding.⁴⁵ While making clear that the Commission was not a donor agency, some speakers pointed to the importance of distributing available funds in a flexible and quick manner to situations with which the Commission was dealing.⁴⁶

Speakers saw the added value of the newly established Peacebuilding Commission in coordinating activities and resources in a comprehensive and concentrated manner⁴⁷ by “linking the United Nations peacekeeping and peacebuilding activities as seamlessly as possible”;⁴⁸ promoting national capacities;⁴⁹ and identifying common priorities of all actors;⁵⁰ development of a viable peacebuilding strategy bringing together all actors in the field;⁵¹ and providing early warning to the Council drawing attention to setbacks and risk factors in countries on the Council’s agenda.⁵² The representative of Guatemala emphasized that the Commission must go beyond physical rebuilding and support comprehensive changes that would eliminate practices of social, economic and political exclusion and transform State institutions so that citizens could participate in them.⁵³

Some speakers called for the Council to make better use of the Peacebuilding Commission as a source of advice, and stressed the importance of the timing of the request for advice not only after a peacekeeping operation was discontinued but also before a mandate renewal and the establishment of a peacekeeping operation.⁵⁴

The representative of China called for coordination, first, among the different plans and framework documents for reconstruction; secondly, among the different players; and, thirdly, among different organs of the United Nations.⁵⁵

The representative of Japan, who defined the core task of the Commission as bringing together the country under consideration with international partners to formulate an integrated peacebuilding strategy, stated that this task still needed to be tackled for Sierra Leone and Burundi. In order to implement such a strategy, he proposed the establishment of an on-site coordination and monitoring mechanism. For such a strategy to ensure a smooth transfer of responsibilities from a post-conflict to a reconstruction and development phase, he considered, echoed by the representative of Croatia,⁵⁶ the transition of a peacekeeping mission to an integrated office and eventually to a United Nations country team as a good option. He hoped that through an implementation of an integrated strategy, the Commission would provide valuable advice to the Council regarding the exit of a mission.⁵⁷

The representative of Italy called for the Peacebuilding Commission to elaborate benchmarks to monitor progress achieved, and also to develop objective criteria for phasing out its involvement in a country as well as to think about its possible new involvement.⁵⁸ The expansion of the Commission's agenda was also proposed by the representative of Slovakia.⁵⁹

The representative of Canada, speaking also on behalf of Australia and New Zealand, expressed his disappointment about some members of the Commission having overemphasized procedural matters at the expense of substantive peacebuilding issues, and called for refocusing on its core mandate which needed to be approached in an action-oriented and flexible manner.⁶⁰

Deliberations of 17 October 2007 (5761st meeting)

At its 5761st meeting, on 17 October 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Peacebuilding Commission on its first session.⁶¹ In its report, the Commission summarized its activities during its first year of existence: it had met in country-specific configurations to consider the cases of Burundi and Sierra Leone, adopted workplans and sent field missions to both countries to collect information and analysis from the ground. It also identified four critical priority areas for peace consolidation in each of the two countries. Processes for the development of integrated peacebuilding strategies had been launched. The Commission had adopted provisional rules of procedure which, in order to keep them current and effective, would continue to be reviewed through an expert group. Standing invitations had been extended to the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, the European Community and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to participate in all meetings of the Commission. The provisional guidelines on the participation of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, had also been adopted. The Commission reported that it had established a working group on lessons learned in order to accumulate best practices and lessons on critical peacebuilding issues. The Commission concluded that the main challenge it was now facing was to maximize its impact on the ground to make the United Nations peacebuilding architecture an effective instrument of international collaboration in support of countries emerging from conflict. The Commission's future work would need to focus on ensuring that peacebuilding processes remained on track and that challenges and gaps were addressed in a timely and coherent manner by all relevant actors and in accordance with the integrated peacebuilding strategies.

Statements were made by all members of the Council, the Chairperson of the Peacebuilding Commission and the representatives of Burundi, El Salvador, the Netherlands, Norway and Sierra Leone.⁶²

The Chairperson of the Peacebuilding Commission said that, during its first year of operation, the Commission had held approximately 50 formal and informal meetings and briefings in various configurations and had addressed critical organizational, methodological and thematic issues, as well as the country-specific issues of Burundi and Sierra Leone. He believed that the Commission had contributed significantly to the promotion of integrated post-conflict peacebuilding strategies in Burundi and Sierra Leone by deepening the dialogue with all relevant stakeholders, and reported that the Commission intended to further strengthen the effectiveness of its engagement with those two countries. While stating that the United Nations peacebuilding structure was fully in place, he identified the following challenges which the Commission was facing: the development of monitoring and tracking mechanisms, working methods, advocacy, the Peacebuilding Fund and relationships with other relevant bodies.⁶³

Speakers in general said that the result of the first year's work of the Peacebuilding Commission was positive and that important work had been done in Burundi and Sierra Leone. They noted that the Commission faced a number of challenges, as shown in its report, and highlighted the need to create a clear consensus on the Commission's conceptual design, operational methods and relationship with entities both within and outside the United Nations system.

With regard to future work, delegations called on the Commission to effectively implement peacebuilding strategies on the ground. The representative of Indonesia stated that this could best be fulfilled if the Commission received backing from all the principal organs of the United Nations, the agencies of the United Nations system and the non-United Nations institutions concerned.⁶⁴ Speakers also noted that the Commission should continue to develop its working methods, work with flexibility and transparency, strengthen the effectiveness of integrated peacebuilding strategies and establish tracking and monitoring mechanisms to help identify gaps and allow for more efficient use of resources. The representative of France stated that the Commission was an essential instrument for conflict prevention and thus for the implementation of the responsibility to protect, a key concept that the Security Council needed to put into practice.⁶⁵

Speakers generally highlighted the need for the Commission to strengthen or clarify its cooperation with bodies within the United Nations and with international partners, including financial institutions and regional and subregional organizations, in order to avoid duplication of programmes. The representative of the United States looked forward to a stronger engagement of the Commission with the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.⁶⁶ The representative of the Russian Federation considered it particularly important to strengthen the Commission's link with the Council so as to ensure a timely exchange of information. He also called for the Council to take the Commission's recommendations into account, in its work on Burundi and Sierra Leone.⁶⁷ Some representatives said that the Commission could take on an important role in advising the Council before the establishment or mandate renewal of a peacekeeping operation.⁶⁸ The representative of Indonesia stressed that the Council should continue to work closely with the Commission in the development of a well-functioning peacebuilding architecture.⁶⁹ The representative of China called for a reinforced communication between the Commission and the Council so that the latter could guide the work of the Commission and solicit its recommendations.⁷⁰ The representative of the United Kingdom held that there should be regular interaction between the Council presidency and the Chair of the Commission, adding that it should be a two-way relationship, with a specific division of labour, the Commission doing its work on the ground and providing the Council with concrete advice from that experience.⁷¹

The representative of the United States said that, before adding new countries to its agenda, the Commission must be sure not to overextend itself but rather strive for solid successes and maintain a realistic agenda.⁷² Other speakers looked forward to adding new countries, explicitly naming Guinea-Bissau.⁷³ The representative of France stated that the issue of expanding the Commission's agenda was indissolubly linked to its strengthening. He hoped that the Commission would develop its activities and offer the Council its views on new cases.⁷⁴ The representative of Belgium pointed to the key role of the Council in this regard and held that the Council, instead of being solely reactive in the choice of countries, should consider the specific merits of each file.⁷⁵ The representative of Italy said that the Commission could become a kind of permanent observatory of potential new countries that were about to exit the immediate conflict phase.⁷⁶

As Chairperson of the Sierra Leone configuration, the representative of the Netherlands said that the elections could be seen as a landmark in the democratic progress of that country but that crucial challenges to sustainable peace remained in the priority areas.⁷⁷ The representative of Sierra Leone saw the elections as a solid foundation for sustainable peace and declared his country's commitment to cooperate with the United Nations and the Commission. He highlighted country ownership and resource mobilization as the foundation for the Commission's operations.⁷⁸

As Chairperson of the Burundi configuration, the representative of Norway stated that a monitoring and tracking mechanism for the strategic framework was being set up and that the security situation was still a matter of concern.⁷⁹ The representative of Burundi summarized achievements in the work of his country with the Commission and hoped that the Council would firmly and clearly support the efforts of the facilitators in the search for final peace in Burundi.⁸⁰

The representative of El Salvador, in his capacity as Chair of the Working Group on Lessons Learned, reported that the Working Group had started to accumulate an inventory of lessons learned by the United Nations system and the international community by analysing and assembling concrete experiences in different processes that were valid for all countries under consideration. She hoped to build a historical memory that would contribute in the future to more effective United Nations participation in peacebuilding activities.⁸¹

53. Threats to international peace and security

Initial proceedings

Decisions of 14 September 2005 (5261st meeting): resolutions 1624 (2005) and 1625 (2005)

At its 5261st meeting, held on 14 September 2005¹ at the level of Heads of State and Government,² the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled "Threats to international peace and security". Statements were made by all members of the Council as well as by the Secretary-General.

The President (Philippines) drew the attention of the Council to two draft resolutions. The first draft resolution³ was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1624 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

² All the Council members were represented at the level of Head of State or Government, except Japan, which was represented at the ministerial level.

³ S/2005/577.

Called upon all States to adopt such measures as might be necessary and appropriate and in accordance with their obligations under international law (a) to prohibit by law incitement to commit a terrorist act or acts; (b) to prevent such conduct; (c) to deny safe haven to any persons with respect to whom there was credible and relevant information giving serious reasons for considering that they had been guilty of such conduct;

Also called upon all States to cooperate, inter alia, to strengthen the security of their international borders, including by combating fraudulent travel documents and, to the extent attainable, by enhancing terrorist screening and passenger security procedures;

Further called upon all States to continue international efforts to enhance dialogue and broaden understanding among civilizations;

Called upon all States to report to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373 (2001) concerning counter-terrorism, as part of their ongoing dialogue, on the steps they had taken to implement the resolution;

Directed the Counter-Terrorism Committee: (a) to include in its dialogue with Member States their efforts to implement the resolution; (b) to work with Member States to help to build capacity, including by spreading best legal practice and promoting exchange of information in this regard; (c) to report back to the Council in 12 months on the implementation of the resolution;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

The second draft resolution⁴ was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1625 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its determination to enhance the effectiveness of the United Nations in preventing armed conflicts and to monitor closely situations of potential armed conflict;

Stressed the critical importance of a regional approach to conflict prevention, particularly to programmes of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, as well as the effective and sustainable reintegration of ex-combatants;

Encouraged all African States to adhere to the African Union Non-Aggression and Common Defence Pact adopted in Abuja on 31 January 2005, and to sign, where appropriate, subregional pacts on peace, security, democracy, good governance and development, and called upon the United Nations system and the international community to support the implementation of the pacts;

Urged all African States and the international community to cooperate fully in developing the capacities of African regional and subregional organizations to deploy both civilian and military assets quickly when needed.

The Secretary-General, while maintaining that the subject of threats to peace and security was a broad and complex one, also considered it appropriate for the Council to reflect on the priority the subject of conflict prevention in Africa deserved. With regard to the issue of combating terrorism in all its forms, the Secretary-General referred to his proposal of a comprehensive counter-terrorism strategy, elements of which had been taken up in the World Summit Outcome.⁵ Outlining the five different areas of the strategy, he expressed the hope that the Council would support the strategy in all areas. First, the international community must work to dissuade disaffected groups from resorting to terrorism, primarily by completing a comprehensive convention on terrorism. Secondly, terrorists must be denied the means, in particular weapons of mass destruction, to carry out attacks. Furthermore, the strategy encompassed deterring States from supporting terrorists and developing State capacity to prevent terrorism as well as defending human rights.⁶

In their statements, delegations focused on the issues of countering terrorism and conflict prevention in Africa.⁷ Elaborating on the notion of threats to international peace and security, speakers concurred that terrorism was one of the most serious threats. The representative of Greece also named as newly emerging threats extreme poverty, deadly infectious diseases, environmental degradation and organized crime, while seeing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction as potentially the greatest threat.⁸ Other speakers also referred to this threat,⁹ and the representative of France urged the Islamic Republic of Iran to comply with resolutions of the International Atomic Energy Agency and international commitments; if a State failed in its obligations under the Non-Proliferation Treaty, it was legitimate, once dialogue had been exhausted, to refer the issue to the Security Council.¹⁰ The representative of Denmark held that the Council should be ready to deal with the nuclear programmes of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in the Council if other avenues failed.¹¹

Most speakers considered that the newly emerging threats required a more comprehensive and holistic approach of the Council. Many speakers referred to the link of development and security and called for the Council to address the underlying causes of threats, predominantly through conflict prevention.¹² Some delegations emphasized the importance of developing closer cooperation with regional organizations to handle such threats.¹³ The representative of China stated that with regard to major issues affecting world peace and security, the Council should be allowed to judge the merits of the actual situation and act collectively in accordance with the Charter and held that the Council's authority should be upheld by adhering to multilateralism.¹⁴

With regard to the issue of conflict prevention specifically in Africa, the representative of the United States expressed his support for the need to improve the ability of the African Union and subregional organizations to deploy civilian and military assets to prevent "unjust armed conflict" in Africa.¹⁵ Some speakers explicitly called for the Council to pay particular attention to conflicts in Africa,¹⁶ since, according to the representative of Japan, resolving the conflicts in Africa was a global challenge.¹⁷

Speakers concurred that terrorism constituted a grave threat to world peace and security, which had recently manifested itself in an increased number of terrorist acts. It was therefore necessary for the international community to redouble its efforts in combating that scourge. To this end, most speakers supported an enhanced role of the Security Council and the United Nations in preventing and combating terrorism. The representative of the Russian Federation emphasized that its combat should be led by the United Nations and the Security Council as “the headquarters for the international antiterrorist front”.¹⁸ Some speakers reminded the Council to ensure the protection of human rights while combating terrorism.¹⁹

Addressing the issue of Council reform, the representative of Brazil called for ending the “deficit in transparency and representativity” and called for an expansion “in an equitable manner” by giving permanent and non-permanent seats to developing countries of all regions.²⁰ The representatives of France and Japan also called for an enlarged and more representative Council.²¹

Decision of 8 January 2007 (5615th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5615th meeting, on 8 January 2007, the incoming Secretary-General, Ban Ki-moon, at his first meeting with the Council, stated that the international community was facing a range of challenges and that he looked forward to working closely with the Council.²²

Following the statement of the Secretary-General, statements were made by all members of the Council.²³ Speakers elaborated on the increasingly diverse and complex challenges to peace and security, such as armed conflicts, particularly in Africa, crises in the Middle East, terrorism, organized crime, the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and the trafficking in small arms. Regarding the nature of conflicts that the Council dealt with, delegations noted a shift from dealing with inter-State conflicts towards dealing with internal conflicts.

The representative of France made clear that it was the Council’s responsibility to effectively respond to those challenges and that this could only be done collectively. He stated that the Council must continue to strengthen its cooperation with the Secretary-General and with regional organizations as well as its ability to prevent crises and must pay close attention to the management of the post-conflict period, a role which had been assumed by the Peacebuilding Commission.²⁴ Some speakers said they expected the Council to duly take into account and make better use of the advice of the Peacebuilding Commission.²⁵

The necessity for cooperation of the Council with the Secretary-General, the Secretariat and other United Nations organs was also pointed out by many other delegations.²⁶ Delegations also called for closer cooperation with regional and subregional organizations.²⁷

Most delegations agreed that the role of the Council in the area of conflict prevention must be strengthened. The representative of the United Kingdom, referring to the significance of resolution 1625 (2005) for the issue of conflict prevention, called for a stronger partnership between the Council and the Secretariat in this area, which was to be reached through implementation of that resolution.²⁸ The representative of the United States stressed that the Council must be able to identify and address new threats before they broke out into conflict.²⁹

Delegations also agreed that new threats could only be addressed in a comprehensive way which encompassed the areas of conflict prevention, peacebuilding, peacekeeping and post-conflict management and which meant that when addressing new challenges the Council must take into account the interrelatedness between peace, development and human rights.³⁰ The representative of South Africa said that issues of poverty and underdevelopment should and must be addressed by an organ with broader representation and the respective mandate rather than by the Council.³¹ The representative of Panama also stated that not all potential threats could or should be considered immediately by the Council as there were other organs in the United Nations that could and should also contribute to address these issues.³²

The representative of Indonesia reaffirmed that when addressing threats to international peace and security the Council should use sanctions only as a last resort and with a clear, transparent and measurable timetable and should provide an escape route to allow for reinstating peaceful settlement procedures.³³ The representative of South Africa stressed that the Council had increasingly dealt with issues outside of its mandate and resorted to Chapter VII of the Charter as an umbrella for addressing issues that might not necessarily pose a threat to international peace and security, when it could have resorted to other provisions of the Charter. He called for invoking Chapter VII as a last resort.³⁴ The delegation of Panama also reminded States that the Charter imposed on the Council the obligation to exhaust all mechanisms under Chapter VI and asked the Council to cooperate with regional organizations under Chapter VIII before considering sanctions or the use of force provided for in Chapter VII.³⁵

The representative of the United Kingdom called for more focused mandates for peacekeeping missions, with specific objectives to be achieved within given timeframes, and proposed that peacekeeping missions form part of a wider peacebuilding strategy to achieve the progress necessary so that such missions were no longer needed. To avoid the risk of peacekeeping missions becoming part of the landscape and allowing a status quo to persist, focus was needed on a coherent approach with the goal of resolving the underlying issues.³⁶ The representative of Belgium warned about the risk of the indiscriminate proliferation of peacekeeping operations, stating that not all crises could be resolved in the same way.³⁷ The representative of the United States called for enhanced management and oversight of peacekeeping operations in cooperation with other United Nations bodies.³⁸

The President then made a statement on behalf of the Council,³⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Committed itself to work closely and in a focused and action-oriented manner with the Secretary-General;

Pledged to uphold the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations; reaffirmed its commitment to the principles of sovereign equality, national sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of all States, and underlined further the need for respect for human rights and the rule of law;

Reaffirmed its commitment to address the whole range of threats to international peace and security, including armed conflict, terrorism and the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction;

Recognized the essential role of the United Nations in the global effort to combat terrorism and stood ready to play its part in the implementation of the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy;

Reaffirmed its resolve to take appropriate and effective actions against any threat to international peace and security caused by the proliferation of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons;

Underlined the need for improved United Nations capacity to assess conflict situations and for the effective planning and management of United Nations peacekeeping operations;

Requested the Secretary-General to focus in managing and reporting on peacekeeping missions on the steps needed to achieve the objectives of the mission;

Emphasized the importance of post-conflict peacebuilding to assist countries emerging from conflict in laying the foundation for sustainable peace and development;

Reaffirmed its commitment to working in partnership, with the Secretary-General and the Secretariat, other United Nations organs, regional, subregional and other intergovernmental organizations, with non-Council members, including those Member States that were parties to a conflict, and with troop-contributing countries, financial and other stakeholders in pursuit of the common objective of the maintenance of international peace and security.

54. Letter dated 5 April 2007 from the Permanent Representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council

Initial proceedings

Deliberations of 17 April 2007 (5663rd meeting)

At its 5663rd meeting, on 17 April 2007, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled “Letter dated 5 April 2007 from the Permanent Representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council”. In addition to Council members, statements were made by 40 representatives.¹ The Council also heard a statement by the Secretary-General.

The President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 5 April 2007 from the representative of the United Kingdom,² transmitting a concept paper on the item under consideration. The President then drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 12 April 2007 from the representative of Cuba,³ and a letter dated 16 April 2007 from Pakistan.⁴

¹ Statements were made by representatives of Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Barbados, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Cape Verde, the Comoros, Costa Rica, Cuba (on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement), Denmark, Egypt, Germany (on behalf of the European Union), Iceland, India, Israel, Japan, Liechtenstein, Maldives, the Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia (Federated States of), Namibia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan (on behalf of the Group of 77 and China), Palau, Papua New Guinea (on behalf of the Pacific Islands Forum Small Island Developing States), the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Singapore, Solomon Islands, the Sudan (on behalf of the Group of African States), Switzerland, Tuvalu, Ukraine and Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of).

² S/2007/186. The concept paper was entitled “Energy, security and climate”.

In her opening remarks, the President stressed that the international community should recognize the negative impact of climate change on security. Asserting that this debate was not intended to pre-empt the authority of other United Nations bodies, she stressed that the decisions and actions taken in all those bodies required the fullest possible understanding of the issues involved.⁵

Recalling that, throughout human history, people and countries had fought over natural resources, and that too often war had been the means to secure possession over livestock, waterholes, oil, gold and other commodities, the Secretary-General said that the projected climate change could have not only serious environmental, social and economic implications, but also implications for peace and security. He therefore called for a “long-term global response” to deal with climate change.⁶

During the debate, speakers generally acknowledge that climate change presented serious global challenges, most representatives calling for international cooperation to tackle the problem in a holistic and preventive manner. Many speakers expressed the view that the need to promote energy to sustain economic growth had to be balanced with the need to protect the environment and reduce fossil fuel consumption.

Among the potential negative effects of climate change on international security, many speakers pointed to the worsening of drought and flooding, the spread of disease, food and water shortages, the displacement of people and increased migration. Several representatives stressed that the projected rise in sea levels posed an immediate threat to the survival of small island developing States and lowland areas. It traditionally fall within the competence of the latter organs”.

⁴ S/2007/211. In this letter, the representative of Pakistan, as the Chair of the Group of 77 and China, stated, inter alia, that the Group felt that it was “inappropriate to consider the issue of energy in the Security Council”.

⁵ S/PV.5663, pp. 2-3.

was noted that climate change most adversely affected those countries and peoples that were already struggling to achieve sustainable development, and which at the same time had contributed the least to carbon emissions.

On the linkage between climate change, energy and security, many speakers emphasized that the Council had the responsibility to consider the question, as it constituted one of the new threats to international peace and security the world was facing. They hoped that the debate would help to raise awareness and prompt further action to address the challenges.

The representative of Belgium opined that conventional security policies were still often based on obsolete threat assessments, and were more geared to managing crises than to preventing them. He further stressed that security policies exclusively based on national sovereignty appeared “less and less appropriate”.⁷

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that climate change was “transforming the way that we think about security”. Pointing to the possible consequences of climate change, including increased flooding, disease, drought and crop failure, and from that migration on an unprecedented scale and intensified competition for resources, she concluded that climate change reached to “the very heart of the security agenda”.⁸

The representative of Papua New Guinea, echoed by the representatives of Tuvalu, the Solomon Islands and the Marshall Islands, believed that the Council should keep the issue of climate change and environmental security on its agenda, and under permanent review. Recalling that the Security Council and the General Assembly had accepted the responsibility to protect, he stressed that the dangers facing the small islands and their populations because of climate change were no less serious than those faced by nations and peoples threatened by guns and bombs. The effects of climate change were likely to cause massive dislocations, hatred and alienation, just like any war or refugee crisis, he emphasized. He further opined that the Council should ensure that all countries contributed to address the implications of climate change.⁹

Among other examples of the link between climate change and security cited during the debate, the representative of Germany, echoed by the representative of Israel, stressed that the scarcity of water, food and fertile land could contribute to “driving conflict”. She was also convinced that an overall framework of preventive diplomacy was needed to alleviate the worst foreseen consequences of climate change.¹⁰

While acknowledging the urgent need for the international community to address climate change and energy consumption implications, a number of speakers voiced the opinion that the Council was not the proper forum to discuss the issue. Stressing that energy and climate change were linked to development issues rather than to the threat to international peace and security, they were concerned that by convening this debate, the Council was further encroaching on the roles and responsibilities of other principal United Nations organs. They expressed the hope that the debate would not create a precedent or undermine the authority or mandate of the existing relevant bodies, processes and instruments. Speakers expressed the view that the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change was the appropriate forum for considering risks associated with and action to address climate change.¹¹ The representative of China said that the Council’s involvement in the issue would not benefit the ongoing discussion among Member States, since it did not have the necessary expertise.¹² The representative of South Africa hoped that the discussions would not in any way elevate the issue of climate or environment to an item on the agenda of the Council, while the representative of France commented that “institutional squabbling” was inappropriate given what was at stake.¹³

On the ways and means to address the issue of climate change, many speakers stressed that all Member States should meet their obligations under the Kyoto Protocol. The need to support the development and use of clean energy and to reduce gas emissions was underlined, as well as the need to prevent the negative effects arising from natural disasters. A number of speakers called on the international community to cooperate in researching and developing renewable and alternative energy resources.

On specific measures to address the problem, speakers attached great importance to the holding of the forthcoming fifteenth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development and the thirteenth session of the Conference of the Parties to the Framework Convention on Climate Change. The representative of Switzerland invited all stakeholders to participate in the first session of the Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction, to be held in Geneva in June. This high-level event was intended to raise awareness and to consider ways and means to move disaster risk reduction higher up on the international policy agenda.¹⁴

While the representative of Italy called for the establishment of a United Nations environmental organization,¹⁵ the representative of the Netherlands urged the Secretary-General to alert the Council regarding climate-related challenges.¹⁶ The representative of Japan proposed that the Secretary-General be requested by the General Assembly to swiftly issue a report with recommendations on how best the United Nations system as a whole could organize itself to strengthen its capacity so that it would be able to address climate change more effectively. He also underlined the overriding importance of controlling greenhouse gas emissions and creating an effective post-Kyoto framework.¹⁷

55. Security Council mission

Overview

During the period under review, the Security Council completed 10 missions, which were discussed at 20 meetings under the item entitled “Security Council mission”. The missions’ destinations included several African countries,¹ as well as Afghanistan, Timor-Leste, Kosovo and Haiti, which was the first visit of a Security Council mission to Latin America and the Caribbean. The Council also held a follow-up meeting to its mission to Central Africa that had been conducted from 7 to 16 June 2003. In this study, the reports and meetings are discussed under headings corresponding to the missions, which are listed chronologically. A table at the end of the section lists all missions, including their destinations, composition and associated meetings.

1. Follow-up to mission to Central Africa, 7 to 16 June 2003

At its 4911th meeting, on 17 February 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda the progress report of the Secretary-General on the recommendations of the Security Council mission to Central Africa.² The Council heard a briefing by the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, following which statements were made by all Council members and the representatives of Burundi, Egypt, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union),³ Japan, Rwanda and the Syrian Arab Republic.

³ The representative of Ireland spoke on behalf of the European Union and Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Croatia, Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Iceland, Latvia, Lithuania, Malta, Norway, Poland, Romania, Serbia and Montenegro, Slovakia, Slovenia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Turkey.

The Assistant Secretary-General noted that substantial progress had been made in the peace processes in both Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo since the Security Council mission to the region in June 2003. He noted the progress in setting up the transitional Government in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and the conclusion of a comprehensive ceasefire agreement in Burundi, as well as the progress towards convening an international conference on the Great Lakes region.⁴ In their responses, speakers welcomed the progress made in Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo, but underlined that there remained substantial work to be done to solidify the gains in the peace process.

2. Mission to West Africa, 20 to 29 June 2004

The Security Council mission to West Africa from 20 to 29 June 2004, led by the representative of the United Kingdom, visited seven countries.⁵ The mission met with the key national and regional stakeholders, including the Chairman and the Executive Secretary of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), the Heads of State and Government and senior officials of Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Nigeria and Sierra Leone, and representatives of civil society and non-governmental organizations.

Underlining the importance of a regional and collective approach to achieve sustainable peace and development in West Africa, the mission commended the work of ECOWAS in conflict prevention, peacekeeping and peacebuilding in the region. The mission also reported the need for the Security Council to monitor the commitments by the parties in Côte d'Ivoire to implementing the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, which had suffered a serious setback. It found Liberia on the right track towards free, fair and transparent elections in 2005 despite major challenges, saw the immediate priority for Sierra Leone as preparing to take full responsibility for its own security, and noted the considerable progress already made by Guinea-Bissau towards democracy and good governance since the coup of September 2003.⁶

Deliberations of 30 June and 16 July 2004 (5000th and 5005th meetings)

At its 5000th meeting, on 30 June 2004, the Council included in its agenda the item entitled "Briefing by the head of the Security Council mission to West Africa". In his briefing, the head of the mission, the representative of the United Kingdom, reported that the aims of the mission were to identify a coherent strategy to support the efforts of ECOWAS, to build on existing cooperation among United Nations missions and the United Nations bodies in the subregion and to assess overall progress towards the Council's objectives of furthering peace and regional security. Conveying the findings of the mission as reflected in its report, he underlined the need for more effective conflict-prevention policies as well as a better definition of the relationship between United Nations peacekeeping and regional efforts. The speakers in general agreed upon the utility of the mission, especially in delivering the message of the Council.⁷

At its 5005th meeting, on 16 July 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Security Council mission to West Africa from 20 to 29 June 2004.⁸ The Council heard a briefing by the head of the mission, the representative of the United Kingdom, who noted the need to support positive developments in West Africa and underlined the importance of a regional approach to tackle the issues which affected most of the countries in one way or the other.⁹ Many speakers commended the role of ECOWAS in maintaining security and promoting development in the region.¹⁰ Among many issues, a number of speakers discussed the political impasse in Côte d'Ivoire and the way forward to deal with the situation.¹¹ For his part, the representative of Côte d'Ivoire explained that not holding elections was a necessity as accepted by the people of Côte d'Ivoire when rebels were not disarmed and consequently its territorial integrity was in jeopardy.¹²

3. Mission to Central Africa, 21 to 25 November 2004

The Security Council mission to Central Africa from 21 to 25 November 2004 was led by the representative of France. The mission immediately followed the meetings of the Security Council held in Nairobi on 18 and 19 November, and visited Kigali, Kinshasa, Bukavu, Bujumbura and Entebbe. The mission met with the President of Rwanda, Paul Kagame; the President of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Joseph Kabila; the President of Burundi, Domitien Ndayizeye; and the President of Uganda, Yoweri Kaguta Museveni. It also met with a number of other government officials and was briefed in Kinshasa and Bukavu by the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and in Bujumbura by the United Nations Operation in Burundi. The mission found that the primary challenges facing Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo were strikingly similar: the need to accelerate the implementation of the outstanding aspects of the transitional agenda and conduct credible elections that would lead to durable peace and stability.¹³

Deliberations of 30 November and 8 December 2004 (5091st and 5096th meetings)

At its 5091st meeting, on 30 November 2004, the Council included in its agenda the item entitled "Briefing by the head of the Security Council mission to Central Africa". The Council heard a briefing by the head of the mission, the representative of France, who noted that the purpose of the mission had been to assess the progress of the Burundian and Congolese peace processes and the implications for the region and to send a message aimed at pushing the process forward. He stated that the mission had come back encouraged because, compared to the previous mission in June 2003, they had seen how much progress had been achieved. However, he underlined that it was crucial that the elections scheduled for the following year were not jeopardized by new outbreaks of violence. He acknowledged that the peace remained fragile and called attention to the ongoing problems with armed groups that had been raised by all the Heads of State in the region, particularly in the Kivus in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo.¹⁴

At its 5096th meeting, on 8 December 2004,¹⁵ the Security Council included in its agenda the report of the Security Council mission to Central Africa, 21 to 25 November 2004.¹⁶ The Council heard a briefing by the head of the mission, the representative of France, who reiterated the conclusions set out in the report and noted that the Council had followed some of the recommendations of the mission in adopting a presidential statement on the Democratic Republic of the Congo,¹⁷ and by renewing the mandate of ONUB and expressing its intention to review measures that could be taken with respect to the Forces nationales de libération against those who would compromise the peace and reconciliation process.¹⁸ Speakers welcomed the progress made in the region and endorsed the recommendations of the mission. They also underlined the need for the international community to continue to provide strong support to prevent any backsliding on commitments.

The representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo complained that Rwanda continued to make threats towards his country in a deliberate attempt to prolong insecurity in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in order to disrupt the transition process under way and prevent the holding of elections. He emphasized that all incursions by foreign forces, including those of Rwanda, would require the Government to strictly implement Article 51 of the Charter and the right to self-defence.¹⁹ The representative of Rwanda denied the allegations pertaining to the presence of Rwandan army troops and stressed that it had deployed troops along the common border with the Democratic Republic of the Congo in order to counter incursions perpetrated by former members of the Forces armées rwandaises interahamwe, which the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo had yet to fulfil its commitment to disarm.²⁰

4. Mission to Haiti, 13 to 16 April 2005

The Security Council mission to Haiti from 13 to 16 April 2005 was led by the representative of Brazil and was the first mission of the Security Council to Latin America or the Caribbean. The mission was undertaken in conjunction with the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti of the Economic and Social Council and visited Port-au-Prince, Cap-Haïtien and Gonaïves. During the mission, the Council met with the interim President and Prime Minister, as well as various other political and religious figures. In their report,²¹ the members of the mission observed that national actors in Haiti had agreed that the country was in a deep political, social and economic crisis. The mission observed that State institutions were weak and in great need of reform and capacity-building. It said that there was no alternative to the holding of free, fair and inclusive elections and stressed the importance of the reform and professionalization of the Haitian National Police without delay. The mission requested the Department of Peacekeeping Operations to make a comprehensive review of the security situation in Haiti; formulate early recommendations on the need for additional police and military resources and how to improve the rules of engagement of the civilian police, in accordance with the mandate, in order to increase global security and protection during the electoral period. Finally it reaffirmed that a long-term United Nations presence in Haiti was required.

Deliberations of 20 April and 13 May 2005 (5164th and 5178th meetings)

At its 5164th meeting, on 20 April 2005, the Council included in its agenda the item entitled “Briefing by the head of the Security Council mission to Haiti”. The Council heard a briefing by the head of the mission, the representative of Brazil, who reported that, despite the tragic loss of four peacekeepers to date, the mission had assessed the security situation in Haiti as gradually improving. Notwithstanding this progress, he said that the security situation remained fragile and that there had been discussions on possible additional measures to assist the Transitional Government in the constitutional and political process. He reported that mission members had condemned the violence and called on the Haitian authorities to implement a comprehensive disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. The mission members had stressed the importance of the nationwide dialogue for long-term stability in the country and encouraged the Transitional Government to persist in its firm commitment to holding free, honest and transparent elections in 2005 in accordance with the established timetable. They reaffirmed the importance of the respect of human rights and the end of impunity in Haiti and underlined the need for reform of the Haitian National Police and the judicial system. He also reported that mission members reiterated their intention to fully respect Haitian sovereignty, to contribute to the achievement of stabilization and development and to ensure a long-term United Nations presence in Haiti.²²

At its 5178th meeting, on 13 May 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Security Council mission to Haiti.²¹ The Council heard a briefing by the head of the mission, the representative of Brazil. He introduced the report of the mission, and said that there could be no genuine stability in Haiti without comparable advances in the creation of a safe and secure environment, in the political dialogue with a view to national reconciliation, in the observance of human rights, and in the promotion of social and economic development.²³

In their statements, most speakers welcomed the report of the mission and its main recommendations. They stressed the importance of holding free, fair and inclusive elections on schedule, but underlined that more would be needed to solve Haiti’s complex problems. Many speakers underlined the necessity of providing security for the upcoming elections and expressed their readiness to consider an increase in personnel, including civilian police, for the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti. The representative of Haiti endorsed the recommendations in the report of the mission and announced that the Government would take a set of measures to create a stable environment conducive to the elections. He reaffirmed that the Transitional Government resolutely intended to organize the elections by the end of the year and would definitely hand power over to the elected President.²⁴

5. Mission to Central Africa, 4 to 11 November 2005

The Security Council mission to Central Africa from 4 to 11 November 2005 was led by the representative of France and met with the Presidents of the visited countries (Burundi, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania), as well as a wide variety of political figures. In its report,²⁵ the mission noted that in the Democratic Republic of the Congo preparations were under way for the holding of a constitutional referendum on 18 December, and for legislative and presidential elections to be completed before the end of the transitional period, on 30 June 2006. The installation in September 2005 of a democratically elected Government in Burundi had inaugurated the post-transitional phase. In addition to examining progress in the political transitions, the mission also addressed the issue of armed groups and violence in the Kivus, Ituri and other areas in the region and called on the countries visited to work together to eliminate the threat to peace and security through greater cooperation.

Deliberations of 15 November and 6 December 2005 (5305th and 5315th meetings)

At its 5305th meeting, on 15 November 2005, the Council included in its agenda the item entitled "Briefing by the head of the Security Council mission to Central Africa". In his briefing, the head of the mission, the representative of France, reviewed the outcomes of the mission, stating that the main challenges in the Democratic Republic of the Congo were the tight electoral timetable, integrating the police and the army, re-establishing State authority across the country and dealing with armed groups in the east. In Burundi, the mission had met a young Government, which was resolved to fully implement the reforms begun during the transition period, and had discussed the gradual withdrawal of the United Nations presence there and the continued refusal of the Forces nationales de libération to join the peace process.²⁶

At its 5315th meeting, on 6 December 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Security Council mission to Central Africa, 4 to 11 November 2005,²⁵ and heard a briefing by the head of the mission, the representative of France. He reiterated the main points of the report and the challenges facing the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Burundi.²⁷ In their statements, most speakers welcomed the report of the mission and expressed support for its recommendations, while welcoming the progress made in the two countries during their political transitions and underlining the importance of the upcoming elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

6. Mission to the Sudan and Chad, 4 to 10 June 2006

The Security Council mission to the Sudan and Chad from 4 to 10 June 2006 was headed jointly by the representatives of France and the United Kingdom. The mission visited Khartoum, Juba and El Fasher in the Sudan, the African Union headquarters in Addis Ababa, and N'Djamena and Goz Beida in Chad, and met with the Presidents of the Sudan and Chad, senior officials of the Government of Southern Sudan, the leadership of the African Union Mission in the Sudan (AMIS), other civil society figures in Darfur and members of the African Union Commission among others. In its report,²⁸ the mission observed, inter alia, widespread insecurity and a humanitarian crisis in the Sudan; increasing tensions and distrust between Chad and the Sudan; the opposition of Sudanese leaders to a United Nations force under Chapter VII in Darfur to replace AMIS, but support from the African Union for a transition to a United Nations operation; frequent rebel movement through, and recruitment within, camps of internally displaced persons in Chad, and the formal appeal by the President of Chad to the Council for the United Nations to provide security for the camps. It recommended, inter alia, obtaining further support from non-signatories of the Darfur Peace Agreement; strengthening AMIS; the need for the United Nations to work in partnership with the Government of the Sudan; regular dialogue between the Security Council and the Government of the Sudan; and a stronger partnership between the United Nations and the African Union.

Deliberations of 15 and 29 June 2006 (5462nd and 5478th meetings)

At its 5462nd meeting, on 15 June 2006,²⁹ the Council included in its agenda the item entitled “Briefing by the Security Council mission to the Sudan, Chad and the African Union Headquarters in Addis Ababa”. The briefing was delivered by the representative of the United Kingdom, in his capacity as head of the mission to the Sudan and Chad, the representative of France, in his capacity as joint head of the mission to Chad, and the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania, a member of the mission.

The representative of the United Kingdom said that the support by the Government of the Sudan for an African Union rather than a United Nations force was based on the belief that African States had a similar heritage to that of the people of Darfur. He, therefore, held that the Council needed to stress that any United Nations force in Darfur would have a strong African participation and character. He underlined that the mission had emphasized the Council’s respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Sudan, and its hope of working in partnership with the Government of the Sudan. He underlined the importance of urgently selling the Darfur Peace Agreement to the people in the region to ensure its implementation. He noted that the Council mission and the African Union were in full agreement that the United Nations should take over the peacekeeping role in Darfur at the earliest opportunity. He recalled that a primary purpose of the Council’s visit to the Sudan had been to persuade the Government that a United Nations deployment would be the best option for Darfur and for the country, including by underlining that a Chapter VII mandate would be required for technical, not political purposes. He advocated, inter alia, securing the agreement of the Government of the Sudan on strengthening AMIS, and identifying the arrangements for a gradual transition to a United Nations force. On the mission’s visit to Chad, he underlined the enormous scale of the camps in the area bordering Darfur, and deplored the fact that recruitment and intimidation were carried out regularly by rebel groups inside the camps.³⁰

The representative of France, in his capacity as joint head of the mission to Chad, underlined the impact of the conflict in Darfur on the situation in Chad. He pointed out that the relationship between the Sudan and Chad had greatly deteriorated. He believed that politicization in the camps was a serious problem. Finally, he deplored attacks on humanitarian workers, and noted that the President of Chad had said that his Government was unable to deal with that problem and would like the international community to take responsibility for protecting the camps and the humanitarian workers.³¹

The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania, a member of the Council mission, noted that the unanimous adoption of resolution 1679 (2006), with its “necessary but perhaps premature reference to Chapter VII” had set a difficult stage for the mission, and had provided an excuse for the Sudan to take a harder line on the proposed transition from AMIS to a United Nations peacekeeping force. He said that the mission had tried to convince the authorities in the Sudan that the transition from AMIS to a United Nations force was not an option, but an obligation. He also indicated that the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement was behind schedule and said that efforts needed to be made on, inter alia, demarcation of the boundaries of southern Sudan; resolution of the status of Abyei, where oil resources were at the centre of the controversy; and demobilization and redeployment of forces. He expressed concern about the Lord’s Resistance Army (LRA), and noted that while the leadership of the Government of Southern Sudan had been careful to make a distinction between the negotiations for peace and the indictment of the five LRA leaders indicted by the International Criminal Court, they had in principle agreed on the need to apprehend the indictees. On the visit to Addis Ababa, he recalled that the African Union had requested an expeditious transition to a United Nations operation in Darfur, and even asked the North

Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) for logistical support to strengthen AMIS.³²

At its 5478th meeting, on 29 June 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Security Council mission to the Sudan and Chad.²⁸ The Council heard briefings by the heads of the mission, the representatives of the United Kingdom and France. The representative of the United Kingdom, in his capacity as head of the mission to the Sudan and Chad, stressed the Council's support for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Sudan, but also underlined the need for progress in the political, humanitarian and security situation, and believed that it would be right for the United Nations to take over the peacekeeping operation in Darfur.³³ The representative of France, in his capacity as joint head of the mission to Chad, urged the Council to closely examine the effects of the conflict in Darfur on the situation in Chad, as the African Union had expressed concern about the destabilizing impact on the subregion. Expressing serious concern about the humanitarian situation in the camps, he urged the Council to study ways of addressing those problems.³⁴

In their statements, participants stressed, inter alia, the importance of implementing the Tripoli Agreement and the Comprehensive Peace Agreement; the dissemination of the content of the Darfur Peace Agreement; dialogue with the Government of the Sudan; the question of international protection of the camps; the problem of LRA; the transition from AMIS to a United Nations peacekeeping operation in Darfur; the strengthening of the cooperation between the United Nations and the African Union; and the need to address the humanitarian situation and to ensure protection of civilians.

The representative of the Sudan expressed appreciation that the members of the mission of the Security Council had been able to visit southern Sudan to follow the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement on the ground, including the impact of the lack of resources from donors, as well as to see for themselves the realities and complexities of the situation in Darfur, including the external dimension relating to the situation between Chad and the Sudan. He stated that the priority of the Government of the Sudan was successfully implementing both the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the Darfur Peace Agreement. He hoped that the Council would exert pressure on those parties which had not signed the Darfur Peace Agreement and were hindering its implementation. He deplored the fact that Chad was at the time engaged in making false accusations against the Sudan and in supporting those groups that had refused to sign the Darfur Peace Agreement.³⁵

The representative of Chad welcomed the Council's visit to his country and noted that a response to the accusations and remarks by the representative of the Sudan would be forthcoming in due time.³⁶

7. Mission on the electoral process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, 10 to 12 June 2006

The Security Council mission on the electoral process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo from 10 to 12 June 2006 was led by the representative of France. According to its mandate, it was to emphasize that the transition in that country, which had entered its last phase, would not be complete until free elections open to all had taken place, and encourage the transitional authorities to increase their efforts to guarantee the democratic character of the electoral process.³⁷

Deliberations of 16 June and 6 July 2006 (5466th and 5482nd meetings)

At its 5466th meeting, on 16 June 2006, the Council included in its agenda the item entitled "Briefing by the head of the Security Council mission to the Democratic Republic of the Congo". In his briefing, the head of the mission, the representative of France, noted that the mission had taken place just a few weeks prior to the presidential and legislative elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to be held on 30 July, which marked the end of the transition, and said that the elections had been the first priority of the mission. He noted that, despite security incidents in Ituri and the east, the successful police training programme and the establishment of a European standby reserve force meant that security was unlikely to be a major problem. The members of the mission had informed everyone they had spoken to of the importance of free and fair elections and that the blunders in the pre-election campaign, particularly in the media, which had conveyed messages of exclusion and division on the subject of “Congolese-ness”, needed to be avoided. Looking to the post-election period he stated that the mission had emphasized three priorities, namely, the swift completion of the effort to form an integrated and professional national army; resolving the problem of armed groups in the east; and improving the administration of the State.³⁸

At its 5482nd meeting, on 6 July 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Security Council mission on the electoral process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.³⁹ The Council heard a briefing by the head of the mission, the representative of France, who reiterated his key points on the importance of free and fair elections and the elimination of restrictions on the press, and on the ongoing need for security sector reform.⁴⁰

The representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, while reaffirming the importance of fair access to the media, also stressed the importance of doing everything possible to ensure that messages of hate and exclusion were expunged from the electoral campaign. He stressed his Government’s commitment to holding the elections and ending the transitional period, and noted that once the elections were over his country would be requesting additional assistance from the United Nations in the area of the restructuring and reform of the army and the police as well with the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants.⁴¹

Most speakers stressed the importance of a free media for the successful holding of elections, while cautioning that the media needed to display a responsible attitude. Several speakers also stressed that the real test of the elections would be the way that the results and transition would be handled. They further underlined that many challenges remained ahead.

8. Mission to Afghanistan, 11 to 16 November 2006

The Security Council mission to Afghanistan from 11 to 16 November 2006 was led by the representative of Japan. The primary purpose of the mission was to reaffirm the continued commitment by the international community to the Afghan process and to affirm the Council’s support for the Afghan efforts for security, governance and development. The mission was directed to review progress on counter-narcotics, the disbandment of illegal armed groups, human rights protection, public sector reform, justice sector reform and rule of law issues. It was also tasked with reviewing the status of international assistance. The mission met with the President of Afghanistan and several senior government officials, as well as civil society, the Agency Coordinating Body for Afghan Relief, the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF), the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA) and United Nations agencies. In Pakistan, the mission met with the Foreign Secretary.⁴²

Deliberations of 22 November 2006 (5570th meeting)

At its 5570th meeting, on 22 November 2006, the Council included in its agenda the item entitled “Briefing by the head of the Security Council mission to Afghanistan”. The Council heard a briefing by the head of the mission to Afghanistan, the representative of Japan, who reported that the process of establishing democratic institutions was moving forward in Afghanistan, yet at the same time there was a sense of backsliding among the Afghan people as an increasing insurgency and other social ills challenged the weak and fragile State. He emphasized that security was the number one issue of concern in Afghanistan and that the insurgency had to be dealt with through robust military and law enforcement measures. He further said that the failure of the Government to provide either security or other economic and social services and the widespread corruption in the ranks of State and provincial institutions, including the influence of warlords, had contributed to the loss of faith by the Afghan people. Additional issues of concern were narcotics and the negative impact of the security situation on human rights conditions. He underlined that the Afghan Compact⁴³ remained the best framework for cooperation and promise, but also that further regional cooperation could strengthen the reconstruction of Afghanistan and be of critical importance to peace and security in the region. Lastly he said that the Presidents of Afghanistan and Pakistan stressed a desire for optimal relations between the two countries.⁴⁴

(5581st meeting)

At its 5581st meeting, on 7 December 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Security Council mission to Afghanistan.⁴⁵ The Council heard a briefing by the head of the mission, the representative of Japan, who emphasized the positive developments in Afghanistan, such as economic growth, infrastructure and developments in educational and rural programmes as well as in the security institutions. He reaffirmed the points of concern raised in his briefing at the previous meeting and presented the mission's recommendations for addressing those concerns, for instance by means of the Afghan Compact and increased international commitment to ISAF.⁴⁶

Most speakers welcomed the findings and recommendations of the mission and underlined the vital need for continued United Nations assistance in the stabilization and strengthening of Afghanistan, particularly in the area of security. The representative of the United Kingdom suggested providing international mentors for the counter-narcotics police of Afghanistan to support the Government in its national drug control strategy. Moreover he urged the Government to reconsider any suggestions for abolishing the Ministry of Women's Affairs, as the Ministry played an integral role in ensuring the full participation of women in all aspects of peace consolidation and peacebuilding in Afghanistan.⁴⁷ The representative of France reiterated his delegation's wish that the presence of UNAMA be extended to new provinces, subject to security conditions.⁴⁸ The representative of Afghanistan urged strict compliance of States with the Declaration on

Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism,⁴⁹ as well as resolution 1373 (2001), as this would contribute significantly to peace and stability in Afghanistan. He requested the provision of additional resources to Afghanistan's security institutions in order to increase their effectiveness. He further reiterated his country's need for sustained international support for the implementation of the Afghan Compact and Afghanistan's interim national development strategy.⁵⁰ The representative of Finland, speaking on behalf of the European Union and aligned countries, encouraged the Government of Afghanistan to reinforce its commitment to human rights and reconciliation. She highlighted the European Union's support for the plans to expand the presence of UNAMA if security permitted.⁵¹ The representative of Norway emphasized the importance of enhancing the coordination role of UNAMA, particularly strengthening civil-military coordination. Moreover he stressed the importance of making the empowerment of women a cross-cutting priority, in line with resolution 1325 (2000) on women and peace and security.⁵² The representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran urged that contacts and talks with terrorists or criminals should be avoided if they could be wrongly interpreted as rewarding violence. He expressed his concern over the lack of serious discussion on refugees during the mission's visit and in its report.⁵³ The representative of Pakistan asked other countries to refrain from "exaggerations", "allegations", and rejected "insinuations of Pakistan's providing sanctuaries or of any training and recruitment in Pakistan". He emphasized Pakistan's belief that the Taliban were a common threat to Afghanistan and Pakistan. He stressed his country's demand for a matching effort by ISAF and the Afghan National Army to control the long and difficult border. He said that the international community had avoided seriously addressing the problem of Afghan refugees and that his country planned to return all 3 million refugees to Afghanistan in order to put an end to cross-border allegations.⁵⁴

⁴³ The Afghan Compact was a plan for cooperation between the international community and the Government of Afghanistan.

9. Mission on the Kosovo issue, 25 to 28 April 2007

The Security Council mission on the Kosovo issue from 25 to 28 April 2007 was led by the representative of Belgium. The mission had three objectives, namely, to obtain first-hand information on progress made in Kosovo since the adoption of Council resolution 1244 (1999), including on the implementation of the agreed standards; to receive information directly from the leadership of Serbia and the Provisional Institutions of Self-Government of Kosovo and from representatives of Kosovo's ethnic minorities on the current political, social and economic situation in Kosovo, as well as on the regional situation; and to receive information directly from representatives of the international community, in Brussels and on the ground, on the current political, social and economic situation in Kosovo, as well as on the regional situation. The mission met with the Prime Minister and the President of Serbia, the President and Prime Minister of Kosovo, representatives of Kosovo Serbs, the Islamic community and the Catholic Church, as well as with representatives of non-Serb minorities in Kosovo. Before visiting the region, the mission visited Brussels on 25 April, where it had discussions with the Secretary-General of NATO; the Special Envoy of the European Union for Kosovo, and the European Enlargement Commissioner.⁵⁵

Deliberations of 2 and 10 May 2007 (5672nd and 5673rd meetings)

At its 5672nd meeting, on 2 May 2007, the Council included in its agenda the item entitled "Briefing by the head of the Security Council mission on the Kosovo issue". The Council heard a briefing by the head of the mission, the representative of Belgium, who reported that, at the meetings in Brussels, representatives of NATO and the European Union believed that the status quo was untenable and a delay in the determination of Kosovo's status could put Kosovo and the region at risk. They stressed that the final decision on the status of Kosovo should be endorsed by a Security Council resolution under Chapter VII of the Charter. Whereas the representatives of Serbia, including the Prime Minister and the President, rejected any solution that would entail any form of independence for Kosovo, the representatives of Kosovo, including the Prime Minister and the President, expressed their unanimous support for the Kosovo settlement proposal and status recommendation. Both sides also raised concerns about the return of internally displaced persons, which had been very limited thus far. Whereas most Kosovo representatives including the leaders of the minority communities expressed their commitment to an independent multi-ethnic State, the Kosovo Serb representatives did not view independence as an option. He reported that the Special Representative of the Secretary-General had underlined that the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo had achieved everything that was achievable. It had established Provisional Institutions of Self-Government, rule of law structures and institutions required for a market economy, but further progress was dependent on a resolution of Kosovo's status.⁵⁶

At its 5673rd meeting, on 10 May 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Security Council mission on the Kosovo issue.⁵⁷ The Council heard a briefing by the head of the mission, the representative of Belgium, who emphasized that the security situation in Kosovo was "calm but tense". He reiterated the positions of the parties, but said that, despite the strongly opposed positions, both parties had agreed that the status quo was not sustainable.⁵⁸

Most speakers welcomed the improvement in the security situation and the development of new institutions, but expressed concern at the ongoing stalemate over the status question, stressing that the situation needed careful consideration by the Council. The representative of the Russian Federation said that the status situation had to be resolved on the basis of a compromise between the two parties.⁵⁹ On the other hand, several speakers expressed support for the proposal of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General on Kosovo's future status,⁶⁰ who had recommended independence for Kosovo under international supervision, despite the lack of agreement between the parties.⁶¹ The representative of Panama proposed that the Council adopt the Special Envoy's proposal immediately, but that the decision not come into force until after a six-month waiting period, so that another attempt could be made to reach consensus.⁶² The representative of Peru added that returning Kosovo to Serbian sovereignty was not a realistic solution for this situation.⁶³ The representative of France referred to the “regrettable fact” that the positions of the parties were irreconcilable, which, he added, “would not change with time”. He underlined that it was necessary to give Kosovo a new status and that it was now up to the Security Council to take on its responsibility to guarantee the success of the process.⁶⁴

10. Mission to Addis Ababa, Khartoum, Accra, Abidjan and Kinshasa, 14-21 June 2007

The Security Council mission to Addis Ababa, Khartoum, Accra, Abidjan and Kinshasa, from 14 to 21 June 2007 was led by different members of the Council for different areas. The mission to Addis Ababa, Khartoum and Accra was led by the representatives of South Africa and the United Kingdom. The mission met in Addis Ababa with the Chairperson and other members of the African Union Commission and the African Union Peace and Security Council. In Khartoum and Accra, the mission met with several high-level government officials, among them the President of the Sudan and the President of Ghana. The purpose of the mission to Addis Ababa and Accra was to exchange views with the leadership of the African Union on ways of optimizing the relationship between the Security Council and the African Union in the maintenance of peace and security in Africa. The purpose of the meeting with the President of the Sudan was to reaffirm the Council’s commitment to the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Sudan. In Abidjan, the mission, led by the representative of Peru, met with the President of Côte d’Ivoire and other high-level officials for the purpose of supporting the Ouagadougou Political Agreement⁶⁵ and stressing the need for a final settlement as well as addressing the grave humanitarian and grave socioeconomic crises the country was facing. In Kinshasa, the mission, led by the representative of France, met with the President of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and other government officials. The purpose of the visit was to reaffirm the Council’s commitment to support national efforts to stabilize the east of the country.⁶⁶

Deliberations of 26 June and 16 July 2007 (5706th and 5717th meetings)

At its 5706th meeting, on 26 June 2007, the Council included in its agenda the item entitled “Briefings by the heads of the Security Council mission to Africa”. The Council heard a briefing by the four heads of the mission, the representatives of South Africa, the United Kingdom, Peru and France. The representatives of South Africa and the United Kingdom who jointly led the mission to Addis Ababa, Khartoum, and Accra, emphasized the importance of cooperation with the African Union, particularly with its Peace and Security Council. Moreover the representative of South Africa underlined the need for resource assistance to the African Union in order to support its missions. In regard to the Sudan, the two heads of mission emphasized that Sudanese officials in Khartoum had indicated their positive acceptance of the hybrid force of United Nations and African Union peacekeepers in Darfur.⁶⁷

The representative of Peru, who led the mission to Abidjan, stressed the positive developments in Côte d’Ivoire in regard to the Ouagadougou Political Agreement, such as the determination of the parties to apply the agreement and the overall improvement in security. He noted elements of concern, however, such as active militias in the western part of the country, a high rate of criminality, illegal control posts and little progress in the areas of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and the reform of the security forces.⁶⁸

The representative of France, who led the mission to Kinshasa, stressed the need for security sector reform in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, identifying the role of the opposition after the latest successful elections. He expressed concern particularly over the situation in the Kivus, noting that the instability there was the most pressing concern of the Congolese authorities.⁶⁹

Security Council mission to Addis Ababa, Khartoum, Accra, Abidjan and Kinshasa, 14 to 21 June 2007.⁷⁰ The Council heard a briefing by the four heads of the mission, the representatives of South Africa, the United Kingdom, Peru and France, who again emphasized the events and issues they had addressed in their previous briefing. The representatives of Ghana, Belgium and China supported the conclusions and recommendations of the mission.⁷¹ The representative of Ghana encouraged the use of the African Union framework for post-conflict reconstruction and development as well as the peace and security components of the New Partnership for Africa's Development for future proposals on African Union and United Nations cooperation.⁷² The representative of China stressed the importance of development and construction in the Darfur region of the Sudan.⁷³ The representative of Côte d'Ivoire expressed full support for the mission's recommendations for his country, including the full implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement, yet at the same time asked for a partial lifting of the arms embargo in order to equip the national police.⁷⁴ The representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo conveyed his country's endorsement of the Security Council's recommendations while at the same time expressing concerns over the Kivus, particularly the violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, mainly by militia and other foreign armed groups.⁷⁵ The representative of the African Union highlighted the need for coherent partnership between the two organizations, including systematic information-sharing and harmonization of decision-making procedures. She stressed the need for support in establishing the African Union's peace and security architecture, including an early warning system and a yet-to-be-established African force. Lastly she underlined the need for the hybrid operation for the Sudan to retain an African nature.⁷⁶

11. Mission to Timor-Leste, 24 to 30 November 2007

The Security Council mission to Timor-Leste from 24 to 30 November 2007 was led by the representative of South Africa. The primary purpose of the mission was to reaffirm the commitment of the Security Council to assist the Timorese people to consolidate peace, democratic governance and the rule of law in the post-electoral period in Timor-Leste, to express the Council's full support for the United Nations Integrated Mission in Timor-Leste (UNMIT), and to assess the progress made on the ground in the implementation of the mandate of UNMIT. The mission was also directed to discuss and exchange views with the Timorese authorities on ways and means to assist the country in developing capacities necessary to build on security and democratic and other gains achieved thus far. The mission met with the President of Timor-Leste and high-level government officials, as well as with Bishops of Dili and Baucau.⁷⁷

Deliberations of 6 and 13 December 2007 (5791st and 5801st meetings)

At its 5791st meeting, on 6 December 2007, the Council included in its agenda the item entitled "Briefing by the head of the Security Council mission to Timor-Leste". The Council heard a briefing by the head of mission, the representative of South Africa, who reported that the situation in Timor-Leste remained calm and stable but fragile. The challenges facing the country included differences regarding the country's political direction between the ruling party and the major opposition party, a large number of internally displaced persons, including the so-called "petitioners" who were former soldiers who had deserted; weak institutions, including the security and justice sectors; lack of capacities and difficulties in areas of governance; and also socioeconomic difficulties, which were associated with widespread unemployment and poverty. Regarding UNMIT, he noted that the Government had called for it to be continued. Overall, he stated that the mission had left Timor-Leste convinced that the country was on the right path towards stability, unity, peace and prosperity.⁷⁸ The representative of Timor-Leste stressed that continued United Nations engagement was important to further stabilize the situation, strengthen national institutions and consolidate peace and security.⁷⁹

At its 5801st meeting, on 13 December 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Security Council mission to Timor-Leste, 24 to 30 November 2007.⁸⁰ The Council heard a briefing by the head of the mission, the representative of South Africa. The representative of Timor-Leste again emphasized the positive developments in the country and stressed the areas of concern, such as unemployment and poverty, large numbers of internally displaced persons and political differences among leaders. She underlined the urgent need for resources and assistance for sustainable and long-term development in Timor-Leste, and asked for the UNMIT mandate to be extended by five years, two and a half years to strengthen the police and security sectors and two and a half years focusing on governance, police and security sector assistance and capacity-building. She said that Timor-Leste intended to create strong democratic institutions, rule of law and self-reliance rather than fostering a climate of dependency.⁸¹ Most speakers endorsed the findings and recommendations of the mission and stressed the vital need for continued United Nations assistance in the stabilization and strengthening of Timor-Leste, particularly in the areas of security and justice and institution-building, and the socioeconomic and humanitarian challenges.

The representative of Portugal, speaking on behalf of the European Union and associated countries, reaffirmed the European Union's commitment to the consolidation of peace and democracy in Timor-Leste and called upon the Government of Timor-Leste to create conditions for the return, resettlement and reintegration of the internally displaced persons in their local communities.⁸² The representative of Slovakia expressed his country's wish to send a team of experts from the Department of Peacekeeping Operations to assist and define ways to cope with outstanding issues in the area of training and giving responsibility to the Timorese police.⁸³ The representatives of Slovakia and Panama urged the implementation and compliance with the recommendations of the Independent Special Commission of Inquiry for Timor-Leste in order to strengthen justice.⁸⁴ The representative of Peru expressed his country's support for the proposal of the Special Representative for Timor-Leste that the Secretary-General should deploy a mission of experts to examine the relationship between UNMIT police and the armed forces and the Ministry of the Interior.⁸⁵
