56. Briefings

During the period under review, the Security Council heard a number of briefings on subjects not explicitly connected to items on the Council's agenda. Where appropriate, those briefings have been covered in the sections in the present chapter dealing with the different regions.¹ Briefings given at closed meetings and those that touch on issues cutting across regions are covered here.

The Council heard briefings at closed meetings from the President of the International Court of Justice² and the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General on human settlements issues in Zimbabwe.³

During this period, the Security Council held an increased number of meetings at which it heard directly from the Chairmen of its subsidiary bodies. At its 5106th meeting, on 22 December 2004, the Council heard briefings under the item entitled "Briefings by Chairmen of Security Council Committees and

A complete table of those briefings may be found in the introductory note to chapter V.

The Council also heard a number of briefings that related to humanitarian issues. At its 5792nd meeting, on 6 December 2007, the Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator, who reported on his visit to Ethiopia, the Sudan and Somalia from 26 November to 4 December. In Ethiopia, he met with the Government to discuss the humanitarian crisis in the Somali region, where the conflict between Government forces and the Ogaden National Liberation Front conflict had led to fears of famine. In the Sudan, he visited the Darfur region to review the implementation of the joint communiqué of the Government of the Sudan and the United Nations on facilitation of humanitarian activities in Darfur and to assess the humanitarian situation on the ground. He underlined that while the joint communiqué had helped to reduce some of the bureaucratic obstacles hindering relief agencies, overall the situation was deteriorating and attacks against humanitarian workers were becoming more common. Finally, in Somalia he visited the area outside of Mogadishu where more than 200,000 internally displaced people had gathered and reported on the relief efforts there.

Following his briefing, all Council members made statements and welcomed the briefing, expressing concern at the humanitarian challenges in those regions. Several speakers also underlined the need for the earliest possible deployment of the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID) and the strengthening of the African Union Mission in Somalia.⁵

At the 4973rd and 5353rd meetings, on 20 May 2004 and 24 January 2006, respectively, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees briefed the Council, stressing the link between forcible displacement and international peace and security, and addressed the issue of the sustainable return of displaced populations and its positive impact on the creation of durable peace and stability. She also made proposals in the areas of peace operations and peacebuilding, noting the need for more cross-border peacekeeping operations where appropriate. The briefings also provided an overview of the situations relating to refugees and internally displaced persons in several countries and regions, including Darfur in the Sudan, Chad, Sierra Leone, Afghanistan and the Great Lakes region including Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Following the briefings, members of the Council made statements and asked questions, and the High Commissioner then responded to points raised by the members of the Council.⁶

Chapter IX

Decisions in the exercise by the Security Council of its other functions and powers

Note

During the period under review, the Security Council took a number of decisions in the exercise of its functions and powers other than those relating to the maintenance of international peace and security. The Council's practice relating to those decisions is addressed elsewhere in this Supplement.

The practice of the Council in connection with (a) the appointment of the Secretary-General, and (b) the election of members of the International Court of Justice, is dealt with in chapter VI.

Decisions of the Security Council on the question of new Members to the United Nations are dealt with in chapter VII.

Introductory note

Chapter X deals with the practice of the Security Council aimed at promoting and implementing recommendations and methods or procedures for the peaceful settlement of disputes within the framework of Articles 33 to 38 of Chapter VI and Articles 11 and 99 of the Charter of the United Nations.

The period under review was marked by a considerable expansion in the scope of Council action within the framework of Chapter VI of the Charter. By a number of decisions relating to conflict prevention and post-conflict peacebuilding, the Council, further, underlined the need for a broad strategy for conflict prevention and peaceful settlement of disputes in line with Chapter VI. While expressing its commitment to and actively supporting the peaceful settlement of disputes, the Council reiterated its call upon the Member States to settle their disputes by peaceful means as set out in Chapter VI, including the use of regional preventive mechanisms and the International Court of Justice. Emphasizing the need for a coordinated, coherent and integrated approach to post-conflict peacebuilding and reconciliation with a view to achieving sustainable peace, the Council recognized the vital role of the United Nations in preventing conflicts, assisting parties to conflicts to end hostilities and emerge towards recovery, reconstruction and development, and in mobilizing sustained international attention and assistance.

Mindful of the need to respect the principle of sovereignty and non-interference in matters of domestic jurisdiction of States, the Council increasingly expanded the use of a number of instruments aimed at preventing the outbreak and/or the recurrence of conflicts including, Security Council missions and fact-finding missions, to determine whether any situation might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute; support for the good offices of the Secretary-General and his special representatives and envoys; establishment of special political missions in post-conflict situations which included in their mandates elements relating to the implementation of peace agreements and/or ceasefire agreements as well as to political dialogue, national reconciliation and capacity-building; and inclusion of elements of conflict prevention and peacebuilding in integrated peacekeeping operations.

As chapter VIII of this Supplement sets out a full account of the Security Council's proceedings, including with regard to the peaceful settlement of disputes, the present chapter does not deal with the practice of the Council aimed at the peaceful settlement of disputes in a comprehensive manner. Instead, it focuses on material selected to highlight how the provisions of Chapter VI of the Charter were applied and interpreted in the relevant decisions and deliberations of the Council.

The presentation and classification of the relevant material is designed to set out in readily accessible form the practices and procedures to which the Council has had recourse. As in the previous Supplement to the Repertoire, covering the period 2000-2003, the material has been categorized under thematic headings rather than individual Articles of the Charter, so as to avoid ascribing to specific Articles of the Charter, Council proceedings or decisions, which do not themselves refer to any specific Article.

Part I illustrates how, under Article 35, Member States and States which are not members of the United Nations have brought new disputes and situations to the attention of the Security Council. This part also touches upon the functions and practice of the General Assembly and the Secretary-General, under Articles 11 (3) and 99 of the Charter respectively, in calling the attention of the Security Council to matters which are likely to threaten the maintenance of international peace and security. Part II sets out investigative and fact-finding activities initiated and performed by the Council that may be deemed to fall under the scope of Article 34. Part III provides an overview of the recommendations and decisions of the Council with regard to the pacific settlement of disputes. Specifically, it illustrates the recommendations of the Council to the parties to a conflict, and its support for the endeavours of the Secretary-General in the peaceful settlement of disputes. Part IV reflects constitutional discussions within the Security Council on the interpretation or application of the provisions of Chapter VI of the Charter.

Article 11

3. The General Assembly may call the attention of the Security Council to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security.

Article 33

1. The parties to any dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, shall, first of all, seek a solution by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice.

2. The Security Council shall, when it deems necessary, call upon the parties to settle their dispute by such means.

Article 34

The Security Council may investigate any dispute, or any situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, in order to determine whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 35

1. Any Member of the United Nations may bring any dispute, or any situation of the nature referred to in Article 34, to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly.

2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may bring to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly any dispute to which it is a party if it accepts in advance, for the purposes of the dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the present Charter.

3. The proceedings of the General Assembly in respect of matters brought to its attention under this Article will be subject to the provisions of Articles 11 and 12.

Article 36

- 1. The Security Council may, at any stage of a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 or of a situation of like nature, recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment.*
- 2. The Security Council should take into consideration any procedures for the settlement of the dispute which have already been adopted by the parties.*
- 3. In making recommendations under this Article the Security Council should also take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court.*

Article 37

- 1. Should the parties to a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 fail to settle it by the means indicated in that Article, they shall refer it to the Security Council.*
- 2. If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it shall decide whether to take action under Article 36 or to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate.*

Article 38

Without prejudice to the provisions of Articles 33 to 37, the Security Council may, if all the parties to any dispute so request, make recommendations to the parties with a view to a pacific settlement of the dispute.

Article 99

The Secretary-General may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security.

Part I

Referral of disputes and situations to the Security Council

Within the framework of the Charter, Articles 35 (1) and (2) and 37 (1) are generally regarded as the provisions on the basis of which States may or, in the case of Article 37 (1), shall, refer disputes to the Security Council. The practice of the Council in this regard is described below.

The first section, “Referrals by States”, provides an overview of the referrals of disputes and situations to the Security Council under Article 35 (1) and (2). During the period under review, disputes and situations were in general referred to the Security Council by means of a communication by Members of the United Nations, by those directly affected and/or through third States and regional groups. Disputes or situations referred to the Council during the period and on which the Council convened meetings under new agenda items are listed in a table at the end of part I. Following the trend of previous periods, the number of new referrals to the Council decreased during the period 2004-2007.

The second section, “Nature of matters referred to the Security Council”, outlines the subject matter of the relevant communications of Member States to the Council. The section “Action requested of the Security Council” analyses the type of action requested of the Council by Member States submitting a dispute or a situation to the Council.

The sections “Referrals by the Secretary-General” and “Referrals by the General Assembly” refer to Articles 11 (3) and 99 of the Charter, according to which the General Assembly and the Secretary-General, respectively, may refer to the Security Council matters which are likely to endanger international peace and security. During the period under review, neither the General Assembly nor the Secretary-General explicitly referred any matters to the Security Council.

Referrals by States

According to Article 35 of the Charter, which in the absence of evidence pointing to other Charter provisions is commonly regarded as the basis on which matters are referred to the Security Council by States, any Member State may bring to the Council’s attention any “dispute” or “situation which might lead to” international friction or give rise to a dispute. While Article 35 was expressly referred to in one communication, most communications did not cite any specific Article as the basis on which they were submitted.¹

According to Article 35 (2), a State which is not a member of the United Nations may bring to the attention of the Security Council any dispute to which it is a party if it accepts in advance, for the purposes of the dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the Charter. During the period under consideration, no States which were not members of the United Nations submitted any dispute or situation to the attention of the Council. Situations were referred to the Security Council exclusively under the provisions of Article 35 (1), directly by the affected Member States, either alone² or through

² See, for example, the following letters addressed to the President of the Security Council: letter dated 30 November 2004 from the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo requesting the Security Council “to meet on an urgent basis in order to condemn firmly this further act of aggression by the Rwandese Republic against the Democratic Republic of the Congo” (S/2004/935); letter dated 4 July 2006 from the representative of Japan requesting an immediate meeting of the Security Council to consider “the launch of ballistic missiles or unidentified flying vehicles by the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea” (S/2006/481); letter dated 13 July 2006 from the representative of Lebanon requesting an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the “grave situation resulting from the latest Israeli acts of aggression in Lebanon” (S/2006/517); letter dated 31 July 2006 from the representative of Lebanon requesting an urgent meeting of the Council to discuss “the latest Israeli massacre in Qana, southern Lebanon, and the continuous escalation” (S/2006/596); and letter dated 8 August 2007 from the representative of Georgia requesting a meeting of the Security Council in the nearest future in order to address the issue of the bombardment of the territory of Georgia, which “threatened the peace and security of a State Member of the United Nations” (S/2007/480).

communications from third States and/or regional groups.³

Communications by which new disputes or situations were referred to the Council and based on which the Council convened meetings under new agenda items during the period under review are listed in the table below. It should be borne in mind that the adoption of a new agenda item does not necessarily imply the existence of a new dispute or situation, as it can simply be a change in the formulation of an item already before the Council.

(S/2005/485 and S/2005/489); letter dated 10 April 2006 from the representative of Bahrain, in his capacity as Chairman of the Group of Arab States and on behalf of the States members of the League of Arab States, requesting an immediate meeting of the Council to consider the developments in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (S/2006/227); letter dated 11 April 2006 from the representative of Yemen, in his capacity as Chairman of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) Group, requesting an immediate meeting of the Council to consider the developments in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (S/2006/239); letter dated 12 April 2006 from the representative of Malaysia, in his capacity as Chairman of the Coordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement, supporting the request made by the States members of the League of Arab States for the convening of a meeting of the Council to consider developments in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (S/2006/240); letter dated 15 September 2006 from the representative of the United States of America requesting a meeting to consider the situation in Myanmar and to hear a briefing from the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs on the situation in that country and the status and progress of the Secretary-General’s mission of good offices (S/2006/742); letter dated 6 November 2006 from the representative of Qatar, in his capacity as the Chairman of the Group of Arab States, requesting an urgent meeting of the Council to consider the situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question (S/2006/868); letter dated 7 November 2006 from the representative of Azerbaijan, in his capacity as Chairman of the OIC Group and on behalf of States members of OIC, requesting an urgent meeting of the Council to consider Israeli aggression in the Gaza Strip and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (S/2006/869); and letter dated 8 November 2006 from the representative of Cuba, in his capacity as Chairman of the Coordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement and on behalf of the States members of the Movement, requesting an urgent meeting of the Council to consider the item entitled “The situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question” (S/2006/871).

In some instances, the Council did not respond positively to requests to convene a meeting. Whereas under Article 35 States have the power to draw the Council's attention to a matter, this does not imply the Council's obligation to consider the matter. For instance, by a letter dated 8 August 2007 addressed to the President of the Council,⁴ the representative of Georgia, explicitly referring to Article 35, requested the Council to convene a meeting in order to "address the issue of the bombardment of the territory of Georgia, which threatened the peace and security" of State Member of the United Nations, namely, Georgia". No meeting of the Security Council was held in response to that request.

Communications by which Member States merely conveyed information, but did not request a Council meeting or other specific Council action, have not been included in the table, as such communications are not considered referrals under Article 35. Furthermore, as was the case in the previous Supplement, the table does not include communications referring to new developments in or deterioration of ongoing conflicts of which the Council was already seized.

The table does however contain two items relating to the situation in the Middle East, because two communications from the representative of Lebanon,⁵ requesting the Security Council to convene an urgent meeting, brought to the attention of the Council a new situation arising in Lebanon and Israel, leading to hostilities and armed conflict.

Nature of matters referred to the Security Council

During the period under review, matters that were brought to the Council's attention were usually referred to as "situations".⁶ In some instances, the subject matter of the relevant communications was referred to as "developments",⁷ "violations of international law"⁸ or described in narrative form.⁹

It should also be noted that, while the Charter provisions setting out the basis on which States may bring matters likely to endanger international peace and security to the attention of the Council appears in Chapter VI of the Charter, the subject matter of communications submitted to the Council and the type of action requested in relation thereto are not limited by the scope of that Chapter. For instance, during the period under review, several communications submitted to the Council described situations as threatening or endangering regional peace and security¹⁰ and/or acts of aggression.¹¹ In connection with these communications, however, the Council did not always determine the existence of a threat to the peace, a breach of the peace or an aggression.

Action requested of the Security Council

In their communications to the Security Council, States for the most part requested the Council to convene an urgent meeting to consider the matters (see table). In a number of cases, the submitting States called upon the Council, in general terms, to act on the specific issue brought to its attention.

For example, in a letter dated 30 November 2004 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹² the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo requested the Security Council to condemn firmly the act of aggression by the Rwandese Republic against the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

By a letter dated 5 January 2006 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹³ the representative of Canada, drawing attention to the humanitarian situation in northern Uganda, requested that the Security Council place the issue of northern Uganda on its agenda.

In another instance, by a letter dated 15 September 2006 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁴ the representative of the United States of America, requested that members of the Council receive a briefing from the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs on the situation in Myanmar and the status and progress of the Secretary-General's good offices mission.

The representative of the Sudan, finally, in another instance, by a letter dated 11 April 2007 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁵ requested the Council "to deal swiftly and decisively with the aggression [against the Sudan], of which the States sponsors of the Tripoli Agreement have been informed, by conducting an immediate investigation and taking the necessary measures within the framework of its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations".

Referrals by the Secretary-General

While Article 99 stipulates that the Secretary-General may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security, the Secretary-General did not invoke Article 99, either expressly or by implication, during the period under review. He did, however, draw the attention of the Security Council to a number of deteriorating situations which were already on the Council's agenda, and requested the Council to consider taking appropriate action. For example, in connection with the situation in Chad and the Sudan, by a letter dated 13 April 2006 addressed to the President of the

Security Council,¹⁶ the Secretary-General transmitted a letter dated 13 April 2006 from the Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs and African Integration of Chad, in which the Government of Chad conveyed its concern at the “Sudan’s aggression against Chad and the threat to State institutions”, and urged the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures prescribed by the Charter to put an end to the aggression against Chad.

By a letter dated 22 November 2006 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁷ the Secretary-General conveyed the request submitted by the Government of Nepal and the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist), the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, to provide United Nations assistance

¹⁶ S/2006/256. In response, the Council convened a meeting and adopted a presidential statement, urging the Governments of the Sudan and Chad to abide by their obligations under the Tripoli Agreement of 8 February 2006 and to urgently start implementing the confidence-building measures which had been voluntarily agreed upon; in addition, the Council stated that both the Sudan and Chad must refrain from any actions that violated the border (S/PRST/2006/19).

in monitoring the arrangements related to the management of arms and armed personnel, and in monitoring the electoral process. The Secretary-General made a recommendation for an immediate and concrete response of the United Nations with regard to the request. By a statement of the President dated 1 December 2006, the Security Council noted the request to provide assistance in implementing key aspects of the Agreement, and expressed its readiness to consider the Secretary-General’s formal proposals as soon as the technical assessment was complete.¹⁸

Referrals by the General Assembly

Under Article 11 (3) of the Charter, the General Assembly may call the attention of the Security Council to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security. During the period under review, the General Assembly did not refer any matters to the Security Council under this Article.¹⁹

Part II Investigation of disputes and fact-finding

Note

Article 34 of the Charter provides that “the Security Council may investigate any dispute, or any situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, in order to determine whether the continuation of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security”. However, Article 34 does not exclude other organs from performing investigative functions nor does it limit the Council’s general competence to obtain knowledge of the relevant facts of any dispute or situation by dispatching a fact-finding mission.

During the period under consideration, the Council performed and initiated, or requested the Secretary-General to undertake, a number of investigative and fact-finding activities that may be deemed to fall within the scope of Article 34 or be related to its provisions. Part II containing an overview of the practice of the Security Council in connection with Article 34 of the Charter, including instances in which the Council endorsed the Secretary-General’s initiative to establish bodies entrusted with fact-finding technical assessment mission.²¹ In another case, the Council established an international independent investigation commission based in Lebanon.²²

In addition to the above-mentioned fact-finding and investigative missions, the Council continued to request the Secretary-General to report on developments in connection to matters of which the Council was seized. Furthermore, in a number of instances, the Council dispatched missions consisting of Council members to conflict areas, in West Africa,²³ Central Africa,²⁴ Haiti,²⁵ Ethiopia and Eritrea,²⁶ the Sudan and Chad,²⁷ the Democratic Republic of the Congo,²⁸ Afghanistan,²⁹ Kosovo,³⁰ Addis Ababa, Khartoum, Accra, Abidjan and Kinshasa,³¹ and Timor-Leste.³² The Council missions were not expressly charged with investigative tasks, but did serve, inter alia, to form an impression of the respective situations on the ground.

The two case studies below illustrate Council action on investigation and fact-finding. The first, in connection with the reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan, related to the initiative of the Secretary-General, supported by the Security Council, to establish a Commission of Inquiry to investigate reports of violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law in Darfur, Sudan. The second, in connection with the situation in the Middle East, gives ²¹ In three instances during the period under consideration, the Council requested the Secretary-General to initiate or perform fact-finding or investigative functions. In connection with the situation in Côte d'Ivoire, by a statement of the President dated 25 May 2004, condemning the violations of human rights and international humanitarian law committed in Côte d'Ivoire, including those that occurred in Abidjan on 25-26 March, the Council requested the Secretary-General to establish an international commission of inquiry, as recommended by the commission of inquiry of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (S/PRST/2004/17). In connection with the reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan, the Council requested that the Secretary-General rapidly establish an international commission of inquiry in order to immediately investigate reports of violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law in Darfur by all parties, to determine also whether or not acts of genocide had occurred, and to identify the perpetrators of such violations with a view to ensuring that those responsible were held accountable (resolution 1564 (2004)). In connection with the situation in Somalia, the Council requested the Secretary-General to send a technical assessment mission to the African Union headquarters and Somalia to report on the political and security situation and the possibility of a United Nations peacekeeping operation following the African Union's deployment (resolution 1744 (2007)).

²² In connection with the situation in the Middle East, the Council decided to establish an international independent investigation commission based in Lebanon to assist the Lebanese authorities in their investigation of all aspects of the assassination of the former Prime Minister Rafiq Hariri, including to help to identify its perpetrators, sponsors, organizers and their accomplices. It further requested the Secretary-General to consult urgently with the Government of Lebanon with a view to facilitating the establishment and operation of the Commission pursuant to its mandate and terms of reference, and requested also that he report to the Council accordingly and notify it of the date the Commission began its full operations (resolution 1595 (2005)). Case 1

Reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan

By a letter dated 10 September 2004 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³³ the representatives of Australia, Canada and New Zealand expressed concern about the evolution of events in Darfur and recommended that the Council call upon the Secretary-General to establish, as a matter of urgency, an impartial commission of experts to investigate allegations of war crimes and crimes against humanity, in particular sexual violence, with a view to providing the Secretary-General with its conclusions on the evidence.

In response to the request, the Council met on 18 September 2004 to consider the reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan. By resolution 1564 (2004), adopted at the meeting, the Council requested that the Secretary-General rapidly establish an international commission of inquiry in order to investigate reports of violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law in Darfur by all parties, to determine also whether or not acts of genocide had occurred, and to identify the perpetrators of such violations with a view to ensuring that those responsible were held accountable, and called on all parties to cooperate fully with such a commission. Pursuant to the request by the Council, by a letter dated 4 October 2004 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³⁴ the Secretary-General informed the latter that he had established the International Commission of Inquiry that would, inter alia, investigate reports of serious violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law committed in Darfur by all parties in the current conflict.

By resolution 1574 (2004) of 19 November 2004, the Council called on all parties to cooperate fully with the International Commission of Inquiry established by the Secretary-General, as described in his letter of 4 October 2004 to the President of the Security Council, the outcome of which would be communicated to the Security Council.

By a letter dated 31 January 2005 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the International Commission of Inquiry on Darfur.³⁵ In the report, the Commission concluded, inter alia, that the Government of the Sudan and the Janjaweed militia were responsible for a number of violations of international human rights and humanitarian law. It also recommended the referral of the crimes in Darfur to the International Criminal Court.

In response to the recommendations outlined in the report, the Council met on 31 March 2005 to consider the reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan.³⁶ The Council adopted resolution 1593 (2005), by which it took note of the report of the International Commission of Inquiry on violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law in Darfur and referred the situation in Darfur since 1 July 2002 to the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court.

The situation in the Middle East

Following the terrorist bombing in Beirut, on 14 February 2005 that killed the former Prime Minister of Lebanon, Rafiq Hariri, the Council, by a statement of the President dated 15 February 2005,³⁷ requested the Secretary-General to follow closely the situation in Lebanon and to report urgently on the circumstances, causes and consequences of this terrorist act.

In response to that request, the Secretary-General, by a letter dated 24 March 2005 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³⁸ transmitted the report of the fact-finding mission inquiring into the causes, circumstances and consequences of the assassination of the former Prime Minister. The mission noted that the Lebanese investigation process suffered from serious flaws and had neither the capacity nor the commitment to reach a satisfactory and credible conclusion, and recommended that an international independent commission be established.

³⁸ S/2005/203.

By a letter dated 29 March 2005 addressed to the Secretary-General,³⁹ the representative of Lebanon stated that his Government approved the decision of the Security Council concerning the establishment of an international commission of inquiry into the assassination of the former Prime Minister, and that it was ready to cooperate with the commission within the framework of Lebanese sovereignty and of its legal system.

By identical letters dated 29 March 2005 addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council,⁴⁰ the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted a letter from the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic, which while critical of aspects of the report, stated that the country would support the position of Lebanon in any investigation of that event, given the fact that it was most solicitous of Lebanon's sovereignty, independence and prosperity.

At its 5160th meeting on 7 April 2005, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1595 (2005), by which it decided to establish an international independent investigation commission based in Lebanon to assist the Lebanese authorities in their investigation of all aspects of this terrorist act, including to help to identify its perpetrators, sponsors, organizers and their accomplices.

By a letter dated 20 October 2005 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁴¹ the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the International Independent Investigation Commission. The Commission concluded that, building on the findings of the Commission and Lebanese investigations to date and on the basis of the material and documentary evidence collected, and the leads pursued, there was converging evidence pointing at both Lebanese and Syrian involvement in the terrorist act. It also concluded that the investigation should be carried forward by the appropriate Lebanese judicial and security authorities, who had proved during the investigation that, with international assistance and support, they could move ahead and at times take the lead in an effective and professional manner.

At its 5297th meeting, on 31 October 2005, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1636 (2005), by which it, inter alia, took note with extreme concern of the Commission's conclusion that there was converging evidence pointing at the involvement of both Lebanese and Syrian officials in the terrorist act. It called on the Syrian Arab Republic to cooperate fully and unconditionally with the Commission and insisted that it not interfere in Lebanese affairs.

Speaking after the vote, several Council members said that they were sending a message of support to the Lebanese people and the Commission, and a message to the Syrian Arab Republic that it must cooperate with the investigation.⁴² A number of speakers warned that the Council would decide on the consequences of any failure by the Syrian authorities to meet their obligations.⁴³ The United States said that with resolution 1636 (2005), the United Nations was taking a step to hold the Syrian Arab Republic accountable for any further failure to cooperate with the Commission's investigations and to consider further action if necessary.⁴⁴ Many speakers also emphasized the importance of bringing to justice those responsible for what they called a "heinous act".⁴⁵ The representative of Benin stated that, in his view, the resolution had no other goal than to give the Commission the means to find out all the details about the terrorist attack that the Council had unanimously condemned in order that the perpetrators might be brought to justice and that law might prevail.⁴⁶

Reiterating his country's appreciation for the solid work of the Commission, the representative of Lebanon was convinced that identifying and punishing the perpetrators of the crime as well as the establishment of justice would greatly contribute to the consolidation of Lebanon's national unity and to its security and stability, as well as that of the region. He called on all concerned parties to cooperate sincerely and seriously with the Commission so that justice could take its proper course.⁴⁷

⁴² S/PV.5297, p. 3 (France); p. 4 (United Kingdom); p. 5 (United States); p. 8 (China); p. 11 (Russian Federation, Argentina); and p. 14 (United Republic of Tanzania).

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic stated that the fundamental criticism of the Commission's report was that it proceeded from the presumption that his country was guilty of committing that crime, rather than presuming its innocence, and that the report did not, instead, seek the facts and evidence that would lead to the real perpetrator. He further stated that it was clear to anyone who had followed the issue that the Syrian Arab Republic had fully cooperated throughout.⁴⁸

By a letter dated 13 December 2005 addressed to the Secretary-General,⁴⁹ the representative of Lebanon forwarded a letter from the Prime Minister of Lebanon, in which he requested that the Council establish a tribunal of an international character to try all those who were found responsible for the assassination of the former Prime Minister, and to expand the mandate of the International Independent Investigation Commission or create an independent international investigation commission to investigate the assassination attempts and assassinations and explosions that had occurred in Lebanon since October 2004.

In response, by resolution 1644 (2005) of 15 December 2005, the Council, having examined carefully the report of the International Independent Investigation Commission, acknowledged the request of the Government of Lebanon that a tribunal of an international character try those eventually charged with involvement in the assassination, and requested the Secretary-General to help the Government to identify the nature and scope of the international assistance needed in that regard. The Council also, took note with satisfaction of the progress of the inquiry achieved since the last report of the Commission to the Security Council, and noted with extreme concern that, while the inquiry was not yet complete, it confirmed its previous conclusions and that the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic had yet to provide the Commission with the full and unconditional cooperation demanded in resolution 1636 (2005).

On 29 March 2006, by resolution 1664 (2006), the Council requested the Secretary-General to negotiate an agreement with the Government of Lebanon aimed at establishing a tribunal of an international character based on the highest international standards of criminal justice, and acknowledged that the adoption of the legal basis of and framework for the tribunal would not prejudice the gradual phasing-in of its various components and would not predetermine the timing of the commencement of its operations, which would depend on the progress of the investigation.

Speaking after the adoption of the resolution, the representative of Lebanon welcomed the resolution, and stated that the tribunal would follow up on the findings of the investigation concerning the assassination of the former Prime Minister and his companions.⁵⁰

Following negotiations between Lebanon and the United Nations, by resolution 1757 (2007) of 30 May 2007, the Council decided that the provisions of the Agreement on the establishment of a Special Tribunal for Lebanon would enter into force no later than 10 June 2007.⁵¹

Part III

Decisions of the Security Council concerning the pacific settlement of disputes

Note

Chapter VI of the Charter contains various provisions according to which the Security Council may make recommendations to the parties to a dispute or situation. According to Article 33 (2) of the Charter, the Council may call on the parties to settle their disputes by such peaceful means as provided for in Article 33 (1). According to Article 36 (1) the Council may "recommend appropriate methods or procedures of adjustment". Article 37 (2) envisages that the Council may "recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate”, and Article 38 provides that it may “make recommendations to the parties with a view to a pacific settlement of the dispute”.

As part of its efforts aimed at the peaceful settlement of conflicts within the framework of Chapter VI of the Charter, the Council frequently endorsed or supported peace agreements concluded by the parties to a conflict, or recommended various methods or procedures of settlement, such as bilateral or multilateral negotiations,⁵² political settlement or dialogue aimed at achieving national reconciliation,⁵³ democratic means such as elections or the establishment of a representative government,⁵⁴ and peace-consolidating activities such as disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes for former combatants.⁵⁵ In several instances, the Council made recommendations with regard to good offices, mediation or conciliation efforts to be undertaken by the Secretary-General,⁵⁶ or with regard to such efforts undertaken by Governments of neighbouring countries⁵⁷ or regional leaders,⁵⁸ or undertaken by regional arrangements,⁵⁹ by expressing its support and calling upon the parties to a conflict to cooperate with such efforts.

During the period under review, the Council dealt with a growing number of intra-State conflicts characterized by inter-ethnic and interreligious violence, collapse of central State authority, humanitarian crises and implications threatening the stability of neighbouring countries. For example, in connection with the situation in Somalia, by a statement of the President dated 13 July 2006,⁶⁰ the Council welcomed the agreement reached in Khartoum on 22 June 2006 between the Transitional Federal Government and the Islamic Courts. It emphasized the importance of dialogue between the two parties. In connection with the reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan, by resolution 1564 (2004), the Council called upon the Government of the Sudan and the rebel groups, particularly the Justice and Equality Movement and the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army, to work together under the auspices of the African Union to reach a political solution in the negotiations held in Abuja under the leadership of President Obasanjo.

In setting out the parameters for a peace process or settlement to achieve its objective and to prevent a relapse into conflict, the Council often made precise recommendations. For instance, in connection with the item entitled “The role of civil society in conflict prevention and the pacific settlement of disputes”, explicitly acting under Chapter VI of the Charter, the Council underlined the need for a broad strategy for conflict prevention and pacific settlement of disputes in line with Chapter VI of the Charter.⁶¹ Similarly, in connection with the item entitled “Strengthening international law: rule of law and maintenance of international peace and security”, the Council expressed its commitment to and active support of the peaceful settlement of disputes and reiterated its call upon the Member States to settle their disputes by peaceful means as set forth in Chapter VI of the Charter, including by the use of regional preventive mechanisms and the International Court of Justice.⁶²

In a number of instances, the Council, acting on the basis of relevant Security Council decisions, dispatched Security Council missions to conflict areas to, inter alia, express its support for efforts towards peaceful settlement of disputes undertaken by either local actors or regional organizations and to examine how those efforts could be best supported. For instance, in the terms of reference for its mission to Central Africa from 21 to 25 November 2004, the Council stated that the mission would “call on all the components of the Transition to honour their commitments under the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo signed in Pretoria on 17 December 2002”.⁶³ In the terms of reference for its mission to the Sudan and Chad from 4 to 10 June 2006, the Council noted that the mission would “call on the parties to the Darfur Peace Agreement to respect their commitments and implement the agreement without delay, and urge those parties that have not signed the Darfur Peace Agreement to do so without delay and not to act in any way that would impede implementation of the agreement”.⁶⁴ In the terms of reference for its mission to Africa from 14 to 21 June 2007, the Council stated that one of the objectives of the mission would be to “encourage the Government of the Sudan and the non-signatory parties to engage constructively in the Darfur Peace Process with a view to finding lasting peace in the Sudan, in particular support for the forthcoming talks to be convened by the United Nations and African Union special envoys on Darfur”.⁶⁵ In the terms of reference for its mission to Timor-Leste from 24 to 30 November 2007, the Council noted that the mission would “encourage the Government, the Parliament, the political parties and the people of Timor-Leste to continue to work together and engage in political dialogue and consolidate peace, democracy, the rule of law, security sector reform, sustainable social and economic development and national reconciliation in the country”.⁶⁶

This part of the chapter provides an overview of the Council’s practice in relation to the peaceful settlement of disputes by highlighting relevant decisions adopted by the Council during the period under review. As it is not always possible to ascertain the specific provisions of the Charter on which individual Council decisions have been based, the overview will aim to set out relevant decisions in a systematic order, without ascribing them to specific Articles of the Charter. Since Council decisions relating to investigation and fact-finding missions are already covered in part II of this chapter, they will not be reflected here.

The practice of the Council under Chapter VI of the Charter is described below in three sections. Section A deals with the decisions of the Council on general and thematic issues touching upon the provisions of Chapter VI. In particular, it outlines the decisions of the Council relating to the prevention of armed conflicts and the maintenance of international peace and security. Section B illustrates various ways in which the Council, in dealing with specific situations under its consideration, encouraged and supported efforts in the peaceful settlement of disputes. Section C provides an overview of the decisions of the Council, within the framework of its efforts towards the pacific settlement of disputes, involving the Secretary-General. Section D briefly illustrates various ways in which the Council, in dealing with specific situations under its consideration, encouraged and supported efforts by regional organizations in the peaceful settlement of disputes.

A. Decisions of the Security Council on general and thematic issues relating to the pacific settlement of disputes

This section provides an overview of the decisions of the Council on general and thematic issues relating to the pacific settlement of disputes. By such decisions, the Council underlined the centrality of Chapter VI of the Charter in the United Nations system of collective security and emphasized its commitment to addressing the prevention and recurrence of armed conflicts in all regions of the world. The Council also acknowledged the importance of the settlement of disputes by peaceful means and of promoting necessary preventive action in the maintenance of international peace and security.

During the period under review, the Peacebuilding Commission was established as a subsidiary body of the Security Council and the General Assembly, by resolutions adopted concurrently by the two organs on 20 December 2005.⁶⁷ The main purpose of the Peacebuilding Commission was to bring together all relevant actors to marshal resources and to advise on and propose integrated strategies for post-conflict peacebuilding and recovery.

Protection of civilians in armed conflict

By a statement of the President dated 14 December 2004, the Council recognized the importance of a comprehensive, coherent and action-oriented approach, including early planning, to the protection of civilians in situations of armed conflict. It stressed the need to adopt a broad strategy of conflict prevention which addressed the root causes of armed conflict in a comprehensive manner in order to enhance the protection of civilians on a long-term basis, including by promoting sustainable development, poverty eradication, national reconciliation, good governance, democracy, the rule of law and respect for and protection of human rights.⁶⁸

By resolution 1674 (2006) of 28 April 2006, the Council called upon all parties concerned to ensure that all peace processes, peace agreements and post-conflict recovery and reconstruction planning had regard for the special needs of women and children and included specific measures for the protection of civilians, including the cessation of attacks on civilians; the facilitation of the provision of humanitarian assistance; the creation of conditions conducive to the voluntary, safe, dignified and sustainable return of refugees and internally displaced persons; the facilitation of early access to education and training; the re-establishment of the rule of law; and the ending of impunity.

Post-conflict peacebuilding

By a statement of the President dated 26 May 2005, the Council acknowledged that serious attention to the longer term process of peacebuilding in all its multiple dimensions was critically important and that adequate support for peacebuilding activities could help to prevent countries from relapsing into conflict. It further stressed the need to ensure adequate and timely financing for peacebuilding priorities at all stages of the peace process, and the need for sustained financial investment in peacebuilding over the medium to longer-term period of recovery. The Council recognized the importance of rapid initiation of peacebuilding activities to meet immediate needs and encouraged the building of capabilities that could be incorporated rapidly.⁶⁹

By resolution 1645 (2005) of 20 December 2005, emphasizing the need for a coordinated, coherent and integrated approach to post-conflict peacebuilding and reconciliation with a view to achieving sustainable peace, the Council recognized the vital role of the United Nations in preventing conflicts, assisting parties to conflicts to end hostilities and emerge towards recovery, reconstruction and development and in mobilizing sustained international attention and assistance.

The role of the Security Council in humanitarian crises: challenges, lessons learned and the way ahead

By a statement of the President dated 12 July 2005, the Council reiterated the importance it attached to the promotion and urgent restoration of justice and the rule of law in post-conflict societies and in promoting national reconciliation, democratic development, and human rights. It recognized that ending impunity was important in peace agreements and could contribute to efforts to come to terms with past abuses and to achieve national reconciliation to prevent future conflict. The Council further acknowledged that, in post-conflict societies, successful peacebuilding rested on the premise that protection of civilians, the promotion of the rule of law and transitional justice, disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, reintegration and rehabilitation of former combatants, security sector reform and democratic, economic and social reform were integrated elements and that national ownership played an important role which should be supported by the international community, including the regional organizations.⁷⁰

Children and armed conflict

By resolution 1612 (2005) of 26 July 2005, the Council called upon all parties concerned to ensure that the protection, rights and well-being of children affected by armed conflict were specifically integrated into all peace processes, peace agreements and post-conflict recovery and reconstruction planning and programmes.

Threats to international peace and security

By resolution 1625 (2005) of 14 September 2005, the Council expressed its determination to enhance the effectiveness of the United Nations in preventing armed conflicts and to monitor closely situations of potential armed conflict. The Council further affirmed its determination to strengthen United Nations conflict prevention capacities by, inter alia, assessing regularly the developments in regions at risk of armed conflict and encouraging the Secretary-General to provide information to the Council on such developments pursuant to Article 99 of the Charter.

Role of civil society in conflict prevention and the peaceful settlement of disputes

By a statement of the President dated 20 September 2005, while recognizing the complex nature of threats to international peace and security, the Council underlined the need for a broad strategy for conflict prevention and peaceful settlement of disputes in line with Chapter VI of the Charter.⁷¹

Cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in maintaining international peace and security

By resolution 1631 (2005) of 17 October 2005, the Council reiterated the need to encourage regional cooperation, including through the involvement of regional and subregional organizations in the peaceful settlement of disputes, and to include, where appropriate, specific provisions with this aim in future mandates of peacekeeping and peacebuilding operations authorized by the Council.

Women and peace and security

By a statement of the President dated 27 October 2005, the Council welcomed the various initiatives and actions undertaken by Member States, United Nations entities, civil society organizations and other relevant actors focused on supporting and increasing the representation of women in peace negotiations and mainstreaming gender perspectives into peace agreements. The Council recognized and welcomed the roles of, and contributions made by, women as mediators, educators, peacemakers, peacebuilders and advocates for peace, as well as their active contribution to reconciliation efforts and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration processes.⁷²

By a statement of the President dated 23 October 2007, the Council urged Member States, regional and subregional organizations and the United Nations system to enhance the role of women in decision-making with regard to all peace processes and post-conflict reconstruction and rebuilding of societies as vital in all efforts towards the maintenance and promotion of sustainable peace and security.⁷³

Strengthening international law: rule of law and maintenance of international peace and security

By a statement of the President dated 22 June 2006, the Council noted that it was committed to and actively supported the peaceful settlement of disputes, and reiterated its call upon Member States to settle their disputes by peaceful means as set forth in Chapter VI of the Charter, including by use of regional preventive mechanisms and the International Court of Justice. It further emphasized the important role of the Court, the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, in adjudicating disputes among States.⁷⁴

The maintenance of international peace and security: role of the Security Council in supporting security sector reform

By a statement of the President dated 20 February 2007, the Council stressed that reforming the security sector in post conflict environments was critical to the consolidation of peace and stability, promoting poverty reduction, the rule of law and good governance, extending legitimate State authority, and preventing countries from relapsing into conflict. In that regard, a professional, effective and accountable security sector and accessible and impartial law-enforcement and justice sectors were equally necessary to laying the foundations for peace and sustainable development.⁷⁵

Threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts

By a statement of the President dated 13 April 2007, the Council supported efforts to promote national dialogue, reconciliation and broad political participation in ensuring unity, peace, security and stability in Iraq.⁷⁶

Maintenance of international peace and security

By a statement of the President dated 28 August 2007, the Council bearing in mind its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, acknowledged the importance of the settlement of disputes by peaceful means and promoting necessary preventive action in response to threats to international peace and security.⁷⁷

The role of regional and subregional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security

By a statement of the President dated 6 November 2007, the Council encouraged regional cooperation, including through the involvement of regional and subregional organizations in the peaceful settlement of disputes, and stated its intention to consult closely with them, whenever appropriate, on their role in future peacekeeping operations as well as political and integrated missions authorized by the Council.⁷⁸

B. Recommendations relating to terms, methods or procedures of settlement

This section provides an overview of the Council's practice aimed at the pacific settlement of disputes in application of Chapter VI of the Charter. It describes decisions, within the regional context, by agenda item and in chronological order in which the Council requested or called upon parties to settle their disputes by peaceful means; recommended procedures or methods of settlement; or proposed or endorsed, welcomed or supported terms of settlement. Although the relevant decisions are presented by agenda item, it should be noted that, during the period under review, the Council increasingly demonstrated in its decisions a regional approach to the resolution of conflicts.

Africa

The situation in Burundi

By three resolutions, concerning the situation in Burundi, the Council, reaffirming its full support for the process of the Peace and Reconciliation Agreement for Burundi, signed at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, on 28 August 2000, called upon all the Burundian parties to honour fully their commitments, and assured them of its determination to support their efforts to that end.⁷⁹

⁷⁹ Resolutions 1545 (2004), 1577 (2004) and 1602 (2005).

By resolution 1577 (2004) of 1 December 2004, the Council welcomed the agreement signed by the Burundian parties at Pretoria on 6 August 2004, and the subsequent adoption by the Parliament of an interim Constitution, on 20 October 2004. It encouraged the parties to continue their dialogue in a spirit of compromise, in particular during the campaign to explain the interim Constitution and the drawing-up of the electoral code, with a view to a lasting political solution. Finally, the Council recalled that there was no alternative to the holding of elections as provided for by the Arusha Agreement, and called upon the transitional authorities to carry through the electoral process scheduled to take place by 22 April 2005.

By a statement of the President dated 14 March 2005, the Council called upon all Burundians to remain committed to the course of national reconciliation, for further steps remained to be taken. It invited, in particular, the political leadership in the country to work together towards the common goal of holding, expeditiously, local and national elections that were free and fair.⁸⁰

By a statement of the President dated 23 May 2005, the Council took note with satisfaction of the declaration signed on 15 May 2005 in Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, by the President of Burundi and the leader of the rebel group Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu — Forces nationales de libération (Palipehutu-FNL). It further shared the understanding that the declaration was a first step towards the rapid integration, in a negotiated manner, of the rebel group into the transitional process in progress in Burundi.⁸¹

By resolution 1602 (2005) of 31 May 2005, the Council called upon all Burundian parties to exert greater efforts to ensure the success of the transition, national reconciliation and the stability of the country in the longer term, in particular by refraining from any actions which might affect the cohesion of the Arusha Agreement process.

By a statement of the President dated 23 March 2006, while expressing its deep concern over the continuing violence carried out by the Forces nationales de libération and fighting between them and the Burundian army, the Council urged the Government of Burundi and FNL to seize the opportunity for negotiations with a view to bringing peace to the whole country.⁸²

By resolution 1692 (2006) of 30 June 2006, the Council welcomed the ongoing negotiations between the Government of Burundi and the Palipehutu-FNL which had been facilitated by South Africa and the regional peace initiative on Burundi, and looked forward to the early conclusion of a comprehensive ceasefire agreement.

By resolution 1719 (2006) of 25 October 2006, the Council welcomed the signing, on 7 September 2006 at Dar es Salaam of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement between the Government of Burundi and Palipehutu-FNL. In view of that development, it called upon the authorities and all political actors in Burundi to persevere in their dialogue on achieving stability and national reconciliation and to promote social harmony in their country, and underscored the importance of successfully completing the reforms provided for in the Peace and Reconciliation Agreement for Burundi, signed at Arusha on 28 August 2000, in the Global Ceasefire Agreement signed at Dar es Salaam on 16 November 2003 and in the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement signed at Dar es Salaam on 7 September 2006.

The situation in the Central African Republic

By a statement of the President dated 28 October 2004, the Council, expressing its concern at the possible consequences to the Central African Republic of the crises in the subregion, welcomed with satisfaction the Secretary-General's initiative in asking the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic to assess the implications of developments in neighbouring countries on the situation in the Central African Republic and vice versa.⁸³

The situation in Chad and the Sudan

By a statement of the President dated 25 April 2006 concerning the situation in Chad and the Sudan, the Council expressing deep concern over the political and security situation and instability along Chad's border with the Sudan, as well as over the possible spillover effects of these crises on neighbouring countries and the entire region, called for political dialogue and a negotiated solution to the continuing crisis within Chad. Furthermore, it urged the Governments of the two countries to abide by their obligations under the Tripoli Agreement of 8 February 2006 and to urgently start implementing the confidence-building measures which had been voluntarily agreed upon.⁸⁴

By a statement of the President dated 15 December 2006, the Council stressed that a peaceful settlement of the conflict in Darfur, in accordance with the Darfur Peace Agreement and relevant Council resolutions, would contribute to restoring security and stability in the region, in particular in Chad and the Central African Republic. The Council further expressed its concern over the continuing tensions between Chad and the Sudan, and urged the two States to abide fully by the obligations they assumed with regard to respect for and securing of their common border in the Tripoli Agreement of 8 February 2006 and in subsequent agreements concluded between them.⁸⁵

The situation in Chad, the Central African Republic and the subregion

By a statement of the President dated 27 August 2007 concerning the situation in Chad, the Central African Republic and the subregion, the Council welcomed the signing on 13 August 2007 in N'Djamena of the Political Agreement for the reinforcement of the democratic process in Chad. The Council encouraged the authorities and political stakeholders in Chad and the Central African Republic to pursue their efforts at national dialogue, with respect for the constitutional framework.⁸⁶

By resolution 1778 (2007) of 25 September 2007, the Council, recalling the Tripoli Agreement of 8 February 2006 and the other bilateral and multilateral agreements between the Governments of the Sudan, Chad and the Central African Republic, stressed, inter alia, that a proper settlement of the Darfur issue and an improvement in relations between the Sudan, Chad and the Central African Republic would contribute to long-term peace and stability in the region. The Council welcomed the signing on 13 August 2007 at N'Djamena of the Political Agreement for the reinforcement of the democratic process in Chad.

⁸⁶ S/PRST/2007/30.

Also by resolution 1778 (2007), the Council encouraged the Governments of the Sudan, Chad and the Central African Republic to ensure that their territories were not used to undermine the sovereignty of others and to cooperate actively with a view to implementing the Tripoli Agreement and other agreements aimed at ensuring security along their common borders. The Council encouraged the authorities and political stakeholders in Chad and the Central African Republic to pursue their efforts at national dialogue, with respect for the constitutional frameworks.

The situation in Côte d'Ivoire

Following the submission, on 6 January 2004, of the report of the Secretary-General on the efforts of the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire to facilitate peace and stability in the country, the Council, by resolution 1527 (2004) of 4 February 2004, reaffirmed its endorsement of the agreement signed by the Ivorian political forces at Linas-Marcoussis, France, on 23 January 2003.⁸⁷ The Council stressed the importance of the complete and unconditional implementation of the measures provided for under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, and took note with satisfaction of the progress made in that regard. The Council called upon the signatories to the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement to carry out expeditiously their responsibilities under the Agreement.

By a statement of the President dated 30 April 2004, the Council, recalling that all Ivorian political forces had committed themselves to implement fully and with no conditions the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, decided, on the basis of that commitment, to deploy the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI) to support the process of peaceful settlement of the crisis. It also expressed its readiness to consider further steps to encourage full implementation of the Agreement and to promote the process of national reconciliation in Côte d'Ivoire.⁸⁸

With regard to the peace process defined in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, by a statement of the President dated 25 May 2004, the Council, underscoring

the importance of having all relevant Ivorian parties participate fully in the Government of National Reconciliation, called upon all Ivorian parties to apply faithfully all the provisions of the Agreement, including those regarding the composition and the functioning of the Government of National Reconciliation. It called upon them to resume immediately political dialogue with a view to ensuring the effective functioning of the Government of National Reconciliation.⁸⁹

By a statement of the President dated 5 August 2004, the Council welcomed the spirit of dialogue and responsibility shown by the President, Laurent Gbagbo, and each of the Ivorian parties, who had clearly demonstrated their willingness to lead the political process in Côte d'Ivoire to its completion. The Council welcomed the concrete measures agreed upon by the signatories to the Accra III Agreement with a view to facilitating the full and comprehensive implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement. It further urged the parties to adhere strictly to the deadlines that had been fixed, in particular to settle the issue of eligibility for the Presidency of the Republic and to begin disarmament, in accordance with the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, for all paramilitary groups and militias and disband disruptive youth groups. The Council urged all parties to implement in good faith, without delays or preconditions, the obligations they had undertaken in signing the Accra III Agreement.⁹⁰

By a statement of the President dated 6 July 2005, the Council demanded that all the signatories to the Accra III Agreement and all the Ivorian parties concerned implement fully and without delay all the commitments made with the African Union mediation and comply scrupulously with the timetable agreed on 29 June 2005 in Pretoria.⁹¹

Following the signing, by the Ivorian parties, on 6 April 2005, of the Pretoria Agreement,⁹² the Council, by a statement of the President dated 6 July 2005, took note with interest of the Declaration on the implementation of the Pretoria Agreement on the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire signed on 29 June 2005 in Pretoria under the auspices of the African Union mediator, President Thabo Mbeki.⁹³

By resolution 1600 (2005) of 4 May 2005, the Council welcomed the signing of the Pretoria Agreement and commended the African Union mediator for the essential role he had played, on behalf of the African Union, to restore peace and stability in Côte d'Ivoire, and reaffirmed its full support for his mediation efforts. The Council called upon all parties to implement fully the Pretoria Agreement, and reminded them that they had decided in the Agreement to refer to the mediator any differences which might arise in the interpretation of any part of the Agreement.

By resolution 1603 (2005) of 3 June 2005, the Council endorsed the Pretoria Agreement, and demanded that all the signatories to the Agreement and all the Ivorian parties concerned implement it fully and without delay.

By a statement of the President dated 30 November 2005, the Council affirmed that the rapid appointment of a Prime Minister of Côte d'Ivoire was crucial to relaunching the peace process leading to the holding of free, fair, open and transparent elections by 31 October 2006. It also affirmed that the road map established by the International Working Group at its first meeting on 8 November 2005 in Abidjan had to be fully implemented.⁹⁴

By a statement of the President dated 19 January 2006, the Council firmly called upon all the Ivorian parties to cooperate with the Prime Minister, the International Working Group, the Mediation Group, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire and the High Representative for the elections in implementing the road map.⁹⁵

Following several rounds of meetings between Ivorian political and rebel leaders held in Yamoussoukro on 28 February and 5 July 2006, and in Abidjan on 8 April 2006, the Council, by several subsequent decisions, urged the leaders to fulfil their commitments, in particular those made in Yamoussoukro on 28 February 2006, and to rapidly

By a statement of the President dated 7 August 2006, the Council affirmed its commitment to the implementation of the peace process and of the road map. The Council welcomed the initiatives of the Prime Minister, Charles Konan Banny, and the ongoing dialogue among the President, the Prime Minister and all other Ivorian parties.⁹⁷

By resolution 1739 (2007) of 10 January 2007, the Council decided that UNOCI would, inter alia, have the following mandate: to observe and monitor the implementation of the joint declaration of the end of the war of 6 April 2005 and of the comprehensive ceasefire agreement of 3 May 2003; to prevent, within its capabilities and its areas of deployment, any hostile action, and to investigate violations of the ceasefire; and to promote the peace process as referred to in resolution 1721 (2006) throughout the territory of Côte d'Ivoire, through the mission's public information capacity, in particular its radio broadcasting capability through UNOCI FM.

By a statement of the President dated 28 March 2007, the Council welcomed the agreement signed by President Laurent Gbagbo and Mr. Guillaume Soro in Ouagadougou on 4 March 2007.⁹⁸ It underlined that the Ouagadougou agreement provided a good basis for a comprehensive and all-inclusive settlement of the crisis in Côte d'Ivoire through the organization of credible elections. The Council endorsed the Agreement and called upon the Ivorian parties to implement it fully, in good faith and within a set timetable.⁹⁹

By resolution 1782 (2007) of 29 October 2007, while welcoming the initial measures to implement the Ouagadougou Political Agreement, the Council recalled its request to the Ivorian parties to implement their commitments under the Agreement fully and in good faith, and urged them to take, without delay, the specific measures necessary to make progress, in particular in the identification and registration of voters, the disarmament and dismantling of militias, the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, the unification and restructuring of the defence and security forces and the restoration of State authority throughout the country.

By statements of the President dated 7 June and 22 June 2004 on the situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo,¹⁰⁰ the Council urged all parties represented in the Government of National Unity and Transition to remain fully committed to the peace process of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and to abstain from any action that would endanger the unity of the transitional Government. By the statement of 7 June 2004, the Council also urged the Government of Rwanda, taking into account its previous relationship with the Rassemblement congolais pour la démocratie-Goma, and all other neighbouring States to do all in their power to support the peace process and help to secure a peaceful resolution to the crisis, while at the same time refraining from any action or declaration that might negatively affect the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

By resolution 1565 (2004) of 1 October 2004, the Council, welcoming the efforts of the Government of National Unity and Transition for the implementation of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement, called upon all the Congolese parties to honour their commitments in that regard, in particular so that free, fair and peaceful elections could be held within the agreed time frame.

By a statement of the President dated 7 December 2004, following multiple reports of military operations of the Rwandan army in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Council called upon the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda to commit themselves to and make full use of the multilateral mechanisms that they had agreed to establish, including the Joint Verification Mechanism and the Tripartite Commission, for the peaceful resolution of their disputes. The Council also welcomed steps taken to set up the plan established by the Congolese authorities, with the support of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, aimed at accelerating the disarmament and demobilization of foreign armed groups.¹⁰¹

By a statement of the President dated 12 April 2005, the Council, welcoming the statement issued by the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR), in which they condemned the 1994 genocide and committed themselves to renounce the use of force and cease all offensive operations against Rwanda, considered it a significant opportunity to move towards peace in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, national reconciliation in Rwanda, and full normalization of relations between the two countries.¹⁰²

By a statement of the President dated 29 June 2005, the Council, underlining the importance of elections as the foundation for longer-term restoration of peace and stability, national reconciliation, and establishment of the rule of law in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, encouraged the Congolese people to mobilize for and conduct the electoral process in a peaceful manner. It also urged candidates and political parties to refrain from any action that might disrupt the process.¹⁰³

By resolution 1621 (2005) of 6 September 2005, the Council called upon the transitional institutions and all Congolese parties to ensure that free, fair and peaceful elections took place and that the timetable for polls developed by the Independent Electoral Commission was scrupulously respected.

By a statement of the President dated 3 August 2006, the Council urged all political actors in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to continue to work to ensure that the electoral process proceeded in a free, transparent and peaceful manner, in accordance with the agreed timetable.¹⁰⁴

By a statement of the President dated 22 September 2006, the Council, deploring the violence that had erupted between the security forces loyal to President Joseph Kabila and Vice-President Jean-Pierre Bemba, called upon all political parties and the President and Vice-President, to restate their commitment to the peace process and to work within the agreed framework for the holding of the elections as a means of peacefully resolving political differences. The Council welcomed their first meeting as a first step in that direction and encouraged them to continue to seek a peaceful resolution of their differences.¹⁰⁵

After the elections, by a statement of the President dated 7 November 2006, the Council attached great importance to the signing of a declaration of post-electoral intent by the representatives of the two candidates in the second round of the presidential election and emphasized that political differences must be settled by peaceful means only.¹⁰⁶

By a statement of the President dated 3 April 2007, deploring the violence between the Congolese security forces and the security guards of Senator Jean-Pierre Bemba in the aftermath of the presidential elections, the Council regretted the use of violence instead of dialogue to resolve disputes, and urged all Congolese stakeholders to pursue negotiated solutions to their differences with respect for the constitutional framework and law. It called upon the Government to respect the space and role conferred on parties by the Constitution with a view to ensuring their effective participation in the national political debate, and encouraged all parties to remain committed to the political process.¹⁰⁷

The situation between Eritrea and Ethiopia

By several resolutions concerning the situation between Eritrea and Ethiopia,¹⁰⁸ the Council stressed its unwavering commitment to the peace process, including through the role played by the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, and to the full and expeditious implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement signed on 12 December 2000 at Algiers by the Governments of the two countries, the preceding Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities signed on 18 June 2000 and the delimitation decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission of 13 April 2002, embraced by the parties as final and binding in accordance with the Algiers Agreements. While stressing that Eritrea and Ethiopia had the primary responsibility for the implementation of the Algiers Agreements and the decision of the Boundary Commission, the Council called upon the parties to show political leadership to achieve a full normalization of their relationship, including through the adoption of further confidence-building measures¹⁰⁹ and to consolidate progress achieved so far, by making full use of the existing framework of the Commission.¹¹⁰ It further called upon Eritrea to enter into dialogue and cooperation with the Special Envoy.¹¹¹

By resolution 1640 (2005) of 23 November 2005, the Council, noting with deep concern the high concentration of troops on both sides of the Temporary Security Zone, called upon Eritrea and Ethiopia to work, without preconditions, to break the stalemate through diplomatic efforts.

By a statement of the President dated 24 February 2006, the Council welcomed the successful convening in New York on 22 February 2006 of the meeting of the witnesses to the Algiers Agreement of 12 December 2000 and their efforts to resolve the current impasse between Eritrea and Ethiopia, in order to promote stability between the parties and lay the foundation for sustainable peace in the region.¹¹²

By resolution 1767 (2007) of 30 July 2007, the Council called upon the parties to maintain their full commitment to the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities of 18 June 2000.

By a statement of the President dated 13 November 2007, the Council stressed the importance of the commitment of both Ethiopia and Eritrea to lay the foundation for sustainable peace in the region and, aware of the responsibilities of the United Nations under the Algiers Agreements, remained determined to encourage and assist both countries in attaining that objective. It urged the parties to take concrete steps to implement immediately and without preconditions the delimitation decision of the Boundary Commission, taking into account the commitments of the parties regarding the Temporary Security Zone, as expressed at the meeting of the Commission held on 6 and 7 September 2007, and to comply fully with the Algiers Agreements and prior resolutions of the Council and statements by its President, including on the issue of demarcation. The Council called upon the parties to refrain from using force and to settle their disagreements by peaceful means, to normalize their relations, to promote stability between them and to lay the foundation for sustainable peace in the region.¹¹³

The situation in the Great Lakes Region

By resolution 1653 (2006) of 27 January 2006, the Council took note with satisfaction of the holding of the first International Conference on Peace, Security, Democracy and Development in the Great Lakes Region, in Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, on 19 and 20 November 2004. It also recognized the Good-Neighbourly Declaration adopted on 25 September 2003 by the representatives of Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda and Uganda,¹¹⁴ and the Dar es Salaam Declaration on Peace, Security, Democracy and Development in the Great Lakes Region¹¹⁵ adopted on 20 November 2004. It urged the countries of the Great Lakes region to continue their collective efforts to develop a subregional approach for promoting good relations, peaceful coexistence and peaceful resolution of disputes as envisaged in the aforementioned Dar es Salaam Declaration.

By a statement of the President dated 16 November 2006, the Council, welcoming the cessation of hostilities which took effect on 29 August 2006 and was renewed on 1 November 2006, and stressing the importance of peace and stability in the region, commended the Government of the Sudan for facilitating the agreement on the cessation of hostilities and for its efforts to further a long-term and peaceful solution to the conflict. It called upon all parties to commit themselves fully to that end.¹¹⁶

of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region, the Council congratulated regional leaders on the signing of the Pact on Security, Stability and Development in the Great Lakes Region and welcomed their commitment to its implementation.¹¹⁷

By a statement of the President dated 22 March 2007, the Council stressed its support for a negotiated settlement to the conflict in Northern Uganda, and commended the Government of Southern Sudan and others for their efforts to further a long-term and peaceful solution. It welcomed the meeting between the Government of Uganda and the Lord's Resistance Army held on 11 March 2007, with community representatives present, and the progress made towards a resumption of talks. The Council expressed its hope for further progress in the talks and the renewal of the cessation of hostilities agreement.¹¹⁸

The situation in Liberia

In connection with the situation in Liberia and the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement of 18 August 2003,¹¹⁹ the Council, by resolution 1561 (2004) of 17 September 2004, called upon all Liberian parties to demonstrate their full commitment to the peace process and to work together to ensure that free, fair and transparent elections took place as planned no later than October 2005.

By resolution 1579 (2004) of 21 December 2004, noting the completion of demobilization and disarmament, respect for the ceasefire, and implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the Council emphasized that significant challenges remained in completing the reintegration, repatriation and restructuring of the security sector, as well as establishing and maintaining stability in Liberia and the subregion.

By resolution 1626 (2005) of 19 September 2005, the Council called upon all Liberian parties to demonstrate their full commitment to a democratic process of government by ensuring that the upcoming presidential and legislative elections were peaceful, transparent, free and fair.

The situation in Sierra Leone

By resolution 1537 (2004) of 30 March 2004 concerning the situation in Sierra Leone, the Council commended the efforts of the Economic Community of West African States towards building peace in the subregion, and encouraged the Presidents of the States members of the Mano River Union to resume dialogue and to renew their commitment to building regional peace and security.

By resolution 1793 (2007) of 21 December 2007, the Council welcomed the holding of peaceful and democratic parliamentary and presidential elections in August and September 2007, and stressed that the wide acceptance of the local elections in June 2008 would be another important milestone in consolidating a sustainable peace in Sierra Leone. It also welcomed the adoption on 12 December 2007 of the Sierra Leone Peacebuilding Cooperation Framework highlighting, inter alia, five priority areas in the peace consolidation process to be addressed by the Government of Sierra Leone with the support of the Peacebuilding Commission, the United Nations system and bilateral and multinational partners.

The situation in Somalia

In a statement of the President dated 25 February 2004 concerning the situation in Somalia, and following developments in the Somali National Reconciliation Process, the Council reiterated its firm support for that process and the Somali National Reconciliation Conference in Kenya. The Council welcomed the signing in Nairobi, on 29 January 2004, of the Declaration on Harmonization of Various Issues Proposed by the Somali Delegates at the Somali Consultative Meetings, as an important step towards lasting peace and reconciliation in Somalia. It urged all signatories to the agreement to fully abide by their commitment to move the peace process forward. The Council called upon the Somali parties to build on the progress achieved and swiftly conclude the Somali National Reconciliation Conference with a durable and inclusive solution to the conflict in Somalia by establishing a viable transitional government. The Council called upon all neighbouring States to continue their endeavours to participate fully and constructively for the success of the Somali National Reconciliation Process and the attainment of peace in the region.¹²⁰

By a statement of the President dated 14 July 2004, the Council welcomed the launching of phase III of the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, and encouraged all parties to continue in their ongoing efforts to move the process forward and agree on a durable and inclusive solution to the conflict in Somalia and the establishment of a transitional federal Government for Somalia. The Council commended the work of Mr. Winston A. Tubman, the Representative of the Secretary-General, welcomed his visit to the region in support of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development-sponsored Somali peace process, and encouraged him to continue his facilitation efforts.¹²¹

By a statement of the President dated 19 November 2004, the Council called upon all Somali parties to seize the historic opportunity for peace by developing a programme of action and timetable for the transitional period, creating a favourable environment for long-term stability and making determined efforts to rebuild the country.¹²²

By a statement of the President dated 7 March 2005, the Council urged all Somali factions and militia leaders to cease hostilities and encouraged them and the Transitional Federal Government to enter into immediate negotiations for a comprehensive and verifiable ceasefire agreement leading to final disarmament. The Council welcomed the efforts of the United Nations Political Office for Somalia and its leading role in coordinating support for the Transitional Federal Government to implement the agreements reached at the Somali National Reconciliation Conference and establish peace and stability in Somalia.¹²³

By a statement of the President dated 14 July 2005, the Council, encouraged by the relocation of the transitional federal institutions to Somalia, urged further progress in that regard and called upon the Somali leaders to continue to work towards reconciliation, through inclusive dialogue and consensus-building within the framework of the transitional federal institutions, in accordance with the Transitional Federal Charter of the Somali Republic adopted in February 2004.¹²⁴

By a statement of the President dated 13 July 2006, the Council, welcoming the agreement reached in Khartoum on 22 June 2006 between the Transitional Federal Government and the Islamic Courts, emphasized the importance of dialogue between the two parties. It urged all parties to engage constructively at the next round of talks, and looked forward to further progress in pursuit of a lasting political process.¹²⁵

By resolution 1725 (2006) of 6 December 2006, emphasizing its willingness to engage with all parties in Somalia committed to achieving a political settlement through peaceful and inclusive dialogue, the Council urged both the transitional federal institutions and the Union of Islamic Courts to unite behind and continue a process of dialogue, recommit to the principles of the Khartoum Declaration of 22 June 2006 and the agreements made at the meeting held in Khartoum from 2 to 4 September 2006, and establish a stable security situation inside Somalia.

By a statement of the President dated 22 December 2006, the Council, expressing its deep concern over the continued violence inside Somalia, in particular the intensified fighting between the Union of Islamic Courts and the transitional federal institutions, called upon the parties to draw back from conflict, recommit to dialogue, and immediately implement resolution 1725 (2006).¹²⁶

By a statement of the President dated 30 April 2007, the Council welcomed the commitment of the transitional federal institutions to initiate a national reconciliation process, and stressed the need for further progress. It underlined the need for the transitional federal institutions to meet their responsibilities during the transitional period, with particular regard to promoting the widest possible political dialogue across Somalia.¹²⁷ situation in the Darfur region of the Sudan, the Council, while welcoming the ceasefire agreement signed on 8 April 2004 in N'Djamena, emphasized the urgent need for all parties to observe the ceasefire and to take immediate measures to end the violence. It further called upon the Government of the Sudan to respect its commitments to ensure that the Janjaweed militias were neutralized and disarmed.¹²⁸

Following the submission on 3 June 2004 of the report of the Secretary-General on the Sudan concerning the state of the north-south peace process, the Council, by resolution 1547 (2004) of 11 June 2004, welcomed the signing of the declaration on 5 June 2004 in Nairobi in which the parties confirmed their agreement to the six protocols signed by the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army and reconfirmed their commitment to completing the remaining stages of negotiations. It urged the two parties involved to conclude speedily a comprehensive peace agreement, believing that the progress made in the Naivasha negotiation process would contribute to improved stability and peace in the Sudan.

By resolution 1564 (2004) of 18 September 2004, the Council called upon the Government of the Sudan and the rebel groups, particularly the Justice and Equality Movement and the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army, to work together under the auspices of the African Union to reach a political solution in the negotiations held in Abuja under the leadership of President Obasanjo, and urged the parties to the negotiations to sign and implement the humanitarian agreement immediately and to conclude a protocol on security issues. The Council underscored and supported the role of the African Union in monitoring the implementation of all such agreements reached. The Council urged the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement to conclude a comprehensive peace accord expeditiously as a critical step towards the development of a peaceful and prosperous Sudan.

In connection with the north-south peace process, by resolution 1574 (2004) of 19 November 2004, the Council declared its strong support for the efforts of the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army to reach a comprehensive peace agreement and encouraged the parties to redouble their efforts in that regard. The Council welcomed the signing of the memorandum of understanding in Nairobi on 19 November 2004 entitled "Declaration on the conclusion of the negotiations of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development on peace in the Sudan", by which the parties agreed that the six protocols referred to in the Nairobi Declaration of 5 June 2004 constituted and formed the core peace agreement. The Council strongly endorsed the parties' commitment to reach a final comprehensive agreement by 31 December 2004, expecting that it would be fully and transparently implemented, with the appropriate international monitoring. The Council declared its commitment, upon conclusion of a comprehensive peace agreement, to assist the people of the Sudan in their efforts to establish a peaceful, united and prosperous nation, on the understanding that the parties were fulfilling all their commitments. The Council emphasized that a comprehensive peace agreement would contribute towards sustainable peace and stability throughout the Sudan and to the efforts to address the crisis in Darfur, and underlined the need for a national and inclusive approach, including the role of women, towards reconciliation and peacebuilding. It further underlined the importance of progress in peace talks in Abuja between the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan Liberation Army and the Justice and Equality Movement towards resolving that crisis and insisted that all parties to the Abuja peace talks negotiate in good faith to reach agreement speedily. The Council welcomed the signature of the Humanitarian and Security Protocols on 9 November 2004 and urged the parties to implement them rapidly, and looked forward to the early signature of a declaration of principles with a view to a political settlement.

By resolution 1590 (2005) of 24 March 2005, the Council welcomed the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement between the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army in Nairobi on 9 January 2005. Recognizing that the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement must build on the Agreement to bring peace and stability to the entire country, the Council called upon all Sudanese parties, in particular those parties to the Agreement, to take immediate steps to achieve a peaceful settlement to the conflict in Darfur.

By resolution 1627 (2005) of 23 September 2005, the Council welcomed the implementation of the

Comprehensive Peace Agreement by the two parties, and, in particular, the formation of the Government of National Unity as a significant and historic step towards lasting peace in the Sudan.

By a statement of the President dated 13 October 2005, the Council, expressing its concern over an upsurge of violence in Darfur, demanded that the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army, the Justice and Equality Movement and the Government of the Sudan immediately cease violence, comply with the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement, end impediments to the peace process and cooperate fully with the African Union Mission in the Sudan. It also expressed its firm commitment to the cause of peace in all of the Sudan, including through the Abuja talks and through full implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. It encouraged the Government of National Unity and the Darfur rebels to engage in the search for a solution to the Darfur conflict. The Council urged all parties to make rapid progress at the Abuja talks to conclude a peace agreement without further delay.¹²⁹

By a statement of the President dated 3 February 2006, the Council stressed the importance of urgently reaching a successful conclusion of the Abuja peace talks and called upon all parties to negotiate in good faith in order to reach a peace accord. It reiterated in the strongest terms the need for all parties in Darfur to end the violence and atrocities. The Council demanded that all parties to the Darfur conflict cooperate fully with the African Union Mission in the Sudan and fulfil all the obligations to which they had committed themselves.¹³⁰

By resolution 1663 (2006) of 24 March 2006, the Council, welcoming the implementation by the parties of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement of 9 January 2005, and urging them to meet their commitments, stressed the importance of urgently reaching a successful conclusion of the Abuja peace talks, and called upon the parties to conclude a peace agreement as soon as possible.

By a statement of the President dated 9 May 2006, the Council strongly welcomed the agreement of 5 May 2006 reached at the Inter-Sudanese Peace Talks in Abuja as a basis for lasting peace in Darfur, commended the signatories to the agreement, and expressed its appreciation of the efforts of the President of the Congo, the President of Nigeria and the Special Envoy of the African Union and Chief Mediator. The Council called upon all the parties to respect their commitments and implement the agreement without delay, and urged those movements that had not signed the agreement to do so without delay, noting the benefits it would bring them and the people of Darfur, and not to act in any way that would impede implementation of the agreement.¹³¹

By resolution 1679 (2006) of 16 May 2006, the Council stressed the importance of full and rapid implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement to restore a sustainable peace in Darfur, and welcomed the statement, made on 9 May 2006 by the representative of the Sudan at the special meeting of the Security Council on Darfur, of the Government of National Unity's full commitment to implementing the Darfur Peace Agreement. The Council called upon the parties to the Darfur Peace Agreement to respect their commitments and implement the Agreement without delay, and urged those parties that had not signed the Agreement to do so without delay and not to act in any way that would impede implementation of the Agreement.

By resolution 1706 (2006) of 31 August 2006, the Council, welcoming the efforts of the African Union to find a solution to the crisis in Darfur, including through the success of the African Union-led Inter-Sudanese Peace Talks in Abuja, in particular the Darfur Peace Agreement, commended the efforts of the signatories to the Agreement.

By resolution 1714 (2006) of 6 October 2006, the Council called upon the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the Darfur Peace Agreement and the N'Djamena Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement to respect their commitments and implement fully all aspects of the Agreements without delay, and called upon those parties that had not signed the Darfur Peace Agreement to do so without delay and not to act in any way that would impede implementation of the Agreement.

By resolution 1755 (2007) of 30 April 2007, the Council called upon the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement to accelerate urgently progress on implementing all their commitments, in particular to carry out the establishment of Joint Integrated Units

and other aspects of the security sector reforms, to re-energize the process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of combatants, and to complete the full and verified redeployment of forces by 9 July 2007. The Council called upon the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the Darfur Peace Agreement, the N'Djamena Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement, the Eastern Sudan Peace Agreement and the communiqué of 28 March 2007 to respect their commitments and implement fully all aspects of those agreements without delay, and called upon those parties that had not signed the Darfur Peace Agreement to do so without delay and not to act in any way that would impede the implementation of the Agreement.

By resolution 1769 (2007) of 31 July 2007, the Council, expressing concern that the ongoing violence in Darfur might further negatively affect the rest of the Sudan as well as the region, stressed that regional security aspects must be addressed to achieve long-term peace in Darfur, and called upon the Governments of the Sudan and Chad to abide by their obligations under the Tripoli Agreement of 8 February 2006 and subsequent bilateral agreements.

Emphasizing that there could be no military solution to the conflict in Darfur, the Council welcomed the commitment expressed by the Government of the Sudan and some other parties to the conflict to enter into talks and the political process under the mediation and in line with the deadlines set out in the road map of the United Nations Special Envoy for Darfur and the African Union Special Envoy for Darfur. The Council called upon the other parties to the conflict to do likewise, and urged all the parties, in particular the non-signatory movements, to finalize their preparations for the talks.

By a statement of the President dated 24 October 2007, the Council stressed the urgent need for an inclusive and sustainable political settlement in Darfur and strongly welcomed the convening of peace talks on 27 October in Sirte, under the leadership of the United Nations Special Envoy and the African Union Special Envoy, who had the Council's full support. It called upon all parties to attend and to engage fully and constructively in the talks, and, as a first step, to urgently agree upon and implement a cessation of hostilities to be overseen by the United Nations and the African Union. The Council underlined its willingness to take action against any party that sought to undermine the peace process, including by failing to respect such a cessation of hostilities or by impeding the talks, peacekeeping or humanitarian aid.¹³²

By resolution 1784 (2007) of 31 October 2007, the Council stressed the importance of full and expeditious implementation of all elements of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the N'Djamena Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement, the Darfur Peace Agreement and the Eastern Sudan Peace Agreement, and called for all the parties to respect their commitments to these agreements without delay.

The situation concerning Western Sahara

Following the submission of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation concerning Western Sahara, the Council, by resolution 1541 (2004) of 29 April 2004, called upon all the parties and the States of the region to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy.

By resolution 1754 (2007) of 30 April 2007, the Council called upon the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Polisario to enter into negotiations without preconditions, in good faith and taking into account the developments of the previous months, with a view to achieving a just, lasting and mutually acceptable political solution which would provide for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara.

By resolution 1783 (2007) of 31 October 2007, the Council, welcoming the progress made by the parties to enter into direct negotiations under the auspices of the Secretary-General, took note of the parties' agreement to continue the process of negotiations through United Nations-sponsored talks. It called upon them to continue to show political will and work in an atmosphere propitious for dialogue in order to engage in substantive negotiations, thus ensuring implementation of resolution 1754 (2007) and the success of negotiations.

By a statement of the President dated 6 April 2004 concerning the situation in Afghanistan, the Council expressed its full support for the commitment of Afghanistan and the international community to successfully complete the implementation of the Agreement on Provisional Arrangements in Afghanistan

Pending the Re-establishment of Permanent Government Institutions, signed in Bonn, Germany, on 5 December 2001.¹³³

By resolution 1589 (2005) of 24 March 2005, the Council, welcoming the substantial progress in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process in accordance with the Bonn Agreement, encouraged the Government of Afghanistan to continue its active efforts to accelerate the process towards its completion by June 2006, to disband the illegal armed groups and to dispose of the ammunition stockpile.

By resolution 1662 (2006) of 23 March 2006, the Council called upon all Afghan parties and groups to engage constructively in the peaceful political development of the country and avoid resorting to violence. It welcomed the substantial progress in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process in accordance with the Bonn Agreement.

By resolution 1746 (2007) of 23 March 2007, the Council called upon all Afghan parties and groups to engage constructively in an inclusive political dialogue, within the framework of the Afghan Constitution and Afghan-led reconciliation programmes, and in the social development of the country, and stressed the importance of these factors to enhance security and stability.

The situation in Myanmar

By a statement of the President dated 11 October 2007 concerning the situation in Myanmar, the Council, emphasizing the importance of the early release of all political prisoners and remaining detainees, called upon the Government of Myanmar and all other parties concerned to work together towards a de-escalation of the situation and a peaceful solution. It stressed the need for the Government of Myanmar to create the necessary conditions for a genuine dialogue with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and all concerned parties and ethnic groups in order to achieve an inclusive national reconciliation with the direct support of the United Nations.¹³⁴

The situation in Timor-Leste

By resolution 1704 (2006) of 25 August 2006, the Council decided that the mandate of the United Nations Integrated Mission in Timor-Leste would be, inter alia, to support the Government of Timor-Leste and relevant institutions with a view to consolidating stability, enhancing a culture of democratic governance and facilitating political dialogue among Timorese stakeholders in their efforts to bring about a process of national reconciliation and to foster social cohesion.

By a statement of the President dated 10 September 2007, following the holding of legislative elections and the formation of the new Government in Timor-Leste, the Council emphasized the need for all parties to resolve any disputes through exclusively peaceful channels and within the framework of democratic institutions, and called upon the people of Timor-Leste to refrain from violence and work together in order to ensure security. The Council called upon the Government, Parliament, political parties and the people of Timor-Leste to work together and engage in political dialogue and consolidate peace, democracy, the rule of law, sustainable social and economic development and national reconciliation in the country.¹³⁵

Americas

By a statement of the President dated 26 February 2004 concerning Haiti, the Council expressed deep concern in regard to the deterioration of the political, security and humanitarian environment in Haiti, and noted that the principles outlined in the Caribbean Community/Organization of American States Plan of Action represented an important basis for a solution to a crisis. It called upon the parties to act responsibly by choosing negotiation instead of confrontation.¹³⁶

By resolution 1542 (2004) of 30 April 2004, by which it established the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti, the Council took note of the political agreement reached by some key parties on 4 April 2004, and urged all parties to work without delay towards a broad political consensus on the nature and duration of the political transition.

By a statement of the President dated 10 September 2004 in connection with the transitional process in Haiti, the Council underlined the fact that only a comprehensive and inclusive dialogue in Haiti could lay down the foundations of a peaceful and democratic political environment. It called upon all

The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina

By several resolutions concerning the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina,¹³⁸ the Council emphasized its full support for the continued role of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council reminded the parties that, under the Peace Agreement, they had committed themselves to cooperate fully with all entities involved in the implementation of this peace settlement, as described in the Peace Agreement, or which were otherwise authorized by the Security Council. The Council emphasized its full support for the continued role of the High Representative in monitoring the implementation of the Peace Agreement and giving guidance to and coordinating the activities of the civilian organizations and agencies involved in assisting the parties to implement the Peace Agreement. The Council also expressed its determination to promote the peaceful resolution of the conflicts in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.¹³⁹

The situation in Cyprus

By two resolutions concerning the situation in Cyprus, by which it extended the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), the Council urged Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots to work towards the resumption of negotiations for a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem.¹⁴⁰

By resolutions 1728 (2006) of 15 December 2006, 1758 (2007) of 15 June 2007 and 1789 (2007) of 14 December 2007, the Council welcomed the principles and decisions enshrined in the agreement of 8 July 2006,¹⁴¹ including recognition that the status quo was unacceptable and that a comprehensive settlement based on a bicomunal, bizonal federation and political equality, as set out in the relevant Security Council resolutions, was both desirable and possible and should not be delayed. In resolution 1789 (2007), the Council deplored the continued failure to implement the agreement of 8 July 2006; urged the leaders of both communities to act to start the process without delay in order to prepare the ground for fully fledged negotiations leading to a comprehensive and durable settlement; and called upon both sides to continue to engage, as a matter of urgency, in consultations with UNFICYP on the demarcation of the buffer zone, and on the United Nations aide-memoire of 1989, with a view to reaching early agreement on outstanding issues.

The situation in Georgia

By resolution 1524 (2004) of 30 January 2004, the Council, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, noted the holding of presidential elections in Georgia in January 2004, and encouraged the new Georgian leadership as well as the Abkhaz side to pursue a comprehensive, peaceful political settlement of the conflict in Abkhazia. The Council stressed that result-oriented activities in three priority areas — economic cooperation, the return of internally displaced persons and refugees, and political and security matters — remained key for building common ground between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides and ultimately for concluding meaningful negotiations on a comprehensive political settlement based on the document entitled “Basic Principles for the Distribution of Competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi” and its letter of transmittal. Finally, the Council called upon the parties to ensure the necessary revitalization of the peace process in all its major aspects.

By resolution 1554 (2004) of 29 July 2004, the Council called upon the parties to spare no effort to overcome their ongoing mutual mistrust, and underlined the fact that the process of negotiation leading to a lasting political settlement acceptable to both sides would require concessions from both sides. The Council further called upon the parties to take concrete steps to revitalize the peace process in all its major aspects, including their work in the Coordinating Council and its relevant mechanisms, and to build on the results of the third meeting on confidence-building measures between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides, held in Yalta, Ukraine, on 15 and 16 March 2001.

By resolutions 1582 (2005) of 28 January 2005 and 1615 (2005) of 29 July 2005, the Council called upon both sides to participate in constructive negotiations towards a political settlement of the conflict and to spare no efforts to overcome their ongoing mutual mistrust, and underlined the fact that the process of negotiation leading to a lasting political settlement acceptable to both sides would require concessions from both sides. The Council welcomed the commitment by the Georgian side to a peaceful resolution of the conflict, and called upon both parties further to publicly dissociate themselves from all militant rhetoric and demonstrations of support for military options.

By resolution 1716 (2006) of 13 October 2006, the Council urged both parties to comply fully with previous agreements and understandings regarding ceasefire, non-use of violence and confidence-building measures, and stressed the need to strictly observe the Moscow Agreement in the air, on the sea and on land, including in the Kodori Valley. While commending the presentation by both sides of ideas as a basis for dialogue, the Council called upon the two sides to resume the dialogue by using all existing mechanisms as described in the relevant Council resolutions in order to come to a peaceful settlement.

By resolution 1752 (2007) of 13 April 2007, the Council called upon both sides to resume dialogue, to make full use of all existing mechanisms as described in the relevant Council resolutions, to comply fully with previous agreements regarding ceasefire measures and the non-use of violence, and to finalize without delay the package of documents on the non-use of violence and on the return of refugees and internally displaced persons. The Council urged the sides to address seriously each other's legitimate security concerns, to refrain from any actions which might impede the peace process, and to extend the necessary cooperation to the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia and the peacekeeping force of the Commonwealth of Independent States.

By resolution 1781 (2007) of 15 October 2007, the Council called upon the parties to further increase their bilateral contacts by making full use of all existing mechanisms as described in the relevant Council resolutions in order to come to a peaceful settlement, including the safe and dignified return of refugees and internally displaced persons.

Middle East

The situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question

By a statement of the President dated 16 February 2005, the Council welcomed the summit held in Sharm El-Sheikh on 8 February 2005, and the resumption of direct talks between the Prime Minister of Israel and the President of the Palestinian Authority. It commended the role being played by Egypt and Jordan in facilitating a successful resumption of dialogue between the two parties within the framework of the road map.¹⁴²

By a statement of the President dated 9 March 2005, the Council hoped that the London Meeting on Supporting the Palestinian Authority, held on 1 March, would be part of the longer-term process of international support to the Palestinian people and the Palestinian Authority and a contribution to helping both sides to implement the road map endorsed by the Council in its resolution 1515 (2003) and agreed to by the parties as the path towards a lasting comprehensive negotiated settlement to the Middle East conflict, based on Council resolutions 242 (1967), 338 (1973) and 1397 (2002).¹⁴³

By a statement of the President dated 23 September 2005, the Council supported the statement issued by the Quartet on 20 September 2005 after its meeting in New York to discuss the Gaza disengagement and the prospects for movement towards peace in the Middle East. The Council urged the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority to cooperate, along with other parties concerned, with the efforts to achieve the goals set out in the aforementioned statement.¹⁴⁴

By a statement of the President dated 30 November 2005, the Council welcomed the Agreement on Movement and Access and the Agreed Principles for the Rafah Crossing reached between the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority on 15 November 2005. It called upon the parties to take immediate action to implement the terms of both agreements according to the timelines established therein. The Council stressed the importance of, and the need to achieve, a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the Middle East, based on all its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 242 (1967), 338 (1973), 1397 (2002) and 1515 (2003), the Madrid terms of reference and the principle of land for peace.¹⁴⁵

By resolution 1680 (2006) of 17 May 2006, the Council welcomed the decision of the Lebanese national dialogue to disarm Palestinian militias outside refugee camps within six months, supported its implementation, and called for further efforts to disband and disarm all Lebanese and non-Lebanese militias and to restore fully the Government of Lebanon's control over all Lebanese territory.

By a statement of the President dated 12 December 2006, the Council stressed that there could be no military solution to the problems of the region and that negotiation was the only viable way to bring peace and prosperity to peoples throughout the Middle East. The Council further welcomed the agreement between Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Olmert and Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas to establish a mutual ceasefire in Gaza. The Council welcomed the steps taken by both sides to maintain the ceasefire and expressed its hope that it would lead to a sustained period of calm. It called upon both sides to avoid any actions that could jeopardize further progress.¹⁴⁶

By resolution 1773 (2007) of 24 August 2007, the Council welcomed the tripartite arrangements referred to in the report of the Secretary General, and encouraged the parties to coordinate further with the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, notably to visibly mark the Blue Line and reach an agreement on the northern part of Ghajar. The Council called upon all parties to cooperate fully with the Security Council and the Secretary General to achieve a permanent ceasefire and a long term solution as envisioned in resolution 1701 (2006), and emphasized the need for greater progress in that regard.

C. Decisions involving the Secretary-General in the Council's efforts at the pacific settlement of disputes

While Article 99 of the Charter provides that the Secretary-General may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security, the Charter does not otherwise describe or define the role of the Secretary-General in relation to matters of peace and security. The Council's efforts at conflict prevention and the peaceful settlements of disputes have increasingly, however, required the involvement of the Secretary-General.

During the period under review, the Council recognized, in a number of decisions, the important role that the Secretary-General was called upon to play in the prevention of armed conflicts.

By resolution 1625 (2005) of 14 September 2005, in connection with the Council's consideration of the item entitled "Threats to international peace and security", the Council affirmed its determination to strengthen United Nations conflict prevention capacities by, inter alia, assessing regularly the developments in regions at risk of armed conflict and encouraging the Secretary-General to provide information to the Council on such developments pursuant to Article 99 of the Charter. The Council further requested the Secretary-General to provide to the Council regular reports and analyses of developments in regions of potential armed conflicts, particularly in Africa, and as appropriate a presentation of ongoing preventive diplomacy initiatives. It also requested the Secretary-General to assist countries at risk of armed conflict in performing strategic conflict risk assessments, implementing the measures agreed by the concerned countries, enhancing national dispute management capacities, and addressing the root causes of armed conflict.

In a statement by its President dated 28 August 2007, the Council noted the recommendations in the report of the Secretary-General on the prevention of armed conflict,¹⁴⁷ welcomed the efforts that had been made to strengthen the risk assessment and conflict prevention capacities of the United Nations, and encouraged the Secretary-General to continue those efforts in order to improve the United Nations early warning, mediation support and other preventive activities in Africa and around the world. The Council stressed the crucial role of the Special Advisers of the Secretary-General on the Prevention of Genocide and on matters relating to the prevention and resolution of conflict as well as, where appropriate, the contribution of United Nations bodies such as the Peacebuilding Commission and the Human Rights Council.¹⁴⁸

During the period under review, in accordance with the provisions of Article 33 of the Charter, the Council frequently called on the parties to a dispute or situation to cooperate in negotiations held under the auspices of the Secretary-General, expressed support for conciliation efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General, expressly requested the Secretary-General to assume an active role in the process of achieving a political settlement, or endorsed the initiatives of the Secretary-General within the framework of his good offices. In this context, the Secretary-General made more frequent use of Special Envoys, Advisers and Representatives to assist him in his efforts.¹⁴⁹ For instance, he appointed a Special Representative for the Sudan;¹⁵⁰ subsequently, the Council requested the Secretary-General, through his Special Representative, to provide good offices and political support for the efforts to resolve all ongoing conflicts in the Sudan.¹⁵¹

Beyond the discharge of his good offices, the Secretary-General increasingly proposed the establishment or continuation of special political missions in a number of places around the world, to undertake peacebuilding efforts to prevent conflicts or the re-emergence of conflicts, which included political, humanitarian and development assistance, as well as assistance to transitional national governments in establishing viable institutions. For instance, on the basis of the recommendations of the Secretary-General that an integrated office be established in Sierra Leone following the withdrawal of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone in order to continue to assist the Government of Sierra Leone to consolidate peace by enhancing political and economic governance, building the national capacity for conflict prevention, and preparing for elections in 2007,¹⁵² the Council, by resolution 1620 (2005) of 31 August 2005, established the United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone for an initial period of 12 months, beginning on 1 January 2006.

In connection with the item entitled “Letter dated 22 November 2006 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/2006/920)”, the Council welcomed the report of the Secretary-General on the request of Nepal for United Nations assistance in support of its peace process¹⁵³ and, having considered its recommendations, which were based on the request of the signatories of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the findings of the technical assessment mission, decided to establish a United Nations political mission in Nepal under the leadership of a Special Representative of the Secretary-General to, inter alia, monitor the management of arms and armed personnel of both sides, in line with the provisions of the Agreement. The Council welcomed the Secretary-General’s proposal that his Special Representative coordinate the United Nations effort in Nepal in support of the peace process, in close consultation with the relevant parties in Nepal and in close cooperation with other international actors.¹⁵⁴

The overview that follows sets out examples, by region and in chronological order, of decisions by which the Security Council specifically requested, supported, endorsed, encouraged or welcomed the Secretary-General’s endeavours in the peaceful settlement of disputes and the prevention of outbreak or recurrence of conflict. The practice described below is illustrative and does not purport to be comprehensive.

authorize, for an initial period of six months as from 1 June 2004, with the intention to renew it for further periods, the deployment of a peacekeeping operation, the United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB), in order to support and help to implement the efforts undertaken by Burundians to restore lasting peace and bring about national reconciliation, as provided under the Arusha Agreement. Furthermore, the Council authorized ONUB to use all necessary means to carry out its mandate, which included, inter alia, to ensure that ceasefire agreements were respected, by monitoring implementation and investigating violations of those agreements; and to contribute to the successful completion of the electoral process stipulated in the Arusha Agreement by ensuring a secure environment for free, transparent and peaceful elections.

By resolution 1606 (2005) of 20 June 2005, the Council requested the Secretary-General to initiate negotiations with the Government of Burundi and consultations with all Burundian parties concerned on how to implement his recommendations, and to report to the Council by 30 September 2005 on details of implementation, including costs, structures and time frame.

By resolution 1719 (2006) of 25 October 2006, the Council requested the Secretary-General to establish the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi as recommended in the addendum to his report, in order to support the Government of Burundi in its effort towards long-term peace and stability throughout the peace consolidation phase. Furthermore, it called upon the Government of Burundi and the Parti pour la Libération du peuple Hutu — Forces Nationales de Libération to expeditiously implement in good faith the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement which they signed at Dar es Salaam on 7 September 2006 and to pursue their efforts to resolve outstanding issues in a spirit of cooperation.

The situation in the Central African Republic

By a statement of the President dated 22 November 2006, the Council welcomed the efforts of the Government of the Central African Republic to revive dialogue through meetings with political stakeholders and representatives of civil society. It called upon the Secretary-General to encourage, through the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic, the holding on a regular basis of such meetings, which were vital to restoring trust among Central Africans and promoting lasting reconciliation.¹⁵⁶

The situation in Côte d'Ivoire

By resolution 1528 (2004) of 27 February 2004, the Council decided to establish the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI) for an initial period of 12 months as from 4 April 2004, requested the Secretary-General to transfer authority from the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire and the forces of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) to UNOCI on that date, and set out the mandate of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire.

By a statement of the President dated 16 December 2004, the Council expressed its appreciation to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire, for his unsparing efforts to support the restoration of a durable peace in Côte d'Ivoire under challenging circumstances.¹⁵⁷

By resolution 1572 (2004) of 15 November 2004, the Council expressed its full support for the efforts of the Secretary-General, the African Union and ECOWAS, and encouraged them to continue those efforts in order to relaunch the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire.

By resolution 1603 (2005) of 3 June 2005, the Council requested the Secretary-General to continue to keep it regularly informed of the developments in the situation in Côte d'Ivoire, and the implementation of the mandate of UNOCI¹⁵⁸ and of the Linas-Marcoussis and Pretoria Agreements.

By resolution 1765 (2007) of 16 July 2007, the Council endorsed the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General of 14 May 2007,¹⁵⁹ which adapted the role of UNOCI to the new phase of the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire as set out in the Ouagadougou Political Agreement, and, accordingly, requested the mission, within its existing resources, to support the full implementation of that Agreement.

The situation between Eritrea and Ethiopia

By resolution 1767 (2007) of 30 July 2007, the Council welcomed and looked forward to the continuation of the ongoing efforts of the Secretary-General and the international community to engage with Eritrea and Ethiopia to help them to normalize their relations, to promote stability between the parties and to lay the foundation for sustainable peace in the region.

The situation in Guinea-Bissau

By resolution 1580 (2004) of 22 December 2004, the Council decided to extend the mandate of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNOGBIS), as a special political mission, for one year from the date of adoption of the resolution, and decided also to revise the mandate of the Office to, inter alia, support all efforts to enhance political dialogue and to promote national reconciliation and respect for the rule of law and human rights. The Council encouraged the authorities of Guinea-Bissau to enhance political dialogue and pursue constructive civil-military relations, as a way forward, towards the peaceful completion of the political transition, including the holding of presidential elections as envisaged in the Political Transition Charter.

By a statement of the President dated 19 October 2007, the Council recognized and commended the important role played by the Representative of the Secretary-General for Guinea-Bissau and the staff of UNOGBIS towards helping to consolidate peace, democracy and the rule of law, and expressed its appreciation for their activities.¹⁶¹

By resolution 1620 (2005) of 31 August 2005, the Council requested the Secretary-General to establish the United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone, as recommended in the addendum to his report,¹⁶² beginning on 1 January 2006, with the following key tasks: to assist the Government of Sierra Leone in, inter alia, promoting a culture of peace, dialogue and participation in critical national issues through a strategic approach to public information and communication, including by building an independent and capable public radio capacity.

By resolution 1547 (2004) of 11 June 2004 concerning the Sudan, the Council declared its readiness to consider establishing a United Nations peace support operation to support the implementation of a comprehensive peace agreement, and requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Council his recommendations for the size, structure and mandate of that operation as soon as possible after the signing of a comprehensive peace agreement. The Council endorsed the conclusions of the Secretary-General with regard to the situation in the Sudan,¹⁶³ and urged the parties to the ceasefire agreement signed in N'Djamena on 8 April 2004 to conclude a political agreement without delay.

By resolution 1590 (2005) of 24 March 2005, the Council decided to establish the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS) and requested the Secretary-General, through his Special Representative for the Sudan, to coordinate all the activities of the United Nations system in the Sudan. The mandate of the Mission was, inter alia, to assist the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in promoting understanding of the peace process and the role of the Mission by means of an effective public information campaign, targeted at all sectors of society, in coordination with the African Union; and to assist the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in promoting the rule of law, including an independent judiciary, and the protection of human rights of all people of the Sudan through a comprehensive and coordinated strategy with the aim of combating impunity and contributing to long-term peace and stability and to assist the parties to the Agreement to develop and consolidate the national legal framework.

By resolution 1706 (2006) of 31 August 2006, the Council requested the Secretary-General to consult jointly with the African Union, in close and continuing consultation with the parties to the Darfur Peace Agreement, including the Government of National

Secretary-General, and of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, to promote the stabilization of the situation and the achievement of a comprehensive political settlement, which had to include a settlement of the political status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia.¹⁶⁸

By resolution 1752 (2007) of 13 April 2007, the Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia, and requested the Secretary-General to make use of the extended mandate to support the parties in implementing measures to build confidence and to establish an intensive and meaningful dialogue, and to inform the Council in his next report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, on progress made in this respect.

By resolution 1781 (2007) of 15 October 2007, the Council requested the Secretary General to make use of the mandate in order to support the parties in implementing measures to build confidence and to establish an intensive and meaningful dialogue, with a view to achieving a lasting and comprehensive settlement, including the facilitation of a meeting at the highest level, and to inform the Council in his next report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, on progress made in this respect.

Middle East

The situation in the Middle East

By two statements of the President dated 4 May 2005 and 3 January 2006, the Council commended the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy for their relentless efforts and dedication to facilitating and assisting the parties in the implementation of all provisions of resolution 1559 (2004), and requested that they continue their work in that regard.¹⁶⁹

By resolution 1701 (2006) of 11 August 2006, the Council requested the Secretary-General to develop, in liaison with relevant international actors and the parties concerned, proposals to implement the relevant provisions of the Taif Accords, and resolutions 1559

(2004) and 1680 (2006), including disarmament, and for delineation of the international borders of Lebanon, especially in those areas where the border was disputed or uncertain, and to present those proposals to the Council within 30 days.

The situation between Iraq and Kuwait

By resolution 1546 (2004) of 8 June 2004, the Council welcomed the efforts of the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General to assist the people of Iraq in achieving the formation of the Interim Government of Iraq, as set out in the letter dated 7 June 2004 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council.¹⁷⁰

By a statement of the President dated 24 March 2004, the Council welcomed and strongly supported the decision of the Secretary-General to dispatch to Iraq his Special Adviser, Mr. Lakhdar Brahimi, and his team, as well as an electoral assistance team, in order to lend assistance and advice to the Iraqi people in the formation of an interim Iraqi government to which sovereignty would be transferred on 30 June 2004, as well as in the preparations for direct elections held before the end of January 2005.¹⁷¹

D. Decisions involving regional arrangements or agencies

During the period under review, the Council not only called upon the parties to the conflict to cooperate with regional arrangements, but also, in accordance with Article 52 of the Charter, frequently expressed its support and appreciation for the peace efforts undertaken by regional arrangements or requested the Secretary-General to undertake such efforts in conjunction with regional arrangements. Decisions of the Council regarding the joint or parallel efforts undertaken by the Council and regional agencies or arrangements in the pacific settlement of disputes during the period under review are covered in detail in chapter XII.

Part IV

Constitutional discussion bearing on the interpretation or application of the provisions of Chapter VI of the Charter

Note

This part of the chapter highlights the important arguments raised in the deliberations of the Council with regard to the interpretation of specific provisions of the Charter concerning the role of the Council in the peaceful settlement of disputes. It includes in particular discussions regarding the competence of the Council to consider a dispute or situation and its power to make appropriate recommendations within the framework of Chapter VI of the Charter. It also includes the consideration by the Council of the appropriateness for Member States and non-Member States to bring any dispute or situation to the attention of the Security Council.

According to the relevant provisions of Chapter VI of the Charter, the Council shall, when it deems necessary, make recommendations in relation to disputes or situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security. Therefore, this part will focus on discussions concerning the existence of a dispute or situation within the meaning of Chapter VI. When making recommendations to the parties the Council is also required, pursuant to Article 36 of the Charter, to take into consideration procedures for settlement which have already been adopted by the parties (para. 2) and the general rule that legal disputes should be referred to the International Court of Justice (para. 3). Instances in which the requirements stipulated by Article 36 (2) and (3) became the subject of deliberations are, therefore, also considered below.

During the course of thematic debates held in the Council, several speakers suggested new ideas and new approaches to the role of the Security Council as defined under Chapter VI. The measures available under Chapter VI were often referred to as means that the Council could employ in resolving conflicts. In this regard, the role that the United Nations should play was underlined by many delegations. For instance, in connection with the item entitled "Complex crises and United Nations response", the President suggested that the Security Council should pay greater attention to resolving conflicts, and noted that Chapter VI of the Charter contained a whole inventory of measures that the Council could employ in the pursuit of this objective.¹⁷²

Part IV is divided into six sections, focusing on discussions concerning the provisions of Chapter VI and the provision of Article 99 dealing with the role of the Secretary-General in bringing matters to the attention of the Security Council that might threaten international peace and security. Sections that include more than one item are organized by item of the agenda. Those items under which more than one provision of Chapter VI was dealt with at once are included under different subheadings. It is important to note that, in some cases, it is difficult to establish a clear-cut distinction between the constitutional developments relevant to Chapter VI and those relevant to Chapter VII. In several instances, Member States provided different interpretations of the provisions of Chapter VI or challenged the Security Council's interpretation of those provisions, or even its role in the pacific settlement of disputes.

Reference to peaceful means of settlement of disputes in the light of Article 33 (1) and (2)

Article 33 of the Charter stipulates the obligation of Member States to settle their disputes by peaceful means. Article 33 (1) gives primary responsibility in resolving a dispute to the parties concerned. Article 33 (2) gives the Security Council discretionary power to request the parties to settle their dispute by peaceful means, when it deems necessary. Article 33 was explicitly invoked by Council members, principally during debates on thematic issues relating to conflict prevention and the pacific settlement of disputes, as illustrated in the cases below. In one instance, an explicit reference to Article 33 was made by the President of the International Court of Justice, who noted that recourse to the Court was one of the methods of dispute settlement envisaged by the Charter in Article 33.¹⁷³ Three case studies relate to the question concerning Haiti; cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in stabilization processes; and a letter dated 4 July 2006 from the Permanent Representative of Japan to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council in connection with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea; these cases exemplify how the Security Council called upon the parties to resolve their disputes by political and diplomatic efforts, through dialogue and negotiation.

At the 4917th meeting of the Council, on 26 February 2004, speakers unanimously expressed concern about the deteriorating situation in Haiti. They implicitly highlighted the significance of the provisions enshrined in Article 33, and how it could play an important role in settling the dispute in Haiti. Several speakers called upon the parties to the dispute to settle the crisis by peaceful means, through negotiation and dialogue, in the best interest of the Haitian people.¹⁷⁴

The representative of Haiti called on the opposition to contribute to restoring peace and security in order to find a negotiated political settlement.¹⁷⁵ The representative of Algeria noted that the crisis could be solved through negotiation and responsible dialogue among the parties and emphasized that the Security Council should continue to urge the parties to favour dialogue over confrontation.¹⁷⁶ The representative of the United Kingdom called on the parties to exercise restraint and urged the Government and the opposition to re-enter negotiations in the interests of the Haitian people.¹⁷⁷ While calling on the parties to settle the dispute by peaceful means, the representative of Chile emphasized that the efforts of the international community should be focused on finding a political solution to the crisis, and that its objective should be to support an agreement that would facilitate the restoration of peace, democracy and full respect for human rights in Haiti.¹⁷⁸ The representative of

Germany stated that political dialogue had to be conducted in a spirit of compromise on all sides and that it was the responsibility of all Haitian parties concerned to reject violent means as a tool for achieving political change.¹⁷⁹ The representative of the United States urged all democratic elements in Haiti to maintain active dialogue to reach a lasting political solution.¹⁸⁰ The representative of France emphasized that it was up to the Haitian political forces to make the concessions necessary to achieve a political agreement and joined the calls issued by the Security Council to the government authorities and the opposition to act responsibly by choosing negotiation instead of confrontation.¹⁸¹ The representative of Romania urged all Haitian parties to show the necessary spirit of compromise and urged the armed rebels to stop the violence and make a political settlement possible.¹⁸² The representative of Benin urged the parties to commit themselves to the path of dialogue and negotiation and noted that the quest for peace and the resumption of dialogue had to be carried out in the context of the existing constitutional order.¹⁸³ The representative of Brazil called on the opposition sector to reconsider its position, show willingness to engage in an effective and constructive dialogue and renounce all violent acts designed to put forward its political agenda. He called on all parties to render possible assistance to efforts towards peace in Haiti.¹⁸⁴ The representative of China urged all sides to resolve the crisis by peaceful means, through dialogue, in the best interests of their people and their nation and called on all sides to redouble their efforts to prevent further bloodshed and conflict.¹⁸⁵ The representative of Ireland, speaking on behalf of the European Union, emphasized that the crisis in Haiti had to be resolved peacefully, through constitutional means and a process of political dialogue and compromise. He called on the parties to refrain from any action which would further imperil the welfare of the Haitian people.¹⁸⁶ The representative of Argentina called on the parties to show restraint and underlined that the solution had to involve dialogue between the Government and the opposition.¹⁸⁷ The representative of Peru emphasized that the most rational formula for resolving the crisis in Haiti was to achieve political peace and stability while strictly respecting Haiti's constitution.¹⁸⁸ The representative of Japan argued that a peaceful political solution, achieved through dialogue between the parties, was the best possible strategy.¹⁸⁹

At the end of the deliberations, the President made a statement commending the Organization of American States and the Caribbean Community for their lead role in promoting a peaceful solution and for trying to re-establish confidence among the parties, in particular through their Plan of Action, and called upon the parties to act responsibly by choosing negotiation instead of confrontation.¹⁹⁰

Cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in stabilization processes

At the 5007th meeting, on 20 July 2004, the Permanent Observer of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) underlined the continuing cooperation between the United Nations and OIC in peacemaking, preventive diplomacy and peacekeeping. He stated that in the spheres of conflict resolution and peacebuilding, the Charter of OIC complemented the Charter of the United Nations, and called for the settlement of disputes that might arise among Member States by peaceful means such as negotiation, mediation, conciliation and arbitration.¹⁹¹ Similarly, the representative of the African Union stated that the development of regional strategies that involved regional actors in the resolution of conflicts had been the primary approach of countries in the region. He further stated that the Constitutive Act of the African Union upheld Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations, which he noted enjoined the pacific settlement of disputes through negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration and resort to regional agencies or arrangements.¹⁹²

Letter dated 4 July 2006 from the Permanent Representative of Japan to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council

At its 5490th meeting, on 15 July 2006, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1695 (2006) in response to the launching of ballistic missiles by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. The Council demanded that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea suspend all activities related to its ballistic missile programme, called upon it to show restraint and refrain from any action that might aggravate tension, and to continue to work on the resolution of non-proliferation concerns through political and diplomatic efforts. The Council urged the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to return immediately to the six-party talks without precondition, to work towards the expeditious implementation of the Joint Statement of 19 September 2005, in particular to abandon all nuclear weapons and existing nuclear programmes, and to return at an early date to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards.

After the adoption of the resolution, a number of speakers emphasized that the launching of missiles constituted a serious threat to international peace and security.¹⁹³ The representative of Japan welcomed the unanimous adoption of the resolution, praised the swift and robust Council response and stressed that the launches had been more than a direct threat to Japan.¹⁹⁴ The representative of the United States noted that extensive diplomatic efforts had been undertaken, particularly in Pyongyang itself, but that those efforts had been exhausted, owing to the "continued intransigence and defiance of the North Korean leadership".¹⁹⁵ The representative of France stated that the action by the Security Council was an appropriate response to a serious situation and that the development and testing of ballistic missiles seriously endangered security in North-East Asia and beyond.¹⁹⁶ The representative of China stated that China had always been committed to maintaining peace and stability on the Korean peninsula and had insisted on resolving the relevant issues through peaceful dialogue and negotiations.¹⁹⁷

The representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea stated that it was "unjustifiable and gangster-like" for the Security Council to debate the missile launch, both in view of the competence of the Council and under international law. He emphasized that his delegation resolutely condemned the attempt by some countries to misuse the Security Council for the "despicable political aim of isolating and pressuring" his country. He rejected the resolution adopted at the meeting, but stated that his Government remained unchanged in its will to denuclearize the Korean peninsula in a negotiated, peaceful manner. He underlined that the Korean People's Army would go on with missile launch exercises and would take stronger physical actions if other countries dared to take issue with the exercises and put pressure upon it.¹⁹⁸

Recourse to investigation by the Security Council in the light of Article 34

Article 34 of the Charter stipulates that the Security Council may investigate any dispute, or any situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, in order to determine whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. In the instances described below, Article 34 was implicitly and/or explicitly invoked, mainly in connection with the role of the United Nations in post-conflict national reconciliation, United Nations response to complex crises, and protection of civilians in armed conflict.

Post-conflict national reconciliation: role of the United Nations

At its 4903rd meeting, on 26 January 2004, the Council considered post-conflict national reconciliation and the role of the United Nations. During the debate, the representative of Pakistan noted that the precise response of the Security Council and of the United Nations would naturally depend on the specific nature and content of a given situation. Such responses could include the dispatch of a special envoy to mediate, a fact-finding mission, utilizing the specific mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the appointment of a special representative of the Secretary-General, and/or dispatching a peace observer mission.¹⁹⁹

Complex crises and United Nations response

At its 4980th meeting, on 28 May 2004, the Council met to discuss ways to prevent and effectively respond to complex crises. The representative of China suggested that the special envoys of the Secretary-General could join the envoys of regional organizations in their good offices and mediation efforts and that the United Nations should increase assistance to regional organizations to help them enhance their overall capacity in early warning, peacekeeping and other endeavours.²⁰⁰ The representative of Romania stated that the Security Council should make greater use of Chapter VI procedures to promote conflict prevention. He said that mechanisms such as commissions, fact-finding missions and direct dialogue with the parties to a dispute could offer opportunities to identify and address the root causes of complex crises in the early stages of their development.²⁰¹

The President noted that there were several means at the Council's disposal, ranging from the Secretary-General's good offices and the initiatives that could be taken by the General Assembly to the mechanisms prescribed in Article 34 of the Charter. He argued that these means could be usefully employed to address situations whose continuance could endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. He said that the Council's missions to regions of crisis had become an important tool for gaining a better understanding of realities on the ground and for finding ways of containing conflict and promoting peace processes. He noted that Chapter VI of the Charter contained a whole inventory of measures that the Council could employ and that there had to be a clear recognition that durable peace could be established only when the underlying causes of conflict were effectively addressed.²⁰²

At its 4990th meeting, on 14 June 2004, the Council met to consider the protection of civilians in armed conflict. The representative of Pakistan, while underlining that conflict prevention remained the single most important dimension of protection, noted that there were several means at the disposal of the Council, inter alia, the mechanisms prescribed in Article 34 of the Charter and that these could be usefully employed to address situations whose continuance could endanger the security of civilians.²⁰³ The representative of the United Kingdom said that regional organizations had a particularly important role to play in time-critical settings, as demonstrated by the deployment of the Economic Community of West African States Mission in Liberia in August 2003, and that the Council should continue its work of supporting regional organizations.²⁰⁴ The representative of Switzerland emphasized the need to fight impunity at both the national and international levels and invited the Security Council to make greater use of the tools of observation and fact-finding missions in order to prevent crisis situations.²⁰⁵ The representative of Canada urged the Council to take more resolute actions, and recognized that not all actions could or should be public, but that other measures such as discreet Council fact-finding missions and communications between the Council President and the parties to a conflict could be considered.²⁰⁶

At its 5319th meeting, on 9 December 2005, the Council again considered the protection of civilians in armed conflict. The representative of Qatar, while noting that impunity from law at the national and international levels had to end, called on the Council to use monitoring mechanisms and fact-finding missions.²⁰⁷ The representative of Pakistan suggested that, whenever a conflict broke out, the United Nations should apply a standard operating procedure of dispatching a fact-finding mission, including for the purpose of observing and reporting on the treatment of civilians.²⁰⁸

Security Council in the light of
Article 35

Article 35 (1) and (2) grants Member States and non-Member States the right to bring any dispute, or any situation of the nature referred to in Article 34, to the attention of the Security Council. The Council did not include in its agenda “the issue of the bombardment of the territory of Georgia”, even though a Member State in accordance with Article 35 (1) brought the situation to the attention of the Council.²⁰⁹ In the case described below, the parties discussed whether the item entitled “The situation in Myanmar” should be included in the agenda of the Security Council.

At the 5526th meeting, on 15 September 2006, the representative of China underlined that, according to the Charter, only those questions that constitute threats to international peace and security that warrant discussion by the Security Council. He stated that neither the direct neighbours of Myanmar nor the overwhelming majority of Asian countries recognized the situation in Myanmar as a threat to regional peace and security. He said that to force the Security Council into intervening was not only inappropriate but would also further complicate the situation and have a negative impact on future interaction between Myanmar and the United Nations. He emphasized that so long as the situation in Myanmar did not pose a threat to international or regional peace and security, China would be unequivocally against including the question of Myanmar in the agenda of the Security Council.²¹⁰ The representative of Qatar noted that his Government feared that, by including the question in the agenda of the Council, the diplomatic channels opened by Myanmar with the competent international human rights institutions and with the Secretary-General would be closed. He emphasized that including the matter in the agenda of the Council was inappropriate and Qatar objected to the proposed inclusion.²¹¹

²⁰⁹ By a letter dated 8 August 2007 addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/2007/480), the representative of Georgia requested the Council to convene a meeting to address “the issue of the bombardment of the territory of Georgia”, asserting that the situation threatened the peace and security of Georgia.

On the other hand, the representative of the United States referred to the letter dated 15 September 2006 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²¹² in which his delegation expressed concern about the deteriorating situation in Myanmar. He opined that the situation was likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security and requested that the situation in Myanmar be placed on the Council's agenda. He further argued that matters of a similar kind had been considered threats to international peace and security since the adoption of resolution 688 (1991) dealing with refugee flows from Iraq.²¹³

At the end of the deliberations, the provisional agenda ("The situation in Myanmar") was put to the vote, and adopted by 10 votes to 4 (China, Congo, Qatar, Russian Federation), with 1 abstention (United Republic of Tanzania).

Referral of legal disputes in the light of Article 36 (3)

Article 36 (3) of the Charter stipulates that the Security Council, in making recommendations under Article 36, should take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court.

In the case described below, the Member States debated the question whether the Security Council could make more frequent recourse to the provisions of the Statute of the Court.

Strengthening international law: rule of law and maintenance of international peace and security

At the 5474th meeting, on 22 June 2006, speakers unanimously expressed their commitment to the rule of law and the principles of the Charter, as well as their support of the International Court of Justice, and stressed that reintroducing and promoting the rule of law was the only way to rebuild societies shattered by conflict. While identifying certain issues that his delegation believed to merit particular attention, the President (Denmark) underlined that the peaceful settlement of disputes through, inter alia, resort to the International Court of Justice, was at the heart of the Charter of the United Nations.²¹⁴ The Legal Counsel of the United Nations emphasized the fundamental principle requiring States to settle their international differences through peaceful means and the specific role entrusted by the Charter to the International Court of Justice. He further stated that the judgments of the Court had made a valuable contribution to the cause of peace.²¹⁵

The President of the International Court of Justice stated that the role of the Court was at the heart of the general system for the maintenance of international peace and security through its specific contribution to the peaceful settlement of disputes. Citing the provision enshrined under Article 36 (3), he said that the Security Council had failed to make use of this provision for many years, and emphasized that that tool needed to be brought to life and made a central policy of the Council.²¹⁶

The representative of the United Kingdom underlined that the peaceful settlement of disputes was at the heart of the Charter. While expressing support for the International Court of Justice, she underlined that it was the principal United Nations organ charged with settling disputes between States and had an absolutely central role in maintaining international peace and security.²¹⁷ The representative of Greece suggested that the Security Council should do more to promote the pacific settlement of disputes and underlined that full implementation of the judgments and advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice would further enhance its role in promoting legality and the primacy of international law in international relations. She further stated that she supported the abovementioned view of the President of the Court regarding greater use of Article 36 (3).²¹⁸ The representative of Mexico emphasized that legal disputes should be referred to the International Court of Justice and that, generally speaking, all disputes between States stemmed from differences concerning the interpretation of some rule of international law.²¹⁹

Referrals by the Secretary-General in the light of Article 99

Article 99 of the Charter empowers the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security. In the deliberations of the Council described below, Member States encouraged the Secretary-General to fully and effectively exercise his power as stipulated in Article 99, and Article 99 was also raised during a discussion of whether the Council had the mandate to deliberate on matters concerning security aspects of climate change. In a number of instances, Article 99 was explicitly invoked by a Member State in communications addressed to the President of the Security Council. For example, in connection with the item entitled “Complex crises and United Nations response”, the representative of Pakistan, by a letter dated 8 September 2004 addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitted a summary of the important ideas and suggestions presented during the Council’s debate on complex crises and United Nations response, in which it was noted that the role of the Secretary-General pursuant to Article 99 was critical, and that more frequent use should be made of the provisions of resolutions 1296 (2000) and 1366 (2001), by which the Secretary-General was encouraged to convey to the Security Council his assessment of potential threats to international peace and security in accordance with Article 99 of the Charter.²²⁰

Complex crises and United Nations response

At its 4980th meeting, on 28 May 2004, the Council considered the item entitled “Complex crisis and United Nations response”. The Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator held that greater use should be made both of resolution 1296 (2000), by which the Council requested the Secretary-General to bring to its attention situations of grave concern in respect of the protection of civilians in armed conflict, and of resolution 1366 (2001), by which the Council encouraged the Secretary-General to convey to it his assessment of potential threats to international peace and security. He added, however, that there was no

In the debate, a few speakers explicitly invoked Article 99 and argued that it should be used as an early warning mechanism.²²² The representative of Spain noted that, while there were many early warning systems within the United Nations, the time had come to give serious consideration to how they could be coordinated so that the information at their disposal could contribute effectively and immediately to the decision-making process. He emphasized how critical the role of the Secretary-General was pursuant to Article 99 in that connection. He said that the Secretary-General’s initiative to appoint a special adviser on the prevention of genocide was promising, in that it would ensure that the relevant information would reach the highest decision-making bodies early enough.²²³

The representative of Benin noted that the Council had a wide range of instruments at its disposal to bring critical situations under control and steer them towards a more positive outcome and that, more than in the past, the obligation to act flowed from the Council’s responsibility to protect and its exclusive right to authorize the legal use of force for that purpose. He considered that to be the reason the Council was more often questioned on its slowness to respond. He emphasized that from that perspective it was particularly important for the Secretary-General to fully and effectively exercise his power to draw the attention of the Security Council to any matter that in his opinion could threaten the maintenance of the international peace and security, as set out in Article 99.²²⁴

The representative of Chile, noting the provisions of Article 99, said that, with the tools available to the Secretary-General and the system, it would appear that the Security Council was called upon only when a crisis was imminent and that little preventive action could therefore be taken in advance. He said that, in “An Agenda for Peace” issued in 1992, the then-Secretary-General, Boutros Boutros-Ghali, rightly noted that the tools which could be made available to the Secretariat would allow the elaboration of an appropriate preventive policy; the former Secretary-

General Dag Hammarskjöld had also resorted to Article 99 to initiate peacekeeping operations. He suggested that it might be interesting for the Security Council and its subsidiary bodies to look into how the Secretary-General might be given better tools for pursuing preventive policies and thereby achieve the objective of involving the Council in situations that might evolve into conflict.²²⁵

The representative of the United Kingdom encouraged the Secretary-General to make greater use of his authority under Article 99 to bring to the attention of the Council any matter which in his or her opinion might threaten the maintenance of international peace and security.²²⁶

Letter dated 5 April 2007 from the Permanent Representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council

At its 5663rd meeting, on 17 April 2007, the Council held an open debate in which it discussed the relationship between energy, security and climate. It was the first time the Council held a thematic debate that addressed the security aspects of climate change. The representative of the Netherlands, noting that the timely addressing of climate change and identifying its potential security risks could help to prevent conflicts, urged the Secretary-General to alert the Security Council of climate-related crisis situations which might endanger peace and security.²²⁷ The representative of Qatar noted that the responsibility of the Secretary-General to bring the matter to the attention of the Council under Article 99 of the Charter limited that prerogative to matters which in the opinion of the Secretary-General might threaten the maintenance of international peace and security. He further argued that the Security Council, because of “imbalances in its power hierarchy”, was not the optimal mechanism to address the question of climate change.²²⁸

Relevance of the provisions of Chapter VI to the prevention of conflicts

The role of civil society in conflict prevention and the pacific settlement of disputes

At its 5264th meeting, on 20 September 2005, the Council considered the item entitled “The role of civil society in conflict prevention and the pacific settlement of disputes”. Several speakers emphasized that the essential responsibility for conflict prevention rested with national Governments, but agreed on the important role of civil society in support of conflict prevention and the pacific settlement of disputes, in line with Chapter VI of the Charter.²²⁹ The representative of Romania noted that, given the potential represented by the knowledge and intuitive understanding of civil society actors, emphasis should be placed on promoting an improved and upgraded cooperation between the United Nations system and civil society organizations.²³⁰ The representative of Peru stated that civil society could support preventive diplomacy and mediation, including through the peaceful settlement of conflicts. He said that, through the action of local and international non-governmental organizations, civil society had an active role to play in helping to mobilize the international community’s resources.²³¹ The representative of Benin argued that civil society had real potential in shaping the public sphere and in acting as a social intermediary, and thus in the peaceful settlement of disputes and the prevention of violent conflicts.²³² The representative of the Russian Federation noted that the comprehensive nature of threats to international peace and security required that the Security Council develop a comprehensive strategy for conflict prevention and for the peaceful settlement of disputes. He said that in such a strategy a useful role could be played by civil society, together with the efforts of States and organizations.²³³

The President called on the Security Council to nurture and encourage a meaningful role for civil society in preventing disputes and in the peaceful settlement of disputes.²³⁴ At the end of deliberations the President made a statement on behalf of the Council, in which it underlined the need for a broad strategy for conflict prevention and pacific settlement of disputes in line with Chapter VI of the Charter.²³⁵

Post-conflict peacebuilding

At the 5627th meeting, on 31 January 2007, the Assistant Secretary-General in the Peacebuilding Support Office said that three new pillars — the Peacebuilding Commission, the Peacebuilding Support Office and the Peacebuilding Fund — offered a new opportunity to address the critical and fragile period in the life of a country ravaged by conflict.²³⁶

Noting a strong correlation between low levels of development and violent conflict, the President of the Economic and Social Council expressed the readiness of that Council to contribute to the best of its ability to developing the strategic goals and defining a viable peacebuilding strategy for the Peacebuilding Commission, thereby ensuring its lasting added value.²³⁷

The representative of Japan said that the Peacebuilding Commission had been established as an intergovernmental advisory body to address issues which encompassed the mandates of the principal organs, including the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. In his view, this meant that there must be ways of ensuring meaningful interface and interaction between the Commission on the one hand and those relevant principal organs and bodies on the other, if its work were to be useful and effective.²³⁸ The representative of Guatemala indicated that it was important for the Commission to collaborate proactively with the Economic and Social Council, bearing in mind the experience gained in the ad hoc advisory groups on African countries, but at the same time stressed that the role of the Social and Economic Council in its own area must not be forgotten.²³⁹

At the 5761st meeting, on 17 October 2007, the Chairman of the Peacebuilding Commission, introducing the report of the Commission, said that the Commission had significantly contributed to the promotion of integrated post-conflict peacebuilding strategies in Burundi and Sierra Leone. He noted that it had also sought to accumulate best practices and lessons learned from some critical peacebuilding issues. He further noted that the Commission had faced challenges during its initial phase of establishment and that the United Nations peacebuilding architecture was now fully in place. As the Commission was entering its second year of activity, the Chairman said that it should begin addressing the points to be considered for adding new countries to its agenda. He underlined the need to strengthen the Commission's relationship with relevant actors, in particular the principal organs of the United Nations.²⁴⁰

The Assistant Secretary-General in the Peacebuilding Support Office underlined that the Peacebuilding Commission had an important and strategic role to play in bringing all actors together, including the Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, to address the critical and fragile period in the life of a country ravaged by conflict.²⁴¹ The representative of Peru expressed the hope that there would be flexible and effective interaction between the Peacebuilding Commission, the Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.²⁴²

*Maintenance of international peace and security:
role of the Security Council in conflict prevention and resolution, in particular in Africa*

At the 5735th meeting, on 28 August 2007, speakers were unanimous in reaffirming the importance of preventing conflict in a comprehensive manner and renewing their commitment to enhancing the Council's role in preventing and resolving conflict in all its forms.

Opening the debate, the Secretary-General stressed that more resources should be devoted to conflict prevention and underlined that it was also important to increase mediation capacity. He said that in the coming months he would present proposals for strengthening the capabilities of the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat, with the goal of making more effective use of his good offices, as he believed in engagement and dialogue, not confrontation. He added that it was better to respond proactively, before a crisis fully developed.²⁴³

The representative of Panama called on the Council and the General Assembly to redouble efforts to facilitate the success of the measures provided for under Chapter VI of the Charter for the peaceful settlement of disputes, given the human consequences inherent in any conflict.²⁴⁴ The representative of the Sudan hoped that the discussion would follow an operational and objective approach that would contribute to strengthening the role of the Security Council in preventing conflicts, in keeping with the goal of eliminating the root causes of such conflicts through peaceful settlement, in order to achieve lasting peace and security.²⁴⁵

The representative of Norway expressed support for the role that regional organizations, particularly the African Union, played in the prevention and resolution of conflicts. He was encouraged by the fact that African countries themselves were taking a leading role in the settlement of African disputes by peaceful means and in the promotion of preventive action in response to threats to regional peace and security. He said that, to strengthen those important regional efforts, close cooperation between the United Nations and other partners was needed.²⁴⁶ The representative of Guatemala said that conflict prevention was best reflected in Chapter VI, particularly through the peaceful means contained in Article 33.²⁴⁷ The representative of Benin argued that conflict prevention was an essential aspect of the Security Council's mandate emanating from Chapter VI of the Charter, specifically, Article 34.²⁴⁸

Introductory note

This chapter deals with action taken by the Security Council with respect to threats to the peace, breaches of the peace or acts of aggression, within the framework of Chapter VII of the Charter.

The period under review was marked by considerably expanded Council action in response to threats to or breaches of the peace, and Chapter VII of the Charter was invoked in a large number of decisions of the Council. Having determined the existence of a threat to the peace, the Council adopted one resolution explicitly acting under Article 40 of the Charter, in connection with the issue of non-proliferation, and imposed or modified sanctions regimes, of the type provided for in Article 41, against members of the Al-Qaida organization and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities, Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Liberia, Sierra Leone and the Sudan. The Council adopted a number of judicial measures which included the establishment of a Special Tribunal for Lebanon, the referral of the situation in Darfur to the International Criminal Court, and the endorsement of the intention of the President of the Special Court for Sierra Leone to authorize a Trial Chamber in the Netherlands for the trial of the former President of Liberia, Charles Taylor. The Council also adopted several resolutions authorizing United Nations peacekeeping missions, as well as multinational forces, to take enforcement actions. The mandates of such missions became increasingly more multidimensional and complex and included a large array of tasks ranging from the protection of civilians under immediate threat of physical violence to a number of post-conflict activities such as disarmament and demobilization, support to security sector reform, and assistance to national reconciliation efforts and electoral processes. With respect to the United Nations peacekeeping missions, the Council authorized enforcement action for the newly established missions in Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire, Haiti and the Sudan. Regarding multinational forces, the Council authorized the use of "all necessary measures" within the framework of Chapter VII of the Charter for operations newly established by the European Union in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Chad and the Central African Republic and the Democratic Republic of the Congo; the African Union in Somalia; and Member States participating in the Multinational Interim Force in Haiti. During the period under consideration, the Council authorized for the first time an enforcement action by the joint African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID).

This chapter focuses on material selected to highlight how the provisions of Chapter VII of the Charter were interpreted by the Council in its deliberations and applied in its decisions. Given the scope and complexity of the Council's practice under Chapter VII during the period under review, and in order to give due focus to the key relevant elements that arose in its decisions or deliberations, individual Articles of the Charter have been dealt with in separate parts of the chapter. Parts I to IV focus respectively on the practice of the Council in accordance with Articles 39 to 42, part V focuses on Articles 43 to 47. Parts VI and VII address, respectively, the obligations of Member States under Articles 48 and 49, and parts VIII and IX deal, respectively, with the practice of the Council with respect to Articles 50 and 51. Further, each part contains a section that focuses on the decisions of the Council, as well as a section that highlights relevant excerpts from the Council's deliberations, illustrating the Council's practice with respect to the Article(s) considered.

Part I

Determination of a threat to the peace, breach of the peace or act of aggression in accordance with Article 39 of the Charter

Article 39

The Security Council shall determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression and shall make recommendations, or decide what measures shall be taken in accordance with Articles 41 and 42, to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Note

During the period under review, the Council did not explicitly invoke Article 39 in any of its decisions nor did it determine the existence of any breach of the peace or act of aggression. The Council did adopt several resolutions determining, or expressing concern at, the existence of threats to the peace. In a number of instances, in connection with the situations in Haiti, the Middle East, the Sudan, and the situation in Chad, the Central African Republic and the subregion, the Council determined the existence of new threats to regional and/or international peace and security. The Council also determined that the situations in Afghanistan, Bosnia and Herzegovina and Iraq continued to constitute threats to international peace and security. In a number of other instances, in connection with the situations in Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Liberia, Sierra Leone and Somalia, and the cross-border issues in Africa, the Council determined that such situations continued to pose a threat to international peace and security in the region. In all those instances, following the determination of the existence of a threat to the peace, the Council took measures in accordance with Articles 40, 41 and 42 of the Charter in order to maintain or restore international peace and security.

The range of situations which the Council determined as giving rise to threats to the peace included inter-State conflicts,¹ intra-State conflicts,² internal conflicts with a regional or subregional dimension,³ terrorist acts⁴ and the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.⁵ In one instance, by resolution 1688 (2006) of 16 June 2006, noting that former President Taylor had been brought before the Special Court for Sierra Leone in Freetown, the Council determined that the continued presence of the former President in the subregion constituted an impediment to stability and a threat to the peace of Liberia and of Sierra Leone and to international peace and security in the region.

During the period under review, the Council also identified certain generic threats to peace and security, such as the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and the proliferation and illicit trafficking of small arms and light weapons. By resolution 1674 (2006) of 28 April 2006, the Council reiterated that the deliberate targeting of civilians and the commission of

² For example, by resolution 1769 (2007) of 31 July 2007, the Council reiterated its deep concern for the security of humanitarian aid workers and their access to populations in need, reaffirmed its concern that the ongoing violence in Darfur might further negatively affect the rest of the Sudan as well as the region, and determined that the situation in Darfur, the Sudan, continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security.

systematic, flagrant and widespread violations of international humanitarian and human rights law in situations of armed conflict might constitute a threat to international peace and security.

Several issues regarding the interpretation of Article 39 and the determination of threats to peace and security arose during the Council's debates, mainly focusing on the threats represented by the situations in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Middle East, Myanmar and the Sudan. There was also substantial discussion about understandings of non-traditional threats to the peace.

Section A outlines the decisions of the Council in which determinations were made regarding the existence of a threat to the peace. Section B reflects the arguments advanced during the Council's deliberations in connection with the adoption of some of those decisions.

A. Decisions relating to Article 39

The situation in Afghanistan

By resolution 1563 (2004) of 17 September 2004, recognizing the constraints upon the full implementation of the Bonn Agreement, the Council determined that the situation in Afghanistan continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security.⁶ The Council reaffirmed its determination by a number of subsequent resolutions.⁷

The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina

By resolution 1551 (2004) of 9 July 2004, reaffirming its commitment to the political settlement of conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, the Council determined that the situation in the region continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security.⁸ By a number of subsequent resolutions, the Council reaffirmed its determination.⁹

⁶ Resolution 1563 (2004), seventh and tenth preambular paragraphs.

⁸ Resolution 1551 (2004), second and ninth preambular paragraphs.

⁹ Resolutions 1575 (2004), 1639 (2005), 1722 (2006) and 1785 (2007).

By resolution 1545 (2004) of 21 May 2004, noting that obstacles remained to Burundi's stability, the Council determined that the situation in the country continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region.¹⁰ That determination was reiterated by the Council by a series of subsequent resolutions.¹¹

By resolution 1650 (2005) of 21 December 2005, the Council noted that, although there had been an improvement in the security situation since the completion of the transitional period, Burundi and the Great Lakes region of Africa still experienced "factors of instability", which continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region.¹² The Council reiterated that determination by two subsequent resolutions.¹³

By resolution 1778 (2007) of 25 September 2007, the Council expressed its deep concern at the activities of armed groups and other attacks in eastern Chad, the north-eastern Central African Republic and western Sudan which threatened the security of the civilian population, the conduct of humanitarian operations in those areas and the stability of those countries, and which resulted in serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law and, therefore determined that the situation in the region of the border between the Sudan, Chad and the Central African Republic constituted a threat to international peace and security.¹⁴

¹⁴ Resolution 1778 (2007), third and seventeenth preambular paragraphs.

The situation in Côte d'Ivoire

By resolution 1527 (2004) of 4 February 2004, noting with concern the continued challenges to the stability of Côte d'Ivoire, the Council determined that the situation in the country continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region.¹⁵ The Council reaffirmed its determination by a number of subsequent resolutions.¹⁶

Items relating to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea¹⁷

By resolution 1695 (2006) of 15 July 2006, the Council, reaffirming that the proliferation of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons, as well as their means of delivery, constituted a threat to international peace and security, the Council expressed grave concern at the launch of ballistic missiles by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, given the potential of such systems to be used as means to deliver nuclear, chemical, or biological payloads.¹⁸ The Council further affirmed that such launches jeopardized peace, stability and security in the region and beyond, particularly in the light of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea's claim that it had developed nuclear weapons.¹⁹

By a statement of the President dated 6 October 2006, the Council expressed its deep concern over the statement made by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea that it would conduct a nuclear test in the future. The Council also deemed that, should the Democratic People's Republic of Korea carry out its threat of a nuclear weapon test, it would jeopardize peace, stability and security in the region and beyond. The Council stressed that a nuclear test, if carried out by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, would represent a clear threat to international peace and security and that, should the Democratic People's Republic of Korea ignore the calls of the international community, the Council would act in a manner consistent with its responsibility under the Charter.²⁰

By resolution 1718 (2006) of 14 October 2006, the Council expressed the gravest concern at the claim made by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea that it had conducted a test of a nuclear weapon on 9 October 2006, and at the danger the test posed to peace and stability in the region and beyond; expressed profound concern that the test had generated increased tension in the region and beyond, and determined that there was a clear threat to international peace and security.²¹ The Council, therefore, condemned the nuclear test claimed by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, finding it in flagrant disregard of the Council's relevant resolutions, and stressed that such a test would bring universal condemnation of the international community and would represent a clear threat to international peace and security.²²

By resolution 1533 (2004) of 12 March 2004, the Council reiterated its concern regarding the presence of armed groups and militias in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, which perpetuated a climate of insecurity in the whole region, and noted that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region.²³ By a number of subsequent resolutions, the Council reiterated such a determination.²⁴

By resolution 1529 (2004) of 29 February 2004, the Council expressed its concern at the deterioration of the political, security and humanitarian situation in Haiti. The Council also expressed its utmost concern at the continuing violence in the country, as well as the potential for a rapid deterioration of the humanitarian situation, and its destabilizing effect on the region. The Council therefore determined that the situation in Haiti constituted a threat to international peace and security, and to stability in the Caribbean, especially through the potential outflow of people to other States in the subregion.²⁵ The Council reiterated that the situation in Haiti continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security by a series of subsequent resolutions.²⁶

By resolution 1542 (2004) of 30 April 2004, noting the existence of challenges to the political, social and economic stability of Haiti, the Council determined that the situation in Haiti continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region.²⁷ By a number of subsequent resolutions, the Council reiterated that determination.²⁸

The situation concerning Iraq

By resolution 1637 (2005) of 8 November 2005, recognizing that international support for security and stability was still essential, the Council determined that the situation in Iraq continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security.²⁹ This determination was reiterated by two subsequent resolutions.³⁰

The situation between Iraq and Kuwait

By resolution 1546 (2004) of 8 June 2004, while welcoming the beginning of a new phase in Iraq's transition to a democratically elected government, the Council recognized that international support for the restoration of stability and security was still essential and therefore determined that the situation in Iraq

continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security.³¹

The situation in Liberia

By resolution 1532 (2004) of 12 March 2004, the Council noted with concern that the actions and policies of the former President of Liberia, Charles Taylor, and other persons, in particular their depletion of Liberian resources and their removal from Liberia and secreting of Liberian funds and property, had undermined Liberia's transition to democracy and the orderly development of its political, administrative and economic institutions and resources. The Council therefore determined that the situation in Liberia constituted a threat to international peace and security in West Africa, in particular to the peace process in Liberia.³² By a number of subsequent resolutions, the Council reaffirmed its determination that the situation in Liberia continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region.³³

By resolution 1638 (2005) of 11 November 2005, the Council, stressing that former President Taylor remained under indictment by the Special Court for Sierra Leone, determined that his return to Liberia would constitute a threat to the peace of Liberia and to international peace and security in the region.³⁴

By resolution 1683 (2006) of 13 June 2006, while welcoming the leadership of the newly elected President, Ellen Johnson Sirleaf, and her efforts to restore peace and security in Liberia, the Council determined that, although significant progress had been made, the situation in Liberia continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region.³⁵ That determination was reaffirmed by the Council in a series of subsequent resolutions.³⁶

By resolution 1636 (2005) of 31 October 2005, the Council, taking note of the findings of the International Independent Investigation Commission, responsible for the investigation of the terrorist bombing in Beirut on 14 February 2005 that killed the former Prime Minister of Lebanon, Rafiq Hariri, the Council reaffirmed that terrorism, in all its forms and manifestations, constituted one of the most serious threats to peace and security. The Council also determined that the terrorist act that killed Mr. Hariri, as well as the act's implications, constituted a threat to international peace and security.³⁷ The Council reaffirmed this determination by resolution 1757 (2007) of 30 May 2007.

By resolution 1701 (2006) of 11 August 2006, the Council, expressing its concern at the continuing escalation of hostilities in Lebanon and Israel since Hizbullah's attack on Israel on 12 July 2006, determined that the situation in Lebanon constituted a threat to international peace and security.³⁸

By resolution 1773 (2007) of 24 August 2007, the Council, reiterating its support for full respect for the cessation of hostilities and the Blue Line in its entirety and condemning all terrorist attacks against the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), determined that the situation in Lebanon continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security.³⁹

By resolution 1562 (2004) of 17 September 2004, the Council, commending the efforts of the Economic Community of West African States towards building peace in the subregion, and encouraging the Mano River Union member States to continue their dialogue aimed at building regional peace and security, determined that the situation in Sierra Leone continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region.⁴⁰ The Council reaffirmed this determination by resolution 1610 (2005) of 30 June 2005.

By resolution 1688 (2006) of 16 June 2006, noting that former President Taylor had been brought before the Special Court for Sierra Leone in Freetown, the Council determined that the continued presence of former President Taylor in the subregion constituted an impediment to stability and a threat to the peace of Liberia and Sierra Leone and to international peace and security in the region.⁴¹

By resolution 1558 (2004) of 17 August 2004, the Council, condemning the continued flow of weapons and ammunition supplies to and through Somalia, in contravention of the arms embargo, and expressing its determination that violators should be held accountable, reiterated the importance of enhancing the monitoring of the arms embargo in Somalia and determined that the situation in Somalia constituted a threat to international peace and security in the region.⁴² By a number of subsequent resolutions, the Council reaffirmed that determination.⁴³

Reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan

By resolution 1556 (2004) of 30 July 2004, the Council noted with grave concern that up to 200,000 refugees had fled to Chad, constituting a serious burden upon that country, and expressed grave concern at the reported cross-border incursions by Janjaweed militias into Chad. The Council therefore determined that the situation in the Sudan constituted a threat to international peace and security and to stability in the region.⁴⁴ The Council reiterated its determination by a series of subsequent resolutions.⁴⁵

By resolution 1590 (2005) on 24 March 2005, the Council, condemning the continued violations of the N'Djamena Ceasefire Agreement of 8 April 2004 and the Abuja Protocols of 9 November 2004 by all sides in Darfur and the deterioration of the security situation, determined that the situation in the Sudan continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security.⁴⁶ That determination was reaffirmed by the Council in a number of subsequent resolutions.⁴⁷

By resolution 1769 (2007) of 31 July 2007, reaffirming its concern that the ongoing violence in Darfur might further negatively affect the rest of the Sudan as well as the region, the Council determined that the situation in Darfur, the Sudan, continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security.⁴⁸

Non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction

By resolution 1540 (2004) of 28 April 2004, the Council, affirming that the proliferation of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons, as well as their means of delivery, constituted a threat to international peace and security, reaffirmed the need to combat by all means, in accordance with the Charter, threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts.⁴⁹ The Council reiterated this determination by resolution 1673 (2006) of 27 April 2006.

Cross-border issues in Africa

By a statement of the President dated 25 March 2004, the Council recognized the need for a comprehensive and composite approach for durable solutions to the complex crises and conflicts in West Africa and considered that the illegal trafficking in arms posed a threat to international peace and security in the region.⁵⁰

Peace consolidation in West Africa

By a statement of the President dated 9 August 2006, the Council, stressing the primary role of each West African Government in peace consolidation and reiterating the importance for all leaders to work together for peace and security in the region, considered that illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons still posed a threat to international peace and security in the region.⁵¹

By resolution 1674 (2006) of 28 April 2006, the Council noted that the deliberate targeting of civilians and other protected persons, and the commission of systematic, flagrant and widespread violations of international humanitarian and human rights law in situations of armed conflict, might constitute a threat to international peace and security, and reaffirmed its readiness to consider such situations and, where necessary, to adopt “appropriate steps”.⁵² That determination was reaffirmed by the Council by resolution 1738 (2006) of 23 December 2006.

Threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts

By several resolutions and statements by the President, the Council reaffirmed its determination that terrorism, in all its forms and manifestations, constituted one of the most serious threats to international peace and security.⁵³

By a series of resolutions and statements by the President, adopted in relation to specific terrorist acts committed in the period under review, the Council condemned such attacks in the strongest terms and declared that it regarded such acts, like any act of terrorism, as threats to international peace and security.⁵⁴

B. Discussion relating to Article 39

*Items relating to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea*⁵⁵

At its 5490th meeting, on 15 July 2006, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1695 (2006), by which it expressed grave concern at the launch of ballistic missiles by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, given the potential of such systems to be used as a means to deliver nuclear, chemical or biological payloads. During the debate that followed the vote, the representatives of Japan and the United States welcomed the unanimous adoption of the resolution, stressing that the ballistic missiles launched by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea constituted a "direct threat" to international peace and security.⁵⁶ The representative of France noted that the resolution constituted a significant development in the Council's efforts to combat the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery, which posed a threat to international peace and security.⁵⁷ The representative of the Republic of Korea insisted that the launches undermined peace and stability in North-East Asia and adversely affected inter-Korean relations.⁵⁸ The representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea rejected the newly adopted resolution, emphasizing that the Council had no authority to debate the missile launch exercise which was a "routine military exercise" designed to increase the country's capacity for self-defence.⁵⁹

At its 5551st meeting, on 14 October 2006, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1718 (2006) by which it expressed profound concern at the increased tension generated by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea's alleged test of a nuclear weapon. In the subsequent debate, several speakers agreed that the tests conducted by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea posed a threat to international peace and security.⁶⁰ Recalling resolution

1695 (2006), the representative of the United States expressed his disappointment that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea chose to answer the Council's demands with "yet another direct threat to international peace and security", provoking an international crisis and denying its people an opportunity for a better life. He expressed satisfaction with the Council's decision to condemn the launches, which in his opinion signalled to everyone that the Council was prepared to meet threats to international security "with swift resolve".⁶¹ The representative of the United Kingdom said that the test had been carried out in violation of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and resolution 1695 (2006).⁶² The representative of the Russian Federation recalled his Government's position that any nuclear experiment conducted by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea could complicate the prospects for a settlement of the nuclear problem on the Korean peninsula, which was already "fraught with threats to peace, security and stability". He spoke in favour of a strong response on the part of the Council to the "serious challenge to the entire international community" posed by the actions of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, but cautioned that the response should be "carefully vetted and targeted to prevent further escalation of tension".⁶³ The representative of Japan said that, while the resolution contained strong measures, its goal was to remove the threat to international peace and security by ensuring the discontinuation of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea's nuclear testing and ballistic missile launchings.⁶⁴ In response, the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea rejected the newly adopted resolution, characterizing it as "unjustifiable". He expressed disappointment at the Council's inability to express a "word of concern" to the United States, which threatened his country with a nuclear pre-emptive attack. He asserted that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea's nuclear test was "entirely attributable to the United States nuclear threat, sanctions and pressure".⁶⁵

At its 5028th meeting, on 2 September 2004, the Council adopted resolution 1559 (2004), by which it expressed concern at the continued presence of armed militias in Lebanon and called upon all remaining foreign forces to withdraw from Lebanon. Following the vote, the representative of France noted that Lebanon's internal stability and the stability of the region had been "repeatedly and seriously threatened", and stressed the need for the withdrawal of foreign forces from Lebanon and the dismantling of Lebanese and non-Lebanese militias.⁶⁶ The representative of Algeria argued however that the situation in Lebanon did not "appear to constitute a threat to international peace and security" and, therefore, did not require a decision of the Council. He opined that it was Israel that, because of its "policy of occupation and colonization of Arab lands", constituted an "incontrovertible threat to international peace and security" which required urgent consideration and measures by the Council.⁶⁷ The representative of Pakistan pointed out that the newly adopted resolution was not consistent with the Council's functions and responsibilities under Article 39 of the Charter, since it failed to establish evidence of any "urgent threat to peace". He stressed that the Council should address the "real threat" to peace in the Middle East arising from the occupation of Palestinian and Arab territories.⁶⁸ The representative of Angola expressed the hope that the adoption of the resolution would not have "undesirable and unexpected effects", since the situation in Lebanon did not represent an immediate threat to peace and security.⁶⁹

At its 5117th meeting, on 28 January 2005, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1583 (2005), by which, expressing concern at the persistence of tensions and violence along the Blue Line, as well as at the potential for conflict escalation, it renewed the mandate of UNIFIL. During the subsequent debate, the representative of the United States emphasized that the Lebanese Government's failure to deploy its armed forces in sufficient numbers to ensure a calm environment throughout its territory posed a "grave threat to peace and security".⁷⁰ The representative of

Greece noted that the unanimous adoption of the resolution was a sign of the Council's feeling that the situation in Lebanon was still threatening peace and security in the area.⁷¹

At its 5489th meeting, on 14 July 2006, the Council discussed a new outbreak of hostilities between Lebanon and Israel on 12 July 2006. During the debate, a number of speakers called for the immediate cessation of hostilities, emphasizing the grave suffering of the civilian population and the infrastructure damages.⁷² The representative of the Russian Federation voiced concern that the border incident which had triggered the crisis was escalating into a "major military conflagration" that could have "grave consequences" for Lebanon, the Middle East region as a whole and international peace. While condemning the kidnapping of Israeli soldiers and the firing of several rockets from Lebanese territory across the Blue Line, he stated the belief that Israel's military action was a disproportionate and inappropriate use of force that threatened "peace and security throughout the region".⁷³ Similarly, the representatives of the United Kingdom and Denmark said that the worsening of the relation between Israel and Lebanon posed a threat to security in the region.⁷⁴ The representative of Slovakia called on both sides to do more and demonstrate clear political will and a commitment to end the protracted conflict, which "threatens international peace and security".⁷⁵

At its 5508th meeting, on 8 August 2006, the Council continued its discussion of the situation in the Middle East. The representative of Israel emphasized the necessity of putting an end to the hostilities, and raised the question whether the Council and the international community could adopt a course of action which would end the threat that Hizbullah and its sponsors posed to the "peoples of Israel and Lebanon and to the region as a whole".⁷⁶ In response, the representative of Qatar affirmed that many factors had allowed terrorists to pursue acts that threatened international peace and security, precisely because of the lack of implementation of Security Council resolutions, particularly on the issue of Palestine. He therefore emphasized the necessity for the cessation of hostilities to be established by a resolution of the Council, and not imposed exclusively from an Israeli perspective.⁷⁷

At its 5584th meeting, on 12 December 2006, the Council considered the latest report of the Secretary-General on the situation in the Middle East.⁷⁸ During the debate, the representative of Qatar expressed his regret that the Council dealt with issues of “lesser gravity and importance with unwavering seriousness and resolve”, but failed to give the same importance to the “dangerous question” of the Middle East, which posed an “ominous threat to the region as a whole”. He urged the Council to play an active role in finding a “just and permanent” solution to the Palestinian question and the Arab-Israeli conflict.⁷⁹ The representative of Israel pointed out that the “denial of the Holocaust” by the Islamic Republic of Iran, its “pursuit of nuclear weaponry, and its strategic backing of Hamas and Hizbullah” threatened peace and security. He expressed hope that the moderates in the region understood what needed to be done for peace, and where the “real threat” lay.⁸⁰ The representative of Slovakia underlined that national dialogue should continue in Lebanon with the aim, among others, of disarming militia, which represented a “constant threat to the stability and security of Lebanon and its neighbours”.⁸¹ The representative of the Congo observed that there was no military solution to the conflict in the Middle East, whose ramifications threatened to engulf an “already destabilized region”. He called for the convening of an international conference aimed at revitalizing the prospect for a two-State solution.⁸² The representative of Ghana, echoing previous speakers, declared that the Middle East “unquestionably” constituted the most “volatile region in the world and, by implication, the major threat to international peace and security”.⁸³

The 5526th meeting of the Council was held on 15 September 2006 in response to the request by the representative of the United States to include the item entitled “The situation in Myanmar” in the agenda.⁸⁴ Prior to a vote on the adoption of the agenda, the representative of China, supported by the representative of Qatar, raised a number of objections, highlighting the fact that neither the direct neighbours of Myanmar nor the overwhelming majority of Asian countries recognized the situation in Myanmar as a threat to regional peace and security. He suggested that requesting the Council to discuss an issue which, by nature, pertained to the internal affairs of a country not only exceeded the mandate given by the Charter to the Council, but also undermined the Council’s authority and legality. He therefore concluded that, as long as the situation in Myanmar did not pose “a threat to international or regional peace and security”, China would be “unequivocally against” including the question of Myanmar in the agenda of the Security Council.⁸⁵ In response, the representative of the United States recalled his letter to the Council dated 1 September 2006,⁸⁶ in which he pointed out that the deteriorating humanitarian situation in Myanmar was likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. He further noted that, since the adoption of resolution 688 (1991) dealing with the refugee flows from Iraq after the first Gulf war, the Council had considered similar matters as threats to international peace and security, which was also the case for the situation in Myanmar.⁸⁷

At its 5619th meeting, on 12 January 2007, the Council debated the adoption of a draft resolution submitted by the United States and the United Kingdom regarding the deterioration of the situation in Myanmar.⁸⁸ Prior to the vote, the representatives of China and Qatar emphasized that the developments in Myanmar were internal matters and did not constitute a threat to international peace and security, pointing out that Myanmar’s immediate neighbours, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations countries, and a majority of the Asia-Pacific countries did not regard it as a threat.⁸⁹

Similarly, the representative of Indonesia indicated that, while the events in Myanmar inflicted suffering on the people of Myanmar, the situation did not constitute a threat to international peace and security.⁹⁰ The representative of South Africa warned that his country would vote against the draft resolution because the issues it addressed did not fit with the Council's mandate under the Charter.⁹¹ Likewise, the representative of the Russian Federation stressed that, without denying that the country had been facing certain problems, particularly in the socioeconomic and humanitarian areas, the situation in Myanmar did not pose any threat to international or regional peace.⁹² Following the rejection of the draft resolution owing to the negative vote of two permanent members of the Council, the representative of the United States said that the situation in Myanmar posed a risk to peace and security beyond the country's borders. He argued that the draft resolution would have contributed to stability in the region by providing a clear support for the Secretary-General's good offices mission.⁹³ Sharing this viewpoint, the representative of the United Kingdom asserted that the situation in Myanmar represented "a threat to regional peace and security" and to the security of the people of Myanmar.⁹⁴ The representative of Slovakia expressed concern about the deteriorating situation in the country, including the massive violations of human rights, which, if not addressed adequately, could grow into an "intra-State conflict with consequences for the entire region".⁹⁵ In response, the representative of Myanmar stated that his country did not pose any threat to international peace and security and that the adoption of the draft resolution would have exceeded the Council's mandate, undermining its authority and legality, and creating a dangerous precedent.⁹⁶

At its 5753rd meeting, on 5 October 2007, the Council heard a briefing by the Secretary-General and

Similarly, by two letters dated 29 September 2006 and 8 December 2006, respectively, the representative of Cuba, on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, reaffirmed that the Movement did not consider the situation in Myanmar as posing a threat to international peace and security (see S/2006/781 and S/2006/969).

by his Special Envoy on his latest mission to Myanmar. During the ensuing debate, the representative of the United Kingdom expressed concern at the "continued human rights abuses" committed by the Government of Myanmar and opined that the situation in the country was not just an affront to the world but also "a threat to stability beyond [its] borders".⁹⁷ The representative of China noted that the situation in Myanmar was calming down thanks to the efforts of all parties and the international community, and said that the situation did not pose "any threat" to international or regional peace and security.⁹⁸ The representative of Peru noted however that the increase in the number of internally displaced persons and refugees was creating a "serious situation of instability", which threatened security in the region.⁹⁹ In response, affirming that the situation had returned to normalcy, the representative of Myanmar stated that his Government would continue its policy of national reconciliation and that, despite "recent tragic events", the situation in Myanmar was not a "threat either to regional or to international peace and security".¹⁰⁰

At its 5777th meeting, on 13 November 2007, after the Council heard another briefing from the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General to Myanmar, the representative of China reiterated that the "Myanmar issue" was an internal affair and did not pose any threat to international or regional peace and security.¹⁰¹ The representative of Peru warned however that the increasing number of displaced and refugees was leading to a situation of instability that could threaten stability within the country and the region.¹⁰² The representative of Myanmar maintained that peace and stability in his country had been restored and stressed that, unlike other situations in the world that threatened peace and security which deserved the "undivided attention" of the Council, Myanmar did not pose "any threat" to regional or international peace and security.¹⁰³

Africa's food crisis as a threat to peace and security

the World Food Programme on the food crisis in Africa, who reported on a range of humanitarian issues, specifically as they affected peace and security in the continent. In his opinion, the greatest humanitarian crisis in the world was posed by the erosion of the social and political fabric in southern Africa due to a “lethal mix of AIDS, recurring drought and failing governance and capacity”. He further stated that, in much of Africa, the prevalence of hunger was an “accurate barometer” for the level of social instability and that hunger could be both a cause and effect of political conflict.¹⁰⁴ During the ensuing debate, sharing the concerns regarding the triple threat of food insecurity, HIV/AIDS, and weakened governance in many African countries, Council members welcomed the opportunity to address the issue and spoke of the correlation between food security and peace and security in Africa. The representative of Romania, although noting that “humanitarian challenges” had not been formally taken up by the Council, welcomed the opportunity for the Council itself to be informed of and to examine those situations since they could constitute “ominous threats to regional peace, security and stability”.¹⁰⁵ Noting that the failure to achieve food security made peaceful societies more vulnerable to conflicts, the representative of Brazil stated that the international community needed to tackle the “deep-rooted socioeconomic causes of conflicts and humanitarian crises” in order to prevent the emergence, spread and recurrence of conflicts.¹⁰⁶ Echoing this statement, the representative of the United Kingdom expressed the view that inadequate distribution of food was a well-known cause of instability and could contribute to increasing the potential for conflict. He therefore opined that while the underlying causes of hunger were “very complex”, there was “no doubt” that it had “links both to governance and to peace and security”, which were the Council’s principal concern.¹⁰⁷ The representative of China said that the Council, as the body with the primary responsibility for international peace and security, should “adequately” recognize the direct relationship between food crises and conflicts in Africa and take effective measures to eliminate hunger and poverty in order to genuinely achieve peace and stability in Africa.¹⁰⁸ The representative of Greece emphasized that, like any event or process leading to large-scale death or the lessening of life’s opportunities, and undermining States as the basic unit of the international system, hunger constituted a “threat to international security”.¹⁰⁹ The representative of the United States emphasized that the challenges in Africa represented a compelling call for international cooperation to support the continent’s efforts to achieve lasting progress, peace and security. She drew attention to a number of specific situations, such as those in Ethiopia, Liberia, the Niger, Sierra Leone, the Sudan and Zimbabwe, where hunger continued to threaten the peace and security of the African continent.¹¹⁰

At its 4898th meeting, on 20 January 2004, the Council considered the latest report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict.¹¹¹ During the debate, the representative of the Russian Federation noted that many civil and international conflicts affected children, a phenomenon of such great magnitude that it could be viewed as “a new threat to peace and security in individual regions”.¹¹²

At the 5573rd meeting, on 28 November 2006, the representative of Egypt noted that the Council should not deal with the situations covered in the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict,¹¹³ as such situations were not on the agenda of the Council and did not constitute a threat to international peace and security. Instead, he declared, such matters fell under the responsibility of the Third Committee of the General Assembly.¹¹⁴

Letter dated 5 April 2007 from the Permanent Representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council

At its 5663rd meeting, on 17 April 2007, the Council considered the security implications of climate change, having before it a concept paper prepared by the United Kingdom.¹¹⁵ During the debate, it was generally acknowledged that climate change presented a serious global challenge, and most speakers called for international cooperation to tackle the problem in a holistic and preventive manner.

A number of speakers affirmed that the Council had the responsibility to discuss the issue, as climate change presented a potential threat to international peace and security.¹¹⁶ The representatives of the United Kingdom, Belgium and Germany, among others, explicitly pointed at the clear link between climate change and the need for conflict prevention.¹¹⁷ The representative of Germany further added that, although the Council usually dealt with more imminent threats to international peace and security than those caused by climate change, “less obvious and more distant drivers of conflict” should not be neglected.¹¹⁸ The representative of Belgium pointed out that the Council’s “conventional security policies” were still often based on “obsolete” threat assessments and were more geared to managing crises than preventing them, making security policies exclusively based on national sovereignty “less and less appropriate”.¹¹⁹ The representative of Papua New Guinea highlighted that the dangers that small islands and their populations faced were no less serious than those faced by countries and people “threatened by guns and bombs”.¹²⁰

By contrast, a number of speakers held the view that the Council was not the right forum in which to address the implications of climate change on security.¹²¹ They contended that there was no direct link between climate change and security, stressing that both energy and climate change were fundamentally development issues. For instance, the representative of China, although recognizing that climate change might have certain security implications, stated that it was “in essence” an issue of sustainable development.¹²² The representative of India stated that climate change could not be considered a threat in the context of Article 39 of the Charter.¹²³ Similarly, the representative of Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) emphasized that the Council was not the appropriate body to discuss the subject of climate change, insisting on a strict interpretation of what constituted “a threat to international peace and security”, in accordance with Article 39 of the Charter.¹²⁴

Non-proliferation (Islamic Republic of Iran)

At its 5500th meeting, on 31 July 2006, the Council adopted resolution 1696 (2006), by which it expressed its concern at the proliferation risks presented by the nuclear programme of the Islamic Republic of Iran and its determination to prevent an aggravation of the situation. During the debate following the adoption of the resolution, the representative of the United States commended the Council for taking “clear and firm” action, noting that the pursuit of nuclear weapons by the Islamic Republic of Iran constituted a direct threat to international peace and security, which demanded a “clear statement from the Council in the form of a binding resolution”.¹²⁵ In response, the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran pointed out that his country’s nuclear programme did not pose a threat to international peace and security, which made the Council’s dealing with the issue “unwarranted and void of any legal basis or practical utility”.¹²⁶

At its 5612th meeting, on 23 December 2006, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1737 (2006), by which, expressing concern about the Islamic Republic of Iran’s nuclear programme and its failure to comply with resolution 1696 (2006), it imposed a number of measures against the Islamic Republic of Iran. During the debate preceding the vote, the representative of the United States reiterated that the pursuit of a nuclear weapon capability by the Islamic Republic of Iran constituted a “grave threat” and demanded a clear statement from the Council.¹²⁷ Speaking after the vote, the representative of Japan noted that his country viewed the Islamic Republic of Iran's expansion of its enrichment — and reprocessing — related activities as an issue that could affect its own “national peace and security and that of the international community”. He stressed that the proliferation of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction, along with their means of delivery, was a clear and present global challenge posing a great threat and should, therefore, be handled with “firm determination”.¹²⁸ The representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran deplored the adoption of the resolution, insisting that the Council should instead address the actual threat to international peace and security posed by Israel.¹²⁹

At its 5647th meeting, on 24 March 2007, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1747 (2007) by which, reiterating concern over the proliferation risks posed by the nuclear programme of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the country's continuing failure to comply with the Council's resolutions, it strengthened the measures imposed against the Islamic Republic of Iran. During the discussion preceding the vote, the representative of South Africa noted that the Council should remain within its “mandate of addressing threats to international peace and security”. He added that if the sponsors of the draft resolution were convinced that the Iranian programme represented a threat to international peace, then the Council should have been asked to take a decision on a draft resolution that would have concentrated on that, and not to act as if the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran itself posed a threat to international peace and security.¹³⁰ After the vote, the representative of the United States commended the Council on taking action against what was “clearly” a grave threat to international peace and security.¹³¹ The representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran argued that, by adopting the resolution, the Council was being “abused” to take an “unlawful, unnecessary and unjustifiable action” against his Government's peaceful nuclear programme, which presented no threat to international peace and security and therefore fell outside the Council's Charter-based mandate.¹³²

At its 4950th meeting, on 22 April 2004, the Council considered a draft resolution on the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.¹³³ During the debate, several speakers agreed that the acquisition of weapons of mass destruction by non-State actors posed a serious threat to international peace and security and pointed to the fact that the existing non-proliferation regimes did not adequately address the issue.¹³⁴ A number of speakers expressed the hope that the draft resolution would be adopted by the Council,¹³⁵ while several other speakers said that more consultations should be held before a decision was made.¹³⁶ A discussion arose regarding the opportunity for the Council to adopt the draft resolution under Chapter VII of the Charter. The representative of France pointed out that there were “widespread misgivings” about the reference to Chapter VII of the Charter in the draft resolution. He insisted that the reference did not imply that the Council would use force to ensure the implementation of the draft resolution; rather it served as a basis for the Council's consideration of the issue of proliferation of weapons of mass destruction as a threat to international peace and security.¹³⁷ Similarly, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that the Council had a “responsibility” to respond to what he labelled as a threat to international peace and security. He further opined that the invocation of Chapter VII of the Charter was justifiable, considering that the Council was dealing with an urgent and clear threat to peace and security where it alone could act with the necessary speed and authority.¹³⁸ In contrast, the representative of Pakistan affirmed that there was “no justification” for the adoption of the draft resolution under Chapter VII of the Charter, because the threat of proliferation of weapons of mass destruction by non-State actors, while real, was not imminent, and thus did not pose a threat to peace.¹³⁹ In response, the representative of the United States declared that the draft resolution was placed under Chapter VII of the Charter in order to send an “important political message” regarding the seriousness with which the Council viewed that threat to international peace and security, and emphasized that the draft resolution was not about enforcement.¹⁴⁰ A number of representatives agreed with the necessity of totally eliminating weapons of mass destruction.¹⁴¹

At its 4956th meeting, on 28 April 2004, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1540 (2004), which addressed the threat posed by non-State actors’ acquisition and development of weapons of mass destruction, under Chapter VII of the Charter. During the debate that followed, the majority of speakers welcomed the adoption of the resolution, as a legitimate and decisive response by the Council to a clear threat to international peace and security.¹⁴²

At its 5082nd meeting, on 19 November 2004, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1574 (2004), by which it expressed its deep concern at the growing insecurity and violence in Darfur and stressed the importance of progress towards resolving the situation in the region. During the debate that followed, the representative of the United Kingdom noted that the situation in Darfur remained a “threat to international security and stability in the region”, and urged the Council to remain seized of the issue and “be ready to take tougher action” if and when this was needed.¹⁴³ Noting that peace in the Sudan would not be complete without a political settlement for Darfur and voicing concern over the appalling humanitarian tragedy that the conflict had caused, the representative of France asserted that the situation posed a threat to international peace and security. He cautioned that the climate of violence and impunity reigning in Darfur further contributed to instability.¹⁴⁴

At the 5520th meeting, on 11 September 2006, the representative of Japan voiced concern over the worsening security situation on the ground in Darfur and the “well-documented atrocities and large-scale humanitarian disaster”. He opined that the situation continued to create conditions that could lead to “serious consequences” that threatened peace and security in the entire subregion.¹⁴⁵ The representative of Qatar pointed out that, although the Darfur Peace Agreement had been signed by the Government of the Sudan, some parties had refused to sign it. He noted that because of those factions violence had resumed, especially on the borders with Chad, posing “a threat to peace and security in Darfur and throughout the region”.¹⁴⁶

At its 5528th meeting, on 18 September 2006, the Council heard a briefing on the progress made in implementing the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in the Sudan. During the subsequent debate, the representative of Japan expressed the view that, while the resurgence of activities by armed groups in southern Sudan posed a serious threat to security in the region, the agreement on the cessation of hostilities signed by the Government of Uganda and the Lord’s Resistance Army was a positive step in the direction of improving security in southern Sudan.¹⁴⁷ The representative of Slovakia welcomed the progress made in implementing the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, but expressed concern at the deadlock concerning the status of the Abyei area, which continued to undermine the Agreement and threatened international peace and security. He further called on the Government of National Unity to resolve the issue

Small arms

At the 4896th meeting of the Council, on 19 January 2004, a number of representatives commented on the fact that the proliferation of illicit small arms and light weapons posed a threat to international peace and security.¹⁴⁹ The representative of Colombia wondered whether the Security Council could deal with the issue of small arms under Chapter VII of the Charter in the same way it had used resolution 1373 (2001) to fight terrorism, considering that the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons represented “an equal or even greater threat to international peace and security” and caused massive destruction.¹⁵⁰ The representative of Sierra Leone argued that, considering the threat to international peace and security posed by the illicit trade in small arms, the Council should assume responsibility in removing such a threat by going “beyond” its presidential statements and rather seeking other means of enforcing its arms embargoes.¹⁵¹

At the 5127th and 5390th meetings, on 17 February 2005 and 20 March 2006, respectively, several representatives reiterated that the illicit traffic of small arms posed a threat to international peace and security.¹⁵²

Part II

Provisional measures to prevent the aggravation of a situation in accordance with Article 40 of the Charter

Article 40

In order to prevent an aggravation of the situation, the Security Council may, before making the recommendations or deciding upon the measures provided for in Article 39, call upon the parties concerned to comply with such provisional measures as it deems necessary or desirable. Such provisional measures shall be without prejudice to the rights, claims, or position of the parties concerned. The Security Council shall duly take account of failure to comply with such provisional measures.

Note

During the period under consideration, the Security Council adopted one resolution explicitly citing Article 40 of the Charter, in connection with the issue of non-proliferation. In several other instances, having determined the existence of a threat to the peace, the Council adopted a number of decisions acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, without expressly referring to Article 40, which may be of relevance to the Council’s interpretation and application of the principle enshrined in Article 40. By those decisions, the Council called upon the parties to comply with certain provisional measures in order to prevent an aggravation of the situation in question. The measures that could typically be subsumed under the provision of Article 40 included: (a) withdrawal of armed forces; (b) cessation of hostilities; (c) disarmament of militias; (d) conclusion or observance of a ceasefire; (e) negotiation of differences and disputes; (f) compliance with obligations under international humanitarian law; (g) creation of the conditions necessary for unimpeded delivery of humanitarian assistance; and (h) cooperation with peacekeeping efforts and humanitarian assistance. Increasingly, during the period under consideration, the Council, after determining the existence of a threat to the peace and acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, made calls upon the parties to sign peace or ceasefire agreements, to fulfil their obligations under existing peace or ceasefire agreements, or to resume peace talks and/or political dialogue.

Section A outlines the decisions of the Council containing specific provisional measures that the Council called upon the parties to comply with in order to prevent an aggravation of the situation. A number of Council resolutions contained warnings that, in the event of failure to comply with the terms of those resolutions, the Council would meet again and consider further steps. These warnings, which might be considered as falling under Article 40, were expressed in various ways. In a number of instances, the Council warned that it would consider taking further measures if its calls were not heeded.¹⁵³

Section B reflects the discussion in the Council in connection with the adoption of measures falling under the provisions of Article 40 on the issue of non-proliferation.

A. Decisions relating to Article 40

Non-proliferation (Islamic Republic of Iran)

By resolution 1696 (2006) of 31 July 2006, the Council expressed its concerns about the proliferation risks presented by the Iranian nuclear programme. Therefore, “mindful of its primary responsibility under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security”, and being “determined to prevent an aggravation of the situation”, the Council explicitly acting under Article 40 of Chapter VII of the Charter, called upon the Islamic Republic of Iran, without further delay, to take the steps required by the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) which the Council considered essential for building confidence in the exclusively peaceful purpose of that country’s nuclear programme and for resolving outstanding questions; demanded that the Islamic Republic of Iran suspend all enrichment-related and reprocessing activities, including research and development, actions which would be verified by IAEA; called upon the Islamic Republic of Iran to act in accordance with the provisions of the Additional Protocol and to implement without delay all

In connection with the situation in Côte d’Ivoire, see resolutions 1727 (2006), para. 12, and 1782 (2007), para. 15. In connection with non-proliferation, see resolution 1747 (2007), para. 13.

transparency measures as IAEA might request in support of its ongoing investigations; and expressed its intention, in the event of non-compliance by the Islamic Republic of Iran by 31 August 2006, to adopt appropriate measures under Article 41 of Chapter VII of the Charter.¹⁵⁴

By resolution 1545 (2004) of 21 May 2004, the Council, noting that obstacles remained to Burundi’s stability and stressing the importance of the full and unconditional implementation of the Arusha Agreement, demanded that all parties fulfil their obligations under that agreement in order to allow the electoral process, in particular the legislative elections, to take place before 31 October 2004.¹⁵⁵

By resolution 1577 (2004) of 1 December 2004, the Council, condemning all acts of violence as well as violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, in particular the Gatumba massacre, urged all the Governments and parties concerned in the region to denounce the use of and incitement to violence, to condemn unequivocally violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, and actively to cooperate with the United Nations Operation in Burundi and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) and with efforts of States aimed at ending impunity. The Council also called upon the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to cooperate unreservedly with the Government of Burundi to ensure that the investigation into the Gatumba massacre was completed and that those responsible were brought to justice.¹⁵⁶

By resolution 1602 (2005) of 31 May 2005, the Council called upon all Burundian parties to exert greater efforts to ensure the success of the transition, national reconciliation, and the stability of the country in the longer term, in particular by refraining from any actions which might affect the cohesion of the Arusha Agreement process.¹⁵⁷

By resolution 1650 (2005) of 21 December 2005, the Council urged the Government of Burundi to complete the implementation of the programme of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, including the effective reintegration of former combatants. Welcoming the willingness shown by the Government of Burundi to achieve a peaceful solution with the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération (Palipehutu-FNL), the Council reiterated its call upon that movement to join the peace and national reconciliation process without further delays or conditions. The Council expressed its deep concern at the violations of human rights reported by the Secretary-General, and urged the Government and other parties concerned to take the necessary steps to prevent further violations and to ensure that those responsible for such violations were brought to justice without delay.¹⁵⁸

By resolution 1778 (2007) of 25 September 2007, while establishing a multidimensional presence in Chad and the Central African Republic, the Council called upon all the parties to cooperate fully in the deployment and operations of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad and the European Union operation, including by guaranteeing the security and freedom of movement of their personnel and associated personnel.¹⁵⁹

The situation in Côte d'Ivoire

By resolution 1527 (2004) of 4 February 2004, the Council, reaffirming its endorsement of the agreement signed by the Ivorian political forces at Linas-Marcoussis on 23 January 2003, and noting with concern the continued existence of challenges to the stability of Côte d'Ivoire, called upon the signatories to the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement to carry out expeditiously their responsibilities under that Agreement.¹⁶⁰ The Council also called upon the signatories to the Agreement to take the steps called for by the Secretary-General in paragraph 86 of his report.¹⁶¹

By resolution 1528 (2004) of 27 February 2004, stressing the importance of the complete and unconditional implementation of the measures provided for under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement, the Council demanded that the countries fulfil their obligations under the Agreement so that, in particular, the forthcoming presidential election could be held in 2005, in accordance with the constitutional deadlines.¹⁶² The Council called upon all parties to cooperate fully in the deployment and operations of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI), in particular by guaranteeing the safety, security and freedom of movement of United Nations personnel as well as associated personnel throughout the territory of Côte d'Ivoire.¹⁶³

By resolution 1572 (2004) of 15 November 2004, condemning the air strikes committed by the national armed forces of Côte d'Ivoire, which constituted flagrant violations of the ceasefire agreement of 3 May 2003, the Council demanded that all Ivorian parties to the conflict, the Government of Côte d'Ivoire as well as the Forces nouvelles, fully comply with the ceasefire. Emphasizing that there could be no military solution to the crisis and that the full implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements remained the only way to resolve the crisis persisting in the country, the Council urged the President of Côte d'Ivoire, the heads of all Ivorian political parties and the leaders of the Forces nouvelles immediately to begin resolutely implementing all the commitments they had made under those agreements. The Council demanded that the Ivorian authorities stop all radio and television broadcasting inciting hatred, intolerance and violence, and urged the Government of Côte d'Ivoire and the Forces nouvelles to take all necessary measures to ensure the security and safety of civilian persons, including foreign nationals and their property.¹⁶⁴

By resolution 1584 (2005) of 1 February 2005, the Council demanded that all Ivorian parties, including the Government of Côte d'Ivoire and the Forces nouvelles, provided unhindered access, particularly to equipment, sites and installations, to UNOCI and the French forces supporting it.¹⁶⁵

By resolution 1594 (2005) of 4 April 2005, the Council called upon all Ivorian parties immediately and actively to pursue a lasting and just solution to the crisis, particularly through the African Union mediation led by President Thabo Mbeki.¹⁶⁶

By resolution 1600 (2005) of 4 May 2005, reminding all parties they had decided to refer to the mediator, President Thabo Mbeki, any differences which might arise in the interpretation of any part of the Pretoria Agreement, the Council called upon them to implement fully that Agreement.¹⁶⁷

By resolution 1603 (2005) of 3 June 2005, endorsing the Pretoria Agreement, the Council demanded that all the signatories to the Agreement and all the Ivorian parties concerned implement it fully and without delay. The Council also reiterated its demand that all the Ivorian parties take all necessary steps to ensure that the forthcoming elections were free, fair and transparent.¹⁶⁸

By resolution 1633 (2005) of 21 October 2005, expressing serious concern at the persistence of the crisis and the deterioration of the situation in Côte d'Ivoire, the Council made a number of demands to the parties and others concerned. In particular, the Council demanded that all the parties signatories to the Linas-Marcoussis, Accra III and Pretoria Agreements, as well as all the Ivorian parties concerned implement these fully and without delay; that the Forces nouvelles proceed without delay with the programme of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, in order to facilitate the restoration of the authority of the State throughout the national territory, the reunification of the country and the organization of the elections as soon as possible; that all Ivorian parties stop all incitement to hatred and violence in radio and television broadcasting as well as in any other media; the immediate disarmament and dismantling of militias throughout the national territory; that all Ivorian parties refrain from any use of force and violence, including against civilians and foreigners, and from all kinds of disruptive street protests; and that all Ivorian parties cooperate fully with the operations of UNOCI and the French forces, in particular by guaranteeing the safety, security and freedom of movement of their personnel, as well as associated personnel, throughout the territory of Côte d'Ivoire.¹⁶⁹ The Council urged countries neighbouring Côte d'Ivoire to prevent any cross-border movement of combatants or arms into Côte d'Ivoire; and, reiterating its serious concern at all violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Côte d'Ivoire, urged the Ivorian authorities to investigate those violations without delay in order to put an end to impunity.¹⁷⁰

By resolution 1721 (2006) of 1 November 2006, the Council made a number of demands to the parties and others concerned, namely, that the programme for the disarmament and dismantling of militias throughout the national territory be resumed immediately; that all the Ivorian parties concerned, in particular the armed forces of the Forces nouvelles and the armed forces of Côte d'Ivoire, participate in good faith in the work of the quadripartite commission responsible for overseeing the implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and the operations for the disarmament and dismantling of militias; that all Ivorian parties end all incitement to hatred and violence, in radio and television broadcasting as well as in any other media; that all Ivorian parties refrain from any use of force and violence, including against civilians and foreigners, and from all kinds of disruptive street protests; that all Ivorian parties guarantee the security and freedom of movement of all Ivorian nationals throughout the territory of Côte d'Ivoire; and that all Ivorian parties cooperate fully with the operations of UNOCI and the French forces supporting it, as well as United Nations agencies and associated personnel, in particular by guaranteeing the safety, security and freedom of movement of their personnel, as well as associated personnel, throughout the territory of Côte d'Ivoire.¹⁷¹

By resolution 1739 (2007) of 10 January 2007, the Council called upon all Ivorian parties to cooperate fully in the deployment and operations of UNOCI and the French forces supporting it, in particular by guaranteeing their safety, security and freedom of movement with unhindered and immediate access, as well as for associated personnel, throughout the territory of Côte d'Ivoire, to enable them to carry out fully their mandates.¹⁷³

*Items relating to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea*¹⁷⁴

By resolution 1695 (2006) of 15 July 2006, acting "under its special responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security", and after condemning the multiple launches by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea of ballistic missiles on 5 July 2006, the Council demanded that the Government suspend all activities related to its ballistic missile programme, and re-establish its pre-existing commitments to a moratorium on missile launching. It further underlined, in particular to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the need to show restraint and refrain from any action that might aggravate tension, and to continue to work on the resolution of non-proliferation concerns through political and diplomatic efforts. The Council strongly urged the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to return immediately to the six-party talks without precondition, to work towards the expeditious implementation of the Joint Statement of 19 September 2005, in particular to abandon all nuclear weapons and existing nuclear programmes, and to return at an early date to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and IAEA safeguards.¹⁷⁵

By resolution 1718 (2006) of 14 October 2006, condemning the nuclear test proclaimed by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on 9 October 2006 in flagrant disregard of the Council's relevant resolutions, the Council made a number of demands. In particular, it demanded that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea not conduct any further nuclear test or launch of a ballistic missile; immediately retract its announcement of withdrawal from the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons; and return to the Treaty and IAEA safeguards. The Council called upon the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to return immediately to the six-party talks without precondition and to work towards the expeditious implementation of the joint statement issued on 19 September 2005 by China, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Japan, the Republic of Korea, the Russian Federation and the United States.¹⁷⁶

By resolution 1565 (2004) of 1 October 2004, noting that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region, the Council made a number of demands to the parties and others concerned. In particular, the Council urged the Government of National Unity and Transition to continue, with determination and rapidity, the integration of the security forces, in particular the integration of the armed forces; and to develop without further delay a plan for the disarmament of foreign combatants, and to entrust its implementation to the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, with the support of MONUC.¹⁷⁷ The Council further urged the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda to ensure that their territories were not used to infringe the sovereignty of the others, to realize without further delay the complete normalization of their bilateral relations, and to cooperate actively in assuring security along their common borders, in particular by implementing agreements they had signed for the establishment of joint verification mechanisms with the active participation of MONUC. It urged the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to work together and with the Mission and the African Union, with a view to removing the threat posed by foreign armed groups, as they had agreed to in the Peace Agreement signed in Pretoria on 30 July 2002 and the Declaration signed in Pretoria on 27 November 2003, and in accordance with the terms of reference for the Joint Verification Mechanism signed in New York on 22 September 2004.¹⁷⁸ The Council also called upon the Government of National Unity and Transition and Congolese officials at all levels to take all necessary steps, while respecting freedom of expression and of the press, to prevent the use of the media to incite hatred or tensions among communities. Strongly condemning violence and other violations of international humanitarian law and human rights, in particular those perpetrated against civilians in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Council demanded that all parties and Governments concerned in the region, including the Government of National Unity and Transition, take without delay all necessary steps to bring to justice those responsible for the violations and to ensure respect for human rights and international humanitarian law, as appropriate with relevant international assistance, as well as to guarantee the security and well-being of the civilian population.¹⁷⁹ The Council demanded that all parties cooperate fully with the operations of MONUC and ensure the safety of as well as unhindered and immediate access for United Nations and associated personnel in carrying out their mandate, throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. In particular, the Council demanded that all parties provide full access to MONUC military observers, including in all ports, airports, airfields, military bases and border crossings.¹⁸⁰ Reaffirming the obligation of all parties to comply fully with the rules and principles of international humanitarian law applicable to them related to the protection of humanitarian and United Nations personnel, the Council urged all those concerned to allow immediate, full and unimpeded access by humanitarian personnel to all people in need of assistance, as set forth in applicable international humanitarian law.¹⁸¹

By resolution 1592 (2005) of 30 March 2005, the Council urged the Government of National Unity and Transition to do its utmost to ensure the security of civilians, including humanitarian personnel, by effectively extending State authority throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and in particular in North and South Kivu and in Ituri.¹⁸² The Council called upon the Government of National Unity and Transition to develop with MONUC a joint concept of operations for the disarmament of foreign combatants by the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, with the assistance of MONUC, within its mandate and capabilities; and demanded that the Governments of Uganda, Rwanda, as well as the Democratic Republic of the Congo put a stop to the use of their respective territories in support of violations of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1493 (2003) or of activities of armed groups operating in the region.¹⁸³

By resolution 1693 (2006) of 30 June 2006, reiterating its serious concern regarding the continuation of hostilities by militias and foreign armed groups in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and at the threat they posed to the holding of elections, the Council called upon all Congolese parties to refrain from incitement to hatred and violence.¹⁸⁴

By resolution 1711 (2006) of 29 September 2006, condemning the continuation of hostilities by militias and foreign armed groups in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and the threat they posed to the holding of elections, the Council reiterated its call on all Congolese parties to refrain from incitement to hatred and violence and from any threat or use of force to prevent elections, dispute their outcome or subvert the peace process, and to resolve political differences by peaceful means, including through the framework established with the facilitation of MONUC, and within the framework of democratic institutions and the rule of law.¹⁸⁵

By resolution 1756 (2007) of 15 May 2007, reiterating its grave concern at the presence of armed groups and militias in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, particularly in the Ituri district and in North and South Kivu, which perpetuated a climate of insecurity in the whole region, the Council demanded that the militias and armed groups still present in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo lay down their arms and engage voluntarily and without any further delay or preconditions in their demobilization, repatriation or resettlement, and reintegration.¹⁸⁶

By resolution 1794 (2007) of 21 December 2007, the Council reiterated its demand that the militias and armed groups still present in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, the ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe, the dissident militia of Laurent Nkunda and the Lord's Resistance Army, lay down their arms and engage voluntarily and without any further delay or preconditions in their demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration, as appropriate. Recalling resolution 1698 (2006), the Council further demanded that all armed groups immediately stop recruiting and using children and release all children associated with them.¹⁸⁷

By resolution 1529 (2004) of 29 February 2004, the Council authorized the immediate deployment of a Multinational Interim Force in Haiti and demanded that all parties to the conflict in Haiti cease using violent means. The Council also reiterated that all parties must respect international law, including with respect to human rights, and that there would be individual accountability and no impunity for violators. The Council further demanded that parties respect the constitutional succession and the political process under way to resolve the crisis and enable legitimate Haitian security forces and other public institutions to perform their duties and provide access to humanitarian agencies to carry out their work. The Council called on all parties in Haiti to cooperate fully with the Multinational Interim Force in the execution of its mandate and to respect the security and freedom of movement of the Force, as well as to facilitate the safe and unimpeded access of international humanitarian personnel and aid to populations in need in Haiti.¹⁸⁸

By resolution 1542 (2004) of 30 April 2004, the Council authorized the establishment of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti and demanded strict respect for the persons and premises of the United Nations and associated personnel, the Organization of American States, the Caribbean Community and other international and humanitarian organizations, as well as diplomatic missions in Haiti, and that no acts of intimidation or violence be directed against personnel engaged in humanitarian, development or peacekeeping work. In addition, it demanded that all parties in Haiti provide safe and unimpeded access to humanitarian agencies to allow them to carry out their work.¹⁸⁹

By resolution 1701 (2006) of 11 August 2006, the Council, determining that the situation in Lebanon constituted a threat to international peace and security, called for a full cessation of hostilities based upon, in particular, the immediate cessation by Hizbullah of all attacks and the immediate cessation by Israel of all offensive military operations. It further called upon the Government of Lebanon and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) upon full cessation of hostilities, to deploy their forces together throughout the south, and called upon the Government of Israel, as that deployment began, to withdraw all of its forces from southern Lebanon in parallel.¹⁹⁰ The Council called for Israel and Lebanon to support a permanent ceasefire and a long-term solution based on the following principles and elements: full respect for the Blue Line by both parties; security arrangements to prevent the resumption of hostilities, including the establishment between the Blue Line and the Litani river of an area free of any armed personnel, assets and weapons other than those of the Government of

Lebanon and UNIFIL; full implementation of the relevant provisions of the Taif Accords, and of resolutions 1559 (2004) and 1680 (2006), that required the disarmament of all armed groups in Lebanon, so that, pursuant to the Lebanese Cabinet decision of 27 July 2006, there would be no weapons or authority in Lebanon other than that of the Lebanese State; no foreign forces in Lebanon without the consent of its Government; no sales or supply of arms and related materiel to Lebanon except as authorized by its Government; and provision to the United Nations of all remaining maps of landmines in Lebanon in Israel's possession; and called upon the Government of Lebanon to secure its borders and other entry points to prevent the entry in Lebanon without its consent of arms or related materiel.¹⁹¹

By resolution 1773 (2007) of 24 August 2007, the Council, still determining that the situation in Lebanon constituted a threat to international peace and security, reiterated its call upon all parties concerned to respect the cessation of hostilities and the Blue Line in its entirety. Condemning all terrorist attacks against UNIFIL, the Council urged all parties to cooperate fully with the United Nations and UNIFIL and to abide scrupulously by their obligation to respect the safety of UNIFIL and other United Nations personnel, including by avoiding any course of action which endangered United Nations personnel and by ensuring that UNIFIL was accorded full freedom of movement within its area of operation; and called upon all parties to cooperate fully with the Security Council and the Secretary-General to achieve a permanent ceasefire and a long-term solution, as envisioned in resolution 1701 (2006).¹⁹²

By resolution 1725 (2006) of 6 December 2006, expressing its concern regarding the continued violence inside Somalia, the Council urged the transitional federal institutions and the Union of Islamic Courts to fulfil the commitments they had made, resume without delay peace talks on the basis of the agreements reached in Khartoum, and adhere to agreements reached in their dialogue. The Council stated its intention to consider taking measures against those that sought to prevent or block a peaceful dialogue process, overthrow the transitional federal institutions by force, or take action that could further threaten regional stability.¹⁹³

By resolution 1744 (2007) of 20 February 2007, the Council expressed its deep concern over the humanitarian situation in Somalia and demanded that all parties in Somalia ensure complete and unhindered humanitarian access, as well as provide guarantees for the safety and security of humanitarian aid workers in Somalia.¹⁹⁴

By resolution 1772 (2007) of 20 August 2007, the Council welcomed the convening of the National Reconciliation Congress at the initiative of the transitional federal institutions, and urged all parties to support the Congress and participate in the political process. It also urged the transitional federal institutions and all parties in Somalia to respect the conclusions of the Congress and to sustain an equally inclusive ongoing political process thereafter. The Council called on all parties and armed groups in Somalia to take appropriate steps to ensure the safety and security of the African Union Mission in Somalia and humanitarian personnel, and grant timely, safe and unhindered access for the delivery of humanitarian assistance to all those in need.¹⁹⁵

By resolution 1556 (2004) of 30 July 2004, expressing concern at reports of violations of the ceasefire agreement signed in N'Djamena on 8 April 2004, the Council made a number of demands to the parties and others concerned. In particular, the Council called upon the Government of the Sudan to fulfil immediately all of the commitments made in the joint communiqué of 3 July 2004, including by facilitating international relief for the humanitarian disaster by means of a moratorium on all restrictions that might hinder the provision of humanitarian assistance and access to the affected populations; advancing independent investigation, in cooperation with the United Nations, of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law; establishing credible security conditions for the protection of the civilian population and humanitarian actors; and resuming political talks with dissident groups from the Darfur region, specifically the Justice and Equality Movement and the Sudan Liberation Movement and Sudan Liberation Army on Darfur.¹⁹⁶ The Council also urged the parties to the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement to conclude a political agreement without delay and strongly urged rebel groups to respect the ceasefire, end the violence immediately, engage in peace talks without preconditions, and act in a positive and constructive manner to resolve the conflict; further demanded that the Government of the Sudan fulfil its commitments to disarm the Janjaweed militias and apprehend and bring to justice Janjaweed leaders and their associates who had incited and carried out human rights and international humanitarian law violations and other atrocities; and expressed its intention to consider further actions, including measures as provided for in Article 41 of the Charter, in the event of non-compliance.¹⁹⁷

By resolution 1564 (2004) of 18 September 2004, the Council called upon the Government of the Sudan and the rebel groups to work together under the auspices of the African Union to reach a political solution in the negotiations held in Abuja. The Council also urged the parties to the negotiations to sign and implement the humanitarian agreement immediately, and to conclude a protocol on security issues as soon as possible.¹⁹⁸ The Council also urged the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement to conclude a comprehensive peace accord expeditiously as a critical step towards the development of a peaceful and prosperous Sudan; called upon all Sudanese parties to take the necessary steps to ensure that violations reported by the Ceasefire Commission were addressed immediately and that those responsible for such violations were held accountable; demanded that the Government of the Sudan submit to the African Union mission for verification the names of Janjaweed militiamen disarmed and names of those arrested for human rights abuses and violations of international humanitarian law; and demanded that all armed groups, including rebel forces, cease all violence, cooperate with international humanitarian relief and monitoring efforts, ensure that their members comply with international humanitarian law, and facilitate the safety and security of humanitarian staff. In the event that the Government of the Sudan failed to comply fully with resolutions 1556 (2004) or 1564 (2004), the Council declared that it would consider imposing additional measures as contemplated in Article 41 of the Charter, such as actions to affect the petroleum sector and the Government of the Sudan or individual members of the Government, in order to obtain full compliance or full cooperation.¹⁹⁹

By resolution 1591 (2005) of 29 March 2005, the Council demanded that all parties take immediate steps to fulfil all their commitments to respect the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement and the Abuja Protocols, including notification of force positions, to facilitate humanitarian assistance, and to cooperate fully with the African Union Mission. The Council also called upon the Government of the Sudan and the rebel groups, particularly the Justice and Equality Movement and the Sudanese Liberation Movement/Army, to resume the Abuja talks rapidly and negotiate in good faith to speedily reach an agreement. It also urged the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement to play an active and constructive role in support of the Abuja talks and take immediate steps to support a peaceful settlement to the conflict in Darfur. The Council also demanded that the Government of the Sudan, in accordance with its commitments under the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement and the Abuja Security Protocol, immediately cease conducting offensive military flights in and over the Darfur region. The Council reiterated that in the event that the parties failed to fulfil their commitments and demands, and the situation in Darfur continued to deteriorate, the Council would consider further measures as provided for in Article 41 of the Charter.²⁰⁰

By resolution 1679 (2006) of 16 May 2006, the Council called upon the parties to the Darfur Peace Agreement to respect their commitments and implement the Agreement without delay. The Council also urged those parties that had not signed the Agreement to do so without delay and not to act in any way that would impede implementation of the Agreement.²⁰¹ The Council expressed its intention to consider taking strong and effective measures, such as a travel ban and an asset freeze, against any individual or group that violated or attempted to block the implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement.²⁰²

By resolution 1755 (2007) of 30 April 2007, the Council called upon the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement to accelerate urgently progress on implementing all their commitments, in particular to carry out the establishment of Joint Integrated Units and other aspects of the security sector reforms; to re-energize the process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of combatants; to complete the full and verified redeployment of forces by 9 July 2007; to demarcate precisely the north/south borderline of 1 January 1956, consistent with the Machakos Protocol of 20 July 2002; to resolve the Abyei problem and urgently establish an administration there; and to take the necessary steps to hold national elections according to the agreed time frame. The Council also reiterated its call upon the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the Darfur Peace Agreement, the N'Djamena Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement, the Eastern Sudan Peace Agreement, and the communiqué of 28 March 2007 to respect their commitments and implement fully all aspects of those agreements without delay, and called upon those parties that had not signed the Darfur Peace Agreement to do so without delay and not to act in any way that would impede the implementation of the Agreement.²⁰³

By resolution 1769 (2007) of 31 July 2007, authorizing the establishment of an African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID), the Council called on all parties to urgently facilitate the full deployment of the United Nations light and heavy support packages to the African Union Mission in the Sudan (AMIS) and preparations for UNAMID.²⁰⁴ The Council called upon all the parties to the conflict in Darfur to immediately cease all hostilities and commit themselves to a sustained and permanent ceasefire; and demanded an immediate cessation of hostilities and attacks on AMIS, civilians and humanitarian agencies, their staff and assets and relief convoys, and that all parties to the conflict in Darfur fully cooperate with the Mission, civilians and humanitarian agencies, their staff and assets and relief convoys, and gave all necessary assistance to the deployment of the United Nations light and heavy support packages to the Mission, and to UNAMID.²⁰⁵ Welcoming the commitment expressed by the Government of the Sudan and some other parties to the conflict to enter into talks and the political process, the Council called upon the other parties to the conflict to do likewise, and urged all the parties, in particular the non-signatory movements, to finalize their preparations for the talks. Welcoming the signing of a joint communiqué between the Government of the Sudan and the United Nations on facilitation of humanitarian activities in Darfur, the Council called for it to be fully implemented, and called upon all parties to ensure, in accordance with relevant provisions of international law, the full, safe and unhindered access of relief personnel to all those in need and the delivery of humanitarian assistance, in particular to internally displaced persons and refugees. The Council demanded that the parties to the conflict in Darfur fulfil their international obligations and their commitments under relevant agreements and Security Council resolutions.²⁰⁶

By resolution 1784 (2007) of 31 October 2007, the Council called for all parties to agree immediately to full unrestricted monitoring and verification by the United Nations Mission in the Sudan in the Abyei region, without prejudice to the final agreement on the actual borders between the two sides. The Council further called on the parties to take steps to reduce tensions in the Abyei region, including by redeploying their forces away from the disputed border of 1 January 1956 and by implementing an interim administration and agreeing upon boundaries. The Council called upon the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the communiqué signed by the United Nations and the Government of National Unity at Khartoum on 28 March 2007 to support, protect and facilitate all humanitarian operations in the Sudan. It also called upon the Government of National Unity to cooperate fully with all United Nations operations within its territory in the implementation of their mandates.²⁰⁷

B. Discussion relating to Article 40

Non-proliferation (Islamic Republic of Iran)

At its 5500th meeting, on 31 July 2006, the Council, acting under Article 40 of Chapter VII of the Charter, adopted resolution 1696 (2006) by which it called upon the Islamic Republic of Iran to take the steps required by IAEA, and demanded that the Islamic Republic of Iran to suspend all enrichment-related and reprocessing activities. During the debate subsequent to the vote, the representative of Qatar declared that his country had voted against the draft resolution because his Government preferred exhausting “all possible ways and means” before taking a decision in the Council.²⁰⁸ In contrast, a number of speakers welcomed the adoption of the resolution and cautioned that should the Islamic Republic of Iran choose not to comply with the Council’s decision, the Council would discuss the adoption of measures under Article 41 of the Charter.²⁰⁹ The representative of the United Kingdom expressed his disappointment at the failure of the Islamic Republic of Iran to take steps that would allow for negotiations to begin. He concluded that there was “no alternative” but to adopt the resolution, which created a “mandatory obligation” on the Islamic Republic of Iran to suspend fully all uranium enrichment-related and processing activities.²¹⁰ The representative of the Russian Federation declared that, by acting under Article 40 of the Charter, the resolution made mandatory the demand of IAEA regarding the Islamic Republic of Iran’s suspension of all uranium enrichment and reprocessing activities. He stressed that the measure adopted in accordance with Article 40 of the Charter should be viewed as an “interim measure”. In the event that the Islamic Republic of Iran fulfilled its obligations under Security Council resolutions, he added, it would not be necessary for the Council to adopt additional measures.²¹¹ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania noted that he had voted in favour of the resolution because it precluded the use of force as an option in engaging the Islamic Republic of Iran. He expressed hope that, even in the resolution’s current form, additional measures would be unnecessary.²¹² In response, the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran reiterated that, as his country’s nuclear programme posed no threat to international peace and security, the Council’s dealing with that issue was “unwarranted and void of any legal basis or practical utility”. He noted that the resolution was imposing “arbitrary thresholds” and that his Government was always ready for negotiations.²¹³

Measures not involving the use of armed force in accordance with Article 41 of the Charter

Article 41

The Security Council may decide what measures not involving the use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions, and it may call upon the Members of the United Nations to apply such measures. These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio, and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations.

Note

During the period under review, the Security Council imposed or modified measures under Chapter VII, of the type provided for in Article 41, against members of the Al-Qaida organization and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities, Côte d’Ivoire, the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Liberia, Sierra Leone and the Sudan, after having determined, in each case, the existence of a threat to international peace and security. In instances relating to the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea and the Islamic Republic of Iran, the Council specified that it was acting under Article 41 of Chapter VII of the Charter. The Council terminated measures imposed under Article 41 against Liberia and Rwanda. In addition, the Council imposed a number of judicial measures in relation to the situations in the Middle East, Sierra Leone and the Sudan. Such measures included the establishment of a Special Tribunal for Lebanon, the referral of the situation in Darfur to the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court, and the endorsement of the intention of the President of the Special Court for Sierra Leone to authorize a Trial

Chamber in the Netherlands for the trial of the former President of Liberia, Charles Taylor.

Section A outlines the decisions of the Security Council imposing, modifying or terminating measures under Article 41 of the Charter, and section B highlights the salient issues that were raised in the Council's deliberations relating to Article 41 of the Charter. Both sections are subdivided into thematic, country-specific and judicial issues.

A. Decisions relating to Article 41

Decisions on thematic issues

The present subsection presents decisions on thematic issues which contain information concerning sanctions measures and their implementation. Such decisions were taken in relation to five agenda items, namely, children and armed conflict; general issues relating to sanctions; maintenance of international peace and security; small arms; and strengthening international law: rule of law and maintenance of international peace and security. In those decisions the Council emphasized the importance of the sanctions tool in the maintenance of international peace and security, and, inter alia, stressed its resolve to ensure targeted and balanced sanctions as well as fair and clear procedures for the listing and delisting of individuals on sanctions lists. The Council also reminded Member States of their obligations to implement and respect sanctions regimes and to collaborate with the sanctions committees and the panels of experts.

Children and armed conflict

By resolution 1539 (2004) of 22 April 2004, the Council, reiterating its commitment to address the widespread impact of armed conflict on children, took note, with deep concern, of the continued recruitment and use of children by parties to armed conflicts.²¹⁴ The Council expressed its intention to consider imposing targeted and graduated measures, through country-specific resolutions, such as a ban on the export or supply of small arms and light weapons and other military equipment and on military assistance, against parties to an armed conflict if they refused to enter into ²¹⁴ Resolution 1539 (2004), fifth preambular paragraph and para. 5.

dialogue, failed to develop an action plan, or failed to meet the commitments included in their action plan.²¹⁵

General issues relating to sanctions

By resolution 1730 (2006) of 19 December 2006, emphasizing that sanctions constituted an important tool in the maintenance and restoration of international peace and security and the obligations placed upon all States to implement in full the mandatory measures adopted by the Council, the Council stressed its continuing resolve to ensure that sanctions were carefully targeted in support of clear objectives and implemented in ways that balanced effectiveness against possible adverse consequences. It also expressed its commitment to ensuring that fair and clear procedures existed for placing individuals and entities on sanctions lists and for removing them. The Council adopted a delisting procedure and requested the Secretary-General to establish within the Secretariat a focal point to receive delisting requests. The Council also directed the sanctions committees to revise their guidelines accordingly.²¹⁶

Maintenance of international peace and security

By a statement of the President dated 25 June 2007, the Council noted that, through its various resolutions, it had taken measures to prevent the illegal exploitation of natural resources and had established sanctions committees, groups and panels of experts to oversee the implementation of those measures. The Council also emphasized the importance of improving the work of and strengthening the contributions made by existing sanctions committees and the various groups and panels of experts in dealing with the impact of illegal exploitation of natural resources on conflicts in countries under its consideration.²¹⁷

By a statement of the President dated 28 August 2007, the Council supported the comprehensive and global approach recommended by the Secretary-General in his report on the prevention of armed conflict,²¹⁸ which included, inter alia, the use of targeted sanctions in the face of immediate crises.²¹⁹

²¹⁵ Ibid., para. 5 (c). The Council reaffirmed this intention by its resolution 1612 (2005), para. 9.

By a statement of the President dated 19 January 2004, the Council reiterated its call on all States to effectively implement arms embargoes and other sanctions measures imposed by the Council in its relevant resolutions. The Council further encouraged States to provide sanctions committees with any available information on alleged violations of arms embargoes.²²⁰

By a statement of the President dated 17 February 2005, the Council reiterated its call upon all States to enforce all resolutions on sanctions, including those imposing arms embargoes, and to bring their own domestic implementation into compliance with the Council's measures on sanctions. The Council also called upon States to continue to make available to the sanctions committees all pertinent information on any alleged violations of arms embargoes and to take appropriate measures to investigate such allegations.²²¹

By a statement of the President dated 22 June 2006, the Council noted that it considered sanctions an important tool in the maintenance and restoration of international peace and security. The Council also expressed its resolve to ensure that sanctions were carefully targeted in support of clear objectives and were implemented in ways that balanced effectiveness against possible adverse consequences. It further stated its commitment to ensuring that fair and clear procedures existed for placing individuals and entities on sanctions lists and for removing them, as well as for granting humanitarian exemptions.²²²

Country-specific decisions relating to Article 41

This subsection covers the decisions relating to specific countries adopted during the period under review, by which the Council imposed, modified, strengthened or terminated sanctions regimes. It includes information on the establishment of subsidiary bodies of the Council tasked to oversee the implementation of the sanctions measures, namely, sanctions committees, monitoring groups, and panels of experts. When required for clarification, summarized descriptions of the mandatory measures — arms embargo, asset freeze, travel restrictions, diamond ban, restriction of air traffic, restriction on diplomatic representation, prohibitions of round logs and timber products — are included, but these are not intended to serve as legal definitions of the measures. The decisions of the Council relating to committees or other subsidiary bodies are described in more detail in chapter V.

Measures imposed against Côte d'Ivoire

By resolution 1572 (2004) of 15 November 2004, the Council, deeply concerned with the humanitarian situation in Côte d'Ivoire, imposed an arms embargo for a period of 13 months, preventing the direct or indirect sale or transfer to Côte d'Ivoire of arms or any related materiel. The Council also decided that exemptions to these measures were to be considered, including supplies to the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI), supplies of non-lethal military equipment intended solely for humanitarian or protective use and related technical assistance and training. The Council decided to impose, for a period of 12 months, a travel ban, asking all States to take the necessary measures to prevent the entry into or transit through their territories of all persons designated by the Committee established by the resolution. The Council also decided that the travel restrictions would not apply to cases in which travel was justified on the grounds of humanitarian need.²²³ The Council decided that all States should, for a period of 12 months, freeze immediately the funds, other financial assets, and economic resources owned or controlled by those who blocked the implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements; persons responsible for serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Côte d'Ivoire; any other person publicly inciting hatred and violence; and any other person determined by the Committee to be in violation of the sanctions imposed on Côte d'Ivoire.²²⁴ The Council extended these measures by resolutions 1643 (2005), 1727 (2006) and 1782 (2007). By resolution 1643 (2005) of 15 December 2005, the Council expressed its concern at the persistence of the crisis in Côte d'Ivoire and recognized the role played by the illicit trade in diamonds in fuelling the conflict in the country.²²⁵ The Council decided that all States were to take the necessary measures to prevent the import of all rough diamonds from Côte d'Ivoire.²²⁶

Establishment of a Group of Experts. By resolution 1584 (2005) of 1 February 2005, the Council authorized UNOCI and the French forces supporting it to monitor the application of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1572 (2004) and to collect and dispose of such materiel as appropriate. The Council also requested the Secretary-General to establish a Panel of Experts in order to generate independent information on violations of the arms embargo and as a step towards implementing and strengthening the embargo.²²⁷ The mandate of the Panel was subsequently extended by resolutions 1632 (2005), 1727 (2006), 1761 (2007) and 1782 (2007) and re-established by resolution 1643 (2005).

Measures imposed against the Democratic People's Republic of Korea

By resolution 1718 (2006) of 14 October 2006, in response to the nuclear test proclaimed by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on 9 October 2006, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, and taking measures under its Article 41, imposed an embargo on heavy weapons, weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missiles, and luxury goods; an export ban, by which the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had to cease the export of weapons of mass destruction, ballistic missiles and heavy weapons; an asset freeze, directed at persons or entities designated by the Committee established by the resolution or by the Council as being engaged in the weapons of mass destruction-related and ballistic missiles-related programmes; and a travel ban.²²⁸ The Council affirmed

²²⁷ Resolution 1584 (2005), paras. 2 and 7.

²²⁸ Resolution 1718 (2006), para. 8. By paras. 9 and 10 of the resolution, the Council also decided that the asset freeze would not apply to financial resources deemed by relevant States to be necessary for basic expenses, including payment for foodstuffs, as well as for extraordinary expenses approved by the Committee, and to funds which were the subject of a judicial, administrative or arbitral lien or judgement; and decided that the travel ban would not apply to cases in which the Committee determined that the travel was justified.

that it would keep the actions of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea under continuous review and that it would be prepared to reassess the appropriateness of the measures, including the strengthening, modification, suspension, or lifting of the measures.²²⁹

Measures imposed against the Democratic Republic of the Congo

Establishment of a Committee and a Group of Experts. By resolution 1533 (2004) of 12 March 2004, the Council established a Committee to monitor the implementation and violations of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1493 (2003).²³⁰ The Council also established a Group of Experts tasked to collect and examine information on the flows of arms and related materiel.²³¹ The Council authorized the United Nations Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to seize or collect, as appropriate, the arms and any related materiel whose presence violated the arms embargo.²³²

Renewal and modification of measures. By resolution 1552 (2004) of 27 July 2004, the Council decided to renew until 31 July 2005 the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1493 (2003), in the light of the failure by the parties to comply with the Council's demands.²³³ By resolution 1596 (2005) of 18 April 2005, the Council decided to amend and expand the ²³⁰ Resolution 1533 (2004), para. 8. By resolution 1493 (2003) of 28 July 2003, the Council imposed an arms embargo on all foreign and Congolese armed groups and militias operating in the territory of North and South Kivu and Ituri, and on groups not parties to the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

²³³ Resolution 1552 (2004), para. 2. By resolution 1616 (2005) of 29 July 2005, the Council renewed the arms embargo established by resolution 1493 (2003), as amended and expanded by resolution 1596 (2005), as well as the travel ban and the asset freeze, as modified by the latter resolution.

arms embargo, applying the measure to any recipient of arms in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.²³⁴ The Council also modified the travel ban and the asset freeze, which would apply for the period of the arms embargo to all persons designated by the Committee as acting in violation of the measures established by the Council.²³⁵ By resolution 1649 (2005) of 21 December 2005, the Council deplored the fact that foreign armed groups present in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo had not yet laid down their arms, and demanded that all such groups engage voluntarily and without any delay or preconditions in their disarmament and in their repatriation and resettlement.²³⁶ To this end, the Council decided that, for a period expiring on 31 July 2006, the travel and financial restrictions imposed by resolution 1493 (2003), and modified by resolution 1596 (2005), would extend to political and military leaders of foreign armed groups operating in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and to political and military leaders of Congolese militias receiving support from outside the Democratic Republic of the Congo and impeding the disarmament and reintegration of combatants.²³⁷ By resolution 1698 (2006) of 31 July 2006, reiterating its serious concern regarding the presence of armed groups and militias in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Council renewed the arms embargo and the travel and financial restrictions for a period of 12 months.²³⁸ The Council also extended the travel ban and the asset freeze to political and military leaders recruiting or using children in armed conflict and to individuals committing serious violations of international law involving the targeting of children in situations of armed conflict.²³⁹

²³⁴ Resolution 1596 (2005), para. 1. By para. 2 of the resolution, the Council established exemptions to the arms embargo.

Exemptions. By resolution 1546 (2004) of 8 June 2004, the Council decided that the prohibitions related to the sale or supply to Iraq of arms and related materiel under previous resolutions should not apply to arms or related materiel required by the Government of Iraq or the multinational force.²⁴⁰

Measures imposed against the Islamic Republic of Iran

By resolution 1737 (2006) of 23 December 2006, “concerned by the proliferation risks presented by the Iranian nuclear programme” and by the Islamic Republic of Iran’s “continuing failure to meet the requirements” of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), the Council, acting under Article 41 of Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, imposed a number of measures against the Islamic Republic of Iran. The measures adopted by the Council included a proliferation-sensitive nuclear and ballistic missile programmes-related embargo; an export ban on arms and related materiel from the Islamic Republic of Iran; and targeted sanctions, namely a travel ban, a travel notification requirement, and an asset freeze, on designated persons and entities.²⁴¹ The Council established a Committee to monitor the implementation and violations of these measures.²⁴²

By resolution 1747 (2007) of 24 March 2007 acting under Article 41 of Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council reiterated the travel ban established by resolution 1737 (2006), applicable to the persons listed in the annex to the resolution and to persons designated by the Committee or the Council. The Council also imposed an arms embargo on the Islamic Republic of Iran, under which the country was prohibited from supplying, selling or transferring any arms or related materiel, and no States could procure from or sell to it such items. The Council called upon all States to exercise vigilance and restraint in the provision of heavy weapons and related services to the Islamic Republic of Iran, and called upon all States and international financial institutions not to enter into new commitments for grants, financial assistance, and concessional loans to the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, except for humanitarian and developmental purposes.²⁴³ The Council affirmed that it would review actions taken by the Islamic Republic of Iran in the light of the report it had requested of IAEA, and that it would suspend the implementation of measures if and for so long as the Islamic Republic of Iran suspended all enrichment-related and reprocessing activities, including research and development, as verified by IAEA; terminate the measures imposed by resolutions 1737 (2006) and 1747 (2007) as soon as it determined, based on the report of IAEA, that the Islamic Republic of Iran had fully complied with its obligations; and in the event that the report showed that the Islamic Republic of Iran had not complied with resolutions 1737 (2006) and 1747 (2007), adopt further appropriate measures under Article 41 of Chapter VII of the Charter.²⁴⁴

Measures imposed against Liberia

By resolution 1532 (2004) of 12 March 2004, the Council decided that all States should freeze without delay funds, financial assets and economic resources owned or controlled directly or indirectly by Charles Taylor, Jewell Howard Taylor and Charles Taylor Jr., senior officials of the former Taylor regime, or other close allies or associates, as designated by the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003), in order to prevent those individuals from using misappropriated funds and property to interfere in the restoration of peace and stability in Liberia and the subregion.²⁴⁵

By resolution 1579 (2004) of 21 December 2004, the Council decided to renew the measures imposed by resolution 1521 (2003). Specifically, the Council renewed the arms embargo, travel ban, and restrictions imposed on timber acquisition for a period of 12 months, and the measures on diamonds for a period of six months.²⁴⁶ The Council renewed such measures by several subsequent resolutions.²⁴⁷

Re-establishment of a Panel of Experts. By resolution 1549 (2004) of 17 June 2004, the Council decided to re-establish the Panel of Experts, appointed pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003), for the period from 30 June to 21 December 2004, to assess the implementation, enforcement and impact of the measures imposed by resolutions 1521 (2003) and 1532 (2004) in Liberia and the neighbouring States.²⁴⁸

Exemptions. By resolution 1683 (2006) of 13 June 2006, the Council, recognizing the need for newly vetted and trained Liberian security forces to assume greater responsibility for national security, decided to introduce exemptions to the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1521 (2003). In particular, the Council decided that the measures should not apply to weapons and ammunition already provided to members of the Special Security Service for training purposes; and limited supplies of weapons and ammunition intended for use by members of the Government of Liberia police and security forces who had been vetted and trained since the inception of the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL) in October 2003.²⁴⁹ By resolution 1688 (2006) of 16 June 2006, welcoming the willingness of the Government of the Netherlands to host the Special Court for the detention and trial of former President Taylor, the Council exempted the former President and any witnesses required at the trial from the travel ban

²⁴⁴ Ibid., para. 13.

²⁴⁵ Resolution 1532 (2004), para. 1. By para. 2 of the resolution, the Council established exemptions to the asset freeze, which applied to funds necessary for basic expenses, including payment for foodstuffs, rent or mortgage, medicines and medical treatment; necessary for extraordinary expenses; or the subject of a judicial, administrative or arbitral lien or judgement.

²⁴⁶ Resolution 1579 (2004), para. 1.

²⁴⁷ By resolution 1607 (2005), para. 1, the Council renewed the measures on diamonds for a further period of six months. By resolution 1647 (2005), para. 1, the Council renewed the measures related to arms and travel imposed by resolution 1521 (2003) for a period of 12 months, and renewed the measures on diamond and timber imposed by resolution 1521 (2003) for a further period of six months. By resolutions 1689 (2006) (para. 4) and 1731 (2006) (para. 1 (c)), the Council renewed the interdiction on States to import directly or indirectly rough diamonds from Liberia. The arms embargo was renewed by resolutions 1731 (2006), para. 1 (a), and 1792 (2007), para. 1 (a). The travel ban was renewed by resolutions 1731 (2006), para. 1 (a), and 1792 (2007), para. 1 (a).

²⁴⁸ Resolution 1549 (2004), para. 1. The Council decided to re-establish the Panel of Experts by its resolutions 1579 (2004), para. 8, 1607 (2005), para. 14, 1647 (2005), para. 9, and 1760 (2007), para. 1. Strengthening of the Committee's mandate and establishment of a Monitoring Team. By resolution 1526 (2004) of 30 January 2004, the Council decided to strengthen the mandate of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999) to include, in addition to the oversight of the implementation of the above-mentioned measures by States, a central role in assessing information for review by the Council regarding the effective implementation of the measures, as well as in recommending improvements to the measures.²⁵⁵ The Council decided to establish a Monitoring Team to assist the Committee in the fulfilment of its mandate.²⁵⁶ By resolution 1735 (2006) of 22 December 2006, the Council decided that the Committee would consider submissions from States concerning exemptions to the travel ban where entry or transit was necessary for the fulfilment of a judicial process or the Committee determined on a case-by-case basis only that entry or transit was justified. In addition, the Council decided to extend the period for consideration by the Committee of exemption requests concerning the asset freeze established by resolutions 1267 (1999) and 1390 (2002), from 48 hours, as set out by resolution 1452 (2002), to three working days.²⁵⁷

termination of the measures imposed by paragraph 11 of resolution 1011 (1995).²⁵⁸ Welcoming the positive developments in Rwanda and the Great Lakes region, particularly the signing of the Pact on Security, Stability and Development in the Great Lakes Region on 15 December 2006, the Council decided to terminate, with immediate effect, the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1011 (1995).²⁵⁹

Measures imposed against Sierra Leone

Exemptions. By resolution 1793 (2007) of 21 December 2007, reiterating its appreciation for the work of the Special Court for Sierra Leone and its vital contribution to reconciliation and the rule of law in Sierra Leone and the subregion, the Council decided to exempt from the travel ban imposed by resolution 1171 (1998) the travel of any witnesses whose presence at trial before the Special Court for Sierra Leone was required.²⁶⁰

Measures imposed against Somalia

Establishment of a Monitoring Group. By resolution 1558 (2004) of 17 August 2004, the Council, condemning the continued flow of weapons and ammunition supplies to and through Somalia, in contravention of the arms embargo, and reiterating the importance of enhancing the monitoring of the arms embargo in Somalia through persistent and vigilant investigation of violations, requested the Secretary-General to re-establish, for a period of six months, the Monitoring Group initially established by resolution 1519 (2003).²⁶¹

Exemptions. By resolution 1725 (2006) of 6 December 2006, the Council decided that the arms embargo imposed by resolution 733 (1992) and further elaborated by resolution 1425 (2002) should not apply to supplies of weapons and military equipment and technical training and assistance intended solely for the support of or use by the protection and training mission established by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and States members of the African Union.²⁶² By resolution 1744 (2007) of 20 February 2007, the Council further extended the exemptions to the arms embargo, which would not apply to supplies of weapons and military equipment, technical training and assistance intended solely for the support of or use by the mission established by the States members of the African Union; and supplies and technical assistance by States intended solely for the purpose of helping develop security sector institutions.²⁶³

Measures imposed against the Sudan

By resolution 1556 (2004) of 30 July 2004, the Council, expressing concern at reports of violations of the ceasefire agreement signed in N'Djamena on 8 April 2004, imposed an arms embargo against all non-governmental entities and individuals, including the Janjaweed, operating in the States of Northern Darfur, Southern Darfur and Western Darfur.²⁶⁴

By resolution 1591 (2005) of 29 March 2005, the Council strongly deplored the failure of the Government of the Sudan and of all other armed groups in Darfur to comply fully with the Council's previous resolutions, and condemned the continued violations of the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement and the Abuja Protocols.²⁶⁵ The Council expanded the arms embargo established by resolution 1556 (2004) to include all the parties to the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement and any other belligerents in the States of Northern Darfur, Southern Darfur and Western

By resolution 1636 (2005) of 31 October 2005, the Council took note with concern, of the conclusion of the International Independent Investigation Commission that there was evidence pointing at the involvement of both Lebanese and Syrian officials in the terrorist bombing in Beirut on 14 February 2005 that killed, among others, the former Prime Minister of Lebanon, Rafiq Hariri. Moreover, the Commission concluded that it was difficult to envisage a scenario whereby such a complex assassination could have been carried out without the knowledge of Lebanese and Syrian officials. Consequently, the Council decided to impose a travel ban and an asset freeze against all individuals designated by the Commission or the Government of Lebanon as suspected of involvement in planning, sponsoring or organizing that terrorist act.²⁷⁰ The Council also established a Security Council Committee to monitor the enforcement of the measures.²⁷¹

Judicial measures relating to Article 41

This subsection consists of the decisions adopted during the period under review by which the Council imposed judicial measures intended to prevent the aggravation of a situation that posed a threat to international peace and security. Specifically, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council authorized the establishment of a Special Tribunal for Lebanon, referred the situation in Darfur to the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court, and endorsed the intention of the President of the Special Court for Sierra Leone to authorize a Trial Chamber in the Netherlands for the trial of former President Taylor.

By resolution 1644 (2005) of 15 December 2005, reaffirming its condemnation of the terrorist bombings of 14 February 2005 that resulted in the death of the former Prime Minister of Lebanon, Rafiq Hariri, and reiterating that those involved in the attack had to be held accountable for their crimes, the Council acknowledged the request of the Government of Lebanon that those eventually charged with involvement in the attack be tried by a tribunal of an international character, and requested the Secretary-General to help the Government of Lebanon to identify the nature and scope of the international assistance needed in that regard.²⁷²

²⁶⁶ Ibid., para. 7. By the same paragraph, the Council decided that the arms embargo would not apply to supplies and related technical training and assistance; assistance and supplies provided in support of implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement; and movements of military equipment and supplies into the Darfur region, approved in advance by the sanctions Committee.

²⁷⁰ Resolution 1636 (2005), paras. 2 and 3 (a).

By resolution 1757 (2007) of 30 May 2007, expressing its willingness to continue to assist Lebanon in holding those involved in the terrorist attack accountable, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, decided that the agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Lebanon on the establishment of a Special Tribunal would enter into force on 10 June 2007.²⁷³

By resolution 1688 (2006) of 16 June 2006, noting that the presence of former President Taylor in the region constituted an impediment to stability and a threat to the peace of Liberia and Sierra Leone and to international peace and security in the region, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, took note of the intention of the President of the Special Court for Sierra Leone to authorize a Trial Chamber to exercise its functions away from the seat of the Special Court, as well as his request to the Government of the Netherlands to host the trial, including any appeal. The Council also took note of the willingness of the International Criminal Court to allow the use of its premises for the detention and trial of former President Taylor by the Special Court, including any appeal. The Council requested all States to cooperate with the Special Court by, in particular, ensuring the appearance of the former President in the Netherlands for purposes of his trial, and encouraged all States to ensure that any evidence or witnesses were, upon request of the Special Court, promptly made available to the Court.²⁷⁴ The Council also requested the Secretary-General to assist in the conclusion of all necessary legal and practical arrangements, including for the transfer of former President Taylor to the Special Court in the Netherlands and for the provision of the necessary facilities for the conduct of the trial. The Council decided that the Special Court should retain exclusive jurisdiction over former President Taylor during his transfer to and presence in the Netherlands in respect of matters within the statute of the Special Court, and that the Government of the Netherlands should not exercise its jurisdiction over former President Taylor except by express agreement with the Special Court and facilitate the implementation of the decision of the Special Court to conduct the trial of former President Taylor in the Netherlands.²⁷⁵

Reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan

By resolution 1593 (2005) of 31 March 2005, taking note of the report of the International Commission of Inquiry for Darfur on violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law in Darfur, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, decided to refer the situation in Darfur since 1 July 2002 to the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court. The Council also decided that the Government of the Sudan and all other parties in Darfur had to cooperate fully with and provide any necessary assistance to the Court and the Prosecutor and, while recognizing that States not parties to the Rome Statute had no obligation under the Statute, urged all States and concerned regional and other international organizations to cooperate fully.²⁷⁶

B. Discussion relating to Article 41

Discussion of thematic issues

Children and armed conflict

At its 4898th meeting, on 20 January 2004, the Council considered the latest report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict.²⁷⁷ In his report, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council take concrete steps where insufficient or no progress had been made by parties in accordance with its resolutions 1379 (2001) and 1460 (2003) which provided a comprehensive framework for addressing the protection of children affected by armed conflict. Such targeted and concrete measures could include the imposition of travel restrictions on leaders and their exclusion from any governance structures and amnesty provisions, a ban on the export or supply of small arms, a ban on military assistance, and restriction on the flow of financial resources to the parties concerned.²⁷⁸ During the debate, several speakers expressed their support for applying “justified”, “graduated” and “targeted” sanctions against parties that failed to adopt measures aimed at ending violations against children in situations of armed conflict.²⁷⁹ The representative of Brazil noted that such measures should rely on precise information and be finely tuned, so as to avoid problems common to sanctions and the conditioning of assistance, which often delayed and even prevented the provision of humanitarian aid.²⁸⁰ The representative of Germany, while recognizing that targeted measures were a highly complex and “politically charged” issue, said that the Council should not continue to treat it as a “taboo subject” or it would never be able to find the right solution.²⁸¹

At its 5129th meeting, on 23 February 2005, the Council considered the latest report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict,²⁸² including his recommendations regarding the imposition of “targeted and concrete” measures where insufficient or no progress had been made by the parties recruiting or using children in situations of armed conflict. Recalling resolution 1539 (2004), a number of speakers supported the use of targeted measures against the parties to an armed conflict identified in the list submitted by the Secretary-General to the Council.²⁸³ While welcoming the effective monitoring and reporting of violations against children, the representative of the United States expressed concern about the possible unanticipated policy and resource implications of the “proposed new thematic sanctions committee”.²⁸⁴ The representative of India held that the Council could impose sanctions under Article 41 only if it had established, under Article 39, that there was a sufficient danger to international peace and security to justify them.²⁸⁵ The representative of Canada suggested that sanctions should be coupled with the establishment of base indicators and standards, and called for an adequate monitoring and enforcement mechanism to be put in place.²⁸⁶ The representative of Liechtenstein, echoed by the representative of Norway, considered it crucial that measures be tailored to their respective targets in all situations.²⁸⁷

At its 5494th meeting, on 24 July 2006, a number of speakers reiterated the belief that it was necessary to impose sanctions against those who were responsible for the most flagrant violations of the human rights of children in conflict situations.²⁸⁸

At the 5573rd meeting, on 28 November 2006, the representative of China reiterated his position against frequent resort to sanctions or threats of sanctions, and asserted that caution was especially necessary with regard to the question of children and armed conflict. He noted that every conflict was different and that there could be no generalizations or “one-size-fits-all” approach. Instead, he opined, the Council should work with the countries concerned and support their efforts to protect children.²⁸⁹ In contrast, a number of speakers called on the Council to reaffirm its willingness to use all the tools at its disposal and not shy away from more difficult measures, such as sanctions, if the gravity of the situation called for them.²⁹⁰

At its 5599th meeting, on 19 December 2006, the Council adopted resolution 1730 (2006), by which it approved a new delisting procedure aimed at ensuring that fair and clear procedures existed for placing individuals and entities on sanctions lists and for removing them, as well as granting humanitarian exemptions. During the debate, the representatives of Greece and Denmark expressed the view that the newly adopted resolution enhanced the effectiveness and credibility of the relevant sanctions regimes.²⁹¹ The representative of France stated that, in the light of the development of sanctions regimes aimed at individuals or entities, rather than countries, the inadequacy of delisting procedures had gradually become apparent. He pointed out that the efficacy of sanctions had been impaired by the perception that the delisting procedure was “opaque and inaccessible”. He therefore expressed the hope that the new procedure, while facilitating requests for delisting, would strengthen the support of States for the sanctions regimes, and, therefore, guarantee the effectiveness of targeted sanctions.²⁹² The representative of Qatar expressed the hope that the Council could further improve procedures on delisting from sanctions. Although he had voted in favour of the resolution, he expressed concern that it failed to respect many legal norms and standards that should be respected and applied by both the Council and its sanctions committees in the delisting of individuals. He argued that the focal point established by the Council lacked “independence, neutrality, standards or controls for delisting”. He further regretted that the resolution did not allow legal representatives of listed persons to petition for delisting, particularly since some of the listed persons were deceased.²⁹³

At its 5705th meeting, on 25 June 2007, the Council held an open debate on the role played by natural resources in conflict situations. Referring to the existing sanctions related to natural resources, several speakers said that, in spite of the progress made, there was more room for improving the effectiveness of the sanctions regimes.²⁹⁴ While acknowledging that sanctions measures against those who exploited natural resources in conflict areas could be an important tool for the Council to prevent, intervene in and stop conflicts, a number of representatives believed that sanctions should be used with great prudence, given their possible negative humanitarian impact.²⁹⁵ They underlined the importance of improving the mechanisms for the lifting of sanctions. The representative of France, reinforced by the representative of Germany, expressed the belief that the effectiveness of sanctions had to be improved in order for sanctions to play a more important role in bringing conflicts to an end.²⁹⁶ Similarly, the representative of Peru stated that sanctions regimes had to be made more effective and expert groups had to be encouraged to consider the lessons learned, make use of them, and, when necessary, propose modifications to the mandates of peacekeeping operations or to sanctions regimes.²⁹⁷

The representative of Italy supported the view that, whenever commodity sanctions were in place, peacekeeping operations should be given an appropriate mandate to assist the Government concerned to prevent the illegal exploitation of natural resources from further fuelling the conflict.²⁹⁸ The representative of Switzerland, referring to the various sources used by armed groups to finance their activities, stressed that the Council had to be prepared to react swiftly to changes in the way in which armed groups obtained revenue. Stressing that the link between conflict and natural resources generally arose in States with weak institutions, he said that sanctions should include a comprehensive strategy to fight corruption, rebuild institutions, re-establish the rule of law, and diversify the economy.²⁹⁹ The representative of the Congo, echoed by the representatives of Ghana and Senegal, said that to ensure the credibility of sanctions regimes transnational corporations should not be treated more leniently than local leaders when it came to “economic abuses and crimes”.³⁰⁰ The representative of Pakistan noted that the Council’s approach of utilizing sanctions to control arms trafficking and natural resource exploitation had proved, unfortunately, to be “too narrow and, at times, inappropriate in responding to various situations”. He suggested using more extensive measures, including border controls and wider monitoring.³⁰¹ In contrast, the representative of Indonesia, recognizing that the fierce competition for possession of valuable natural resources fuelled armed conflicts, asserted that the Council should acknowledge limitations to its power and not be tempted to become involved in the area of conflict prevention. He believed that imposing sanctions or authorizing military action would not solve the underlying problems of conflicts.³⁰²

A number of speakers supported the view that sanctions should be reversed once they had achieved their intended purpose.³⁰³ The representative of Liechtenstein noted that previous sanctions imposed by the Council with respect to certain commodities had contributed to conflict resolution in Angola, Liberia and Sierra Leone. He said that such sanctions had to be tailored to the circumstances of each individual case with clearly identified objectives, specified measures for implementation by Member States, and conditions for their suspension or lifting.³⁰⁴

Protection of civilians in armed conflict

At its 4990th meeting, on 14 June 2004, the Council considered the latest report of the Secretary-General on the protection of civilians in armed conflict.³⁰⁵ In his report, the Secretary-General declared that more serious consideration should be given to the imposition of travel restrictions and targeted sanctions against armed groups that blatantly violated international humanitarian law and prevented humanitarian access to populations in need. In the ensuing debate, the representative of Angola declared that the responsibility to respond to the need to protect civilians implied also making effective use of sanctions and international prosecution.³⁰⁶ The representative of Germany, while recognizing the contentious nature of the issue, stressed that national sovereignty could not be used as an excuse when the lives of civilians were threatened. He therefore proposed considering targeted sanctions and travel restrictions as possible measures against non-State armed groups and those backing them.³⁰⁷

At the 5100th meeting, on 14 December 2004, the representative of Benin noted that the Council could take measures that would increase the penalties for violators of international humanitarian law and human rights. For such individuals, he opined, sanctions could act as a deterrent. He said that activities such as blocking access to populations who needed humanitarian assistance and attacks on humanitarian staff should be included among the acts that triggered the imposition of international sanctions.³⁰⁸ The representative of Switzerland, while acknowledging that in recent years significant progress had been achieved in defining sanctions that were more effectively targeted, thus minimizing their negative impact on civilian populations, said that further efforts were still required.³⁰⁹ The representative of Canada stated that the Council still needed to strengthen its enforcement and monitoring mechanisms for arms embargoes and targeted sanctions.³¹⁰

At the 5319th meeting, on 9 December 2005, the representative of Iraq, referring to the proposals made by the Secretary-General in his report on how to deal with States and groups that had failed to discharge their duties to protect civilians,³¹¹ cautioned that when imposing economic sanctions the Council had to ensure that they did not negatively affect the most vulnerable in society, including children.³¹² The representative of Egypt also voiced concern over the idea of imposing targeted sanctions against States that were preventing or blocking humanitarian access, as recommended by the Secretary-General. He suggested that such situations should be dealt with by means of cooperation with the Member State concerned, using all measures, including the provisions of Chapters VI and VIII of the Charter, but not by imposing sanctions under Chapter VII.³¹³

At the 5476th meeting, on 28 June 2006, the representatives of Greece, Denmark and Canada called on the Council to use targeted sanctions as part of a holistic strategy supporting peace agreements and deterring attacks on civilians.³¹⁴

At the 5577th meeting, on 4 December 2006, the representative of France, referring to the increasing number of casualties among journalists and media professionals in recent years, called on the Council to send a clear message to all parties to a conflict to remind them of their obligations to prevent any violence against journalists and of potential investigations and sanctions if they failed to do so.³¹⁵ The representative of

Denmark, echoed by the representative of Canada, stressed that the Council should make use of targeted sanctions to deter attacks against civilians, including humanitarian workers, workers for non-governmental organizations, and journalists. He believed that the Council had to overcome its reluctance to fully use those tools if it seriously wished to move the “protection agenda” forward.³¹⁶

At the 5781st meeting, on 20 November 2007, the representative of the United Kingdom, echoed by the representatives of Canada and Norway, expressed the view that the international community had not only a right to act but a responsibility to do so, in those exceptional cases when States could not or would not protect civilians from the gravest abuses of their human rights. As possible actions, he referred to targeted sanctions, as well as direct intervention to protect civilians, stressing that the latter should always be proportionate and carefully chosen.³¹⁷

At its 4896th meeting, on 19 January 2004, the Council considered the latest report of the Secretary-General on small arms.³¹⁸ During the debate, several speakers supported the Secretary-General’s recommendations to establish monitoring mechanisms to oversee the enforcement of sanctions and to consider coercive measures against Member States that deliberately violated arms embargoes.³¹⁹ A number of representatives shared the view that the Council should adopt effective and practical enforcement strategies for arms embargoes, for targeted sanctions, and for restricting the supply of ammunition to areas of instability.³²⁰ The representative of Egypt proposed, as a first step, the publication of the names of institutions or countries that were violating arms embargoes.³²¹ The representative of the Republic of Korea was of the view that sanctions committees, under the guidance of the Council, could act as a monitoring mechanism.³²² That view was not shared by the representative of Costa Rica, who believed that the sanctions committees were political bodies that lacked the technical capacity to carry out genuine verification work. He proposed the establishment of a mechanism within the Secretariat to proactively monitor the implementation of arms embargoes and to serve as technical support for the work of the sanctions committees.³²³

At its 5127th meeting, on 17 February 2005, the Council considered the impact of illicit trafficking of small arms and light weapons on conflict situations based on the Secretary-General’s most recent report on small arms.³²⁴ During the debate, a number of speakers reiterated the need to further strengthen the effectiveness and enforcement of arms embargoes imposed by the Council.³²⁵ The representative of the Russian Federation said that the main priority continued to be monitoring the level of compliance with the Council’s embargoes on the delivery of weapons and enhancing the effectiveness of monitoring mechanisms to investigate cases of embargo violations.³²⁶ The representative of Luxembourg supported the establishment of monitoring mechanisms to detect violations of arms embargoes.³²⁷ Similarly, the representative of Senegal called for a “clear mechanism” to detect violations and punish violators of arms embargoes.³²⁸ The representative of Denmark opined that the follow-up to the recommendations of the panels of experts should be strengthened, for example, through stronger provisions for secondary sanctions on countries or individuals that violated sanctions regimes.³²⁹ Consideration of secondary measures against violators was supported also by the representatives of Benin, Ukraine and Egypt.³³⁰

At its 5390th meeting, on 20 March 2006, the Council considered another report of the Secretary-General on small arms.³³¹ Several speakers shared the view that peacekeeping missions and sanctions committees should be mandated to initiate small arms traces to assist States in identifying and pursuing those who violated arms embargoes.³³² The representatives of the Congo and Austria expressed the wish for the Council to adopt stronger measures, including with regard to the implementation and monitoring of targeted sanctions, in order to sever the link between the illicit trade in small arms and illegal exploitation of natural resources.³³³ The representative of Denmark said that Member States should be encouraged to bring their own legislation into line with the Council's measures and to take the required legal action against sanctions violators. He suggested that the Council, for its part, could employ targeted sanctions, such as travel bans against individuals or entities breaching embargoes.³³⁴ The representative of Sierra Leone, while commending the Council for establishing and mandating expert monitoring mechanisms for the effective implementation of sanctions, supported the view expressed by the Secretary-General that sanctions enforcement depended on the political will and relevant technical capacity of Member States. Referring to the Council's primary responsibility under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security, he opined that the Council should take the lead and assume a more proactive role in the collective effort to combat the illicit trade and excessive accumulation of small arms.³³⁵

At its 5104th meeting, on 17 December 2004, the Council was briefed on the work of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities. During the subsequent debate, a number of speakers expressed the opinion that, while the significance of targeted sanctions as an instrument of counter-terrorism had progressively increased, the mechanisms to monitor compliance and facilitate the provision of technical assistance still needed to be improved.³³⁶ Several representatives expressed concern with regard to the current methods of listing and delisting individuals, complaining of lack of transparency and due process.³³⁷ Other speakers emphasized that enforcement measures needed to be combined with efforts to address the underlying causes of terrorism.³³⁸

At its 5446th meeting, on 30 May 2006, the Council heard briefings by the Chairmen of the three sanctions committees established, respectively, pursuant to resolutions 1267 (1999), 1373 (2001) and 1540 (2004). During the ensuing debate, a number of speakers, referring to the work of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999), said that there was a need to ensure fair and clear procedures for placing individuals and entities on sanctions lists and for removing them, as well as for granting humanitarian exemptions.³³⁹ The representative of Qatar, underlining the need to move from comprehensive sanctions to targeted sanctions, stressed that such sanctions had to be imposed with a clear objective, and implemented "objectively, effectively and in a balanced number". Noting that the imposition of sanctions was not only a political tool but also a legal tool, he stressed that the Council had to take into consideration both the legal and human rights aspects when adopting sanctions.³⁴⁰ The representative of France affirmed that it was urgent to set up a mechanism that would make procedures simpler and would ensure that all delisting and exemption requests were received by the Committee and dealt with accordingly. To this end, he proposed that a focal point be set up within the Secretariat for the direct receipt from listed individuals of their requests for delisting or exemption.³⁴¹ The representative of Austria expressed the view that effective listing and delisting procedures were essential to preserve the legitimacy and reinforce the efficacy of sanctions regimes. Referring to a number of cases pending before various courts that challenged the Al-Qaida and Taliban sanctions regime for violating the rights of the listed individuals to a fair trial and to an effective remedy, he expressed the belief that the Council should devote special attention to the matter, as a negative court ruling would not only put the Member States concerned in a difficult position, but might call the whole system of targeted sanctions into question.³⁴² The representative of Switzerland stressed that, despite the progress made, shortcomings remained with regard to listing, delisting, notification of individuals and entities, and especially the right to an effective remedy. He pointed to the lack of a periodic review of those listed, the limited time to resolve delisting requests, and the open-ended nature of the sanctions regime. He cautioned that excessively long intervals between reviews tended to change the preventive character of sanctions into permanent punishment, which could be very difficult for national or international courts to accept.³⁴³ The representative of Liechtenstein asserted that the listing and delisting procedures should, “as an absolute minimum”, grant targeted individuals and entities the right to be informed about the measures imposed, the reasons for their imposition, as well as the right to present information that might refute the case for listing.³⁴⁴ The representative of the Russian Federation maintained that to enhance the effectiveness of the sanctions regime it was essential to enhance national procedures for taking decisions on placing new names on sanctions lists.³⁴⁵ The representative of Peru, recognizing that difficulties in identifying individuals and entities on the consolidated list posed a challenge to the implementation of sanctions, in particular with regard to human rights and the credibility of the Committee, expressed the view that it was essential to have sufficient information regarding the identification of individuals and justifying listing requests for those individuals. In his view, all requests should comply with the standards set by the International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL) for inclusion of names in its database.³⁴⁶ Referring to the sanctions against Al-Qaida and the Taliban, the representative of Ghana, echoed by other speakers, supported country visits by the Chairman of the Committee and the Monitoring Team as one of the “key pillars” by which the implementation of the sanctions regime could be evaluated and its weaknesses corrected.³⁴⁷

Wrap-up discussion on the work of the Security Council for the current month

At its 5156th meeting, on 30 March 2005, the Council considered the African dimension of its work. Referring to the peacekeeping operations deployed in Africa, the representative of Algeria noted that a majority of operations had benefited from a “robust, multidimensional mandate” supported by a sanctions regime that he assessed as being “adequate”. He opined that the political will of the parties remained the “crucial factor” in achieving conflict settlement.³⁴⁸ The representative of Pakistan, referring to the challenges associated with large peacekeeping operations, such as the one in the Sudan, expressed hope that the Council would give “serious thought” to the compatibility of United Nations peace operations with the policy of sanctions.³⁴⁹ The representative of Benin suggested that, when applicable and in order to ensure greater respect for arms embargoes as well as for individual sanctions, the mandate and rules of engagement of United Nations peacekeeping operations should be formulated so as to ensure the effective enforcement of sanctions.³⁵⁰ The representative of the Philippines affirmed that sanctions should be treated in the context of the broader peace processes. He concurred with the representative of Benin on the need to increase the effectiveness of sanctions and noted that the gap between the establishment of sanctions and their enforcement was related to the question of respect for the Council's authority.³⁵¹ The representative of the Russian Federation called for caution in the choice and timing of sanctions because, once a sanctions regime was introduced, the Council must consider "effective machinery" to ensure its implementation so as not to harm the authority of the Council and of the United Nations as a whole.³⁵² Observing that the Council's efforts were a combination of "sticks and carrots" in addressing the challenges in Africa, the representative of the United States noted that the mere threat of sanctions was not always enough to change the behaviour of individuals and entities acting against the peace process. He added that in those cases, although the Council's performance in this regard had been "mixed", the Council had to be willing to impose sanctions "promptly" and to bring "sufficient political pressure" to bear on all States and parties to make sanctions effective.³⁵³

The situation in Côte d'Ivoire

At its 5078th meeting, on 15 November 2004, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1572 (2004) by which it, inter alia, imposed an arms embargo against Côte d'Ivoire, as well as travel and financial measures on designated individuals. Making a statement after the vote, the representative of China called upon the Ivorian parties to exercise restraint in order to avoid a further escalation of the crisis. While expressing support for additional Council action in Côte d'Ivoire, he opined that the objective of such action should be to encourage the parties to abide by the ceasefire and resume the peace process.³⁵⁴ The representative of France noted that, by unanimously adopting the resolution, the Council was pursuing the "essential objective" of promoting the implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements, since there could be no military solution to the situation in Côte d'Ivoire.³⁵⁵ The representative of Angola opined that in "tense and fragile" environments, such as the one in Côte d'Ivoire, the Council should opt for a "kind of pressure" that would not radicalize the position of one or another party, but that would instead continue to stimulate dialogue. He emphasized that the main concern was to find the "appropriate way" to calm the tension and to bring the parties back to implementing the peace agreements.³⁵⁶

At the 5152nd meeting, on 28 March 2005, the representative of South Africa noted that the cooperation and involvement of all Ivorian parties was required for attaining a peace settlement in Côte d'Ivoire. He further emphasized that it was "centrally important" that the Council and the African Union have the possibility of imposing "effective sanctions" against any parties that might act wilfully to deny the people of Côte d'Ivoire their right to peace, democracy and development.³⁵⁷ The representative of Japan stressed that all Ivorian parties had to be made fully aware that any failure to cooperate in the facilitation of the efforts of President Mbeki would render them subject to a sanctions regime, in accordance with resolution 1572 (2004). He said that, if the parties continued to obstruct the peace process, the Council had to show its readiness, in consultation with the African Union, to immediately apply sanctions against those individuals responsible for the "sabotage".³⁵⁸ The representative of Argentina expressed the view that the Council should begin to apply individual sanctions, as provided for in resolution 1572 (2004), against persons who obstructed the implementation of the peace agreements, as well as against those who committed any other human rights violations in Côte d'Ivoire.³⁵⁹

At its 5169th meeting, on 26 April 2005, the Council was briefed by the representative of South Africa, on behalf of the African Union mediation mission, on the situation in Côte d'Ivoire. Following the briefing, the representative of the United Kingdom said that, while he had argued for the adoption of sanctions in the past, in the light of the Pretoria Agreement he did not think sanctions were a priority anymore. He recognized however, that the dimension of sanctions had been important in getting the parties to agree and sign the peace agreement.³⁶⁰ The representative of Japan concurred that it was not the appropriate time to immediately apply targeted sanctions against individuals, since the Ivorian parties had just shown their readiness, through the Pretoria Agreement, to revitalize the peace process. However, he stressed that all Ivorian parties had to recognize that any delay in implementing the Agreement would render them immediately subject to sanctions.³⁶¹

At its 4981st meeting, on 3 June 2004, the Council considered the report of the Secretary-General pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003) regarding Liberia and the third progress report of the Secretary-General on UNMIL.³⁶² Following the statement of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Liberia, the Chairman of the National Transitional Government of Liberia appealed to the Council to lift the sanctions on timber and diamonds imposed by resolution 1521 (2003). He reaffirmed that the war in his country was over, and pointed out that the sanctions regime contributed to the perception that Liberia was “unsafe and dangerous”. He said that the sanctions resulted in a surcharge on everything imported into the country, thus raising the cost of living for the people of Liberia and having adverse implications for an orderly transition from conflict to peace. To strengthen his appeal, he outlined the steps taken by his Government to meet the Council’s concerns and requested that Council experts visit Liberia within 90 days to assess the progress made by the Transitional Government in fulfilling the conditions for the removal of sanctions. As further assurance to the Council, he stated that, upon the lifting of sanctions on diamonds, Liberia would temporarily avoid any sale, importation and exportation of rough diamond until it had joined the Kimberley Process.³⁶³ The representative of Algeria noted that the sanctions regime would need to be in line with the new political realities of Liberia and, given the fact that the Government of Liberia was a “partner for peace” of the Council, he deemed that the issue of sanctions should no longer be a source of controversy between Liberia and the Council.³⁶⁴ Similarly, the representative of Angola, noting the progress made by Liberia, said that the Council needed to respond effectively to the plea made by the country concerning the ending of sanctions.³⁶⁵ The representative of Pakistan observed that the political changes in Liberia had had a positive impact on the way sanctions were implemented. Pointing out that arms and travel bans, on the one hand, and economic sanctions, on the other hand, should be treated differently, he advocated for the Council to lift the sanctions on diamonds. Noting with appreciation the assurance that Liberia would not export diamonds until it joined the Kimberley Process, he hoped that, given the progress made by the Liberian authorities in the case of diamonds, the sanctions could be soon lifted.³⁶⁶ By contrast, the representative of France, echoed by the representative of the United Kingdom, while acknowledging the actions taken by the Government of Liberia and UNMIL in the direction of restoring State control over natural resources, pointed out that Liberia still faced challenges to achieving lasting stability.³⁶⁷ The representative of the United Kingdom added that, before lifting the sanctions on diamonds, it would be more logical to first ensure that the Kimberley Process was fully implemented.³⁶⁸ The representatives of China and Benin concurred that the Council should decide on Liberia’s request in the near future.³⁶⁹

At the 5005th meeting, on 16 July 2004, in connection with the item entitled “Security Council mission”, the representative of Liberia reiterated the plea for the Council to lift the sanctions on timber and diamonds, stressing the role that those natural resources could play in Liberia’s reconstruction. He further pleaded for international assistance to ensure Liberia’s compliance with the management of public funds standards set by resolution 1521 (2003).³⁷⁰ The representative of Nigeria joined in the request for lifting the embargo on the trade of timber and other natural resources, so that the Government of Liberia could have the necessary funds for the rehabilitation of its infrastructure.³⁷¹ The representative of Pakistan acknowledged the challenge of economic recovery and reconstruction in Liberia, and opined that the Council had to revisit the issue of economic sanctions as the country made progress in achieving the benchmarks related to the timber and diamond sectors.³⁷² The representative of the Russian Federation however cautioned that the lifting of sanctions had to be closely linked to guarantees of the irreversibility of the political settlement in Liberia.³⁷³

At its 5105th meeting, on 21 December 2004, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1579 (2004), by which it renewed the measures on arms, travel, timber and diamonds imposed on Liberia by resolution 1521 (2003). Following the adoption of the resolution, the representative of the United States said that the newly adopted decision constituted a statement of his Government's strong support of the ongoing efforts of the United Nations to ensure peace and stability in Liberia and the region. He pointed out that the premature lifting of sanctions could potentially lead to the re-emergence of armed conflict. Although sharing the desire of other Council members to see Liberia's timber sector restored quickly as a source of legitimate revenue for the National Transitional Government, he emphasized that, in order to accomplish such an objective, there should be "security, transparency and accountability" in the timber sector. Currently, however, Liberia lacked the necessary institutional and financial measures to ensure that forest resources were used for legitimate development. He concluded by saying that his Government was "actively engaged" in assisting the Liberian authorities to restructure the timber and diamond sectors, as a means to expedite the eventual lifting of sanctions.³⁷⁴

At its 5389th meeting, on 17 March 2006, the Council heard a statement by the President of Liberia on the most recent reforms adopted by the country to meet the requirement for lifting the timber and diamond sanctions. She pointed out that Liberia had put in place mechanisms that would enhance transparency in governance, "consistent with the requirements for the lifting of timber and diamond sanctions". She further pointed out that her Government was meeting most of the requirements for implementing the Kimberley Process, and expressed the hope that those measures would lead to an "early lifting" of the ban on diamond exports.³⁷⁵ The representative of the United States, commending the President of Liberia for her commitment to reform the timber and diamond sectors, expressed hope that the remaining reforms would be put in place so that sanctions could be lifted as soon as possible.³⁷⁶ The representative of the United Kingdom also commended the President of Liberia for the measures already adopted, and declared that it was incumbent on the Council to review the sanctions "as quickly as possible", taking into account the steps that the President had taken.³⁷⁷ The representative of Denmark asserted that the sanctions should be terminated as soon as the conditions imposed against Liberia were met and the revenues from the timber and diamond sectors benefited the Liberian people. She added that if the current reform momentum was kept up, that goal should be within short reach.³⁷⁸ The representative of Japan observed that the international community should support Liberia's efforts not only with good will, but also by mobilizing substantial support for and assistance to Liberia. He added that the Security Council would have to address, among other issues, the lifting of the sanctions in close consultation with the new Government.³⁷⁹ Similarly, the representative of Peru opined that the holding of elections should be just one phase in a wide-ranging programme for the rebuilding of Liberia, which included, in the economic sphere, the removal of sanctions.³⁸⁰

At its 5297th meeting, on 31 October 2005, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1636 (2005), by which it imposed a set of financial and travel restrictions on individuals designated by the International Independent Investigation Commission or the Government of Lebanon as suspected of involvement in planning, sponsoring, organizing or perpetrating the terrorist act which caused the death of the former Prime Minister of Lebanon, Rafiq Hariri, and others. In the debate following the adoption of the resolution, a few speakers referred in their statements to an initial version of the draft resolution³⁸¹ which had envisaged the possibility of imposing sanctions against the Syrian Arab Republic if it did not fully cooperate with the Commission.

The representatives of France, the United Kingdom and the United States, welcoming the unanimous adoption of the resolution, warned that the Council would decide on the consequences of any failure by the Syrian authorities to meet their obligations under the resolution and fully cooperate with the International Independent Investigation Commission.³⁸² The representative of the United States said that, with resolution 1636 (2005), the United Nations was taking a step to hold the Syrian Arab Republic accountable for “any further failure to cooperate with the Commission’s investigations and to consider further action if necessary”.³⁸³ The representative of the United Kingdom said that the resolution had put the Syrian Arab Republic on notice that the Council’s patience was “limited” in obtaining its necessary cooperation.³⁸⁴

By contrast, the representatives of Algeria, China and the Russian Federation said that they supported the removal of any language related to the “threat of sanctions” from the text of the draft resolution. The representative of Algeria said that such a provision would have been “both premature and superfluous”, since the resolution was adopted in the context of Chapter VII of the Charter and was, therefore, “in and of itself already binding”.³⁸⁵ The representative of China held the view that the use of sanctions could only be authorized “with prudence and in the light of actual situations”. In such circumstances, he found it “inappropriate” for the Council to prejudge the outcome of the investigation and threaten to impose sanctions, as that would “not contribute to resolving this issue” and would “add new destabilizing factors” to the already complex situation in the Middle East.³⁸⁶ The representative of the Russian Federation expressed his satisfaction that the resolution did not go beyond the context of cooperation with the investigation and did not contain any “baseless threats” or cast doubt on the universal principle of the presumption of innocence. Referring to the initial version of the draft resolution, he declared that the initial text, if adopted, would have provided for an “unprecedented procedure” that would have automatically imposed sanctions against suspects purely at the discretion of the

The situation in Myanmar

At its 5753rd meeting, on 5 October 2007, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General in Myanmar on recent developments in that country. In the ensuing debate, the representative of the United States expressed his readiness to introduce a draft resolution imposing sanctions if the country’s regime did not respond constructively to the demands of the international community in a timely manner. He believed that measures such as an arms embargo should be considered to induce the regime to cooperate with the Special Envoy in his mediation efforts.³⁸⁸ The representative of Singapore declared that, although the idea of additional sanctions should not be ruled out, the possible impact of such measures should be carefully considered. All such actions should have only one objective — the strengthening of the Special Envoy’s hand as an effective mediator.³⁸⁹ In contrast, the representative of China emphasized that pressure would not serve any purpose and would only lead to confrontation or even loss of dialogue and cooperation between Myanmar and the international community, including the United Nations. To this end, he called on the Council to adopt a “prudent and responsible” approach in handling the issue.³⁹⁰

At its 5777th meeting, on 13 November 2007, the Council heard another briefing by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General about his most recent visit to Myanmar in the context of his good offices mandate. During the debate, the representative of China restated his belief that sanctions would not help to resolve the situation, but rather complicate it, in particular by undermining the dialogue and the reconciliation process that was starting.³⁹¹ Likewise, the representative of the Russian Federation asserted that threats, pressure and sanctions exerted from outside the country were counterproductive and would only hinder the effort to solve the problems that Myanmar was facing.³⁹²

of Korea*

At its 5551st meeting, on 14 October 2006, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1718 (2006) by which it imposed an arms embargo, a travel ban, and an asset freeze against the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, in response to the nuclear test proclaimed by the country on 9 October 2006. In the debate following the vote, the representatives of the United States, France and the United Kingdom welcomed the imposition of sanctions as a decisive and necessary response by the Council to a serious threat to international peace and security.³⁹³ The representative of China stated that sanctions in themselves were not "the end" and emphasized that, if the Democratic People's Republic of Korea complied with the resolution, the Council would suspend or lift sanctions.³⁹⁴ Similarly, the representative of the Russian Federation affirmed that any sanctions introduced by the Council should not remain in place indefinitely and should be lifted if the Council's demands were met. He further emphasized that the imposition of sanctions by Governments in a "one-sided way" was not compatible with the Council's effort to reach an agreement on common approaches in which all interested parties were involved.³⁹⁵ The representative of Japan stressed that the goal of the newly adopted resolution was not to impose sanctions "for the sake of sanctions" but to remove a threat to international peace and security by ensuring the discontinuation of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea's nuclear testing and ballistic missile launchings as well as the abandonment of its nuclear and missile programmes.³⁹⁶ In response, the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea rejected the resolution as "unjustifiable" and argued that the United States had sought to impose collective sanctions upon his country by "manipulating the Council" to adopt the resolution.³⁹⁷

Non-proliferation (Islamic Republic of Iran)

At its 5500th meeting, on 31 July 2006, acting under Article 40 of the Charter, the Council adopted resolution 1696 (2006), by which it made mandatory the suspension of uranium enrichment and reprocessing activities undertaken by the Islamic Republic of Iran, as required by IAEA. The Council further expressed its intention, in the event that the Islamic Republic of Iran did not comply with the resolution, to adopt appropriate measures under Article 41 of Chapter VII of the Charter. In the debate that followed the adoption of the resolution, a number of speakers reaffirmed their readiness to introduce measures under Article 41, should the Islamic Republic of Iran not comply with the resolution.³⁹⁸ The representatives of the Russian Federation and China, however, added that in case of compliance no additional measures by the Council would be necessary.³⁹⁹

At its 5612th meeting, on 23 December 2006, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1737 (2006), by which it imposed the first set of sanctions against the Islamic Republic of Iran related to its nuclear programme. During the debate, the representative of the United States opined that the resolution sent the Islamic Republic of Iran an "unambiguous message" that there were "serious repercussions" to its continued disregard of its obligations. Hoping that the country would comply with the resolution, he stated that, by that resolution, the Council had clearly affirmed its intention to review the Islamic Republic of Iran's actions based on the report to be submitted by IAEA and to adopt "further measures" if the country had not complied fully with its obligations.⁴⁰⁰ The representative of France pointed out that the sanctions adopted by the Council were "proportionate and reversible", but emphasized that in the event the Islamic Republic of Iran persisted on its current path, there would be "other measures" under Article 41 of the Charter.⁴⁰¹ The representative of China emphasized that the sanctions were not an end, but a means to urge the Islamic Republic of Iran to resume negotiations, and reaffirmed their time-limited and reversible character.⁴⁰² In response, the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran pointed out that the Council had imposed sanctions on a party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons which had never attacked or threatened to use force against any Member of the United Nations. He deemed that the United States and its three European Union partners had never taken seriously his Government's proposals, being from the beginning "bent on abusing" the Council and on using sanctions as an instrument of pressure against the Islamic Republic of Iran.⁴⁰³

At its 5647th meeting, on 24 March 2007, the Council adopted resolution 1747 (2007), by which it imposed another set of sanctions against the Islamic Republic of Iran. Prior to the vote, the representatives of Qatar, the Congo, Indonesia and South Africa made statements indicating their intention to vote in favour of the draft resolution, but stressed the inalienable right of the Islamic Republic of Iran to develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and called on all States to seek a negotiated solution to the issue.⁴⁰⁴ More specifically, the representative of Qatar expressed his disapproval of the adoption of new sanctions, considering them an inappropriate means of pressuring the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran. He cautioned that sanctions could sometimes complicate matters and signal another failure of diplomatic efforts. He further noted that the continued pressure on the Islamic Republic of Iran could have serious consequences, given the already volatile nature in the region.⁴⁰⁵ Similarly, the representative of South Africa expressed the belief that coercive measures, such as sanctions, should be utilized with great caution and only to support the resumption of political dialogue and negotiations to achieve a peaceful solution.⁴⁰⁶ In the debate following the adoption of the resolution, the representative of the United Kingdom, supported by the representatives of France and the United States, underlined the incremental and proportional nature of the resolution, noting that it did not introduce any changes to the provisions of paragraph 15 of resolution 1737 (2006). They also underlined the inalienable right of the Islamic Republic of Iran to the development of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and called on that country to return to the negotiating table in order to achieve a long-lasting and comprehensive solution to the issue.⁴⁰⁷ The representative of the United States said that the non-compliance of the Islamic Republic of Iran with

Security Council resolutions as well as its violation of its international treaty obligations required Council action, which was however undertaken in a "careful and deliberate" manner.⁴⁰⁸ The representative of China, underlining the reversible nature of the sanctions measures, added that the purpose of the new resolution was not to punish the Islamic Republic of Iran but to urge it to return to negotiations and reactivate diplomatic efforts. If the Islamic Republic of Iran complied with the relevant resolutions, the Council would suspend, and even terminate the sanctions measures. Maintaining that it was impossible to resolve the issue by imposing sanctions and pressure only, he emphasized that diplomatic talks remained the "best option". He also maintained that the sanctions should neither harm the people of the Islamic Republic of Iran nor affect normal economic, trade and financial exchanges between the Islamic Republic of Iran and other countries.⁴⁰⁹ While highlighting the balanced text of the resolution, the representative of the Russian Federation said that Article 41 of the Charter precluded the possibility of the use of force and that any further steps that could be taken in response to the Islamic Republic of Iran's future actions would therefore be peaceful. He hoped that the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran would enter into dialogue in order to attain a political and diplomatic solution to the issue.⁴¹⁰ The representative of Panama expressed the view that the Council's adoption of a resolution imposing sanctions signalled the "failure of the political process". He called upon all parties to launch a new negotiating process aimed at resolving the situation.⁴¹¹

In response, the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran regretted that, for the fourth time in the past 12 months, the Council had taken "unjustifiable action" against his country, which was pursuing a peaceful nuclear programme. He argued that by establishing sanctions, the resolution was punishing a country that, "according to IAEA", had never diverted its nuclear programme, and which had been a "committed party" and had fulfilled all of its commitments under the Non-Proliferation Treaty. He concluded by noting that even the harshest political and economic sanctions or other threats were far too

At its 5015th meeting, on 30 July 2004, the Council adopted resolution 1556 (2004), by which it imposed an arms embargo against all non-governmental entities and individuals operating in the States of Northern Darfur, Southern Darfur and Western Darfur. By the same resolution the Council demanded that the Government of the Sudan fulfil its commitments to disarm the Janjaweed militias and expressed its intention to consider further actions, including measures as provided for in Article 41 of the Charter, in the event of non-compliance.

Speaking before the vote, the representative of China, recalling that the Government of the Sudan bore the primary responsibility to resolve the situation in Darfur, stated that his Government would abstain in the voting because the draft resolution still included references to measures that, given the fact that all parties were “speeding up” diplomatic efforts, were not helpful and which could further complicate the situation.⁴¹³ Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United States noted that the resolution imposed an arms embargo specifically focused on Darfur and provided for a monthly progress-monitoring mechanism with the “prospect of sanctions” if the Government of the Sudan failed to fulfil its commitments. He added that the Sudan had to know that “serious measures”, namely international sanctions, were looming in the event of non-compliance.⁴¹⁴ Similarly, the representative of the United Kingdom asserted that if the Government’s commitments and obligations were not met, specifically entering into constructive peace talks and the cessation of intimidation and atrocities, the Council, upon reviewing the progress made after one month, would consider measures as provided for in Article 41 of the Charter.⁴¹⁵ The representatives of Germany and France agreed with the previous speakers that the newly imposed measures constituted a chance for the Government of the Sudan to avoid the imposition of sanctions by making significant and measurable progress on disarming the Janjaweed militias and bringing them to justice. Otherwise, the Council would be obliged to impose measures under Article 41 of the Charter.⁴¹⁶ The representative of Algeria, speaking also on behalf of Angola and Benin, welcomed the adoption of the resolution and insisted on the adoption of new measures against the Sudan only after the Council had reviewed the progress made by the Government of the Sudan in fulfilling its commitments.⁴¹⁷ Similarly, the representative of the Russian Federation declared that it was “of fundamental importance” that the resolution did “not foresee possible further Security Council action with regard to Darfur”. In his view, such action should be taken only after considering the Secretary-General’s recommendations and developments on the ground.⁴¹⁸ The representative of Brazil observed that the adoption of the measures under Chapter VII of the Charter added little or no value to the resolution’s vigour, and viewed the reference to Article 41 “as a way out and a compromise”. He opined that the text should have made clear that measures such as those envisaged in Article 41 should be adopted solely for the purpose of giving effect to the decisions of the Council contained in the resolution.⁴¹⁹ The representative of Pakistan pointed out that his Government did not support the new measures because it did not believe that the threat or imposition of sanctions against the Government of the Sudan was advisable. He added that his Government considered unnecessary the adoption of the entire resolution under Chapter VII.⁴²⁰ The representative of the Philippines noted that his country had voted in favour of the resolution in response to the humanitarian situation and expressed the hope that the Sudan would comply with its commitments and that after 30 days there would be no reason to implement Article 41 of the Charter.⁴²¹

At its 5040th meeting, on 18 September 2004, the Council adopted resolution 1564 (2004), reiterating that in the event the Government of the Sudan failed to comply fully with the relevant Security Council resolutions, the Council would consider taking additional measures under Article 41 of the Charter. Prior to the vote, the representative of Algeria said that his Government did not expect that the Council would use the threat of “recourse to sanctions” and expressed his concerns regarding the text of the draft resolution,⁴²² as it only highlighted the shortcomings of the Government of the Sudan without mentioning the actions taken by the Government in the right direction. Furthermore, he disagreed with the fact that the resolution envisaged the possibility of using sanctions against the Sudan not only if there was a lack of compliance with Security Council resolutions but also if there was a lack of cooperation with the African Union on the extension of the mandate of the African Union Mission in the Sudan.⁴²³ Following the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation said that the threat of sanctions was far from the best method to induce the Government of the Sudan to fulfil its obligations. Instead, he recommended the use of “approved diplomatic methods”.⁴²⁴ Expressing his delegation’s reservations about the resolution, the representative of China agreed that the Council and the international community should focus on encouraging the Government of the Sudan to continue to cooperate, rather than “doing the opposite”, and suggested supporting the mediation of the African Union. He noted that his Government had abstained but had not blocked the adoption of the resolution, because of the provisions referring to the African Union. He also noted that the co-sponsors of the resolution had repeatedly stated that sanctions would not be automatically implemented, and reiterated his Government’s opposition to sanctions, which in his view only aggravated the existing problems.⁴²⁵ Similarly, the representative of Pakistan said that his delegation could not endorse the use, or the threat of use, of sanctions. Considering the progress made, the threat to use sanctions against the Government of the Sudan was not “justifiable or necessary”. He added that the sanctions were unfair and that they might provoke a response that would be counterproductive, threatening international humanitarian relief and eroding the mediatory efforts of the African Union.⁴²⁶ In response, the representative of the United States pointed out that the Council was acting only because the Government of the Sudan had failed to comply with resolution 1556 (2004). He said that, if the Sudan continued to persecute its people and did not fully cooperate with the African Union, the Council would indeed have to consider sanctions against it.⁴²⁷ The representative of Germany, supported by the representative of Romania, emphasized that the Council needed to maintain pressure on the Sudan, which included the threat of sanctions, but without creating any “automaticity”.⁴²⁸ Similarly, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that “by repeating the clear threat of measures”, the Council was underlining its commitment to ensure that the Government of the Sudan achieved the targets that had been set.⁴²⁹ The representative of Chile noted that sanctions were “tools with which to achieve higher purposes”, declaring that his Government’s goal was for the Sudan to fulfil its commitments.⁴³⁰ The representative of the Sudan maintained that his Government had fulfilled its obligations towards its citizens. He further reminded the Council that his country’s problems lay in “economic and social backwardness” and questioned whether sanctions would help to resolve the problem, or would only further complicate it.⁴³¹

At its 5082nd meeting, on 19 November 2004, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1574 (2004), by which it expressed its deep concern at the situation in the Sudan and its implications for international peace and security and stability in the region. In the debate that followed the adoption of the resolution, the representative of the United Kingdom remarked that the resolution reiterated the Council’s determination to ensure that all parties in Darfur fulfilled their obligations. He further noted that the resolution was a reminder that measures under Article 41 of the Charter would be used against those who did not comply.⁴³² Similarly, the representative of the Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the European Union and associated countries, said that the European Union would continue to exert pressure on both the Government of the Sudan and the rebel groups, and would take appropriate measures, as contemplated in Article 41 of the Charter, if no tangible progress was achieved.⁴³³ The Chairman of the Sudan People’s Liberation Movement/Army declared that the resolution constituted a “much stronger action” than sanctions because it constituted a commitment by the parties to the conflict to reach a political settlement by 31 December 2004. If the parties did not agree, the resolution signified that there could be “much more serious consequences” than sanctions.⁴³⁴

At its 5153rd meeting, on 29 March 2005, the Council adopted resolution 1591 (2005), by which it expanded the arms embargo and imposed additional measures, including a travel ban and asset freeze on designated individuals involved in the conflict in the Sudan. In the ensuing debate, the representative of the Russian Federation insisted that the potential of political and diplomatic measures to defuse the conflict in Darfur had not been exhausted. While affirming that the imposition of sanctions was “hardly likely to create a constructive atmosphere”, he noted that targeted sanctions could still be used against persons who were creating obstacles to normalizing the situation in Darfur. He added that doubts about the practical ability to implement the sanctions regime already imposed by the Council did not help to strengthen its effectiveness. He expressed support for the strong opposition of the African Union and the League of Arab States to the strengthening of sanctions, and expressed the view that the Council should review, as soon as possible, the decision to impose an arms embargo, particularly in the light of the formation of the coalition Government of the Sudan.⁴³⁵ Similarly, expressing his reservations about the resolution, the representative of China reiterated his cautious approach to the issue of sanctions and stressed that the Council should exercise the greatest caution with respect to “measures” that could make negotiations more difficult and have a negative impact on the peace process.⁴³⁶

At its 5423rd meeting, on 25 April 2006, the Council adopted resolution 1672 (2006), by which it designated four individuals as subject to travel restrictions and asset freeze. Following the vote, the representative of Qatar expressed the view that there was no “clear and consistent evidence that would condemn those individuals in the way required for imposing sanctions on them”, in accordance with the measures and guidelines of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1591 (2005).⁴³⁷ The representative of the Russian Federation voiced concern about the timing of the resolution, stating that its adoption could have a negative impact on the prospects for concluding a peace agreement. He believed that the implementation of sanctions should be closely linked with the task of promoting the political settlement of the conflict and ensuring regional stability.⁴³⁸ The representative of China, emphasizing that the African Union-led Abuja peace talks were at a crucial juncture, cautioned that the Council would have to assume responsibility if, as a result of the resolution, any party to the Abuja peace talks had second thoughts about signing a peace accord, and the conflict in Darfur was prolonged or even intensified. Regarding the criteria for the inclusion of individuals in the sanctions list, he expressed his reservation and stated that sanctions should be applied as an extremely careful step.⁴³⁹

At the 5434th meeting, on 9 May 2006, the representative of Denmark advocated that all measures, including sanctions, should be “put to use as and when appropriate”. She believed it was crucial to encourage, and when necessary, apply pressure, on those parties or individuals that stood “in the way of peace”, in order to achieve a lasting peace in Darfur and in the Sudan as a whole.⁴⁴⁰ Similarly, the representative of Austria, speaking on behalf of the European Union and associated countries, reiterated his support for making full use of the measures set out in resolution 1591 (2005) against those who were impeding the peace process.⁴⁴¹

At the 5520th meeting, on 11 September 2006, the representative of Qatar called on the Council to study the comprehensive plan of action for Darfur put forward by the Government of the Sudan and reach an agreement with the Government on the situation. He further stressed that the threat of sanctions had to be avoided, as it would “undoubtedly” complicate matters.⁴⁴² By contrast, the representative of Denmark, stressed that all those responsible had to and would be held accountable, and expressed the view that, if the Government of the Sudan pressed on with its current

Discussion of judicial measures relating to Article 41

The situation in the Middle East

At its 5685th meeting, on 30 May 2007, the Council adopted resolution 1757 (2007), by which, inter alia, it requested the Secretary-General, in coordination with the Government of Lebanon, to establish a Special Tribunal to judge those accused of the terrorist attack that killed the former Prime Minister, Rafiq Hariri, and others. During the debate preceding the vote, a number of representatives justified their abstention from voting on the draft resolution by questioning the adoption of the measures under Chapter VII of the Charter. They noted that Council resolutions were binding under Article 25 of the Charter and that the Council, by establishing the Tribunal, was interfering in the domestic affairs of Lebanon.⁴⁴⁴ Moreover, the representative of China indicated that, by invoking Chapter VII, the Council's measure could give rise to "political and legal problems" and create instability in Lebanon.⁴⁴⁵ Similarly, the representative of the Russian Federation declared that there was "no basis" for a reference to Chapter VII in the draft resolution.⁴⁴⁶ Speaking after the vote, several representatives expressed support for the establishment of the tribunal.⁴⁴⁷ The representative of the United Kingdom maintained that the use of Chapter VII carried no connotation other than making it binding.⁴⁴⁸ The representative of Peru declared that he had voted in favour of the resolution because of the "exceptional political circumstances" in Lebanon, but cautioned that the invocation of Chapter VII of the Charter should not constitute a precedent beyond that particular case.⁴⁴⁹

Reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan

At its 5158th meeting, on 31 March 2005, the Council adopted resolution 1593 (2005), by which it referred the situation in Darfur since 1 July 2002 to the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court. A number of representatives welcomed the Council's decision to refer the situation in Darfur to the Court as the most efficient and effective means to deal with impunity and to ensure justice.⁴⁵⁰ While voting in favour of the resolution, the representatives of the Philippines, Greece and Benin expressed their concerns regarding the provisions of impunity from jurisdiction contained in the decision.⁴⁵¹ The representative of Brazil stated that while his Government was in favour of referring the situation in Darfur to the Court, he had abstained from the voting because of the references to the immunities from the jurisdiction of the Court.⁴⁵² The representative of the United States declared that, by adopting the resolution, the international community had established an "accountability mechanism for the perpetrators of crimes and atrocities" in Darfur. However, she said that she had abstained from the vote because the United States objected to the view that the International Criminal Court should be able to exercise jurisdiction over the nationals of States not parties to the Rome Statute.⁴⁵³ Similarly, the representative of China disapproved of the Court exercising jurisdiction over States not parties and indicated that the referral might "severely complicate" efforts to settle the Darfur issue.⁴⁵⁴ Echoed by the representative of Algeria, the representative of the United States suggested that a "hybrid tribunal" in Africa would have been a "better mechanism" to deal with the situation than the International Criminal Court.⁴⁵⁵ The representative of the Sudan spoke against the referral and stated that the disagreement over the jurisdiction of the Court exposed the fact that the Court was intended only for "developing and weak States". He further said that the judiciary in his country had "gone a long way" in holding trials and underlined that some States had wanted to activate the Court and had used the situation in Darfur as a "mere pretext".⁴⁵⁶

Part IV

Other measures to maintain or restore international peace and security in accordance with Article 42 of the Charter

Article 42

Should the Security Council consider that measures provided for in Article 41 would be inadequate or have proved to be inadequate, it may take such action by air, sea, or land forces as may be necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security. Such action may include demonstrations, blockade, and other operations by air, sea, or land forces of Members of the United Nations.

Note

During the period under review, without explicitly invoking Article 42 of the Charter but acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council adopted several resolutions by which it authorized a number of United Nations peacekeeping missions as well as multinational forces to use “all necessary measures”, “all necessary means”, “all means”, or “all necessary action” to enforce its demands relating to the restoration of international peace and security. With respect to the United Nations peacekeeping missions, the Council authorized enforcement action for the newly established missions in Burundi, Côte d’Ivoire, Haiti and the Sudan. In connection with the mission deployed in Côte d’Ivoire, the Council also authorized French forces to use “all necessary means” to support it. The Council also continued to authorize the use of force for the United Nations peacekeeping operations already deployed in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Sierra Leone. In addition, while not acting explicitly under Chapter VII of the Charter, but having determined the existence of a threat to international peace and security, the Council authorized the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon to take “all necessary action” to undertake a number of tasks it was mandated to perform. In connection with multinational forces, the Council authorized the use of “all necessary measures” for the operations newly established by the European Union in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Chad and the Central African Republic, and the Democratic Republic of the Congo; the African Union in Somalia; and Member States participating in the Multinational Interim Force in Haiti. The Council also renewed the authorization of the use of force for the multinational forces already deployed in Afghanistan, Bosnia and Herzegovina and Iraq. During the period under consideration, the Council authorized for the first time an enforcement action by a joint African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID).

During the period under consideration, the Council authorized peacekeeping operations and multinational forces to undertake enforcement actions under Article 42 of the Charter in the discharge of a large range of tasks, such as, to maintain and/or create a secure environment; to monitor and ensure respect of ceasefire agreements and cessation of hostilities agreements; to support the implementation of peace agreements; to provide protection to transitional/interim Governments; to protect civilians under imminent threat of physical violence; to protect United Nations personnel and facilities as well as humanitarian personnel; to monitor and ensure the implementation of arms embargoes imposed by the Council; to support national reconciliation efforts and to promote the re-establishment of confidence between the parties to a conflict; to disarm and demobilize armed groups; to support the implementation of national programmes of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; to support the reform of the security sector; to assist in the field of human rights; and to contribute to the successful completion of electoral processes.⁴⁵⁷

Section A contains 12 case studies relating to the Council’s authorization of enforcement action, under Chapter VII of the Charter, for the maintenance of peace and security, with regard to Afghanistan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, the Central African Republic, Côte d’Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Haiti, Iraq, the Middle East, Sierra Leone, Somalia and the Sudan. Section B highlights the salient issues that were raised in the Council’s deliberations in connection with the adoption of the resolutions authorizing the use of force or deliberations, and includes an overview of the discussions in the Council on thematic issues which shed light on the interpretation and application of the provisions enshrined in Article 42. Such discussions were held in connection with the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, the protection of civilians in armed conflict, the strengthening of international law, and United Nations peacekeeping operations.

A. Decisions relating to Article 42

The situation in Afghanistan

By resolution 1563 (2004) of 17 September 2004, the Council decided to extend the authorization of the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) for a further period of 12 months, and authorized the Member States participating in ISAF to take “all necessary measures” to fulfil the Mission’s mandate.⁴⁵⁸ By subsequent resolutions, the Council extended the authorization of ISAF and that of the Member States participating in it.⁴⁵⁹

The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina

By resolution 1551 (2004) of 9 July 2004, the Council authorized Member States, acting through or in cooperation with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), to continue, for a further period of six months, the multinational stabilization force (SFOR) and to take “all necessary measures” to effect the implementation and to ensure compliance with annex 1-A of the Dayton Peace Agreement. The Council authorized the relevant Member States to take “all necessary measures”, at the request of SFOR, either in defence of or to assist the Force in carrying out its mission, and recognized the right of the Force to take “all necessary measures” to defend itself from an attack or threat of attack. The Council also authorized the relevant Member States to “take all necessary measures” to ensure compliance with the rules and procedures established by the Commander of SFOR, governing command and control of airspace over Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all civilian and military air traffic.⁴⁶⁰

By resolution 1575 (2004) of 22 November 2004, the Council authorized the Member States acting through or in cooperation with the European Union to establish, for an initial period of 12 months, a multinational stabilization force (EUFOR) as a legal successor to SFOR. The Council welcomed the decision of NATO to conclude the SFOR operation in Bosnia and Herzegovina by the end of 2004 and to maintain a presence in the country through the establishment of a NATO headquarters in order to continue to assist in implementing the Peace Agreement in conjunction with EUFOR. The Council therefore authorized the Member States acting through or in cooperation with NATO to establish a NATO headquarters as a legal successor to SFOR under unified command and control, to fulfil its missions in relation to the implementation of annexes 1-A and 2 of the Peace Agreement in cooperation with EUFOR and in accordance with the arrangements agreed between NATO and the European Union which recognized that EUFOR would have the main peace stabilization role under the military aspects of the Peace Agreement.⁴⁶¹ The Council authorized the relevant Member States acting through or in cooperation with EUFOR and NATO to take “all necessary measures” to effect the implementation and ensure compliance with annexes 1-A and 2 of the Peace Agreement; and stressed that the parties should be equally subject to such enforcement action by the European Union force and the NATO presence as necessary to ensure implementation of the above-mentioned annexes and the protection of EUFOR and the NATO presence. The Council further authorized Member States to take “all necessary measures”, at the request of EUFOR or the NATO headquarters, either in defence of or to assist both organizations in carrying out their missions, and recognized the right of both EUFOR and the NATO presence to take “all necessary measures” to defend themselves from an attack or threat of attack. The Council also authorized the relevant Member States acting through or in cooperation with the European Union force and NATO to take “all necessary measures” to ensure compliance with the rules and procedures governing command and control of airspace over Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all civilian and military air traffic.⁴⁶²

The mandates of both EUFOR and the NATO presence were extended several times by subsequent Council resolutions.⁴⁶³

By resolution 1545 (2004) of 21 May 2004, the Council decided to establish the United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB), authorizing it to use “all necessary means” to carry out the following mandate: ensure the respect of ceasefire agreements; carry out disarmament and demobilization activities; monitor the quartering of the armed forces of Burundi and their heavy weapons; monitor the illegal flow of arms across the national borders; contribute to the creation of the necessary security conditions for the provision of humanitarian assistance, and facilitate the voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons; contribute to the successful completion of the electoral process stipulated in the Arusha Agreement; protect civilians under imminent threat of physical violence; and ensure the protection of United Nations personnel, facilities, installations and equipment, as well as the security and freedom of movement of ONUB personnel, and to coordinate and conduct, as appropriate, mine action activities in support of its mandate.⁴⁶⁴ The mission’s mandate, including the authorization to use “all necessary means”, was extended several times by subsequent Council resolutions.⁴⁶⁵

By resolution 1778 (2007) of 25 September 2007, the Council authorized the European Union to deploy, for a period of one year, an operation aimed at supporting the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad, and decided that the European Union operation would be authorized to take “all necessary measures”, within its capabilities and its area of operation in eastern Chad and the north-eastern Central African Republic, to fulfil the following functions: contribute to protecting civilians in danger, particularly refugees and displaced persons; facilitate the delivery of humanitarian aid and the free movement of humanitarian personnel; and contribute to protecting United Nations personnel, facilities, installations and equipment and to ensuring the security and freedom of movement of its staff and United Nations and associated personnel. The Council further authorized the European Union, at the close of the one-year period, to take “all appropriate measures” to achieve an orderly disengagement, by means including fulfilment of the above-mentioned functions and within the limits of its residual capacity.⁴⁶⁶

By resolution 1528 (2004) of 27 February 2004, the Council decided to establish, as from 4 April 2004 and for an initial period of 12 months, the United Nations Operation in Côte d’Ivoire (UNOCI), and authorized it to use “all necessary means”, within its capabilities and its areas of deployment, to carry out its mandate which included tasks related to monitoring the ceasefire and the movements of armed groups; disarmament, demobilization, reintegration, repatriation and resettlement; protection of United Nations personnel, institutions and civilians; support for humanitarian assistance; support for the implementation of the peace process; assistance in the field of human rights; public information; and law and order. The Council authorized, as from 4 April 2004 and for a period of 12 months, the French forces to use “all necessary means” in order to support UNOCI, and in particular to contribute to the general security of the area of activity of the international forces; intervene at the request of UNOCI in support of its elements whose security might be threatened; intervene against belligerent actions, if the security conditions so required, outside the areas directly controlled by UNOCI; and help to protect civilians in the deployment areas of their units.⁴⁶⁷ The mission’s mandate was extended several times by subsequent Council resolutions.⁴⁶⁸

By resolution 1609 (2005) of 24 June 2005, the Council decided to extend the mandate of UNOCI and of the French forces supporting it and reauthorized the mission to use “all necessary means” to carry out its mandate.⁴⁶⁹ The Council modified the mission’s mandate to include additional tasks related to the disarmament and dismantling of militias; monitoring the arms embargo; support for the redeployment of State administration; and support for the organization of open, free, fair and transparent elections. The Council also reauthorized the French forces in Côte d'Ivoire to use "all necessary means" to support UNOCI, and added to their mandate the task of contributing to monitoring the arms embargo established by resolution 1572 (2004).⁴⁷⁰ The mandate was extended twice by subsequent Council resolutions.⁴⁷¹

By resolution 1739 (2007) of 10 January 2007, the Council further extended the mandate of UNOCI and of the French forces which supported it and reauthorized the mission to use "all necessary means" to carry out its mandate.⁴⁷² The Council modified the mission's mandate to include the tasks of identification of the population and registration of voters, as well as assisting in the reform of the security sector. The Council also reauthorized the French forces in Côte d'Ivoire to use "all necessary means" to support UNOCI, and added to their mandate the task of contributing to the drawing up of a plan on the restructuring of the defence and security forces and to the preparation of possible seminars on security sector reform organized by the African Union and the Economic Community of West African States.⁴⁷³ The mandate of UNOCI and of the French forces was subsequently extended twice by the Council.⁴⁷⁴

By resolution 1533 (2004) of 12 March 2004, the Council requested the United Nations Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) to continue to use "all means" within its capabilities to fulfil its mandate as set out in resolution 1493 (2003), and in particular to inspect, without notice, as it deemed necessary, the cargo of aircraft and of any transport vehicle using the ports, airports, airfields, military bases and border crossings in North and South Kivu and in Ituri.⁴⁷⁵ The mission's mandate was extended by resolution 1555 (2004) of 29 July 2004.

By resolution 1565 (2004) of 1 October 2004, the Council decided to extend and modify the MONUC mandate, to include, inter alia, the tasks of protecting civilians, humanitarian and United Nations personnel, maintaining a presence in the key areas of potential volatility as well as supporting the Government of National Unity and Transition in a number of areas. The Council authorized MONUC to use "all necessary means" to carry out its mandated tasks.⁴⁷⁶

By resolution 1592 (2005) of 30 March 2005, the Council decided to extend the Mission's mandate as set out by resolution 1565 (2004) and emphasized that the Mission was authorized to use "all necessary means" to deter any attempt at the use of force that threatened the political process and to ensure the protection of civilians under imminent threat of physical violence, from any armed group, foreign or Congolese, in particular the ex-Rwandan Armed Forces and Interahamwe. The Council encouraged the Mission to continue to make "full use" of its mandate under resolution 1565 (2004) in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and stressed that, in accordance with its mandate, the Mission might use cordon and search tactics to prevent attacks on civilians and disrupt the military capability of illegal armed groups that continued to use violence in those areas.⁴⁷⁷ The Mission's mandate was extended several times by subsequent Council resolutions.⁴⁷⁸

By resolution 1671 (2006) of 25 April 2006, the Council took note of the letter dated 30 March 2006 from the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo addressed to the President of the Security Council⁴⁷⁹ and of the support of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo for the temporary deployment of a European Union force to support MONUC during the period encompassing the elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁴⁸⁰ The Council authorized the European Union force to take "all necessary measures" to carry out within its means and capabilities the following tasks: to support MONUC in

By resolution 1794 (2007) of 21 December 2007, the Council extended the mandate of MONUC and encouraged the Mission, emphasizing that the protection of civilians should be given priority in decisions about the use of available capacity and resources, to use “all necessary means” to support the integrated brigades of the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo with a view to disarming the recalcitrant foreign and Congolese armed groups in order to ensure their participation in the disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration processes. The Council also reiterated the Mission’s mandate to use all necessary means to protect civilians under imminent threat of physical violence, particularly in the Kivus.⁴⁸²

By resolution 1529 (2004) of 29 February 2004, the Council authorized the deployment of the Multinational Interim Force in Haiti for a period of “not more than three months” to contribute to a secure and stable environment in the Haitian capital and elsewhere in the country; facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance and the access of international humanitarian workers to the Haitian people in need; facilitate the provision of international assistance to the Haitian police and the Haitian Coast Guard in order to establish and maintain public safety and law and order and to promote and protect human rights; support the establishment of conditions for international and regional organizations, including the United Nations and the Organization of American States (OAS), to assist the Haitian people; and coordinate, as needed, with the OAS Special Mission and with the United Nations Special Adviser for Haiti, to prevent further deterioration of the humanitarian situation. The Council authorized the Member States participating in the Multinational Interim Force to take “all necessary measures” to fulfil its mandate.⁴⁸³

By resolution 1542 (2004) of 30 April 2004, while authorizing remaining elements of the Multinational Interim Force to continue to carry out their mandate under resolution 1529 (2004) for a transition period not exceeding 30 days, the Council established the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH) and requested that authority be transferred from the Multinational Interim Force to MINUSTAH on 1 June 2004. The Council authorized remaining elements of the Multinational Interim Force to continue to carry out their mandate under resolution 1529 (2004) within the means available from 1 June 2004, as required and requested by MINUSTAH. Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council decided that the mandate of MINUSTAH would include tasks related to supporting the political process and the Transitional Government, ensuring a secure and stable environment, and protecting United Nations personnel, facilities, installations and equipment as well as civilians under imminent threat.⁴⁸⁴ The Mission’s mandate was extended several times by subsequent Council resolutions.⁴⁸⁵

By resolution 1546 (2004) of 8 June 2004, noting that the presence of the multinational force in Iraq was at the request of the incoming Interim Government of Iraq, the Council reaffirmed the authorization for the multinational force established under resolution 1511 (2003) to take “all necessary measures” to contribute to the maintenance of security and stability in Iraq, including by preventing and deterring terrorism, so that the United Nations could fulfil its role in assisting the Iraqi people through the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq (UNAMI).⁴⁸⁶

The situation in the Middle East

By resolution 1701 (2006) of 11 August 2006, having determined that the situation in Lebanon constituted a threat to international peace and security, the Council decided to increase the number of troops of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) and modified the Force's mandate. Acting in support of a request of the Government of Lebanon to deploy an international force to assist it to exercise its authority throughout the territory, although not acting explicitly under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council authorized UNIFIL to take "all necessary action" to ensure that its area of operations was not utilized for hostile activities of any kind, to resist attempts by forceful means to prevent it from discharging its duties under the mandate, and to protect United Nations personnel, facilities, installations and equipment, ensure the security and freedom of movement of United Nations personnel and humanitarian workers and, without prejudice to the responsibility of the Government of Lebanon, to protect civilians under imminent threat of physical violence.⁴⁸⁷ The Council subsequently renewed the Force's mandate by resolution 1773 (2007) of 24 August 2007.

The situation in Sierra Leone

By resolution 1537 (2004) of 30 March 2004, the Council further extended the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) until 30 September 2004, which included the authorization to take the "necessary action" to fulfil its mandate pursuant to resolution 1289 (2000).⁴⁸⁸

By resolution 1562 (2004) of 17 September 2004, the Council welcomed further progress towards the drawdown of UNAMSIL and decided to extend the Mission's mandate until 30 June 2005, authorizing the residual Mission presence to use "all necessary means" to carry out its mandate, which included military, civilian police and civilian tasks.⁴⁸⁹ The Council extended the Mission's mandate, for the last time, by resolution 1610 (2005) of 30 June 2005 until 31 December 2005.

The situation in Somalia

By resolution 1744 (2007) of 20 February 2007, the Council decided to authorize Member States of the African Union to establish a mission in Somalia (AMISOM), and empowered it to take "all necessary measures" to carry out its mandate to support dialogue and reconciliation in Somalia by assisting with the free movement, safe passage and protection of all those involved with the political peace process; provide protection to the transitional federal institutions to help them carry out their functions of government, and security for key infrastructure; assist with the implementation of the National Security and Stabilization Plan, in particular the effective re-establishment and training of all-inclusive Somali security forces; contribute to the creation of the necessary security conditions for the provision of humanitarian assistance; and protect its personnel, facilities, installations, equipment and mission, and ensure the security and freedom of movement of its personnel.⁴⁹⁰ The Mission's mandate was renewed by resolution 1772 (2007) of 20 August 2007.

Reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan

By resolution 1590 (2005) of 24 March 2005, the Council established the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS), and authorized it to take the "necessary action", in the areas of deployment of its forces and as it deemed within its capabilities, to protect United Nations personnel, facilities, installations and equipment; to ensure the security and freedom of movement of United Nations personnel, humanitarian workers, joint assessment mechanism and assessment and evaluation commission personnel, and, without prejudice to the responsibility of the Government of the Sudan, to protect civilians under imminent threat of physical violence.⁴⁹¹ The Mission's mandate was extended twice by subsequent Council resolutions.⁴⁹²

⁴⁹⁰ Resolution 1744 (2007), para. 4. Prior to the authorization to the African Union to establish AMISOM, the Council, by resolution 1725 (2006) of 6 December 2006 (para. 3), acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, had authorized the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and States members of the African Union to establish a peacekeeping operation in Somalia, but that peacekeeping operation was never deployed.

⁴⁹² Resolutions 1627 (2005), para. 1; and 1663 (2006), para. 1.

By resolution 1706 (2006) of 31 August 2006, the Council decided to expand and strengthen the mandate of UNMIS to support the implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement of 5 May 2006 and the N'Djamena Agreement on Humanitarian Ceasefire on the Conflict in Darfur. The Mission's mandate was extended several times by subsequent Council resolutions.⁴⁹³

By resolution 1769 (2007) of 31 July 2007, in support of the early and effective implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement and the outcome of the negotiations between the parties to the conflict in Darfur, the Council decided to authorize the establishment of the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur. The Council decided that UNAMID was authorized to take the "necessary action" in the areas of deployment of its forces and as it deemed within its capabilities to protect its personnel, facilities, installations and equipment, and to ensure the security and freedom of movement of its own personnel and humanitarian workers; and support early and effective implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement, prevent the disruption of its implementation and armed attacks, and protect civilians, without prejudice to the responsibility of the Government of the Sudan.⁴⁹⁴

B. Discussion relating to Article 42

Reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan

At its 5519th meeting, on 31 August 2006, the Council adopted resolution 1706 (2006), by which it decided to expand the mandate of UNMIS and to deploy the Mission to Darfur. During the debate following the vote, the representative of the United Kingdom declared that by giving the Mission a "clear Chapter VII mandate to use all necessary means to protect civilians", the Council had fulfilled its responsibility to the people of Darfur. She further noted that the countries that had abstained from the voting did not have a "fundamental disagreement" with the principle that the United Nations should "take over", but that the issue was more one of timing. She asserted that the United Kingdom had drafted the resolution in such a way as to make it "as acceptable as possible" to the Sudan, by not making references to the International Criminal Court and by not placing the entire resolution under Chapter VII, but only the provisions referring to the protection of civilians and to UNMIS.⁴⁹⁵

At its 5520th meeting, on 11 September 2006, the Council heard a briefing by the Secretary-General on the situation in Darfur. The Secretary-General expressed his concern at the worsening humanitarian situation and the escalation of renewed fighting in the region and urged the international community to take urgent action.⁴⁹⁶ During the debate, the representative of the United States declared that the adoption of resolution 1706 (2006) was the first step towards improving the situation in Darfur and that the next step would be to implement it. However, he noted that the Government of the Sudan had taken a step backwards by threatening the expulsion of the African Union Mission in the Sudan (AMIS) by the end of the month and its replacement by national forces.⁴⁹⁷ The representative of the United Kingdom questioned the assertion that a United Nations peacekeeping force in Darfur would be a breach of the sovereignty of the Sudan by recalling that no such charges had been levied against the deployment of UNMIS in southern Sudan. As for the lack of consultations, he noted that there had been countless discussions and insisted that if the force was not deployed, there would be a real crisis.⁴⁹⁸ In contrast, the representative of China stated that the Council should continue to seek the consent and cooperation of the Government regarding the deployment of United Nations peacekeeping troops; it should respect the views of the national Government and no peacekeeping operation should be imposed.⁴⁹⁹ Concurring with this statement, the representative of the Russian Federation expressed the belief that the use of force to stabilize the situation in Darfur would lead to an impasse, because any Security Council decision pertaining to peacekeeping should take into account the views of the host Government. Unfortunately, the Council had adopted resolution 1706 (2006) hastily, ⁴⁹³ Resolutions 1709 (2006), para. 1; 1714 (2006), para. 1; 1755 (2007), para. 1; and 1784 (2007), para. 1.

without consulting the Government of the Sudan.⁵⁰⁰ Other Council members, including Slovakia, France and Peru, asserted that the Council should ensure the implementation of resolution 1706 (2006) as it provided a basis for the international community to protect civilians on the ground.⁵⁰¹

At its 5727th meeting, on 31 July 2007, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1769 (2007), by which, inter alia, it decided to authorize the establishment of UNAMID in support of the early and effective implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement. During the debate, many members welcomed the Secretary-General's commitment to the process and agreed that, while the hybrid force was an important step forward, it should have been part of a comprehensive approach that could secure a political settlement. The representative of Belgium said that by giving the mission a robust mandate and an effective command structure, the Council had added a crucial instrument both for protecting the civilian population and for seeking a solution to the crisis.⁵⁰²

At its 4950th meeting, on 22 April 2004, the Council held an open debate on the issue of non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and non-State actors.⁵⁰³ A number of representatives underlined the importance of having the draft resolution adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter in order for the Council to send a strong political signal and to underline the binding nature of the requirement to establish controls with respect to weapons of mass destruction.⁵⁰⁴ They pointed out that the reference to Chapter VII of the Charter would not automatically authorize the use of force in cases of non-compliance, the representative of the United Kingdom emphasizing that any enforcement action would require a new decision by the Council.⁵⁰⁵

⁵⁰⁵ Ibid., p. 12.

Other speakers voiced their concern about the invocation of Chapter VII of the Charter.⁵⁰⁶ For instance, noting that the draft resolution contained provisions whose implementation would not include enforcement action, the representative of Chile suggested that only certain operative paragraphs of the resolution should be adopted under Chapter VII.⁵⁰⁷ Other speakers believed that the draft resolution should not invoke Chapter VII at all, since all decisions of the Council were mandatory under Article 25 of the Charter.⁵⁰⁸ The representative of Pakistan held that there was "no justification" for the adoption of the draft resolution under Chapter VII of the Charter as the threat posed by the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction among non-State actors was not imminent and did not constitute a threat to peace and security. He further deemed that the language used in the draft resolution gave rise to a legitimate fear that the text authorized the "coercive actions" envisaged by Articles 41 and 42 of the Charter.⁵⁰⁹ The representative of Cuba emphasized that the adoption of the draft resolution under Chapter VII of the Charter could not be interpreted as a pre-authorization or justification for the unilateral use of force against given States because of alleged suspicions of proliferation of weapons of mass destruction or their components.⁵¹⁰

Protection of civilians in armed conflict

At the 5100th meeting, on 14 December 2004, the representative of France noted that the protection of civilian populations in armed conflict had become a major issue for international peace and security. He opined that the matter should be treated from the standpoint of collective security and the use of force because States had a collective obligation to protect when a State was no longer able to protect its population.⁵¹¹ Endorsing the report of the High-level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change,⁵¹² the representative of Canada recommended that, as specified in the report, the Council should adopt the basic criteria for the authorization of the use of force, providing elements of a critical framework for Council action, in connection with the collective international responsibility to protect.⁵¹³

At the 5209th meeting, on 21 June 2005, the representative of Peru expressed the view that the Council should undertake a “systematic evaluation” of mandates pertaining to the protection of civilians, including measures taken pursuant to Chapter VII of the Charter, so as to enhance its capacity to protect.⁵¹⁴ Similarly, the representative of Canada pointed out that there was a need for the Council to reach an agreement on how it would apply Chapter VII of the Charter in response to attacks against civilians, particularly in internal conflicts.⁵¹⁵ The representative of Norway endorsed the Secretary-General’s appeal to embrace the principle of the responsibility to protect as a norm for collective action in cases of genocide, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity. He therefore concluded that the Council should adopt a resolution setting out principles for the use of force, in accordance with the norms of international law, and express its intention to be guided by them.⁵¹⁶

At the 5319th meeting, on 9 December 2005, in connection with the report of the Secretary-General on the protection of civilians in armed conflict,⁵¹⁷ the representative of Peru remarked that in various situations of conflict throughout the world the United Nations had been unable to prevent genocide and ethnic cleansing. He further conveyed his Government’s view that the Council should focus on the concept of responsibility to protect, which included the responsibility to respond, in extreme cases, with coercive measures including, inter alia, the use of force.⁵¹⁸ The representative of Canada, speaking also on behalf of Australia and New Zealand, believed that the Council’s engagement, in cases in which it was justified, had to be timely, its monitoring vigilant, and its political will sustained, so that the Council could draw on the full range of measures at its disposal to protect civilian populations, including, as a last resort, the use of force. He further stated that a Council resolution should clarify the Council’s resolve to act, including through enforcement action under Chapter VII, in response to serious violations of international humanitarian law, including genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity, should peaceful means be inadequate and should national authorities manifestly fail to protect their populations.⁵¹⁹ The representative of Denmark, reinforced by a number of other speakers, observed that, in accordance with one of the main purposes of the Charter, the international community had to take appropriate action to protect civilians, first through peaceful means. However, in the event that those means failed, she opined that the international community had a responsibility to use all necessary and available means, including collective action in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter, to put an end to ongoing acts of genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity.⁵²⁰

At the 5476th meeting, on 28 June 2006, the representative of Canada reiterated the call for criteria to guide the use of force in situations in which diplomatic efforts proved unsuccessful in preventing gross and systematic violations of human rights and humanitarian law. He further stated that, until such criteria were adopted, the Council should focus on the design and use of tailored and robust multidimensional mandates for civilian protection where a physical international presence was required, backed up by the necessary means and capabilities.⁵²¹ Referring to Darfur, the representative of Peru expressed his Government’s support for giving AMIS a robust mandate to enable it to protect civilians. He further insisted on a United Nations force to be deployed in Darfur with a clear mandate to implement peace agreements and to protect civilians under Chapter VII of the Charter.⁵²²

⁵¹⁷ S/2005/740. In his report, the Secretary-General recalled his report entitled “In larger freedom” (A/59/5005), in which he had developed further the concept of the “responsibility to protect”, elements of which have been reiterated in resolutions such as those related to children and armed conflict. The Secretary-General was pleased that the World Summit Outcome (General Assembly resolution 60/1) emphasized the responsibility of the international community to seek appropriate diplomatic, humanitarian and other peaceful means, in accordance with Chapters VI and VIII, and if necessary, in accordance with Chapter VII on a case-by-case basis, to provide protection from genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and ethnic cleansing (S/2005/740, para. 53).

At the 5703rd meeting, on 22 June 2007, the representative of Qatar noted that, although at the theoretical level the responsibility to protect civilians was an important humanitarian principle, from a practical and operation perspective the Council should be cautious in dealing with it so that it would not be exploited or abused. He insisted that peacekeeping, humanitarian relief operations, and other forms of intervention under Chapter VII of the Charter in conflict areas were merely contingency solutions and called for urgent action to end conflicts in a definitive manner.⁵²³ The representative of Mexico stated that the lessons learned from the atrocities committed in the Balkans and Rwanda had proved the need to define clear rules according to which the Council could authorize resolutions under Chapters VI and VII of the Charter to act against such crimes.⁵²⁴ The representative of Canada cited resolution 1674 (2006), by which the Council had a unique responsibility to protect civilians from the most acute threats to their personal security, including through enforcement action under Chapter VII.⁵²⁵

At its 5474th meeting, on 22 June 2006, the Council considered the relationship between the rule of law and international peace and security from the perspective of the role played by the Council in that process. The representative of the Russian Federation remarked that the Council had, in recent years, increased its recourse to Chapter VII of the Charter. He emphasized that recourse to Chapter VII was justified only in situations where the Council had determined that there was a threat to peace or a violation of international law in a given region. He said that discussion of enforcement measures and use of force could take place only once all other avenues of ensuring international peace and security had been exhausted.⁵²⁶ The representative of Canada, speaking also on behalf of Australia and New Zealand, stressed that the Council's endorsement of the responsibility to protect concept must be put into credible and consistent practice. The Council must be timely in its engagement and vigilant in its monitoring and if it had the political will, when non-coercive options proved inadequate, to have full recourse to its powers under Article 42. He added that when such action was authorized, the Council should ensure that the operation was designed to maximize the prospects of success and that the use of military force was proportional to the threat.⁵²⁷ The representative of Switzerland noted that the Council had the responsibility to promote the rule of law and international law. He suggested that one way in which the Council could contribute practically was by adopting a set of principles on the issue of authorizing the use of force, as suggested by the Secretary-General in his report entitled "In larger freedom".⁵²⁸ Similarly, the representative of Norway held the view that the most important contribution the United Nations could make to peace and security was supporting a world order in which the use of force was regulated by international law.⁵²⁹ The representative of Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) noted that the Council had previously had recourse to the provisions of Articles 41 and 42 of the Charter in too hasty a manner, before the mechanisms provided for the pacific settlement of disputes had been fully exhausted. He further recommended curbing that tendency in order to strengthen the legitimacy of the Council.⁵³⁰

At its 4970th meeting, on 17 May 2004, the Council considered the challenges associated with United Nations peacekeeping operations and ways of increasing the effectiveness of such operations. The representative of the Russian Federation highlighted the substantial role played by peacekeeping operations in the maintenance of international peace and security and stressed that there should be no circumvention of the Council's powers, especially in situations in which the use of force was made on behalf of the international community. He further emphasized that military action was undoubtedly an extreme recourse and that the nature of such action should be agreed upon and should be rational and sufficient.⁵³¹ The representatives of Brazil and Argentina believed that the Council should keep the use of Chapter VII to a minimum and only when strictly necessary when defining the mandates of forces that it authorized.⁵³² While speakers concurred that United Nations peacekeepers needed robust rules of engagement, the representatives of Algeria and Bangladesh cautioned that mandates had to also be matched with the principle of non-use of force except in self-defence.⁵³³ The representative of Canada emphasized the increasing role of regional organizations and coalitions of the willing as partners of the United Nations in supporting field operations. He stressed that such arrangements were all the more important as the Council increasingly recognized the need for Chapter VII mandates that permitted the use of force to establish secure environments, re-establish law and order, deter spoilers, and protect civilians.⁵³⁴

Part V

Decisions and deliberations having relevance to Articles 43 to 47 of the Charter

Article 43

1. All Members of the United Nations, in order to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security, undertake to make available to the Security Council, on its call and in accordance with a special agreement or agreements, armed forces, assistance, and facilities, including rights of passage, necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.
2. Such agreement or agreements shall govern the numbers and types of forces, their degree of readiness and general location, and the nature of the facilities and assistance to be provided.
3. The agreement or agreements shall be negotiated as soon as possible on the initiative of the Security Council. They shall be concluded between the Security Council and Members or between the Security Council and groups of Members and shall be subject to ratification by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

Article 44

When the Security Council has decided to use force it shall, before calling upon a Member not represented on it to provide armed forces in fulfilment of the obligations assumed under Article 43, invite that Member, if the Member so desires, to participate in the decisions of the Security Council concerning the employment of contingents of that Member's armed forces.

Article 45

In order to enable the United Nations to take urgent military measures, Members shall hold immediately available national air-force contingents for combined international enforcement action. The strength and degree of readiness of these contingents and plans for their combined action shall be determined, within the limits laid down in the special agreement or agreements referred to in Article 43, by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 46

Plans for the application of armed force shall be made by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 47

1. There shall be established a Military Staff Committee to advise and assist the Security Council on all questions relating to the Security Council's military requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, the employment and command of forces placed at its disposal, the regulation of armaments, and possible disarmament.
2. The Military Staff Committee shall consist of the Chiefs of Staff of the permanent members of the Security Council or their representatives. Any Member of the United Nations not permanently represented on the Committee shall be invited by the Committee to be associated with it when the efficient discharge of the Committee's responsibilities requires the participation of that Member in its work.

3. The Military Staff Committee shall be responsible under the Security Council for the strategic direction of any armed forces placed at the disposal of the Security Council. Questions relating to the command of such forces shall be worked out subsequently.

4. The Military Staff Committee, with the authorization of the Security Council and after consultation with appropriate regional agencies, may establish regional sub-committees.

Note

Articles 43 to 47 of the Charter provide for arrangements intended to govern the relationship between the Security Council and the Member States contributing troops for the purpose of the maintenance of international peace and security. During the period under review, the Council, in a number of decisions and deliberations, touched upon such arrangements in the context of enhancing United Nations peacekeeping as well as its consultations with troop-contributing countries.

The Council did not explicitly refer to Articles 43 and 44 of the Charter in any of its decisions. The Council did however adopt decisions by which it called upon States to provide armed forces and assistance related to enforcement actions by United Nations peacekeeping operations, and which are therefore of relevance to the interpretation of Article 43.⁵³⁵ In connection with the United Nations peacekeeping operations deployed in Côte d'Ivoire, Haiti, Iraq, the Middle East and the Sudan, the Council held a number of meetings which are relevant to the application of Article 43. With regard to Article 44, the Council adopted one presidential statement in relation to the United Nations peacekeeping operations, by which it recognized the importance of increasingly involving the troop-contributing countries in the planning and mandate review phases of missions. The need for increased involvement by troop-contributing countries was also considered by the Council at two debates.

⁵³⁵ See chapter 5 for additional details on arrangements concerning peacekeeping missions and other measures used by subsidiary organs of the Council to give effect to its decisions.

During the period under review, the Council continued to hold private meetings with troop-contributing countries, in accordance with resolution 1353 (2001). The Council held 90 private meetings with countries contributing troops to the United Nations missions in Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia and Eritrea, Georgia, Haiti, Lebanon, Liberia, Sierra Leone, the Sudan, Timor-Leste and Western Sahara, as well as to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, in the Middle East.

During the period, while the Council did not adopt any resolutions referring to Article 45 of the Charter, it held one constitutional discussion in connection with the situation in the Sudan, which is relevant to the application and interpretation of the Article.

The Council did not adopt any decisions under Articles 46 and 47. However, the possibility of reactivating the Military Staff Committee was raised by a Council member at two meetings, in connection with threats to international peace and security and United Nations peacekeeping operations.

This part is divided into five sections. Section A describes the measures that the Council adopted on the basis of the principles enshrined in Article 43, while section B outlines the salient issues raised in the Council's deliberations relevant to that Article. Section C covers the decision relevant to the principles contained in Article 44, while section D presents the constitutional discussions relating to that Article. Sections E and F deal with the Council's deliberations relating to Articles 45 and 46 and 47, respectively.

A. Decisions relating to Article 43

By a statement of the President dated 17 May 2004, while noting the increase in demand for United Nations peacekeeping operations, the Council recognized the challenges the surge posed for the United Nations system in terms of generating the necessary resources, personnel and other capabilities. The Council called on States to ensure that the Organization was provided with "full political and financial support". The Council also stressed the importance of ensuring that, while meeting the demand for new peacekeeping operations, the resources available for, and effective management of, the existing operations were not adversely affected. Underscoring the need for "efficient and effective management of resources”, the Council called upon States to contribute “sufficient levels” of trained troops, police and civilian personnel, to allow the multiple operations to start “optimally” and fulfil their respective mandates in an effective manner.⁵³⁶

By resolution 1778 (2007) of 25 September 2007, authorizing the establishment in Chad and the Central African Republic of a multidimensional presence which would include, for a period of one year, the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad, the Council urged all States, particularly those bordering Chad and the Central African Republic, to facilitate the delivery of all personnel, equipment, provisions, supplies and other goods, including vehicles and spare parts, intended for the Mission.⁵³⁷

By resolution 1702 (2006) of 15 August 2006, the Council decided to extend the mandate of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH) and urged States to provide enough well-qualified, particularly francophone, police candidates, to ensure full staffing of the MINUSTAH police and, in particular, to provide specific expertise in anti-gang operations, corrections and other specializations identified as necessary in the report of the Secretary-General.⁵³⁸

The situation in the Middle East

By resolution 1701 (2006) of 11 August 2006, the Council authorized an increase in the force strength of United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) to a maximum of 15,000 troops, and urged States to consider making appropriate contributions to UNIFIL, to respond positively to requests for assistance from the Force, and expressed its strong appreciation to those who had contributed to the Force in the past.⁵³⁹

Reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan

By resolution 1590 (2005) of 24 March 2005, the Council decided to establish the United Nations

Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS) for an initial period of six months, and called upon States to ensure the free, unhindered, and expeditious movement to the Sudan of all personnel, as well as equipment, provisions, supplies, and other goods, including vehicles and spare parts, which were for the exclusive and official use of UNMIS.⁵⁴⁰ The Council extended the mandate of UNMIS and reiterated its call to States by resolution 1706 (2006) of 31 August 2006.

By resolution 1769 (2007) of 31 July 2007, the Council authorized the establishment of an African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID), and called on States to finalize their contributions to UNAMID within 30 days of the adoption of the resolution. The Council also called upon States to facilitate the free, unhindered and expeditious movement to the Sudan of all personnel, as well as equipment, provisions, supplies and other goods, including vehicles and spare parts, which were for the exclusive use of UNAMID in Darfur. Emphasizing the “urgent need” to mobilize the financial, logistical, and other support required for the African Union Mission in the Sudan (AMIS), the Council called on States and regional organizations to provide “further assistance”, in particular to permit the early deployment of two additional battalions during the transition from AMIS to UNAMID.⁵⁴¹

B. Discussion relating to Article 43

The situation in Côte d’Ivoire

At its 5152nd meeting, on 28 March 2005, the Council heard a briefing by the Principal Deputy Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d’Ivoire, who stressed the need to strengthen the United Nations Operation in Côte d’Ivoire (UNOCI) and noted that if two major conflicts occurred in Côte d’Ivoire at the same time, the mission would not be able to respond effectively, pointing to the additional responsibilities given to UNOCI by resolution 1584 (2005).⁵⁴² In their remarks, a number of representatives acknowledged the mission’s difficulties in carrying out its mandate effectively, and expressed their support for strengthening UNOCI in line with the Secretary-General’s recommendation regarding the deployment of 1,226 troops.⁵⁴³ The representative of South Africa stated that the Forces nouvelles had declared that they feared being attacked once they moved their forces into the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration sites, and supported the proposal made by the mediation team that an African country be approached to supply additional forces to UNOCI with a view to securing the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration sites.⁵⁴⁴ The representative of the Philippines supported this proposal, observing that having an African country supply additional forces to UNOCI could be an important incentive for combatants to begin the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process.⁵⁴⁵ The representative of France remarked that the Ivorian parties had not abandoned the military option and that the international community was determined to enforce the arms embargo established by resolutions 1572 (2004) and 1584 (2005). He opined that, considering the lack of progress in the process of reconciliation, the strengthening of UNOCI troops was “a sine qua non and very urgent”.⁵⁴⁶ In contrast, the representative of the United States questioned the utility of expanding the strength of UNOCI beyond its current mandate, given the lack of political will shown by the parties to move the peace process forward. He further emphasized the need for progress in Côte d’Ivoire and stressed that UNOCI should use all the tools at its disposal.⁵⁴⁷ The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the Council’s strategy in Côte d’Ivoire, the number of troops and civilian police comprising UNOCI, and the mandate, rules of engagement and tasks given to the mission had to be fully consistent with one another, and supported the proposal made by the representative of France for a one-month rollover of the mandate of UNOCI, time during which the Council could reassess the situation in Côte d’Ivoire.⁵⁴⁸

At its 5169th meeting, on 26 April 2005, the Council considered the report of the Secretary-General on UNOCI.⁵⁴⁹ During the debate, the representative of South Africa opined that an improvement in the security situation in Côte d’Ivoire could be achieved only if the United Nations and the international community were ready to act “decisively and urgently” by, among other things, increasing the capacity of UNOCI to carry out the additional tasks emanating from the Pretoria Agreement.⁵⁵⁰ Similarly, the representative of Nigeria argued that the United Nations presence in Côte d’Ivoire had to be strengthened and become visible throughout the country. He stressed that it was necessary for the Council to consider an urgent review of the mission’s mandate and to expand it, which would entail the commitment of additional resources and logistics commensurate with the situation on the ground.⁵⁵¹ The representative of France announced that in the coming days his delegation would introduce a draft resolution on the renewal of the mission’s mandate and emphasized the need to give UNOCI “all the means necessary” to carry out its mission successfully. He expressed the belief that strengthening UNOCI would facilitate the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and the holding of sound elections.⁵⁵² The representative of the United Kingdom said that the Department of Peacekeeping Operations should make a “considered recommendation” regarding the timetable for the necessary additional deployment of personnel.⁵⁵³ The representatives of Benin and Romania noted that, in the context of the forthcoming elections and the launching of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, the mission’s role would increase and, therefore, expressed support for revisiting its mandate and strengthening its staff with adequate resources.⁵⁵⁴ Similarly, the representative of Denmark declared that her country supported a greater involvement of the United Nations in the peace process and an “appropriate” strengthening of UNOCI, as well as an extension of its mandate.⁵⁵⁵ The representative of Japan noted that, given the precariousness and volatility of the security situation in Côte d’Ivoire, serious deliberations with regard to a certain level of reinforcement of the peacekeeping operation were needed. He declared that his Government was ready to consider such reinforcement, in spite of the fact that the additional funds for reinforcement could be put to better use for the reconstruction and development of the country if the situation were not so precarious.⁵⁵⁶ The representative of China cautioned that the progress in the Ivorian peace process would require continued assistance from the international community and expressed his Government's readiness to study, together with other members, the issue of the extension and reinforcement of UNOCI.⁵⁵⁷

The question of Haiti

At its 5110th meeting, on 12 January 2005, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of MINUSTAH, who stated that if the international community provided Haiti with continued support, the country would emerge from its political and economic crisis.⁵⁵⁸ During the debate, a number of speakers commended troop-contributing countries for their contributions to MINUSTAH.⁵⁵⁹ The representative of Chile pointed out however, that resources and capacities had been made available by States but were underutilized because of a lack of financial resources. He therefore underlined the need to establish "expedited processes" to enable international organizations and donors to contribute to MINUSTAH.⁵⁶⁰ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania urged and encouraged the "full deployment" of troops, police and other personnel by contributing countries to strengthen the Mission's ability to face the challenges of re-establishing stability and to carry out its mandate, as well as to build the capacity of the local institutions.⁵⁶¹ The representative of Ecuador endorsed a multidimensional approach to peacekeeping operations, and expressed his Government's readiness to contribute to such operations. He further pointed to the contributions in military personnel made by countries with "scarce economic resources", such as Ecuador.⁵⁶² The representative of Paraguay indicated that for "logistical reasons" beyond its control, his country had to postpone to a later stage the deployment of troops to the field.⁵⁶³

The situation in the Middle East

At its 5493rd meeting, on 21 July 2006, while considering the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question", a number of speakers referred to the deteriorating situation in Lebanon. The representative of Peru expressed support for the substantive reinforcement of UNIFIL and its transformation into a force that would help the Lebanese authorities guarantee the full implementation of resolution 1559 (2004).⁵⁶⁴ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania recommended the strengthening of UNIFIL to make it more responsive and effective. He noted that, in its current form, the Force was unable to discharge its mandate with regard to the Blue Line and called for a more robust force with a new concept of operation and powers.⁵⁶⁵ Similarly, the representative of Ghana stressed that the proposed deployment of an expanded international peacekeeping force along the Blue Line was of "utmost importance" and noted that the mission's effectiveness depended mainly on its military capabilities.⁵⁶⁶ The representative of Indonesia expressed support for the establishment of an international peacekeeping force under the auspices of the United Nations and indicated his Government's readiness to participate by contributing a military contingent to the force.⁵⁶⁷ The representative of Mexico also expressed support for the creation of such an international force which would gradually replace UNIFIL.⁵⁶⁸

At its 5511th meeting, on 11 August 2006, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1701 (2006), by which it decided to supplement and enhance UNIFIL in numbers, equipment, mandate and scope of operations, and authorized an increase in the force strength of UNIFIL to a maximum of 15,000 troops. Preceding the vote, the Secretary-General stated that if UNIFIL were expected to carry out its mandate, it needed to be augmented with the "utmost urgency" and provided with "sophisticated military capabilities". He urged Council members to consult closely with both existing and potential troop contributors, with a view to generating the additional forces needed "as quickly as possible".⁵⁶⁹ The representative of the United States noted that it was at the request of the Government of Lebanon that UNIFIL was given an expanded mandate, a greater scope of operations, better equipment and a sevenfold increase in its troops.⁵⁷⁰ The representative of France declared that it was “crucial” that many countries respond “favourably and expeditiously” to the request made by the Lebanese authorities by contributing to a reinforced UNIFIL. He further announced that his Government, already present in UNIFIL, would consider, alongside its European partners, a possible supplementary support to the Force.⁵⁷¹ The representative of Qatar welcomed the fact that the draft resolution was “limited to augmenting” UNIFIL, and that its mandate would continue to be subject to the provisions of Chapter VI. He further called upon the contributing States or those States that intended to contribute to UNIFIL to dispatch their forces “promptly”.⁵⁷² Following the adoption of the draft resolution, the representative of Denmark welcomed the decision of the Government of Lebanon to deploy 15,000 troops in southern Lebanon and expressed support for the enhancement of UNIFIL in numbers, equipment, mandate and scope of operations.⁵⁷³ A number of representatives also welcomed the strengthening of UNIFIL and stressed the need for troop-contributing countries to act with urgency.⁵⁷⁴

At the 5515th meeting, on 22 August 2006, several speakers referred to the strengthening of UNIFIL in their statements and made appeals to States in a position to do so to make contributions in this regard. The representative of Argentina stressed the role of UNIFIL in the peace process and conveyed his gratitude to the Department of Peacekeeping Operations for its efforts to accelerate the deployment of additional troops. He further expressed hope that, after the circulation of the draft rules of engagement and concept of operations of UNIFIL, it would be possible to ensure that substantive contributions to the Force were made.⁵⁷⁵ The representative of the United States urged potential troop-contributing countries to expedite their internal decision-making processes in order to achieve the goal of an expanded 15,000-member international force. He emphasized that delays in deployment did not serve the peace process.⁵⁷⁶ Similarly, the representative of China noted that the expansion of UNIFIL had to be “stepped up” and that countries in a position to do so should “swiftly” contribute troops to ensure the mission’s early deployment.⁵⁷⁷ Noting that the progress in planning for the enhanced UNIFIL deployment was encouraging, the representative of the United Kingdom underlined that the priority was to give UNIFIL the resources to do its “new job” and to turn the many offers to contribute into forces on the ground. He declared that his country had already made a firm offer of air and naval assets and stood ready to deploy them quickly if the Department of Peacekeeping Operations took up on its offer.⁵⁷⁸ The representative of Denmark announced that his country was ready to support the naval component of an enhanced UNIFIL and expressed hope that, since the concept of operations and the rules of engagement had been clarified, additional States would provide similar “specific pledges”.⁵⁷⁹ The representative of Israel opined that, once UNIFIL was given a “clear and unequivocal mandate”, contributing countries would be able to commit “wholeheartedly and without hesitation”.⁵⁸⁰ The representative of Finland, speaking on behalf of the European Union and associated countries, indicated the willingness of the European Union countries to participate in the peace process, and pointed out that some countries had already made their decision to send troops, while others were considering it.⁵⁸¹

At its 5519th meeting, on 31 August 2006, the Council adopted resolution 1706 (2006), by which it expanded the mandate of UNMIS and urged States to provide the capability for an expeditious deployment. During the debate, the representative of the United Kingdom noted that the newly adopted resolution authorized the “much-needed” United Nations support for AMIS and mandated the United Nations to deploy additional resources, as soon as possible thereafter, in preparation for a full United Nations operation no later than 31 December.⁵⁸² The representative of Qatar opined that more efforts should have been made on the “political front” to prepare the ground for securing the “voluntary consent” of the Government of the Sudan to expanding the mandate of the United Nations forces, increasing their strength, and deploying them to Darfur.⁵⁸³ The representatives of Greece and Slovakia concurred that the strengthening of AMIS and the expansion of the mandate of UNMIS were important elements to a lasting and sustainable solution to the crisis in Darfur.⁵⁸⁴ The representative of Japan noted that, given the worsening security situation on the ground, his Government believed that it was “long overdue” for the international community to take “resolute action” on the matter by providing adequate support for AMIS through the United Nations and a transition to a United Nations operation.⁵⁸⁵

At its 5727th meeting, on 31 July 2007, the Council adopted unanimously resolution 1769 (2007), by which it authorized the deployment of UNAMID. During the subsequent debate, the Secretary-General underlined that States, especially troop- and police-contributing countries, had to provide “every support” to UNAMID, including by committing additional “capable troops”.⁵⁸⁶ The representative of France noted that, given its exceptional size and its unprecedented hybrid nature, UNAMID would require “special commitment and ongoing mobilization” on the part of the international community, relying on the United Nations and the African Union. He further declared that France would “stand with them”.⁵⁸⁷ The observer for the African Union stressed the role of UNAMID in the restoration of durable peace and security in Darfur and reiterated the appeal of the African Union Peace and Security Council to States for generous contributions to UNAMID.⁵⁸⁸

At its 5784th meeting, on 27 November 2007, the Council was briefed on the progress made in the deployment of UNAMID by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, who stated that, only five weeks before the transfer of authority from AMIS to UNAMID, the latter faced “serious gaps” in force requirements, being short of “critical mobility capabilities”. He declared that, as a result of pre-deployment visits, pledges for one reconnaissance company were withdrawn and that, consequently, the gap in capability had grown. He further warned that, if no appropriate offers for those missing units were identified, the Council might have to mitigate the lack of air mobility by increasing the number of troops or by borrowing those capabilities from other missions. He concluded that it was critical that, once troop-contributing countries were identified, they initiated preparations for deployment as rapidly as possible, and said that every delay or suspension in the predeployment activity would have a “direct and negative” impact on the readiness of troops to deploy to UNAMID early in 2008.⁵⁸⁹ The representative of the United States, recognizing that mobility was critical for a force like UNAMID, expressed his concern about the delays in the deployment of the Mission to Darfur and announced the intention of his delegation to work bilaterally to urge contributions of the assets needed by UNAMID.⁵⁹⁰ Expressing the same concern, the representative of the United Kingdom emphasized that, because of the delays in the deployment of UNAMID, there was a growing risk that the hybrid force would not be an effective military force capable of implementing its mandate.⁵⁹¹ The representative of the Congo conveyed his concern regarding the difficulties in securing the Mission’s budget and declared that his Government was prepared to make its “modest contribution” by supplying two infantry companies to the African Union and the United Nations for use by UNAMID.⁵⁹² A few representatives, including those of the United States and the Russian Federation, urged the Government of the Sudan to approve the list of troop-contributing countries and to remove the obstacles to the Mission’s deployment.⁵⁹³ The representative of Indonesia opined that, in spite of delays on the political front, the peacekeeping track should move forward within its already determined time frame and argued that the international community should not retreat from the commitment made in resolution 1769 (2007) to support UNAMID.⁵⁹⁴ The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations stated that the delay in the deployment of troops was the result of several factors, including the lack of capacity of the contributing countries, the hesitation of the troop-contributing countries about when to deploy, and the terms of cooperation with the host country.⁵⁹⁵

C. Decisions relating to Article 44

By a statement of the President dated 17 May 2004, the Council highlighted the need to strengthen the relationship between those who plan, mandate and manage peacekeeping operations, and those who implement the mandates for those operations. The Council further declared that troop-contributing countries, through their experience and expertise, could “greatly contribute” to the planning process and assist the Council in taking appropriate, effective and timely decisions on peacekeeping operations. The Council recognized that the meetings and mechanisms established by resolution 1353 (2001) served to facilitate the consultation process. The Council recognized that in peacekeeping operations there were contributors, other than troop-contributing countries, whose views should also be taken into account, as appropriate.⁵⁹⁶

D. Discussion relating to Article 44

At its 4970th meeting, on 17 May 2004, the Council held an open discussion on United Nations peacekeeping operations. A number of representatives called for enhanced coordination among the Council, the Secretariat, and the troop-contributing countries, in accordance with resolution 1353 (2001), which offered a framework for decision-making in peacekeeping operations. Some speakers emphasized that not only the countries contributing troops but also those contributing financially to peacekeeping operations should be consulted by the Council. The representative of France stressed that the existing processes for cooperation with troop-contributing countries should be revitalized and other contributors, including the financial contributors, should be more closely involved through a better exploitation of the provisions of resolution 1353 (2001).⁵⁹⁷ The representative of Japan stressed that reform was necessary in order to involve in the Council’s decision-making process those countries contributing human, material, financial and other resources that enabled the Council to work to consolidate peace.⁵⁹⁸ Similarly, the representative of Germany proposed that Member States contributing to peacekeeping through means other than troop contributions should likewise participate in the entire decision-making process, including the planning and the debate preceding a mission.⁵⁹⁹ With reference to the “quality” and “timing” of the consultation process with the troop-contributing countries, the representatives of Algeria, Malaysia and Lebanon noted that troop-contributing countries should be involved in all the phases of the decision-making process, including those defining or changing the mandate of an operation to which their military units had been committed.⁶⁰⁰ The representative of Malaysia, in particular, regretted that the views expressed by troop-contributing countries during their consultations with the Council had not been taken into consideration when the Council had made important decisions pertaining to the expansion of a mandate or the appropriate size of a peacekeeping force.⁶⁰¹ The representative of Tunisia favoured “in-depth” and “interactive” consultations between the Secretariat, the Council and the troop-contributing countries to enable States to be better informed of the situation on the ground in a “thorough and regular manner”. He further stressed that it was “absolutely necessary” to take into account the views of troop-contributing countries, which should not be “merely consultative”.⁶⁰² The representative of New Zealand pointed out that it was time for an “honest assessment” of the existing consultative mechanisms between the Council and non-Council members.⁶⁰³ Finally, several speakers suggested using the Working Group on Peacekeeping

At its 5156th meeting, on 30 March 2005, the Council held a wrap-up meeting focusing on the African dimension in its work. The representative of the Russian Federation, referring to the settlement of conflicts in Africa and in other regions of the world, stressed the importance of consulting troop-contributing countries in order to improve the Council's decision-making process. He noted that the Council relied primarily on the military expertise of the Secretariat and expressed interest in obtaining the views and appraisals of troop-contributing countries, whose contingents were directly involved in the area of operations. He further questioned the justification for the Council's practice of conducting private meetings at which the delegations of troop-contributing countries were usually "very passive", and proposed discussing the subject further in the future.⁶⁰⁵ The representative of Tunisia noted that, while the "close cooperation" between States and the Secretariat helped to strengthen the peacekeeping operations, "more advanced and interactive" consultations were necessary between the Secretariat, the Council and the troop-contributing countries, so that the latter were better informed about the situation on the ground in a "complete and regular fashion". He concluded that in the future it would be necessary to give greater consideration to the concerns of troop-contributing countries, whose opinions should be "more than advisory".⁶⁰⁶

E. Discussion relating to Article 45

Reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan

At the 5784th meeting, on 27 November 2007, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations stated, in his briefing, that UNAMID was short of "critical mobility capabilities". He noted that if the missing units were not identified by early in 2008, the Council might have to "consider options" to mitigate the lack of air mobility.⁶⁰⁷ The representative of the United States called for countries that had air support capability to contribute to the Mission. He stated that the Council had to support the efforts of the Secretariat to identify potential contributors and to impress upon them the importance of meeting the Mission's demands.⁶⁰⁸ Expressing concern regarding the difficulties in securing the Mission's necessities, the representative of the Congo made an appeal for States to provide the "medium-sized transport companies and helicopters" needed and without which the Mission's intervention capacity would be "gravely" compromised.⁶⁰⁹ The representative of Slovakia observed that the Council had authorized the deployment of a "robust and effective" force that should be able to make a "real difference" on the ground. However, he argued that, for the Mission to achieve that goal, it was "indispensable" to find the missing transportation and aviation units.⁶¹⁰

At the 5615th meeting, on 8 January 2007, the representative of the Russian Federation noted that not all of the "unique peacekeeping opportunities and mechanisms" of the United Nations were being fully used. He opined that the situation could be improved through the "more active utilization" of the potential of the Military Staff Committee, on the basis of the relevant provisions of the Charter and with respect for the prerogatives of the Security Council.⁶¹¹

At its 4970th meeting, on 17 May 2004, the Council heard a briefing by the Secretary-General on the financial and personnel challenges faced by the United Nations peacekeeping operations. During the debate, the representative of the Russian Federation opined that one of the most effective ways to improve military expertise within the Organization could be to "activate" work of the Military Staff Committee. He said that the reactivation would not occur within the “traditional understanding” of the role of that body, but in an “essentially expanded” format. He stressed that his proposal was not designed to increase the role of the permanent members of the Council, but rather, in accordance with Article 47 of the Charter, to “finally” fill out the activities of the Military Staff Committee with “practical content”, as a body not for five members, but for the entire Council. All members of the Council, including troop-contributing countries, would be included in it.⁶¹²

Part VI

Obligations of Member States under Article 48 of the Charter

Article 48

1. The action required to carry out the decisions of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security shall be taken by all the Members of the United Nations or by some of them, as the Security Council may determine.
2. Such decisions shall be carried out by the Members of the United Nations directly and through their action in the appropriate international agencies of which they are members.

Note

During the period under review, the Council did not explicitly invoke Article 48 in any of its decisions. In a number of instances, however, the Council adopted decisions in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter, underlining the mandatory nature of the measures imposed, and containing provisions that might be regarded as implicit references to the principle enshrined in Article 48.

In the absence of express references, it is not always possible to relate with certainty any decisions of the Council to a particular Article. The Council decisions discussed below may, nevertheless, shed light on the Council’s interpretation and application of Article 48. Section A deals with the calls made by the Council for action in connection with a decision adopted under Article 40 of the Charter. Section B provides an overview of the action required to carry out the Council’s decisions adopted in accordance with the provisions of Article 41 of the Charter, while section C focuses on the action required to carry out the Council’s decisions in connection with measures that involved use of armed force in accordance with the provisions of Article 42 of the Charter.

During the period under consideration, the interpretation and application of Article 48 did not give rise to any significant constitutional discussions in the Council.

A. Obligations arising pursuant to decisions adopted under Article 40

In two decisions imposing non-military provisional measures designed to prevent the aggravation of the situation, the Council called on “all States” to assist in carrying out its decision. By resolution 1696 (2006) of 31 July 2006, the Council, acting under Article 40 of the Charter, called upon the Islamic Republic of Iran to take the steps required by the International Atomic Energy Association and called upon “all States”, in accordance with their national legal authorities and legislation and consistent with international law, to exercise vigilance and prevent the transfer of any items, materials, goods, and technology that could contribute to the enrichment-related and reprocessing activities and ballistic missile programmes of the Islamic Republic of Iran.⁶¹³ By resolution 1695 (2006) of 15 July 2006, while demanding that the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea suspend all activities related to its ballistic missile programme, and in this context re-establish its pre-existing commitments to a moratorium on missile launching, the Council required “all Member States”, in accordance with their national legal authorities and legislation and consistent with international law, to exercise vigilance and prevent missile and missile-related items, materials, goods and technology being transferred to the missile or weapons of mass destruction programmes of the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea; and the procurement of missiles or missile-related items, materials, goods and technology from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and the transfer of any financial resources in relation to those missile or weapons of mass destruction programmes.⁶¹⁴

B. Obligations arising pursuant to decisions adopted under Article 41

In imposing measures not involving the use of armed force under Article 41 of the Charter, the Council consistently called upon "all States" to comply with relevant prohibitions.⁶¹⁵ In other instances, the Council addressed its call for compliance to "States" in general⁶¹⁶ or "all Member States".⁶¹⁷

In a few other instances, the Council called more specifically upon a certain number or group of States. For example, in connection with the measures imposed against Côte d'Ivoire, the Council expressly included "all States, particularly those bordering Côte d'Ivoire",⁶¹⁸ while in connection with the measures imposed against Somalia, the Council urged "all Member States, in particular those of the region" to fully comply with the arms embargo.⁶¹⁹ In one instance, in connection with the measures imposed against the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Council decided that "each Government in the region, in particular those of States bordering Ituri and the Kivus, as well as that of the Democratic Republic of Congo" should maintain a registry of flights originating in their respective territories to destinations in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁶²⁰ Also, in connection with those measures, the Council demanded that "the Governments of Uganda, Rwanda, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Burundi" take measures to prevent the use of their respective territories in support of violations of the arms embargo or in support of activities of armed groups present in the region; and demanded that "all States neighbouring the Democratic Republic of the Congo as well as the Government of National Unity and Transition" impede any kind of support to the illegal exploitation of Congolese natural resources, particularly by preventing the flow of such resources through their respective territories".⁶²¹ In connection with the measures imposed against Liberia, the Council decided that "all States" in which there were "funds, other financial assets and economic resources owned or controlled directly or indirectly" by Charles Taylor and other individuals should freeze all such funds without delay.⁶²² Also in connection with sanctions against Liberia, the Council urged that "all West African States" take action to prevent armed individuals and groups from using their territory to prepare and commit attacks on neighbouring countries.⁶²³

In a number of instances, the Council called upon international agencies and organizations and/or the international community to undertake certain actions. In connection with non-proliferation and the Islamic

Republic of Iran, the Council urged “all States and international financial institutions” not to enter into new commitments for grants, financial assistance and concessional loans to the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, except for humanitarian and development purposes.⁶²⁴

When imposing sanctions against Côte d’Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Islamic Republic of Iran, and the Taliban and members of Al-Qaida, the Council required “all States concerned, in particular those in the region”⁶²⁵ or, more generally, “all States”⁶²⁶ to report on their compliance with relevant prohibitions, specifying that implementation reports received from States were to be examined by committees specifically mandated to monitor the implementation of sanctions and to consider any information concerning violations. In connection with the situation in Côte d’Ivoire, the Council requested the Government of France to communicate, as appropriate, to the Security Council, through the committee established for that purpose, the information gathered by the French forces regarding the supply of arms and related material to Côte d’Ivoire.⁶²⁷

In a number of decisions establishing reporting obligations to ensure compliance with relevant prohibitions, the Council addressed its call to “all States” to cooperate with the relevant Panel of Experts or sanctions committees.⁶²⁸ In other instances, the Council addressed such calls to “all States, relevant United Nations bodies and, as appropriate, other organizations and interested parties”.⁶²⁹

In connection with the implementation of judicial measures adopted under Article 41, the Council called on “all States” to cooperate. In particular, regarding the decision to defer the situation in Darfur since 1 July 2002 to the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court, the Council, while recognizing that States not parties to the Statute of the Court had no obligation under the Statute, urged “all States and concerned regional and international organizations” to cooperate fully.⁶³⁰ With regard to the authorization of a Trial Chamber in the Netherlands for the trial of former President Taylor, the Council requested “all States” to cooperate and, in particular, to ensure the appearance of the former President in the Netherlands for purposes of his trial by the Special Court. The Council further encouraged “all States” to ensure that any evidence or witnesses were, upon the request of the Special Court, promptly made available.⁶³¹

C. Obligations arising pursuant to decisions adopted under Article 42

Decisions of the Council, imposing measures involving the use of armed force in accordance with the provisions of Article 42 of the Charter frequently took the form of requests made to “Member States”, “Member States and regional organizations”, “States, in particular those in the region”, States “in the vicinity” of, or “bordering” a State where forces authorized to take enforcement action had been deployed.

In a number of instances, the Council addressed its requests, mainly entailing the provision of support to the missions deployed, to “Member States” in general.⁶³²

In other instances, the Council addressed its calls to Member States, as well as to “international and/or regional organizations”. For example, by resolution 1546 (2004) of 8 June 2004, while reaffirming the authorization for the multinational force in Iraq, the Council requested that “Member States and international and regional organizations” contribute assistance, including military forces, to the multinational force.⁶³³ Similarly, by resolution 1769 (2007) of 31 July 2007, by which it established the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID), the Council called on “Member States and regional organizations” to provide further assistance to the operation, in particular to permit the early deployment of two additional battalions.⁶³⁴ In connection with the situation in Somalia, by resolution 1744 (2007) of 21 February 2007 the Council, authorizing the member States of the African Union to establish a mission in Somalia, urged “member States of the African Union” to contribute to the mission in order to create the conditions for the withdrawal of all other foreign forces from Somalia.⁶³⁵

⁶³² See, for example, resolutions 1563 (2004), para. 3, 1529 (2004), para. 5, 1590 (2005), para. 8, 1706 (2006), para. 10, and 1772 (2007), para. 14.

Requests were also addressed to “States, in particular those in the region” and to States “in the vicinity” of, or “bordering” a State where a peacekeeping operation was deployed. For example, by resolution 1551 (2004) of 9 July 2004, while renewing the mandate of the multinational stabilization force in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Council invited “all States, particular those in the region”, to continue to provide appropriate support and facilities, including transit facilities to the Member States.⁶³⁶ By resolution 1671 (2006) of 25 April 2006, while authorizing the deployment of a temporary European Union force to support the United Nations Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Council requested “all Member States, in particular those in the vicinity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo” to provide all the necessary support to facilitate the deployment of the European Union force.⁶³⁷ By resolution 1778 (2007) of 25 September 2007, while establishing a multidimensional presence in Chad and the Central African Republic and authorizing the deployment of a European Union operation in the area, the Council urged “all Member States, particularly the States bordering Chad and the Central African Republic”, to facilitate the delivery of all personnel, equipment, and other goods intended for the operation.⁶³⁸

Part VII

Obligations of Member States under Article 49 of the Charter

Article 49

The Members of the United Nations shall join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council.

Note

During the period under review, the obligation of States to join in affording mutual assistance assumed specific relevance in connection with decisions under Chapter VII of the Charter by which the Security Council authorized or called on Member States to take measures to enforce its resolutions. While not containing explicit references to Article 49, the Council decisions covered in this part may have relevance to the Council’s interpretation and application of the Article. Section A provides an overview of the Council’s decisions calling upon Member States to provide mutual assistance in carrying out the decisions adopted in accordance with the provisions of Article 41 of the Charter. Section B deals with the Council’s decisions calling upon Member States to provide mutual assistance in carrying out the decisions adopted in accordance with the provisions of Article 42 of the Charter. During the period under consideration, the interpretation and application of Article 49 gave rise to some relevant discussion in the Council in connection with the assistance to be provided to the African Union Mission in the Sudan. That discussion is presented in section C.

A. Calls for mutual assistance in the implementation of decisions adopted under Article 41

In imposing measures not involving the use of force, in accordance with the provisions of Article 41 of the Charter, the Council, in a number of instances, requested Member States in a position to do so to offer assistance to the concerned States in the implementation of those measures. More generally, the Council, by a statement of the President dated 19 January 2004, urged Member States “in a position to do so” to provide assistance to interested States in strengthening their capacity to fulfil their obligations under the resolutions imposing sanctions measures.⁶³⁹ The same call was reiterated by the Council in a statement of the President dated 17 February 2005.⁶⁴⁰

By resolution 1533 (2004) of 12 March 2004, while renewing its demand on all States to take the necessary measures to prevent the supply of arms to armed groups in North and South Kivu and in Ituri, the Council called upon the international community, in particular the specialized international organizations concerned, to provide financial and technical assistance to the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo with a view to helping it to exercise effective control over its borders and airspace.⁶⁴¹

The situation in Liberia

By resolution 1549 (2004) of 17 June 2004, taking note of the appeal made by the Chairman of the National Transitional Government of Liberia for the lifting of the timber and diamonds sanctions, the Council reiterated its call upon States, relevant organizations, and others in a position to do so to offer assistance to the Government in restructuring the security sector and ensuring that the ceasefire was respected; establishing an effective certificate-of-origin regime for trade in Liberian rough diamonds; and establishing control over timber-producing areas and ensuring that revenue was not used to fuel conflict.⁶⁴²

By resolution 1747 (2007) of 24 March 2007, recalling the requirement on States to join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon, and acting under Article 41 of the Charter, the Council reiterated the travel ban established by resolution 1737 (2006), applicable to the persons set out in the annex to the resolution and to the persons designated by the Security Council Committee or by the Council.⁶⁴³

B. Calls for mutual assistance in the implementation of decisions adopted under Article 42

When authorizing the use of force and calling upon States willing and in a position to do so to take relevant enforcement action through multinational forces, the Council regularly requested “all Member States” or “Member States” to provide appropriate support and assistance to those States, as illuminated below.

The situation in Afghanistan

By resolution 1563 (2004) of 17 September 2004, the Council extended the authorization of the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) and, recognizing the need for strengthening ISAF, called upon Member States to contribute personnel, equipment and other resources.⁶⁴⁴ The Council reiterated its call for contributions in several subsequent resolutions.⁶⁴⁵

The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina

By resolution 1551 (2004) of 9 July 2004, the Council paid tribute to those Member States which had participated in the multinational stabilization force (SFOR) established in accordance with resolution 1088 (1996) and welcomed their willingness to assist the parties to the Peace Agreement by continuing to deploy a multinational stabilization force. The Council invited all States, in particular those in the region, to continue to provide appropriate support, and facilities, including transit facilities, for the Member States participating in SFOR or in the proposed European Union mission.⁶⁴⁶

By resolution 1575 (2004) of 22 November 2004, while authorizing States acting through or in cooperation with the European Union to establish a multinational stabilization force (EUFOR), the Council invited all States, in particular those in the region, to continue to provide appropriate support and facilities, including transit facilities, for the Member States participating in EUFOR.⁶⁴⁷ The Council reiterated its invitation for support to the multinational stabilization force by several subsequent resolutions.⁶⁴⁸

By resolution 1778 (2007) of 25 September 2007, while authorizing in Chad and the Central African Republic the establishment of a multidimensional presence which would include the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad, the Council urged all Member States, particularly those bordering the two countries, to facilitate the delivery of all personnel, equipment, provisions, supplies and other goods, including vehicles and spare parts, intended for the Mission and the European Union operation authorized by the same resolution.⁶⁴⁹

The situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo

By resolution 1671 (2006) of 25 April 2006, while authorizing the deployment of a European Union force to support the United Nations Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Council requested all Member States, in particular those in the vicinity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, to provide “all necessary support” to facilitate the deployment of the European Union force, and in particular to ensure the free, unhindered and expeditious movement to the Democratic Republic of the Congo of its personnel, as well as equipment, provisions, supplies and other goods, including vehicles and spare parts.⁶⁵⁰

By resolution 1529 (2004) of 29 February 2004, while authorizing the deployment of a Multinational Interim Force in Haiti, the Council called upon Member States to contribute personnel, equipment and other financial and logistical resources on an “urgent basis” to the Force and stressed the importance of such voluntary contributions to help defray the expenses of the Force that participating States would bear.⁶⁵¹

The situation in Iraq

By resolution 1546 (2004) of 8 June 2004, deciding that the multinational force in Iraq would have the authority to take “all necessary measures” to contribute to the maintenance of security and stability in Iraq, the Council requested Member States and international and regional organizations to contribute assistance to the multinational force, including by providing military forces, as agreed with the Government of Iraq.⁶⁵²

The situation in Somalia

By resolution 1725 (2006) of 6 December 2006, the Council authorized the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and member States of the African Union to establish a peacekeeping mission in Somalia and encouraged Member States to provide financial resources for that mission.⁶⁵³

By resolution 1744 (2007) of 20 February 2007, while authorizing member States of the African Union to establish a mission in Somalia (AMISOM), the Council urged Member States to provide personnel, equipment and services, if required, for the successful deployment of AMISOM and encouraged States to provide financial resources for the Mission.⁶⁵⁴

By resolution 1772 (2007) of 20 August 2007, while authorizing the extension of the Mission’s mandate, the Council urged member States of the African Union to contribute to AMISOM in order to

By resolution 1556 (2004) of 30 July 2004, while endorsing the deployment of international monitors to Darfur, including the protection force envisioned by the African Union, the Council urged the international community to continue to support those efforts. The Council further urged Member States to reinforce the international monitoring team led by the African Union by providing personnel and other assistance, including financing, supplies, transport, vehicles, command support, communication and headquarters support, as needed, for the monitoring operation.⁶⁵⁶

By resolution 1564 (2004) of 18 September 2004, welcoming the intention of the African Union to enhance its monitoring mission in the Darfur region, the Council urged Member States to support the African Union in its efforts by providing all equipment, logistical, financial, material and other necessary resources to support the rapid expansion of the African Union Mission in the Sudan (AMIS).⁶⁵⁷

By a statement of the President dated 11 April 2006, the Council commended the African Union for what AMIS had achieved in Darfur and urged Member States and international and regional organizations to provide additional assistance to AMIS, so that it could be strengthened.⁶⁵⁸ The Council reiterated its call in a presidential statement dated 9 May 2006.⁶⁵⁹

By resolution 1769 (2007) of 31 July 2007, by which it authorized the establishment of an African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID), the Council called upon Member States to finalize their contributions to UNAMID within 30 days of the adoption of the resolution. Stressing the “urgent need” to mobilize the financial, logistical and other support required for AMIS, the Council called on Member States and regional organizations to provide “further assistance”, in particular to permit the early deployment of two additional battalions during the transition from AMIS to UNAMID.⁶⁶⁰

C. Discussion relating to Article 49

Reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan

At the 5080th meeting, on 18 November 2004, the Secretary-General noted that the African Union Mission in the Sudan had begun to deploy and had already achieved some successes, but still needed “means of transport, as well as financial and logistical support”. He stressed that all States with the capacity to do so should give the Mission the “maximum possible support”, so that the African Union force could “deploy swiftly” and mount an “effective operation” on the ground.⁶⁶¹ The representative of Nigeria reiterated his Government’s support for the commitment of the African Union to increase its mission in Darfur and welcomed the Mission’s expanded mandate.⁶⁶²

At the 5082nd meeting, on 19 November 2004, the representative of Brazil stressed the need for “increased international support” for the African Union in Darfur. He expressed hope that the Secretary-General would continue to keep the Council “closely informed” about the assistance to be provided.⁶⁶³ The representative of Angola indicated that the scenario of a “poorly endowed expanded African force” in Darfur and a well-equipped United Nations operation in southern Sudan should be avoided. He highlighted the need for “appropriate support” to enable the African Union to play its “leading role adequately”.⁶⁶⁴ The Director of African Administration and African-Arab Cooperation of the League of Arab States declared that the African Union Mission required “full and strong financial, technical and logistical support” to deal with the crisis in Darfur and announced that the League of Arab States would spare “no effort” to provide all forms of support to the African Union.⁶⁶⁵ The representative of the Netherlands stated that it was “essential” that AMIS received “all the support needed” to ensure its rapid and full deployment and “effective operationalization”.⁶⁶⁶ The representative of Australia, speaking also on behalf of New Zealand, opined that the international community had to make “every effort” to ensure the success of AMIS and indicated that the Governments of Australia and New Zealand were offering their “full support” to the Mission.⁶⁶⁷

At the 5434th meeting, on 9 May 2006, the Secretary-General stated that a “follow-on United Nations force” would have to be much larger than the current AMIS and would need major logistical support from States that were in a position to provide it.⁶⁶⁸ The representative of the United Kingdom opined that the first step in addressing the challenges in the Sudan was to “urgently” strengthen AMIS to ensure that the ceasefire prevailed. He added that his Government would “do its part” and indicated that it had just contributed additional funds.⁶⁶⁹ The representative of Greece recalled that the European Union and its member States had provided planning and technical, financial and equipment support to both the military and the police components of AMIS, and had reiterated their readiness to continue to provide such support. He further stated that his Government had also contributed to that effort, “within its capabilities”, and would continue to do so.⁶⁷⁰ Similarly, other representatives agreed on the necessity of strengthening AMIS and enhancing its operational capabilities,⁶⁷¹ and a number of representatives announced financial contributions to the Mission.⁶⁷²

At the 5520th meeting, on 11 September 2006, the Secretary-General, in his briefing, declared that the Secretariat would be meeting senior officials from the Commission of the African Union to finalize a support package for AMIS. He added that the Department of Peacekeeping Operations would also convene a meeting of potential troop and police contributors to discuss the expansion of the United Nations Mission in the Sudan to Darfur. He further noted that, during the transition from AMIS to a United Nations peacekeeping operation, there could be “no walking away from AMIS” and that AMIS would have to play a “vital role” until the United Nations operation was in place. However, he noted that AMIS lacked the “necessary resources” and called on the Mission’s partners to ensure that it could continue to work during the “crucial transition period”.⁶⁷³ The representative of the United States opined that support had to be offered to the African Union and to AMIS at that “critical point” in maintaining their “key role” in addressing the Darfur crisis. He insisted that “everyone” had to do “everything possible” to support AMIS, including by implementing resolution 1706 (2006), which called for “robust assistance” to the Mission.⁶⁷⁴ The representative of the United Kingdom stressed the importance of not creating a “vacuum” in Darfur, in which the Janjaweed and the rebels would fight. He noted that the basic measure for avoiding such a vacuum would be to provide AMIS with the capabilities and the financing it needed.⁶⁷⁵ The representative of Japan expressed the belief that, in the transition from AMIS to a United Nations peacekeeping mission, the international community had to respond to the “urgent need for prompt support” for maintaining the African Union forces on the ground, as well as to the “enormous humanitarian requirements”.⁶⁷⁶ The representative of Qatar emphasized the importance of increasing the “financial and logistical support” given to AMIS, making use of the “resources of the United Nations”. He noted that the request had received no favourable response until the report of the Secretary-General had been issued, requesting all financial and logistical support necessary for AMIS. He noted that the Security Council had been clear on the need for such support and advocated that the General Assembly should follow up by providing that support.⁶⁷⁷

At the 5727th meeting, on 31 July 2007, while a number of representatives emphasized the need to provide support for the newly established UNAMID, a few speakers stressed the importance of offering assistance to AMIS in the transition phase. The representative of China affirmed that, as the only international peacekeeping force in Darfur, AMIS was shouldering “daunting tasks” and was facing “huge difficulties”. He suggested that, in the near future, the Council should first focus on urging the international community to provide financial support to AMIS and fully implement the United Nations light and heavy support packages aimed at building the capacity of AMIS, so as to lay a “solid foundation” for the deployment of the hybrid operation.⁶⁷⁸

Part VIII

Special economic problems of the nature described in Article 50 of the Charter

Article 50

If preventive or enforcement measures against any state are taken by the Security Council, any other state, whether a Member of the United Nations or not, which finds itself confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of those measures shall have the right to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems.

Note

During the period under review, the Security Council continued its practice of imposing targeted sanctions measures that helped to minimize economic problems experienced by third States. Through two notes by the President the Council also decided to extend the mandate of the Informal Working Group on General Issues of Sanctions, whose tasks included an “assessment of the unintended impact of sanctions and ways to assist affected untargeted States”.⁶⁷⁹

Given the shift from comprehensive economic sanctions to targeted sanctions, no sanctions committees were approached by Member States concerning special economic problems arising from the implementation of sanctions. There were therefore no pre-assessment reports or ongoing assessment reports concerning the likely and actual unintended impact of sanctions on third States.⁶⁸⁰

⁶⁸⁰ Some of the sanctions Committees did, however, touch on the issue of the humanitarian and socioeconomic consequences of sanctions in their reports to the Council (see, for example, S/2007/778 and S/2008/17), as did Groups or Panels of Experts (see S/2004/955, paras. 24-52; S/2005/436, para. 87; S/2006/379, para. 133; and S/2007/40, paras. 42-45) and Monitoring Teams (see S/2005/572, paras. 18 and 86).

Section A examines decisions of the Council relevant to Article 50, while section B highlights the salient issues raised in the Council’s deliberations regarding the interpretation and application of the Article. Section C presents material relating to the Council’s subsidiary bodies in connection with Article 50, as included in their reports to the Council, as well as in the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions.⁶⁸¹

A. Decisions relating to Article 50

Informal Working Group on General Issues of Sanctions

By a note by the President dated 23 December 2004, the Council decided to extend the mandate of the Informal Working Group on General Issues of Sanctions, established by a note by the President dated 17 April 2000, until 31 December 2005. While the Working Group continued to be tasked with developing general recommendations on how to improve the effectiveness of United Nations sanctions, it was also mandated to undertake within that framework, as appropriate, and with the consensus of its members, assessment of the unintended impact of sanctions and ways to assist affected untargeted States.⁶⁸² By a note by the President dated 29 December 2005, the Council agreed to further extend the mandate of the Working Group until 31 December 2006.⁶⁸³ By resolution 1732 (2006) of 21 December 2006, taking note of the best practices and methods contained in the Working Group's final report,⁶⁸⁴ the Council decided that the Working Group had fulfilled its mandate.

Strengthening international law: rule of law and maintenance of international peace and security

By a statement of the President dated 22 June 2006, the Council reaffirmed the role sanctions played in the maintenance and restoration of international peace and security. The Council further resolved to ensure that sanctions were carefully targeted in support of clear objectives and were implemented in ways that balanced effectiveness against possible adverse consequences.⁶⁸⁵

B. Discussion relating to Article 50

Strengthening international law: rule of law and maintenance of international peace and security

At the 5474th meeting, on 22 June 2006, the representative of Nigeria expressed the view that, in order to enhance the efficiency and credibility of the United Nations sanctions regimes, sanctions should be applied only as a "last resort", be "targeted" and "time-bound", and should be lifted once the objectives had been achieved. He said that sanctions should be applied in accordance with Article 50 of the Charter, and that the impact of sanctions both on the target and on third States should be assessed and remedied.⁶⁸⁶

C. Instances arising in the subsidiary bodies of the Council

Informal Working Group on General Issues of Sanctions

By a letter dated 17 December 2004 addressed to the President of the Council, the outgoing Chairman of the Informal Working Group on General Issues of Sanctions noted that the Council, in relevant cases, had sought an assessment of the possible humanitarian impact of the measures it had authorized, with a view to minimizing the unintended negative consequences of such measures. He also noted that various reports by expert sanctions monitoring bodies had included recommendations for improving the implementation and effectiveness of sanctions as well as for mitigating their unintended impact.⁶⁸⁷

In a report of the Chairman of the Informal Working Group on General Issues of Sanctions to the President of the Security Council, transmitted in a note by the President dated 22 December 2005, the Working Group observed that, unlike comprehensive sanctions, targeted sanctions tended to have minimal negative effects on civilian populations and third States. The Working Group also noted, however, that if targeted sanctions were not properly designed and implemented, their legitimacy could be compromised and their usefulness questioned.⁶⁸⁸ Reference was also made to the call by some delegations for the Security Council to improve its monitoring of the implementation and effects of sanctions and the establishment of a mechanism to address special economic problems arising from the application of sanctions.⁶⁸⁹

In a report of the Chairman of the Informal Working Group, transmitted in a note by the President dated 22 December 2006, the Working Group observed that several of the recommendations and best practices set out in that report related to improved sanctions design and monitoring. The report did not however contain any recommendations that explicitly referred to ways to assist untargeted States affected by the unintended impact of sanctions.⁶⁹⁰

Part IX

Right of self-defence in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter

Article 51

Nothing in the present Charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence if an armed attack occurs against a Member of the United Nations, until the Security Council has taken measures necessary to maintain international peace and security. Measures taken by Members in the exercise of this right of self-defence shall be immediately reported to the Security Council and shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under the present Charter to take at any time such action as it deems necessary in order to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Note

During the period under review, the Security Council reaffirmed the principle set out in Article 51 of the Charter in three different decisions related to its consideration of the item entitled “Small arms” (see section A).

During the period, in the course of the deliberations in the Council, various issues occasioned arguments relating to the interpretation of the principle of self-defence. Specifically, the Council debated the application and interpretation of Article 51 in connection with the following items: Small arms; Letter dated 4 July 2006 from the Permanent Representative of Japan to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council; Non-proliferation/Democratic People’s Republic of Korea; Non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction; and The situation in the Middle East. The arguments advanced during the Council’s deliberations in connection with these situations are presented in section B.

These cases will be followed by a brief overview in section C of instances in which the right of self-defence was invoked in official correspondence, but which did not give rise to any constitutional discussion relevant to Article 51.

A. Decisions relating to Article 51

Small arms

By two statements of the President dated 19 January 2004 and 17 February 2005, respectively, in connection with the Council’s consideration of the destabilizing role played by the accumulation and uncontrolled spread of small arms and light weapons in many regions of the world, the Council reaffirmed “the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter and, subject to the Charter, the right of each State to import, produce and retain small arms and light weapons for its self-defence and security needs”.⁶⁹¹

By a statement of the President dated 29 June 2007, the Council reaffirmed “the inherent right to individual or collective self-defence consistent with Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations”.⁶⁹²

B. Discussion relating to Article 51

Small arms

At the 4896th meeting, on 19 January 2004, a number of speakers commented on the need to strike a balance between the need to limit the illegal trade and proliferation of small arms and the right of States to legally produce and trade arms, in accordance with the right of self-defence as enshrined in the Charter. The representative of Romania noted that the illicit traffic in arms and drugs could become a serious obstacle to national development and well-being and, taking into account that countries have the right to produce and transfer arms in accordance to the right to self-defence, stressed that arms transfers should be conducted in a “very responsible manner”.⁶⁹³ The representative of Algeria emphasized that a precise analysis of the factors generating and developing the traffic in small arms would help to clarify the concepts, and thus prevent confusion between the illegal traffic in small arms and the legal trade in small arms covered by Article 51.⁶⁹⁴ The representative of Colombia said that export control mechanisms should take into account not only the “views and interests of the producing and exporting countries” but also the interests of the importing countries. He expressed caution about the “subjective” nature of criteria such as “respect for human rights, the existence of internal conflicts and the imbalance between defence and development expenditures”, which, if applied by exporting countries, might violate the right of all States to import and possess small arms and light weapons for their self-defence and security needs in accordance with Article 51.⁶⁹⁵ The representative of Indonesia pointed out that the progress made in the implementation of demobilization, disarmament, rehabilitation and resettlement programmes for ex-combatants in post-conflict countries had been achieved while respecting the “right of States to self-defence and security” and without prejudice to their corresponding right to effective control over the export, import, transit and storage of small weapons.⁶⁹⁶

At the 5127th meeting, on 17 February 2005, the representative of Romania reiterated that countries retained the legitimate “right to self-defence” in accordance with the Charter, as arms production and transfers for that purpose were licit. He therefore stated that legality of arms trading entailed the conduct of transfers in an “even more responsible” manner.⁶⁹⁷ The representative of Greece concurred, but warned that in some instances small arms that started out legally ultimately arrived at illegal destinations, owing to “loopholes” which must be effectively addressed through severe measures in the national legislation of all countries.⁶⁹⁸ The representative of Mexico opined that one fundamental element in controlling the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons would be to negotiate a legal instrument regulating the transfer of such arms. The main manufacturers and exporters, he added, should be subject to precise rules that would prevent the transfer of small arms and light weapons to be diverted on to the illegal track. He cautioned, however, that such rules and provisions should be applied with no negative impact on lawful transfers that enable countries to exercise their legitimate right to self-defence as set out in Article 51 of the Charter.⁶⁹⁹

*Items relating to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea*⁷⁰⁰

At its 5490th meeting, on 15 July 2006, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1695 (2006) by which it condemned the launching of ballistic missiles on 5 July by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. Welcoming the adoption of the resolution, the representative of Japan declared that the missile launches posed a “direct threat to the security of Japan and other countries”, particularly in the light of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea's claim that it had developed nuclear weapons.⁷⁰¹ The representative of the United States, declaring that the missile launches represented a “direct threat to international peace and security, demanded “a strong statement from the Council in the form of a strong resolution”.⁷⁰² In response, the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea stated that the missile launches had been part of a “routine military exercise” intended to increase his country's “military capacity for self-defence” and would go on in the future. He contended that the missile launches did not strain the regional situation, nor did they block the progress of the dialogue. He also argued that were it not for his country's “tremendous deterrent in self-defence”, the United States would have attacked the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.⁷⁰³

By a letter dated 11 October 2006 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea transmitted a statement issued by his country's Foreign Ministry, indicating that his Government had successfully conducted “an underground nuclear test” under secure conditions on 9 October as a “new measure for bolstering its war deterrent for self-defence”.⁷⁰⁴

At its 5551st meeting, on 14 October 2006, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1718 (2006), by which, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, it condemned the nuclear test conducted by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on 9 October 2006, finding it in flagrant disregard of its relevant resolutions, and in particular of resolution 1695 (2006). During the ensuing debate, a number of speakers saluted the adoption of the resolution as a strong signal by the international community. In response, the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea declared that the underground nuclear test had been a new measure for bolstering his country's “war deterrent for self-defence” and was “entirely attributable to the United States nuclear threat, sanctions and pressure”.⁷⁰⁵

By identical letters dated 12 July 2006 addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council, in connection with the Hizbullah attacks on Israel's northern border with Lebanon, the representative of Israel asserted that his country reserved the "right to act in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations and exercise its right of self-defence" when attacked and take "appropriate actions" in this regard.⁷⁰⁶

At its 5489th meeting, on 14 July 2006, the Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations in relation to the crisis between Israel and Lebanon which had started on 12 July 2006. During the ensuing debate, several representatives recognized Israel's right to act in self-defence, but cautioned that Israel should ensure that its actions were proportionate and measured, in accordance with international law.⁷⁰⁷ Among those speakers, the representative of Slovakia, while recognizing and acknowledging "the right of each and every State to self-defence", emphasized that the right could not and should not be confused with counterattacks or acts of military provocation.⁷⁰⁸ The representative of Qatar stated that while his country recognized the right of all States to defend themselves, such a right was not in agreement with Israel's actions of waging "a widespread military campaign directly targeting civilians" and hitting Lebanon's infrastructure, which was not consonant with the objective of self-defence. He added that "the alleged right of Israel to self-defence" ended when the Council took the necessary measures to maintain international peace and security and hoped that the Council would soon take action to stop the "premeditated aggression" by Israel.⁷⁰⁹

By identical letters dated 17 July 2006 addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council, the representative of Lebanon pointed out the "disproportionate aggression" and the consequences of the Israeli actions taken in "self-defence".⁷¹⁰

At its 5492nd meeting, on 20 July 2006, the Council heard a briefing by the Secretary-General in relation to the situation in the Middle East in which the Secretary-General, while reiterating his condemnation of Hizbullah's attacks on Israel and acknowledging Israel's right to defend itself under Article 51 of the Charter, cautioned against the excessive use of force.⁷¹¹

At the 5493rd meeting, on 21 July 2006, held to consider the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question", a number of speakers referred to the situation between Israel and Lebanon. Several speakers, while recognizing Israel's right to self-defence against terrorism and its perpetrators, urged Israel to exercise that right with caution and restraint.⁷¹² Other speakers insisted that Israel's exercise of the right to self-defence should be in accordance with the principles of the Charter and international law.⁷¹³ The representative of Norway recalled that all use of armed force must satisfy requirements of necessity as well as proportionality and therefore urged Israel not to resort to "disproportionate action".⁷¹⁴ A number of speakers argued on the other hand that the Israeli actions could not be justified by the right to self-defence.⁷¹⁵ The representative of Turkey emphasized that Israel should not resort to "disproportionate and indiscriminate" use of force.⁷¹⁶ The representative of Qatar stated that the situation had suddenly deteriorated as a result of the "excessive use" of military force by Israel against Lebanon "on the pretext of self-defence".⁷¹⁷ By contrast, the representative of the United States argued that there was "no moral equivalence between acts of terrorism and Israel's exercise of its legitimate right to self-defence". He insisted that the killing of civilians who died as the direct result of malicious terrorist acts representative of Lebanon questioned the international community's use of the label of "self-defence" to justify the "escalating" Israeli military actions against Lebanon.

C. Invocation of the right of self-defence in other instances

Communications concerning relations between the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda

By a letter dated 10 June 2004 addressed to the President of the Security Council, in connection with two letters dated 3 and 7 June 2004, respectively, from the representative of Rwanda,⁷¹⁹ the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo reiterated his Government’s “accusation of renewed aggression” by Rwanda in the area of Bukavu, “in flagrant violation of the Charter”. He reaffirmed that his Government had no “hidden agenda” in Rwanda, noting that “the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence” in the event of armed attack was enshrined in Article 51 of the Charter.⁷²⁰

By a letter dated 16 August 2004 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Rwanda called upon the international community to take action against the “incipient ethnic cleansing” of Bunyamulenge refugees in Rwanda and Burundi. Moreover, he asked for the “forcible disarmament, demobilization and repatriation” of ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe deployed along Rwanda’s border, and asserted that the “failure to do so” might force his country “to take appropriate measures in self-defence”.⁷²¹

Communications concerning relations between the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Uganda

By a letter dated 3 October 2005 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo recalled the “threatening statements” made by the President of Uganda stating that the Ugandan army would cross the border with the Democratic Republic of the Congo if the Congolese Government and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo failed to disarm, within two months, the rebels of the Lord’s Resistance Army (LRA). He added that, in the light of “this new Ugandan threat” to his country’s international sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence, his Government would have “no other choice but to act within the framework of international legality”, including by taking the “relevant action authorized by the Charter”, in particular the provisions of Article 51.⁷²²

In response, the representative of Uganda, by a letter dated 7 October 2005 addressed to the President of the Security Council, pointed out that “as a responsible and sovereign State”, Uganda was expected to guarantee the peace and security of its citizens, who, for an extended period of time, had been “terrorized” by LRA and other armed groups which used the territory of neighbouring States “as bases from which to attack Uganda”. Consequently, he declared that Uganda had an “obligation to defend itself” if attacked, in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter.⁷²³

Communications concerning relations between Eritrea and Ethiopia

By a letter dated 28 October 2005 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Eritrea declared that his country showed “maximum patience and restraint” throughout Ethiopia’s “occupation” of its territory, and declared that the measures taken by his country to protect its sovereignty and territorial integrity were “not tactically motivated posturing but rather legal acts of self-defence, recognized as such by the Charter”.⁷²⁴

By a letter dated 20 December 2005 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Ethiopia transmitted a press release issued by his country’s Ministry of Foreign Affairs in response to the decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Claims Commission. He noted that the Eritrean occupation of Badme could not be justified as lawful self-defence under the Charter as it was a “clear aggression without any provocation whatsoever from Ethiopia”.⁷²⁵

Communications concerning the situation in the Sudan

By a letter dated 10 August 2004 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of the Sudan announced an action plan to create conditions for the restoration of peace, security, stability and development in the Darfur. He stated that “all offensive military operations” by his Government’s armed forces in the proposed safe areas would cease immediately. He stressed that the Government of the Sudan armed forces would exercise restraint and avoid retaliation against rebel activities “notwithstanding their right of self-defence”.⁷²⁶

Introductory note

Chapter XII covers the consideration by the Security Council of Articles of the Charter not dealt with in the preceding chapters.

This chapter consists of four parts. In part I, material pertaining to the purposes and principles of the United Nations is considered, namely Articles 1 (2), 2 (4), 2 (5) and 2 (7). In part II, Articles 24 to 26 are covered, relating to the functions and powers of the Security Council. Part III deals with the practice of the Security Council in connection with the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter, Articles 52 to 54, concerning regional arrangements. In part IV, under consideration of miscellaneous provisions of the Charter, material relating to Article 103 is included.

Chapter VIII of this Supplement describes the entire chain of proceedings of the Council relating to all the matters which the Council has taken up under its responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. The present chapter focuses on material selected to highlight how the provisions of the Articles featured herein were interpreted and applied in deliberations and decisions of the Council.

Part I

Consideration of the purposes and principles of the United Nations (Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter)

A. Article 1, paragraph 2

Article 1, paragraph 2

[The Purposes of the United Nations are:]

To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace.

Note

During the period under review, none of the decisions or other documents of the Security Council contained an explicit reference to Article 1 (2) of the Charter of the United Nations. The Council did however adopt several resolutions in connection with the situation concerning Western Sahara in which the principle of self-determination was referred to without giving rise to a constitutional discussion.¹ In several other cases, the Council made references that could be understood as having an implicit bearing on Article 1 (2). In welcoming the first general elections for the president and members of the House of Representatives of the Autonomous Region of Bougainville held from 20 May to 9 June 2005, the Council congratulated the Autonomous Bougainville Government and the people of Bougainville, and took note that those elections, “which reflect the expressed will of the people of Bougainville”, marked a significant and historical landmark in the Bougainville peace process.² Similarly, in connection with Afghanistan, the Council stressed the inalienable right of the people of Afghanistan to freely determine their own future, and welcomed the successful holding of the parliamentary and provincial elections on 18 September

2005.³ In connection with Iraq, the Council, on a number of occasions, reaffirmed the right of the Iraqi people freely to determine their own political future and control their own resources.⁴

The principle of self-determination was often invoked in communications. For example, in connection with the situation concerning Western Sahara, in a letter dated 26 September 2005 to the President of the Council, the representative of Algeria argued that, through the extension of the appointment of the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General for Western Sahara, the Council had wished to reiterate the need to implement the Peace Plan for Self-Determination of the People of Western Sahara and, “since this involves bringing about the decolonization of a non-self-governing territory within the meaning of the Charter of the United Nations, to urge the occupying Power to comply with international law concerning the sanctity of the principle of equal rights of peoples and their right to self-determination”.⁵

In the deliberations of the Council, the principle of self-determination was often invoked without giving rise to a constitutional discussion. While references to the principle of self-determination were too numerous to be listed here, mention may be made of discussions in connection with the items entitled “The situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question”,⁶ “Security Council resolutions 1160 (1998), 1199

The two cases below reflect occasions when the Council, in its deliberations, dealt extensively with questions relating to the principle enshrined in Article 1 (2): in connection with the situation between Iraq and Kuwait, when the Council discussed the transfer of power from the Coalition Provisional Authority to the Government of Iraq (case 1); and in connection with threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts, when the Council discussed the definition of terrorism (case 2).

The situation between Iraq and Kuwait

At the 4914th meeting, on 24 February 2004, the representative of the United States, in his briefing, maintained that the Coalition Provisional Authority, together with the Iraqi people and the United Nations, supported the transfer of sovereignty by 30 June 2004, as well as direct national elections as soon as practicable thereafter. He further argued that, until 30 June 2004, there was much to be done and welcomed the active engagement of the United Nations in helping the Iraqis define their own future and transition into a democratic, pluralistic society. Concerning the issue of governance, he emphasized that the Coalition Provisional Authority continued to support a transparent process of consultations and elections for the Iraqi people to choose representatives who reflected the make-up and character of their communities. Referring to the fact-finding mission dispatched by the Secretary-General, led by his Special Adviser, to assess the feasibility of direct elections by 30 June, he noted that the report of the mission⁹ had made clear that free and fair elections could not be held by 30 June, the date by which all agreed that the transfer of sovereignty should take place. Noting that the mechanism for governing Iraq between the transfer of sovereignty and the national elections remained to be worked out, he said that the Iraqi people, the Governing Council, the Coalition Provisional Authority and the United Nations would work to reach agreement on a transition mechanism that would have the broad-based support of the Iraqi people.¹⁰

The representative of the United Kingdom, in his briefing, noted that Iraqis were gaining the right to control their own lives and their nation’s destiny. He underlined that the transfer of authority to a sovereign Government of Iraq on 30 June 2004 would be a defining moment. He maintained that the country was making progress towards the goal of a democratic Iraq governed by the people and for the people and appealed to the United Nations and its Members to continue to help the people of Iraq along that journey to ensure the successful transfer of authority on 30 June to a fully sovereign Iraqi Government.¹¹

The representative of Algeria stressed that the sooner the people of Iraq recovered full sovereignty and freely decided on their destiny, the sooner Iraq would regain peace, stability and progress, and he appealed for an end to “the occupation” as soon as possible. As the Secretary-General had recommended in his report¹² and because it was “the wish of the Iraqi people”, the United Nations should provide assistance to all political stakeholders to enable them to reach an understanding on the competence, the structure and the composition of the transitional body that needed to temporarily lead Iraq, as well as on the establishment process of that body. In that way, the United Nations would contribute not only to the establishment of a representative and credible government body with which the entire Iraqi people could identify, but also to enabling an orderly transfer of sovereignty to that organ and to ensuring that the date of the transfer, 30 June, was maintained in accordance with the wishes of all Iraqis. He said that maximum efforts needed to be made so that the electoral timetable would be strictly observed and that the people of Iraq would directly elect the men and women who would build and guide the future of Iraq into freedom, democracy and progress.¹³

The representative of the Russian Federation underlined the need to quickly restore Iraqi sovereignty and to ensure the rights of the people of Iraq to manage their own political future and to be the master of their own natural resources. He fully supported the position of the Secretary-General that only the Iraqis could truly define specific ways to pursue the political process, which included agreement on a mechanism to restore their sovereignty and on the means to put it into effect. He added that this restored sovereignty would lead to the holding of general elections. In recognizing the ongoing discussions by the Iraqis on acceptable mechanisms, he said that there would be a provisional mechanism which would most likely possess limited authority.¹⁴ The representative of the Philippines stressed that a weak Iraqi Government with limited legitimacy, ineffective institutions and limited control over the country needed to be avoided, and that the United Nations would continue to be needed to “nurse the new Government’s strength and ability to govern”.¹⁵

The representative of France considered it essential that all Iraqis affirmed their commitment to respecting the date of 30 June for the return of sovereignty, thus confirming their readiness to reassume control of their destiny as soon as possible. He stressed that, more than the holding of elections, the date of 30 June represented “an essential milestone” in transition as it marked the return of Iraqi sovereignty. He noted that the deadline of 30 June should lead to a genuine restoration of Iraqi sovereignty and therefore to a genuine handover of authority and resources to the Iraqis, so that they could administer their own country.¹⁶

The representative of Spain agreed that the Iraqis needed to feel themselves to be masters of their own process.¹⁷ A number of speakers also stressed that the Iraqi people themselves had to define the process for constituting a transitional Government for Iraq until elections could be held.¹⁸

By a statement by the President of 27 April 2004, the Council welcomed the provisional ideas that the Special Adviser had submitted as a basis for the formation of an interim Iraqi Government to which sovereignty would be transferred on 30 June 2004.¹⁹

By a letter dated 7 June 2004 to the President of the Council, the Secretary-General, in reporting the assistance provided by the Organization, through his

Special Adviser, to Iraq’s political transition process, stressed that the United Nations had consistently held that there was no substitute for the legitimacy that came from free and fair elections. The elections scheduled for January 2005 were therefore the most important milestone in Iraq’s transitional political process and the formation of the Interim Iraqi Government marked a first step in that process. He also stated that the United Nations had been fully involved in facilitating consensus on the structure and composition of the Interim Government, which had resulted from a consultative process that had encompassed a large and diverse range of Iraqis, as well as the Governing Council and the Coalition Provisional Authority. He stressed that, although it had not been elected, there was “a capable and reasonably balanced Interim Government” ready to take power by 30 June 2004, which was the best outcome achievable under the circumstances.²⁰

At its 4987th meeting, on 8 June 2004, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1546 (2004), by which it endorsed the formation of a sovereign Interim Government of Iraq, which would assume full responsibility and authority by 30 June 2004 for governing Iraq while refraining from taking any actions affecting Iraq’s destiny beyond the limited interim period until an elected Transitional Government of Iraq assumed office. The Council welcomed the fact that, also by 30 June 2004, the occupation would end, the Coalition Provisional Authority would cease to exist and Iraq would reassert its full sovereignty. The Council also reaffirmed the right of the Iraqi people freely to determine their own political future and to control over their financial and natural resources.²¹

At the meeting, many speakers reiterated the importance of the inclusion of the above-mentioned provisions in the resolution.²² The representative of the United Kingdom maintained that the resolution, in addition to endorsing the formation of the interim Government, set a clear path for the future political process, which would end with elections on the basis of a constitution approved by the people of Iraq.²³ The representative of Pakistan hoped that the adoption of the resolution would enable the people of Iraq to, inter alia, fully regain their sovereignty and control over their own destiny.²⁴ The representative of China considered it significant that the resolution gave expression to the principles of Iraqi sovereignty and the need for the people of Iraq to manage their own affairs.²⁵

At the 5033rd meeting, on 14 September 2004, the representative of Iraq stated that, despite an unprecedented rise in violence, a sovereign Government had taken office ahead of schedule and an Interim National Assembly had been formed. He maintained that the present government was “truly the most representative in Iraq’s history, not merely in terms of ethnic or confessional make-up”, but also “in terms of the broad range of political ideologies and beliefs held by its members”. While acknowledging difficulties, he stressed that a cohesive Iraqi State was being rebuilt “based upon the consent of the governed”. He also noted that a principal function of the interim Government was to provide for elections, as affirmed in resolution 1546 (2004).²⁶

At the 5123rd meeting, on 16 February 2005, the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs informed the Council of the successful holding of elections in Iraq on 30 January 2005, and noted that it was clear from the overall level of participation that the majority of the Iraqi people were committed to the political transition process that the country was undergoing, although regional variations had been significant. He held that the most immediate challenge of Iraq was to form a transitional Government that was broadly representative of Iraqi society and to find ways to bring together all Iraqi constituencies in a national effort to define the future of their country.²⁷ The representative of Iraq added that the people of Iraq had also proved that they alone possessed the will to determine their future and to choose the path that met their aspirations. He held that the Transitional National Assembly was on course to select a Government that represented the Iraqi people in all its diversity.²⁸

By a presidential statement dated 16 February 2005, the Council congratulated the people of Iraq on the successful elections of 30 January 2005 and commended them for having taken that step to exercise their right to freely determine their own political future, and encouraged them to continue to do so in moving ahead with their political transition.²⁹

Threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts

At its 5053rd meeting, on 8 October 2004, the Council adopted resolution 1566 (2004), by which it recalled, inter alia, that criminal acts, including against civilians, committed with the intent to cause death or serious bodily injury, or the taking of hostages, with the purpose of provoking a state of terror in the general public or in a group of persons or particular persons, intimidating a population or compelling a government or an international organization to do or to abstain from doing any act, which constituted offences within the scope of and as defined in the international conventions and protocols relating to terrorism, were under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.³⁰

At the meeting, the representative of Algeria welcomed resolution 1566 (2004) because it avoided “any conflation of acts of terrorism and the legitimate rights of peoples to resist foreign occupation”, a principle that had been fully enshrined in international law and United Nations resolutions, while stressing that the resolution reaffirmed that criminal attacks against civilians were never justified for any reason.³¹ The representative of the Philippines agreed that the resolution “in no way” overturned the right to self-determination under the Charter. Likewise, legitimate acts against foreign occupation and alien domination were not thwarted in the least by the resolution.³²

The representative of the United States recalled that in some cases, “supporters of the murder of civilians” said that their acts of violence were justifiable acts of national liberation or of self-determination. Noting that some had suggested that circumstances might be sufficient to justify such terrorism, and that such justification might include “self-determination, national liberation or one’s own perception of the will of God”, he stressed that the resolution clearly stated that the deliberate massacre of innocents was never justifiable by any cause.³³ The representative of the Russian Federation also underlined that the major emphasis in the resolution was that terrorist acts were crimes that could be justified by no political, ideological, religious or other views of any nature.³⁴

At the 5059th meeting, on 19 October 2004, the representative of Israel said that there was no cause, grievance or claim that could justify terrorism and attacks on civilians. Quoting paragraph 3 of resolution 1566 (2004), he stressed that even those who still insisted on using words such as “resistance” or “freedom fighters” to blur the distinction between means and ends could not hide from these clear statements.³⁵ The representative of the United States expressed concern that some regional conventions would seem to justify attacks against civilians, depending on the political, philosophical, ideological, racial or ethnic motivation of the perpetrators, and stressed that this was contrary to the text and spirit of resolution 1566 (2004), by which the Council had unanimously endorsed the proposition that the deliberate targeting of civilians was simply unjustifiable by any cause.³⁶ Several other speakers stressed that terrorism could not be justified under any circumstances.³⁷

On the other hand, a number of delegations expressed support for a definition of terrorism that distinguished between terrorism and the legitimate struggle of peoples for their right to self-determination and against foreign occupation.³⁸ The representative of Pakistan, referring to paragraph 3 of resolution 1566 (2004), reiterated that a legal and internationally agreed definition of terrorism still needed to be developed and recalled that, as the United Nations had decided in the past that “a distinction should be maintained between terrorism and the right of peoples to self-determination”, the United Nations should not and could not reverse its historical support for peoples and nations struggling for liberation from foreign occupation and alien domination. He welcomed the reference in the preamble of resolution 1566 (2004) to the underlying causes of terrorism, which provided a good basis for developing a long-term strategy to broaden the focus in the fight against terrorism. He argued that such a strategy should focus on the root causes of terrorism, such as the denial or violation of human rights, including the right of self-determination, which provided fertile breeding ground for terrorism.³⁹ The representative of Algeria stressed that there was a need to distinguish between terrorist acts, which were unjustifiable in all their forms and manifestations, and the legitimate struggle of peoples for liberation, self-determination, freedom and independence, including through armed struggle, in accordance with international law. He therefore argued that the criminal acts set out in paragraph 3 of resolution 1566 (2004) should not be interpreted as a definition of terrorism.⁴⁰ The representative of Egypt suggested that the most effective way to deal with terrorism was to do so within a legal framework that took into account the principles of international law and the importance of distinguishing between terrorism and legitimate armed struggle. Such a framework would make the distinction between terrorist acts, which needed to be criminalized, and the popular expression of political demands, which were legitimate. This approach would pave the way for the international community to respond collectively in isolating terrorist elements and exposing their illegitimate objectives.⁴¹

In a statement made by the President at the meeting,⁴² the Council, inter alia, reaffirmed that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constituted one of the most serious threats to peace and security and that any acts of terrorism were criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, whenever and by whomsoever committed.

Note

The practice of the Security Council touching upon the provisions of Article 2 (4), is illustrated below, first by decisions most relevant to the principles enshrined in that Article, and secondly by constitutional discussion within the Council touching upon the interpretation and application of Article 2 (4). A few communications containing explicit references to Article 2 (4) were received during the reporting period.⁴³

Decisions relating to Article 2 (4)

During the reporting period, the Council adopted no decisions containing an explicit reference to Article 2 (4). The Council did however, by its resolutions and decisions, reaffirm the principle of refraining from the threat or use of force in international relations; reiterated its position against interference by States in the internal affairs of others; condemned hostile action across borders of States; reaffirmed its commitment to the inviolability of international borders; and repeated its call for respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States, as illustrated below.

Affirmation of the principle of refraining from the threat or use of force

By a number of its decisions concerning both regional situations and thematic issues, the Council reaffirmed the principle of refraining from the threat or use of force in international relations, as enshrined in Article 2 (4), quoting the text of Article 2 (4) on several occasions. In connection with the item entitled "Threats to international peace and security", the Council, by resolution 1625 (2005) of 14 September 2005, adopted a declaration on strengthening the effectiveness of the role of the Council in conflict prevention, particularly in Africa, in which it reaffirmed the importance of adhering to the principles of "refraining, in international relations, from the threat or the use of force in any manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations."⁴⁴ In connection with the same item, by a presidential statement dated 8 January 2007, the Council reaffirmed its commitment to the principles of sovereign equality, national sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of all States and underlined the importance of adhering to those principles.⁴⁵

In connection with the situation in Chad and the Sudan, by a presidential statement of 25 April 2005, the Council called on all Members to "refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations". The Council also urged both Chad and the Sudan to refrain from any actions that violated their border.⁴⁶ In connection with the situation between Ethiopia and Eritrea, the Council, by a series of decisions, reiterated its call on both parties to refrain from any threat or use of force against each other.⁴⁷ For example, by resolution 1767 (2007) of 30 July 2007, the Council reiterated its call for the parties to show maximum restraint and refrain from any threat or use of force against each other.⁴⁸ In connection with the situation in the Great Lakes region, by resolution 1653 (2006) of 27 January 2006, the Council underlined the fact that all States in the region had to abide by their obligations under the Charter to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of their neighbours.⁴⁹ In connection with the situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, by a series of decisions, the Council repeatedly called upon the States of the region to put an end to the activities of illegal armed groups and underlined that any recourse to the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity of a State was contrary to the Charter of the United Nations.⁵⁰

Reiteration of the principle of non-interference by States in the internal affairs of others

In some cases, the Council reiterated its position against interference by States in the internal affairs of other States. For instance, in connection with the situation concerning Iraq, by resolution 1790 (2007) of 18 December 2007, the Council reaffirmed the importance of the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of Iraq.⁵¹ Concerning the situation in Afghanistan, by resolution 1662 (2006) of 23 March 2006, the Council encouraged the promotion of confidence-building measures between Afghanistan and its neighbours in the spirit of the Kabul Declaration on Good-neighbourly Relations of 22 December 2002⁵² in order to foster dialogue and cooperation in the region “in full respect for the principles of territorial integrity, mutual respect, friendly relations and non-interference in each other’s internal affairs”.⁵³

In connection with the situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, by a presidential statement of 22 June 2004, the Council, condemning any involvement by outside forces in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, urged Rwanda not to provide any practical or political support to armed groups in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Council also reminded Uganda not to interfere in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including through military support for armed groups, and called upon Burundi to prevent any support from its territory to armed groups in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁵⁴ By subsequent decisions the Council similarly demanded that those regional States not allow the use of their respective territories in support of activities of armed groups operating in the region.⁵⁵ In connection with the situation in the Middle East, by resolution 1636 (2005) of 31 October 2005, the Council, emphasizing that the future of Lebanon should be decided through peaceful means by the Lebanese themselves, free of intimidation and foreign interference, insisted that the Syrian Arab Republic not interfere in Lebanese domestic affairs, either directly or indirectly, and that it should refrain from any attempt aimed at destabilizing Lebanon, and respect scrupulously the sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and political independence of that country.⁵⁶

During the period under review, the Council repeatedly recalled the principles of good-neighbourliness, non-interference and regional cooperation, in cooperation with Burundi,⁵⁷ Côte d’Ivoire,⁵⁸ the Sudan,⁵⁹ and the Great Lakes region.⁶⁰

Calls for respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States

In dealing with regional situations, the Council reaffirmed its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States on many occasions during the period under review.⁶¹ On several occasions the Council explicitly called upon States to respect those principles. In connection with the situation in Burundi, the Council, by a presidential statement dated 15 August 2004, called upon all States in the region to ensure that the territorial integrity of their neighbours was respected.⁶² In connection with the situation in the Middle East, following the issuance of the report of the International Independent Investigation Commission concerning its investigation into the terrorist bombing in Beirut on 14 February 2005 that had killed the former Prime Minister of Lebanon, Rafiq Hariri, and others,⁶³ the Council, by resolution 1636 (2005) of 31 October 2005, took note with extreme concern of the conclusion of the Commission that there was converging evidence pointing at the involvement of both Lebanese and Syrian officials and determined that the involvement of any State “in that terrorist act” would amount to a serious violation of its obligation to respect the sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon.⁶⁴

Condemnation of hostile action and movements of armed groups across the border of a State

With regard to several situations of which it was seized, the Council called for cessation of involvement by foreign Governments in various conflicts and demanded withdrawal of foreign forces from the territories of other States. In connection with the situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, following the reports of incursions into the Democratic Republic of the Congo by elements of the Rwandan army and incursions made by the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda into the territory of Rwanda, the Council, by a presidential statement of 14 May 2004, condemned any violation of the national sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo as well as any incursions of armed groups into Rwanda. The Council demanded that the Government of Rwanda take measures to prevent the presence of any of its troops on the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁶⁵ By a presidential statement dated 7 December 2004, the Council demanded that the Government of Rwanda withdraw without delay any forces it might have in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁶⁶

In connection with the situation in Côte d’Ivoire, the Council urged countries neighbouring Côte d’Ivoire to prevent any cross-border movement of combatants or arms into Côte d’Ivoire.⁶⁷ Concerning the situation in the Middle East, by resolution 1559 (2004) of 2 September 2004, the Council reaffirmed its call for the strict respect of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and political independence of Lebanon under the sole and exclusive authority of the Government of Lebanon throughout the country, and called upon all remaining foreign forces to withdraw from Lebanon.⁶⁸ By resolution 1701 (2006) of 11 August 2006, the Council, upon full cessation of hostilities, called upon the Government of Lebanon and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon to deploy their forces together throughout the south, and called upon the Government of Israel, as that deployment began, to withdraw all of its forces from southern Lebanon in parallel.⁶⁹

Deliberations relating to Article 2 (4)

During the period under review, there were instances in the deliberations of the Council in which explicit references were made to Article 2 and paragraph 4 thereof.⁷⁰ In connection with the item entitled “Non-proliferation”, at the 5500th meeting, on 31 July 2006, the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran regretted that the Council had been prevented from reacting to acts of aggression and other violations of international law, such as the daily threats of resort to force against his country and even threats of using nuclear weapons that had been uttered at the highest levels by representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom and Israel “in violation of Article 2 (4) of the Charter”.⁷¹ At the 5647th meeting, on 24 March 2007, the representative of the United States asserted that the path chosen by the leadership of the Islamic Republic of Iran posed a direct challenge to the very principles on which the United Nations was founded. He recalled that Article 2 of the Charter made it clear that all Members should refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State and that the calls by the leaders of the Islamic Republic of Iran to have Israel “wiped off the map” stood in stark contrast to everything for which the Council stood.⁷²

The three case studies below reflect the debates and decisions of the Council most relevant to the principles enshrined in Article 2 (4). The first, concerning the item entitled “Security Council mission”, features the discussion relating to the situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo (case 3). The second case relates to the situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question (case 4). The third case concerns the Syrian-Lebanese relations under the item entitled “The situation in the Middle East” (case 5).

Security Council mission

At the 5096th meeting, on 8 December 2004, during consideration of the report of the Security Council mission to Central Africa from 21 to 25 November 2004,⁷³ several speakers addressed the issue of former Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁷⁴

The representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo said that, despite consultations between Rwandan and Congolese authorities to establish a climate of trust, Rwanda continued to make threats against the Democratic Republic of the Congo, which, in his opinion, was a deliberate attempt to prolong insecurity in the eastern part of his country. He asserted that, immediately following the Dar es Salaam Conference on Peace, Security, Democracy and Development in the Great Lakes Region, the President of Rwanda had issued a declaration of war under the pretext of pursuing so-called negative forces and redeployed Rwandan troops in the provinces of North and South Kivu. He said that Rwanda’s demonstrated willingness to take responsibility for unleashing hostilities against the Democratic Republic of the Congo was in violation of the principles of the inviolability of borders, enshrined in Article 2 (4) of the Charter. He added that all incursions by foreign forces, including those of Rwanda, would require the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to strictly implement Article 51 of the Charter, which stipulated the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence.⁷⁵

The representative of Rwanda reiterated that the allegations of the presence of Rwandan army troops were false and that the deployment of troops along the common border with the Democratic Republic of the Congo was intended to counter incursions perpetrated by former Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. He argued that the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Rwanda had been repeatedly violated over the past 10 years with relative impunity by those forces and that cross-border attacks were very frequent.⁷⁶

The representative of the Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the European Union, expressed concern about reports regarding the military incursion by Rwandan armed forces into the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Condemning any violation of the territorial integrity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the European Union called upon the Government of Rwanda to respect the sovereignty and territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and to withdraw its forces.⁷⁷ Similar concern was expressed by the representative of Japan.⁷⁸

The representative of the Philippines⁷⁹ pointed out that the Council’s clear position on the border problem in the region was set out in the presidential statement of 7 December 2004, by which the Council expressed, inter alia, its concern at multiple reports of military operations by the Rwandan army in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and at threats by the Government of Rwanda in that regard, underlined the fact that the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity of any State was contrary to the purposes and principles stated in the Charter, and demanded the Government of Rwanda withdraw without delay any forces it might have in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁸⁰

The representative of Pakistan stressed the importance of respect for the principles of sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity for all States and further stressed that international borders were inviolable. He added that, in the absence of actual external military aggression, the threat or use of force across international borders could not be justified and said that, as declared in the presidential statement dated 7 September 2004, Rwanda should withdraw without delay any forces from the Democratic Republic of the Congo and exercise restraint in its actions and pronouncements.⁸¹

The situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question

At the 5411th meeting, on 17 April 2006, the representative of Israel quoted statements allegedly made by the leaders of the Islamic Republic of Iran, the Syrian Arab Republic and the newly-elected Government of the Palestinian Authority and described those statements as “clear declarations of war”.⁸²

In response, the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran pointed out that his country had officially declared its commitment to the fundamental principle of the Charter to refrain from the threat or use of force against any Member of the United Nations. On the other hand, he held that the “daily barrage of illegal threats” relating to the resort to force by Israeli officials, recent instances of which he said had started in December 2003, required urgent and serious attention by the Council. He urged the Council to demand that Israel abandon its “policy of flouting international law and the Charter” and cease immediately from resorting to the threat of the use of force.⁸³

The situation in the Middle East

At the 5028th meeting, on 2 September 2004, the Council adopted resolution 1559 (2004) by which it, inter alia, reaffirmed its call for the strict respect of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity, and political independence of Lebanon under the sole and exclusive authority of the Government of Lebanon throughout Lebanon, called upon all remaining foreign forces to withdraw from Lebanon, supported the extension of the control of the Government of Lebanon over all Lebanese territory and declared its support for a free and fair electoral process in Lebanon’s upcoming presidential elections conducted according to Lebanese constitutional rules devised without foreign interference or influence.⁸⁴

The representative of Lebanon asserted that the resolution confused two matters — one that related to the relations between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic and another that was purely internal and related to the presidential electoral process in Lebanon because the mandate of its President would come to an end on 23 November 2004. He declared that the relations between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic were unique and achieved their common interests, particularly the interests of Lebanon, as the Syrian Arab Republic had helped Lebanon to maintain security and stability within its borders, while Israel had threatened the security of Lebanon and stability by violating its land borders, territorial waters and airspace. He stressed that the Syrian troops had come to Lebanon in response to Lebanon’s legitimate request, guided by the Taif Agreement. In his opinion, the resolution discussed the bilateral relations between two friendly countries, neither of which had filed any complaint with regard to those relations.⁸⁵

The representative of China, which abstained in the voting, stressed that his country had always been resolute in supporting respect for, and the safeguarding of, the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Lebanon, stating that respect for sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity and the principle of non-interference in internal affairs in international relations was a fundamental principle enshrined in the Charter. In his view, the resolution touched on questions that fell within the purview of the internal affairs of Lebanon and should be decided by the Lebanese people themselves. Pointing out the objection by the Government of Lebanon to the consideration of those questions expressed in letters to the President and the Secretary-General,⁸⁶ he explained that his country respected the wishes of that Government.⁸⁷

On the other hand, the representative of the United States stressed that the Council consistently supported the full sovereignty and independence of Lebanon, free of all foreign forces. He asserted that the Syrian Arab Republic had “imposed its political will” on Lebanon and “compelled” the Cabinet and the National Assembly to amend the Constitution and “abort” the electoral process. Declaring that Lebanese parliamentarians had been “pressured, and even threatened” by the Syrian Arab Republic, he argued that the Lebanese parliament and Cabinet should express the will of their people through a free and fair presidential electoral process, and supported the extension of the control of the Government of Lebanon over all Lebanese territory, as called for by the Council over the previous four years. He stated that the presence of armed Hizbullah militia elements, the Syrian military and Iranian forces in Lebanon hindered that goal. He underlined that it was wrong for the Syrian Arab Republic to continue to maintain its forces in Lebanon, in flat contravention of the spirit and clear intent of the Taif Agreement, and it would be also wrong for it to continue to interfere in the presidential electoral process in Lebanon.⁸⁸

The representative of France asserted that the future of Lebanon was being seriously threatened by the interference of the Syrian Arab Republic in the political life of the country and, in particular, in the electoral process, as well as by the continued occupation and the persistent presence of armed militias. He said that the withdrawal of foreign forces from the entire territory of Lebanon should not be delayed any longer and that the electoral process should proceed without any foreign interference.⁸⁹

By a presidential statement dated 4 May 2005, the Council acknowledged the letter of 26 April 2005 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Syrian Arab Republic to the Secretary-General stating that the Syrian Arab Republic had completed the full withdrawal of its forces, military assets and intelligence apparatus from Lebanon.⁹⁰ The Council also acknowledged that the full and complete Syrian withdrawal would represent a significant and important step towards Lebanon’s full political independence and full exercise of its sovereignty, which was the ultimate goal of resolution 1559 (2004), thus opening a new chapter in Lebanese history. Welcoming the decision of the Government of Lebanon to conduct elections beginning on 29 May 2005, the Council underlined the fact that free and credible elections held without foreign interference or influence would be another central indication of the political independence and sovereignty of Lebanon.⁹¹

C. Article 2, paragraph 5

Article 2, paragraph 5

All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

Note

During the period under review, there were no explicit references to Article 2 (5) in the decisions of the Security Council. There was one explicit reference in the deliberations of the Council. In connection with the item entitled “Relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations, in particular the African Union, in the maintenance of international peace and security”, the representative of Uruguay stated that Article 2 (5) of the Charter established the obligation of all Members to provide every assistance in any action taken in accordance with the Charter. He argued that such action was collective, and therefore all shared that obligation, under equal conditions, which would ensure that the action was legitimate.⁹²

The Council did adopt several resolutions and a number of presidential statements which might have an implicit bearing on the principle enshrined in Article 2 (5), as grouped into two categories below. First, examples are given of calls for assistance relating to mandatory measures within the framework of Article 41 of the Charter; subsidiary bodies of the Council, including peacekeeping operations; actions of regional organizations authorized under Chapter VII of the Charter; and Council-authorized multinational forces. Secondly, instances are given in which the Council, by its decisions, called on all States to refrain from actions that could be seen as providing assistance to a State against which the United Nations was taking preventive or enforcement action.

Examples of calls for assistance

Assistance relating to measures imposed within the framework of Article 41 of the Charter

During the period under review, implicit references to Article 2 (5) were frequently made in decisions of the Council in connection with the measures imposed by the Council under Article 41 of the Charter.⁹³ In a number of instances, the Council called on States to take action, or otherwise strengthen their efforts, in support of sanctions or other measures that had been imposed by the Council.⁹⁴ In connection with the item entitled “Non-proliferation”, by resolution 1737 (2006) of 23 December 2006, the Council, in imposing sanctions against the Islamic Republic of Iran related to its nuclear programme, called upon all States to exercise vigilance and prevent specialized teaching or training of Iranian nationals, within their territories or by their nationals, of disciplines which would contribute to the Islamic Republic of Iran’s proliferation-sensitive nuclear activities and to the development of nuclear weapon delivery systems.⁹⁵ With regard to the situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Council, by resolution 1533 (2004) of 12 March 2004, reaffirmed the demand made in resolution 1493 (2003) that all States take the necessary measures to prevent the supply of arms and any related materiel or assistance to armed groups operating in North and South Kivu and in the Ituri district, and to groups not parties to the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁹⁶

The Council also called for Member States to give assistance to its subsidiary bodies in connection with measures imposed under Article 41. By resolution 1584 (2005) of 1 February 2005 regarding the situation in Côte d’Ivoire, the Council urged all States to cooperate fully with the Committee established by paragraph 14 of resolution 1572 (2004), the Group of Experts, and the United Nations Operation in Côte d’Ivoire, in particular by supplying any information at their disposal on possible violations of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1572 (2004).⁹⁷

Assistance relating to subsidiary bodies of the Security Council

In a number of decisions, the Council called upon Member States to provide assistance to peacekeeping missions, including provision of troops and material support.⁹⁸ In connection with the situation in Chad, the Central African Republic and the subregion, the Council, by resolution 1778 (2007) of 25 September 2007, urged all Member States to facilitate the delivery to Chad and the Central African Republic freely, without obstacles or delay, of all personnel, equipment, provisions, supplies and other goods, intended for the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad.⁹⁹

In other cases, the Council called on Member States to provide support to other subsidiary organs, including investigative bodies. By resolution 1595 (2005) of 7 April 2005, the Council, in establishing the International Independent Investigation Commission, called upon all States and all parties to cooperate fully with the Commission, and in particular to provide it with any relevant information they might possess pertaining to the terrorist bombing in Beirut on 14 February 2005 that killed the former Prime Minister of Lebanon, Rafiq Hariri, and others.¹⁰⁰

Assistance relating to actions by regional arrangements authorized by the Security Council under Chapter VII

In some cases, the Council called upon Member States to assist enforcement actions taken by the regional arrangements which were authorized by the Council. In connection with the situation in Somalia, by resolution 1772 (2007) of 20 August 2007, the Council urged Member States to provide financial resources, personnel, equipment and services for the full deployment of the African Union Mission in Somalia, which was authorized to take all necessary measures appropriate to carry out its mandate.¹⁰¹ In connection with the situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, by resolution 1671 (2006) of 25 April 2006, while authorizing under Chapter VII of the Charter the temporary deployment of a European Union force to support the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo during the elections period, the Council requested all Member States to provide all necessary support to facilitate the swift deployment of the European Union force.¹⁰²

Assistance relating to multinational forces authorized by the Security Council

In a number of cases, the Council called on States to provide assistance to multinational forces that it had authorized. With regard to Iraq, by resolution 1546 (2004) of 8 June 2004, the Council, in reaffirming the authorization for the multinational force established by resolution 1511 (2003), requested Member States to contribute assistance to the multinational force, including military forces, as agreed with the Government of Iraq, to help to meet the needs of the Iraqi people for security and stability, humanitarian and reconstruction assistance, and to support the efforts of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq.¹⁰³ In the case of Afghanistan, by resolution 1623 (2005) of 13 September 2005, the Council called upon Member States to contribute personnel, equipment and other resources to the International Security Assistance Force whose authorization it extended for another year by that resolution.¹⁰⁴

¹⁰⁴ Resolution 1623 (2005), paras. 1 and 3.

Examples of calls for States to refrain from assisting the target of preventive or enforcement actions

In a number of resolutions concerning the situation in Somalia, the Council reiterated its insistence that all Member States, in particular those in the region, should refrain from any action in contravention of the arms embargo.¹⁰⁵ By resolution 1725 (2006) of 6 December 2006, the Council further insisted that all Member States should take all actions necessary to prevent such contraventions.¹⁰⁶

In connection with the situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Council demanded that the Governments of Uganda, Rwanda and the Democratic Republic of Congo put a stop to, or take measures to prevent, the use of their respective territories in support of violations of the arms embargo or in support of activities of armed groups present in the region.¹⁰⁷

D. Article 2, paragraph 7

Article 2, paragraph 7

Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

Note

During the period under review, the Council adopted no decisions containing an explicit reference to Article 2 (7), but a few decisions did contain provisions which might be deemed to have an implicit bearing on that Article. In connection with United Nations peacekeeping operations, the Council, by a presidential statement dated 17 May 2004, reaffirmed its commitment to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, in particular, the political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States in conducting all peacekeeping and peacebuilding activities.¹⁰⁸

Explicit references to Article 2 (7) were made in a few communications to the Council.¹⁰⁹ In the deliberations of the Council, Article 2 and paragraph 7 thereof were invoked explicitly on several occasions.¹¹⁰ Deliberations during which the principles enshrined in Article 2 (7), while not always expressly invoked, were frequently touched upon, are illustrated in the six cases below. The first case deals with the situation in Myanmar (case 6), and two cases (cases 7 and 8) concern the situation in the Middle East. Case 7 covers Council meetings relating to the adoption of resolution 1559 (2004), while case 8 refers to the discussion relating to resolution 1757 (2007), by which the Council decided to establish a special tribunal for Lebanon. The last three cases relate to thematic issues, namely, the maintenance of international peace and security: role of the Security Council in supporting security sector reform (case 9); maintenance of international peace and security (case 10); and protection of civilians in armed conflict (case 11).

The situation in Myanmar

At the 5526th meeting, on 15 September 2006, before the Council adopted its provisional agenda,¹¹¹ the representative of the United States recalled that, due to the deteriorating situation in Myanmar, which threatened to have a destabilizing impact on the region and was likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, his Government had requested that the situation in Myanmar be placed on the agenda of the Council.¹¹²

The representative of China, pointing out that according to the Charter it was only those questions that constituted threats to international peace and security that warranted discussion by the Council, maintained that labelling the situation in Myanmar as a threat to international peace and security was a “far cry from reality” and argued that to request the Council to discuss an issue which by nature pertained to the internal affairs of a country not only exceeded the mandate given by the Charter to the Council but would also undermine the authority and legality of the Council. Stressing that Myanmar was attempting to solve its own problems, he said that to force the Council into intervening was not only inappropriate but would also further complicate the situation and have a negative impact on future interaction between Myanmar and the United Nations. He maintained that the events in Myanmar related to the internal affairs of that country, and that it should therefore be left to the Government and the people of Myanmar to find a solution to the problem on the basis of consultations.¹¹³ Following the discussion, the provisional agenda was adopted by vote.¹¹⁴

At its 5619th meeting, on 12 January 2007, owing to the negative votes of permanent members,¹¹⁵ the Council failed to adopt a draft resolution,¹¹⁶ by which it would have, inter alia, called on the Government of Myanmar to begin without delay a substantive political dialogue leading to a genuine democratic transition, to include all political stakeholders, including representatives of ethnic nationality groups and political leaders.

The representative of China, in explaining his vote against the draft resolution, maintained that the Myanmar issue was mainly the internal affair of a sovereign State, which did not constitute a threat to international or regional peace and security. He held that if the problems with which Myanmar was faced, such as refugees, child labour, HIV/AIDS, human rights and drugs, were to be arbitrarily labelled as a prominent or potential threat to regional security, included on the agenda of the Council, and made the subject of a draft resolution, then the situations in all other 191 Member States might also need to be considered by the Council. Such an approach was, he said, obviously neither logical nor reasonable. He said that it was the consistent position of China that the internal affairs of Myanmar should be handled mainly and independently by the Government and people of Myanmar themselves through consultation and that the international community could offer all kinds of constructive advice and assistance, but should refrain from arbitrary interference.¹¹⁷

The representative of Qatar, who abstained in the voting, stated that the position of his delegation was one of total respect for the Charter and for international law in a manner that promoted the maintenance of international peace and security and the finding of the best possible solutions to the problems that faced Member States, with no interference in their internal affairs. He recalled that in the view of the neighbouring countries, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, China, and the Non-Aligned Movement, among others, the issue of Myanmar was an internal problem mainly of a humanitarian character that did not pose any threat to international peace and security.¹¹⁸

The situation in the Middle East

In connection with a draft resolution before the Council concerning Syrian-Lebanese relations,¹¹⁹ the representative of Lebanon, by identical letters dated 30 August 2004 to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council,¹²⁰ expressed the fear that the timing of the submission of the draft resolution could adversely affect the electoral process of the forthcoming presidential election in his country and that the Council could subsequently be seen as a tool of intervention in Lebanon's internal affairs. He expressed concern that it could create a grave precedent that could lead the United Nations to abandon its fundamental role and become involved in the internal affairs of a Member State. Similarly, by identical letters dated 1 September 2004 to the Secretary-General and the President,¹²¹ the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic expressed the view that the discussion of the topic by the Security Council contradicted Article 2 (7) of the Charter and was a dangerous precedent, which deviated from the Council's main functions and made it "a tool for illegal interference" in the internal affairs of an independent and sovereign State.

At the 5028th meeting, on 2 September 2004, the draft resolution was adopted by 9 votes, with 6 abstentions (Algeria, Brazil, China, Pakistan, Philippines, Russian Federation), as resolution 1559 (2004), by which the Council, mindful of the upcoming Lebanese presidential elections, and underlining the importance of free and fair elections according to Lebanese constitutional rules devised without foreign interference or influence, inter alia, reaffirmed its call for the strict respect of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and political independence of Lebanon under the sole and exclusive authority of the Government of Lebanon throughout the country.¹²²

The representative of Lebanon stressed that the references in the resolution to support for free and fair presidential elections in Lebanon were unprecedented as the elections were "an internal matter". He argued that the legitimacy of the United Nations, the Charter and the rules of procedure of the Council provided no justification for that resolution, which constituted interference in the internal affairs of a State Member of the Organization.¹²³ The representative of China maintained that questions concerning presidential elections fell within the purview of the internal affairs of Lebanon and should be freely decided by the Lebanese people themselves.¹²⁴ The representative of Brazil was also of the view that resolution 1559 (2004) dealt with matters that were essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of Lebanon.¹²⁵

The representative of Algeria stated that the Council should neither interfere in the internal affairs of States nor in the bilateral relations between States, especially when those in no way posed a threat to international peace and security. He noted that the consideration by the Council of a matter that was internal to Lebanon constituted an unfortunate precedent that should not be repeated, lest the Council be dragged seriously adrift, with consequences that would be detrimental to its credibility and to the Charter, in both its letter and spirit.¹²⁶ The representative of Pakistan, citing both Article 24 (2) and Article 2 (7) of the Charter, argued that the resolution, in its sixth preambular paragraph and operative paragraph 5, intervened in the internal affairs of Lebanon and held that such intervention was unacceptable, contrary to the Charter, and set an unfortunate precedent.¹²⁷

The representative of the Philippines opined that the adoption of resolution 1559 (2004) as part of the role given to the Council in the collective security system under the Charter could not be justified. He held that there was a fine, but nevertheless clear, boundary that demarcated the role of the Council in the maintenance of international peace and security as embodied in Article 39. His delegation's view was that resolution 1559 (2004) crossed that line and "collided head-on" with the principle of non-interference embodied in the Charter. He maintained that Article 2 (7) of the Charter was "sacrosanct", and emphasized that the action of his delegation was aimed at preserving the integrity of the Charter and its time-honoured values of sovereign equality of States and non-interference.¹²⁸

The representative of France asserted that the Council was not committing an act of interference by denouncing the risk to international peace and security represented by the current crisis. Rather, he added, if the Council refrained from taking action, it would be sanctioning the inadmissible interference by a State in the internal affairs of another sovereign State.¹²⁹

The situation in the Middle East

By a letter dated 14 May 2007 to the Secretary-General, the Prime Minister of Lebanon recalled that the parliamentary majority had expressed its support for the Special Tribunal and asked that his request that the Tribunal be put into effect be presented to the Council as a matter of urgency.¹³⁰ In transmitting that letter, the Secretary-General concurred with the Prime Minister that regrettably all domestic options for the ratification of the Special Tribunal appeared to be exhausted, while acknowledging that the resolution of the issue among the Lebanese parties based on a national consensus would have been preferable.¹³¹

By a letter dated 15 May 2007 to the Secretary-General, the President of Lebanon, in reference to the above-mentioned letter from the Prime Minister, stressed that the approval of the Tribunal directly by the Security Council would constitute a "transgression of the constitutional mechanism that had been completely ignored". He further expressed his desire that the Security Council not be involved in the internal affairs of his country and its established constitutional mechanism and not favour one political grouping over another.¹³²

At its 5685th meeting, on 30 May 2007, by 10 votes, with 5 abstentions (China, Indonesia, Qatar, Russian Federation, South Africa), the Council adopted resolution 1757 (2007), by which, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, it decided, inter alia, that the provisions of the annexed agreement on the establishment of a Special Tribunal for Lebanon should enter into force on 10 June 2007, unless the Government of Lebanon provided notification before that date that the legal requirements for entry into force had been complied with.¹³³

The representative of Indonesia pointed out that although the resolution had been based on a request from the Prime Minister of Lebanon, the Council needed to take into consideration that there was no unified voice among the leaders of Lebanon. He further argued that the resolution had changed the legal nature of article 19 of the agreement, which clearly stated that the agreement should enter into force on the day after the Government of Lebanon had notified the United Nations that the internal legal requirements for its entry into force had been met. He expressed concern that the resolution would bypass the constitutional procedures and national processes of Lebanon. He stressed that the Council had no legal grounds to take over an issue that was domestic in nature. Quoting Article 2 (7), he reminded the Council that, while that provision did not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII, the Council should not be involved in “an exercise of interpreting, let alone taking over” the constitutional requirements with which a State should comply regarding the conduct of its own authorities.¹³⁴

The representative of South Africa maintained that it was inappropriate for the Council to impose such a tribunal on Lebanon, especially under Chapter VII of the Charter. The Council had no right to bypass the procedures required by the Constitution of Lebanon for the entry into force of an agreement with the United Nations. He said that, in discarding the Constitution of Lebanon, the Council was contravening its own decision regarding the need to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and political independence of Lebanon.¹³⁵

The representative of China expressed concern that, by invoking Chapter VII of the Charter, the resolution would override the legislative organs of Lebanon by arbitrarily deciding on the date of the entry into force of the draft statute of the Tribunal. He cautioned that such a move would create a precedent of Council interference in the domestic affairs and legislative independence of a sovereign State, thus undermining the authority of the Council.¹³⁶

The representative of the Russian Federation described the resolution as legally dubious because the treaty between the two entities, Lebanon and the United Nations, by definition could not enter into force on the basis of a decision by only one party. The imposition of the constituent documents for the Tribunal by a unilateral decision of a United Nations body — a Security Council resolution — essentially represented an encroachment upon the sovereignty of Lebanon.¹³⁷

The representative of the United Kingdom argued in response that the adoption of resolution 1757 (2007) was not a capricious intervention or interference in the domestic political affairs of a sovereign State. In his opinion, it was a considered response by the Council, properly taken, to a request from the Government of Lebanon for action to overcome a continued impasse in the internal procedures of Lebanon, despite long and serious efforts to find a solution within Lebanon.¹³⁸ The representative of Peru was of the view that the resolution was the only way to overcome the legislative impasse regarding the establishment of the Tribunal in Lebanon, while stressing that it was due to the particular circumstances of the case.¹³⁹

The maintenance of international peace and security: role of the Security Council in supporting security sector reform

In a concept paper for an open debate on the item entitled “The maintenance of international peace and security: role of the Security Council in supporting security sector reform”,¹⁴⁰ the representative of Slovakia pointed out that security sector reform depended on national ownership because reform of the most sensitive sector of the State needed to be shaped and driven by local actors and supported, if necessary, by external actors.¹⁴¹

At the 5632nd meeting, on 20 February 2007, a number of speakers recognized the importance of national ownership in implementing security sector reform, which, in particular in post-conflict situations, should be supported by the international community, including the United Nations.¹⁴² The representative of the United Kingdom held that security sector reform was a national responsibility which should be defined and owned by national stakeholders, informed by the best international standards and practices and then supported by the international community.¹⁴³ According to the representative of Italy, the role of the United Nations in security sector reform was fundamental, given that the Organization was the actor that enjoyed the international legitimacy needed to act in a sector as sensitive as State security.¹⁴⁴ The representative of Japan said that for the eventual handover of security sector responsibilities from the international community to the local Government to be conducted smoothly, it was imperative, first and foremost, that the Council ensured that the intervention of the international community in a conflict, whenever the Council decided to authorize such intervention, was made with legitimacy.¹⁴⁵

While recognizing the important role of the United Nations in security sector reform through its peacekeeping and peacebuilding efforts, the representative of China asserted that, in any security sector reform exercise, the will of the countries concerned should be respected, as the rebuilding of national institutions was essentially a country's internal affair and would depend on the country itself. He added that the international community, for its part, should act more as an adviser and assistance provider aiming at improving capacity to build national strength and helping to find mechanisms and approaches that fitted their national conditions, instead of "going beyond given mandates or even acting arbitrarily".¹⁴⁶ Similarly, the representative of Qatar argued that recognizing the sovereign rights of States and national ownership of the security sector process was critical to guaranteeing its success and sustainability,¹⁴⁷ and the representative of Uruguay opined that, given that security sector reform affected institutions which protected State sovereignty, such reform would not be viable without agreement, ownership, cooperation and the full participation of the State carrying it out.¹⁴⁸

The representative of the Sudan stressed that any discussion of security sector reform should be undertaken within a clear frame of reference and based in particular on the purposes and principles of the Charter, including respect for State sovereignty, territorial integrity and national unity, respect for the national choices made by countries and for their economic and social systems, and non-interference in the internal affairs of States. He reiterated that, since security sector reform was a gradual phased process focusing on sensitive sovereign institutions, the only guarantee of its viability was the participation of national institutions of the country concerned, in accordance with the principle of respect for State sovereignty and legitimacy, in other words, national ownership.¹⁴⁹

The representative of Cuba, speaking on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, argued that there was a lack of clarity as to how to assess the ineffectiveness [of the security sector], which had led to divergent interpretations and value judgements. That could lead to arbitrary implementation, thus undermining and infringing upon the concept of sovereignty, which was a matter of overriding concern in the Charter. He argued that security sector reform was a matter that should be decided by national Governments based on their national strategies for post-conflict peacebuilding. He maintained that it was not the prerogative of the international community to prescribe the road to follow and thus national ownership was essential. He stressed that past mistakes, such as when the Council attempted to impose reforms on the judicial and security sectors without the prior consent of the concerned State, should not be repeated.¹⁵⁰

The representative of Egypt also argued that no widespread agreement on a new concept of security sector reform existed, especially considering that security sector reform was linked to a number of controversial ideas on which there was also no consensus, such as the "responsibility to protect" and "human security". He maintained that those ideas sought to utilize humanitarian concepts to codify interference in the internal affairs of States without even reaching international agreement on the definition of those ideas, the scope of their application or their relationship to the sovereignty of each State over its territory. He further argued that, if the purpose was to help States emerging from conflict to shoulder their responsibilities, then the issue was not about reforming but “rehabilitating” security institutions, which fell within the purview of national capacity-building. He asserted that only after there had been a comprehensive debate in the General Assembly to reach consensus on the objectives of reforms and the scope of their application while respecting the fundamental principles of the Charter, including respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and unity of States and non-interference in their internal affairs, could the Council discuss its limited role in supporting the national will of States to reform their security sectors, within the limits of the prerogatives of the Council, and only in areas affecting the maintenance of international peace and security.¹⁵¹

By a statement made by the President at that meeting, the Council underlined that it was the sovereign right and the primary responsibility of the country concerned to determine the national approach and priorities of security sector reform. Security sector reform should be a nationally owned process that was rooted in the particular needs and conditions of the country in question. The Council also underlined that the United Nations had a crucial role to play in promoting comprehensive, coherent and coordinated international support to nationally-owned security sector reform programmes, implemented with the consent of the country concerned.¹⁵²

Maintenance of international peace and security

At the 5705th meeting, on 25 June 2007, considering the issue of natural resources and conflict, some speakers noted that, in addressing the link between natural resources and conflict, it was necessary to respect the full and permanent sovereignty of countries over their natural resources.¹⁵³

The representative of Qatar emphasized that the principles of national political and economic independence depended on a State being able to exercise the undiminished right of self-determination and full sovereignty over its natural resources in the interest of development and the well-being of its people, in accordance with international law.

Accordingly, endowing the Security Council with authority over those resources contravened international law and diminished the sovereignty of States over their natural resources.¹⁵⁴

The representative of the Russian Federation said that combating the illicit use of natural resources was, first and foremost, the prerogative and obligation of the Government of the State concerned. He believed that the primary role of the United Nations in the process of tackling the problem should be to help States, at their request, by providing political and advisory support. In his opinion, the sanctions mechanisms of the Council and their groups of experts contributed in that context, when the relevant crisis situations were before the Council. He stressed that the Council should be guided by the Charter principles of non-interference in the internal affairs, sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States. He emphasized the importance of maintaining a balance between the efforts of the international community to prevent escalation of conflicts through the illegal exploitation of natural resources, and the strict observance of the sovereign right of States to use their natural resources.¹⁵⁵

Similarly, the representative of Argentina opined that the Council’s authority to impose sanctions on the illegal exploitation of natural resources in countries on the Council’s agenda because of a specific conflict which threatened international peace and security was clearly among the powers conferred upon the Council by the Charter. The situation would be different, however, if the Council were to determine that preventive intervention was necessary owing to a risk that exploitation of a given country’s natural resources could in the future lead to a conflict posing a threat to international peace and security. He held that such a determination would violate the principle of non-intervention in the internal affairs of States set out in the Charter, because the intervention would be based on the potential consequences that the sovereign actions of a country could have for international peace and security.¹⁵⁶

By a statement made by the President at that meeting, the Council reaffirmed that every State had the full and inherent sovereign right to control and exploit its own natural resources in accordance with the Charter and the principles of international law. The Council also recognized that United Nations missions and peacekeeping operations deployed in resource-endowed countries experiencing armed conflict could play a role in helping the Governments concerned, with full respect of their sovereignty over their natural resources, to prevent the illegal exploitation of those resources from further fuelling the conflict.¹⁵⁷

Protection of civilians in armed conflict

At the 4990th meeting, on 14 June 2004, several speakers affirmed that responsibilities to protect civilians rested with the States concerned.¹⁵⁸ At the same time, some of them, including the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator, pointed out that, when Governments were unable or unwilling to take on that responsibility, the United Nations needed to execute its responsibilities.¹⁵⁹ In particular, the representative of Uganda stated that there should be an obligation on the part of the international community to intervene and protect people in failed States or States that were unwilling to protect their citizens from the scourge of conflict. In his opinion, the right to protect should transcend the notion of sovereignty. He commended the African Union, which had enshrined in its Charter the right to intervene in certain circumstances, notwithstanding the issue of sovereignty.¹⁶⁰ The representative of Canada, speaking also on behalf of Australia and New Zealand, held that Member States themselves needed to take primary responsibility for ensuring the protection of their own people, as it was a responsibility implicit in the very concept of State sovereignty. While stressing that much more could and should be done by Member States, he said that when they failed to assume that responsibility the Security Council had to act.¹⁶¹

Pointing out the difficulties in ensuring access to humanitarian assistance when dealing with non-State actors, the representative of Colombia cautioned that legitimate concerns about humanitarian access should not end up threatening legitimate Governments, interfering in internal affairs or violating fundamental purposes and principles of the Charter.¹⁶² Similarly, the representative of Nepal was of the view that any humanitarian assistance provided by the international community to a particular country to address suffering, whether occasioned by natural disaster or by man-made disaster, should be provided only with the consent of the State concerned and in accordance with the Charter. He maintained that efforts to gain access to illegal armed groups should in no way infringe on the principle of State sovereignty.¹⁶³ The Under-Secretary-General, in response, concurred that the issue of engagement with non-State armed groups was a sensitive and complex one and reaffirmed that in situations of armed conflict Governments bore the primary responsibility to provide humanitarian access, protect civilians and cooperate with humanitarian agencies. He asserted that any engagement with non-State armed groups had to be aimed solely at providing protection and humanitarian assistance to civilians in areas under their control and be conducted transparently, neutrally and impartially in a manner that did not in any way legitimize the armed groups concerned.¹⁶⁴

Consideration of the functions and powers of the Security Council (Articles 24 to 26 of the Charter)

1. In order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations, its Members confer on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, and agree that in carrying out its duties under this responsibility the Security Council acts on their behalf.
2. In discharging these duties the Security Council shall act in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations. The specific powers granted to the Security Council for the discharge of these duties are laid down in Chapters VI, VII, VIII and XII.
3. The Security Council shall submit annual and, when necessary, special reports to the General Assembly for its consideration.

Note

During the period under review, none of the decisions adopted by the Security Council contained an explicit reference to Article 24 of the Charter.¹⁶⁵ A number of resolutions and presidential statements did however contain provisions that related to this Article. The provision by which Member States confer on the Council the primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security was implicitly referred to primarily in connection with thematic issues. By such decisions, the Council recalled its responsibilities under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security.¹⁶⁶ recalled its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and considered post-conflict peacebuilding closely linked to its primary responsibilities.¹⁶⁸ In connection with threats to international peace and security, the Council, welcoming the newly-appointed Secretary-General, committed itself to work closely and in a focused and action-oriented manner with him in order to better address the multifaceted and interconnected challenges and threats confronting the world, “within its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, as provided for in the Charter”.¹⁶⁹ In connection with the item entitled “Maintenance of international peace and security: role of the Security Council in supporting security sector reform”, in acknowledging the need for a comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on United Nations approaches to security sector reform, the Council expressed its readiness to consider such a report “within the scope of its prerogatives” under the Charter.¹⁷⁰ In connection with the item entitled “Letter dated 4 July 2006 from the Permanent Representative of Japan to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council”,¹⁷¹ the Council adopted resolution 1695 (2006), “acting under its special responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security”.¹⁷²

Explicit references to Article 24 were also made on several occasions in proceedings of the Council.¹⁷⁴ At the 5246th meeting, on 4 August 2005, in connection with threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts, following the unanimous adoption of resolution 1618 (2005), the representative of Iraq declared that the Council had spoken with one voice on an issue that was at the core of its functions, powers and responsibilities as specified in Article 24 of the Charter, namely, peace and security. In doing so, he held, the Council was acting, as the Article stated, on behalf of all Member States.¹⁷⁵

In order to illustrate the interpretation and application of Article 24 by the Council, the following six cases were drawn from deliberations of the Council on its role and responsibilities under the Charter. Case 12

The situation in Myanmar

At its 5619th meeting, on 12 January 2007, owing to the negative votes of permanent members,¹⁷⁶ the Council failed to adopt a draft resolution,¹⁷⁷ by which it would have, inter alia, called on the Government of Myanmar to begin without delay a substantive political dialogue leading to a genuine democratic transition, cease military attacks against civilians in ethnic minority regions and put an end to the associated human rights and humanitarian law violations.

The representative of China held that, since various United Nations agencies had already held discussions on the Myanmar issue, and given that the primary responsibility entrusted by the Charter to the Council was to maintain world peace and security, and that the matter was mainly the internal affair of a sovereign State which did not constitute a threat to international or regional peace and security, there was no need for the Council to get involved or to take action. In the event that the Council took action on the issue of Myanmar, he believed that the Council would not only exceed its mandate, but also hinder discussions by other relevant United Nations agencies and bring no benefit to the Secretary-General's good offices efforts.¹⁷⁸ The representative of the Russian Federation pointed out that the problems in Myanmar mentioned in the draft resolution were being considered within the framework of other bodies of the United Nations system, such as the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council. In his view, duplication of their efforts by the Security Council would be counterproductive and would not facilitate the division of labour between the main bodies of the Organization, as provided for in the Charter, or the development of their constructive cooperation. He further deemed "unacceptable" any attempt to use the Security Council to discuss issues outside its purview.¹⁷⁹

The representative of South Africa insisted that the draft resolution did not fit with the mandate conferred by the Charter upon the Council. He also stated that the matter would be best left to the Human Rights Council. Should the Security Council adopt the draft resolution, it would mean that the Human Rights Council would be unable to address the matter while the Security Council remained seized with the issue.¹⁸⁰ The representative of Qatar strongly believed that the Organization should continue to help Myanmar to overcome its internal problems through such competent organs as the Third Committee of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Human Rights Council. In his view, for the efforts of those organs to be fruitful, carried out correctly and without duplication or starting from scratch, an organ such as the Security Council should not encroach on the competences of other organs, given that it shouldered tremendous responsibilities in the area of international peace and security. He concluded that the Council's resources should be directed towards resolving problems of international peace and security, and that the Council should not create a precedent that could have negative consequences for international relations.¹⁸¹ The representative of the Congo also deemed that the matter fell under the purview of other United Nations bodies than the Security Council.¹⁸²

The representative of Indonesia maintained that there were other bodies in the United Nations, such as the Human Rights Council, that were “more appropriate” venues for addressing the problem of Myanmar. While recognizing that the issue of Myanmar had become not just a bilateral or regional issue but an international one, he said that it was a matter of principle to consider whether a resolution of the Council would be effective in addressing the problem, or whether the Council was the appropriate body to address the issue.¹⁸³

Expressing disappointment at the failure of the Council to adopt the draft resolution and attributing it to the disagreement among Council members regarding the competence of the Council, the representative of the United Kingdom declared that the issue was within the responsibilities of the Council. While acknowledging that the Council did not claim an exclusive interest, as other organs of the United Nations had a key role to play in tackling the problems affecting Myanmar, he urged the Council, for its part, to continue to monitor the situation in Myanmar, which was not an impediment to the issue being considered by any other entity of the United Nations.¹⁸⁴ The representative of Belgium considered that the Council was legitimately seized of the question of Myanmar.¹⁸⁵ The representative of France said that the situation in that country called for the international community’s serious concern with respect to important aspects of the Council’s responsibilities.¹⁸⁶

The representative of Panama noted that his country had assumed its seat on the Council with a view to acting on behalf of and for the Member States with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security. He opined that the topic actually being addressed far transcended the situation in Myanmar, being in fact the functions and mandate of the Security Council, specifically its capacity to act preventively. Being aware that important changes had occurred in the international situation since the Charter had been adopted, he stressed the need, in the face of new realities, for a discussion on the functions of various bodies of the United Nations, and of the Security Council in particular. He hoped that such discussions would lead to the development of an understanding that all of those bodies should act as part of a whole and not in a segregated and individual fashion.¹⁸⁷

The representative of Myanmar, for his part, declared that under Article 24 of the Charter, Member States had conferred upon the Council the primary responsibility for maintenance of international peace and security. He pointed out that there were many issues that deserved, even demanded, the immediate attention of the Council. In his view, Myanmar was “by no stretch of the imagination” among them. He stressed that, had the draft resolution been adopted, it would have created a dangerous precedent and would have clearly exceeded the mandate given by the Charter to the Council, undermining the Council’s authority and legality.¹⁸⁸

Non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction

At its 4950th meeting, on 22 April 2004, the Council held an open debate in connection with a draft resolution concerning the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.¹⁸⁹ Noting that the mandate conferred upon it by the Charter entitled the Council to play the leading role in the global fight against terrorism, the representative of Angola, echoed by the representative of Romania, welcomed the Council’s decision to consider the adoption of a resolution on the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. In his view, the draft resolution addressed a widely felt urgency to fill the existing gap in international law relating to the non-proliferation regimes and preventing weapons of mass destruction from falling into the hands of non-State actors.¹⁹⁰

The representative of the United Kingdom held that, in the face of the urgent threat of weapons of mass destruction falling into the hands of terrorists and other non-State actors, only the Council could act with the necessary speed and authority. He stressed that it was not only “appropriate” for the Council to act, but “imperative” that it did so.¹⁹¹ Similarly, the representative of the Russian Federation expressed the belief that the Council was not only entitled but also obligated to take appropriate measures in the area of international security and stressed that the draft resolution under consideration was not an exception in that respect, citing as an example resolution 984 (1995), which provided for security assurances in the case of an attack on States, including with the use of nuclear weapons.¹⁹² The representative of Sweden recalled that his Government had consistently advocated that a strong and central role be given to the Council in addressing threats to international peace and security posed by weapons of mass destruction. He consequently considered it both timely and proper that the Council, as the body with the main responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, was addressing questions related to the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction in a comprehensive manner.¹⁹³ The representative of Australia maintained that, as a clear threat to international peace and security, proliferation of weapons of mass destruction fell within the Council’s mandate. Recalling the presidential statement of 31 January 1992,¹⁹⁴ by which the Council had recognized the threat posed by the proliferation of all weapons of mass destruction to international peace and security, he deemed it entirely appropriate and consistent with its mandate to maintain international peace and security that the Council dealt with the issue.¹⁹⁵

The representative of Liechtenstein affirmed that open debates constituted an important means of enabling the Council to hear the views of other Member States and thus to act truly on their behalf, as foreseen in the Charter. Such an approach, in his view, was of particular importance when the Council tackled, on an exceptional basis, issues in the area of standard-setting and lawmaking, as was the case with the issue of proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.¹⁹⁶

While welcoming the fact that the Council was addressing the dangers posed by the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, the representative of Norway expressed the belief that the General Assembly

had an important role to play in all non-proliferation efforts.¹⁹⁷ The representative of Namibia observed that, under the existing international law regime, which recognized the sovereignty of States, the affected States should take part in the negotiation of any measure that sought to impose obligations over and above existing treaties and conventions, and hence stressed that the issue under consideration should be discussed in the General Assembly.¹⁹⁸ Expressing concern over the “increasing tendency” of the Council to assume “new and wider powers of legislation” on behalf of the international community, with its resolutions binding on all States, the representative of India drew attention to the fact that the exercise of legislative functions by the Council, combined with the recourse to Chapter VII mandates, could disrupt the balance of power between the General Assembly and the Security Council, as enshrined in the Charter.¹⁹⁹

Several speakers were of the view that, in principle, legislative obligations should be established through multinational negotiations. Given the urgency of the matter, the Council could assume a treaty-making or legislative function in exceptional circumstances, but it should do so with caution.²⁰⁰ According to the representative of Algeria, in the absence of international binding standards and because of the seriousness and urgent nature of the threat, the response to it needed to be articulated and formulated by the Council. He maintained that the Council was acting in an exceptional manner, since the Charter did not give it a mandate to legislate on behalf of the international community, but simply gave it the principal responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security.²⁰¹

The representative of Mexico expressed concern over not only the proliferation of parallel regimes to those already established, using channels outside the norms of existing treaties, but also the growing trend whereby the Council sought to legislate, particularly with regard to issues that had their own regime of rights and obligations, even if they were incomplete when it came to non-State actors.²⁰²

In reference to the question whether the Council had the right to prescribe legislative action, the representative of Pakistan pointed out that existing treaties, such as the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, already stipulated most of the legislation that would cover proliferation by both State and non-State actors. He argued that the Council, comprising five nuclear powers with the right to “veto”, was not the most appropriate body to be entrusted with the authority for oversight over non-proliferation or nuclear disarmament.²⁰³ Similarly, the representative of Cuba expressed concern that the Council, a body known to be of limited composition and in which some members had the right of veto, had taken the initiative to prepare a draft resolution on a subject which, in his view, should be considered in the framework of the traditional multilateral disarmament setting, where the appropriate space existed for negotiating a legally binding instrument.²⁰⁴

The representative of Indonesia said he believed that any far-reaching assumption of authority by the Council to enact global legislation was not consistent with the Charter, and therefore insisted on the necessity of involving all States in the negotiating process towards the establishment of international norms on the issue.²⁰⁵ The representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran stated that the draft resolution represented a “clear manifestation” of the Council’s departure from its Charter-based mandate, as the Charter did not confer authority on the Council to act as a global legislature imposing obligations on States without their participation in the process.²⁰⁶ Noting a growing trend towards granting the Council additional legislative powers, the representative of Egypt insisted that the Charter did not give the Council such legislative authority, but only the power to safeguard the Charter and to monitor compliance with its provisions.²⁰⁷ Holding that the Council lacked competence in making treaties, the representative of Nepal expressed concern that, by the draft resolution under consideration, the Council sought to establish something tantamount to a treaty by fiat, an approach which was likely to undermine the intergovernmental treaty-making process and implementation mechanisms. To ensure the support of the broader membership needed for maintaining international peace and security, he argued that the Council should work within its mandate and be seen to be doing so. He said that the Council should resist the temptation of acting as a “world legislature, a world administration and a world court rolled into one”.²⁰⁸

At its 4956th meeting, on 28 April 2004, the Council adopted resolution 1540 (2004), by which, affirming its resolve to take appropriate and effective action against any threat to international peace and security caused by the proliferation of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and their means of delivery, in conformity with its primary responsibilities, as provided for in the Charter, and acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council decided that all States should refrain from providing any form of support to non-State actors that attempted to develop, acquire, manufacture, possess, transport, transfer or use nuclear, chemical or biological weapons and their means of delivery.²⁰⁹

The representative of France stated that, with regard to proliferation, the Council drew its legitimacy to act from the Charter, since the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery constituted a threat to international peace and security.²¹⁰ The representative of Romania held that, with the adoption of resolution 1540 (2004), the Council had lived up to its responsibilities: addressing one of the most ominous challenges to international peace and security.²¹¹

Nations, in particular the General Assembly. By those letters, the Non-Aligned Movement reiterated its concern over the continuing encroachment by the Council on the functions and powers of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council through addressing issues which traditionally fell within the competence of the latter organs, and the exercise by the Council of norm-setting and establishment of definitions, which fell within the purview of the General Assembly, citing Article 24 of the Charter. The Non-Aligned Movement also stressed the accountability of the Security Council to the General Assembly, consistent with that Article.²¹²

Similarly, by a letter dated 17 February 2006 to the President, the representative of South Africa, on behalf of the Group of 77 and China, expressed concern over the continuing encroachment by the Council on the functions and powers of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, stating that for the Council to discuss such matters as procurement was contrary to Article 24 of the Charter.²¹³

At the 5376th meeting, on 22 February 2006, the Chef de Cabinet of the Executive Office of the Secretary-General, in his briefing on the recent audit by the Office of Internal Oversight Services of peacekeeping procurement and the actions taken to improve the procurement system, recognized that the issue was of interest to the Council, while stressing the leading role of the General Assembly in those matters.²¹⁴

Following the briefing, several representatives held the view that issues involving the use of peacekeeping funds in procurement management belonged to the General Assembly.²¹⁵ The representative of China observed that, while the Council had primary responsibility in matters regarding the deployment, extension and conclusion of peacekeeping operations and the defining of their mandates and scale, issues involving the use of peacekeeping funds in procurement management belonged to the General Assembly and its subsidiary organs, in keeping with the principle of division of labour among United Nations bodies, which helped all entities to play their proper roles, prevent duplication and facilitate mutual oversight.²¹⁶ Noting that the General Assembly was in fact actively seized of the subject, the representative of Sierra Leone, speaking on behalf of the Group of African States, viewed the debate as an encroachment on the authority of the General Assembly.²¹⁷

Speaking on behalf of the Group of 77 and China, the representative of South Africa noted that the Council was not the forum for discussing matters that fell within the purview of the General Assembly. Recalling that the Charter clearly set out that the General Assembly was the chief deliberative, policy-making and representative organ of the United Nations, he expressed concern over the encroachment by the Council on the functions and powers of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. In his view, by discussing such matters as procurement, the Council was infringing on issues that traditionally fell outside of its competence and assuming for itself norm-setting powers that were solely within the purview of the General Assembly, which was contrary to Article 24 of the Charter. He held that the debate undermined the General Assembly, particularly the oversight functions that belonged to all Member States.²¹⁸

The representative of Malaysia, speaking on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, stated that not only was it inappropriate for the Council to discuss the issues of oversight and management, which were the functions of the General Assembly, but it was even more inappropriate to have such a discussion based on a report that had been mandated by the General Assembly. While mindful of the multifaceted and multidisciplinary character of the mandates of the peacekeeping operations sanctioned by the Council and bearing in mind Article 24 of the Charter, the representative strongly affirmed that the Council was not given the competence to address issues which fell within the functions and powers of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and cautioned about the danger of encroachment by the Council on issues which clearly fell within the functions and powers of the General Assembly and its subsidiary bodies. Underlining the need for full respect for the functions and powers of the principal organs of the Organization and for maintaining the balance among them within their respective powers in accordance with the Charter, he insisted on the need for Member States, in respecting and upholding the Charter, to stop any attempt to shift issues from the agenda of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council to the Council.²¹⁹

Noting that the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services had been initiated by the General Assembly, the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania considered it only fair that the organ that had mandated the report should experience a sense of dispossession when it was not the first in line to examine and pronounce itself on the report. In his view, the initiatives of the Security Council and the General Assembly should be complementary in addressing the issues raised by the report.²²⁰

On the other hand, while stressing that there could be no substitute for systematic consideration and action by the General Assembly and its subsidiary bodies which dealt with the management of, and resources for, United Nations peacekeeping, the representative of the United Kingdom pointed out that the Council was responsible for the mandates of United Nations peacekeepers and needed to understand the challenges and shortcomings of peacekeeping in the field and at Headquarters in order to deliver effective mandates. He further believed that it was incumbent not just on the General Assembly and its subsidiary bodies but also on the Council to follow the discussion, to consider any appropriate recommendations and to reflect the lessons learned in designing future mandates.²²¹ The representative of Japan declared that the issue under consideration fell clearly under the purview of the Council, as the organ responsible for the creation of the mandates of United Nations peacekeeping operations and for their overall oversight, and therefore supported the Council's taking up the issue. Noting that the issues of management, budget and procurement had generally been the prerogative of the General Assembly, as the chief deliberative and representative organ of the United Nations, he believed that the two bodies needed to work with a sense of urgency, by complementing each other and ensuring coherence in the overall approach to the matter.²²² The representative of the United States pointed out that, given the Council's clear responsibility under the Charter for creating, supervising and terminating peacekeeping operations, the legitimacy of the open briefing could not be doubted. He added that, as a whole, the Security Council bore responsibility, along with the Secretariat, to ensure that United Nations peacekeeping operations were undertaken in the most efficient and transparent manner possible.²²³ The representative of France held that the General Assembly clearly had an important part to play in monitoring peacekeeping operations and counted on the General Assembly to complete and follow up on the reports it had requested. At the same time, he stressed that, as the body which had the responsibility for international peace and security, the Council, too, was set up to examine such questions and could not remain aloof from the material conditions surrounding its mission.²²⁴ The representative of Peru observed that the consideration of the management of peacekeeping operations was already a practice of the Council and insisted that such practice did not ignore the fact that the General Assembly was the principal organ considering the issue. Furthermore, he noted that, to ensure that peacekeeping operations were effective, the Council was "duty-bound" to review its management and any abuses, irregularities or corruption that might have occurred.²²⁵

Strengthening international law: rule of law and maintenance of international peace and security

By a letter dated 7 June 2006 to the Secretary-General, in preparation for the open debate on strengthening international law, the representative of Denmark expressed the view that the Security Council, in the previous decade, had increasingly resorted to legal mechanisms in fulfilling its responsibilities. While recognizing the important role of the General Assembly in the progressive development of international law, she underlined that the objective of the debate was to consider the Council's particular role in promoting international law and to discuss the legal

At the 5474th meeting, on 22 June 2006, the President, speaking in his capacity as the representative of Denmark, declared that the Council was a political body with far-reaching powers to maintain and restore international peace and security and yet operated within a legal framework set out by the Charter. He emphasized that, more than ever before, the Council's legitimacy and credibility rested on its explicit commitment to operate within the framework and in the furtherance of international law.²²⁷

The representative of the Russian Federation held that promoting the rule of law in international relations was the cornerstone of any lasting system of collective security, in which the United Nations, the General Assembly and the Security Council played a key role. He further recalled that in the recent past the Council's legislative activities had influenced the establishment and interpretation of international legal norms. He pointed to the Council's decisions to establish ad hoc international tribunals and to impose measures to counteract terrorism and the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. In his view, those innovations in the Council's work, as the body with the main responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, merited the attention of legal experts.²²⁸

While acknowledging that the Council acted on behalf of all Member States pursuant to Article 24 of the Charter, the representative of Argentina pointed out the perceptions that existed among Member States outside of the Council that the Council had decided at times to act as a "global judge and legislature".²²⁹

The representative of Mexico insisted that the Council should refrain from taking decisions of a legislative nature, which fell under the purview of the General Assembly, as provided for under Article 13 of the Charter. Given the far-reaching nature of the responsibilities entrusted to the Council by the Charter and the fact that the Council acted on behalf of all Member States, he deemed that respecting the "limits imposed by the Charter" was more important for the Council than for any other organ. He suggested that the Council should instead encourage the General Assembly to codify and develop international law whenever it believed that the legal framework in force was not adequate to cope with threats to international peace and security. He recalled that his country had expressed serious objections about the power of the Council to establish jurisdictional bodies when the General Assembly had set for itself the task of negotiating the Rome Statute for the International Criminal Court, in order to end the establishment of ad hoc tribunals by the Council. He urged the Council to involve the General Assembly more closely in its work and underlined that a restrictive interpretation of the competency of the Council on the basis of Article 12 of the Charter was no longer appropriate. He believed that both organs had "concurrent competencies" in all matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security. He referred to the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice, which stipulated that Article 24 conferred primary "but not necessarily exclusive" responsibility on the Council in that regard.²³⁰ Similarly, the representative of Sierra Leone stated that, while the Council had primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, strengthening international law was not the exclusive domain of the Security Council, as the General Assembly and its organs had an important role to play in that respect.²³¹

The representative of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela held that the Council's action in strengthening international law should complement the "leading role" played by the General Assembly, given the strengths of the General Assembly as a deliberative, legislative, democratic and representative organ of the Organization. Bearing in mind that the Council's competencies were derived from the Charter, which had been agreed among Member States and served as a constitutional framework for the Organization, she underlined that the Council had to act in strict conformity with the Charter in carrying out its functions. She argued that Article 24 of the Charter did not necessarily provide the Council with the competency to address issues that corresponded to the functions and powers of the General Assembly or the Economic and Social Council, including the establishment of rules, legislation and definitions. Since the General Assembly had the main responsibility for the progressive development and codification of international law, she believed that the Council should avoid the practice of using its authority to impose legislative requirements on Member States or assuming powers that could be considered a “usurpation” of the competencies of the General Assembly.²³²

Letter dated 5 April 2007 from the Permanent Representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council

By a letter dated 5 April 2007 to the President of the Security Council, the representative of the United Kingdom transmitted a concept paper for the proposed open debate on the security implications of climate change, including through its impact on potential drivers of conflict, indicating that no international forum had yet addressed those issues from that perspective. He stressed that a Security Council discussion would therefore make a useful initial contribution, while recognizing that it was for other United Nations bodies, in particular the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, to pursue aspects of climate change that were not within the mandate of the Council.²³³

At the 5663rd meeting, on 17 April 2007, the President, speaking in her capacity as the representative of the United Kingdom, referred to the responsibility of the Security Council to maintain international peace and security, which included the prevention of conflict, and noted that an unstable climate would exacerbate some of the core drivers of conflict, such as migratory pressures and competition for resources. She emphasized the importance of recognizing the existence of a “security imperative”, as well as economic, developmental and environmental ones, for tackling climate change. She further indicated that the debate did not intend to seek to pre-empt the authorities of those institutions and processes where action was being decided, including the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies.²³⁴

Several speakers concurred that the Council had the responsibility to discuss the issue.²³⁵ The representative of Germany held that while the Council usually dealt with more imminent threats to international peace and security than those caused by climate change, less obvious and more distant drivers of conflict should not be neglected. He also said that there was a clear linkage between climate change and the need for conflict prevention, one of the central tasks of the Council.²³⁶ Similarly, the representative of the Netherlands emphasized the need for the Council to look “beyond the horizon” of existing conflicts to explore the challenges and threats to security that the future might bring. Using the impact of HIV/AIDS on peace and security in Africa as an example, he opined that climate change might have far-reaching and potentially dramatic consequences for security in regions throughout the world.²³⁷ The representative of Papua New Guinea stated that the debate in the Council suggested that, in addition to forums such as the Commission on Sustainable Development, there were more avenues for discussing one of the most critical issues for the survival of Pacific island communities. In his opinion, the Council, charged with protecting human rights and the integrity and security of States, was the paramount international forum available to them. While he did not expect the Council to get involved in the details of the discussions on the Framework Convention on Climate Change, he hoped that the Council would keep the matter under continuous review so as to ensure the contribution of all countries to solving the climate change problem.²³⁸

With respect to the mandate and the role of the Security Council vis-à-vis the issue of climate change, the representative of Slovakia was of the view that, notwithstanding what the other forums, including the General Assembly, had already dealt with, the Council was well positioned to incorporate the new dimension of threat perception into its considerations and ad hoc discussions, “while remaining within its mandate”.²³⁹

The representative of France held that the Council was not the “number one forum” for dealing with the issue of climate change, pointing out the Framework Convention on Climate Change and the General Assembly had a central role to play. However, he argued that within its mandate the Council could not ignore the threats to international security caused by global warming.²⁴⁰ The representative of Switzerland expressed hope that the debate would provide an impetus in strengthening the coherence of the United Nations system in addressing the issue of climate change, in the framework of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and other relevant bodies, including the Security Council.²⁴¹ Similarly, while expressing support for addressing the implications of climate change for the maintenance of peace and security in the Council, the representative of Norway indicated that the broader aspects of climate change were clearly an issue for the General Assembly.²⁴²

A number of speakers were more cautious about the involvement of the Security Council in the issue, given the existence of other forums for discussion within the United Nations system.²⁴³ The representative of Qatar held that the issue of threats emanating from climate change could not be addressed in debates limited exclusively to the Security Council. In his view, because of imbalances in its power hierarchy, the Council was “not the optimal mechanism” to address the question of climate change, which instead should be dealt with by the Commission on Sustainable Development, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.²⁴⁴ The representative of China believed that discussing climate change in the Council would not help countries to find solutions to the problem. Instead, discussions on climate change should be conducted within a framework accessible to all parties. He further insisted that the current discussion be regarded as an exception, giving rise to neither outcome documents nor follow-up actions.²⁴⁵ Although he acknowledged the urgency of the threats posed by climate change, the representative of Mexico warned that the possibility of conferring on the Council the responsibility to adopt preventive measures that were the purview of the specialized bodies would, among other things, erode the Council’s efficiency with regard to the maintenance of international peace and security.²⁴⁶ Pointing out that there were other appropriate international forums, such as the General Assembly and the Commission on Sustainable Development, in which the issue of climate change could be fully considered, the representative of the Russian Federation stressed that the Council should deal only with questions directly related to its mandate.²⁴⁷

The representative of Pakistan, speaking on behalf of the Group of 77 and China, expressed the view that, under the Charter, the Council’s primary responsibility was for the maintenance of international peace and security, while other issues such as economic and social development were assigned to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. In his opinion, the “ever-increasing encroachment” by the Security Council on the roles and responsibilities of other principal organs not only represented a distortion of the principles and purposes of the Charter but also infringed on the authority of those organs and compromised the rights of the general membership of the United Nations. He added that responsibilities in the field of sustainable development, for which the issues of energy and climate change were vital, belonged to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, while no role had been envisaged for the Security Council.²⁴⁸ Similarly, indicating that the subject of the debate lay within the mandate of other bodies in the United Nations, the representative of Egypt expressed concern over the “deliberate encroachment” by the Council on the mandates and primary responsibilities of other principal organs, which, in his view, reflected a “clear and deliberate neglect of the provisions of the Charter” and indifference to the “repeated demands of Member States to put an end to this dangerous and unjustified phenomenon”. He deemed that it was a “clear challenge” to the general membership of the United Nations to leave open for every President of the Council to decide a theme for an open debate, particularly when the issue lay “totally beyond” the Council’s mandate.²⁴⁹ Speaking on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, the representative of Cuba cautioned against the continued and increasing encroachment by the Council on the functions and powers of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and other organs. Referring to the Council’s mandate, as defined by Article 24, he held that the Council had to abide fully by all Charter provisions and maintained that the issue of climate change fell outside its competence.²⁵⁰ A number of speakers also considered that the debate on the issue of climate change did not fall within the Council’s mandate and constituted an encroachment by the Council on the mandates of other bodies.²⁵¹

Maintenance of international peace and security

In a concept paper for an open debate on the link between natural resources and conflict, transmitted by a letter dated 6 June 2007 to the Secretary-General,²⁵² the representative of Belgium pointed out that the Security Council, having the primary responsibility for all questions related to peace and security, was already dealing with conflict situations linked to natural resources through its peacekeeping operations and sanctions. Stressing that improving the governance of natural resources in the absence of conflict was not the primary responsibility of the Council, he nonetheless asked whether the Council could encourage other existing initiatives to the extent that they had an impact on the maintenance of peace and security and whether there was a role for the Council in the early identification of situations in which issues related to natural resources could create a risk of conflict.

At the 5705th meeting, held on 25 June 2007²⁵³ in connection with the above-mentioned concept paper,²⁵⁴ the representative of Qatar opined that the topic of natural resources did not fall within the competence and mandate of the Security Council, as set forth and defined by the Charter. Rather, the topic lay at the heart of the competence and mandates of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. He argued that dealing with the topic in the Council infringed on the prerogatives of both of those bodies and undermined the democratic principles of the United Nations. He further disapproved of extending the authority of the Council to cover State resources by linking natural resources to issues of international peace and security.²⁵⁵

The representative of the Russian Federation maintained that the theme of the debate was so broad as to go beyond the competence of the Council and suggested that its further consideration should involve the relevant specialized bodies of the United Nations system, including those under the General Assembly.²⁵⁶ The representative of Brazil argued that the Council’s primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security should not be invoked in general, abstract terms. He recalled that the Charter foresaw that issues relating to economic and social development, as was the case of natural resources, fell within the purview of the functions and powers of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. He cautioned against an expansive interpretation of resolutions 1625 (2005), concerning the role of the Council in conflict prevention, and 1653 (2006), on the situation in the Great Lakes region. Such an approach, in his opinion, would undermine the roles and responsibilities of the other principal organs of the United Nations and risk not only distorting the application of the purposes and principles of the Organization, but also reinforcing the tendency to mistrust the intentions of the Security Council. Taking into account the global nature of the use of natural resources and its multiple dimensions, he held that any relevant international debate on the issue should take place in the General Assembly, as the forum of universal representation, and subsequently in the Economic and Social Council and their relevant subsidiary bodies. He concluded that the possible linkage between the exploitation of natural resources and conflict should be examined by the Security Council only on a case-by-case basis and inasmuch as it might be relevant to a particular decision.²⁵⁷

The President of the General Assembly expressed the view that the various and complex aspects of the relationship between natural sources and conflict should be addressed through the collaboration of all organs, namely, the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council.²⁵⁸ The representative of Italy opined that the debate provided a good opportunity for considering the theme of natural resources and conflict from the perspective of the Council, while stressing the importance of the role and experience of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in that field.²⁵⁹ The representative of Egypt asserted that the link between natural resources and conflicts lay at the intersection of the prerogatives of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, “on an equal footing” with the Security Council, each within the limits of its responsibilities as set forth in the Charter. Therefore, he was of the view that the matter should be addressed in all its aspects through full coordination and transparency among the three principal organs. Such an approach would ensure the complementarity of the efforts, as well as the effectiveness of international action to prevent the illegal exploitation of natural resources from inflaming conflicts and to orient the use of those resources towards sustainable development and peace.²⁶⁰

In contrast, the representative of Ghana considered it only appropriate for the Council, in discharging its responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, to focus on natural resources as one of the root causes of conflict.²⁶¹ The representative of the United Kingdom acknowledged that the transparent, well-regulated exploitation of natural resources was not the responsibility of the Council, but said that the Council was required to make an assessment of the role of natural resources in conflict, to discuss appropriate actions to take, and to examine the impact of missions themselves. Such action on the part of the Council, in his view, did not constitute Council encroachment.²⁶² The President, speaking in his capacity as the representative of Belgium, made it clear that in discussing the issue, the Council was not attempting to provide any guardianship over efforts not related to its competencies and which were better placed with other national or international organs. However, he underlined that those initiatives had an impact on international peace and security, which was the primary responsibility of the Council. He added that the Council had a duty to promote awareness of the fact that security and development were linked and to encourage all actors involved in managing natural resources to bear that in mind. It was up to the Council to highlight the complementarity between those initiatives and its own actions and to encourage them so that they could contribute to peace.²⁶³

At the end of the meeting, the President read out a statement, in which the Council recalled the principles of the Charter, in particular the primary responsibility of the Council for the maintenance of international peace and security, and, in that respect, recognized the role that natural resources could play in armed conflict and post-conflict situations.²⁶⁴

The Members of the United Nations agree to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with the present Charter.

Note

During the period under review, the Security Council did not adopt any decisions that explicitly invoked Article 25 of the Charter. The principle enshrined in Article 25 was however referred to in a number of resolutions and presidential statements primarily dealing with compliance with sanctions measures. In connection with the item entitled “General issues related to sanctions”, the Council emphasized the obligations placed upon all Member States to implement, in full, the mandatory measures adopted by the Security Council.²⁶⁵ In connection with the item entitled “Small arms”, by a presidential statement of 29 June 2007, the Council called upon all Member States to abide by their obligations to observe the arms embargoes established under relevant Council resolutions.²⁶⁶

There were a few instances in which Article 25 was explicitly cited in communications. In connection with the reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan, in the report of the International Commission of Inquiry for Darfur,²⁶⁷ with regard to the Council’s referral of the case to the International Criminal Court, it was noted that the Council was the supreme body of the Organization and that all members of the United Nations were “bound by its decisions pursuant to Article 25 of the Charter”.²⁶⁸ There were also explicit references in connection with the item “Threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts”²⁶⁹ and in four resolutions of the Organization of the Islamic Conference in connection with the Middle East that were forwarded to the Security Council.²⁷⁰

Article 25 was explicitly invoked a number of times in the deliberations of the Council.²⁷¹ In many instances, speakers considered the binding nature of Article 25 in comparison with resolutions adopted under Chapter VII. In connection with the item entitled “Strengthening international law: rule of law and maintenance of international peace and security”, speaking of the primary responsibility of the Council in the maintenance of international peace and security entrusted by the Charter, the representative of Mexico noted that his delegation did not customarily distinguish between decisions taken under Chapter VII of the Charter and those taken on the basis of Chapter VI as all the decisions of the Council were governed by Article 25 of the Charter and, given their substantive content, had a binding character for those to whom they were directed.²⁷² In discussing the establishment of a Special Tribunal for Lebanon,²⁷³ the representative of Qatar argued that the insistence of the sponsors to present the draft resolution²⁷⁴ under Chapter VII of the Charter, despite the fact that all Security Council resolutions were binding, in accordance with Article 25 of the Charter, went beyond the designated aim of endorsing the establishment of the Tribunal.²⁷⁵

In another case, a speaker offered an interpretation of Article 25 under “Briefings by Chairmen of subsidiary bodies of the Security Council”, in connection with the sanctions regime affecting Al-Qaida and the Taliban and related Council resolutions. The representative of Qatar argued that, while as a matter of principle Council resolutions were binding “by virtue of Article 25 of the Charter”, when the Council adopted its resolutions in accordance with Article 25, this meant that the Council performed its duties in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, as set out in Article 1 of the Charter, and specifically in accordance with the principles of justice and international law, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all.²⁷⁶

The cases which follow are drawn from deliberations of the Council on the interpretation of Article 25, in particular the binding nature of Security Council decisions in connection with the items entitled “Non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction” (case 18) and “Non-proliferation” with regard to the Islamic Republic of Iran (case 19).

Non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction

At the 4950th meeting, on 22 April 2004, the representative of Brazil pointed out that the draft resolution under consideration,²⁷⁷ which sought to prevent the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction by non-State actors, had no need to invoke Chapter VII of the Charter, since Article 25 of the Charter provided that all decisions by the Security Council should be accepted and carried out by the States Members of the Organization.²⁷⁸ The representative of Algeria opined that, given that the Members of the United Nations would accept and implement the decisions the Council took in that area in accordance with Article 25, it seemed unnecessary for the Council to take action under Chapter VII of the Charter.²⁷⁹ The representative of Malaysia, speaking on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement and echoed by the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic, observed that, while the Movement agreed that preventing non-State actors from acquiring weapons of mass destruction was an issue of paramount importance and was in line with efforts to address threats to international peace and security, that objective could still be achieved without resorting to Chapter VII. He maintained that the text of the draft resolution should conform to Article 25.²⁸⁰ The representative of Jordan, echoed by the representative of Kuwait, expressed the view that, since all Council resolutions were binding in accordance with Article 25, the value, validity and “binding effect” of any draft resolution to be adopted by the Council on the matter would not be compromised if such a draft was not adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter.²⁸¹

On the other hand, the representative of Spain, echoed by the representative of the United States, stated that the draft resolution should be adopted within the framework of Chapter VII in order to “make it unequivocally legally binding for all United Nations Members” and to send a strong political message.²⁸² The representative of the United Kingdom noted that a Chapter VII legal base also underlined “the binding nature” of the requirement to establish sensible controls on weapons of mass destruction, which would give States the increased authority they needed to introduce robust domestic measures.²⁸³ The representative of New Zealand held that by placing the draft resolution under Chapter VII, the Council would send a clear signal of the importance it placed on the obligations in the draft resolution.²⁸⁴

Non-proliferation (Islamic Republic of Iran)

At its 5500th meeting, on 31 July 2006, the Council adopted resolution 1696 (2006), by which, acting under Article 40 of Chapter VII of the Charter, it, inter alia, demanded that the Islamic Republic of Iran suspend all enrichment-related and reprocessing activities, including research and development, to be verified by the International Atomic Energy Agency.²⁸⁵

The representative of the United States stressed that the pursuit of nuclear weapons by the Islamic Republic of Iran demanded a clear statement from the Council in the form of a binding resolution and that his delegation expected the Islamic Republic of Iran and other Member States to immediately act in accordance with the mandatory obligations of the resolution.²⁸⁶

The representative of China maintained that according to Article 25 of the Charter, all Member States were obliged to accept and carry out Security Council resolutions. He said that his Government urged the Islamic Republic of Iran to practise restraint, attach importance to the extensive appeals and expectations of the international community, earnestly implement the requirements of the adopted resolution and make an early response to the package of proposals, so as to create conditions to increase trust and promote dialogue and negotiations.²⁸⁷

At its 5647th meeting, on 24 March 2007, the Council adopted resolution 1747 (2007), by which it affirmed its decision that the Islamic Republic of Iran should suspend all enrichment-related and processing activities, and imposed additional measures against the Islamic Republic of Iran to those imposed by resolution 1737 (2006).²⁸⁸

The representative of the United States observed that the unanimous adoption of resolution 1747 (2007) sent a clear and unambiguous message to the Islamic Republic of Iran that the regime's continued pursuit of a nuclear-weapons capability was in violation of its obligations as a State Member of the United Nations. He hoped that the presence of the delegation of the Islamic Republic of Iran at the meeting reflected its Government's understanding of the weight that should be attached to the decisions of the Council and the binding obligations that the Islamic Republic of Iran had as a Member of the Organization under Article 25 of the Charter to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council.²⁸⁹

In contrast, the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran maintained that the decision by the Security Council to try to coerce his country into suspension of its peaceful nuclear programme was a gross violation of Article 25 of the Charter and contradicted the rights of the Iranian people to development and education. The representative further stressed that, while Member States had agreed, in accordance with Article 25, to accept and carry out the decisions of the Council in accordance with the Charter, the Council could not pressure countries to submit either to its decisions taken in bad faith or to demands that negated the fundamental purposes and principles of the Charter. He further argued that the International Court of Justice had held in its 1971 Advisory Opinion that Member States were required to comply with Council decisions only if they were "in accordance with the Charter". He held that the Charter did not authorize the Security Council to require Member States to give up their basic rights emanating from treaties, as such action would violate the principles set forth in the preamble to the Charter.²⁹⁰

C. Article 26

Article 26

In order to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources, the Security Council shall be responsible for formulating, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee referred to in Article 47, plans to be submitted to the Members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments.

Note

During the reporting period, there was one occasion when Article 26 was explicitly referred to in the deliberations of the Security Council. At the 5127th meeting, on 17 February 2005, in connection with small arms, the representative of Costa Rica, questioning the existence of the political will of all Member States to regulate the international trade in weapons, argued that for the past five decades there was no exercise of responsibility stemming from Article 26 of the Charter, although that Article explicitly recognized the link between disarmament and development by entrusting the Council with establishing an arms control system in order to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources.²⁹¹

Consideration of the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter

Article 52

1. Nothing in the present Charter precludes the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, provided that such arrangements or agencies and their activities are consistent with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations.

2. The Members of the United Nations entering into such arrangements or constituting such agencies shall make every effort to achieve pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies before referring them to the Security Council.

3. The Security Council shall encourage the development of pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies either on the initiative of the states concerned or by reference from the Security Council.

4. This Article in no way impairs the application of Articles 34 and 35.

Article 53

1. The Security Council shall, where appropriate, utilize such regional arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority. But no enforcement action shall be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council, with the exception of measures against any enemy state, as defined in paragraph 2 of this Article, provided for pursuant to Article 107 or in regional arrangements directed against renewal of aggressive policy on the part of any such state, until such time as the Organization may, on request of the Governments concerned, be charged with the responsibility for preventing further aggression by such a state.

2. The term enemy state as used in paragraph 1 of this Article applies to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory of the present Charter.

Article 54

The Security Council shall at all times be kept fully informed of activities undertaken or in contemplation under regional arrangements or by regional agencies for the maintenance of international peace and security.

Note

The period under review saw an exponential increase in the cooperation between the Security Council and regional arrangements or agencies in the maintenance of international peace and security, as provided for in Chapter VIII of the Charter.²⁹² The rise in the role of regional and subregional organizations in both the pacific settlement of disputes and enforcement action led to a substantive debate in the Council on strengthening the involvement of regional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security. Under the item entitled “Cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in maintaining international peace and security”, the Council adopted its first-ever resolution solely dedicated to that issue, resolution 1631 (2005) of 17 October 2005. In that resolution, the Council urged, inter alia, that regional organizations, particularly those in Africa, be strengthened in the areas of conflict prevention, crisis management and post-conflict resolution. A significant number of deliberations during the period under review highlighted the importance of matching resources to mandates when the Council authorized regional organizations to take action. At one meeting, the Chairman of the African Union stated, “Give us the tools, and we will do the job”.²⁹³

The decisions and deliberations of the Council during the period under consideration also demonstrated an increasing importance and weight attached to the role of regional organizations in the common effort to find solutions to regional conflicts as well as to combat a wide range of issues in view of the interconnected threats facing the world. Three regional and subregional peacekeeping operations, in Burundi, Côte d'Ivoire and the Sudan, were transitioned into United Nations peacekeeping operations and the authority of the stabilization force in Bosnia and Herzegovina was transferred from one organization to another. New modalities for cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations were authorized by the Council, including the United Nations-African Union Hybrid Operation in Darfur, and the United Nations multidimensional presence in the Central African Republic and Chad, supported by a European Union force.

All instances of cooperation with regional arrangements could be considered to fall within the framework of Chapter VIII of the Charter, and indeed the Council, in a number of decisions, explicitly invoked Chapter VIII²⁹⁴ of Articles 52, 53 and 54.²⁹⁵

The practice of the Council under Chapter VIII of the Charter is described below without reference to specific Articles. Section A deals with the debates and decisions of the Council on general and thematic issues touching upon the provisions of Chapter VIII. Section B illustrates various ways in which the Council, in considering specific situations, encouraged and supported efforts by regional organizations in the peaceful settlement of disputes. Section C covers eight regional situations where the Council authorized enforcement action by regional organizations. Section D describes those instances in which the Council explicitly requested regional organizations to keep the Council informed of their activities for the maintenance of international peace and security.

Cross-border issues in West Africa

By a presidential statement dated 25 March 2004, the Council, emphasizing the importance of addressing the continuing factors of instability in West Africa within a regional framework, invited the Secretary-General and the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) to take the requisite practical decisions to improve the coordination of the activities of the United Nations and ECOWAS in West Africa. The Council urged the States members of ECOWAS to fully implement their Declaration of a Moratorium on the Importation, Exportation and Manufacture of Small Arms and Light Weapons in West Africa, signed in Abuja on 31 October 1998²⁹⁷ and invited them to take all necessary steps to better combat illegal trafficking in small arms and light weapons in the region. The Council expressed its intention to pay close attention and remain in close consultation with ECOWAS and Member States on steps to stop the illicit flows of arms to conflict zones in the region. Recalling the measures it had implemented on the illegal exploitation and trade of diamonds and timber in the subregion, the Council encouraged ECOWAS and its member States to promote transparent and sustainable exploitation of those resources. The Council also encouraged ECOWAS to publicly identify parties and actors who were shown to engage in illicit trafficking in the subregion and use mercenaries and further called upon the State members of ECOWAS to work together to agree to a coherent approach to the problem of foreign combatants.²⁹⁸

By a presidential statement dated 25 February 2005, the Council welcomed the growing and constructive partnership between, inter alia, the United Nations system and ECOWAS, aimed at addressing the many complex challenges confronting the West African subregion, and encouraged the United Nations Office for West Africa further to promote an integrated and joint subregional approach with ECOWAS and the African Union, among other actors. The Council welcomed the ongoing efforts by ECOWAS to transform the moratorium on small arms and light weapons into a binding convention. The Council also welcomed the ongoing efforts of ECOWAS, in collaboration with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, to improve border control mechanisms in West Africa.²⁹⁹

By a presidential statement dated 9 August 2006, the Council, recalling the measures it had implemented on the illegal exploitation of natural resources in the region, encouraged States members of ECOWAS to promote transparent and sustainable exploitation of such resources. Considering that illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons still posed a threat to peace and security in the region, the Council welcomed the decision of members of ECOWAS to transform the Moratorium on the Importation, Exportation and Manufacture of Small Arms and Light Weapons in West Africa into a binding Convention on Small Arms and Light Weapons, Their Ammunition and Other Related Materials. The Council stressed the continued need for assisting West African States and ECOWAS in curbing illicit cross-border activities, and further stressed the need for continued and enhanced cooperation between the United Nations, ECOWAS and the African Union in peace consolidation initiatives, based on an integrated approach and with the aim of maximizing the use of available resources.³⁰⁰

United Nations peacekeeping operations

At the 4970th meeting, on 17 May 2004, a number of speakers recognized the cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in the area of peacekeeping, highlighting complementary capacities offered by regional organizations, and called for the strengthening of such cooperation.³⁰¹ The representative of the Russian Federation considered that United Nations interaction with regional structures pursuant to Chapter VIII of the Charter was one of the basic principles and criteria for United Nations peacekeeping operations.³⁰² The representative of Canada pointed out that regional and multinational arrangements were entirely consistent with both the letter and the spirit of Articles 43 and 53 of the Charter and would have a critical role to play in the future of peace support operations and in both supplementing and supporting the capabilities of the United Nations itself. Therefore, he encouraged the Organization to continue to develop its partnerships with them.³⁰³

The representative of the United Kingdom stressed the need for the further development of new partnerships between the United Nations and regional organizations under Chapter VIII of the Charter. He said that, with its ever-increasing peacekeeping portfolio, the United Nations could not be expected to “perform everything everywhere” and held that regional organizations had unique and complementary capacities to offer. At the same time, he maintained that such operations by regional organizations did not threaten the primacy of United Nations peacekeeping, since the United Nations still mandated them.³⁰⁴ The representative of the United States drew attention to the fact that the new peacekeeping missions in Côte d’Ivoire, Burundi and Haiti built on efforts by regional organizations to support the restoration of peace and stability, particularly saluting the work of ECOWAS in Côte d’Ivoire as providing valuable augmentation for United Nations peacekeeping forces.³⁰⁵ With regard to strengthening regional peacekeeping capacities, the representatives of Tunisia and South Africa emphasized that the principal responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security under the Charter still remained with the Security Council.³⁰⁶

On the other hand, while recognizing the recent tendencies towards adopting regional solutions in peacekeeping, particularly in Africa, the representative of India cautioned that such operations should not become franchised or subcontracted to a degree where the Council was “perceived as using regionalization as a device to shirk the exercise of its global responsibility” for peace and security.³⁰⁷

Some speakers pointed out the need to extend financial support to regional peacekeeping operations in order to enhance their capacity.³⁰⁸ The representative of Canada raised the issue of financing of missions undertaken by regional organizations as an underlying problem and stated that, although they might be mandated by the Council, they were paid for not through assessed contributions but through voluntary funding. He said that, given the benefits received from such operations, there should be effective “burden-sharing arrangements” for donor support.³⁰⁹

By a presidential statement read out at the meeting, the Council recognized the need to work, as appropriate, with, inter alia, regional and subregional organizations in peacekeeping operations in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter to ensure complementary capacities and approaches before and during the deployment and after the withdrawal of United Nations peacekeeping missions.³¹⁰

At the 4980th meeting, on 28 May 2004, the representative of Brazil, referring to Chapter VIII of the Charter, opined that the instrumentalities relating to regional arrangements should be urgently revisited given that regional organizations had an increasingly important role to play in the overall international efforts for peace and security. He argued that the primary role of regional organizations was of a preventive nature, contributing to addressing the root causes of conflict and violations of human rights before they escalated into major conflicts. He also held that when prevention failed and enforcement actions were needed the Council might empower regional arrangements to enforce action, as stated in Article 53 of the Charter, in cases where such a possibility had been foreseen in the relevant constitutive acts.³¹¹

The representative of the Russian Federation indicated that the agreed-upon international steps taken under the aegis of the United Nations had been successful because of the unique ability of the Organization to combine its leading role in the area of security and restoring peace with the division of labour within the regional and subregional organizations in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter. He stressed that such potential should be developed to ensure a truly legitimate collective reaction to complex emergency situations under conditions of international conflict.³¹² Other speakers also underlined the

Cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in stabilization processes

In a background paper for the debate on cooperation in stabilization processes, the representative of Romania stated, that while Chapter VIII of the Charter spelled out the principles guiding the role of regional arrangements whose activities needed to be undertaken in a manner consistent with the purposes and principles of the Charter, the Charter provided no precise definition of regional organizations, thus allowing for a variety of cooperative efforts.³¹⁴

At the 5007th meeting, on 20 July 2004,³¹⁵ a number of speakers said that cooperation between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations was on the basis of complementarity and should be further enhanced, and many of them explicitly cited Chapter VIII of the Charter as a basis for such cooperation.³¹⁶ The representative of China stressed that the Council was at the core of the international collective security machinery in accordance with the Charter and that regional organizations too could contribute to the peaceful settlement of disputes. Reaffirming that the Charter served as a guide for United Nations actions and as a framework for those of regional organizations, he pointed out that Chapter VIII provided for a role by regional organizations in the settlement of disputes and defined the relationship between the United Nations and such organizations. He stressed in particular

Article 53 regarding the need for authorization by the Council for any enforcement action to be taken by regional arrangements or agencies. He further held that regional organizations should, on their own initiative but as required by the Charter, maintain closer contacts with the Council in order to provide it with timely and comprehensive updates on actions they were taking. In his opinion, this was essential to ensure that regional actions were correctly oriented.³¹⁷ Similarly, the representative of Algeria considered it imperative that regional security operations be pursued under a Council mandate, on the understanding that regular dialogue with the Council should be maintained.³¹⁸ The representative of the Philippines held that the exchange of information relating to the maintenance of international peace and security at the regional level was not only required under Article 54 of the Charter, but should also serve as the backbone of a framework for cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations.³¹⁹

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that although Chapter VIII of the Charter might be the foundation, regional organizations were not just subcontractors for maintaining collective security, and he therefore called for a mutually reinforcing partnership between the United Nations and regional organizations, in order to avoid duplication of effort and allow work to be undertaken by the organization with comparative advantage.³²⁰

The representative of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) affirmed that the past decade had seen a stronger reliance on regional organizations, not as a challenge to the primary role of the Organization but rather to support it, adding that NATO was proud to be one of those organizations. Although NATO did not consider itself formally a regional organization under Chapter VIII of the Charter, its transition from a purely collective-defence organization into a security manager in a broad sense had enabled it to act in the same spirit, first in Europe and then beyond.³²¹ action taken by regional arrangements.³²² As to financial support for regional arrangements, the representative of the Commonwealth of Independent States opined that it was important for the United Nations to provide at least partial material and financial support for peacekeeping operations in those regions where operations were being carried out under the Charter by forces of regional organizations. He cited an example where only one country, the Russian Federation, shouldered virtually all of the financial and material requirements for certain peacekeeping activities.³²³

By a presidential statement read out at the meeting, the Council, recalling that Articles 52 and 53 of the Charter set forth the contribution of regional organizations to the settlement of disputes, as well as the relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations, acknowledged the important role that could be played by regional organizations in the prevention, resolution and management of conflicts, including by addressing their root causes. Emphasizing the primary responsibility of the Council for the maintenance of international peace and security, the Council noted that effectively addressing the numerous conflict situations confronting the international community would require an increased level of cooperation with regional organizations, where appropriate. It was stressed that common and coordinated efforts undertaken by the United Nations and regional organizations in stabilization processes should be based on complementarity and their comparative advantages, making full use of their experience, in accordance with the Charter and the relevant statutes of the regional organizations. Furthermore, the statements made at the meeting reiterated the importance of a coherent approach to stabilization processes through improved cooperation and collaboration, including increased and timely exchange of information between the United Nations and regional organizations, in accordance with the provisions of Article 54 of the Charter.³²⁴ and Security of the African Union opined that the African Union had been taking up the challenge of deploying peace-support operations, albeit with limited experience, in the expectation that the United Nations and other partners would provide the requisite support. He said that the African Union would rely on the continued support of the United Nations within the framework of Chapter VIII of the Charter, while counting on the strong support of its partners to further build its capacity to plan, deploy and manage peace-support operations.³²⁵ Citing Chapter VIII of the Charter, the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States maintained that the operationalization of the system of relations was needed, in order that regional organizations might become one of the main organs of United Nations action in dealing with regional crises and conflicts, as well as other world challenges and developments. He said that the complexity of crisis management favoured burden-sharing between different actors, drawing on each of their particular strengths.³²⁶

The representative of Pakistan said that, if national civilian crisis management instruments and capacities were not available or inadequate, the logical recourse to fill the capacity gap should be to subregional or regional resources, where possible. The role of regional and subregional organizations and their cooperation with the United Nations under Chapter VIII of the Charter were important with regard to civilian and military capacities, both of which needed to be developed.³²⁷

The representative of Angola held that joint deployment with regional and subregional organizations, in keeping with the provisions of the Charter, had demonstrated that such partnerships were mutually advantageous. He cited the response of ECOWAS in Côte d'Ivoire and Liberia before the deployment of United Nations peacekeeping forces as cases in point.³²⁸ Other speakers also commended the role of regional organizations in crisis management and supported their further development and improvement.³²⁹

peacekeeping area, in keeping with Chapter VIII of the Charter, the representative of the Russian Federation expressed the view that as each crisis situation was unique there was no uniform peacekeeping model that could be applied to all conflicts. Therefore, in each specific case, there would be a need to choose the best set of peacekeeping instruments, whether it be a United Nations peacekeeping operation, a coalition or a regional operation. He said that such efforts needed to be organized in strict conformity with the Charter, which clearly stipulated the Council's primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and in particular its key political role at all stages of peacekeeping operations, from the definition of their mandates to the transition towards peacebuilding.³³⁰

Pointing out a marked tendency in the Organization to have recourse to the possibilities outlined in Chapter VIII of the Charter, the representative of Algeria affirmed that, in order to make that international cooperation a success, reliance on regional pillars should not be understood as any neglect by the United Nations or the Security Council of their obligations to maintain international peace and security.³³¹

By a presidential statement read out at the meeting, ministers recognized the increasing role of some regional and subregional organizations and intergovernmental organizations in crisis management. They also recalled that Articles 52 and 53 of the Charter set forth the contribution of regional organizations to conflict management, as well as the relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations. They encouraged those organizations, whenever possible, to continue to develop their crisis management capabilities, including in the civilian field, in close coordination with the United Nations and in accordance with the provisions of Article 54 of the Charter. When applicable, clear schemes for joint operations should be developed. Greater coordination and interoperability among those organizations, as well as developing and sharing common strategies, operational policies and best practices in civilian crisis management, would enhance efficiency and coherence in crisis management.³³²

Institutional relationship with the African Union

At the 5084th meeting, on 19 November 2004, the President read out a statement by which the Council recalled that cooperation with regional and subregional organizations in matters relating to the maintenance of peace and security was an important pillar of the system of collective security established by the Charter, as provided for in Chapter VIII. The Council recognized the importance of strengthening cooperation with the African Union in order to help to build its capacity to deal with collective security challenges, including through the establishment of rapid and appropriate responses to emerging crisis situations and the development of effective strategies for conflict prevention, peacekeeping and peacebuilding. Particularly welcoming the leading role of the African Union in efforts to settle crises on the African continent, the Council expressed its full support for the peace initiatives conducted by the African Union, and through subregional organizations such as ECOWAS, the Southern African Development Community, the Central African Economic and Monetary Community, the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and other regional agreements committed to the peaceful settlement of disputes in Africa. The Council also underlined the importance of being kept fully informed, consistent with Article 54 of the Charter. The Council also welcomed the strengthening of practical cooperation between the United Nations and the African Union, as demonstrated in the case of the African Union Mission in the Sudan and the African Mission in Burundi, to support and enhance the management and operational capacities of the African Union in the field of peacekeeping and peacebuilding. The Council called upon the international community to support the efforts of the African Union to strengthen its capacities for peacekeeping, conflict resolution and post-conflict reconstruction, through the provision of information, training, expertise and resources, and to support the activities of the United Nations and its agencies in that regard.³³³

The representative of Benin opined that the Council should reinforce cooperation with the African Union in order to optimize its ability to rapidly counter the new threats to peace and security through rapid responses to crisis situations, as had been the case in Darfur. Darfur had demonstrated that peacekeeping operations were a particularly complex and burdensome undertaking for the African Union, and the necessary logistical and financial support should therefore be provided.³³⁴ The representative of the United Kingdom, supporting the need for the Council to help the African Union to develop its capacities, argued that the Council should do so because, inter alia, it was within the Council's responsibility regarding international peace and security to help those that were "sharing and shouldering the burden with the Council", as justified by regional cooperative arrangements set out in the Charter.³³⁵

Cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in maintaining international peace and security

At the 5282nd meeting, on 17 October 2005,³³⁶ the representative of China reiterated its position regarding Chapter VIII of the Charter as a guide for the relationship between the United Nations and regional arrangements, as well as the importance of communications from regional bodies to the Council in accordance with the Charter. He also stressed that the necessary financial resources and logistical and technical support needed to be provided with a view to strengthening cooperation between the United Nations and African regional and subregional organizations so that the peacekeeping and peacebuilding capacities of those organizations could be enhanced.³³⁷ The representative of the Russian Federation underlined the immutability of the principle of the primary responsibility of the Council for the maintenance of international peace and security and its exclusive prerogative to sanction the use of force by the international community.³³⁸ The representative of France opined that it was necessary to have good information and communication between the United Nations and regional organizations, welcoming the progress in that regard and encouraging further progress, as invited by Article 54 of the Charter.³³⁹

As to Chapter VIII of the Charter vis-à-vis new global realities, the representative of the League of Arab States held that there were many economic, social and human issues facing the international community, including terrorism, that required the Council to "fine-tune" Chapter VIII so as to enable regional organizations to face new challenges with regard to the maintenance of international peace and security.³⁴⁰ The representative of Algeria was of the view that dealing with matters that were continually evolving was not a question of rewriting Chapter VIII of the Charter but of the Council's exploring the resources at its disposal and basing itself on a liberal and pragmatic reading of its provisions. He went on to say that in the case of involvement of regional organizations in the settlement of crises, the Council was not being asked to delegate some of its responsibilities to regional organizations but rather to make good use of the contributions of such organizations through improved interaction, on the basis of the principles of complementarity and comparative advantage.³⁴¹

By resolution 1631 (2005) adopted at the meeting, the Council, recalling Chapter VIII of the Charter, emphasizing that the growing contribution made by regional organizations in cooperation with the United Nations could usefully complement the work of the Organization in maintaining international peace and security, and stressing that such contribution must be made in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter, expressed its determination to take appropriate steps for the further development of cooperation between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations in maintaining international peace and security, consistent with Chapter VIII of the Charter. The Council also urged all States and relevant international organizations to contribute to strengthening the capacity of regional and subregional organizations, in particular of African regional and subregional organizations, in conflict prevention and crisis management, and in post-conflict stabilization, including through the provision of human, technical and financial assistance. The Council stressed the importance for the United Nations of developing the ability of regional and subregional organizations to deploy peacekeeping forces rapidly in support of United Nations peacekeeping operations or other operations mandated by the Council. The Council

³⁴¹ Ibid., pp. 12-13.

further reiterated the need to encourage regional cooperation, including through the involvement of regional and subregional organizations in the peaceful settlement of disputes, and to include, where appropriate, specific provisions with that aim in future mandates of peacekeeping and peacebuilding operations authorized by the Council. The Council recommended better communication between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations through, notably, liaison officers and the holding of consultations at all appropriate levels and reiterated the obligation for regional organizations, under Article 54 of the Charter, to keep the Council fully informed of their activities for the maintenance of international peace and security. The Council also requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on the opportunities and challenges facing the cooperation between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations in maintaining international peace and security, and encouraged the Secretary-General to explore with regional organizations the possibility of agreements establishing a framework for regional organizations' cooperation with and contributions to United Nations-led peacekeeping operations, taking into due consideration the cooperation guidelines already identified between the United Nations and certain regional organizations.³⁴²

Pursuant to the above-mentioned request, the Secretary-General submitted a report on 28 July 2006 entitled "A regional-global security partnership: challenges and opportunities", with recommendations including that, with a view to clarifying the nature of the overall partnership, the Council could discuss the desirability and practicability of partner organizations identifying themselves either as regional organizations acting under Chapter VIII of the Charter or as other intergovernmental organizations acting under other provisions of the Charter.³⁴³

At its 5529th meeting, on 20 September 2006,³⁴⁴ the Council had before it the above-mentioned report and a background paper prepared by the Presidency.³⁴⁵ The President (Greece), speaking in her national capacity, said that, while Chapter VIII of the Charter, in particular Articles 52 and 53, referred to regional arrangements and set forth the functional relationship with the Council, it was silent with regard to their constitutional relationship with the Council. It was time, therefore, for greater clarity on a series of issues that would facilitate the shaping of the vision of a global-regional mechanism for peace and security agreed by both the Council and the regional organizations. She held that it was necessary to clarify the criteria by which those agencies were distinguished from other international organizations for the purpose of applying Chapter VIII of the Charter, as such clarity should restore more authority to the Council and greater reliance on constitutionally delegated executive functions to genuine regional agencies under Chapter VIII.³⁴⁶ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania opined that an institutionalized approach and mechanism would make possible a shift from the current fragile arrangements to a more substantive and regularized cooperation. He affirmed that the challenge lay in devising practical arrangements for strengthening the relationship between the United Nations and regional and intergovernmental organizations in keeping with the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter. He said that, as the primary organ responsible for peace and security, the Council had the power and the prerogative to advance cooperation with such organizations to a higher level so as to make it more effective and responsive to challenges that threatened international peace and security.³⁴⁷ The Chairman of the African Union said that, if Chapter VIII of the Charter was referred to as a basis for operational cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations, the important role that regional organizations could play in the area of conflict prevention, peacemaking, peacekeeping, peacebuilding, disarmament, non-proliferation, the protection of civilians and natural disasters should be recognized.³⁴⁸

By a presidential statement read out at the meeting, the Council stated that Member States had emphasized that the establishment of a more effective partnership between the United Nations and regional and other intergovernmental organizations, consistent with Chapter VIII of the Charter, would contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security. The Council welcomed the progress made in realizing the goals of resolution 1631 (2005), as elaborated by the Secretary-General in his report,³⁴⁹ and commended the efforts of the Secretary-General in strengthening partnerships with regional, subregional and other intergovernmental organizations on peace and security, thereby contributing to the realization of the recommendations of the 2005 World Summit Outcome³⁵⁰ for a stronger relationship between such organizations and the United Nations. The Council stressed the benefits of closer cooperation with regional and subregional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the brokering of peace agreements in conflict situations. The Council also invited all regional and subregional organizations that had a capacity for peacekeeping or rapid response in crisis situations to enhance their working relations with the Secretariat and cooperate with the Secretariat to determine the conditions in which that capacity could contribute to the fulfilment of United Nations mandates and goals. The Council welcomed efforts under way to enhance cooperation between the Secretariat and regional and subregional organizations in mediation and peacemaking. The Council also encouraged regional and subregional organizations to convey their perspectives and analysis to the Council prior to its examination of regionally relevant agenda items.³⁵¹

By a presidential statement dated 26 May 2005, the Council recognized the crucial role of regional and subregional organizations in post-conflict peacebuilding and their involvement at the earliest possible stage. Realizing that a clear regional perspective was necessary, as most conflict had interlocking political, security, humanitarian and economic dynamics across borders, the Council underlined in that respect the need for enhanced cooperation and, where appropriate, coordination between United Nations and regional and subregional organizations in peacebuilding, based on a more integrated approach and with the aim of maximizing the use of available resources and capabilities. The Council also welcomed the ever-closer partnership between the African Union, the African subregional organizations and the United Nations in the area of peacemaking and peacekeeping and stressed the importance of extending that partnership to peacebuilding efforts.³⁵²

By resolution 1645 (2005) of 20 December 2005, the Council, recognizing the important role of regional and subregional organizations in carrying out post-conflict peacebuilding activities in their regions and stressing the need for sustained international support for their efforts and capacity-building to that end, emphasized that the Peacebuilding Commission, established by the resolution, should, where appropriate, work in close consultation with regional and subregional organizations to ensure their involvement in the peacebuilding process in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter.³⁵³

The Security Council mission to the Sudan and Chad from 4 to 10 June 2006 reported, concerning its visit to the African Union headquarters in Addis Ababa, that both the African Union Commission and the Peace and Security Council had called for a deepening of their relationship, especially in the areas of conflict prevention and post-conflict peacebuilding. The Commission had added that cooperation under Chapter VIII of the Charter should be strengthened, in particular with regard to making available United Nations resources to regional organizations undertaking peacekeeping operations.³⁵⁴

At the 5462nd meeting, on 15 June 2006, the representative of the United Kingdom, in his briefing as head of the Security Council mission, noted the importance of the wider relations between the United Nations and the African Union and said that Chapter VIII of the Charter had included the role of regional organizations with foresight. He opined that the cooperation with the Africa Union was a positive and timely development which had many possibilities and affirmed that peacekeeping and demobilization, destabilization and reintegration and security sector reform were obvious candidates for cooperation. He stressed that the United Nations had a particular responsibility to help to develop the capacities of the African Union and its regional manifestations.³⁵⁵ The representative of United Republic of Tanzania said that the visit of the Security Council mission to Addis Ababa was the occasion for the first meeting ever of the Security Council and the African Union Peace and Security Council, which offered an opportunity for continued partnership between the two organs under Chapter VIII of the Charter.³⁵⁶

As reported in the report of the Security Council mission to Addis Ababa, Khartoum, Accra, Abidjan and Kinshasa, from 14 to 21 June 2007,³⁵⁷ the Council and the African Union Peace and Security Council on 16 June 2007 issued a joint communiqué on improving cooperation between the two bodies, by which, inter alia, recalling the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter, they would bear in mind that in taking initiatives for the promotion of peace and security in Africa, in terms of Chapter VIII of the Charter the African Union was also acting on behalf of the international community. They also agreed to hold joint meetings of the two Councils at least once a year.³⁵⁸

Relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations, in particular the African Union, in the maintenance of international peace and security

At the 5649th meeting, on 28 March 2007, some speakers recognized the limitations of the operational scope of regional organizations due to a lack of logistical and financial resources, and concurred with the proposal made by the African Union to the Council to consider the possibility of financing by the United Nations, through assessed contributions, of peacekeeping operations undertaken by the African Union or under its authority and with the consent of the United Nations.³⁵⁹ Others were cautious about supporting such an idea. The representative of the United Kingdom said that formal funding from the peacekeeping budget for a strictly regional organization might not be possible, but other assistance should be automatic.³⁶⁰ The representative of the United States opined that it was not the role of the United Nations to provide funding for non-United Nations operations and affirmed that assessed United Nations peacekeeping contributions must be used only for Council-mandated operations under clear United Nations command and control with full accountability, ensured through the financial and administrative procedures of the Organization.³⁶¹

By a presidential statement read out at the meeting, the Council recognized the important role of regional organizations in the prevention, management and resolution of conflicts in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter. The Council recalled that cooperation between the United Nations and the regional arrangements in matters relating to the maintenance of peace and security as were appropriate for regional action was an integral part of collective security as provided for in the Charter. The Council recognized that regional organizations were well positioned to understand the root causes of many conflicts closer to home and to influence prevention or resolution, owing to their knowledge of the region. The Council welcomed the growing contribution that was being made by the African Union and the resolve of its leaders to address and solve the conflicts on the African continent and stressed, in accordance with Article 54 of the Charter, the need for the African Union to keep the Council fully informed of those efforts at all times in a comprehensive and coordinated manner. Emphasizing the primacy of the Council in the maintenance of international peace and security, the Council stressed the importance of supporting and improving in a sustained way the resource base and capacity of the African Union.³⁶²

By a presidential statement dated 25 June 2007, the Council reiterated the important role of regional organizations in the prevention, management and resolution of conflicts in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter. The Council also recognized, in armed conflict and post-conflict situations, the need for a more coordinated approach by the United Nations, regional organizations and Governments concerned.³⁶³

At the 5735th meeting, on 28 August 2007, the representative of the Russian Federation held that more needed to be done to activate the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter, encouraging regional organizations to take proactive steps in the areas of preventive diplomacy and the peaceful resolution of disputes. That entailed, in particular, continuing the practice of the Council supporting African peacekeeping operations and providing assistance to establish African rapid-deployment forces and early-warning systems. He stressed, however, that in doing so, the prerogatives set for the Council by the Charter with regard to the establishment of peacekeeping operations whose mandate included the use of force must be respected.³⁶⁴

The representative of Benin, in emphasizing the importance of cooperation between the United Nations and regional conflict-prevention bodies, stated that such cooperation should rest on decisive implementation of the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter and added that resolution 1631 (2005) had spelled out those modalities. He also affirmed that although until recently the United Nations system in conducting peacekeeping operations had operated with “marginal” involvement by regional organizations, the time had come to make the necessary changes so that those organizations could fully play their role in the collective security system envisioned by the Charter, both in terms of the doctrine of peace operations and the allocation of related resources. He welcomed the support programmes for building the capacity of the African Union, the introduction of annual meetings of the Security Council and the Peace and Security Council of the African Union and the appointment of joint special representatives in crisis situations, as in Darfur.³⁶⁵

By the presidential statement read out at the meeting, the Council reiterated its recognition of the important role of regional organizations, citing Chapter VIII of the Charter. The Council underlined the need for a stronger and more structured relationship between the Security Council and the African Union Peace and Security Council contributing to the achievement of the goals of peace and stability in the context of the arrangements provided for in Chapter VIII. The Council also recognized the important contribution of subregional bodies and underlined the need for African subregional bodies to enhance their capacities in early warning and conflict prevention in order to allow those important actors to respond more promptly to the emerging threats to security in their areas.³⁶⁶

The role of regional and subregional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security

In the concept paper for the debate on the role of regional and subregional organizations, the representative of Indonesia said that the debate would be anchored on the premise that those organizations, consistent with the provisions of the Charter, could contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security directly, by building and developing their capacities to deal with threats in their respective regions, as well as indirectly, by contributing to the Council’s discharge of its Charter-mandated responsibilities.³⁶⁷

At the 5776th meeting, on 6 November 2007, a few speakers maintained that the active role of regional organizations should not be perceived as absolving the United Nations, in particular the Security Council, of its responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security mandated by the Charter.³⁶⁸

The representative of Qatar recalled that the Charter had “reserved” a principal role for regional arrangements in the maintenance of international peace and security and called for more resources in order for regional organizations to contain disputes and resolve conflicts under Chapter VIII of the Charter. In his opinion, the Charter gave priority to regional organizations in settling regional disputes.³⁶⁹

Some speakers were of the view that the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID) should not necessarily lead to a generally applicable model.³⁷⁰ The representative of Belgium, expressing awareness of the dangers inherent in all processes aimed at the institutionalization of relationships, considered it more important to create “pragmatic and flexible synergies” than to establish theoretical frameworks, which very often proved to be rigid and not very functional.³⁷¹

While some speakers expressed concern of the lack of mechanisms to financially support regional arrangements,³⁷² the representative of Japan opined that in principle every organization should be responsible for its own costs and held that, in examining the possibility of offering financial support to regional peacekeeping operations, the Council should consider the advisability and modality of support on a case-by-case basis, taking into account consistency with the principles governing United Nations peacekeeping operations so as to ensure transparency.³⁷³

With regard to Article 54 of the Charter, the representative of the Congo stressed that, in conformity with that Article, regional organizations should submit periodic reports to the Council on their relevant activities.³⁷⁴ The representative of Solomon Islands stated that there was a lack of observance of Article 54, which underlined the requirement that the Council be kept fully informed on all activities under regional and subregional arrangements in the maintenance of international peace.³⁷⁵

By the presidential statement read out at the meeting, the Council recognized the important role of regional and subregional organizations in the prevention, management and resolution of conflicts in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter, and emphasized that the growing contribution made by them in cooperation with the United Nations could usefully support the work of the Organization in maintaining international peace and security. It stressed that such contribution should be made in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter. The Council encouraged regional cooperation, including through the involvement of regional and subregional organizations in the peaceful settlement of disputes, and intended to consult closely with them, whenever appropriate, on their role in future peacekeeping operations as well as political and integrated missions authorized by the Council. The Council stressed the need to develop effective partnership between the Council and regional and subregional organizations in order to enable early response to disputes and emerging crises. The Council recognized the importance of promoting the identification and further development of modalities which enhanced the contribution of regional and subregional organizations to the work of the Council in maintaining international peace and security in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter. For that purpose, the Council deemed it useful to consider further strengthening its interaction and cooperation with regional and subregional organizations in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter.³⁷⁶

B. Encouragement by the Security Council of efforts undertaken by regional arrangements in the pacific settlement of disputes

During the period under review, the Security Council, on various occasions, expressed encouragement for efforts undertaken by regional organizations in the pacific settlement of disputes, including the African Union-led inter-Sudanese peace talks in Abuja and the Somali National Reconciliation Conference launched under the auspices of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD). The practice of the Council in this regard is set out below, by region and in chronological order.

Africa

The situation in Côte d’Ivoire

The Council continued to support, and cooperate with, the African Union and ECOWAS with a view to re-establishing peace and stability in Côte d’Ivoire.

By resolutions 1527 (2004) of 4 February 2004 and 1528 (2004) of 27 February 2004, the Council recalled its full support for the efforts of ECOWAS to promote a peaceful settlement of the conflict, and welcomed the commitment of the African Union in supporting the process of national reconciliation in Côte d’Ivoire.³⁷⁷

³⁷⁷ Resolutions 1527 (2004), fifth preambular paragraph; and 1528 (2004), tenth and eleventh preambular paragraphs.

By a presidential statement dated 5 August 2004, the Council welcomed the resolute commitment of the African Heads of State and Government, in particular of the Chairmen of ECOWAS and the African Union, to the summit held in Accra on 29 and 30 July 2004, thanks to which the conclusion of the Accra III Agreement of 30 July 2004 had been made possible.³⁷⁸

By resolution 1572 (2004) of 15 November 2004 and in subsequent decisions, the Council welcomed the ongoing efforts of, inter alia, the African Union and ECOWAS towards re-establishing peace and security in Côte d'Ivoire. The Council also expressed its full support for their efforts and encouraged them to continue those efforts in order to relaunch the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire.³⁷⁹

By a presidential statement dated 16 December 2004 and similarly by a series of decisions, the Council commended the efforts made by the African Union to promote dialogue and relaunch the peace and national reconciliation process in Côte d'Ivoire. It expressed its full support for the facilitation mission undertaken by the President of South Africa on behalf of the African Union.³⁸⁰

By resolution 1600 (2005) of 4 May 2005, the Council, welcoming the signing by the Ivorian parties at Pretoria on 6 April 2005 of the agreement on the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire (the Pretoria Agreement),³⁸¹ under the auspices of the President of South Africa, commended the President for the essential role he had played, on behalf of the African Union, to restore peace and stability in Côte d'Ivoire, and reaffirmed its full support for his mediation efforts.³⁸²

By resolution 1603 (2005) of 3 June 2005, the Council reiterated the appreciation and support for the mediation efforts by the President of South Africa, on behalf of the African Union, and encouraged the Secretary-General, the President and the African Union to continue to collaborate closely in the implementation of the Pretoria Agreement.³⁸³

By a presidential statement dated 6 July 2005, the Council welcomed the efforts undertaken by the African Union mediation so that the forthcoming elections in Côte d'Ivoire were credible and were held as planned, and reiterated its full support to the African Union mediator.³⁸⁴

By a presidential statement dated 14 October 2005, the Council expressed appreciation of the efforts of the African Union and ECOWAS for the elections to promote peace and stability in Côte d'Ivoire and reiterated its full support for those efforts.³⁸⁵

By resolution 1633 (2005) of 21 October 2005 and similarly by subsequent decisions, the Council commended continued efforts of the African Union and ECOWAS to promote peace and stability in Côte d'Ivoire and reiterated its full support for them. The Council also urged the Chairmen of the African Union and ECOWAS and the African Union Mediator to consult immediately with all the Ivorian parties in order to ensure that a new Prime Minister acceptable to all the Ivorian parties signatories to the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement³⁸⁶ was appointed by 31 October 2005, and to maintain close contact with the Secretary-General throughout that process.³⁸⁷

By resolution 1721 (2006) of 1 November 2006, the Council paid tribute to the President of South Africa for the untiring efforts he had deployed in the service of peace and reconciliation in Côte d'Ivoire, as well as the numerous initiatives he had taken to move forward the peace process, in his capacity as African Union Mediator, driven by his deep commitment to finding African solutions to African problems. The Council endorsed the decision of the Peace and Security Council of the African Union that, to avoid multiple and conflicting mediation efforts, the President of the Congo, in his capacity as Chairperson of the African Union, should lead the mediation efforts, in liaison with the Chairmen of the African Union

Commission and ECOWAS and, as the need might arise, in liaison with any other African leader willing to make a contribution to the search for peace in Côte d'Ivoire. The Council further underlined that the representative of the Mediator in Côte d'Ivoire would lead, in liaison with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire, the day-to-day mediation. The Council also requested the African Union and ECOWAS to continue to monitor and follow up closely the implementation of the peace process, and invited them to review before 1 February 2007 the progress achieved and, should they deem it appropriate, to review the situation again between that date and 31 October 2007.³⁸⁸

By a presidential statement dated 21 December 2006, the Council invited the African Union Mediator to visit Côte d'Ivoire to relaunch the peace process as soon as possible.³⁸⁹

By a presidential statement dated 28 March 2007, the Council welcomed, under the facilitation of the Chairman of ECOWAS, the agreement signed by President Laurent Gbagbo and Mr. Guillaume Soro in Ouagadougou on 4 March 2007 (the Ouagadougou Political Agreement)³⁹⁰ and paid tribute to the Chairman for his efforts to facilitate the conclusion of the Agreement.³⁹¹

By resolutions 1765 (2007) of 16 July 2007 and 1782 (2007) of 29 October 2007, the Council paid tribute to the Chairman of ECOWAS for his continued efforts at facilitation of the inter-Ivorian direct dialogue that had enabled, in particular, the signing of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement. By resolution 1765 (2007), the Council also commended and encouraged the continued efforts of the African Union and ECOWAS to promote peace and stability in Côte d'Ivoire and reiterated its full support for them.³⁹²

During the period under review, the Council continued to support the efforts of various organizations in promoting peace, stability and reconciliation in Somalia, including IGAD, the African Union, the League of Arab States (LAS), the European Union and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC).

By a presidential statement dated 25 February 2004, the Council commended the Presidents of Kenya and Uganda, other leaders of IGAD and international supporters of the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, launched under the auspices of IGAD, for their perseverance to help Somalis achieve national reconciliation. The Council reiterated its readiness to support IGAD in the implementation of the agreements reached at the Somali National Reconciliation Conference. The Council also welcomed the commitment and preparation by the African Union to deploy a military observer mission to Somalia and called upon the international community to support the African Union's efforts to improve the security situation in Somalia.³⁹³

By a presidential statement dated 14 July 2004 and similarly in subsequent decisions, the Council continued to commend States members of IGAD for their efforts in the search for peace in Somalia.³⁹⁴

By a presidential statement dated 26 October 2004, the Council welcomed and expressed its support for the commitment of the African Union to assist the transitional peace process in Somalia, in particular through planning for a peace support mission to Somalia, including options for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, and encouraged the international donor community to contribute to those efforts. Furthermore, the Council welcomed the efforts of, among others, the European Union, the IGAD Partners Forum and LAS in developing a peacebuilding framework leading to the formation of a rapid assistance package.³⁹⁵

By a presidential statement dated 19 November 2004, the Council reaffirmed its support for the commitment of the African Union to assist the transitional process in Somalia, in particular the planning for a mission in Somalia, and urged, inter alia, regional and subregional organizations to provide support to the efforts of the future Somali government and institutions to ensure their ability to function inside

Somalia, and to assist in the reconstruction of Somalia.³⁹⁶

By a presidential statement dated 7 March 2005, the Council recognized the African Union's readiness to play an important role in a future peace support mission in Somalia, which needed to be carefully considered and planned and would require the support of the Somali people. By the same statement, and similarly by a series of decisions, the Council commended the efforts of the African Union and IGAD in support of the Transitional Federal Government and reiterated its support for the efforts of the African Union in assisting the process of transition and national reconciliation in Somalia.³⁹⁷

By a presidential statement dated 14 July 2005, the Council welcomed the readiness of the African Union and IGAD to reinforce their continued support for the establishment of a functioning central government of Somalia, including the possible deployment of a peace support mission to Somalia, and encouraged the African Union Peace and Security Council to keep the Security Council informed of all developments.³⁹⁸

By a presidential statement dated 9 November 2005, the Council commended, among others, IGAD, the African Union, LAS and the European Union for their keen interest and persistent efforts in support of the peace process in Somalia and urged them to use their influence and leverage through a common approach to ensure that the transitional federal institutions resolved their differences and built trust, through an inclusive dialogue, and to move ahead on the key issues of security and national reconciliation.³⁹⁹

By a presidential statement dated 15 March 2006, the Council commended, inter alia, IGAD, the African Union, LAS, the European Union and OIC for their keen interest and persistent efforts in support of the peace, reconciliation and recovery process in Somalia and again encouraged them to continue to use their influence in support of the transitional federal institutions. The Council also welcomed the decision on Somalia of the African Union summit of 25 January 2006, including the possible deployment of an IGAD peace support mission in Somalia, to be followed by an African Union peace support mission. Concerning the increased incidents of piracy and armed robbery against ships in waters off the coast of Somalia, the Council welcomed the communiqué of the meeting of the Council of Ministers of IGAD, held on 29 November 2005, in which the Council of Ministers decided to coordinate its strategies and action plans to face that common challenge in close collaboration with the international community.⁴⁰⁰

By a presidential statement dated 13 July 2006, the Council commended LAS for facilitating the talks which culminated in the agreement reached in Khartoum on 22 June 2006 between the Transitional Federal Government of Somalia and the Islamic Courts.⁴⁰¹ Also, the Council commended the African Union and IGAD for their continuing efforts to promote peace and stability in Somalia and the region.⁴⁰²

By resolution 1724 (2006) of 29 November 2006, the Council commended the efforts of the African Union, IGAD and LAS for their continued support for national reconciliation in Somalia.⁴⁰³

By resolution 1725 (2006) of 6 December 2006, the Council commended the crucial efforts of LAS and IGAD to promote and encourage political dialogue between the transitional federal institutions and the Union of Islamic Courts and expressed its full support for those initiatives.⁴⁰⁴

By resolution 1744 (2007) of 20 February 2007, and similarly by resolution 1766 (2007) of 23 July 2007, the Council reiterated its appreciation of the efforts of the African Union, LAS and IGAD to promote peace, stability and reconciliation in Somalia, and welcomed their continued engagement in that regard.⁴⁰⁵

By resolution 1772 (2007) of 20 August 2007, the Council reiterated its appreciation of the efforts of the international community, in particular the African Union, as well as LAS, IGAD and the European Union, to promote peace, stability and reconciliation in Somalia, and welcomed their continued engagement. The Council also recalled that cooperation between the United Nations and the regional arrangements in matters

By resolutions 1537 (2004) of 30 March 2004 and 1562 (2004) of 17 September 2004, the Council commended the efforts of ECOWAS towards building peace in the subregion. By resolution 1537 (2004), the Council also encouraged the Presidents of the States members of the Mano River Union to resume dialogue and to renew their commitment to building regional peace and security. By resolution 1562 (2004), the Council encouraged the Mano River Union member States to continue their dialogue aimed at building regional peace and security.⁴⁰⁷

In connection with the decision in 2003 of the President of Nigeria to facilitate the removal of former President Taylor from Liberia, which had allowed the Comprehensive Peace Agreement⁴⁰⁸ to take effect, the Council, by resolution 1688 (2006) of 16 June 2006, recognized the contribution made by ECOWAS in that regard.⁴⁰⁹

By resolutions 1734 (2006) of 22 December 2006 and 1793 (2007) of 21 December 2007, the Council encouraged the member States of the Mano River Union and other regional organizations to continue their dialogue aimed at building regional peace and stability. By resolution 1793 (2007), the Council also welcomed the role played by ECOWAS.⁴¹⁰

The Council commended the contribution of the African Union to the peace process in Burundi and welcomed the efforts of the African Mission in Burundi (AMIB) which had been transformed into a United Nations peacekeeping operation during 2004.

By resolution 1545 (2004) of 21 May 2004, the Council paid tribute to the efforts made by the African Union, among other actors, to bring peace to Burundi and encouraged the African Union to maintain a strong presence in Burundi to accompany the efforts of the Burundian parties, as specified in the Arusha Agreement and subsequent agreements. The Council also welcomed the efforts of AMIB and the contingents from South Africa, Ethiopia and Mozambique which made it up as well as Member States which had assisted AMIB in its deployment. Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council authorized the deployment of a peacekeeping operation, the United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB), which should initially be composed of existing forces of AMIB, and requested the Secretary-General, acting in liaison with the African Union, to ensure the transfer of authority over AMIB, within the framework of ONUB, to his Special Representative.⁴¹¹

In his report dated 25 August 2004, the Secretary-General reported that on 1 June 2004, troops of AMIB had been "re-hatted" as ONUB troops.⁴¹²

Subsequent to the election of the President of Burundi on 19 August 2005, the Council, by a presidential statement dated 30 August 2005, commended, inter alia, the critical contribution of the African Union to the peace process in Burundi.⁴¹³

By resolution 1650 (2005) of 21 December 2005, congratulating the people of Burundi for the successful conclusion of the transitional period and the peaceful transfer of authority to representative and democratically elected government and institutions, the Council expressed its gratitude to, inter alia, the African Union for its significant contribution to the success of the political transition.⁴¹⁴

By resolution 1719 (2006) of 25 October 2006, the Council reiterated its gratitude to, among others, AMIB for its important contribution to the successful completion of the transition process in Burundi and to peace in the region.⁴¹⁵

At the 5786th meeting, on 28 November 2007, the representative of South Africa encouraged the Facilitator for the Burundi peace process to continue his work, as determined by the regional initiative and the African Union, stating that it was important that the process continued to receive the full support of the Council “in line with Chapter VIII of the Charter”.⁴¹⁷

By resolution 1791 (2007) of 19 December 2007, paying tribute to the facilitation efforts of South Africa, in conjunction with the countries of the regional peace initiative and the African Union, to promote the full implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement, the Council encouraged the South African facilitation, the other States of the regional peace initiative on Burundi, the African Union and other international partners to reinforce efforts in support of the early conclusion of the peace process between the Government of Burundi and Palipehutu-FNL.⁴¹⁸

The situation concerning the Democratic Republic of Congo

During the period under review, the Council welcomed and supported the ongoing efforts of the African Union to restore peace and security in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Council also recognized the contribution by the European Union in the areas of security sector and police reform.

Following the seizure of the town of Bukavu by dissident forces on 2 June 2004, the Council, by a presidential statement dated 7 June 2004, welcomed the initiative of the Chairperson of the Commission of the African Union aimed at overcoming the crisis, including in its human dimension, and at facilitating the successful conclusion of the peace process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁴¹⁹

By resolution 1592 (2005) of 30 March 2005, the Council welcomed the African Union’s support for efforts to further peace in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and called upon the African Union to work closely with the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in defining its role in the region.⁴²⁰

By resolution 1596 (2005) of 18 April 2005, the Council commended the efforts made by, among others, the African Union to restore peace and security in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁴²¹

By resolution 1671 (2006) of 25 April 2006, the Council commended the donor community, in particular the European Union, for the assistance that it was providing to the electoral process and in the interest of a successful outcome to the transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and encouraged it to continue its support. The Council also welcomed the additional assistance that the European Union was providing in the context of the forthcoming elections by temporarily reinforcing the European Union police mission in Kinshasa to support the coordination of units of the police forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁴²²

By resolution 1693 (2006) of 30 June 2006, the Council recalled the importance of security sector reform for the long-term stabilization of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and the contribution brought by, among others, the European Union Mission of Assistance for Security Sector Reform in that regard.⁴²³ By resolution 1742 (2007) of 15 February 2007, the Council urged the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and its partners, in particular the European Union, to agree promptly on ways to coordinate their efforts and to carry out security sector reform by building on the results already achieved.⁴²⁴

*Items relating to the Sudan*⁴²⁵

In the case of the Sudan, concerning the North-South peace process, the Council supported the work of IGAD in facilitating the peace talks, which resulted in the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement on 9 January 2005. With regard to the Darfur peace process, the Council continuously supported the efforts of the African Union to find a solution to the crisis, including the successful African Union-led inter-Sudanese peace talks on the conflict in Darfur in Abuja, which led to the agreed framework between the parties for a resolution of the conflict in Darfur (the Darfur Peace Agreement).

With regard to the North-South peace process, by resolutions 1547 (2004) of 11 June 2004 and 1574 (2004) of 19 November 2004, the Council commended the work and continued support of IGAD in facilitating the peace talks, and expressed hope that IGAD would continue to play a vital role during the transitional period.⁴²⁶ By resolution 1590 (2005) of 24 March 2005, the Council, in welcoming the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement between the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army in Nairobi on 9 January 2005, commended the efforts of IGAD. The Council requested the Secretary-General, through his Special Representative, to facilitate coordination with other international actors, in particular, the African Union and IGAD, of activities in support of the transitional process established by the Comprehensive Peace Agreement.⁴²⁷

With regard to the Darfur peace process, the Council, by a presidential statement dated 25 May 2004, stressing that a ceasefire commission with international representation was a central component of the ceasefire agreement signed on 8 April 2004 in N'Djamena, and expressed its full and active support for the efforts of the African Union to establish the ceasefire commission and protection units. The Council also called upon Member States to provide generous support for the efforts of the African Union.⁴²⁸ By resolution 1547 (2004), the

Council urged the parties to the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement of 8 April 2004 to conclude a political agreement without delay and welcomed the efforts of the African Union towards that end.⁴²⁹

By resolution 1556 (2004) of 30 July 2004 and similarly by resolution 1564 (2004) of 18 September 2004, the Council welcomed the leadership role and the engagement of the African Union regarding the situation in Darfur and expressed its readiness to support fully those efforts.⁴³⁰

By resolution 1574 (2004) of 19 November 2004, the Council stressed the importance of further progress towards resolving the crisis in Darfur and welcomed the vital and wide-ranging role being played by the African Union towards that end.⁴³¹

By resolution 1591 (2005) of 29 March 2005, the Council welcomed the continued commitment of the African Union to play a key role in facilitating a resolution to the conflict in Darfur in all respects.⁴³²

By resolution 1651 (2005) of 21 December 2005 and similarly by its subsequent decisions, the Council stressed its firm commitment to the cause of peace throughout the Sudan, including through the African Union-led inter-Sudanese peace talks in Abuja and commended the efforts of and reiterated its full support for the African Union, among other players, to promote peace and stability in Darfur.⁴³³ By a presidential statement dated 11 April 2006, reiterating its full support for the Abuja talks, the Council noted that the African Union should maintain leadership of that process and endorsed the decision of the African Union Peace and Security Council that 30 April 2006 was the final deadline for reaching an agreement.⁴³⁴

By a presidential statement dated 9 May 2006, the Council strongly welcomed the agreement reached at the inter-Sudanese peace talks in Abuja on 5 May 2006 as a basis for lasting peace in Darfur and expressed its appreciation of the efforts of the Special Envoy of the African Union and the Chief Mediator, among others.⁴³⁵

By resolution 1679 (2006) of 16 May 2006, the Council welcomed the success of the African Union-led Abuja talks, in particular the framework agreed between the parties for a resolution of the conflict in Darfur (Darfur Peace Agreement) and again commended the efforts of Chair of the African Union and Special Envoy of the African Union for the talks and Chief Mediator.⁴³⁶

By resolution 1706 (2006) of 31 August 2006, the Council welcomed the efforts of the African Union to find a solution to the crisis in Darfur, including the success of the African Union-led Abuja talks, in particular the Darfur Peace Agreement.⁴³⁷

By resolution 1755 (2007) of 30 April 2007, the Council expressed its full support for the coordinated efforts of the United Nations and African Union special envoys for Darfur to broaden support for and move forward implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement.⁴³⁸

By resolution 1779 (2007) of 28 September 2007, the Council commended the efforts of, and reiterated its full support for, the African Union, the Secretary-General and their respective special envoys to promote peace and stability in Darfur and expressed strong support for the political process under African Union-United Nations mediation.⁴³⁹

By a presidential statement dated 24 October 2007, the Council stressed the urgent need for an inclusive and sustainable political settlement in Darfur, and strongly welcomed, in that regard, the convening of peace talks on 27 October 2007 in Sirte, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, under the leadership of the United Nations Special Envoy for Darfur and the African Union Special Envoy for Darfur, who had the full support of the Council.⁴⁴⁰

At the 5784th meeting, on 27 November 2007, the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Darfur said that working together in the spirit of Chapter VIII of the Charter and having the African Union and the United Nations performing common tasks, both in the area of peacekeeping and political talks, was a fascinating but difficult task. He hoped that the political process would move forward.⁴⁴¹

By a presidential statement dated 18 June 2004, the Council reaffirmed the importance of the regional dimension in the solution of the problems faced by Guinea-Bissau, and, in that regard, welcomed the role being played by the African Union, the West African Economic and Monetary Union, ECOWAS and the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries in the peace-building process in Guinea-Bissau.⁴⁴²

By resolution 1580 (2004) of 22 December 2004, the Council encouraged the establishment of a joint coordinating mechanism among the United Nations, ECOWAS and the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries to ensure synergy and complementarity.⁴⁴³

Following the successful holding of the presidential elections in Guinea-Bissau, the Council, by a presidential statement dated 19 August 2005, expressed its appreciation for the contribution made by, inter alia, the African Union, the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries, ECOWAS and the European Union, and underlined the importance of their timely diplomatic efforts aimed at promoting national dialogue and respect for the rule of law.⁴⁴⁴

By a presidential statement dated 19 October 2007, the Council welcomed the decision by ECOWAS to convene later that year a regional conference on combating drug trafficking, aimed at developing a regional plan of action to deal with that challenge, recognizing the importance of containing and reversing the threat of drug trafficking to the peace consolidation process in Guinea-Bissau. The Council also welcomed the assistance provided to Guinea-Bissau by, among others, the European Union, and encouraged its enhanced constructive involvement in the country. The Council took note of the announcement made by the European Union and ECOWAS to make resources available in support of security sector reform. Furthermore, the Council again welcomed the role that

By resolution 1561 (2004) of 17 September 2004, the Council recognized the critical role ECOWAS continued to play in the Liberian peace process and welcomed the support and continued engagement of the African Union and its close coordination with ECOWAS and the United Nations.⁴⁴⁶

By resolution 1626 (2005) of 19 September 2005 and similarly in subsequent resolutions, the Council expressed its appreciation for the indispensable and continuing contributions to the Liberian peace process by ECOWAS and the African Union.⁴⁴⁷

With regard to the situation in the Central African Republic, the Council continued to cooperate with and support the Central African Economic and Monetary Community (CEMAC), including its multinational force, whose deployment had been supported by the Council in 2002.

By a presidential statement dated 28 October 2004, the Council welcomed the considerable efforts in the Central African Republic made by the States members of CEMAC in the political, economic and security fields. The Council also reiterated its full support for the multinational force of CEMAC.⁴⁴⁸

Following the successful holding of the presidential and legislative elections, the Council, by a presidential statement dated 22 July 2005, commended the multinational force of CEMAC and the European Union, among others, for providing decisive support to the Central African defence and security forces. The Council expressed appreciation for the vital role played in the electoral process by the force to date and expressed its support for the continuing efforts by the force to back the consolidation of the constitutional order, which had thus been re-established, and the rebuilding of the rule of law. The Council welcomed the decision of the States of CEMAC to extend the mandate of the force.⁴⁴⁹

By a presidential statement dated 22 November 2006, the Council encouraged the multinational force of CEMAC to continue supporting the Central African armed forces beyond 30 June 2007. The Council also requested the Secretary-General to reinforce cooperation between the United Nations and members of CEMAC with a view to facilitating and strengthening initiatives aimed at addressing trans-border insecurity in the subregion and bringing to an end the violation by armed groups of the territorial integrity of the Central African Republic.⁴⁵⁰

At the 5359th meeting, on 27 January 2006, the representative of Angola, noting that the adoption of resolution 1631 (2005) had opened a new era of cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and regional organizations, expressed the view that the African Union and subregional organizations could better play their role if an effective response was given to the problems of the lack of resources and of how to make partnerships between the two mechanisms as efficient as possible. He stressed that useful lessons on the negative impact of the lack of resources should be drawn from the deployment of the missions of the African Union in Burundi and Darfur, while reflecting on the improvement in cooperation between the Council and regional organizations.⁴⁵¹ The representative of Ghana underlined the need to further enhance the burgeoning cooperation between the United Nations and the African Union in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter, especially the strengthening of coordination and communications between the two in mediation and peacekeeping efforts in the Great Lakes region.⁴⁵² The representative of Egypt, stressing the need for more coherence among various institutions involved in the region, held that the Council should perform its role, consistent with its responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, through its mandates for various peacekeeping operations, while the Peace and Security Council of the African Union should perform its role as the primary regional body concerned with continental security. He added that the relationship between the two bodies needed to be governed by Chapter VIII of the Charter and resolution 1631 (2005) and welcomed in that context the development of consultative institutional mechanisms between the two, including exchanging visits and holding ongoing periodic consultations on peace and security issues.⁴⁵³

By resolution 1653 (2006), adopted at that meeting, the Council commended the positive role played by, among others, the African Union in organizing and participating in the first summit of the International Conference on Peace, Security, Democracy and Development in the Great Lakes Region in Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, on 19 and 20 November 2004. The Council also invited the international community, including regional organizations, among other actors, to support and complement the peacebuilding and development initiatives required to sustain peace, security and stability in the countries of the Great Lakes region.⁴⁵⁴

Following the conclusion of the second summit of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region in Nairobi on 15 December 2006, the Council, by a presidential statement dated 20 December 2006, paid tribute to, among others, the joint African Union/United Nations Secretariat, the African Union and the European Union for their support and assistance to the International Conference process.⁴⁵⁵

By a presidential statement dated 27 August 2007, the Council encouraged the Secretary-General and the European Union to continue to collaborate with the African Union and regional stakeholders in support of the ongoing process of improving the security situation in the Sudan, Chad and the Central African Republic.⁴⁵⁶

By resolution 1778 (2007) of 25 September 2007, the Council reiterated its full support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and the African Union to revive the peace process begun by the Darfur Peace

Agreement, consolidate the ceasefire and reinforce the peacekeeping presence in Darfur.⁴⁵⁷

Americas

The question concerning Haiti

The Council supported and encouraged the efforts of the Organization of American States (OAS) and the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) to advance the peace process in Haiti, including the national election process, in cooperation and coordination with the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH) established during the period under review.

At the 4917th meeting, on 26 February 2004, the representative of Jamaica said that the situation in Haiti was a serious regional concern and noted that “in keeping with Chapter VIII of the Charter”, regional organizations were often the first recourse in addressing threats to peace and security, using as an example the efforts of CARICOM and OAS in Haiti, following the coup d’état against President Aristide in 2001.⁴⁵⁸

By a presidential statement read out at the meeting, the Council, expressing deep concern in regard to the deterioration of the political, security and humanitarian environment in Haiti, commended OAS and CARICOM for their lead role in promoting a peaceful solution and for trying to re-establish confidence among the parties, in particular through their Plan of Action. The Council supported CARICOM and OAS as they continued to work towards a peaceful and constitutional solution to the current impasse. It stated that the principles outlined in the CARICOM/OAS Plan of Action represented an important basis for a solution to the crisis.⁴⁵⁹ The Council again commended the lead efforts by OAS and CARICOM in resolution 1529 (2004) of 29 February 2004, and subsequently called upon the international community, in particular, among others, OAS and CARICOM, to work with the people of Haiti in a long-term effort to promote the rebuilding of democratic institutions and to assist in the development of a strategy to promote social and economic development and to combat poverty, and welcomed the intention of OAS and CARICOM to participate in such efforts.⁴⁶⁰

By resolution 1542 (2004) of 30 April 2004, in deciding to establish MINUSTAH, the Council requested that in carrying out its mandate, MINUSTAH cooperate and coordinate with OAS and CARICOM.⁴⁶¹

At the 5110th meeting, on 12 January 2005, the representative of Bolivia noted with satisfaction that the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter had been implemented in a positive manner, through the signing of a memorandum of understanding between the United Nations and OAS on electoral assistance in Haiti and through the contacts established with CARICOM to assess the electoral assistance that its members would contribute to support the reconciliation and recovery efforts of the people of Haiti.⁴⁶² By a presidential statement read out at the meeting, the Council called upon the Transitional Government, with the assistance of MINUSTAH and OAS, urgently to take the necessary measures to ensure the holding of free and fair elections in 2005 and the subsequent transfer of power to elected authorities.⁴⁶³ By a presidential statement dated 18 October 2005, the Council, noting with appreciation that 3 million people had to date been registered for elections, praised, among others, OAS for its contribution to that process.⁴⁶⁴ By a presidential statement dated 9 February 2006, commending the Haitian people on the holding of the first round of national elections on 7 February 2006 with high voter turnout and congratulating them on taking that fundamental step towards the restoration of democracy and stability in their country, the Council stated that it wished to thank OAS, among others, for providing crucial assistance to the Transitional Government and the Provisional Electoral Council during that period.⁴⁶⁵ By resolution 1658 (2006) of 14 February 2006, the Council again commended OAS for its efforts in supporting the national elections in Haiti.⁴⁶⁶

By resolution 1702 (2006) of 15 August 2006, the Council welcomed the readmittance of Haiti to the Councils of CARICOM and called upon MINUSTAH to continue to work closely with OAS and CARICOM. The Council paid tribute to the continued support of the international community, including regional organizations, for Haiti.⁴⁶⁸

By resolutions 1743 (2007) of 15 February 2007 and 1780 (2007) of 15 October 2007, the Council emphasized the role of the regional organizations in the ongoing process of stabilization and reconstruction of Haiti, and called upon MINUSTAH to continue to work closely with OAS and CARICOM. By resolution 1780 (2007), the Council also welcomed the support of OAS to update the Haitian voter registry while calling upon the Haitian authorities to establish permanent and effective electoral institutions and to hold elections consistent with the Haiti's constitutional requirements.⁴⁶⁹

Europe

The situation in Georgia

With regard to the situation in Georgia, the Council continued to encourage the efforts of the collective peacekeeping force of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), operating side by side with the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG). The Council also continued to support the efforts of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) in the pacific settlement of the dispute.

By several resolutions, the Council welcomed the important contributions made by UNOMIG and the collective peacekeeping force of CIS in stabilizing the situation in the zone of conflict and stressed its attachment to the close cooperation existing between

The situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question

By a presidential statement dated 30 November 2005, the Council, welcoming the Agreement on Movement and Access and the Agreed Principles for the Rafah Crossing reached between the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority on 15 November 2005, expressed its strong appreciation to the European Union for assuming the role of third-party monitor.⁴⁸⁸

C. Authorization by the Security Council of enforcement action by regional arrangements, and related action by the Council

From 2004 to 2007, the Security Council increasingly gave its authorization under Chapter VII of the Charter to regional arrangements to deploy peacekeeping operations, most of which were also authorized to take all necessary actions. During the reporting period, six new regional peacekeeping operations were authorized by the Council in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Chad/Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Somalia and Sudan (Darfur).⁴⁸⁹ The culmination of cooperation with regional arrangements in peacekeeping was the deployment of a hybrid peacekeeping operation of the African Union and the United Nations in Darfur, which evolved from the African Union Mission in the Sudan authorized by the Council under Chapter VII of the Charter.

The Council continued to cooperate with regional organizations in the implementation of Chapter VII measures, such as sanctions. In its decisions, the Council welcomed the efforts undertaken by its subsidiary bodies with responsibilities in counter-

The practice of the Council in this regard is presented below, by region and in chronological order.

Africa

The situation in Côte d'Ivoire

On 4 April 2004, the ECOWAS Mission in Côte d'Ivoire, which the Council had originally authorized by resolution 1464 (2003), under Chapter VII of the Charter, to "take the necessary steps" to guarantee the security and freedom of movement of its personnel and to ensure the protection of civilians, transferred its authority to a newly established peacekeeping operation, the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI).

By resolutions 1527 (2004) of 4 February 2004 and 1528 (2004) of 27 February 2004, the Council welcomed in particular the effective action taken by the ECOWAS forces in order to stabilize the country.⁴⁹¹ By resolution 1527 (2004), acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council decided to renew until 27 February 2004 the authorization given to Member States participating in forces of ECOWAS.⁴⁹²

By resolution 1528 (2004), taking note of the request made by ECOWAS to the Council on 24 November 2003 to establish a peacekeeping operation in Côte d'Ivoire and acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council decided to establish UNOCI for an initial period of 12 months as from 4 April 2004, and requested the Secretary-General to transfer authority from the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire (MINUCI) and the ECOWAS forces to UNOCI on that date. The Council decided to renew until 4 April 2004 the authorization given to the forces of ECOWAS through its resolution 1527 (2004).⁴⁹³

In his report dated 2 June 2004, the Secretary-General reported that on 4 April 2004 UNOCI officially had replaced MINUCI and re-hatted ECOWAS troops.⁴⁹⁴

Items relating to the Sudan

The Council's cooperation with the African Union resulted in the deployment of the first-ever joint peacekeeping operation with a regional organization under Chapter VII of the Charter, the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID), in July 2007, which was authorized to use force. The Council invited the African Union to cooperate in the implementation of sanctions measures as well as in the context of its referral of the situation in Darfur to the International Criminal Court.

By resolution 1556 (2004) of 30 July 2004, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, endorsed the deployment of international monitors, including the protection force envisioned by the African Union, to the Darfur region of the Sudan under the leadership of the African Union. The Council urged Member States to reinforce the international monitoring team, led by the African Union, including the protection force, by providing personnel and other assistance as needed for the monitoring operations and expressed its full support for the African Union-led ceasefire commission and monitoring mission in Darfur.⁴⁹⁵

By resolution 1564 (2004) of 18 September 2004, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, welcomed and supported the intention of the African Union to enhance and augment its monitoring mission in the Darfur region of the Sudan and encouraged the undertaking of proactive monitoring. The Council again urged Member States to support the African Union in those efforts, including by providing all equipment, logistical, financial, material and other resources necessary to support the rapid expansion of the African Union mission.⁴⁹⁶

⁴⁹⁶ Resolution 1564 (2004), paras. 2-3. Throughout the period under review, the call for provision of the required equipment and necessary resources to the African Union mission was reiterated in several decisions (see resolutions 1574 (2004); 1590 (2005); and 1591 (2005); and S/PRST/2005/67).

At the 5040th meeting, following the adoption of resolution 1564 (2004), a few representatives expressed regret that the resolution had not included a reference to Chapter VIII of the Charter. The representative of Benin opined that such a reference would have highlighted the cooperation and consultation necessary between the United Nations and the regional organizations.⁴⁹⁷ The representative of Brazil said that, while resolution 1564 (2004) committed the international community to political and military efforts made by the African Union in Darfur, the Council should have gone further by basing the appropriate paragraphs of the resolution on Chapter VIII of the Charter. Such provisions would have been not only easily acceptable but also timely and appropriate and provided a steadier political and legal basis for the budding cooperation between the United Nations and the African Union in that particular instance.⁴⁹⁸

By resolution 1574 (2004) of 19 November 2004, the Council expressed its strong support of the decisions of the African Union to increase its mission in Darfur to 3,320 personnel and to enhance its mandate to include the tasks listed in paragraph 6 of the communiqué of 20 October 2004 of the Peace and Security Council of the African Union.⁴⁹⁹

By resolution 1590 (2005) of 24 March 2005, commending the efforts of the African Union and acknowledging the progress made by the African Union in the deployment of an international protection force, police and military observers, the Council requested that the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS), established by that resolution, closely and continuously liaise and coordinate at all levels with the African Union Mission in the Sudan (AMIS) with a view to expeditiously reinforcing the effort to foster peace in Darfur, especially with regard to the Abuja peace process and AMIS.⁵⁰⁰ By resolution 1591 (2005) of 29 March 2005, the Council reiterated its commendation for the efforts of the African Union, including its deployment of an international protection force, police and military observers.⁵⁰¹

By a presidential statement dated 12 May 2005, the Council applauded the vital leadership role of the African Union in Darfur and the work of AMIS on the ground. The Council supported the subsequent decision taken by the African Union Peace and Security Council on 28 April 2005 to expand its Mission in Darfur to 7,731 personnel by the end of September 2005. It looked forward to close coordination and cooperation between UNMIS and AMIS, recalling resolution 1590 (2005) in that regard. The Council also welcomed the role played by the partners of the African Union in support of AMIS and underlined the active role played by the European Union.⁵⁰²

By a presidential statement dated 21 December 2005, the Council expressed its gratitude to the African Union and its Mission in the Sudan for the positive role that its forces had played in reducing violence and promoting the restoration of order in Darfur.⁵⁰³

By a presidential statement of 3 February 2006, the Council commended the efforts of the African Union for successful deployment of AMIS and for significant contribution to the provision of a secure environment for civilians and the humanitarian situation in Darfur. The Council welcomed the recognition by the Peace and Security Council of the partnership between the African Union and the United Nations in the promotion of peace, security and stability in Africa. The Council further took note of the communiqué of 12 January 2006 issued by the Peace and Security Council, in which it had expressed its support, in principle, for a transition from AMIS to a United Nations operation and requested the Chairman of the Commission of the African Union to initiate consultations with the United Nations and other stakeholders on that matter. The Council emphasized the importance of maintaining strong support for AMIS until any eventual transition was completed.⁵⁰⁴

By resolution 1663 (2006) of 24 March 2006, the Council welcomed the communiqué of 10 March 2006 issued by the Peace and Security Council at its forty-sixth meeting,⁵⁰⁵ and the decision of that Council to support in principle the transition of AMIS to a United Nations operation within the framework of partnership between the African Union and the United Nations in the promotion of peace, security and stability in Africa, to pursue the conclusion of a peace agreement on Darfur by the end of April 2006, and to extend the mandate of AMIS until 30 September 2006. The Council requested that the Secretary-General, jointly with the African Union, in close and continuing consultations with the Council, expedite the necessary preparatory planning for transition of AMIS to a United Nations operation, and encouraged the Secretary-General to continue to provide the maximum possible assistance to AMIS. The Council also requested the Secretary-General and the African Union to consult with international and regional organizations and member States to identify resources to support AMIS during transition to a United Nations operation.⁵⁰⁶

By a presidential statement of 11 April 2006 and subsequent decisions, the Council commended the African Union for what AMIS had successfully achieved in Darfur despite exceptionally difficult circumstances. The Council again stressed that the Secretary-General should consult jointly with the African Union, in close and continuing consultation with the Council, on decisions concerning the transition and called upon international and regional organizations and Member States to provide every possible additional assistance to a follow-on United Nations operation.⁵⁰⁷

Following the conclusion of the Darfur Peace Agreement, the Council, by resolution 1679 (2006) of 16 May 2006, commended the efforts of the African Union for successful deployment of AMIS and further commended the efforts of, among others, regional organizations that had assisted AMIS in its deployment. The Council also welcomed the efforts of, inter alia, regional organizations to maintain and strengthen their support to AMIS and potentially to a follow-on United Nations operation in Darfur and appealed to African Union partners to provide the necessary support to AMIS to allow it to continue to perform its mandate during the transition. The Council called upon the African Union to agree with the United Nations, regional and international organizations and Member States on requirements necessary to strengthen the capacity of AMIS to enforce the security arrangements of the Darfur Peace Agreement, with a view to a follow-on United Nations operation in Darfur, and endorsed the decision of the Peace and Security Council in its communiqué of 15 May 2006⁵⁰⁸ that, in view of the signing of the Darfur Peace Agreement, concrete steps should be taken to effect the transition from AMIS to a United Nations operation.⁵⁰⁹

By resolution 1706 (2006) of 31 August 2006, the Council again commended the efforts of the African Union for the successful deployment of AMIS and the role of AMIS in reducing large-scale organized violence in Darfur and stressed the need for AMIS to assist implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement until transition to the United Nations force in Darfur was completed. The Council also welcomed the decision of the Peace and Security Council of 27 June 2006 on strengthening the mandate and tasks of the Mission, including on the protection of civilians. The Council requested the Secretary-General to consult jointly with the African Union on a plan and timetable for transition from AMIS to a United Nations operation in Darfur and decided that UNMIS should take over from AMIS the responsibility for supporting the implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement upon the expiration of the mandate of AMIS but in any event no later than 31 December 2006. The Council also requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to strengthen AMIS through the use of existing and additional United Nations resources with a view to transitioning to a United Nations operation in Darfur and authorized the Secretary-General during that transition to implement the longer-term support to AMIS outlined in the report of the Secretary-General of 28 July 2006,⁵¹⁰ including provision of air assets, ground mobility package, training, engineering and logistics, mobile communications capacity and broad public information assistance.⁵¹¹

At the 5528th meeting, on 18 September 2006, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan, speaking of the difficulties of a transition from AMIS to an United Nations operation due to the lack of consent by the Government of the Sudan, indicated his belief that the Government of the Sudan would accept the authority of a transition rooted in Chapter VIII of the Charter.⁵¹²

By resolution 1714 (2006) of 6 October 2006, the Council welcomed the decision of the Peace and Security Council at its sixty-third meeting, on 20 September 2006, to extend the mandate of AMIS until 31 December 2006, and encouraged the efforts of the Secretary-General and the African Union to implement those provisions of resolution 1706 (2006) on United Nations assistance to AMIS.⁵¹³

By resolution 1755 (2007) of 30 April 2007, the Council again commended the efforts of the African Union for successful deployment of AMIS, despite exceptionally difficult circumstances.⁵¹⁴

By a presidential statement dated 25 May 2007, the Council welcomed the transmission of the report of the Secretary-General and the Chairperson of the African Union Commission on the hybrid operation in Darfur,⁵¹⁵ which contained recommendations regarding a mandate and a structure for the hybrid operation, details on the various components of the proposed operation and their specific tasks, and a description of the ongoing efforts of the international community to support the peace process in Darfur and to strengthen AMIS. The Council noted that agreement between the African Union and the United Nations on that joint report was an important development in the comprehensive approach to the peace process in Darfur, which also included re-energizing the political process, strengthening the ceasefire, and implementing the three-phase approach to peacekeeping, culminating in an African Union-United Nations hybrid operation. The Council called for the full implementation without delay of the United Nations light and heavy support packages of assistance to AMIS, as well as for the report of the Secretary-General and the Chairperson of the African Union Commission on the hybrid operation to be considered and taken forward immediately.⁵¹⁶

By resolution 1769 (2007) of 31 July 2007, the Council recalled that cooperation between the United Nations and the regional arrangements in matters relating to the maintenance of peace and security was an integral part of collective security as provided for in the Charter of the United Nations. The Council also commended the efforts of the African Union for the successful deployment of AMIS as well as the efforts of Member States and regional organizations that had assisted it in its deployment, and stressed the need for AMIS, as supported by the United Nations light and heavy support packages, to assist in the implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement until the end of its mandate. The Council recalled the communiqué of the seventy-ninth meeting of the Peace and Security Council of 22 June 2007, at which that Council had extended the mandate of AMIS for an additional period not exceeding six months, until 31 December 2007.⁵¹⁷

By the same resolution, the Council decided to authorize and mandate the establishment, for an initial period of 12 months, of an African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID), to incorporate personnel from AMIS and the United Nations heavy and light support packages to AMIS, with command and control structures and backstopping provided by the United Nations. In doing so, the Council authorized UNAMID to “take the necessary action”, in the areas of deployment of its forces and as it deemed within its capabilities in order to, inter alia, protect its personnel, support early and effective implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement and to protect civilians. The Council also stressed the urgent need to mobilize the financial, logistical and other support required for AMIS.⁵¹⁸

At the 5727th meeting, on 31 July 2007, at which that resolution was adopted, the representative of France expressed the view that resolution 1769 (2007) was the outcome of a process of cooperation between the United Nations and the African Union that had been exemplary in many respects. He held that given its unprecedented hybrid nature and joint leadership by two organizations, UNAMID would require the special commitment of, and ongoing mobilization by, the international community, relying on the United Nations and the African Union which had a special responsibility.⁵¹⁹ The representative of Slovakia expressed particular appreciation that resolution 1769

(2007) reflected the new partnership between the African Union and the United Nations, which would be crucial for the future success of the hybrid operation.⁵²⁰ The representative of the United States, echoed by the representative of Belgium, stated that the hybrid operation represented a new and unique form of cooperation between the two organizations.⁵²¹ The representative of the African Union was convinced that the joint efforts of the United Nations and the African Union in Darfur and in other conflict situations in Africa would greatly contribute to building a new framework of cooperation between the United Nations, the African Union and other regional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security and the promotion of sustainable development.⁵²²

With regard to the measures imposed in the framework of Article 41 against the Sudan, the Council, by resolution 1591 (2005) of 29 March 2005, in strengthening the arms embargo originally imposed by resolution 1556 (2004) and imposing additional measures of a travel ban and an asset freeze, invited the African Union Ceasefire Commission to share pertinent information as appropriate with the Secretary-General and the Committee or the Panel of Experts established by the resolution.⁵²³ By a presidential statement of 13 October 2005, the Council urged the African Union to share results of its investigations into recent attacks against personnel of AMIS with the Council for possible referral to the Sudan sanctions committee in order to assist in the implementation of the provisions of the relevant Council resolutions, while expressing its unequivocal support for AMIS.⁵²⁴ Furthermore, by a series of resolutions, the Council urged the African Union and other interested parties to cooperate fully with the Committee and the Panel of Experts, in particular by supplying any information at their disposal on implementation of the measures imposed by resolutions 1556 (2004) and 1591 (2005).⁵²⁵

By resolution 1593 (2005) of 31 March 2005, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, decided to refer the situation in Darfur since 1 July

2002 to the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court and urged all States and “concerned regional and other international organizations” to cooperate fully. The Council also invited the Court and the African Union to discuss practical arrangements that would facilitate the work of the Prosecutor and of the Court, including the possibility of conducting proceedings in the region, which would contribute to regional efforts in the fight against impunity.⁵²⁶

The Council authorized the European Union to deploy a peacekeeping operation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo for a limited period of time, to assist in the elections in that country.

By a letter dated 27 December 2005 to the Presidency of the European Union, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations appealed to the European Union to consider the possibility of making available a deterrent force that, if necessary, could be deployed to the Democratic Republic of the Congo during the electoral process.⁵²⁷ The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Austria on behalf of the Council of the European Union, in his letter dated 28 March 2006, informed the Secretary-General that the Council of the European Union had decided to respond positively to that request, while underlining the need for the Security Council to adopt accordingly a resolution under Chapter VII of the Charter which would provide a legal basis for the presence of European troops and give a robust mandate to the European force. The Minister also stated that the force would not substitute for the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) or the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in their tasks, and noted the assessment that the capabilities of MONUC in certain parts of the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo should enable it to address possible difficulties without support from the European Union.⁵²⁸

By resolution 1671 (2006) of 25 April 2006, welcoming the intention of the European Union to deploy a force to support MONUC during the electoral period in the Democratic Republic of the Congo as expressed in the above-mentioned letter by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Austria, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, authorized, for a period ending four months after the date of the first round of the presidential and parliamentary elections, the deployment of a European Union force in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Council decided that the force was authorized to “take all necessary measures”, within its means and capabilities, to carry out the following tasks: (a) to support the Mission to stabilize a situation, in case the Mission faced serious difficulties in fulfilling its mandate within its existing capabilities; (b) to contribute to the protection of civilians under imminent threat of physical violence in the areas of its deployment, and without prejudice to the responsibility of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo; (c) to contribute to airport protection in Kinshasa; (d) to ensure the security and freedom of movement of the personnel as well as the protection of the installations of the force; and (e) to execute operations of a limited character in order to extract individuals in danger. The Council requested the European Union and the Secretary-General to ensure close cooperation during the preparation of the establishment of the European Union force and for the duration of its mandate, and until its full disengagement. The Council also authorized MONUC, within the limit of its capacities, to provide all necessary logistical support to the European Union force, on a cost-reimbursement basis.⁵²⁹ The Council also decided that the arms embargo imposed by resolutions 1493 (2003) and 1596 (2005) would not apply to supplies of arms and related materiel as well as technical training and assistance intended solely for the support of or use by the European Union force.⁵³⁰

By a presidential statement dated 3 August 2006 and similarly by resolution 1711 (2006) of 29 September 2006, the Council, paying tribute to the citizens of the Democratic Republic of the Congo who, on 30 July 2006, had taken part in great numbers in democratic elections of historic importance for their nation, expressed its gratitude to, among others, the European Union and the force it had temporarily deployed during the electoral process.⁵³¹

By a presidential statement dated 22 September 2006, the Council, deploring the violence that had erupted in Kinshasa from 20 to 22 August 2006 between security forces loyal to President Joseph Kabila and Vice-President Jean-Pierre Bemba, commended the effective action of European Union force in support of MONUC.⁵³²

Following the provincial elections and the second round of the presidential election held on 29 October 2006, the Council, by a presidential statement of 7 November 2006, welcomed the support provided for the holding of the elections by, among others, the European Union force and the European Union.⁵³³ After the announcement by the Supreme Court of Justice on 27 November 2006 of the formal results of the second round of the presidential election, the Council again commended the invaluable support provided for the holding of the elections by, inter alia, the European Union force and the European Union.⁵³⁴

At the 5616th meeting, on 9 January 2007, reporting on the implementation of the mandate of the European Union force in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the representative of Germany, speaking on behalf of the European Union, stated that, after the adoption of resolution 1671 (2006), the force had been launched in July 2006, with a total of 21 member States participating, and had concluded its mission after four months, at the end of November 2006. He stressed that the force had been another milestone of cooperation between the European Union and the United Nations in the field of peacekeeping in Africa and opined that the lessons drawn from the experience would be important for the future partnership in the field of crisis management, adding that such cooperation needed to be accompanied by appropriate mechanisms of dialogue and exchange.⁵³⁵

The Council authorized Member States and the African Union to establish a mission in Somalia, which should also be authorized to take all necessary measures to carry out its mandate.

By resolution 1725 (2006) of 6 December 2006, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, decided to authorize IGAD and States members of the African Union to establish a protection and training mission in Somalia, to be known as IGASOM, to be reviewed after an initial period of six months by the Council, with the following mandate: (a) to monitor progress by the transitional federal institutions and the Union of Islamic Courts in implementing agreements reached in their dialogue; (b) to ensure free movement and safe passage of all those involved with the dialogue process; (c) to maintain and monitor security in Baidoa; (d) to protect members of the transitional federal institutions and the Transitional Federal Government as well as their key infrastructure; and (e) to train the security forces of the transitional federal institutions to enable them to provide their own security and to help to facilitate the re-establishment of national security forces of Somalia. The Council also endorsed the specification in the deployment plan of IGAD that those States that bordered Somalia would not deploy troops to Somalia and decided that the arms embargo imposed by resolution 733 (1992) should not apply to supplies of weapons and military equipment and technical training and assistance intended solely for the support of or use by IGASOM.⁵³⁶

In his report dated 28 February 2007, the Secretary-General reported that, since the adoption of resolution 1725 (2006), efforts had been under way to expedite the deployment of a peace support mission to Somalia. Once it became clear that IGAD would be unable to deploy IGASOM, it was decided that the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) would be deployed, which was approved by the Peace and Security Council of the African Union for six months to contribute to the initial stabilization phase in Somalia.⁵³⁷

In its communiqué of 19 January 2007, the Peace and Security Council stated that the African Union should deploy for a period of six months a mission to Somalia, aimed essentially at contributing to the initial stabilization phase in Somalia, and that the mission would evolve into a United Nations operation that would support the long-term stabilization and post-conflict restoration of Somalia.⁵³⁸ By resolution 1744 (2007) of 20 February 2007, the Council took note of that communiqué and welcomed the intention of the African Union to establish a mission in Somalia. The Council underlined that the deployment of

AMISOM would help to avoid a security vacuum and create the conditions for full withdrawal of the troops of Ethiopia and the lifting of emergency security measures that were currently in place.⁵³⁹

By the same resolution, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, decided to authorize member States of the African Union to establish for a period of six months a mission in Somalia, which should be authorized to “take all necessary measures”, as appropriate, to carry out its mandate. The mandate included (a) to support dialogue and reconciliation in Somalia by assisting with the free movement, safe passage and protection of all those involved with the political process referred to in the resolution; (b) to provide, as appropriate, protection to the transitional federal institutions to help them to carry out their functions of government, and security for key infrastructure; (c) to assist, within its capabilities, and in coordination with other parties, with implementation of the National Security and Stabilization Plan, in particular the effective re-establishment and training of all-inclusive Somali security forces; (d) to contribute, as might be requested and within capabilities, to the creation of the necessary security conditions for the provision of humanitarian assistance; and (e) to protect its personnel, facilities, installations, equipment and mission, and to ensure the security and freedom of movement of its personnel. The Council decided that the arms embargo, as imposed by resolution 733 (1992) should not apply to supplies of weapons and military equipment, technical training and assistance intended solely for the support of or use by AMISOM. The Council urged States members of the African Union to contribute to AMISOM in order to create the conditions for the withdrawal of all other foreign forces from Somalia, further urged Member States to provide personnel, equipment and services if required, for the successful deployment of AMISOM and encouraged Member States to provide financial resources for AMISOM.⁵⁴⁰ Similar calls for contribution and assistance to AMISOM were reiterated in subsequent decisions.⁵⁴¹

By a presidential statement dated 30 April 2007, the Council reiterated that, as set out in resolution 1744 (2007), full and effective deployment of AMISOM was vital, welcomed deployments thus far under AMISOM and emphasized the contribution of AMISOM to lasting peace and stability in Somalia.⁵⁴²

By a presidential statement dated 14 June 2007, the Council underlined its appreciation for the efforts of the Ugandan forces currently deployed in Mogadishu under AMISOM and the invaluable contribution of Uganda to peace and stability in Somalia.⁵⁴³

In a communiqué of 18 July 2007, the Peace and Security Council stated that the African Union would extend the mandate of its mission to Somalia for an additional six months and called for the United Nations to deploy a peacekeeping operation to Somalia that would support the long-term stabilization and post-conflict restoration in the country.⁵⁴⁴ By resolution 1772 (2007) of 20 August 2007, the Council again emphasized the contribution that AMISOM and its Ugandan contingents were making to lasting peace and stability in Somalia. The Council welcomed the above-mentioned communiqué and underlined that the full deployment of AMISOM would help to avoid a security vacuum and to create the conditions for the full withdrawal of other foreign forces from Somalia. Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council reauthorized the deployment for an additional six months of AMISOM, which was again authorized to take all necessary measures to carry out its mandate as set out in that resolution.⁵⁴⁵

At the 5805th meeting, on 17 December 2007, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Somalia stressed that AMISOM needed to remain operational and that its effectiveness needed to be strengthened.⁵⁴⁶ A majority of speakers commended the work of AMISOM and stressed the need to strengthen it, including by providing financial, logistical and technical support.⁵⁴⁷ The representative of Italy held that the first priority was to strengthen AMISOM, because the credibility of the partnership between the African Union and the United Nations was at stake.⁵⁴⁸ The representative of South Africa stressed that, despite the often-cited admirable work that AMISOM had been doing, “we all know that this has gone beyond sustainability and effectiveness”. Noting that the problem was not just one of resources but also the nature of the mandate, he stated that AMISOM was deployed as a stopgap until the United Nations could deploy. He expressed hope that the Security Council would revisit the request of the African Union for an expedited deployment of a United Nations operation to Somalia.⁵⁴⁹ Pointing out that the Ugandan contingent of AMISOM was the only one there, the Special Representative emphasized that the contingent had to be reinforced and a means to do that had to be found.⁵⁵⁰

By a presidential statement dated 19 December 2007, the Council reiterated its strong support for AMISOM.⁵⁵¹

The situation in Chad, the Central African Republic and the subregion

The Council authorized the establishment of a European Union operation under Chapter VII of the Charter to support the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT) and the operation was authorized to take all necessary measures to fulfil its functions.

By a presidential statement dated 27 August 2007 and by resolution 1778 (2007) of 25 September 2007, the Council welcomed the readiness of the European Union, expressed at the meeting of the Council of the European Union on 23 and 24 July 2007, to consider the establishment of an operation in support of the United Nations presence in eastern Chad and the north-eastern Central African Republic.⁵⁵² By resolution 1778 (2007), taking note of the letter dated 17 September 2007 from the Secretary-General/High Representative of the Council of the European Union,⁵⁵³ the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, authorized the European Union to deploy, for a period of one year, an operation aimed at supporting the multidimensional presence, MINURCAT, established by the same resolution. The Council further decided that the European Union operation should be authorized to “take all necessary measures”, within its capabilities and its area of operation in eastern Chad and the north-eastern Central African Republic, to fulfil the following functions: (a) to contribute to protecting civilians in danger, particularly refugees and displaced persons; (b) to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian aid and the free movement of humanitarian personnel by helping to improve security in the area of operations; and (c) to contribute to protecting United Nations facilities, installations and equipment and to ensuring the security and freedom of movement of its staff and United Nations and associated personnel. The Council also requested the European Union, the Secretary-General and the Governments of Chad and the Central African Republic to cooperate closely throughout the period of deployment of the European Union operation, until its complete disengagement.⁵⁵⁴

Security Council resolutions 1160 (1998), 1199 (1998), 1203 (1998), 1239 (1999) and 1244 (1999)

With regard to the international security presence with substantial NATO participation in Kosovo (KFOR), which had been authorized by resolution 1244 (1999) under Chapter VII of the Charter with all necessary means to fulfil its responsibilities, the Council continued to express its support during the period under review.

By a presidential statement dated 18 March 2004, the Council expressed its full support for the efforts of KFOR and welcomed the fact that the international security presence was continuing to take additional measures, as deemed necessary, to stabilize the situation throughout Kosovo.⁵⁵⁵

By a presidential statement dated 30 April 2004, the Council again welcomed the strong measures by the international presence in Kosovo aimed at enhancing the security and protection of all communities, as well as their religious, historical and cultural sites, with the goal of ensuring lasting stability in Kosovo.⁵⁵⁶

The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina

The Council authorized in 2004 a multinational stabilization force for Bosnia and Herzegovina, the European Union Force (EUFOR), as a legal successor to the multinational Stabilization Force (SFOR) led by NATO. EUFOR was authorized to take all necessary measures in fulfilment of its mandate.

By resolution 1551 (2004) of 9 July 2004, the Council, paying tribute to those Member States which had participated in the multinational Stabilization Force established in accordance with its resolution 1088 (1996), and welcoming their willingness to assist the parties to the Dayton Peace Agreement⁵⁵⁷ by continuing to deploy a multinational stabilization force, authorized Member States acting through or in cooperation with the organization referred to in annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement to continue for a further planned period of six months SFOR as established in accordance with its resolution 1088 (1996) under unified command and control in order to fulfil the role specified in annexes 1-A and 2 of the Peace Agreement. It further authorized those Member States to “take all necessary measures” to effect the implementation of and to ensure compliance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement as well as with the rules and procedures established by the Commander of the Force, governing command and control of airspace over Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all civilian and military air traffic.⁵⁵⁸ The Council welcomed the decision of NATO to conclude its current Stabilization Force operation in Bosnia and Herzegovina by the end of 2004, and the intention of the European Union to launch a European Union mission to Bosnia and Herzegovina, including a military component, from December 2004.⁵⁵⁹

By resolution 1575 (2004) of 22 November 2004, the Council authorized the Member States acting through or in cooperation with the European Union to establish for an initial planned period of 12 months a multinational stabilization force, the European Union Force (EUFOR), as a legal successor to SFOR under unified command and control, which would fulfil its missions in relation to the implementation of annexes 1-A and 2 of the Peace Agreement in cooperation with the NATO headquarters presence in accordance with the arrangements agreed between NATO and the European Union as communicated to the Council in their letters of 19 November 2004,⁵⁶⁰ which recognized that EUFOR would have the main peace stabilization role under the military aspects of the Peace Agreement.⁵⁶¹ The Council authorized the Member States acting under those provisions to “take all necessary measures” to effect the implementation of and to ensure compliance with annexes 1-A and 2 of the Peace Agreement, as well as with the rules and procedures governing command and control of airspace over Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all civilian and military air traffic.⁵⁶² By subsequent resolutions, the Council, welcoming the increased engagement of the European Union in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the continued engagement of NATO and acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, continued to authorize the extension of the mandate of EUFOR, including its authorization of taking all necessary measures for an additional 12 months.⁵⁶³

Asia

The situation in Afghanistan

The Council continued to authorize the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) led by NATO in the stabilization process of Afghanistan.

By several resolutions, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, extended the authorization of ISAF, as defined in resolutions 1386 (2001) and 1510 (2003), for successive periods of 12 months. In doing so, the Council authorized the Member States participating in the Force to “take all necessary measures” to fulfil its mandate.⁵⁶⁴ The Council also called upon the Force to continue to work in close consultation with the Afghan

Transitional Administration and its successors and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, as well as with the Operation Enduring Freedom coalition in the implementation of the mandate of ISAF.⁵⁶⁵

By resolution 1536 (2004) of 26 March 2004, the Council welcomed the progress made by ISAF in expanding its presence outside of Kabul and in implementing its mandate in accordance with resolutions 1444 (2002) and 1510 (2003) and requested that the Force continue working in close consultation with the Secretary-General and his Special Representative. The Council welcomed the readiness of ISAF to provide security assistance for the organization of the forthcoming elections in support of the Afghan authorities and the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan, in accordance with resolution 1510 (2003).⁵⁶⁶ By subsequent decisions, the Council acknowledged and welcomed the readiness of ISAF to assist in establishing a secure environment for the conduct of elections.⁵⁶⁷ By resolution 1623 (2005) of 13 September 2005, the Council welcomed the role played by ISAF in assisting in securing the conduct of national elections.⁵⁶⁸

By resolution 1659 (2006) of 15 February 2006, the Council acknowledged the continuing commitment of NATO to lead ISAF and welcomed the adoption by NATO of a revised operational plan allowing the continued expansion of the Force across Afghanistan, closer operational synergy with Operation Enduring Freedom and support, within means and capabilities, to Afghan security forces in the military aspects of their training and operational deployments.⁵⁶⁹ By resolution 1707 (2006) of 12 September 2006, the Council welcomed the extension of ISAF into southern Afghanistan with effect from 31 July 2006, the planned further expansion of the Force into eastern Afghanistan and the increased coordination between ISAF and the Operation Enduring Freedom coalition.⁵⁷⁰ By a presidential statement of 17 July 2007, the Council welcomed the efforts of ISAF and other partners to

D. Consultation with, briefing and reporting by regional arrangements

In a note by the President of the Security Council dated 19 July 2006 on the work of the Informal Working Group on Documentation and Other Procedural Questions,⁵⁷³ the Council agreed to expand consultation and cooperation with regional and subregional organizations by inviting relevant regional and subregional organizations to participate in the public and private meetings of the Council, when appropriate; continuing to consult informally with regional and subregional organizations when drafting, inter alia, resolutions, presidential statements and press statements, as appropriate; and drawing the attention of representatives of regional and subregional organizations, where appropriate, to relevant resolutions, presidential statements and press statements. During the period under review, the Council continued to consult with, hear briefings from and receive reporting from regional arrangements in dealing with a range of matters before it, both regional situations and thematic issues. Examples of the practice in accordance with Article 54 of the Charter included a series of communications from the League of Arab States transmitting to the Council its decisions and outcomes of its meetings concerning a variety of issues before the Council⁵⁷⁴ and those from

In dealing with several regional situations, the Council, in its resolutions, explicitly requested the involved organizations to report to it on a regular basis, directly or through the Secretary-General, concerning their activities in the pacific settlement of disputes, peacekeeping and enforcement actions. Such provisions can be found below, organized by region and in chronological order.

Africa

The situation in Côte d'Ivoire

By resolution 1603 (2005) of 3 June 2005, the Council invited the African Union to keep the Council regularly informed of the implementation of the provisions of the Pretoria Agreement⁵⁷⁶ and to make recommendations to the Council as it deemed necessary.⁵⁷⁷

By resolution 1721 (2006) of 1 November 2006, in requesting the African Union and ECOWAS to continue to monitor and follow up closely the implementation of the peace process and inviting them to review the progress achieved, the Council requested those organizations to report to it, through the Secretary-General, on their assessment and, if necessary, to submit to the Council any new recommendations.⁵⁷⁸

By resolution 1671 (2006) of 25 April 2006, the Council requested the European Union to report regularly to the Council on the implementation of the

The situation in Somalia

By resolution 1725 (2006) of 6 December 2006, in authorizing IGAD and States members of the African Union to establish a protection and training mission in Somalia, the Council expressed its wish to review the mandate of that mission after an initial period of six months “with a briefing by the Intergovernmental Authority”. The Council also requested the Secretary-General, “in consultation with the African Union Commission and the Secretariat of IGAD” to report to the Council on the implementation of the mandate of the mission within 30 days and every 60 days thereafter.⁵⁸⁰

The situation in Chad, the Central African Republic and the subregion

By resolution 1778 (2007) of 25 September 2007, the Council requested the European Union to report to the Council, in the middle and at the end of the period of one year from the date that its initial operating capability was declared by the European Union in consultation with the Secretary-General, on how its operation would fulfil its mandate.⁵⁸¹

Part IV Consideration of the miscellaneous provisions of the Charter

Article 103

In the event of a conflict between the obligations of the Members of the United Nations under the present Charter and their obligations under any other international agreement, their obligations under the present Charter shall prevail.

During the period under review, Article 103 was not invoked explicitly in any resolution or decision of the Security Council. The principle enshrined in

Article 103 was however, implicitly invoked in a draft resolution concerning the situation in Cyprus which was not adopted, owing to a negative vote by a permanent member.⁵⁸⁵ By that draft resolution, the Council would have called upon all States and all international and regional organizations to act strictly in conformity with the resolution, notwithstanding the existence of any rights granted or obligations conferred

or imposed by any international agreement or of any contract entered into or any licence or permit granted prior to the entry into force of the measures imposed by the resolution.⁵⁸⁶

During the deliberations of the Council, one explicit reference to Article 103 was made at the 5779th meeting, on 14 November 2007, in connection with item entitled “Briefings by Chairmen of subsidiary bodies of the Security Council”. The representative of Qatar, offering a legal interpretation of the sanctions regime and Council decisions, noted that:

Article 103 of the Charter provides that obligations under the Charter prevail over other obligations, but this does not mean that they prevail over or supersede pre-emptory norms of jus cogens. In other words, the framers of the Charter did not give the Council a blank cheque to impose sanctions or take actions that violate the purposes and principles of the Charter or violate the sovereignty of States and that do not take into account internationally recognized legal controls and standards — especially since the political nature of the Council’s resolutions does not exclude the possibility that the Council might take an action that is contrary to the purposes and principles of the Charter.⁵⁸⁷

Explicit references to Article 103 were also made in two communications.⁵⁸⁸ For example, in the final report of the independent Commission of Experts which was mandated to review the prosecution of serious violations of human rights in Timor-Leste in 1999, Article 103 was invoked in connection with the consideration of the possible retrospective jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court in the context of a referral from the Security Council. The Commission reported that one argument raised in favour of retrospective jurisdiction interpreted Chapter VII and Article 103 of the Charter as establishing a legal basis upon which the Security Council could legitimately extend the scope of the temporal jurisdiction of the Court. According to that interpretation, empowerment measures adopted in a referral resolution by the Council under Chapter VII would prevail over conflicting provisions in the Rome Statute, in accordance with Article 103 of the Charter. The Commission pointed out, however, that the question would arise whether Article 103 applied to judges in an intergovernmental jurisdiction in the same way as it applied to Member States, and concluded that the issue could be authoritatively settled only by the Court itself.⁵⁸⁹

The Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council and its supplements are published by the United Nations Secretariat as a guide to the proceedings of the Security Council from its first meeting in 1946 onwards. The Repertoire is designed to assist government officials, practitioners of international law, academics and all those interested in the work of the United Nations to follow the evolving practice of the Council and gain a better understanding of the framework within which it operates. The publication presents, as comprehensively as possible, new trends in the Council's application of the Charter of the United Nations and its own provisional rules of procedure. The Repertoire is the only such official record and is based solely on the deliberations of the Council, its decisions and other official documentation before the Council.

The current Supplement, fifteenth in the series of supplements to the Repertoire, covers the years 2004 to 2007. During the period, the Security Council's interpretation of the Charter of the United Nations continued to evolve. Its decisions covered a wide range of issues, including global terrorism, complex peacekeeping operations and post-conflict reconstruction. The Council acknowledged the importance of sustainable development and enhanced cooperation with regional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security. In addition, the Peacebuilding Commission was established following the 2005 World Summit.
