Introduction

The present publication constitutes the fifteenth supplement to the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council, 1946-1951, which was issued in 1954. It covers the proceedings of the Security Council from the 4892nd meeting, held on 12 January 2004, to the 5816th meeting, on 27 December 2007.

The Repertoire was mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 686 (VII) of 5 December 1952, entitled “Ways and means for making the evidence of customary international law more readily available”. It is a guide to the proceedings of the Council and sets forth in a readily accessible form the practices and procedures to which the Council has had recourse. The Repertoire is not intended as a substitute for the records of the Council, which constitute the only comprehensive and authoritative account of its deliberations.

The categories employed to arrange the material are not intended to suggest the existence of procedures or practices that have not been clearly or demonstrably established by the Council itself. The Council is at all times, within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations, its own provisional rules of procedure, and practice established through notes by the President of the Security Council, master of its own procedure.

In recording the Council’s practice, the headings under which the practices and procedures of the Council were presented in the original publication have been largely retained. Where necessary, however, adjustments have been made to better reflect the Council’s practice. For ease of reference, the studies contained in chapter VIII are organized according to region or thematic issue. This introduction contains a table indicating the membership of the Security Council during the period under review.

The agenda items considered by the Council during 2004-2007, and the meetings at which they were considered, are presented in a table hereunder according to region or thematic issue.

Symbols of United Nations documents are composed of letters combined with figures. Security Council documents are indicated by a symbol such as S/2006/568. References to the verbatim records of meetings of the Council are given in the form S/PV.5710, meetings being numbered consecutively, starting with the first meeting in 1946. As in previous recent supplements, reference is made in this Supplement only to the provisional verbatim records of Security Council meetings, as the practice of publishing the meeting records in the Official Records has been discontinued.

The resolutions adopted by the Security Council and the statements by the President are published in the yearly volumes of Resolutions and Decisions of the Security Council. Resolutions are identified by a number followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, for example, resolution 1650 (2005). Since 1994, statements by the President have been identified by the prefix S/PRST/- followed by four digits representing the year in which the statement was released. A new numbering sequence is established at the beginning of each calendar year.

Readers who wish to consult the full record of a meeting or the text of a Security Council document referred to in the Repertoire may do so on the official United Nations Documentation Centre website, www.un.org/en/documents/. Security Council documents can be accessed on the website by selecting “Official Document System (ODS)” or one of the direct links to specific categories of documents. The volumes of resolutions and decisions may be accessed by symbol (S/INF/59, for 2003/04; S/INF/60, for 2004/05; S/INF/61, for 2005/06; S/INF/62 for 2006/07 and S/INF/63 for 2007/08). The original Repertoire and the other supplements may be consulted at www.un.org/en/sc/repertoire.

Introductory note

Article 30 of the Charter of the United Nations provides that the Security Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President. The Preparatory Commission of the United Nations, established on 26 June 1945 to make provisional arrangements for the first sessions of the organs of the United Nations, including the Security Council, discussed at some length whether it should recommend provisional rules of procedure to the Security Council or whether the rules should be formulated from inception by the Council. The text of the rules as recommended was a compromise between those who desired more comprehensive rules and those who considered that the whole subject should be left to the Security Council.

The Security Council adopted provisional rules of procedure at its first meeting held on 17 January 1946, and has amended them 11 times.¹ Although the provisional rules have not been amended since 1982, the Council has clarified its working methods and procedure by notes of the President and other means. During the period under review, this has included a note by the President of 7 February 2006 which contains in its annex an updated descriptive index to notes and statements by the President relating to documentation and procedure,² as well as a note by the President of 19 July 2006 which summarizes recent practices and newly agreed measures, and further develops notes and statements by the President relating to documentation and procedure by supplementing and in some cases superseding them.³ The Council also elucidated additional measures regarding informal consultations, matters of which the Council is seized and the annual report of the Security Council to the General Assembly in a note by the President of 19 December 2007.⁴

The material in the present chapter follows the order of the relevant chapters of the provisional rules of procedure of the Security Council: part I deals with meetings (Article 28 and rules 1-5); part II, Representation and credentials (rules 13-17); part III, Presidency (rules 18-20); part IV, Secretariat (rules 21-26); part V, Conduct of business (rules 27-36); part VI, Languages (rules 41-47); part VII, Publicity of meetings, records (rules 48-57).

Some rules are considered in other chapters of the Repertoire: agenda (rules 6-12) in chapter II; participation in the proceedings of the Council (rules 37-39) in chapter III; voting (Article 27 and rule 40) in chapter IV; subsidiary organs of the Security Council

(Article 29 and rule 28) in chapter V; relations with other United Nations organs (rule 61) in chapter VI; and admission of new Members (rules 58-60) in chapter VII.

As in previous Supplements, the case histories and other information presented here do not constitute cumulative evidence of the practice of the Council, but are indicative of issues and practices that have arisen in the proceedings of the Council.

Part I

Meetings (rules 1-5)

Article 28

1. The Security Council shall be so organized as to be able to function continuously. Each member of the Security Council shall for this purpose be represented at all times at the seat of the Organization.
2. The Security Council shall hold periodic meetings at which each of its members may, if it so desires, be represented by a member of the government or by some other specially designated representative.
3. The Security Council may hold meetings at such places other than the seat of the Organization as in its judgment will best facilitate its work.

Note

Section A reflects the practice of the Council in relation to provisions of Article 28 of the Charter and chapter I of the provisional rules of procedure (rules 1-5), entitled “Meetings”. Material pertaining to rules 1, 3, 4 and 5 is set out below. During the period under review, no special cases occurred in relation to rule 2, which states that the President shall call a meeting of the Security Council at the request of any member of the Security Council.

Section B details a number of procedural developments relating to meetings.

A. Special cases concerning the application of rules 1-5

Meetings of the Security Council shall, with the exception of the periodic meetings referred to in rule 4, be held at the call of the President at any time he deems necessary, but the interval between meetings shall not exceed fourteen days.

Article 28 (1) requires that the Council “be so organized as to be able to function continuously”. Rule 1 provides that the interval between meetings shall not exceed 14 days. From 2004 to 2007, there were two instances, in relation to rule 1, when Council meetings were not convened within an interval of 14 days: 17 days between the 5107th meeting on 22 December 2004 and the 5108th meeting on 10 January 2005, and 15 days between the 5342nd meeting on 21 December 2005 and the 5343rd meeting on 6 January 2006. An interval of 20 days occurred between the 4891st meeting on 22 December 2003 and the 4892nd meeting on 12 January 2004. No questions arose in the proceedings of the Council on this matter.

The Council held 215 meetings in 2004, 235 meetings in 2005, 272 meetings in 2006 and, in a slight downturn, 202 meetings in 2007. This figure does not include meeting resumptions or informal consultations. It was not unusual for the Council to hold more than one meeting a day and, on each of two days in 2006, the Council held six meetings.⁵

The President shall call a meeting of the Security Council if a dispute or situation is brought to the attention of the Security Council under Article 35 or under Article 11(3) of the Charter, or if the General Assembly makes recommendations or refers any question to the Security Council under Article 11(2), or if the Secretary-General brings to the attention of the Security Council any matter under Article 99.

By a letter dated 8 August 2007 addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁶ the representative of Georgia, explicitly referring to Article 35, requested the Security Council to “convene a meeting of the Security Council in the nearest future” in order to address the issue of the bombardment of the territory of Georgia. Consultations of the whole were held to discuss this issue on 9 and 16 August 2007. The next formal meeting to discuss the situation in Georgia was held only on 15 October 2007.⁷

⁵ On 25 April 2006, the Council held its 5420th to 5425th meetings and on 15 December 2006 the Council held its 5591st to 5596th meetings.

⁷ See the report of the Security Council to the General Assembly, 1 August 2007-31 July 2008 (A/63/2), part II, chap. 10.

Rule 4

Periodic meetings of the Security Council called for in Article 28 (2) of the Charter shall be held twice a year, at such times as the Security Council may decide.

Article 28 (2) provides that the Security Council shall hold periodic meetings at which each of its members may, if it so desires, be represented by a member of the government or by some other specially designated representative. During the period under review, the Council held eight meetings, most during the period of the general debate of the General Assembly, at which participation by most of the members of the Security Council was at the ministerial level or higher (see table 1).

Meetings of the Security Council shall normally be held at the seat of the United Nations.

Any member of the Security Council or the Secretary-General may propose that the Security Council should meet at another place. Should the Security Council accept any such proposal, it shall decide upon the place and the period during which the Council shall meet at such place.

Article 28 (3) of the Charter states that “The Security Council may hold meetings at such places other than the seat of the Organization as in its judgment will best facilitate its work”, rule 5 providing further elaboration.

At the 5063rd meeting, held on 26 October 2004 to consider the item entitled “Security Council meetings in Nairobi (18-19 November 2004)”, members of the Council had before them the text of a draft resolution which had been prepared in the course of the Council’s prior consultations.⁸ The draft resolution was adopted unanimously as resolution 1569 (2004), by which the Council, acting in accordance with Article 28 (3) of the Charter, decided to hold meetings in Nairobi starting on 18 November 2004 and ending on 19 November 2004.⁹

The 5080th to 5084th meetings were held in Nairobi, as indicated in table 2.

B. Procedural developments relating to meetings

Recognizing that the provisional rules of procedure of the Security Council and their own practice provided them with considerable flexibility in choosing how best to structure their meetings and select the one suited to consideration of specific agenda items, members of the Council agreed by the note by the President of 19 July 2006 that meetings of the Council could be structured according to, but not limited to, the following formats:¹⁰

(a) Public meetings

(i) Functions

To take action and/or hold, inter alia, briefings and debates.

(ii) Presence and participation

The presence and participation of non-Council members in public meetings should take place in accordance with the provisional rules of procedure. The Council's practice, as described below, is understood as being in accordance with the provisional rules of procedure, although it should not under any circumstances be understood as replacing or substituting for the provisional rules of procedure:

a. Any Member of the United Nations that is not a member of the Security Council may be present at its delegation's designated seats in the Council Chamber;

b. On a case-by-case basis, any Member of the United Nations that is not a member of the Security Council, members of the Secretariat and other persons may be invited to participate in the discussion, including for the purpose of giving briefings to the Council, in accordance with rule 37 or 39 of the provisional rules of procedure.

(iii) Descriptions in the provisional monthly programme of work

The members of the Security Council intend to continue to include the following formats for public meetings in the provisional monthly programme of work (calendar) when they plan to adopt, in general, the corresponding procedures:

a. "Open debate": briefings may or may not be conducted, and Council members may deliver statements; non-Council members may also be invited to participate in the discussion upon their request;

b. "Debate": briefings may be conducted, and Council members may deliver statements; non-Council members that are directly concerned or affected or have special interest in the matter under consideration may be invited to participate in the discussion upon their request;

c. "Briefing": briefings are conducted, and only Council members may deliver statements following briefings;

d. "Adoption": Council members may or may not deliver statements before and/or after adopting, inter alia, resolutions and presidential statements; non-Council members may or may not be invited to participate in the discussion upon their request.

(b) Private meetings

(i) Functions

To conduct discussion and/or take actions, e.g., recommendation regarding the appointment of the Secretary-General, without the attendance of the public or the press.

(ii) Presence and participation

The presence and participation of non-Council members in private meetings should take place in accordance with the provisional rules of procedure. The Council's practice, as described below, is understood as being in accordance with the provisional rules of procedure, although it should not under any circumstances be understood as replacing or substituting for the provisional rules of procedure:

a. On a case-by-case basis, any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council, members of the Secretariat and other persons may be invited to be present or to participate in the discussion, including for the purpose of giving briefings to the Council, in accordance with rule 37 or 39 of the provisional rules of procedure.

(iii) Descriptions in the provisional monthly programme of work

The members of the Security Council intend to continue to include the following formats for private meetings in the provisional monthly programme of work (calendar) when they plan to adopt, in general, the corresponding procedures:

a. "Private debate": briefings may be conducted, and Council members may deliver statements; any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council, members of the Secretariat and other persons may be invited to be present or to participate in the discussion, upon their request, in accordance with rule 37 or 39 of the provisional rules of procedure;

b. "TCC meeting": briefings may be conducted, and Council members may deliver statements; parties prescribed in resolution 1353 (2001) are invited to participate in the discussion, in accordance with the resolution.

In order to increase the transparency of its work, the Council reaffirmed its commitment to increase recourse to open meetings, particularly at the early stage in its consideration of a matter.¹¹ In the context of communication with the Secretariat and outside, the Council further elaborated meeting arrangements:¹²

50. The members of the Security Council intend to seek the views of Member States that are parties to a conflict and/or other interested and affected parties. For that purpose, the Security Council may, inter alia, utilize private meetings when public meetings are not appropriate, in which case invitations are also to be extended in accordance with rules 37 and 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

54. The members of the Security Council intend to utilize "Arria-formula" meetings as a flexible and informal forum for enhancing their deliberations. To that end, members of the Security Council may invite on an informal basis any Member State, relevant organization or individual to participate in "Arria-formula" informal meetings. The members of the Security Council agree to consider using such meetings to enhance their contact with civil society and non-governmental organizations, including local non-governmental organizations (NGOs) suggested by United Nations field offices. The members of the Security Council encourage the introduction of such measures as lengthening lead times, defining topics that participants might address and permitting their participation by video teleconference.

55. The members of the Security Council encourage Security Council missions to continue to avoid restricting their meetings to those with governmental interlocutors and interlocutors of conflict parties and to hold, as appropriate, meetings with local civil society leaders, NGOs and other interested parties.

Concerning informal consultations, in the note by the President of 19 December 2007,¹³ the members of the Council encouraged the Secretariat to exercise restraint as far as participation of its members in informal consultations was concerned, while encouraging members of the Council to ensure that their participation in informal consultations was adequate. Members of the Secretariat providing briefings to the Council were requested to focus on key issues and to provide the latest information, as necessary, without repeating the content of written reports already available to members of the Council.

¹³ S/2007/749, paras. 2-4. See also S/2004/939 concerning participation of newly elected members in informal consultations of the whole and meetings of subsidiary bodies; also covered in chapter 3 of the present Supplement.

Part II

Representation and credentials (rules 13-17)

Rule 13 of the provisional rules of procedure of the Security Council requires each member of the Council to communicate the credentials of its accredited representative to the Secretary-General not less than 24 hours before that representative takes his seat on the Council. In addition, any Member of the United Nations not a member of the Council and any State not a Member of the United Nations, if invited to participate in a meeting or meetings of the Council, must also communicate the credentials of its representative in a like manner to the Secretary-General, in accordance with rule 14. The Secretary-General is required by rule 15 to examine the credentials of the above-mentioned categories of representatives and to submit a report thereon, certifying that the credentials are in order, to the Security Council for approval. The practice of the Council regarding those rules has been that the credentials of representatives have been communicated to the Secretary-General, who submits his report to the Council pursuant to rule 15 when changes in the representation of members of the Council have been made and when, at the beginning of each year, the representatives of the newly elected non-permanent members of the Council are designated. This practice was followed during the period under review.

There were no special cases concerning the application of rules 13 to 17 during the period under review.

Part III

Presidency (rules 18-20)

Part III of the present chapter deals with the proceedings of the Security Council directly related to the Office of the President of the Council, specifically rules 18 to 20 and related procedural developments.

Material pertaining to the exercise by the President of his/her functions in the conduct of meetings is included in part V (Conduct of business) of this chapter. Material related to efforts of the presidency to inform non-member States and others about Council decisions and deliberations is contained in part VII (Publicity of meetings, records).

Material relevant to the exercise by the President of his/her functions in connection with the agenda is dealt with in chapter II.

During the period under review there were no special instances of the application of rule 18, which provides for the monthly rotation of the presidency in the English alphabetical order of the names of the members of the Council; or of rule 20, which deals with the temporary cession of the Chair by the President.

The application of rule 19, which states that the President shall preside over meetings of the Security Council and, under the authority of the Security Council, represent it in its capacity as an organ of the United Nations, was not contentious. In addition to presiding over meetings of the Council and informal consultations of the whole, the President regularly briefed non-members of the Council, made statements and remarks to the press and held bilateral meetings with concerned parties such as Member States, heads of principal organs and agencies, chairmen of the regional groups and others. Continuing a practice begun in October 1998, the President represented the Council at the sixth to ninth annual meetings of the heads of the principal organs of the United Nations.¹⁴ These informal meetings had been initiated by the Secretary-General to improve coordination among the principal organs as well as efficiency in the workings of the Organization.

The General Assembly in resolution 58/126 of 19 December 2003 called upon the Presidents of the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council to meet together periodically with a view to ensuring increased cooperation, coordination and complementarity of the work programmes of the three organs in accordance with their respective responsibilities under the Charter. The President of the fifty-eighth session of the General Assembly convoked a meeting with the Presidents of the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council on 24 June 2004 to discuss the implementation of that resolution. During the period under review, the Presidents of these three organs met together informally, generally once a month, often with the incoming President of the Security Council. There was no set time or venue for these informal gatherings. The holding of these and similar meetings was encouraged in the note by the President of 19 July 2006, in which it was stated that the Council intended to continue to maintain regular communication with the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council for better coordination among the principal organs of the United Nations and that, to that end, "the members of the Security Council encourage the President of the Council to continue holding meetings with the

Presidents of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on a regular basis".¹⁵

By the same note,¹⁶ the members of the Council encouraged the President to suggest, through consultations with interested members and/or the Secretariat, a few areas for members of the Council and the Secretariat to focus on at forthcoming informal consultations, without the intention of prescribing the scope of discussion, at least one day before the consultations are to be held.

Presidents continued to provide brief assessments of the work of the Council during their term(s) as President which were listed in part I of the annual reports of the Council to the General Assembly.¹⁷ While preparing a monthly assessment is not required of the President, all Presidents during the period under review availed themselves of the opportunity to do so.

Part IV Secretariat (rules 21-26)

Note

Part IV relates to rules 21 to 26 of the provisional rules of procedure, which set out the functions and powers of the Secretary-General in connection with the meetings of the Security Council. These rules reflect the provisions of Article 98 of the Charter insofar as they concern the requirements of the Security Council.¹⁸ While no cases relating to these rules were found for the period under review, the note by the President of 19 July 2006 outlines a number of procedures in relation to the Secretariat.¹⁹ These are reproduced below under the following headings: briefings, documentation, notification,²⁰ distribution of statements, communication with the Secretariat and outside, and newly elected members.

¹⁸ For specific instances in which the Secretary-General was requested or authorized by the Security Council to carry out other functions in accordance with Article 98 of the Charter, see chap. VI.

²⁰ These paragraphs appear under "Documentation" in S/2006/507.

Procedural developments relating to the Secretariat

Briefings

6. The members of the Security Council intend to continue to consider requesting the Secretariat to give an ad hoc briefing at Security Council meetings in cases in which an emergent situation which justifies a briefing arises.
7. The members of the Security Council intend to request the Secretariat to give ad hoc briefings at informal consultations on a daily basis, if necessary, when a situation justifies such briefings.
8. The members of the Security Council invite the Secretariat to continue its practice of circulating the briefing texts at "Briefings".
9. The members of the Security Council invite the Secretariat, as a general rule, to provide a printed fact sheet, presentation materials and/or any other relevant reference materials, whenever possible, to Council members on the day prior to the consultations, when briefings in the Security Council consultations room are not given on the basis of a written report.

Documentation

11. The members of the Security Council agree that reports of the Secretary-General should be circulated to Council members and made available in all official languages of the United Nations at least four working days before the Council is scheduled to consider them. The members of the Security Council also agree that the same rule should apply to making such reports available to relevant participants in Council meetings in which those reports are discussed, including the distribution of the reports on peacekeeping missions to all participants in meetings of troop-contributing countries.

12. The members of the Security Council agree to consider setting a six-month interval as the standard reporting period, unless the situation provides reason for shorter or longer intervals. The members of the Security Council also agree to define reporting intervals as clearly as possible when adopting resolutions. The members of the Security Council further agree to request oral reporting, which does not require submission of a written report, if the members of the Council consider that it would serve the purpose satisfactorily, and to indicate that request as clearly as possible.

13. The members of the Security Council encourage the Secretary-General to include a section in his reports where all recommendations are listed, when presenting recommendations to the Council regarding the mandate of a United Nations mission.

14. The members of the Security Council encourage the Secretary-General to make reports as concise as possible, particularly for shorter reporting periods.

15. The members of the Security Council intend to request the Secretary-General to include policy recommendations on long-term strategy in his reports, if appropriate.

16. Reports of the Secretary-General will specify the date on which the document is physically and electronically distributed in addition to the date of signature by the Secretary-General.

17. The Security Council agrees to cooperate with other organs of the United Nations in synchronizing reporting obligations of the Secretariat on the same subject, if appropriate, while putting priority on the effective work of the Council.

Notification

18. The members of the Security Council request the Secretariat to update the Council towards the end of each month on the progress in the preparation of the reports of the Secretary-General to be issued the following month. The members of the Security Council also request the Secretariat to communicate with the Council immediately if it expects reports to be delayed beyond their deadlines or if reports that have not been requested by the Council are expected to be issued.

19. The members of the Security Council invite the Secretariat to send all information currently sent to Council members by fax also by e-mail.

34. The members of the Security Council invite the Secretariat to notify Member States of unscheduled or emergency meetings not only by the telephone recorded message service but also through the Council website.

Distribution of statements

36. Texts of statements made in the meetings of the Security Council will, at the request of the delegation making the statement, be distributed by the Secretariat inside the Council Chamber to Council members and other Member States and permanent observers to the United Nations present at the meeting. A delegation requesting the distribution of its statement is encouraged to provide a sufficient number (200) of copies to the Secretariat in advance of the statement. Where a delegation does not provide to the Secretariat a sufficient number of copies of its statement, those copies will be placed outside the Council Chamber at the end of the meeting. Delegations are requested not to make statements otherwise available during the meeting.

Communication with the Secretariat and outside

52. The members of the Security Council intend to make the best use of all mechanisms available, as appropriate, to convey policy guidance to the Secretary-General, including dialogue, letters from the President, adoption of resolutions or presidential statements, or any other means deemed appropriate.

53. The members of the Security Council, through the Secretary-General, invite new Special Representatives of the Secretary-General to engage in dialogue with members of the Council before assuming their duties under new mandates, including in the field, in order to obtain Council members' views on the objectives and the mandates, whenever possible.

Newly elected members

63. The Security Council invites the Secretariat to continue to take appropriate measures to familiarize the newly elected members with the work of the Council and its subsidiary bodies, including by providing briefing materials and holding seminars before they begin to attend Council meetings.

Part V Conduct of business (rules 27-36)

Note

Part V sets out material bearing on rules 27 and 29 to 36, which concern conduct of business at meetings of the Council. Material relating to rule 28 can be found in chapter V (Subsidiary organs of the Security Council), while material relating to rules 37-39 is included in chapter III (Participation in the proceedings of the Security Council).

While there was no special application of the provisional rules of procedure concerning conduct of meetings, the Council continued to search for efficient, effective and transparent ways to conduct meetings. The measures in the note by the President of 19 July 2006 which pertain to conduct of business at both formal and informal meetings are reproduced below.²¹ Pertinent information concerning formal meetings is presented first.

Procedural developments relating to conduct of business

Formal meetings

27. The Security Council encourages, as a general rule, all participants, both members and non-members of the Council, in Council meetings to deliver their statements in five minutes or less. The Security Council also encourages each briefer to limit initial remarks to 15 minutes, unless otherwise decided by the Council.

28. The Security Council encourages participants in Council meetings to express agreement without repeating the same content, if they agree, in part or in whole, with the content of a previous statement.

29. The Security Council agrees that, when non-members are invited to speak to the Council, those who have a direct interest in the outcome of the matter under consideration may speak prior to Council members, if appropriate.

31. In order to further encourage substantive discussions with troop-contributing countries, in accordance with Security Council resolution 1353 (2001), the members of the Security Council encourage the attendance of appropriate military and political officers from each participating mission. The members of the Security Council emphasize the importance of meeting with troop-contributing countries at the early stages of consideration of a matter. The members of the Security Council encourage the President of the Council to provide sufficient time for the meetings.

32. The President of the Security Council will in public meetings introduce agenda items by specifying the agenda item/issue for consideration, unless otherwise agreed in the Council's prior consultations, and refer to all speakers at political and ambassadorial level by name and title. These names will, however, not have to be included in the official records or in advance in the briefing notes prepared by the Secretariat for the Presidency.

33. When non-members of the Security Council are invited to speak at its meetings, they will be seated at the Council table on alternate sides of the President, with the first speaker seated on the President's right.

Informal consultations

21. The members of the Security Council intend, where they agree with a previous speaker, in part or in whole, to express that agreement without repeating the same content.

22. The members of the Security Council agree that, as a general rule, the President of the Council should adhere to the prescribed speakers' list. The members of the Security Council encourage the President to facilitate interaction by inviting any participant in the consultations to speak at any time, irrespective of the order of the prescribed speakers' list, when the discussion requires it.

23. The members of the Security Council encourage speakers to direct their questions not only to the Secretariat, but also to other members.

24. The members of the Security Council do not discourage each other from taking the floor more than once, in the interest of making consultations more interactive.

25. The members of the Security Council invite the Secretariat to continue its practice of circulating all press statements issued by the Secretary-General or by the Secretary-General's spokesperson in connection with matters of concern to the Security Council, both in informal consultations and by e-mail.

²¹ S/2006/507, annex, paras. 21-33. Paragraphs 32 and 33 were recollected from previous note(s) by the President of the Security Council.

Part VI Languages (rules 41-47)

Rules 41 to 47 concern the official and working languages of the Council, interpretation and the languages of meeting records and published resolutions and decisions. Rule 44 states that any representative may make a speech in a language other than the languages of the Council if he himself provides for interpretation into one of those languages. At the 5647th meeting, held on 24 March 2007 to consider the item entitled "Non-proliferation", the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran spoke in Persian, and his delegation provided the English text of his statement.

Part VII Publicity of meetings, records (rules 48-57)

Note

Rules 48 to 57 are concerned with access to information about Security Council meetings and documents. Rule 48 states that, unless it decides otherwise, the Security Council shall meet in public, and that any recommendation made to the General Assembly regarding the appointment of the Secretary-General shall be discussed and decided at a private meeting.²²

Forty-five other meetings were held in private, as detailed in table 3.

Rules 49 to 57 concern the records of meetings and documents. One case concerning the application of rule 49 is considered in section A below.

Section B outlines a number of procedural developments relating to publicity of meetings, records.

A. Special case concerning the application of rule 49

In accordance with rule 49, the verbatim records of each meeting are made available in the working languages to the representatives on the Security Council, as well as to the representatives of any other States that participated in the meeting, not later than 10 a.m. of the first working day following the meeting. In one instance during the period under review, there was an agreed waiver of the requirement laid down in rule 49 regarding the time of issuance of the verbatim record of the meeting.

By resolution 1569 (2004) of 26 October 2004, the Security Council decided to hold meetings on 18 and 19 November 2004 in Nairobi. Also by that resolution, the Council decided to waive the requirement laid down in rule 49 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure that the verbatim record of each meeting of the Council should be made available on the first working day following the meeting and decided that the verbatim record would be issued subsequently in New York.²⁵

B. Procedural developments relating to publicity of meetings, records

The note by the President of 19 July 2006 was, among other things, an effort to enhance the "transparency of the Council's work".²⁶ The members of the Council agreed that the President or his or her designate should provide substantive and detailed briefings to Member States in a timely manner, and that these briefings should take place shortly after informal consultations of the whole. They encouraged the President to provide the attending Member States with copies of statements that he or she makes to the media following the informal consultations, if appropriate. They also encouraged the President to hold an informal briefing on the programme of work open to all Member States, after its adoption by the Council.²⁷

The members of the Security Council noted their intention to intensify their efforts to publicize decisions and other relevant information of the Council and its subsidiary bodies to the Member States and other organizations through correspondence, websites, outreach activities and other means, when appropriate. They also recorded their intention to continue to examine ways to enhance activities in this regard, and to encourage subsidiary bodies of the Council to continue to review periodically policies concerning access to their documents, as appropriate.²⁸

By the same note, the members of the Council encouraged the President to publish a streamlined tentative monthly forecast of the programme of work on the Council website as soon as it had been distributed to Council members, and that a reminder of the availability of the forecast on the website should be placed in the Journal of the United Nations each month. The members of the Council also agreed that the President of the Council should update the provisional monthly programme of work (calendar) and make it available to the public through the Council website each time it is revised and distributed to Council members, with appropriate indication of the revised items.²⁹

The present chapter concerns the interpretation and application of rules 6 to 12 of the provisional rules of procedure of the Security Council, relating to the agenda. The chapter is divided into three parts. The part concerning adoption or amendment of rules 6 to 12 has been omitted in the present Supplement since, during the period under review, the Council did not consider any change to rules 6 to 12.

Part I, The provisional agenda (rules 6-8 and 12), provides information on the practice of the Security Council with regard to circulation of communications by the Secretary-General, and the preparation and communication of the provisional agenda.

Part II, Adoption of the agenda (rule 9), contains material dealing with questions that were discussed in connection with the adoption of the agenda, such requirements for the inclusion of an item in the agenda and the effect of the inclusion of an item in the agenda. Other questions discussed in connection with the adoption of the agenda are the scope of items on the agenda in relation to the scope of the discussion, and the phrasing of agenda items. No material was found for treatment concerning the procedure of the Council in voting on the adoption of the agenda or the order of discussion of the items on the agenda.

Part III, The agenda and matters of which the Security Council is seized (rules 10 and 11), relates to the list of matters under the Council's consideration. It includes an overview of the Council's decisions with regard to the addition, retention and deletion of items of which the Council is seized. The table in section B supplements the tables in previous volumes of the Repertoire and indicates the changes that have since occurred in the list of matters of which the Security Council is seized.

Part I

The provisional agenda (rules 6-8 and 12)

Note

The provisional agenda, prepared by the Secretary-General and approved by the President of the Security Council in accordance with rule 7, includes those items that have been brought to the attention of the Council under rule 6. Under that rule, “the Secretary-General shall immediately bring to the attention of all representatives on the Security Council all communications from States, organs of the United Nations, or the Secretary-General concerning any matter for the consideration of the Security Council in accordance with the provisions of the Charter”. Effect is normally given to this rule by the distribution of communications as documents in the S/series. Communications from regional arrangements or agencies received pursuant to Article 54 of the Charter are also circulated in the S/series of documents.¹

Rule 7 entrusts the drawing up of the provisional agenda for each meeting to the Secretary-General, subject to the approval of the President of the Security Council. The Secretary-General’s discretion with respect to the inclusion of new items is restricted to those items that have been brought to the attention of the Council under rule 6. In addition to the express provisions of rule 7, the Secretary-General also has to take into account whether a specific request to include the item has been made.

Rule 8 concerns communication of the provisional agenda to the representatives on the Security Council, and rule 12, paragraph 1, concerns such communication for periodic meetings. During the period under review, no material relating to these rules was found.

A. Circulation of communications by the Secretary-General (rule 6)

In accordance with rule 6, the Secretary-General continued the practice of distributing communications as documents in the S/series. During the period under review, there were no instances in which the question of circulation of communications arose.

B. Preparation of the provisional agenda (rule 7)

In accordance with rule 7, the Secretary-General continued the practice of drawing up the provisional agenda for each meeting, subject to the approval of the President of the Security Council. During the period under review, there was no instance in which the subject of the preparation of the provisional agenda gave rise to a discussion in the Council.

C. Communication of the provisional agenda (rule 8)

In accordance with rule 8, the Secretary-General continued to communicate the provisional agenda for a meeting to the representatives on the Security Council. Pursuant to prior decisions of the Council,² the provisional agendas for formal meetings of the Council were also listed in the Journal of the United Nations, as were the topics to be discussed in informal consultations of the members of the Council.

¹ While the application of rule 6 was not discussed, a complaint was made in a letter dated 18 February 2005 from the Permanent Representative of the Sudan to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/2005/100) that two documents from his Government had not been translated and circulated to Council members as requested.

Part II

Adoption of the agenda (rule 9)

Note

As in previous volumes of the Repertoire, this part is devoted to the proceedings of the Council on those occasions when objection was raised to the adoption of the agenda or other questions were discussed in connection with the adoption of the agenda.

Under rule 9, the first item on the provisional agenda for each meeting of the Security Council is the adoption of the agenda.³ In practice, the Council has usually discussed and approved the provisional agenda in prior informal consultations and then adopted it at the formal meeting without a vote. Objections to the adoption of the agenda have also been precluded by the practice of the Council of including a single substantive item in the provisional agenda for each meeting.

During the period under review, there was no occasion on which an objection was raised on grounds related to the procedure of the Council in voting on the adoption of the agenda. On several occasions, however, objections were raised or discussions took place on the substance of the item included in the provisional agenda. Participation in discussions related to the adoption of the agenda was limited to members of the Council.

From 2004 to 2007, the Council added 43 new items to its agenda, including two items that were adopted with a vote (cases 1 and 2).⁴ Notably, of the new items, approximately half dealt with thematic issues.

With a view to enhancing the efficiency and transparency of the Council's work, in a note by the President of the Council dated 19 July 2006,⁵ the members of the Council recalled the desirability, whenever possible, of using descriptive formulations of agenda items at the time of their initial adoption to avoid having a number of separate agenda items on the same subject. It was further observed that when such a descriptive formulation existed, consideration should be given to subsuming earlier agenda items on the same subject under the descriptive formulation (case 5).

In section A below, "Consideration of requirements for the inclusion of an item in the agenda", two case histories have been included (cases 1 and 2). In both instances, objections on the adoption of the agenda led to a vote. Section B, "Consideration of effect of inclusion of an item in the agenda", contains a case history on a discussion relating to the substance of the item on the agenda (case 3). Section C refers to instances when the Council discussed other questions arising in relation to the adoption of the agenda. Case histories are included under the subheadings: "Scope of items on the agenda in relation to the scope of the discussion" (case 4) and "Phrasing of agenda items" (case 5). No material was found for treatment concerning the order of discussion of items on the agenda and precedence of the decision on adoption of the agenda, included in previous volumes of the Repertoire.

³ There were several instances in which, in accordance with past practice, the President of the Council made preliminary remarks before the adoption of the agenda. These included expressions of thanks, congratulations, tributes, expressions of sympathy and condolence. The latter category also included the observation of a minute of silence (see for example, S/PV.4892, S/PV.4910, S/PV.4920, S/PV.5159, S/PV.5315 and S/PV.5728).

⁴ For a complete list of the new items, see the table in part III, section B. On many occasions, even before an item was officially included in the Council's agenda, it was discussed in informal consultations of the whole and a press statement was issued by the President, presenting the key elements or results of such consultations. For example, on 2 and 14 April 2004, following briefings by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator in informal consultations on the humanitarian situations in Darfur, the Sudan and northern Uganda, press statements were released on the issues, even though the items were not yet on the agenda of the Council.

A. Consideration of requirements for the inclusion of an item in the agenda

Case 1

At the 5237th meeting, held in private on 27 July 2005,⁶ the provisional agenda included the item entitled “Letters dated 26 July 2005 from the Permanent Representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council”.⁷ The letters contained a request for a meeting to discuss the report of the fact-finding mission of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General on human settlements issues in Zimbabwe to assess the scope and impact of Operation Murambatsvina. Prior to the adoption of the agenda, the representative of the Russian Federation requested that the agenda be put to a vote, following which the representatives of China and the United Kingdom made statements. The President then put the request of the Russian Federation to a vote. The request received 9 votes in favour, 5 against and 1 abstention. The agenda was adopted.

At its 5526th meeting, on 15 September 2006, pursuant to a letter dated 15 September 2006 from the representative of the United States,⁸ the Security Council included in its agenda, with objection, the item entitled “The situation in Myanmar”.

Speaking before the vote, the representative of China questioned the categorization of the situation in Myanmar as a threat to international peace and security. Referring to a letter dated 10 July 2006 from the Non-Aligned Movement to the President of the Security Council,⁹ in which the Movement stated its categorical opposition to the inclusion of Myanmar in the Council’s agenda, the representative of China further argued that to request that the Council discuss an issue that by its nature pertained to the internal affairs of a country not only exceeded the mandate given by the Charter to the Council, but also undermined the Council’s authority and legality. He further expressed the view that so long as the situation in Myanmar did not pose a threat to international or regional peace and security, China would be unequivocally against including the question of Myanmar in the agenda of the Council.¹⁰ The representative of Qatar also objected to the inclusion of the item, on the grounds that such inclusion could close the diplomatic channels opened by Myanmar with the relevant human rights mechanisms and with the Secretary-General.¹¹ The representative of the United States, citing his letter dated 1 September 2006 addressed to the President of the Council,¹² requested that the situation in Myanmar be included in the Council’s agenda and urged Council members to vote in support of the item.¹³

The President put the provisional agenda to a vote.¹⁴ The agenda was adopted by 10 votes to 4, with 1 abstention.

B. Consideration of effect of the inclusion of an item in the agenda

At its 5663rd meeting, on 17 April 2007, the Council held an open debate on the item entitled “Letter dated 5 April 2007 from the Permanent Representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council”.¹⁵ During the Council’s deliberations on the agenda item, several speakers questioned whether climate change was a security issue or not and whether the Council was the right forum to address the issue of the relationship between energy, security and climate. They argued that the ever-increasing encroachment of the Security Council on the roles and responsibilities of the other main organs of the United Nations represented a “distortion” of the principles and purposes of the Charter, infringed on the authority of the other bodies and compromised the rights of the Organization’s wider membership.¹⁶ The representative of South Africa observed that the issues could be best dealt with in the General Assembly, and hoped that the discussion would not elevate the issue of climate change or the environment to a Security Council agenda item.¹⁷

C. Other discussions on the adoption of the agenda

1. Scope of items on the agenda in relation to the scope of the discussion

While on most occasions the Council strictly discussed only the items on the agenda, on certain occasions it has found itself addressing other issues. Case 4 demonstrates an instance where speakers addressed situations or issues that were not on the agenda or that did not strictly fall under the scope of the item under consideration.

At its 5494th meeting, on 24 July 2004, the Council considered the item entitled “Children and armed conflict”. The representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, indicating support for the monitoring and reporting mechanism set up in implementation of resolution 1312 (2005), expressed the view that the mechanism of “naming and shaming” should also cover all parties to a conflict who recruit and use child soldiers, regardless of whether that situation was on the Council’s agenda or not.¹⁸ At the same meeting, the representative of Canada noted that northern Uganda was a good example of a situation not on the Council’s agenda, but where there were grave abuses against children and civilians. He further urged the Council to include the situation in its agenda.¹⁹

At the 5573rd meeting, on 28 November 2006 on the same item, however, the representative of China observed that, in considering the issue of children and armed conflict, the Council needed to draw a distinction between situations that were on its agenda and those that were not.²⁰ The representative of Sri Lanka noted that several aspects of the report of the Secretary-General relating to issues such as development and humanitarian access could be considered by the relevant bodies mandated to address those issues, so that the Council did not lose focus on its core issue of concern.²¹

2. Phrasing of agenda items

Given the importance attached to the phrasing of agenda items, in a note by the President of the Security Council dated 18 April 2005,²² concerning formulation of the title of the agenda item for issues pertaining to Iraq, members of the Security Council announced the agreement reached as follows:

Issues relating to the return of all Kuwaiti property, the repatriation or return of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals or their remains, and the United Nations Compensation Commission would be considered under the agenda item entitled “The situation between Iraq and Kuwait”. Other issues that did not fall under this category would be considered under the agenda item entitled “The situation concerning Iraq”.

By a note by the President of the Council dated 19 July 2006,²³ the members of the Council recalled the desirability, whenever possible, of using descriptive formulations of agenda items to avoid having a number of separate items on the same subject. It was further observed that, when such a descriptive formulation existed, consideration should be given to subsuming earlier items on the same subject under the descriptive formulation. During the period under review, the Council created several descriptive formulations of agenda items under which separate items on the same subject were subsumed. For example, as from 6 November 2007, four separate items dealing with regional organizations were subsumed under a single item entitled “The role of regional and subregional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security”.²⁴ From then on, the items subsumed did

The agenda and matters of which the Security Council is seized (rules 10 and 11)

Note

Rule 10 of the provisional rules of procedure was designed to enable the Security Council to continue, at its next meeting, the consideration of an item of unfinished business without subjecting that item to renewed debate on the adoption of the agenda.

Rule 11 provides for the Secretary-General to communicate each week to the representatives on the Security Council a summary statement of matters of which the Security Council is seized and of the stage reached in their consideration.²⁶ In previous volumes of the Repertoire, it was noted that items on the agenda of the Council had remained on the Secretary-General’s summary statement when the tenor of the Council’s discussion or its specific decisions revealed a continuing concern with the matter. Additional evidence supporting such retention was provided when the President of the Council announced, upon conclusion of the debate, that the Council remained seized of a question.

During the period under review, an item was deleted from the list of matters of which the Security Council was seized when (a) no request for its retention had been made by a Member State and the item had not been considered in formal meetings during the preceding five years; or (b) the Council had formally concluded its consideration of the item.

The table in section B below supplements the tables contained in the previous volumes of the Repertoire and indicates the changes that have since occurred in the list of matters of which the Council is seized.

Continuation of discussion of agenda items (rule 10)

There was no discussion concerning the application of rule 10 during the period under review. On many occasions, separate consecutive meetings were held on the same agenda item.²⁷ In other instances, the meeting was suspended and resumed until the Council had completed that stage of its consideration of the item.²⁸

²⁷ For example the 4952nd and 4953rd meetings, held on 27 April 2004, on the situation between Iraq and Kuwait; the 5238th and 5242nd meetings, held on 27 and 29 July 2005 respectively, on the situation in Georgia; the 5284th and 5285th meetings, held on 18 October 2005 on the question concerning Haiti; and the 5289th and 5290th meetings, held on 24 October 2005 on Security Council resolutions 1160 (1998), 1199 (1998), 1203 (1998), 1239 (1999) and 1244 (1999).

Retention and deletion of items from the summary statements by the Secretary-General of matters of which the Security Council is seized (rule 11)

Proceedings of the Security Council regarding the retention and deletion of items from the agenda

In the proceedings of the Security Council, items that have not been considered in the receding five years are automatically deleted from the list of matters of which the Security Council is seized, unless a Member State notifies the Secretary-General beforehand of its wish to have the item retained.²⁹ Forty-two items were deleted during the period under review using this procedure. Items are also deleted following a request addressed to the Secretary-General by the Member State concerned and in the absence of any objection on the part of the members of the Council. In letters dated 30 March 2006 and 22 May 2007, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People reiterated his continuing objection to the deletion of items that related to the exercise of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East. He cautioned that any decision to delete those items would go beyond procedural exercise and would have far-reaching political implications.³⁰ The Council continued to be seized of the items in question.

Addition, retention and deletion of items from the Secretary-General's summary statements of matters of which the Security Council is seized

Section A indicates items added to the list of matters of which the Council was seized during the period under review; section B indicates items appearing on previous lists for which new action by the Security Council was reported in the summary statements during the period 2004-2007; and section C indicates items deleted from the list during that period.³¹ The tabulation shows that, during the period under review, the Council included 43 new items in the list of matters of which it was seized. The Council also took new action on 61 items appearing in previous list of the summary statements and deleted 42 items during the period under review.

²⁸ For example, the 4950th meeting on non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction held on 22 April 2004 and resumed on 28 April 2004; the 4990th meeting on protection of civilians in armed conflict held on 14 June 2004 and resumed on 14 December 2004; the 4896th meeting on small arms held on 19 January 2004 and resumed on 17 February 2005; the 5066th meeting on women and peace and security held on 28 October 2004 and resumed on 27 October 2005; and the 5705th meeting on maintenance of international peace and security held on 25 June 2007 and resumed on 28 August 2007.

This chapter deals with the Security Council's practice in extending invitations to participate in its proceedings. Articles 31 and 32 of the Charter and rules 37 and 39 of the provisional rules of procedure of the Security Council provide for invitations to be extended to non-members of the Security Council in the following circumstances: (a) when a Member of the United Nations brings a dispute or situation to the attention of the Council in accordance with Article 35 (1) of the Charter (rule 37); (b) when a Member of the United Nations or a State that is not a member of the United Nations is "a party to a dispute" (Article 32); (c) when the interests of a Member of the United Nations are "specially affected" (Article 31 and rule 37); and (d) when "members of the Secretariat or other persons" are invited to supply information or give other assistance (rule 39). Only in relation to Article 32 (instance (b) above) does the Security Council have an obligation to extend an invitation.

During the period under review, the Council continued to make no distinction between a complaint involving a "dispute" within the meaning of Article 32, a "situation", or a matter of another nature. Invitations to participate in meetings of the Council were usually extended "under the relevant provisions of the Charter" and explicitly under rule 37 or rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. The classification of invitations in part I and the annexes to this chapter reflects this practice.

There was no debate or vote taken at a formal meeting on whether an invitation should be extended but complaints at lack of invitations were made both in discussion at formal meetings and in letters addressed to the President of the Security Council or the Secretary-General. This is covered in part I, section D, "Requests for invitations denied or not acted upon" (cases 1-6).

Part II, on procedures relating to the participation of invited representatives, includes a case (case 7) concerning the stage at which invited representatives were allowed to speak and two cases (cases 8 and 9) concerning the limitations imposed on participation.

The Council elucidated some of its practices regarding invitations in a note by the President of 19 July 2006.¹ These included the order in which non-members may speak, agreement on expansion of consultation with regional and subregional organizations, including through invitations to participate in public and private meetings, and encouragement of appropriate attendance at meetings with troop-contributing countries in accordance with Security Council resolution 1353 (2001).

Part I

Basis of invitations to participate

Note

The practice of the Security Council in connection with the extension of invitations is dealt with in this part in four sections. Section A deals with invitations extended under rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, which was the basis on which Member States which were not members of the Council were invited to participate in the Council's proceedings. The section describes the Council's general practice in this regard, supplemented by annex I, which lists invitations extended under rule 37.

Section B deals with the Council's practice in extending invitations under rule 39, the basis on which members of the Secretariat or other persons were invited to supply the Council with information or other assistance. This brief overview is supplemented by annex II, which lists invitations extended under rule 39.

Section C concerns those invitations that were not expressly extended under either rule 37 or rule 39, and section D concerns requests for invitations denied or not acted upon.

A. Invitations extended under rule 37 (States Members of the United Nations)

During the period under consideration, States Members of the United Nations invited to participate in the Council's proceedings were usually invited under "the relevant provisions of the Charter and rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure", without citation of specific Articles of the Charter. Rule 37 provides:

"Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35 (1) of the Charter."

In practice, such invitations were usually extended as a matter of course and without discussion. They were requested in letters from the States concerned addressed to the President of the Council. The President informed the Council at the beginning or during the course of its meetings of the receipt of such letters and proposed that, with the consent of the Council, the invitations be extended. Usually, there being no objection, it was so decided.

Renewals of invitations were not usually mentioned if the meeting was resumed. Moreover, unless otherwise mentioned, invitations extended at the first meeting of consecutive meetings held concerning a specific agenda item were automatically renewed at each of the meetings.

As in previous years, Member States invited under rule 37 sometimes spoke in other capacities, such as representatives of regional organizations.² A list of invitations issued under rule 37 is contained in annex I to this chapter. For ease of reference, invitations have been grouped according to agenda items.

² A representative of a Member State, invited under rule 37, spoke on behalf of another entity at the following meetings: for the Caribbean Community, 4917th and 5178th; for the Central American Integration System, 4921st and 4962nd; for the Collective Security Treaty Organization, 5006th; for the Economic Community of West African States, S/PV.5005; for the European Union: 4892nd, 4896th, 4898th (resumption 1), 4899th, 4903rd (resumption 1), 4910th, 4911th, 4913th, 4917th, 4920th, 4921st, 4928th, 4929th, 4933rd, 4941st, 4942nd, 4945th, 4950th, 4965th, 4967th, 4970th (resumption 1), 4976th, 4990th, 4993rd (resumption 1), 5006th, 5017th, 5024th, 5025th, 5031st, 5049th, 5052nd (resumption 1), 5059th, 5066th, 5075th, 5076th, 5082nd, 5089th, 5096th, 5100th (resumption 1), 5113th, 5127th, 5129th (resumption 1), 5130th, 5131st, 5132nd, 5147th, 5156th, 5168th, 5178th, 5180th, 5187th, 5188th, 5209th, 5351st, 5373rd, 5390th, 5397th (resumption 1), 5404th, 5411th, 5412th, 5432nd, 5434th, 5446th, 5457th, 5470th, 5474th, 5476th, 5478th, 5481st, 5482nd, 5493rd (resumption 1), 5494th, 5509th (resumption 1), 5512th, 5515th, 5522nd, 5529th, 5530th, 5538th, 5552nd, 5556th, 5563rd, 5564th, 5568th, 5573rd, 5577th (resumption 1), 5581st, 5588th, 5603rd, 5627th, 5628th, 5629th, 5632nd (resumption 1), 5635th, 5649th (resumption 1), 5663rd, 5675th, 5679th, 5690th, 5703rd, 5705th, 5736th, 5760th, 5766th, 5799th, 5781st (resumption 1), 5801st and 5805th; for the Pacific Islands Forum Group, 4921st and 4962nd; and for the Rio Group, 4921st (resumption 1) and 5390th.

B. Invitations extended under rule 39 (members of the Secretariat or other persons)

The Security Council continued its relatively recent practice of inviting individuals under rule 39 to participate in its proceedings and to brief it on issues under consideration. During the period from 2004 to 2007, the Council issued approximately 620 invitations under rule 39, compared to approximately 450 during the period from 2000 to 2003. During the immediately preceding four-year period, 1996 to 1999, the Council issued 50 invitations under rule 39.

Rule 39 provides:

“The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence”.

A list of invitations issued under rule 39 is contained in annex II to this chapter. For ease of reference only, invitations have been grouped into the following four categories:

- A. United Nations (representatives of the United Nations Secretariat, Security Council missions and Security Council subsidiary bodies);
- B. United Nations (other organs, funds, programmes and agencies);
- C. Regional and other intergovernmental organizations;
- D. Other invitees.

Some general aspects of the Council’s practice under rule 39 may be noted. Invitations to representatives of United Nations organs and subsidiary bodies were extended as a matter of course and without any formal discussion. Letters of request from the body concerned were read into the record of the meeting by the President of the Council and were not issued as documents of the Security Council. Invitations to representatives of United Nations agencies were extended on the same basis. In the case of invitations to representatives of regional or other international organizations, the requests were made by a Member State on behalf of the organization concerned, and invariably granted without any formal discussion. As for other individuals, they, too, were invited at the request of a Member State. In some instances, the President made it clear at the start of the formal meeting of the Council that members of the Council had agreed in prior consultations to extend an invitation to a particular individual.

In the note by the President of 19 July 2006, the members of the Council agreed on continued expansion of consultation with regional and subregional organizations, including by inviting relevant organizations to participate in the Council’s public and private meetings, when appropriate.³

Following past practice, invitations were sometimes extended to representatives of Member States under rule 39, but only if their participation was in a role other than that of representative of their State. These included invitations to members of the Council in their capacity as heads of Security Council missions and Chairpersons of Security Council subsidiary bodies.

During the period 2004 to 2007, roughly three quarters of invitations under rule 39 were issued to persons connected with the United Nations (sections A and B of annex II), and one quarter to other invitees (sections C and D).

During the period under review, the following organizations received invitations to attend formal meetings of the Council for the first time.

(a) United Nations-related bodies:⁴ International Criminal Court, United Nations Population Fund;

(b) Regional and other intergovernmental organizations: Collective Security Treaty Organization, Commonwealth of Independent States, Council of Europe, World Customs Organization;

(c) Other invitees: African Centre for the Constructive Resolution of Disputes, CARE International, Columbia University, the Commonwealth Secretariat, Dusirehamwe Association, European Centre for Conflict Prevention, the President-elect of Haiti, International Center for Transitional Justice, ³ S/2006/507, para. 30.

⁴ This category does not include the United Nations Secretariat, Security Council missions and Security Council subsidiary bodies, which are covered in section A of annex II.

Network of African Women for Peace, NGO Working Group on Women, Peace and Security, Rede Feto, Save the Children, Mr. Fatmir Sejdiu, Siemens, Special Court for Sierra Leone, Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army, Watchlist on Children and Armed Conflict, Women International, and Women's Network for the Protection of Human Rights and Peace.

C. Invitations not expressly extended under rule 37 or rule 39

During the period under review, the Council extended invitations not expressly under rule 37 or rule 39. Following past practice, the observer of Palestine was invited by the President to participate in meetings, with the consent of the Council, in accordance with the provisional rules of procedure and "the previous practice in this regard".⁵

When the Council held meetings with countries contributing troops to various missions in accordance with resolution 1353 (2001), invitations were extended by a prior letter from the President.⁶ In a note by the President of 19 July 2006, it was emphasized that, "In order to further encourage substantive discussions with troop-contributing countries, in accordance with Security Council resolution 1353 (2001), the members of the Security Council encourage the attendance of appropriate military and political officers from each participating mission."⁷

Further to the practice of allowing newly elected members of the Council to attend informal consultations of the Council for the period of one month immediately preceding their term of membership and formal meetings of its subsidiary bodies,⁸ the Council, in a note by the President of 2 December 2004, decided that newly elected members of the Council would also be invited to attend informal meetings of the subsidiary bodies of the Council.⁹

D. Requests for invitations denied or not acted upon

During the period under review, there was no instance in which a request for an invitation to participate in a meeting of the Security Council was denied at a formal meeting. However, as indicated in letters from Member States regretting the lack of invitations to participate, requests may have been denied during informal consultations of the whole or otherwise outside of formal meetings.¹⁰ These complaints are covered in cases 1 to 6 below.

In a letter dated 28 July 2005 addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the General Assembly,¹¹ the representative of Azerbaijan regretted that at the 5238th (closed) meeting of the Council, held on 27 July 2005 to consider "The situation in Georgia", the delegation of Azerbaijan had not been invited to participate in the consideration of the item, in accordance with its request, the relevant provisions of the Charter and rule 37 of the provisional rules of procedure. Two invitations under rule 37, and a third ⁸ See Repertoire, Supplement 2000-2003, chap. III, for more information on the practice of inviting newly elected members of the Council to informal meetings of the Council and to formal meetings of its subsidiary bodies. See also the notes by the President of 28 February 2000 (S/2000/155) and 22 November 2002 (S/2002/1276).

¹⁰ Following past practice, initial requests by Member States to participate in meetings of the Council were not usually circulated as documents of the Security Council, since these requests may be made in a variety of ways, including orally. However, the Council continued its practice of issuing requests to participate by the observer of Palestine.

under rule 39 to the briefer, had been extended at that meeting.¹²

By a letter dated 4 April 2006 addressed to the Secretary-General, the representative of Cuba transmitted his country's views on the current situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question, because "at the public meeting of the Security Council held on 30 March, the right to speak of States which are not members of the Security Council was restricted arbitrarily".¹³

At the 5404th meeting, held on 30 March 2006, several invitations were issued under rules 37 and 39, and those invited to participate were called upon to make statements.¹⁴ There was no discussion during the meeting of a request by the representative of Cuba to participate.

Case 3

In a letter dated 14 July 2006,¹⁵ the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic deeply regretted that at the 5489th meeting, held to consider "The situation in the Middle East", the President of the Security Council had not observed rule 37 of the provisional rules of procedure and had denied the right of the Syrian Arab Republic delegation to speak as a concerned party. The representative also referred to his letter of 13 July 2006 in which he had requested to participate and speak at that meeting.¹⁶

In a letter dated 14 July 2006 responding to the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic,¹⁷ the President of the Security Council noted that the modalities of the public meeting on the Middle East had been decided by the Council at its consultations held on 13 July. The President had brought to the attention of the members of the Council the requests made by three delegations, including the Syrian Arab Republic, to participate in that meeting. No member of the Council had wished the modalities of the meeting to be modified and the meeting was therefore held in accordance with the modalities initially decided upon, and no invitation to participate was issued to the Syrian Arab Republic.

At the 5489th meeting, held in relation to a request by the representative of Lebanon, several invitations under rules 37 and 39 were issued; there was no mention of a request to participate by the Syrian Arab Republic.

Case 4

In a letter dated 31 July 2006 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran, among other matters, recalled his previous request to speak before the Council when it adopted its statement by the President on the item "Non-proliferation" at the 5403rd meeting¹⁸ held on 29 March 2006. The representative regretted that the Council had adopted a presidential statement without allowing the views of the concerned party to be heard. No invitations had been issued at the 5403rd meeting.

In a letter dated 25 January 2007 addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁹ the representative of Cuba, in his capacity as Chair of the Coordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement, recalled the formal request of the Non-Aligned Movement to participate in the briefing on the situation in the Middle East held on that day.²⁰ He stated that the Non-Aligned Invitations under rule 39 were issued to the Acting Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and to the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs. An invitation to the observer of Palestine was issued "in accordance with the rules of procedure and the previous practice in this regard".

Movement would highly appreciate it if in the future such meetings were open to the participation of all Member States in a manner that could further enrich the debate. The representative requested the distribution of his letter, and the annex which contained the position of the Non-Aligned Movement on the Middle East, including the question of Palestine, as a document of the Security Council.

In a letter dated 25 April 2007 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²¹ the representative of Cuba, on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, protested against the denial of a request to participate in the 5667th meeting, held on 25 April 2007.²² The agenda item for the meeting was “The situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question”, and the representative of Cuba pointed out that the Non-Aligned Movement consisted of 118 States Members of the United Nations, including the overwhelming majority of the States in the Middle East. The representative requested that his letter and its annex, which contained the statement Cuba had planned to deliver on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, be distributed as a document of the Security Council.

At the 5667th meeting, the representatives of Israel, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, and the observer of Palestine, had been invited to participate.

At the 5761st meeting, held on 17 October 2007 to consider “Post-conflict peacebuilding”, several members of the Council regretted the non-issuance of invitations. The representative of Italy expressed his “strong disappointment at not being able to listen to the voice of the European Union — that is to say, the voice of the most important donor in the field — and the voice of Jamaica as the Non-Aligned Movement coordinator, because the Non-Aligned Movement has a very special take and specific interest” on the issue under discussion.²³ The representative of France agreed: “Like our Italian colleague, we regret that it has not been possible for the European Union and other important speakers to participate in this debate.”²⁴

The representative of Slovakia shared the disappointment expressed by the representative of Italy that agreement was not reached on allowing other important Member States to speak in the debate — in particular, Portugal, on behalf of the presidency of the European Union; El Salvador, as Vice-Chair of the Peacebuilding Commission and Chair of the Working Group on Lessons Learned; and Jamaica, as coordinator of the Non-Aligned Movement.²⁵

The representative of Panama shared the opinion that it would have been preferable to allow all persons directly linked or interested in the work of the Peacebuilding Commission to speak.²⁶

In a letter dated 17 October 2007 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²⁷ the representative of Portugal regretted that the presidency of the European Union had not been allowed to participate in the debate on the report of the Peacebuilding Commission in accordance with the request previously submitted.²⁸ He also requested that the letter and its annex, which contained the position of the European Union on the report of the Peacebuilding Commission, be circulated as a document of the Security Council.

²⁸ The Council considered the report of the Peacebuilding Commission on its first session at its 5761st meeting, under the item “Post-conflict peacebuilding”. The representatives of Burundi, El Salvador, the Netherlands, Norway and Sierra Leone were cited as having requested an invitation to participate, and were issued invitations under rule 37. An invitation under rule 39 was issued to Mr. Yukio Takasu, Chairman of the Peacebuilding Commission.

issued and no requests for invitations were mentioned.

Part II

Procedures relating to participation

Note

Part II is concerned with procedures relating to the participation of invited States or individuals after an invitation has been extended. Section A concerns the stage at which invited States are heard. It includes clarification contained in a note by the President²⁹ on the stage at which non-members may speak, as well as one case (case 7) in which several representatives regretted that they had not been allowed to speak before the adoption of a resolution.

Section B concerns limitations on participation. It includes two cases (cases 8 and 9) in which representatives who had been invited to participate under rule 37 regretted that they had not been given the opportunity to make a statement.

A. Stage at which those invited to participate are heard

Although the provisional rules of procedure do not specify that members of the Security Council should speak before non-members, the practice has been that they most often do so.³⁰ In a note by the President of 19 July 2006, the Council clarified that “when non-members are invited to speak to the Council, those who have a direct interest in the outcome of the matter under consideration may speak prior to Council members, if appropriate”.³¹

The case below concerns non-members who wished to speak prior to the adoption of a resolution and were unable to do so.

Case 7

At the 5059th meeting, held on 19 October 2004 to consider “Threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts”, two representatives invited under rule 37 expressed regret at not having been able to address the Council before the adoption of resolution 1566 (2004). The representative of Liechtenstein stated, “We regret that the wider United Nations membership was not given an opportunity to express its views on the draft of that resolution given its important implications for our common fight against terrorism worldwide. We therefore take this opportunity to express our views after that draft resolution’s adoption.”³² The representative of Switzerland reiterated these remarks, stating, “Switzerland regrets that the adoption of resolution 1566 (2004) was not preceded by an open debate enabling all United Nations Members to express their points of view.”³³

²⁹ S/2006/507, para. 29.

B. Limitations on participation

In a letter dated 11 June 2004 to the President of the Security Council,³⁴ the representative of the Sudan referred to his invitation under rule 37 to participate in the 4988th meeting, on 11 June 2004, held to consider the report of the Secretary-General on the Sudan, and the fact that he had not been called upon to deliver a statement. At the meeting the Council had adopted resolution 1547 (2004). He stated:

We were somewhat taken aback ... by your decision that permission for us to participate in the session did not entitle us to deliver a statement, on the grounds that there was no precedent for it. We are aware, however, that numerous precedents exist and that this would be in no way contrary to the regulations. I met with you in person shortly before the start of the session in order to re-examine your decision and you promised to consult the members of the Council with a view to a decision on the matter. We were surprised to find that the session was held, as you know, without our being given an opportunity to deliver our statement.

We believe we have the right to give a statement during the session, considering that the members agreed to our participation in it. Regarding your address to the members in that regard at the start of the session, when you mentioned permission for the delegation of the Sudan to participate in the discussion, what does “participate in the discussion” mean?

³⁴ S/2004/490.

Does it simply mean sitting and listening without proffering a word by way of participation in the discussion? I am sorry to have to express to you feelings of profound distress and disappointment over your decision to deprive a Member State of participation in the debate on a vital issue concerning its fate, for this is totally at odds with the most fundamental rules of justice and transparency. I wish to transmit to you herewith the statement of the Sudan on the topic of today's session.

The representative of the Philippines replied in a letter dated 17 June 2004 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³⁵ stating, "as some of the points contained in your letter alluded to the discussion I personally held with you, please allow me to respond to them in my national capacity". The representative noted that:

Your letter, however, has raised a question of interpretation of the Council's decision to allow the Sudan to "participate in the discussion". This issue is for the Council, and not for the President alone, to decide. I will leave it to your delegation on when and how you would further pursue this matter with the Council. ... it was not by my decision, but rather the lack of consensus by the Council to allow a statement other than explanation of vote that militated against your desire to speak before the Council."³⁶

The representative of the Philippines further recalled that:

... in order for the Sudan to have the opportunity to make its views known, I suggested to you to send a letter to the President of the Council requesting that your statement be issued as a document of the Security Council. Indeed, you have followed my humble advice and your statement is now part of the public record as a Council document. Thus, your right to be heard has been fully preserved by the publication of your statement.

The Philippine delegation fully supports the right of every delegation to be heard on matters of concern to them with which the Security Council is seized. We support transparency in the work of the Council and the full ventilation of views on issues of general interest to the international community.

In this regard, if your delegation so wishes, I would propose to convene a meeting of the Security Council to allow your delegation a full expression of your views on matters of common interest between the Security Council and your country. I am certain that Council members would welcome this opportunity to exchange views with your delegation on these shared concerns. I would be grateful to receive your concurrence on this proposal.³⁶

In a letter dated 31 July 2006 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran regretted that, at the 5500th meeting held on 31 July 2006 to consider the item "Non-proliferation", the Council had adopted a resolution "without even allowing the views of the concerned party to be heard."³⁷ The representative had been invited to participate in the 5500th meeting under rule 37, but was not called upon to make a statement.

Introductory note

The present chapter contains material relating to the practice of the Security Council on decision-making and voting, with a primary focus on Article 27 of the Charter and rule 40 of the provisional rules of procedure.¹

Article 27

1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote.
2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members.
3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.

Rule 40

Voting in the Security Council shall be in accordance with the relevant Articles of the Charter and of the Statute of the International Court of Justice.

Part I presents developments in procedures related to decision-making and voting. Part II covers instances in which the procedural or non-procedural nature of a decision is indicated by the results of the vote taken on it. Part III is concerned with the Council actually voting upon whether a matter is procedural or non-procedural. During the period under review, no such vote was taken. Part IV covers the abstention, non-participation or absence of a Council member in relation to the requirements of Article 27, paragraph 3. Part V deals with decisions adopted without a vote.

¹ Material relating to voting in connection with the election of judges under Article 10 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice is included in chapter VI. More detailed material on voting by the Council in connection with the applications for admission to membership in the United Nations is contained in Chapter VII.

Part I

Procedures relating to decision-making and voting

Note

During the period under review, the Council reiterated procedures relating to decision-making, and there was some discussion in the Council on the broader decision-making process.²

In a note by the President of 19 July 2006,³ the members of the Council reaffirmed that all members of the Security Council should be allowed to participate fully in the preparation of, inter alia, the resolutions, presidential statements and press statements of the Council. It was reaffirmed that the drafting of all documents such as resolutions and presidential statements, as well as press statements, should be carried out in a manner that would allow adequate participation of all members of the Council.

The members of the Council indicated their intention to continue to informally consult with the broader United Nations membership, in particular interested Member States, including countries directly involved or specifically affected, neighbouring States and countries with particular contributions to make, as well as with regional organizations and Groups of Friends, when drafting, inter alia, resolutions, presidential statements and press statements, as appropriate.

The members of the Council further agreed to consider making draft resolutions and presidential statements as well as other draft documents available as appropriate to non-members of the Council as soon as such documents were introduced within informal consultations of the whole, or earlier, if so authorized by the authors of the draft document.

At meetings of the Council, various Member States called for greater participation in the decision-making process. During discussion of the item “United Nations peacekeeping operations” at the 4970th meeting, on 17 May 2004, the representative of Japan stated that “... reform is necessary in order to involve in the Security Council decision-making process those countries contributing human, material, financial and other resources”.⁴ The representative of Romania agreed that “improving the basis for decision-making in the Security Council by identifying ways and means to involve stakeholders would create a considerable additional incentive for the general United Nations membership to support peacekeeping operations”.⁵

At the same meeting, focusing specifically on troop-contributing countries and peacekeeping mandates, the representative of Algeria emphasized that “if since the adoption of resolution 1353 (2001) briefings are now being organized regularly between the Council and troop-contributing countries every time a mission mandate is renewed, more should be done to take into account the concerns of those countries and involve them in the decision-making process to define or change the mandate of an operation to which their military units are committed”.⁶ Pointing out the significance of available resources in peacekeeping decisions, the representative of the Philippines observed that “despite all the merits of a United Nations rapid deployment capability, such as deterring the further escalation of conflicts, the final arbiter in decision-making is the availability of United Nations resources”.⁷

Many calls were made in the Council during the period for greater consultation with regional organizations.⁸ At the 5261st meeting, held at the Summit level on 14 September 2005 to discuss “Threats to international peace and security”, the Council adopted resolution 1625 (2005) wherein it requested the Secretary-General to promote coordination with regional conflict management machinery in Africa which would provide the Security Council with additional reliable and timely information to facilitate rapid decision-making.⁹ A few months earlier, the representative of Benin, at the wrap-up discussion on the work of the Security Council for the current month on 30 March 2005, emphasized that a regular exchange of information with regional African organizations would provide the Council with reliable and timely information to facilitate rapid decision-making.¹⁰ At that same meeting, the representative of Romania considered that value could be added to the Council's decision-making on African issues by increased use of the capacities provided by the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General for Special Assignments in Africa, the Special Adviser to the

² Discussion also occurred at workshops for newly elected and current Security Council members, which were held outside of the Council Chambers (see S/2005/228, S/2006/483, S/2007/137 and S/2008/195).

³ S/2006/507, annex, paras. 41-43. As stated in the note, the material in those paragraphs, which covers resolutions and presidential statements, is recollected from previous note(s) by the President of the Security Council.

Secretary-General on Africa, or the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for West Africa.¹¹

The inclusion of non-State stakeholders in the deliberative process was also mentioned during the period. At the 4890th meeting, held on 28 May 2004 to consider the item "Complex crises and the United Nations response", the representative of Germany noted that "while decision-making in the United Nations will remain the business of Governments, the integration of non-State stakeholders and non-State expertise in the deliberative process is in everybody's best interest: in the interest of informed decision-making and in the interest of popular acceptance".¹²

Part II

Procedural and non-procedural matters

Note

Most votes in the Council do not indicate by themselves whether the Council considers the matter voted upon as procedural or non-procedural. This is the case, for instance, when a proposal is adopted by a unanimous vote, when all permanent members vote in favour of a proposal or when a proposal fails to obtain the necessary nine votes in its favour. However, the record of voting may be conclusive in this respect when a proposal obtains nine or more votes, with one or more permanent members casting a negative vote. Adoption by the Council in such circumstances indicates the procedural character of the matter; rejection by the Council in such circumstances indicates the non-procedural character of the matter.

During the period under review, there were two instances in which the vote indicated the procedural character of the matter under consideration, and six instances in which the vote indicated the non-procedural character.

A. Cases in which the vote indicated the procedural character of the matter

Part III

Proceedings of the Security Council regarding voting upon the question whether the matter was procedural within the meaning of Article 27, paragraph 2, of the Charter

Note

On certain occasions the Security Council has found it necessary to decide, by vote, the question whether or not the matter under consideration was procedural within the meaning of Article 27 (2). This question has come to be termed, after the language used in the San Francisco Statement on Voting Procedure, “the preliminary question”.

There were no instances of voting on the preliminary question during the period under review.

Part IV

Abstention, non-participation or absence in relation to Article 27, paragraph 3, of the Charter

Note

According to Article 27 (3) of the Charter, decisions of the Security Council on non-procedural matters require an affirmative vote of nine members including “the concurring votes of the permanent members”. Part IV concerns the application of this requirement: (a) in the light of the proviso to Article 27 (3) which requires abstention by a party to a dispute; and (b) in circumstances when a permanent member voluntarily abstains, does not participate in the vote, or is absent at the time of the vote.

A. Obligatory abstention

The proviso to Article 27 (3) states:

provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.

In the period under review, there was no instance in which a member abstained in accordance with the proviso to Article 27 (3).

B. Voluntary abstention, non-participation or absence in relation to Article 27, paragraph 3

Listed below are those instances in which permanent members voluntarily abstained from voting. During the period under review, there were no instances of non-participation by permanent members or of votes taken in their absence.

Part V

Adoption of resolutions and decisions without a vote

Note

During the period under review, most procedural motions at meetings of the Council were adopted without a vote, the two exceptions being votes on the adoption of the agenda noted in part II.A of this chapter. Four resolutions were also adopted without a vote: resolution 1571 (2004), concerning the date of election to fill a vacancy in the International Court of Justice, and resolution 1691 (2006), concerning admission of new Members, were described by the President as being adopted “without a vote”. Resolution 1715 (2006), concerning the recommendation for the appointment of the Secretary-General, and resolution 1733 (2006), a tribute to the outgoing Secretary-General Kofi Annan, were adopted by “acclamation”.¹³ Of the remaining 269 resolutions that were adopted by a vote (six draft resolutions, as indicated in part II.B, were voted upon but not adopted owing to the negative votes of one or more permanent members), 260 were adopted unanimously.¹⁴ A majority of the latter (178) consisted of texts “prepared in the course of the Council’s prior consultations”; the remaining texts were submitted by one or more delegations. The only resolution adopted at a closed meeting during the period was that by which the Council recommended the appointment of a Secretary-General, resolution 1715 (2006).

No votes were taken on decisions which took the form of statements by the President on behalf of the Council. These “presidential statements” were issued after having been agreed upon by members of the Council during consultations. In the periods covered by previous volumes of the Repertoire, some statements were read out at a formal meeting of the Council, while others were simply issued in written form. In the period 2004-2007, of 224 statements, only one, while referred to, was not read out at a formal meeting.¹⁵ On several occasions, a presidential statement was read out immediately following the adopting of a resolution, as a complementary text. This was the case, in accordance with the usual practice, in connection with resolutions adopted on the admission of new Members and on the

¹⁴ On occasion, the unanimous adoption of a resolution was preceded or followed by an explanation of vote or explanations of vote by individual delegations. See for example, S/PV.4987 (with respect to resolution 1546 (2004) on the situation between Iraq and Kuwait); S/PV.5093 (with respect to resolution 1577 (2004) on the situation in Burundi); S/PV.5297 (a ministerial-level meeting with respect to resolution 1636 (2005) on the situation in the Middle East); S/PV.5406 (with respect to resolution 1667 (2006) on the situation in Liberia); S/PV.5727 (with respect to resolution 1769 (2007) on the reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan).

Many decisions, largely of a procedural or operative nature, were also recorded in letters and notes by the President of the Council. No votes were taken on those notes and letters. However, at the 5092nd meeting, held on 30 November 2004 to consider the situation between Iraq and Kuwait, the President drew the attention of the Council to the draft of a letter which he proposed to send to the Secretary-General to inform him that the Council specifically endorsed the creation of a trust fund in connection with the security arrangements for the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq. In the absence of any objection, the President took it that the Council agreed to that proposal.¹⁷

The texts of all resolutions, presidential statements and procedural decisions taken at Security Council meetings, as well as decisions contained in notes or letters by the President, are published in the yearly volumes of Resolutions and Decisions of the Security Council.¹⁸

This chapter covers procedures of the Security Council relating to the establishment and monitoring of subsidiary organs deemed necessary for the performance of its functions under the Charter of the United Nations. The Council's power to establish subsidiary organs is set out in Article 29 of the Charter and reflected in rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure.

Article 29

The Security Council may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

Rule 28

The Security Council may appoint a commission or committee or a rapporteur for a specified question.

The period from 2004 to 2007 saw the Council mandate the establishment of a wide variety of new subsidiary bodies. These included seven peacekeeping operations, six political missions, one regional office, six committees to oversee the implementation of measures adopted pursuant to Article 41 or other tasks, one Ad Hoc Committee, two informal working groups, two investigative bodies, a commission of experts, one tribunal, and, in conjunction with the General Assembly, a Peacebuilding Commission.

Part I of this chapter considers these new organs, together with those established prior to 2000 and continuing during part or all of the period under review. The organs are divided into seven main categories, reflecting their main character or functions: (a) standing and ad hoc committees; (b) committees to oversee the implementation of measures adopted pursuant to Article 41 and other committees;¹ (c) informal and ad hoc working groups; (d) investigative bodies and tribunals; (e) ad hoc commissions; (f) peacekeeping operations, political missions and regional offices and (g) the Peacebuilding Commission. Three peacekeeping and six political missions were terminated during the period under review, as were one ad hoc committee, two ad hoc commissions and one informal working group. This is reflected in part II. Part III describes one instance in which a subsidiary organ was formally proposed but not established.

In a note by the President of the Council of 19 July 2006,² the Council outlined several measures to enhance the effectiveness and transparency of the work of its subsidiary bodies. More specifically, the note outlined the following measures:

The members of the Security Council encourage the Chairs of all subsidiary bodies to continue to report to the Council on any outstanding issues, when necessary and in any event on a regular basis, in order to receive strategic guidance from the Council.

The members of the Security Council encourage subsidiary bodies of the Council to seek the views of Member States with strong interest in their areas of work. The members of the Security Council in particular encourage sanctions committees to seek the views of Member States that are particularly affected by the sanctions.

The members of the Security Council encourage Chairs of the subsidiary bodies of the Council to make the schedules of meetings of subsidiary bodies available to the public, when appropriate, through their websites and the Journal of the United Nations.

The members of the Security Council welcome the participation in the meetings of the Security Council Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations by the Secretariat, troop-contributing countries and other major stakeholders, and encourage this practice in order to foster closer cooperation between the Council and those actors.

During the period under review, the Council held a number of meetings under the item “Briefings by Chairmen of subsidiary bodies of the Security Council” at which it heard briefings by the Chairmen of various subsidiary bodies. The table provides a complete list of such briefings.

Part I

Subsidiary organs of the Security Council established or continuing during the period 2004-2007

A. Standing and ad hoc committees

Note

During the period 2004 to 2007, the Committee of Experts on Rules of Procedure, established by the Security Council at the 1506th meeting, which studies the question of associate membership, and the Committee on Council Meetings away from Headquarters continued to exist but did not meet.

The Committee on the Admission of New Members was asked to consider the application for admission to membership in the United Nations of the Republic of Montenegro, referred to it by the Council under rule 59 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.³

During this period, the Council also established one new ad hoc committee, the Ad Hoc Committee on Mandate Review.

Ad Hoc Committee on Mandate Review

By a letter dated 16 May 2006 to the Secretary-General,⁴ the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General about the decision of the members of the Council to establish an Ad Hoc Committee on Mandate Review to conduct the review of Council mandates called for by Heads of State and Government in the 2005 World Summit Outcome⁵ and to follow up on the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Mandating and delivering".⁶

The Committee, consisting of all members of the Council, had two Co-Chairs. The Council also welcomed the participation of a senior member of the Secretary-General's staff in relevant meetings of the Committee to answer questions on those aspects of the Secretary-General's report that specifically related to Council mandates, as well as the continuing assistance of the Secretariat in providing substantive services throughout the process of mandate review.⁷ At its 5806th meeting, on 17 December 2007, the Council heard a briefing on the work of the Committee.

By a letter dated 28 December 2007 addressed to the Secretary-General,⁸ the President of the Council announced the accomplishment of the main goals of the Ad Hoc Committee on Mandate Review and the conclusion of its work.

B. Security Council committees established under Chapter VII of the Charter

Note

During the period under review, the Security Council established several committees to monitor the implementation of measures or to perform other tasks adopted pursuant to Chapter VII of the Charter and extended the mandate of previously established ones.⁹ The committees consisted of all 15 members of the Council and held their meetings in private, unless a committee itself decided otherwise, and reached their decisions by consensus. The bureaux of the committees, generally consisting of a Chairman and Vice-Chairman, were elected by the Council annually and announced in notes by the President of the Council.¹⁰

This section deals first with 12 Security Council committees established to monitor specific sanctions measures. It then deals with two other Council committees with broader mandates (“other committees”). Within each category, the committees are considered in the order of their establishment. The subsidiary bodies whose work is closely linked with that of the committees are included with the relevant committees.

Security Council committees monitoring specific sanctions measures

From 2004 to 2007, the Council established six new committees to supervise the implementation of measures adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter against the Democratic Republic of the Congo,¹¹ Côte d’Ivoire,¹² the Sudan,¹³ the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea¹⁴ and the Islamic Republic of Iran.¹⁵ During the same period, the Council oversaw a total of 12 committees, including committees that had been established in prior periods.¹⁶

In addition, on several occasions, the Council requested the Secretary-General to establish monitoring bodies, in the forms of panels or committees of experts and monitoring groups or mechanisms, to assist the work of committees or to look into the question of the illegal exploitation of natural resources.¹⁷ To develop general recommendations on how to improve the effectiveness of United Nations sanctions, the Council also decided to extend the mandate of its Informal

Working Group on General Issues of Sanctions until the end of 2006.¹⁸

During the period under review, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, established committees to undertake tasks related to sanctions measures in accordance with rule 28 of the provisional rules of procedure of the Council. The tasks that the committees were mandated to undertake, during the period under review, included (a) seeking information regarding the implementation of measures imposed under Article 41; (b) considering information concerning the violations of the measures and recommending appropriate measures in response thereto; (c) reporting to the Council on the information regarding alleged violations; (d) giving consideration to and deciding upon request for exemptions from the measures; (e) examining reports submitted to them, including those from monitoring bodies; (f) identifying individuals and entities subject to the measures and to maintain such a list, and (g) making recommendations to the Council on how to improve the effectiveness of the measures.

The Council also adopted several resolutions under the item “General issues related to sanctions” that affected the general mandate of the committees or their general functioning.¹⁹ By resolution 1730 (2006) of 19 December 2006, the Council adopted a procedure to receive requests for de-listing, requested the Secretary-General to establish within the Secretariat (Security Council Subsidiary Organs Branch) a focal point to receive such requests and to perform the tasks below, and directed the sanctions committees to revise their guidelines accordingly. The focal point would receive a de-listing request from a petitioner, determine if it was a repeat request, and forward the request to the designating Government(s) and to the Government(s) of citizenship and residence. If any of those Governments recommended de-listing, that Government would forward its recommendation either through the focal point or directly to the Chairman of the relevant sanctions Committee, and the Chairman would then place the de-listing request on the Committee’s agenda. The focal point would also inform the Committee of any opposition to the request.

¹² Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1572 (2004) concerning Côte d’Ivoire.

¹³ Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1591 (2005) concerning the Sudan.

¹⁴ Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1718 (2006).

¹⁵ Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1737 (2006).

¹⁹ The report of the Informal Working Group on General Issues of Sanctions, containing recommendations on how to improve the effectiveness of sanctions, is contained in document S/2006/997.

If none of the Governments consulted commented, any member of the Committee could, after consultation with the designated Government(s), recommend de-listing by forwarding the request to the Chairman. If, after one month, no Committee member recommended de-listing, then it would be deemed rejected. The focal point would also convey all communications that it received from Member States to the Committee and inform the petitioner of the decision of the sanctions Committee to grant or not grant the de-listing.²⁰ By resolution 1699 (2006), the Council noted that cooperation with the International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL) could benefit the sanctions committees established by the Council, and requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to increase cooperation between the United Nations and INTERPOL in order to provide the Committees with better tools, and allow them to fulfil their mandates more effectively.²¹

In accordance with the transparency measures outlined by the President of the Council in his note of 29 March 1995,²² committees continued to submit their annual reports to the Council. In some instances, the Council decided to send a mission of a Committee to the region concerned to demonstrate the Council's determination to give full effect to the measures imposed.

It should be noted that for clarification purposes only and when required, summarized descriptions of the mandatory measures, based on their nature, are included — for example, arms embargo, assets freeze, travel restrictions, diamond ban, petroleum embargo, restriction of air traffic, and restrictions on diplomatic representation, and prohibitions on round logs and timber products. The above-mentioned descriptions are not intended to serve as legal definitions of measures. The measures imposed by the Council pursuant to Article 41 are described in chapter XI of this Supplement.

concerning Somalia continued to monitor the arms embargo imposed by resolution 733 (1992).

Mandate implementation

By resolution 1587 (2005) of 15 March 2005, the Council requested the Committee to consider sending a mission, led by its Chairman, to Somalia and the region to demonstrate the Council's determination to give full effect to the arms embargo.²³ The Chairman visited the region, specifically Kenya, Ethiopia and Yemen, from 26 November to 4 December 2005.²⁴ By resolution 1676 (2006), the Council again requested the Committee to consider a visit to Somalia or the region.²⁵ By resolutions 1744 (2007) of 20 February 2007 and 1772 (2007) of 20 August 2007, the Council adopted exemptions to the arms embargo that were to be approved by the Committee on a case-by-case basis.²⁶

Monitoring and reporting

The Committee submitted four annual reports covering the period under review, which, inter alia, dealt with its activities as well as those of the Monitoring Group.²⁷ In particular, the Committee underlined its active engagement in the implementation of the arms embargo in Somalia. It further observed that, despite intensified fighting in Somalia, its commitment remained high, as did its support for the Monitoring Group and its readiness to engage in dialogue with States as its 2005 mission in the region had demonstrated.

During the period under review, the Council re-established six times, for periods of six months, the Monitoring Group established by resolution 1519 (2003) of 16 December 2003 with a mandate focused on the ongoing violations of the arms embargo, including transfers of ammunition, single-use weapons, and small arms. The Council also requested the Committee, in consultation with the Monitoring Group, to consider ways to improve the arms embargo in response to continuing violations and to assist in identifying areas where the capacities of States in the region could be strengthened to facilitate the implementation of the arms embargo.²⁸ The Group produced six reports,²⁹ in which, observing that the situation in Somalia was worsening and violations of the embargo continuing, it provided a number of recommendations on improving implementation of the arms embargo, but noted that successful implementation of the recommendations depended on the establishment of a viable government in Somalia.

2. Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 918 (1994) concerning Rwanda

The Committee established pursuant to resolution 918 (1994) concerning Rwanda continued to fulfil its mandate to monitor the arms embargo imposed by that resolution and modified by resolution 1011 (1995).³⁰

Mandate implementation

By resolution 1749 (2007) of 28 March 2007, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, decided to terminate the measures imposed by paragraph 11 of resolution 1011 (1995) regarding the transfer of arms or related material to Rwanda.³¹ The Committee continued to monitor the remaining measures contained in paragraphs 9 and 10 of resolution 1011 (1995).

³¹ Resolution 1749 (2007), para. 1.

During the period under review, the Committee submitted five reports,³² in which it noted that no violations of the arms embargo had been brought to its attention, while observing that the Committee did not have any specific monitoring mechanism to ensure the effective implementation of the arms embargo and that it relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations in a position to provide pertinent information.

3. Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1132 (1997) concerning Sierra Leone

During the period under review, the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1132 (1997) concerning Sierra Leone continued to fulfil its mandate to monitor the measures concerning the arms embargo and travel restrictions imposed by resolution 1132 (1997).³³

Monitoring and reporting

During the period under review, the Committee submitted five annual reports, in which it provided information on the activities of the Committee and stated that no violations of the arms embargo had been brought to its attention.³⁴

4. Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities.³⁵

By resolution 1526 (2004) of 30 January 2004, the Council decided to strengthen the mandatory measures that included an asset freeze, travel ban and arms embargo.³⁶ It also decided to strengthen the mandate of the Committee to include, in addition to the oversight of States' implementation of those measures, a role in assessing information for the Council's review as well as recommending improvements to the measures.³⁷ The Council requested the Committee to follow up with States regarding effective implementation of the sanctions measures and to provide States with an opportunity, at the request of the Committee, to send representatives to meet with the Committee for more in-depth discussion of relevant issues; to seek from States, as appropriate, status reports on the implementation of the measures concerning listed individuals and entities, specifically with respect to the aggregate amounts of the frozen assets of the listed individuals and entities; and to circulate to the Council a list of those States that had not submitted by 31 March 2004 reports pursuant to paragraph 6 of resolution 1455 (2003), including an analytical summary of the reasons put forward by States for not reporting.³⁸ Moreover, the Council decided to establish an Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team under the direction of the Committee.³⁹

By resolution 1617 (2005) of 29 July 2005, the Council decided that, when proposing names for the Consolidated List, States should also provide to the Committee a statement of case describing the basis of the proposal, and that the case could be used by the Committee in responding to queries from Member States whose nationals, residents or entities had been included on the Consolidated List. It also decided that the Committee could decide on a case-by-case basis to release the information to other parties, with the prior consent of the designating State.⁴⁰ The Council also reiterated the need for ongoing close cooperation and exchange of information between the Committee, the Counter-Terrorism Committee and the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004), as well as their respective groups of experts, including enhanced information-sharing, coordinated visits to countries, technical assistance and other issues of relevance to all three committees.⁴¹

By resolution 1735 (2006) of 22 December 2006, the Council introduced additional rules in the de-listing procedure. Specifically, the Council decided that the Committee should consider, inter alia, names included in the Consolidated List due to a mistake of identity and whether the individual or entity no longer met the criteria set out in relevant resolutions.⁴²

The Committee revised its guidelines several times,⁴³ as requested by the Council.⁴⁴

Monitoring and reporting

The Committee submitted three annual reports⁴⁵ covering the period under review, by which, inter alia, it informed the Council of activities of the Committee and the Monitoring Team established pursuant to resolution 1526 (2004). During the period under review, the Committee took several trips⁴⁶ pursuant to the requests of the Security Council⁴⁷ to selected countries.

5. Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1518 (2003)

During the period under review, the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1518 (2003) continued to fulfil its mandate to identify senior officials of the former Iraqi regime and their immediate family members, including entities owned or controlled by them or by persons acting on their behalf, who were subject to the measures imposed by paragraph 23 of resolution 1483 (2003).

Monitoring and reporting

During the period under review, the Committee submitted three annual reports,⁵² by which it informed the Council, inter alia, about its activity updating the lists of individuals and entities whose funds and economic resources should be frozen, in accordance with paragraphs 19 and 23 of resolution 1483 (2003).⁵³

6. Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003) concerning Liberia

The Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003) continued to fulfil its mandate to oversee the implementation of the arms embargo, restrictions on the travel of individuals designated by the Committee, and prohibitions on the import of rough diamonds and timber products originating in Liberia.

By resolution 1532 (2004) of 12 March 2004, the Council imposed an asset freeze on selected individuals, specifically the President of Liberia, Charles Taylor, his immediate family and other associates.⁵⁴ The Council decided that the Committee should identify individuals and entities covered by the asset freeze and circulate to all States a list of the said individuals; maintain and regularly update the list; assist States in tracing and freezing the funds and assets of such individuals; and seek from all States information regarding the actions taken by them.⁵⁵

By resolution 1683 (2006) of 13 June 2006, the Council decided that the arms embargo would not apply to the weapons and ammunition already provided to the Special Security Service for training purposes on the basis of advance approval by the Committee, and to limited supplies of weapons and ammunition for members of the Government of Liberia police and security forces who had been vetted and trained since the inception of the United Nations Mission in Liberia in October 2003, as approved on a case-by-case basis by the Committee.⁵⁶

By resolution 1689 (2006) of 20 June 2006, the Council terminated the prohibition on the import of timber products originating in Liberia.⁵⁷ By resolution 1753 (2007) of 27 April 2007, the Council terminated the measures on diamonds, and encouraged the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme for diamonds to report to the Council through the Committee, on the application of Liberia to the Kimberley Process.⁵⁸

Monitoring and reporting

The Committee submitted four annual reports⁵⁹ covering the period under review, which, inter alia, dealt with its activities as well as those of the Panel of Experts. In particular, the Committee provided an overview on the implementation of the relevant measures and highlighted that no violations were reported.

Panel of Experts

By resolution 1521 (2003), the Council requested the Secretary-General to establish a Panel of Experts with the mandate to, inter alia, report on the implementation of the Council's relevant measures. The Panel of Experts was re-established or its mandate extended on a six-month basis by a series of resolutions.⁶⁰ In accordance with its mandate, the Panel submitted 10 reports to the Council through the Committee and provided, inter alia, an assessment of the measures regarding diamonds, timber, travel ban, assets freeze and arms embargo, as well as the socioeconomic impact of such measures and the financial situation of Liberia.⁶¹

By resolution 1549 (2004) the Panel of Experts was mandated to conduct an assessment mission to Liberia and neighbouring States to investigate and report on violations of the arms embargo, travel ban, as well as diamonds and timber embargoes. Moreover, it was mandated to assess the progress made in the ceasefire, disarmament, demobilization, and control of diamonds and timber production and trade, as well as to monitor the implementation and enforcement of the measures and assess their socioeconomic and humanitarian impact.⁶² By subsequent resolutions, its mandate was expanded and the Committee was requested to cooperate with other relevant groups of experts,⁶³ assess the implementation of the forestry legislation,⁶⁴ identify and make recommendations regarding areas where the capacity of States in the region to implement the measures could be strengthened,⁶⁵ monitor specific measures targeted on designated individuals, including former President Taylor,⁶⁶ and to assess the compliance of the Government of Liberia with the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme.⁶⁷

Establishment

By resolution 1533 (2004) of 12 March 2004, the Council established a Committee to oversee the relevant measures imposed by resolution 1493 (2003), which included, inter alia, the ban of arms transfers to the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the prohibition of assistance from other countries to all foreign and Congolese armed groups and militias operating in the territory of North and South Kivu and of Ituri, and to groups not parties to the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement, in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

Mandate

Pursuant to resolution 1533 (2004), the Committee was mandated, inter alia (a) to seek from all States, and particularly those in the region, information regarding the actions taken by them to implement effectively the measures, and to request from them whatever further information it might consider useful; (b) to examine, and to take appropriate action on, information concerning alleged violations of the measures and information on alleged arms flows, identifying where possible individual and legal entities reported to be engaged in such violations, as well as aircraft or other vehicles used; and (c) to present regular reports to the Council on its work, with its observations and recommendations, in particular on ways to strengthen the effectiveness of the measures.⁶⁸

By resolution 1596 (2005) of 18 April 2005, the Council, inter alia, decided that the measures would apply to any recipient in the territory of the Democratic

By resolution 1649 (2005) of 21 December 2005, the Council extended the measures that called on all States to prevent the transit through their territories of political and military leaders of foreign armed groups operating in the Democratic Republic of the Congo who impeded the disarmament and the voluntary repatriation or resettlement of their combatants, as well as political and military leaders of Congolese militia receiving support from outside the country, unless the Committee authorized in advance, on a case-by-case basis, the transit of individual returning to the State of their nationality, or participating in efforts to bring to justice perpetrators of international humanitarian law. The Council also decided that the tasks of the Committee to, inter alia, designate persons would extend to the above-mentioned measures in the resolution.⁷¹

By resolution 1698 (2006) of 31 July 2006, the Council decided to extend those provisions to political and military leaders recruiting or using children in armed conflict and individuals committing serious violations of international law involving the targeting of children in situations of armed conflict.⁷²

Group of Experts

By resolution 1533 (2004) of 12 March 2004, the Council requested the Secretary-General to establish a Group of Experts consisting of no more than four members to analyse information on violations of the relevant measures. Moreover, the Group was also mandated to report to the Council through the Committee on its activities: to monitor the effective implementation of the measures; to provide recommendations on ways to improve the capabilities of States to implement the measures; to cooperate with MONUC; and to provide the Committee with a list of violators of the measures.⁷⁴

By resolution 1649 (2005), the Council requested the Group to assist the Committee in the designation of the leaders referred to in paragraph 2 of the resolution.⁷⁵ By resolution 1698 (2006) of 31 July 2006, the Council asked the Group of Experts to provide recommendations on feasible and effective measures the Council might impose to prevent the illegal exploitation of natural resources financing armed groups and militias in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and to assess the relative importance of the exploitation of natural resources to the armed groups as compared to other sources of income.⁷⁶

During the period under review, the Group of Experts submitted seven reports on its activities.⁷⁷ By a series of resolutions,⁷⁸ the Council re-established or extended the mandate of the Group of Experts on seven occasions, requesting it to report on the implementation of the measures.

8. Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1572 (2004) concerning Côte d'Ivoire

Establishment and mandate

By resolution 1572 (2004) of 15 November 2004, the Council imposed a number of measures on Côte d'Ivoire, consisting of an arms embargo, a travel ban and the freeze of assets owned or controlled by designated individuals.⁷⁹ By the same resolution, the Council further decided to establish a Committee to oversee the measures. The Committee was mandated to designate the individuals and entities subject to the travel ban and assets freeze; to seek relevant information from all States concerned; to consider and decide upon requests for exemptions; to make relevant information publicly available; to promulgate guidelines to facilitate the implementation of the relevant measures and to report regularly to the Council on its activities.⁸⁰

Mandate implementation

By resolution 1782 (2007) of 29 October 2007, the Council authorized the Committee to request whatever further information it might consider necessary from all States concerned.⁸¹

Monitoring and reporting

The Committee submitted three annual reports on its activities⁸² and those of the Group of Experts. The Committee reported violations of both the arms embargo and the diamonds embargo in 2006⁸³ and violations of the diamonds embargo and the asset freeze in 2007.⁸⁴

Group of Experts

By resolution 1584 (2005) of 1 February 2005, the Council requested the Secretary-General to establish a Group of Experts to assist the Committee in its tasks for an initial period of six months. Specifically, the Group was mandated to examine and analyse information gathered by the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI), as well as all relevant information on arms flows in Côte d'Ivoire; to consider and recommend ways of improving the capabilities of States to implement the measures; to report to the Council through the Committee; and to collaborate with UNOCI and other relevant groups of experts, as well as to provide the Committee with a list of individuals and entities that violated the measures imposed for possible future measures by the Council.⁸⁵ By resolution 1643 (2005), the Council required the Group of Experts to monitor the implementation of the travel ban and the freeze of assets of designated individuals.⁸⁶ During the period under review, the Group of Experts submitted seven reports on its activities.⁸⁷ By a series of resolutions,⁸⁸ the Council extended the mandate of the Group on six occasions for periods of up to one year, the last until 31 October 2008.

9. Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1591 (2005) concerning the Sudan

Establishment and mandate

By resolution 1556 (2004) of 30 July 2004, the Council decided that all States should take the necessary measures to prevent the sale or supply of arms and related materiel, as well as the provision of related technical training or assistance, to all non-governmental entities and individuals operating in the States of Northern, Southern and Western Darfur in the Sudan.⁸⁹ By resolution 1591 (2005) of 29 March 2005, the Council established a Committee to oversee the measures contained in the resolution, which consisted of a travel ban and asset freeze on selected individuals and an expansion of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1556 (2005) to all the parties to the N'Djamena Ceasefire Agreement and any other belligerents in Darfur.⁹⁰ Specifically, the Committee was mandated to monitor the implementation of the arms embargo; to designate the individuals and entities

By resolution 1636 (2005) of 31 October 2005, the Council decided, as a step to assist in the investigation of the terrorist bombing that killed the former Prime Minister of Lebanon, Rafiq Hariri, and

22 others, that all individuals designated by the International Independent Investigation Commission or the Government of Lebanon as suspected of involvement in the planning, sponsoring, organizing or perpetrating of that terrorist act would be subject to a travel ban and asset freeze and to establish a Committee to oversee those measures.⁹⁹ The Council further decided that the Committee should register as subject to measures those individuals designated by the International Independent Investigation Commission or the Government of Lebanon; approve exceptions to the travel ban and assets freeze on a case-by-case basis; register the removal of individuals from the scope of the travel ban and asset freeze measures in accordance with resolution 1636 (2005) and inform all Member States which individuals were subject to those measures.¹⁰⁰

Establishment and mandate

By resolution 1718 (2006) of 14 October 2006, the Council decided that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea should abandon all nuclear weapons and existing nuclear programmes, and imposed a number of measures, including a prohibition on the import or export of certain arms, nuclear material and luxury goods to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. Other measures included, inter alia, the prohibition of any assistance related to nuclear technology, as well as a travel ban and asset freeze. The Council further decided to establish a Committee to oversee these measures. Specifically, the Committee was mandated to seek relevant information from all States concerned; to examine and take appropriate action on alleged violations of the measures; to consider and decide upon requests for exemptions; to update the lists of individual and entities subject to the measures as well as to determine additional items to be included in the list of banned items; to promulgate guidelines to facilitate the implementation of the relevant measures and to report regularly to the Council on its activities.¹⁰¹

12. Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1737 (2006)

Establishment

By resolution 1737 (2006) of 23 December 2006, the Council, acting under Article 41 of the Charter, reiterated the request contained in resolution 1696 (2006)¹⁰³ that the Islamic Republic of Iran suspend all enrichment-related and reprocessing activities and work on all heavy water-related projects,¹⁰⁴ adopted measures on the Islamic Republic of Iran, including a proliferation-sensitive nuclear and ballistic missile programmes-related embargo; and individual targeted sanctions, inter alia, a travel ban, a travel notification requirement, and an assets freeze, on designated persons and entities;¹⁰⁵ and established a Committee to oversee the implementation of the relevant measures included in the resolution.¹⁰⁶

Mandate

Pursuant to resolution 1737 (2006), the Committee was mandated to undertake the following tasks, and to report on its work to the Council with its observations and recommendations at least every 90 days:¹⁰⁷ (a) to seek from all States information regarding the actions taken by them to implement the measures imposed by the resolution and thereafter to request from them whatever further information it might consider necessary; (b) to seek from the secretariat of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) information regarding the actions taken by IAEA; (c) to consider and to take appropriate action on information brought to its attention concerning alleged violations of the measures imposed by the resolution; (d) to consider and decide upon requests for exceptions to the sanctions, including to the embargo in cases where items or assistance would not contribute to the development of proliferation-sensitive nuclear activities; (e) to update the list of banned transfers; (f) to update the list of individuals and entities subject to travel ban and asset freeze; (g) to promulgate guidelines facilitating the implementation of the measures; and (h) to report at least every 90 days to the Council on its work, with its observations and recommendations.

Mandate implementation

By resolution 1747 (2007) of 24 March 2007, the Council imposed a ban on exports of arms from the Islamic Republic of Iran and designated additional persons and entities as subject to the assets freeze and the measures concerning travel. The Council also called upon all States to exercise vigilance and restraint in the provision of heavy weapons and related services to the Islamic Republic of Iran, and called upon all States and international financial institutions not to enter into new commitments for grants, financial assistance and concessional loans to the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, except for humanitarian and developmental purposes. In addition, the Council called on all States to report to the Committee within 60 days of the adoption of the resolution on the steps they had taken to implement the above provisions.¹⁰⁸

Monitoring and reporting

During the period under review, the Council heard three briefings from the Chairman of the Committee.¹⁰⁹ The Committee also presented an annual report on its activities from 23 December 2006 to 31 December 2007.¹¹⁰

Other committees

During the period under review, the Counter-Terrorism Committee established pursuant to Security Council resolution 1373 (2001) continued its work, and the Council established a Committee pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004), by which, inter alia, it required States to take measures to prevent non-State actors from obtaining weapons of mass destruction.

Considering the related nature of the mandates of these two Committees as well as the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities, the Council called on a number of occasions for enhanced cooperation among the three Committees, as well as the Working Group established pursuant to resolution 1566 (2004). Specifically, this included, inter alia, enhanced information-sharing, coordinated visits to countries and cooperation on other issues of relevance to all the three Committees and the Working Group. The Council also encouraged the three Committees to enhance cooperation with a view to identifying, promoting and developing, as appropriate, best practices to provide clarity and guidance to States on implementation of the provisions of the relevant resolutions; to ensure that, in their dialogue with States, they presented a consolidated message from the Council on its efforts to fight terrorism; and to avoid duplication, including in their requests for information from Member States about implementation.¹¹¹

1. Committee established pursuant to Security Council resolution 1373 (2001) concerning counter-terrorism

During the period under review, the Counter-Terrorism Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373 (2001) under Chapter VII of the Charter, continued to monitor implementation of the resolution, with the assistance of appropriate expertise.

Mandate implementation

Having considered the report of the Chairman of the Committee on the problems encountered both by Member States and the Committee itself in the implementation of resolution 1373 (2001),¹¹² the Council, by resolution 1535 (2004), endorsed the report of the Committee on its revitalization,¹¹³ and decided that the revitalized Committee would consist of the plenary, composed of the Security Council member States, and the Bureau, composed of the Chair and the Vice-Chairs, assisted by the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate, to be established as a special political mission, under the policy guidance of the plenary, for an initial period ending 31 December 2007.¹¹⁴ The Council also decided that the Committee would continue to report to the Council on a regular basis.

By a statement of the President dated 19 July 2004,¹¹⁵ the Council invited the Counter-Terrorism Committee to pursue its agenda as set out in the work programme for the twelfth 90-day period focusing on practical measures to implement resolution 1535 (2004) on the revitalization of the Committee as well as to accelerate its work on country assessments of assistance needs.¹¹⁶

By resolution 1566 (2004) of 8 October 2004, the Council requested the Counter-Terrorism Committee to develop a set of best practices to assist States in implementing the provisions of resolution 1373 (2001) related to the financing of terrorism. It also directed the Committee to start visits to States in order to enhance the monitoring of the implementation of resolution 1373 (2001).¹¹⁷

By a statement of the President dated 19 October 2004,¹¹⁸ the Council invited the Committee to pursue its agenda as set out in the work programme for its thirteenth 90-day period,¹¹⁹ focusing on practical measures to increase the Committee's capacity, including through enhanced cooperation with the sanctions Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267 (1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004).

By a statement of the President dated 18 January 2005,¹²⁰ the Council invited the Counter-Terrorism Committee to pursue its agenda as set out in the work programme for its fourteenth 90-day period.¹²¹ It also invited the Committee, inter alia, to ensure that its Executive Directorate became fully operational in the shortest possible time; to initiate contacts with the Working Group established pursuant to resolution 1566 (2004) and to conduct the first of its visits to Member States in March 2005.

By resolution 1624 (2005) of 14 September 2005, the Council directed the Committee to (a) include in its dialogue with Member States their efforts to implement the resolution, which, inter alia, it called on States to adopt such measures as might be necessary to prohibit by law incitement to commit a terrorist act; (b) work with Member States to help build capacity, including through spreading best legal practice and promoting exchange of information in this regard; and (c) report back to the Council in 12 months on the implementation of the resolution.¹²²

By a statement of the President dated 20 December 2006,¹²³ the Council called on the Committee to report on the status of implementation of resolution 1373 (2001), particularly on any outstanding issues, when necessary on a regular basis, in order to receive strategic guidance from the Council.

Reporting

During the period under review, the Counter-Terrorism Committee issued one report on the implementation of resolution 1624 (2005).¹²⁴

Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate

The Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate was established by resolution 1535 (2004) as a special political mission, under the policy guidance of the plenary, for an initial period ending 31 December 2007.¹²⁵ The Council decided further that the Executive Directorate, headed by an Executive Director, would be responsible, inter alia, for the following tasks: to support and advise the plenary and the Chair in all their functions; ensure the comprehensive follow-up of all the decisions of the Committee; propose to the Secretary-General the appointment of all assigned staff; attend, or be represented, at all the meetings of the plenary and the Bureau; submit, through the Secretary-General, a semi-annual comprehensive report to the plenary as well as the programme of work for the Executive Directorate; prepare a results-based budget; keep the plenary regularly informed on the progress of States in their implementation of resolution 1373 (2001); facilitate the provision of assistance programmes to States; pursue relations and collaboration with other bodies of the United Nations system; continue to strengthen cooperation with relevant international, regional and subregional organizations; and design, propose and implement, with the approval of the plenary, a proactive communication policy.¹²⁶ The Council requested the Secretary-General to appoint an Executive Director of the Executive Directorate; and the Executive Director to submit to the plenary, for its endorsement, an organizational plan for the Executive Directorate.¹²⁷ The Executive Director was appointed through an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council.¹²⁸

By a statement of the President dated 21 December 2005,¹²⁹ the Council endorsed the report of the Counter-Terrorism Committee submitted as part of the Council's comprehensive review of the Executive Directorate¹³⁰ and agreed with its conclusions. In its report the Committee stressed that the following areas were the highest priority for the future focus of the Executive Directorate: monitoring implementation of Council resolution 1373 (2001) through (a) providing in-depth analysis of the implementation of the resolution; (b) enhancing dialogue with States; (c) reviewing and proposing how to update the reporting regime; and (c) cooperating closely with the other relevant subsidiary bodies of the Council, in particular the Committees established pursuant to resolutions 1267 (1999) and 1540 (2004); and continuing effective capacity-building work, through (a) strengthening the facilitation of technical assistance; (b) improving the assistance provided to Member States through publishing and developing best practices in all areas of resolution 1373 (2001); (c) reviewing and proposing how to further develop cooperation with international, regional and subregional organizations to enhance the synergy between the work of the Committee and that of these organizations in furthering implementation of resolution 1373 (2001).¹³¹ The Council also welcomed the fact that the Counter-Terrorism Committee, in consultation with the Secretary-General, had decided to declare the Executive Directorate operational on 15 December 2005 and agreed with the Secretary-General and with the Committee that there was a need to clarify reporting lines in the Executive Directorate, within the framework of resolution 1535 (2004).

By a statement of the President dated 20 December 2006,¹³² the Council endorsed the report prepared by the Committee submitted as part of the Council's comprehensive review of the Executive Directorate¹³³ and agreed with its recommendations and conclusions. Welcoming the letter from the Secretary-General dated 15 December 2006,¹³⁴ it also endorsed the recommendation of the Committee with regard to reporting lines so that the Executive Directorate would henceforth present its draft work programmes and its semi-annual reports directly to the Committee.

By resolution 1787 (2007) of 10 December 2007, the Council decided to extend the mandate of the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate until 31 March 2008 and requested the Executive Director to recommend such changes as he deemed appropriate to the organizational plan, and to submit them to the Committee for its consideration and endorsement.¹³⁵

2. Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540 (2004)

Establishment and mandate

By resolution 1540 (2004) of 28 April 2004, the Council, inter alia, decided that all States should adopt laws which prohibited any non-State actor from manufacturing, acquiring or transporting nuclear, chemical or biological weapons and take effective measures to establish domestic controls to prevent the proliferation such weapons.¹³⁶ By the same resolution, the Council decided to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, a Committee for a period of no longer than two years, which would, calling as appropriate on other expertise, report to the Security Council for its examination, on the implementation of this resolution. The Council called upon all States to present a first report no later than six months from the adoption of the resolution to the Committee on steps they had taken or intended to take to implement the resolution.¹³⁷

By resolution 1673 (2006) of 27 April 2006, the Council decided to extend the mandate of the Committee, with the continued assistance of experts, for an additional period of two years, until 27 April 2008. It also decided that the Committee should intensify its efforts to promote the full implementation by all States of resolution 1540 (2004) through a work programme which included the compilation of information on the status of States' implementation of all aspects of resolution 1540 (2004), outreach, dialogue, assistance and cooperation and address in particular all aspects of paragraphs 1 and 2 of that resolution, as well as of paragraph 3 which encompassed (a) accountability; (b) physical protection; (c) border controls and law enforcement efforts; and (d) national export and trans-shipment controls including controls on providing funds and services such as financing to such export and trans-shipment. It encouraged the pursuit of the ongoing dialogue between the Committee and States on the full implementation of resolution 1540 (2004), including on further actions needed from States to that end and on technical assistance needed and offered. It also encouraged the Committee to explore with States and international, regional and subregional organizations experience-sharing and lessons learned in the areas covered by resolution 1540 (2004), and the availability of programmes which might facilitate the implementation of the resolution.¹³⁸

Reporting

During the period under review, the Committee submitted one report to the Council.¹³⁹

C. Informal and ad hoc working groups

Note

During the review period, the Informal Working Group on Documentation and Other

Procedural Questions, the Working Group on International Criminal Tribunals, the Working Group of the Whole on the United Nations Peacekeeping Operations, and the Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa continued their work. The Informal Working Group on General Issues of Sanctions was terminated in 2006, having fulfilled its mandate.¹⁴⁰ The Security Council established two new informal working groups: the Working Group established pursuant to resolution 1566 (2004), and the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict. The working groups were composed of all 15 members of the Council, held their meetings in private, and reached their decisions by consensus. A brief overview of the establishment and mandate of the working groups is provided in the table below.

To make recommendations to the Council on possible measures to promote the protection of children affected by armed conflict, including through recommendations on appropriate mandates for peacekeeping missions and recommendations with respect to the parties to the conflict.

To address requests, as appropriate, to other bodies within the United Nations system for action to support implementation of the resolution in accordance with their respective mandates.

D. Investigative bodies and tribunals

Note

During the period under review, the Security Council established two investigative bodies — the International Commission of Inquiry for Darfur and the International Independent Investigation Commission for Lebanon. The Council also established one tribunal, the Special Tribunal for Lebanon, and continued to oversee the work of the International Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and for Rwanda, as detailed below.

1. International Commission of Inquiry for Darfur

Establishment

By resolution 1564 (2004) of 18 September 2004, the Council requested that the Secretary-General rapidly establish an international commission of inquiry in order immediately to investigate reports of violations of international humanitarian and human rights law in Darfur by all parties, to determine also whether or not acts of genocide had occurred, and to identify the perpetrators of such violations with a view to ensuring that those responsible were held accountable, and called upon all parties to cooperate fully with such a commission.¹⁴¹ The Council subsequently, by resolution 1574 (2004) of 19 November 2004, called upon all parties to cooperate fully with the International Commission of Inquiry established by the Secretary-General, as described in his letter dated 4 October 2004 to the President of the Security Council,¹⁴² the outcome of which would be communicated to the Council.¹⁴³

¹⁴¹ Resolution 1564 (2004), para. 12.

¹⁴² S/2004/812.

¹⁴³ Resolution 1574 (2004), para. 15.

Mandate and composition

The mandate of the International Commission of Inquiry for Darfur was to (a) investigate reports of serious violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law committed in Darfur by all parties in the conflict; (b) qualify crimes and determine whether or not acts of genocide had occurred or were still occurring; (c) determine responsibility and identify the individual perpetrators responsible for the commission of such violations, and recommend accountability mechanisms before which those allegedly responsible would be brought to account. The Commission had five members, as well as an Executive Director and a technical and administrative team.¹⁴⁴ The Commission was requested to carry out its task in three months and submit a report to the Secretary-General.¹⁴⁵

Mandate implementation

On 31 January 2005, the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the Commission to the President of the Security Council.¹⁴⁶ The Commission stated that some individuals had responsibility for serious violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, including crimes against humanity or war crimes, in Darfur, but concluded that the Government of the Sudan had not pursued a policy of genocide. On 31 March 2005, the Council, by resolution 1593 (2005), took note of the report of the International Commission of Inquiry for Darfur on violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law in Darfur, and, on the recommendation of the Commission,¹⁴⁷ decided to refer the situation in Darfur since 1 July 2002 to the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court.¹⁴⁸

2. International Independent Investigation Commission

Establishment and mandate

Following the assassination on 14 February 2005 of the former Prime Minister of Lebanon, Rafiq Hariri, along with 22 others, the Council, in a statement by the President of 15 February 2005, requested the Secretary-General to report on the circumstances, causes and consequences of the act.¹⁴⁹ Having examined the report of the Secretary-General's fact-finding mission to Lebanon,¹⁵⁰ as well as the approval of the Government of Lebanon,¹⁵¹ the Council, by resolution 1595 (2005) of 7 April 2005, decided to establish an international independent investigation commission based in Lebanon. The Commission was mandated to assist the Lebanese authorities in their investigation of all aspects of the terrorist bombing in Beirut that killed the former Prime Minister of Lebanon and others, including to help identify its perpetrators, sponsors, organizers and accomplices. The Council also decided that to ensure the effectiveness of the Commission in the discharge of its duties, the Commission would (a) enjoy the full cooperation of the Lebanese authorities, including full access to all documentary, testimonial and physical information and evidence in their possession that the Commission deemed relevant to the inquiry; (b) have the authority to collect any additional information and evidence, both documentary and physical, pertaining to the terrorist act, as well as to interview all officials and other persons in Lebanon that the Commission deemed relevant to the inquiry; (c) enjoy freedom of movement throughout the Lebanese territory, including access to all sites and facilities that the Commission deemed relevant to the inquiry; and (d) be provided with the facilities necessary to perform its functions, and be granted, with its premises, staff and equipment, the privileges and immunities to which they were entitled under the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations. The Commission was also directed to determine procedures for carrying out its investigation, taking into account Lebanese law and judicial procedures.¹⁵²

The Council requested the Commission to complete its work within three months of the date on which it commenced its full operations, as notified by the Secretary-General, and authorized the Secretary-General to extend the operation of the Commission for a further period not exceeding three months, if he deemed it necessary to enable the Commission to complete its investigation, and requested that he inform the Council accordingly.¹⁵³ In a letter to the President of the Security Council,¹⁵⁴ the Secretary-General subsequently reported that the Commission had become fully operational on 16 June 2005.

Composition

Pursuant to resolution 1595 (2005),¹⁵⁵ 30 investigators from 17 countries as well as external experts were recruited by the Commission.¹⁵⁶ The Commissioner was appointed through an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council.¹⁵⁷

Mandate implementation

Pursuant to resolution 1595 (2005), the mandate of the International Independent Investigation Commission was initially extended, by an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council, for 40 days until 25 October 2005;¹⁵⁸ and then, following a request by the Government of Lebanon,¹⁵⁹ was extended to 15 December 2005.¹⁶⁰ Subsequently, the Council, on the basis of the requests of the Government of Lebanon,¹⁶¹ by a series of resolutions, extended the mandate of the Commission several times, for periods of up to one year, the last until 15 June 2008.¹⁶²

By resolution 1636 (2005), the Council decided that any individuals that the Commission or the Government of Lebanon designated as suspected of involvement in the planning, sponsoring, organizing or perpetrating of the terrorist bombing in Beirut that killed the former Prime Minister of Lebanon and others would be subject to a travel ban and asset freeze.¹⁶³ It also decided that the Commission would have vis-à-vis the Syrian Arab Republic the same rights and authorities, relating to collection of evidence, access to information and witnesses, and facilities to perform its functions, as mentioned in resolution 1595 (2005) in relation to Lebanon; that the Commission should have the authority to determine the location and modalities for interview of Syrian officials and individuals it deemed relevant to the inquiry; and that the Syrian Arab Republic must detain those Syrian officials or individuals whom the Commission considered as suspected of involvement in the planning, sponsoring, organizing or perpetrating of the terrorist act, and make them fully available to the Commission.¹⁶⁴

By resolution 1644 (2005) of 15 December 2005, following the request of the Government of Lebanon,¹⁶⁵ the Council authorized the Commission to extend its technical assistance, as appropriate, to the Lebanese authorities with regard to their investigations of the terrorist attacks perpetrated in Lebanon since 1 October 2004, and requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commission and the Government of Lebanon, to present recommendations to expand the mandate of the Commission to include investigations of those other attacks.¹⁶⁶ By resolution 1686 (2006) of 15 June 2006, the Council supported the intention of the Commission to extend, as it deemed appropriate, its technical assistance to the Lebanese authorities with regard to their investigations into the other terrorist attacks perpetrated in Lebanon since 1 October 2004, and requested the Secretary-General to provide the Commission with the support and resources needed in this regard.¹⁶⁷ Subsequently, through exchanges of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council, following requests by the Government of Lebanon, the Council invited the Commission to extend appropriate technical assistance to the Lebanese authorities in the investigation of the murder of Minister for Industry, Pierre Gemayel, on 21 November 2006, the bombing near the town of Bikfaya on 13 February 2007, which killed 3 people and injured 22, as well as the murders of two Members of Parliament, Walid Eido on 13 June 2007 and Antoine Ghanem on 19 September 2007, and Brigadier General François el Hajj on 12 December 2007.¹⁶⁸

During the period under review, the Commission submitted nine reports on the progress of the investigation.¹⁶⁹

3. Special Tribunal for Lebanon

Establishment

Pursuant to a request from the Government of Lebanon for the Council to set up a tribunal of an international character to try individuals who were found responsible for the assassination on 14 February 2005 of the former Prime Minister of Lebanon, Rafiq Hariri, along with 22 others,¹⁷⁰ the Council, by resolution 1644 (2005) of 15 December 2005, requested the Secretary-General to help the Government of Lebanon to identify the nature and scope of the international assistance needed in that regard.¹⁷¹ On the basis of the recommendations in the report of the Secretary-General,¹⁷² on 29 March 2006, by resolution 1664 (2006), the Council requested the Secretary-General to negotiate an agreement with the Government of Lebanon aimed at establishing a tribunal of an international character based on the highest international standards of criminal justice; and acknowledged that the adoption of the legal basis of, and framework for the tribunal, would not prejudice the gradual phasing-in of its various components and would not predetermine the timing of the commencement of its operations, which would depend on the progress of the investigation.¹⁷³

By a letter dated 21 November 2006 from the President of the Security Council to the Secretary-General,¹⁷⁴ the Council approved the report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of a special tribunal for Lebanon and the agreement annexed to the report, including the statute of the Special Tribunal.¹⁷⁵

In resolution 1757 (2007) of 30 May 2007, the Council referred to the letter from the Prime Minister of Lebanon to the Secretary-General,¹⁷⁶ in which it was recalled that the parliamentary majority had expressed its support for the Tribunal and asked that the Special Tribunal be put into effect; and to the briefing by the Legal Counsel on 2 May 2007, in which he had noted that all parties concerned had reaffirmed their agreement in principle to the establishment of the Tribunal.¹⁷⁷ By that resolution, the Council decided that the provisions of the Agreement between the United Nations and the Lebanese Republic on the establishment of a Special Tribunal for Lebanon would enter into force on 10 June 2007, unless the Government of Lebanon had provided notification under article 19 (1) of the Agreement before that date. It noted that, pursuant to article 19 (2) of the Agreement, the Special Tribunal would commence functioning on a date to be determined by the Secretary-General in consultation with the Government of Lebanon, taking into account the progress of the work of the International Independent Investigation Commission.¹⁷⁸

The Special Tribunal had jurisdiction over persons responsible for the attack of 14 February 2005 resulting in the death of former Lebanese Prime Minister, Rafiq Hariri, and in the death or injury of other persons. If the Tribunal found that other attacks that occurred in Lebanon between 1 October 2004 and 12 December 2005, or any later date decided by the parties and with the consent of the Security Council, were connected to the attack of 14 February 2005, it also had jurisdiction over persons responsible for such attacks.¹⁷⁹

The Special Tribunal consisted of the following organs: the Chambers, the Prosecutor, the Registry and the Defence Office. The Chambers were composed of an international pretrial judge, a Trial Chamber consisting of three judges, two international and one Lebanese, and an Appeals Chamber, consisting of five judges, of whom two were Lebanese and three international. There were also two alternate judges, one Lebanese and one international.¹⁸⁰ The investigation that had already been conducted by the International Independent Investigation Commission was accepted to constitute the core of the Prosecutor's office for the Tribunal.¹⁸¹ The Registry consisted of a Registrar and such other staff as was required and the Registrar for the Tribunal was appointed by the Secretary-General and was a staff member of the United Nations. The Defence Office, which consisted of a head of office and one or more public defenders, was headed by an appointee of the Secretary-General, although it was independent in functioning.¹⁸² The Special Tribunal was seated in the Netherlands.¹⁸³

The Council, by resolution 1534 (2004) of 26 March 2004,¹⁸⁴ requested that the Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda provide to the Council, by 31 May 2004 and every six months thereafter, assessments by their Presidents and Prosecutors, setting out in detail the progress made towards implementation of the completion strategy of the Tribunals, explaining what measures had been taken to implement the completion strategy and what measures remained to be taken, including the transfer of cases involving intermediate- and lower-rank accused to competent national jurisdictions.¹⁸⁵

5. International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991

The International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 established pursuant to Security Council resolution 827 (1993) of 25 May 1993 continued its work during the period under review.

Annexes to the statute

On 20 April 2005, on the recommendation of the Secretary-General,¹⁸⁶ the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, adopted resolution 1597 (2005), by which it decided to amend article 13 ter of the statute of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and allow ad litem judges to be eligible for re-election.¹⁸⁷

On 28 February 2006, by resolution 1660 (2006), the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, decided to amend articles 12 and 13 quater of the statute of the Tribunal to authorize the Secretary-General, at the request of the President of the Tribunal, to appoint reserve judges from among the elected ad litem judges, to be present at each stage of a trial to which they have been appointed and to replace a judge if that judge was unable to continue sitting.¹⁸⁸

Election of judges

In consideration of the nominations for permanent judges of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia received by the Secretary-General¹⁸⁹ and in accordance with article 13 bis, 1 (d), of the statute of the Tribunal, the Council adopted resolution 1567 (2004) of 14 October 2004, by which it established a list of 22 candidates from which the General Assembly could elect 14 permanent judges of the Tribunal.

By resolution 1581 (2005) of 18 January 2005, the Council, upon the recommendations contained in a letter from the Secretary-General dated 6 January 2005,¹⁹⁰ decided to extend the terms of office of nine ad litem judges until the conclusion of cases that they had begun before expiry of their term of office.¹⁹¹

Through two exchanges of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council and a resolution, the Council extended the deadline for nominations of ad litem judges to the

Tribunal three times, the last extension until 7 July 2005.¹⁹²

In consideration of the nominations for ad litem judges of the Tribunal received by the Secretary-General¹⁹³ and in accordance with article 13 ter, 1 (d), of the statute of the Tribunal, the Council adopted resolution 1613 (2005) of 26 July 2005, by which it established a list of 34 candidates, from which the General Assembly could elect 28 ad litem judges of the Tribunal.

Upon the recommendation of the Secretary-General,¹⁹⁴ by resolution 1629 (2005) of 30 September 2005, the Council decided to assign Judge Christine Van Den Wyngaert as a permanent judge to the Mrkšić et al. case, due to commence on 3 October 2005, notwithstanding that her elected term as permanent judge of the Tribunal, in accordance with article 13 bis of the statute, was to begin only on 17 November 2005.

By resolution 1668 (2006) of 10 April 2006, the Council, in response to the request from the Secretary-General in his identical letters to the President of the Council and the President of the General Assembly dated 27 March 2006,¹⁹⁵ decided to authorize Judge Joaquín Canivell to continue to sit on the Krajišnik case beyond April 2006 and see the case through its completion, notwithstanding the fact that the cumulative period of his service in the Tribunal would then exceed three years.

Appointment of the Prosecutor

On 14 September 2007, in accordance with article 16 (4) of the statute of the Tribunal and having considered a letter from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹⁹⁶ the Council adopted resolution 1775 (2007), by which it extended for a final period the appointment of Ms. Carla Del Ponte as Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia with effect from 15 September to 31 December 2007.

On 28 November 2007, in accordance with article 16 (4) of the statute of the Tribunal, the Council adopted resolution 1786 (2007), by which it appointed the Secretary-General's nominee,¹⁹⁷ Mr. Serge Brammertz, as Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia with effect from 1 January 2008 for a four-year term, which was subject to an earlier termination by the Security Council upon completion of the work of the Tribunal.

Reporting

During the period under review, in accordance with article 34 of the statute of the Tribunal, the President of the Tribunal submitted through the Secretary-General four annual reports of the Tribunal to the Security Council and the General Assembly.¹⁹⁸

6. International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994

The International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994, established pursuant to Security Council resolution 955 (1994), of 8 November 1994, continued its work during the period under review.

Election of judges

The Council, in response to a request by the Secretary-General,¹⁹⁹ adopted resolution 1684 (2006) on 13 June 2006, by which it extended the term of office of 11 permanent judges of the Tribunal until 31 December 2008.

By resolution 1705 (2006) of 29 August 2006, pursuant to a letter from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council,²⁰⁰ the Council, notwithstanding the fact that, in accordance with article 12 ter of the statute, her elected term as ad litem judge of the Tribunal was ending on 24 June 2007, authorized Judge Solomy Balungi to continue serving as judge in the Butare case until its completion.

By resolution 1717 (2006) of 13 October 2006, the Council, recalling resolution 1684 (2006), by which it extended the terms of the 11 permanent judges serving at the Tribunal, and taking note of the letter dated 2 October 2006 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council,²⁰¹ decided to extend until 31 December 2008 the term of office of the 18 ad litem judges of the Tribunal, thereby allowing several of these to serve beyond the cumulative period of service provided for under article 12 ter of the statute.

Appointment of the Prosecutor

On 14 September 2007, in accordance with article 15 (4) of the statute of the Tribunal, the Council adopted resolution 1774 (2007), by which it reappointed the Secretary-General's nominee,²⁰² Mr. Hassan Bubacar Jallow, as Prosecutor of the Tribunal with effect from 15 September 2007 for a four-year term, subject to an earlier termination by the Council upon completion of the work of the Tribunal.

Reporting

During the period under review, in accordance with article 34 of the statute of the Tribunal, the President of the Tribunal submitted through the Secretary-General four annual reports of the Tribunal to the Security Council and General Assembly.²⁰³

E. Ad hoc commissions

During the period under review, the Security Council continued to oversee one ad hoc commission, the United Nations Compensation Commission established pursuant to resolutions 687 (1991) and 692 (1991), and terminated the mandate of another, the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission established pursuant to resolution 1284 (1999) in 2000. It also established a Commission of Experts to Review the Prosecution of Serious Violations of Human Rights in Timor-Leste (then East Timor) in 1999.

1. United Nations Compensation Commission established pursuant to resolutions 687 (1991) and 692 (1991)

During the period under review, the United Nations Compensation Commission, established by resolution 687 (1991) under Chapter VII of the Charter, continued to verify and value the claims of loss, damage and injury to foreign Governments, nationals and corporations resulting from Iraq's unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait, and to administer the payment of compensation.

Mandate implementation

By resolution 1546 (2004) of 8 June 2004, the Council decided that, upon dissolution of the Coalition Provisional Authority, appropriate arrangements should be made for the continuation of deposits to the Compensation Fund of the proceeds referred to in paragraph 21 of resolution 1483 (2003).²⁰⁴

2. United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission

During the period under review, the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC), established by resolution 1284 (1999) under Chapter VII of the Charter, continued to verify the compliance of Iraq with its obligations under paragraphs 8, 9 and 10 of resolution 687 (1991) to be rid of its weapons of mass destruction and to operate a system of ongoing monitoring and verification to ascertain that Iraq did not reacquire the same weapons prohibited to it by the Security Council.

By resolution 1762 (2007) of 29 June 2007, the Council decided to terminate immediately the mandate of UNMOVIC. It requested the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to provide for the appropriate disposition of the archives of UNMOVIC and other property under arrangements ensuring, in particular, that sensitive proliferation information or information provided in confidence by Member States was kept under strict control, and further requested that the Secretary-General inform the Security Council within three months on steps taken in this regard.

By a letter dated 21 November 2007 from the President of the Security Council to the Secretary-General,²⁰⁵ the Council approved of the overall archiving procedure as set out in the report of the Secretary-General of 27 September 2007.²⁰⁶ The members of the Council also requested monthly updates on closing down UNMOVIC in a manner consistent with resolution 1762 (2007).

3. Commission of Experts to Review the Prosecution of Serious Violations of Human Rights in Timor-Leste (then East Timor) in 1999

By resolution 1573 (2004) of 16 November 2004, the Council reaffirmed the need to fight against impunity, and in that regard took note of the Secretary-General's intention to continue to explore possible ways to address this issue with a view to making proposals as appropriate.²⁰⁷

Through an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council dated 11 and 26 January 2005,²⁰⁸ the Council took note of the intention of the Secretary-General to establish an independent commission of three experts to conduct an assessment on the prosecution of serious crimes committed in East Timor in 1999 and provide recommendations in that regard. The Commission would conduct a thorough assessment of the progress made by the Indonesian judicial process involving the ad hoc Human Rights Tribunal in Jakarta, and the serious crimes process, involving the Serious Crimes Unit and the Special Panels for Serious Crimes in Dili. The Commission of Experts was tasked, inter alia, with assessing the effective functioning of the two judicial processes, identifying obstacles and difficulties encountered and evaluating the extent to which they have been able to achieve justice and accountability for the crimes committed in East Timor. It would undertake to recommend further measures and/or mechanisms as appropriate so that the perpetrators were held accountable, justice was secured for the victims and the people of Timor-Leste, and reconciliation was promoted. The Commission of Experts was requested to consider ways in which its analysis could be of assistance to the Truth and Friendship Commission, which Indonesia and Timor-Leste had agreed to establish. The Secretary-General informed the Council of his appointments to the Commission in a letter dated 17 February 2005.²⁰⁹

By resolution 1599 (2005) of 28 April 2005, the Council called on all parties to cooperate fully with the work of the Secretary-General's Commission of Experts, and looked forward to the Commission's upcoming report exploring possible ways to address this issue, including ways of assisting the Truth and Friendship Commission which Indonesia and Timor-Leste had agreed to establish.²¹⁰ By an exchange of letters dated 24 June and 28 September 2005 between the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council,²¹¹ the Council took note of the full report of the Commission of Experts²¹² and requested the Secretary-General, in close consultation with his Special Representative for Timor-Leste, to submit a report on justice and reconciliation for Timor-Leste with a practically feasible approach, taking into account the report of the Commission of Experts, as well as the views expressed by Indonesia and Timor-Leste. By resolution 1704 (2006) of 25 August 2006, the Council took note of the findings contained in the report of the Commission of Experts and welcomed the efforts so far by Indonesia and Timor-Leste in pursuance of truth and friendship, encouraged the two Governments and the Commissioners to make every

F. Peacekeeping operations, political missions and regional offices

As stated by the Secretary-General in his report on the work of the Organization of 2007,²¹⁴ the period under review saw a surge in the complexity of peacekeeping activity. By 2007, the number of deployed personnel in peace operations and other field missions and offices had grown to over 100,000. A number of new approaches and types of missions were introduced, including the first joint African Union-United Nations mission and integrated offices, such as the United Nations Integrated Offices in Burundi and Sierra Leone, which brought together the work of different United Nations agencies and functions. In addition to the deployment of peacekeeping missions to support the transition from conflict, monitor ceasefires and other tasks, the Security Council continued, between 2004 and 2007, with its peacebuilding efforts to provide support to countries recovering from conflict. The record for the period examined below displays a number of successfully completed mandates of missions such as the United Nations Operation in Burundi and the United Nations Tajikistan Office of Peacebuilding, as well as the establishment of new, or the reinforcement of existing, missions.

From 2004 to 2007, the Council established, often acting under Chapter VII of the Charter for the entire mandate or part of it, seven new peacekeeping operations — in Burundi,²¹⁵ the Central African Republic and Chad,²¹⁶ Côte d'Ivoire,²¹⁷ Darfur,²¹⁸ the Sudan,²¹⁹ Haiti²²⁰ and Timor-Leste.²²¹ During the same period, the Council further authorized the establishment of six political missions — in Burundi,²²² Sierra Leone,²²³ the Sudan,²²⁴ Bougainville,²²⁵ Nepal²²⁶ and Timor-Leste.²²⁷ The Council also authorized nine operations to be terminated or transitioned to new peacekeeping or political missions.²²⁸ In some cases, the Council authorized significant changes and expansions in the mandates of peacekeeping operations, including a number of those established during an earlier period.

Twenty peacekeeping operations and 14 political missions are considered below, by geographic region, as well as two regional offices in a separate section. The studies of these operations and missions in each region are generally in the order of their establishment, while interlinked operations are dealt with consecutively. As a more detailed account of Council proceedings, including deliberations by the Council on the specific agenda item and the content of related reports of the Secretary-General, is set out in chapter VIII of this volume, this section focuses on procedures of the Council concerning the establishment, mandate, composition, implementation of mandate, and termination or transition of peacekeeping operations and political missions during the period under review. In accordance with the general principles set out in General Assembly resolutions 874 (S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and 3101 (XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, peacekeeping operations during the period under review were financed through assessed contributions by Member States, except for the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization and the United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan which

1. United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) established pursuant to resolution 690 (1991), continued its efforts in support of the implementation of the Settlement Plan and agreements adopted by the Government of Morocco and the Frente Polisario to hold a free, fair and impartial referendum for self-determination that would allow the people of Western Sahara to decide the future status of the territory.

By a series of resolutions,²²⁹ adopted on the basis of the Secretary-General's reports,²³⁰ the Security Council successively extended the mandate of MINURSO for additional periods of three months to six months, the last until 30 April 2008.

By resolution 1541 (2004) of 29 April 2004, the Council requested the Secretary-General to provide an evaluation of the Mission's size necessary to carry out its mandated tasks with a view to its possible reduction.²³¹ The Secretary-General, in his report of 20 October 2004, responded by providing a review of the Mission's strength with two options and concluded that the Mission's military component as then structured and staffed provided an essential element of confidence-building and conflict management on the ground and that no reduction should come at the expense of the capacity and credibility of the United Nations operational and political role.²³²

By resolution 1570 (2004) of 28 October 2004, the Council requested the Secretary-General to report on the Mission's size and concept of operations, with further detail on the options discussed in his above-mentioned report on the possible reduction of MINURSO staff, including civilian and administrative personnel.²³³ In response, the Secretary-General in his report of 19 April 2005 recommended that the size of the Mission not be reduced at that time, given that MINURSO should be in a position to provide an adequate response and ensure effective ceasefire monitoring.²³⁴

By resolution 1598 (2005) of 28 April 2005, the Council looked forward to receiving the results of the comprehensive review of the structure of the administrative and other civilian components of the Mission, as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 April 2005. In his report of 13 October 2005, the Secretary-General informed the Council that the outcome of the review included recommendations aimed at reconfiguring the civilian structure to better support the current mandated activities, ensure greater integration between the military and civilian components and enhance the management of MINURSO by reducing the civilian component by 57 posts (47 international and 10 local), to be offset by an increase of 18 international posts and creation of 24 United Nations Volunteer posts. The recommendations would be implemented in a phased manner and were expected to be completed by mid-2006.²³⁵ In his subsequent reports, the Secretary-General reported the implementation of the restructuring of the civilian and administrative components.²³⁶

2. United Nations Office in Burundi

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Office in Burundi (UNOB), established in November 1993, continued to support initiatives aimed at promoting peace and reconciliation in that country, including the implementation of the Arusha Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation in Burundi of 28 April 2000.²³⁷

Termination/transition into a new mission

In his report of 16 March 2004, the Secretary-General recommended that, building on the capacities of the civilian component of UNOB, the Council establish a multidimensional United Nations peacekeeping operation to support the peace process in Burundi.²³⁸ By resolution 1545 (2004) of 21 May 2004, the Council welcomed the recommendations in that report and authorized the deployment of a new peacekeeping operation in Burundi, the United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB), effective 1 June 2004.²³⁹ As from that date, UNOB was integrated into the new mission.

3. United Nations Operation in Burundi

Establishment, mandate and composition

In letters addressed to the President of the Security Council dated 15 and 17 March 2004, the Government of Burundi and the Chairperson of the Commission of the African Union, respectively, proposed the deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping mission in Burundi to continue to support the consolidation of the peace process.²⁴⁰ In his report dated 16 March 2004, the Secretary-General recommended the authorization for the deployment of a multidimensional United Nations peacekeeping operation, which would comprise a military component, based on the reassignment of the African Mission in Burundi²⁴¹ with a total troop strength of 5,650, as well as a civilian component which would build on the capacities of UNOB and consist of various elements.²⁴²

On 21 May 2004, by resolution 1545 (2004), taking note of the above-mentioned letters, the Council welcomed the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and decided to authorize, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, for an initial period of six months from 1 June 2004, the deployment of the United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB).²⁴³

By resolution 1545 (2004), the Council authorized ONUB to use all necessary means to carry out the following mandate: (a) to ensure the respect of ceasefire agreements, through monitoring their implementation and investigating their violations; (b) to promote the re-establishment of confidence between the Burundian forces present, monitor and provide security at their pre-disarmament assembly sites, collect and secure weapons and military materiel to dispose of it as appropriate, and contribute to the dismantling of militias as called for in the ceasefire agreements; (c) to carry out the disarmament and demobilization portions of the national programme of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of combatants; (d) to monitor the quartering of the armed forces of Burundi and their heavy weapons, as well as the disarmament and demobilization of the elements that needed to be disarmed and demobilized; (e) to monitor, to the extent possible, the illegal flow of arms across the national borders, including Lake Tanganyika, in cooperation with the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) and, as appropriate, with the group of experts referred to in resolution 1533 (2004); (f) to contribute to the creation of the necessary security conditions for the provision of humanitarian assistance, and facilitate the voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons; (g) to contribute to the successful completion of the electoral process stipulated in the Arusha Agreement, by ensuring a secure environment for free, transparent and peaceful elections; (h) without prejudice to the responsibility of the Transitional Government of Burundi, to protect civilians under imminent threat of physical violence; and (i) to ensure the protection of United Nations personnel, facilities, installations and equipment, as well as the security and freedom of movement of ONUB personnel, and to coordinate and conduct, as appropriate, mine action activities in support of its mandate.²⁴⁴

ONUB was also mandated to provide advice and assistance to the Transitional Government and authorities to contribute to their efforts (a) to monitor the borders of Burundi, with special attention to refugees, as well as to movements of combatants, especially in Cibitoké Province; (b) to carry out institutional reforms as well as the constitution of the integrated national defence and internal security forces and, in particular, the training and monitoring of the police, while ensuring that they were democratic and fully respected human rights and fundamental freedoms; (c) to proceed with electoral activities; (d) to complete implementation of the reform of the judiciary and correction system, in accordance with the Arusha Agreement; and (e) to ensure, in close liaison with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the promotion and protection of human rights, with particular attention to women, children and vulnerable persons, and investigate human rights violations to put an end to impunity.²⁴⁵

In addition, the Council decided that ONUB should cooperate with the Government and authorities of Burundi, as well as their international partners, to ensure the coherence of their work, in assisting the Government and authorities of Burundi in (a) extending State authority and utilities throughout the territory, including civilian police and judicial institutions; and (b) carrying out the national programme of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of combatants and members of their families, including those coming from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in liaison with the Government of that country and MONUC, and with particular attention to the specific needs of women and children.²⁴⁶ Furthermore, the Council decided that ONUB should carry out its mandate in close cooperation with MONUC in particular concerning monitoring and prevention of movements of combatants across the border between Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as well as the implementation of the disarmament and demobilization programmes.²⁴⁷

Also by resolution 1545 (2004) the Council decided that ONUB should consist of a maximum of 5,650 military personnel, including 200 observers and 125 staff officers, and up to 120 civilian police personnel, and would be headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General.²⁴⁸ The appointments of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Burundi and Head of ONUB as well as the Force Commander were confirmed through exchanges of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council.²⁴⁹

Mandate implementation

During the period under review, the mandate of ONUB was extended by a series of resolutions adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter for periods of up to six months until its termination on 31 December 2006,²⁵⁰ in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary-General.²⁵¹

Following the massacre of refugees from the Democratic Republic of the Congo which had occurred in Gatumba, Burundi, on 13 August 2004, in a statement by the President of 15 August 2004, the Council requested ONUB and MONUC to offer their assistance to the Burundian and Congolese authorities with a view to facilitating the investigation and to strengthening the security of vulnerable populations.²⁵²

By resolution 1650 (2005) of 21 December 2005, the Council authorized the temporary redeployment of military and civilian police personnel among ONUB and MONUC, subject to the conditions that (a) the Secretary-General should receive the prior agreement of the countries contributing military and civilian police personnel and of the Governments concerned, (b) the Secretary-General should inform the Council in advance of his intention to proceed with such a redeployment, and in particular of its proposed scope and duration and

(c) any such redeployment should require a corresponding prior decision of the Council, while underlining that any such transfer should not have the effect of extending the deployment of personnel after the expiration of the mandate of their original mission, unless the Council decided otherwise.²⁵³

By resolution 1669 (2006) of 10 April 2006, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council decided to authorize the Secretary-General to redeploy temporarily a maximum of one infantry battalion, a military hospital and up to 50 military observers from ONUB to MONUC, until 1 July 2006, in accordance with resolution 1650 (2005).²⁵⁴ This authorization was extended until 30 September 2006 by resolution 1692 (2006) of 30 June 2006.²⁵⁵

Following the successful completion of the transitional process, in a report dated 21 November 2005, the Secretary-General proposed, in response to a request from the Government of Burundi, that the military component of ONUB could begin its drawdown in December with the withdrawal of one national contingent. The phased withdrawal would result in a reduction of approximately 2,000 personnel, or 40 per cent of the authorized strength of ONUB. He also proposed that the number of military observers deployed throughout the country would be reduced from the authorized strength of 200 to 120 by the end of April 2006.²⁵⁶

By a letter dated 23 November 2005 to the President of the Council, the representative of Burundi, inter alia, agreed with the drawdown of ONUB from December 2005 to April 2006 and outlined what his Government wished for the remainder of the ONUB mandate.²⁵⁷

By resolution 1650 (2005), the Council took note of the position of the Government of Burundi on the evolution of the mandate of ONUB, as recorded in its letter mentioned above, and of the above-mentioned recommendations of the Secretary-General.²⁵⁸ The Council also welcomed the readiness expressed by the Secretary-General to continue to consult closely with the Government of Burundi, with a view to determining, on the basis of the recommendations referred to in the letter of 23 November 2005 from the representative of Burundi, the modalities for implementing a gradual disengagement of the United Nations peacekeeping presence and of an adjustment to its mandate, taking into account all the circumstances, as well as the merits of a United Nations contribution and support to the consolidation of peace in Burundi.²⁵⁹

In his report of 21 March 2006, the Secretary-General noted that, subsequent to consultations with the Government of Burundi as requested in resolution 1650 (2005), it was decided that the disengagement of ONUB would be completed by 31 December 2006, and the liquidation of assets and the repatriation of all support staff completed by mid-2007. During this period, ONUB would continue to carry out its mandated tasks concerning the monitoring of Burundi's borders with the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the illicit cross-border movement of arms and personnel as well as perform other tasks related to training for the Burundi National Police; disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; security sector reform; human rights and transitional justice; and mine action, as it progressively transferred responsibilities to the Government.²⁶⁰ The Council approved those recommendations in a statement by the President on 23 March 2006.²⁶¹

Termination/transition to a new mission

By resolution 1692 (2006), the Council, in extending the mandate of ONUB for a final period until 31 December 2006, welcomed the Secretary-General's intention to establish an integrated office of the United Nations in Burundi, following the conclusion of the mandate of ONUB.²⁶²

By resolution 1719 (2006) of 25 October 2006, the Council expressed its gratitude to ONUB for its contribution to the successful completion of the transitional process in Burundi and peace in the region.²⁶³

In November 2006, through an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Council, in accordance with the requests of the Government of Burundi and the South African Facilitation of the Burundi peace process, the Council concurred with the Secretary-General's intention to extend the deployment of the remaining two infantry battalions and supporting military units of ONUB, which had been expected to depart in November and December, until 31 December 2006. This slight adjustment was aimed to help assure the early and uninterrupted implementation of the comprehensive ceasefire agreement signed on 7 September 2006 and would not affect the expiration of the overall mandate of ONUB.²⁶⁴ The mandate of ONUB was successfully concluded on 31 December 2006.

4. United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi

Establishment, mandate and composition

In his report of 14 August 2006 and the addendum thereto, as requested in resolution 1692 (2006), the Secretary-General outlined the proposed structure, mandate and requisite resources for a small United Nations integrated office in Burundi following the withdrawal of ONUB.²⁶⁵

On 25 October 2006, by resolution 1719 (2006), the Council welcomed the recommendation of the Secretary-General on the establishment of the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi (BINUB). The Council decided to establish BINUB for an initial period of 12 months commencing on 1 January 2007 to support the Government of Burundi in its effort towards long-term peace and stability throughout the peace consolidation phase in Burundi, including by ensuring coherence and coordination of the United Nations agencies in Burundi.²⁶⁶

As to its mandate, the Council requested²⁶⁷ that BINUB focus on and support the Government of Burundi, in coordination with donors and taking account of the agreement concluded on 24 May 2006 by the Government of Burundi and the Secretary-General and of the role of the Peacebuilding Commission, in the areas of (a) peace consolidation and democratic governance;²⁶⁸ (b) disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and reform of the security sector;²⁶⁹ (c) promotion and protection of human rights and measures to end impunity;²⁷⁰ and (d) donor and United Nations agency coordination.²⁷¹ The Council also stressed the need for cooperation, within the limits of their respective capacities and current mandates, between BINUB and MONUC.²⁷²

Pursuant to resolution 1719 (2006), BINUB was headed by an Executive Representative of the Secretary-General, who also served as the United Nations Resident Coordinator and Humanitarian Coordinator, and as the Resident Representative of the ²⁶⁸ The specific tasks in this area were (i) strengthening the capacity of national institutions and civil society to address the root causes of conflict and to prevent, manage and resolve internal conflicts; (ii) strengthening good governance and the transparency and accountability of public institutions; (iii) promotion of freedom of the press and strengthening the legal and regulatory framework for the media and communications, and enhancing the professionalization of the media; and (iv) consolidation of the rule of law.

²⁶⁹ The specific tasks in this area were (i) support for the implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement signed at Dar es Salaam on 7 September 2006; (ii) support for the development of a national plan for reform of the security sector and the provision of technical assistance for its implementation and enhancement of the professionalization of the National Defence Force of Burundi; (iii) support for the completion of the national programme for the demobilization and reintegration of former combatants; and (iv) support for efforts to combat the proliferation of small arms and light weapons.

United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).²⁷³ In addition to the Executive Representative's office, BINUB comprised four integrated sections covering the key areas of its mandate, namely, (a) peace and governance; (b) security sector reform and small arms; (c) human rights and justice, comprising up to 20 international personnel; and (d) public information and communications. Those substantive sections of BINUB were complemented by national officers and United Nations Volunteers as well as administrative personnel.²⁷⁴ The appointment of the Executive Representative for Burundi was confirmed through an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Council.²⁷⁵

By resolution 1791 (2007) of 19 December 2007, having considered the report of the Secretary-General,²⁷⁶ the Council decided to extend until 31 December 2008 the mandate of BINUB as set out in resolution 1719 (2006).²⁷⁷

5. United Nations Political Office for Somalia

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS), established on 15 April 1995, continued to help to advance the cause of peace and reconciliation through contacts with Somali leaders, civic organizations and the States and organizations concerned; monitor the situation in Somalia; and keep the Council informed in particular about developments.

Mandate implementation

During the period under review, the mandate of UNPOS was extended twice, through exchanges of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Council, for periods of two years, the last of which was for the biennium 2008-2009.²⁷⁸

In his report of 8 October 2004, the Secretary-General observed that, at the stage of progress in the Somali peace process, there was likely to be a call for an expanded peacebuilding role and presence for the United Nations, in order that it might assist the Somali parties in implementing their agreement. At the same time, he stated that it was clear that any enhanced role for the Organization in Somalia needed to be incremental and should be based on the outcome of discussions with the new government. Therefore, he proposed that the resources available to UNPOS for 2004-2005 be maintained at the current level.²⁷⁹ In its presidential statement of 26 October 2004, the Council agreed with that assessment of the Secretary-General and looked forward to his recommendations in that regard.²⁸⁰

In his report of 18 February 2005, the Secretary-General recommended that, as requested by the Transitional Federal Government, the regional countries and the international donor community, UNPOS take the lead in coordinating support to the Government to implement the agreements reached at the Somali National Reconciliation Conference and establish peace and stability in Somalia. He stated that such a role would include (a) assisting in the continuous dialogue among Somali parties for reconciliation; (b) assisting in the effort to address the issue of "Somaliland"; (c) coordinating support for the peace process with the neighbours of Somalia and other international partners; and (d) chairing the Coordination and Monitoring Committee, as well as playing a leading political role in peacebuilding activities in Somalia. The staff of UNPOS would need to be augmented in the key areas of political and military liaison, information, civil police, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and human rights and UNPOS would also have to provide secretariat services to the Committee. Considering those new tasks and the need to co-chair the Committee with the Prime Minister of the Transitional Federal Government, the Secretary-General recommended appointing a Special Representative, at the Assistant Secretary-General level, to lead the expanded United Nations role, who would be assisted by an augmented staff at UNPOS, including a senior deputy.²⁸¹ In a statement by the President of 7 March 2005,²⁸² the Council welcomed the efforts of UNPOS and its leading role in coordinating support for the Transitional Federal Government mentioned above and took note of the need to expand the United Nations presence as proposed by the Secretary-General. Subsequently, the appointment of the Special Representative for Somalia and Head of UNPOS was confirmed through an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Council.²⁸³

In his report of 16 June 2005, the Secretary-General noted that, as part of the expansion of UNPOS, a military adviser would join the Office's staff, one of whose tasks would be to liaise with military counterparts in the African Union and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, which were planning a peace support mission for Somalia, and other relevant institutions.²⁸⁴ In a statement by the President of 14 July 2005, the Council welcomed the steps being taken to strengthen the capacity of UNPOS.²⁸⁵

In a letter dated 16 November 2005 to the President of the Council, the Secretary-General held that during 2006 the main objectives of UNPOS would be to continue efforts to foster inclusive dialogue and reconciliation among the transitional federal institutions of Somalia, support the establishment of governance structures and institutions and develop plans of action for them in close coordination with the Transitional Federal Government, the United Nations country team and the international community. UNPOS would also coordinate the political and financial support of the international community to the nascent Somali institutions. Given the essential role of UNPOS at that critical juncture of the Somali peace process, the Secretary-General added that it was his intention to continue those activities for the biennium 2006-2007; the Council took note of that intention.²⁸⁶

By resolution 1772 (2007) of 20 August 2007 adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council requested the Secretary-General to continue and intensify his efforts to strengthen the National Reconciliation Congress and, more widely, promote an ongoing all-inclusive political process. In this context, the Council requested him to provide an assessment of further measures that might be required to strengthen the ability of UNPOS to fulfil the enhanced role as envisaged, including the possibility of relocation from Nairobi to Mogadishu and any security measures that might be necessary for such a move.²⁸⁷ In response to that request, in August 2007, the level of the post of Head of UNPOS was upgraded to that of Under-Secretary-General through an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Council.²⁸⁸

Furthermore, in a letter dated 20 September 2007 to the President of the Council, the Secretary-General recommended that during 2008 UNPOS be provided with the necessary resources to implement an integrated United Nations approach for Somalia leading to a common United Nations peacebuilding strategy, which would include (a) the facilitation of mediation with all Somali parties; (b) the coordination of United Nations political, security, electoral, humanitarian and development support to the Somali transitional federal institutions; and (c) collaboration with external partners engaged in facilitation efforts.²⁸⁹

In the letter dated 24 December 2007 to the President of the Council, the Secretary-General reiterated those objectives and indicated that UNPOS would also support the development of a road map for the Somali peace process in concert with the Transitional Federal Government, the United Nations country team and the international community and work closely with United Nations Headquarters on contingency planning for a possible United Nations peacekeeping mission.²⁹⁰ In a letter dated 27 December 2007 from its President, the Council took note of the intention expressed by the Secretary-General.²⁹¹

6. United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Guinea-Bissau

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNOGBIS), established in March 1999 following consultations between the Secretary-General and Security Council, continued its activities in support of the country's efforts to ensure the full restoration of constitutional rule in accordance with the provisions of the Political Transition Charter of 28 September 2003, as well as its post-transitional efforts towards national reconciliation and stabilization.

Mandate implementation

During the period under review, the Council extended the mandate of UNOGBIS on four occasions on the basis of the recommendations of the Secretary-General,²⁹² by either a resolution or exchanges of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Council, for periods of 12 months, the last until 31 December 2008.²⁹³

By resolution 1580 (2004) of 22 December 2004, the Council, welcoming the recommendations made by the Secretary-General in his report of 15 December 2004,²⁹⁴ decided to revise the mandate of UNOGBIS to encompass the following tasks: (a) to support all efforts to enhance political dialogue, to promote national reconciliation and respect for the rule of law and human rights; (b) to support the efforts of all national stakeholders to ensure the full restoration of constitutional normalcy in accordance with the provisions of the Political Transition Charter of 28 September 2003, including through the holding of free and transparent presidential elections; (c) to assist with those elections in close cooperation with the United Nations country team and other international partners; (d) to assist in strengthening the national mechanisms for conflict prevention during the remainder of the transitional period and beyond; (e) to encourage and support national efforts to reform the security sector and to attract international support for those efforts; (f) to encourage the Government to fully implement the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects;²⁹⁵ (g) to work closely with the Resident Coordinator and the United Nations country team to mobilize international financial assistance to enable the Government to meet its immediate financial and logistical needs and implement its national reconstruction and social and economic development strategy; and (h) within the framework of a comprehensive peacebuilding strategy, to actively support efforts of the United Nations system and Guinea-Bissau's other partners towards strengthening State institutions and structures to enable them to uphold the rule of law, respect of human rights and the unimpeded and independent functioning of the executive, legislative and judicial branches of government.²⁹⁶

By resolution 1580 (2004), the Council also requested the Secretary-General to conduct a review of UNOGBIS with a view to adjusting its capacities to meet the requirements of its revised mandate.²⁹⁷ In response to this request, in his report of 16 March 2005, the Secretary-General recommended that, within the framework of its revised mandate as outlined in resolution 1580 (2004), UNOGBIS focus on the following activities: (a) to promote political dialogue with a view to generating a self-sustainable process of consensus-building on critical national issues; (b) to develop, as a first priority, stable civil-military relations through a profound reform of the armed forces as an institution subordinate to civilian authority; (c) to promote implementation of the Programme of Action on Small Arms as an urgent priority; (d) to advance a comprehensive and integrated United Nations peacebuilding strategy, under UNOGBIS coordination and with the support of the United Nations country team as a whole; and (e) to adjust the use of its available human and financial resources as well as to seek supplementary resources in order to respond more effectively to the requirements of the revised mandate, including the creation of new posts.²⁹⁸

Following the successful holding of the presidential elections in Guinea-Bissau, in a statement by the President of 19 August 2005, the Council invited the Secretary-General to present recommendations regarding updating of the UNOGBIS mandate and its role in the consolidation of peace and stability in Guinea-Bissau in the post-transition period.²⁹⁹ In his report of 12 September 2005, the Secretary-General recommended that the mandate of

UNOGBIS be revised: (a) to support efforts to consolidate constitutional rule, to enhance political dialogue and to promote national reconciliation and respect for the rule of law and human rights; (b) to assist in strengthening the capacity of national institutions to maintain constitutional order, to prevent and manage conflict and to consolidate peace and democracy; (c) to encourage and support national efforts to reform the security sector, including the development of stable civil-military relations; (d) to encourage the Government to fully implement the Programme of Action on Small Arms; (e) within the framework of a comprehensive peacebuilding strategy, to work closely with the Resident Coordinator and the United Nations country team to mobilize international financial assistance to enable the Government to meet its immediate financial and logistical needs and to implement its national reconstruction and social and economic development strategy; and (f) to enhance cooperation and coordination with the African Union, the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries, and other international partners, as well as inter-mission cooperation. The emphasis of the revised mandate would be on initiatives that met the requirements of self-sustainability and national ownership; the developments of synergies with United Nations agencies and other international actors, political dialogue, governance, human rights, security sector reform and resource mobilization.³⁰⁰ In addition, he recommended that the Office's resource base be adjusted, as outlined in his report of 16 March 2005.³⁰¹ In December 2005, the recommendations of the Secretary-General on the revision of the mandate were approved through an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Council.³⁰²

In his letter dated 8 December 2006 to the President of the Council, the Secretary-General, reiterating recommendations to extend the mandate of UNOGBIS in his earlier reports, stated that the proposed extension would allow UNOGBIS to operate under a streamlined mandate highlighting mediation and good offices functions aimed at promoting dialogue and reconciliation in order to reduce current divisive and polarizing pressures hampering the restoration of normalcy. The revised mandate of

UNOGBIS would focus on (a) supporting national reconciliation and dialogue; (b) assisting with security sector reform; (c) promoting respect for the rule of law and human rights; (d) mainstreaming a gender perspective into peacebuilding, in line with resolution 1325 (2000); (e) promoting the peaceful settlement of disputes; (f) helping to mobilize international assistance reconstruction efforts; (g) facilitating efforts to curb proliferation of small arms and light weapons; and (h) enhancing cooperation with the African Union, ECOWAS, the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries, the European Union and other international partners.³⁰³ In a letter from its President, the Council took note of the proposal.³⁰⁴

In his report dated 20 March 2007, the Secretary-General informed the Council that, on 5 December 2006, the President of Guinea-Bissau had requested that UNOGBIS and the United Nations country team be transformed into an integrated office.³⁰⁵ In a statement of the President dated 19 October 2007, the Council requested the Secretary-General to present proposals on how best the United Nations could provide effective assistance in an integrated and holistic manner to national efforts in order to contribute to the sustainable stabilization.³⁰⁶ In a letter to the President dated 28 November 2007,³⁰⁷ the Secretary-General proposed a slight revision of the mandate of UNOGBIS, which was subsequently approved by the Council in a letter from its President.³⁰⁸ UNOGBIS was given the additional mandate to facilitate efforts to combat drug and human trafficking and organized crime and assist with the holding of credible and transparent legislative elections in 2008, in close cooperation with the United Nations country team and other international partners. The Secretary-General also indicated his intention, following the holding of credible and transparent legislative elections in 2008, to explore the possibility of transforming UNOGBIS into an integrated mission in Guinea-Bissau to provide a holistic approach to addressing the complex and multidimensional situation facing Guinea-Bissau, and to make recommendations thereon to the Council.³⁰⁷

7. United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL), established pursuant to resolution 1270 (1999), continued, with a mandate under Chapter VII of the Charter, to use all necessary means to assist the Government of Sierra Leone to extend its authority, restore law and order, stabilize the situation progressively throughout the entire country, and to assist in the promotion of a political process, which should lead to a renewed disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and the holding of free and fair elections. The Council had by resolution 1492 (2003) approved a plan for the phased drawdown of the Mission.

Mandate implementation

During the period under review, on the recommendations of the Secretary-General,³⁰⁹ the Council extended the mandate of UNAMSIL by a series of resolutions,³¹⁰ for periods of six to nine months, until its termination on 31 December 2005.

By resolution 1537 (2004) of 30 March 2004, the Council welcomed the Secretary-General's intention to adjust the timetable for the drawdown of UNAMSIL during 2004,³¹¹ in order to ensure a more gradual reduction in its military strength and decided that a residual UNAMSIL presence would remain in Sierra Leone, for an initial period of six months from 1 January 2005, reduced from the December 2004 level of 5,000 troops, to a new ceiling of 3,250 troops, 141 military observers and 80 United Nations civilian police personnel by 28 February 2005. The Council also requested UNAMSIL to share its experience with the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL) and the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI) and to carry out its mandate in close liaison with them, especially in the prevention of movements of arms and combatants across borders and in the implementation of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes.³¹²

By resolution 1562 (2004) of 17 September 2004, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, decided that the residual UNAMSIL presence which should remain in Sierra Leone from 1 January 2005 should carry out military and civilian police tasks to (a) monitor the overall security situation, support the Sierra Leone armed forces and police in patrolling the border and diamond-mining areas and monitor the growing capacity of the Sierra Leone security sector; (b) support the Sierra Leone police in maintaining internal security, including for the Special Court for Sierra Leone while the Mission remained deployed in Sierra Leone; (c) assist the Sierra Leone police with its programme of recruitment, training and mentoring designed to strengthen further the capacity and resources of the police; and (d) protect United Nations personnel, installations and equipment and ensure the security and freedom of movement of United Nations personnel, within its capabilities and its areas of deployment. Its civilian tasks were to (a) monitor the repatriation, reception, resettlement and reintegration of Sierra Leonean ex-combatants from abroad; (b) monitor, investigate, report and promote the observance of human rights; (c) disseminate information on the mandate and purpose of the mission and publicize the Government's primary responsibility for national security, including through United Nations radio; and (d) monitor progress towards consolidation of State authority throughout the country. The Council also authorized the residual Mission presence to use all necessary means to carry out its mandate, within its capabilities and its areas of deployment.³¹³ The Council further expressed its intention to review regularly the residual Mission presence against the following benchmarks: (a) strengthening the capacity of the Sierra Leone armed forces and police to maintain security and stability effectively throughout the country; (b) consolidating State authority throughout the country; and (c) consolidating the deployment of the United Nations Mission in Liberia throughout Liberia.

Termination/transition into a new mission

By resolution 1609 (2005) of 24 June 2005, the Council, having taken note of the Secretary-General's report of 2 March 2005 on inter-mission cooperation and possible cross-border operations between UNAMSIL, UNMIL and UNOCI,³¹⁴ and acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, authorized the temporary redeployment of military and civilian police personnel among those three missions to deal with challenges which could not be handled within the authorized personnel ceiling of a given mission.³¹⁵

In his report dated 26 April 2005, the Secretary-General held that an adjustment in the strategy of the United Nations involvement in Sierra Leone was warranted and therefore recommended the Council to extend the mandate of UNAMSIL for a final period of six months, until the end of 2005, and that the drawdown commence in mid-August 2005 and be essentially completed by 31 December 2005.³¹⁶ By resolution 1610 (2005) of 30 June 2005, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council extended the mandate of UNAMSIL for a final period of six months until 31 December 2005 and requested the Secretary-General to finalize the necessary planning for an appropriate integrated United Nations system presence in Sierra Leone after the mission had withdrawn.³¹⁷

By resolution 1620 (2005) of 31 August 2005 and similarly by a presidential statement of 20 December 2005, the Council commended the valuable contribution of UNAMSIL had made to the recovery of Sierra Leone from conflict and to the country's peace, security and development; by the same statement, the Council noted with satisfaction the innovations in the Mission's methods of operation that might prove useful best practice in making other United Nations peacekeeping operations more effective and efficient, including an exit strategy based on specific benchmarks for drawdown; an integrated mission with a Deputy Special Representative managing governance, development and humanitarian elements; and substantial, regular cooperation and coordination with other United Nations peacekeeping operations and offices in the region.³¹⁸ The mandate of UNAMSIL ended on 31 December 2005.

In a letter dated 21 June 2005 to the Secretary-General, the President of Sierra Leone requested a continued United Nations integrated presence in Sierra Leone to assist the Government in promoting good governance, development, human rights and security, in building its national capacity and in preparing for the 2007 general elections.³¹⁹ On the basis of the recommendations of the Secretary-General that an integrated office be established in Sierra Leone following the withdrawal of UNAMSIL in order to continue to assist the Government of Sierra Leone to consolidate peace by enhancing political and economic governance, building the national capacity for conflict prevention, and preparing for elections in 2007,³²⁰ the Council, by resolution 1620 (2005) of 31 August 2005, established the United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone (UNIOSIL) for an initial period of 12 months, beginning on 1 January 2006, with the following key tasks: (a) to assist the Government of Sierra Leone in: (i) building the capacity of State institutions to address further the root causes of the conflict, provide basic services and accelerate progress towards the Millennium Development Goals through poverty reduction and sustainable economic growth, including through the creation of an enabling framework for private investment and systematic efforts to address HIV/AIDS; (ii) developing a national action plan for human rights and establishing the national human rights commission; (iii) building the capacity of the National Electoral Commission to conduct a free, fair and credible electoral process in 2007; (iv) enhancing good governance, transparency and accountability of public institutions; (v) strengthening the rule of law, including by developing the independence and capacity of the justice system and the capacity of the police and corrections system; (vi) strengthening the Sierra Leonean security sector, in cooperation with the International Military Advisory and Training Team and other partners; (vii) promoting a culture of peace, dialogue and participation in critical national issues through a strategic approach to public information and communication; and (viii) developing initiatives for the protection and well-being of youth, women and children; (b) to liaise with the Sierra Leonean security sector and other partners, to report on the security situation and to make recommendations concerning external and internal security threats; (c) to coordinate with United Nations missions and offices and regional organizations in West Africa in dealing with cross-border challenges such as the illicit movement of small arms, human trafficking and smuggling and illegal trade in natural resources; and (d) to coordinate with the Special Court for Sierra Leone.³²¹

By that resolution, the Council also decided that UNIOSIL would be headed by an Executive Representative of the Secretary-General, who would also serve as the Resident Representative of UNDP and United Nations Resident Coordinator.³²² UNIOSIL comprised a small office to support the Executive Representative and five sections focusing on the key areas of its mandate, namely, good governance and peace consolidation, human rights and rule of law, civilian police and military assistance, development, and public information. The five sections comprised 46 officers, including 20 police advisers and 10 military liaison officers, in addition to the United Nations country team, the Office of the Resident and Humanitarian Coordinator, and additional national officers, United Nations Volunteers and other support staff.³²³

During the period under review, on the basis of the reports of the Secretary-General,³²⁴ and the requests of the Government of Sierra Leone,³²⁵ the mandate of UNIOSIL as outlined in resolution 1620 (2005) was extended twice by resolutions for periods of 12 months and 9 months, respectively, the last until 30 September 2008.³²⁶

By resolution 1734 (2006) of 22 December 2006, the Council endorsed an increase of the strength of the Military Liaison Team by 5 additional officers and that of the Police Section by 10 additional police officers for the period from 1 January to 31 October 2007 in order to enhance the support provided by the Office for the elections and its ability to carry out its functions elsewhere in Sierra Leone,³²⁷ as recommended by the Secretary-General.³²⁸ Subsequently, by an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Council, the Council approved a request for UNIOSIL to retain those additional officers for a further period of two months, until 31 December 2007, to enable the Office to continue to provide effective technical and operational planning support to the security sector of Sierra Leone.³²⁹

By resolution 1793 (2007) of 21 December 2007, the Council requested the Secretary-General to submit by 31 January 2008, and for consideration by the Council, a completion strategy for UNIOSIL, including at least a 20 per cent reduction in staff numbers by 31 March 2008; a continued mission at 80 per cent of the current strength until 30 June 2008; and the termination of the mandate of the Office by 30 September 2008. The Council also expressed its intention that, on the expiration of its mandate, UNIOSIL should be replaced by a United Nations integrated political office to focus on carrying forward the peacebuilding process, mobilizing international donor support, supporting the work of the Peacebuilding Commission and the Peacebuilding Fund and completing any residual tasks left over from the mandate of the Office, in particular promoting national reconciliation and supporting the constitutional reform process.³³⁰

9. United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC), established pursuant to resolution 1279 (1999), continued to, inter alia, maintain contact with the parties in the ceasefire agreement; liaise with Joint Military Commission; monitor the implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement; and provide humanitarian assistance and public information. MONUC was authorized under Chapter VII of the Charter to take the necessary action to protect United Nations and co-located Joint Military Commission personnel, facilities, installations and equipment, ensure the security and freedom of movement of its

Mandate implementation

During the period under review, the Council continuously extended the mandate of MONUC, generally on the basis of the recommendations of the Secretary-General,³³¹ by a series of resolutions, for periods of varying lengths, the last until 31 December 2008.³³²

By resolution 1533 (2004) of 12 March 2004, the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, authorized MONUC to seize or collect, as appropriate, the arms and any related materiel whose presence in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo violated the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493 (2003), and to dispose of such arms and related materiel as appropriate.³³³ The Council also requested MONUC to continue to use all means, within its capabilities, to carry out the tasks outlined in paragraph 19 of resolution 1493 (2003), and in particular to inspect, without notice as it deemed it necessary, the cargo of aircraft and of any transport vehicle using the ports, airports, airfields, military bases and border crossings in North and South Kivu and in Ituri.³³⁴

By resolution 1565 (2004) of 1 October 2004, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, in response to the request of the Secretary-General to deploy emergency reinforcements to MONUC to provide it with the necessary capability to address immediate security concerns,³³⁵ the Council requested the Secretary-General to arrange the rapid deployment of additional military capabilities for MONUC and to deploy as soon as possible in the provinces of North and South Kivu all the brigades and appropriate force enablers. In addition, on the basis of the recommendation by the Secretary-General,³³⁶ the Council also authorized an increase of the strength of MONUC by 5,900 personnel, including up to 341 civilian police personnel, as well as the deployment of appropriate civilian personnel, air mobility assets and other force enablers.³³⁷

By the same resolution, the Council decided that MONUC would have the following mandate: (a) to deploy and maintain a presence in the key areas of potential volatility in order to promote the re-establishment of confidence, to discourage violence, in particular by deterring the use of force to threaten the political process, and to allow United Nations personnel to operate freely, particularly in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo; (b) to ensure the protection of civilians, including humanitarian personnel under imminent threat of physical violence; (c) to ensure the protection of United Nations personnel, facilities, installations and equipment; (d) to ensure the security and freedom of movement of its personnel; (e) to establish the necessary operational links with ONUB and with the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Burundi, in order to coordinate efforts towards monitoring and discouraging cross-border movements of combatants between the two countries; (f) to monitor the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493 (2003), including on the lakes; (g) to seize or collect, as appropriate, arms and any related materiel whose presence in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo violated the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493 (2003) and to dispose them as appropriate; and (h) to observe and report in a timely manner, on the position of armed movements and groups, and the presence of foreign military forces in the key areas of volatility.³³⁸ In addition, the Mission was given the following mandate, in support of the Government of National Unity and Transition: (a) to contribute to arrangements made for the security of the institutions and the protection of officials of the transition in Kinshasa until the integrated police unit in Kinshasa was ready to take on that responsibility, and to assist the Congolese authorities in the maintenance of order in other strategic areas; (b) to contribute to the improvement of the security conditions in which humanitarian assistance was provided, and to assist in the voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons; (c) to support operations to disarm foreign combatants led by the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo; (d) to facilitate the demobilization and voluntary repatriation of disarmed foreign combatants and their dependants; (e) to contribute to the disarmament portion of the national programme of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of Congolese combatants and their dependants, in monitoring the process and providing, as appropriate, security in some sensitive locations; (f) to contribute to the successful completion of the electoral process stipulated in the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement on the Transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, by assisting in the establishment of a secure environment for free, transparent and peaceful elections to take place; and (g) to assist in the promotion and protection of human rights, with particular attention to women, children and vulnerable persons, to investigate human rights violations to put an end to impunity, and to continue to cooperate with efforts to ensure that those responsible for serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law were brought to justice.³³⁹ MONUC was authorized under Chapter VII of the Charter to use all necessary means, within its capacity and in the areas where its armed units were deployed, to carry out the tasks as listed above.³⁴⁰

By resolution 1565 (2004), the Council, finally, decided that the Mission would also have the mandate, within its capacity and without prejudice to carrying out the tasks above, to provide advice and assistance to the Transitional Government and authorities, in accordance with the commitments of the Global and All-Inclusive Agreement, including by supporting the three joint commissions³⁴¹ in order to contribute to their efforts, with a view to taking forward (a) essential legislation, including the future constitution; (b) security sector reform, including the integration of national defence and internal security forces together with disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and, in particular, the training and monitoring of the police, while ensuring that they were democratic and fully respected human rights and fundamental freedoms; and (c) the electoral process.³⁴²

By resolution 1592 (2005) of 30 March 2005, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council, emphasizing that MONUC was authorized to use all necessary means, within its capabilities and in the areas where its armed units were deployed, to deter any attempt at the use of force to threaten the political process and to ensure the protection of civilians under imminent threat of physical violence, from any armed group, foreign or Congolese, in particular the ex-Forces armées rwandaises and Interahamwe, encouraged MONUC in this regard to continue to make full use of its mandate in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and stressed that, in accordance with its mandate under resolution 1565 (2004), MONUC might use cordon and search tactics to prevent attacks on civilians and disrupt the military capability of illegal armed groups that continued to use violence in those areas.³⁴³

By resolution 1596 (2005) of 18 April 2005, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, by which, inter alia, it extended the scope of the arms embargo to the entire territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Council requested MONUC, within its existing capabilities and without prejudice to the performance of its current mandate, to focus its monitoring activities in North and South Kivu and in Ituri; and, in airports and airfields where it had a permanent presence, to cooperate within its existing capability with the competent Congolese authorities, with a view to enhancing the capability of those authorities to monitor and control the use of airports.³⁴⁴ The Council also requested MONUC and ONUB, in accordance with their respective mandates, to provide assistance, where they had a permanent presence, to the competent Customs authorities of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Burundi.³⁴⁵

Following the massacre on 9 July 2005 in Ntulu-Mamba, in a statement by the President on 13 July 2005, the Council, in calling upon the authorities of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to prosecute and bring to justice expeditiously the perpetrators and those responsible for these crimes, requested MONUC to provide all necessary support.³⁴⁶

On 6 September 2005, by resolution 1621 (2005) adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council, underlining the importance of elections, authorized a temporary increase until 1 July 2006 in the strength of MONUC of 841 personnel, including up to five formed police units of 125 officers each and additional police personnel, and approved the concept of operations as recommended by the Secretary-General,³⁴⁷ which included the co-location of MONUC senior police officers at general and provincial inspector level to advise on operations planning and management; capacity-building of the police from the bottom up; training and briefing programmes; and immediate support for the development of crowd-management capacity of the national police which would address the immediate needs related to enhancing the role of national police in the electoral process while contributing to its long-term institutional and capacity development. The Council also authorized MONUC to provide additional support to the Independent Electoral Commission for the transport of electoral materials and approved the recommendation of the Secretary-General³⁴⁸ on additional logistic support for elections.³⁴⁹ By resolution 1635 (2005) of 28 October 2005, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council, on the basis of the recommendation of the Secretary-General,³⁵⁰ further authorized a temporary increase of 300 personnel in the military strength of MONUC, until 1 July 2006, to allow for the deployment of an infantry battalion in Katanga, with enabling assets, including its own air mobility and appropriate medical support, to provide additional security within its area of operations during the electoral period.³⁵¹ The increase in the military and civilian police strength of MONUC authorized by resolutions 1621 (2005) and 1635 (2005) continued to be extended by subsequent resolutions renewing the mandate of MONUC.³⁵²

Responding to the request of the Secretary-General,³⁵³ the Council, by resolution 1669 (2006) of 10 April 2006, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, authorized the temporary redeployment of a maximum of one infantry battalion, a military hospital and up to 50 military observers from ONUB to MONUC, until 1 July 2006, in accordance with resolution 1650 (2005).³⁵⁴ Following the extension of this temporary redeployment by resolution 1711 (2006),³⁵⁵ and taking note of the letter from the Secretary-General dated 15 November 2006,³⁵⁶ the Council, by resolution 1736 (2006) of 22 December 2006, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, authorized an increase in the military strength of MONUC of up to 916 military personnel to allow for the continued deployment to MONUC of the infantry battalion and the military hospital previously authorized under the ONUB mandate.³⁵⁷

By resolution 1671 (2006) of 25 April 2006, the Council authorized MONUC to provide all necessary logistical support to an European Union force on a cost reimbursement basis, whose deployment was authorized under Chapter VII of the Charter by that resolution to support MONUC during the period encompassing the election in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.³⁵⁸

Following the successful conduct of the 2006 elections and the installation of the new Government in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Secretary-General made proposals in his report of 20 March 2007 for the post-transition mandate of MONUC.³⁵⁹ By resolution 1756 (2007) of 15 May 2007, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's recommendations in his report, and authorized the continuation of up to 17,030 military personnel, 760 military observers, 391 police trainers and 750 personnel of formed police units.³⁶⁰ The Council also decided that MONUC would assist the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in establishing a stable security environment and MONUC would have the following broad mandates, with a series of specific tasks:³⁶¹ (a) protection of civilians, humanitarian personnel and United Nations personnel and facilities;³⁶² (b) territorial security of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;³⁶³ (c) disarmament and demobilization of foreign and Congolese armed groups;³⁶⁴ and (d) security sector reform.³⁶⁵ By the same resolution,³⁶⁶ the Council further decided that MONUC would have the mandate to support the strengthening of democratic institutions and the rule of law in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.³⁶⁷ The Council authorized the Mission to use all necessary means, within the limits of its capacity and in the areas where its units were

³⁶² The specific tasks were (i) to ensure the protection of civilians, including humanitarian personnel, under imminent threat of physical violence; (ii) to contribute to the improvement of the security conditions in which humanitarian assistance was provided, and assist in the voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons; (iii) to ensure the protection of United Nations personnel, facilities, installations and equipment; (iv) to ensure the security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated personnel; and (v) to carry out joint patrols with the riot-control units of the national police to improve security in the event of civil disturbance.

³⁶³ The specific tasks were (i) to observe and report in a timely manner on the position of armed movements and groups and the presence of foreign military forces in the key areas of volatility, especially by monitoring the use of landing strips and the borders, including on the lakes; (ii) to monitor the implementation of the relevant measures imposed by resolution 1493 (2003) and expanded by resolution 1596 (2005); (iii) to seize or collect, as appropriate, the arms and any related materiel whose presence in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo violated the relevant measures imposed by resolution 1493 (2003) and expanded by resolution 1596 (2005), and to dispose of such arms and related materiel as appropriate; (iv) to provide assistance to the competent Customs authorities of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in implementing the relevant provisions of resolution 1596 (2005); and (v) to assist the Government in enhancing its demining capacity.

reintegration process and the release of children associated with those armed groups, as well as preventing the provision of support to them, including support derived from illicit economic activities; (iii) to facilitate the voluntary demobilization and repatriation of disarmed foreign combatants and their dependants; and (iv) to contribute to the implementation of the national programme of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of Congolese combatants and their dependants, by monitoring the disarmament process and providing security in some sensitive locations.

³⁶⁷ To that end, the specific tasks were (i) to provide advice to strengthen democratic institutions and processes at the national, provincial, regional and local levels; (ii) to promote national reconciliation and internal political dialogue; (iii) to assist in the promotion and protection of human rights, investigate human rights violations, assist in the development and implementation of a transitional justice strategy, and cooperate in national and international efforts to bring to justice perpetrators of grave violations of human rights and international humanitarian law; and (iv) to provide preliminary assistance to the Congolese authorities, including the National Independent Electoral Commission, in the organization, preparation and conduct of local elections; (v) to assist in the establishment of a secure and peaceful environment for the holding of free and transparent elections; and (vi) to contribute to the promotion of good governance and respect for the principle of accountability.

deployed, to carry out the specific tasks listed in the resolution.³⁶⁸

Taking note of the Secretary-General's report of 14 November 2007 which provided broad benchmarks and recommendations regarding future direction of MONUC,³⁶⁹ by resolution 1794 (2007) of 21 December 2007, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter to extend the mandate and capacity of MONUC, the Council requested MONUC to attach the highest priority to addressing the crisis in the Kivus in all its dimensions, in particular through the protection of civilians and support for the implementation of the Nairobi joint communiqué. It also requested MONUC, in view of the scale and severity of sexual violence committed especially by armed elements in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, to undertake a thorough review of its efforts to prevent and respond to sexual violence, and to pursue a comprehensive mission-wide strategy to strengthen prevention, protection, and response to sexual violence.³⁷⁰

10. United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic (BONUCA), established on 15 February 2000, continued to encourage national dialogue and reconciliation and to help the Central African Republic enact military reforms, implement human rights policies, train civilian police, and disarm, demobilize and reintegrate ex-combatants.

Mandate implementation

During the period under review, by exchanges of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council,³⁷¹ or through a statement by the President,³⁷² the Council extended the mandate of BONUCA four times for periods of one year, the last until 31 December 2008.

In a statement by the President of 28 October 2004, the Council expressed its concern at the possible consequences to the Central African Republic of the crises in the subregion and, accordingly, welcomed with satisfaction the Secretary-General's initiative in asking BONUCA to assess the implications of developments in neighbouring countries on the situation in the Central African Republic and vice versa.³⁷³ In view of those additional subregional responsibilities, and the encouraging developments on the ground, by an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Council, the rank of the Secretary-General's Representative in the Central African Republic was raised to that of Special Representative, at the Assistant Secretary-General level.³⁷⁴

In a statement by the President of 22 November 2006, by which the Council renewed the mandate of BONUCA for one year, the Secretary-General was invited to submit the new modalities of the mission of the Office for the new period.³⁷⁵ In a letter dated 30 November 2006, the Secretary-General indicated that the activities of BONUCA in 2007 would focus principally on (a) supporting national reconciliation and dialogue, (b) assisting efforts to strengthen democratic institutions, (c) facilitating the mobilization of resources for national reconstruction, economic recovery, poverty alleviation and good governance, (d) mainstreaming a gender perspective into peacebuilding, in line with resolution 1325 (2000), and (e) reinforcing cooperation between the United Nations and States members of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community and other regional entities with a view to facilitating and strengthening initiatives aimed at addressing transborder insecurity in the subregion.³⁷⁶

By an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Council, it was decided that, on the basis of the requests of the Government of the Central African Republic, BONUCA for the year 2008 would (a) promote national reconciliation efforts, particularly by assisting the national stakeholders to organize an inclusive political dialogue; (b) promote the respect for human rights and democratic norms; (c) support the rule of law and accountable and transparent governance; (d) facilitate the mobilization of resources for national

11. United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE), established pursuant to resolution 1312 (2000), continued to perform its mandate towards monitoring the cessation of hostilities, the position of troops and the Temporary Security Zone, Chair the Military Coordination Commission provided for in the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities of 18 June 2000;³⁷⁸ coordinate humanitarian assistance in the Temporary Security Zone and adjacent areas and assist the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission³⁷⁹ in the expeditious and orderly implementation of its delimitation decision.

Mandate implementation

The Council, generally on the basis of the reports of the Secretary-General,³⁸⁰ extended the mandate of UNMEE for periods of up to six months, the last until 31 January 2008.³⁸¹

In his report of 2 September 2004, the Secretary-General, in accordance with resolution 1531 (2004) of 12 March 2004, recommended an adjustment of the Mission's presence in two phases: first, replacing one military demining contingent with a modest commercial capacity, and reducing the force headquarters staff of UNMEE by up to 30 per cent. In the second phase, by repatriating one infantry battalion and support elements to consolidate the existing three sectors into two sectors, the military structure would comprise a force headquarters, two infantry battalions, two demining units, other existing support elements and up to 220 military observers, which would be accompanied by commensurate reductions in the number of civilian staff.³⁸² By resolution 1560 (2004) of 14 September 2004, the Council approved the adjustments to UNMEE as recommended by the Secretary-General.³⁸³

By resolution 1622 (2005) of 13 September 2005, the Council approved a reconfiguration of the military component of UNMEE, including an increase in the number of military observers by 10, to a total of 230, within the existing overall mandate strength of 3,404 military personnel as recommended in the Secretary-General's report of 30 August 2005.³⁸⁴ The Council also approved an expansion of the mandate regarding assistance to the parties in the mine action sector so that UNMEE could assist the parties in continuing cooperation with other international partners in that sector, by providing humanitarian demining assistance in and around the Temporary Security Zone, technical advice and coordination.³⁸⁵

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 3 January 2006 and 6 March 2006³⁸⁶ and the options for the future of UNMEE contained therein, by resolution 1681 (2006) of 31 May 2006, the Council authorized the reconfiguration of the UNMEE military component and approved the deployment within UNMEE of up to 2,300 troops, including up to 230 military observers, with the mandate pursuant to resolutions 1320 (2000) and 1430 (2002).³⁸⁷

On 15 December 2007, the Secretary-General, in his special report,³⁸⁸ proposed four options for possible changes to the mandate of UNMEE, as requested in resolution 1710 (2006).

By resolution 1741 (2007) of 30 January 2007, the Council approved a reduction of the military component of UNMEE from 2,300 to 1,700 military personnel, including 230 military observers, in accordance with the first option in the above-mentioned Secretary-General's report,³⁸⁹ while deciding to maintain the mandate and maximum authorized force levels.³⁹⁰

12. United Nations Mission in Liberia

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL), established pursuant to resolution 1509 (2003), continued to (a) support the implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement;³⁹¹ (b) protect United Nations staff, facilities and civilians; (c) facilitate support for humanitarian and human rights assistance; (d) provide support for security reform, including national police training and the formation of a new, restructured military; and (e) support the implementation of the peace process.

Mandate implementation

During the period under review, by a series of resolutions,³⁹² the Council successively extended the mandate of UNMIL on the basis of the Secretary-General's recommendations,³⁹³ for periods of up to one year, the last until 30 September 2008.

By resolution 1609 (2005) of 24 June 2005, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council, having taken note of the Secretary-General's report of 2 March 2005 on inter-mission cooperation and possible cross-border operations between the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL), UNMIL and the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI),³⁹⁴ authorized the temporary redeployment of military and civilian police personnel among those three missions to deal with challenges which could not be handled within the authorized personnel ceiling of a given mission.³⁹⁵

By resolution 1626 (2006) of 19 September 2005, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, noting that UNAMSIL was scheduled to end its operations on 31 December 2005, the Council authorized UNMIL to deploy from November 2005 up to 250 United Nations military personnel to Sierra Leone to provide security for the Special Court for Sierra Leone, as recommended in the report of the Secretary-General of 1 September 2005.³⁹⁶ It also authorized a temporary increase in the personnel ceiling of the Mission, to a total of 15,250 United Nations military personnel, for the period from 15 November 2005 to 31 March 2006 in order to ensure that the support provided to the Court did not reduce the capabilities of the Mission in Liberia during its political transition period. Finally, it also authorized UNMIL to deploy an adequate number of military personnel to Sierra Leone, if and when needed, to evacuate military personnel of UNMIL deployed to Sierra Leone and officials of the Court in the event of a serious security crisis affecting those personnel and the Court.³⁹⁷ This temporary increase was extended until 30 September 2006.³⁹⁸

On 11 November 2005, the Council, by resolution 1638 (2005), acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, decided that the mandate of UNMIL should include the following additional element: to apprehend and detain former President Charles Taylor in the event of a return to Liberia and to transfer him or facilitate his transfer to Sierra Leone for prosecution before the Special Court for Sierra Leone and to keep the Government of Liberia, the Government of Sierra Leone and the Council fully informed.³⁹⁹

In response to the request by the Secretary-General pursuant to resolution 1609 (2006),⁴⁰⁰ the Council, by resolution 1657 (2006) of 6 February 2006, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, authorized the redeployment of a maximum of one infantry company from UNMIL to UNOCI, until 31 March

2006, in order to provide extra security coverage for United Nations personnel and property, and to perform other tasks mandated to UNOCI, without prejudice to any future decision by the Security Council concerning the renewal of the mandate and level of troops of UNMIL and a further extension of the redeployment.⁴⁰¹

In modifying the arms embargo on Liberia imposed by resolution 1521 (2003) to incorporate additional exemptions to the Liberian Special Security Service and for members of the Liberian police and security forces who had been vetted and trained since the inception of UNMIL in October 2003, by resolution 1683 (2006) of 13 June 2006, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council requested UNMIL to inspect inventories of weapons and ammunition obtained in accordance with the exemptions to ensure all such weapons and ammunition were accounted for, and to make periodic reports to the Committee established by paragraph 21 of resolution 1521 (2003) on its findings.⁴⁰²

In his report of 14 March 2006,⁴⁰³ the Secretary-General recommended, inter alia, changes to the configuration of UNMIL, in view of the completion by the Mission of a number of tasks and in the context of a review of the appropriate mandates for the composition of the Mission. In his report of 9 June 2006,⁴⁰⁴ he reiterated his recommendation for the addition of a formed police unit. By resolution 1694 (2006) of 13 July 2006, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council decided to increase the authorized size of the civilian police component of UNMIL by 125 and to decrease the authorized size of the military component by 125, from the authorized levels.⁴⁰⁵

By resolution 1750 (2007) of 30 March 2007, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council noted the intention of the Special Court for Sierra Leone to reach agreement with the Government of Liberia on carrying out a programme of activities in Liberia, and decided that the mandate of UNMIL should include the following additional element: to provide, within its capabilities and areas of deployment and without prejudice to the performance of its other mandated tasks, administrative and related support and security, on a cost-reimbursable basis, for activities conducted in Liberia by the Special Court for Sierra Leone with the consent of the Government of Liberia.⁴⁰⁶

Following the consideration of the benchmarks proposed by the Secretary-General⁴⁰⁷ pursuant to resolution 1667 (2006), the Council, by resolution 1712 (2006) of 29 September 2006, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, endorsed the recommendations of the Secretary-General in his report of 12 September 2006,⁴⁰⁸ for a phased, gradual consolidation, drawdown and withdrawal of the UNMIL troop contingent, as the situation permitted and without compromising the security of Liberia.⁴⁰⁹ On the basis of the Secretary-General's report of 8 August 2007,⁴¹⁰ which provided a detailed drawdown plan, including benchmarks, as requested in resolution 1750 (2007), the Council by resolution 1777 (2007) of 20 September 2007, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendation⁴¹¹ for a reduction of 2,450 in the number of personnel deployed as part of the UNMIL military component during the period from October 2007 to September 2008 and for a reduction of 498 in the number of officers deployed as part of the police component of the Mission during the period from April 2008 to December 2010.⁴¹²

13. United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire (MINUCI), established pursuant to resolution 1479 (2003), as a political mission continued to facilitate the implementation by the Ivorian parties of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement.⁴¹³

Following the extension of the mandate of MINUCI until 27 February 2004 by resolution 1527 (2004),⁴¹⁴ the Council, by resolution 1528 (2004) of that date, decided, on the basis of the recommendations of the Secretary-General,⁴¹⁵ and the message of 10 November 2003 from the President of Côte d'Ivoire,⁴¹⁶ to continue the mandate of MINUCI for a final period until 4 April 2004, while establishing the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire as from that date. The Council requested the Secretary-General to transfer authority from MINUCI and the forces of ECOWAS to the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire on that date.⁴¹⁷

14. United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire

Establishment, mandate and composition

The Council, by resolution 1528 (2004) of 27 February 2004, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, decided to establish the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI), on the basis of the request of the President of Côte d'Ivoire and the recommendations of the Secretary-General.⁴¹⁸ The Council established UNOCI for an initial period of 12 months from 4 April 2004.⁴¹⁹

As set out in resolution 1528 (2004), the mandate of UNOCI,⁴²⁰ in coordination with the French forces authorized by the same resolution,⁴²¹ consisted of the following areas, namely (a) monitoring of the ceasefire and movements of armed groups;⁴²² (b) disarmament, demobilization, reintegration, repatriation and resettlement;⁴²³ (c) protection of United Nations personnel, institutions and civilians;⁴²⁴ (d) support for humanitarian assistance;⁴²⁵ (e) support for the implementation of the peace process;⁴²⁶ (f) assistance in the field of human rights;⁴²⁷ (g) public information;⁴²⁸ and (h) law and order.⁴²⁹ UNOCI was authorized to use all necessary means to carry out its mandate within its capability and its areas of deployment.⁴³⁰

By resolution 1528 (2004), the Council decided that UNOCI should comprise, in addition to the appropriate civilian, judiciary and corrections components, a military strength of a maximum of 6,240, including 200 military observers and 120 staff officers, and up to 350 civilian police officers. The Force Commander of UNOCI and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of UNOCI were appointed through exchanges of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Council.⁴³¹

During the period under review, the Council extended the mandate of UNOCI by a series of resolutions adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter,⁴³² in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary-General,⁴³³ for periods of varying lengths, the last until 15 January 2008.

By resolution 1572 (2004) of 15 November 2004, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council, in demanding that the Ivorian authorities stop all radio and television broadcasting inciting hatred, intolerance and violence, requested UNOCI to strengthen its monitoring role in this regard.⁴³⁴

By resolution 1584 (2005) of 1 February 2005, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council authorized UNOCI and the French forces which supported it (a) to monitor the implementation of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1572 (2004), in cooperation with the group of experts established by the resolution, and, as appropriate, with UNMIL, UNAMSIL and Governments concerned, including by ⁴⁴⁰ The specific tasks were (i) to protect United Nations personnel, installations and equipment, ensure the security and freedom of movement of United Nations personnel and to protect civilians under imminent threat of physical violence, within its capabilities and its areas of deployment; and (ii) to support, in coordination with the Ivorian and South African authorities, the provision of security for members of the Government of National Reconciliation.

⁴⁴¹ The specific tasks were (i) to monitor the implementation of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1572 (2004); and (ii) to collect arms and any related materiel brought into Côte d'Ivoire in violation of the arms embargo, and to dispose of such arms and related materiel as appropriate.

⁴⁴² The specific task was to facilitate the free flow of people, goods and humanitarian assistance.

⁴⁴⁴ The specific tasks were (i) to provide all necessary technical assistance to the Government of National Reconciliation, the Independent Electoral Commission and other relevant agencies or institutions for the organization of open, free, fair and transparent presidential and legislative elections within the time frames envisaged in the Constitution of the Republic of Côte d'Ivoire; (ii) to provide technical information, advice and assistance to the High Representative referred to in resolution 1603 (2005); and (iii) to contribute to the security of the areas where voting was to take place.

⁴⁴⁶ The specific tasks were (i) to promote understanding of the peace process and the role of UNOCI among local communities and the parties, through the mission's public information capacity; and (ii) to monitor the Ivorian mass media, in particular with regard to any incidents of incitement by the media to hatred, intolerance and violence, and to keep the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1572 (2004) regularly informed of the situation in this regard.

authorized UNOCI to use all necessary means to carry out its mandate, within its capabilities and its areas of deployment.⁴⁴⁸ It also authorized an increase in the military component of UNOCI of up to 850 additional personnel, as well as an increase in the civilian police component of up to a ceiling of 725 civilian police personnel, including three formed police units, and the necessary additional civilian personnel until 24 January 2006.⁴⁴⁹ This increase was reauthorized by resolution 1739 (2007) until 30 June 2007.⁴⁵⁰

By resolution 1609 (2005), adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council also authorized the temporary redeployment of military and civilian police personnel among UNMIL, UNAMSIL and UNOCI to deal with challenges which could not be handled within the authorized personnel ceiling of a given mission, subject to the following conditions: (a) the Secretary-General should inform the Security Council in advance of his intention to proceed with such a redeployment, including its scope and duration, with the understanding that the implementation of the above-mentioned reinforcement would require a corresponding decision of the Council; (b) any forces redeployed should continue to be counted against the authorized ceiling on military and civilian personnel of the mission from which they were being transferred and should not count against the ceiling of the mission to which they were being transferred; (c) any such transfer should not result in any increase in the total combined ceilings on military and civilian personnel deployed in UNOCI, UNAMSIL and UNMIL determined by the Council in the respective mandates of the three missions; and (d) any such transfer should not have the effect of extending the deployment period of personnel deployed under the mandate of their original mission, unless the Council decided otherwise.⁴⁵¹ The Council also requested UNOCI to carry out its mandate in close liaison with UNAMSIL and UNMIL, including especially in the prevention of movements of arms and combatants across shared borders and the implementation of disarmament and demobilization programmes.⁴⁵²

In accordance with the Secretary-General's recommendation,⁴⁵³ the Council decided by resolution 1657 (2006), adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, to authorize the redeployment of a maximum of one infantry company from UNMIL to UNOCI until 31 March 2006 in order to provide extra security coverage for United Nations personnel and property, and to perform other tasks mandated to UNOCI.⁴⁵⁴

On 2 June 2006, the Council further authorized, by resolution 1682 (2006), an increase in the strength of UNOCI up to 1,500 additional personnel, including a maximum of 1,025 military personnel and 475 civilian police personnel, taking note of the recommendations of the Secretary-General.⁴⁵⁵ This authorization was renewed by resolution 1739 (2007) until 30 June 2007.⁴⁵⁶

By resolution 1721 (2006) of 1 November 2006, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council requested UNOCI, consistent with its mandate in resolution 1609 (2005) to protect United Nations personnel, to provide security to the High Representative for the Elections, within its capabilities and its areas of deployment.⁴⁵⁷

The Council revised the mandate of UNOCI by resolution 1739 (2007), adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, adding the following two elements to the mandate set out in resolution 1609 (2005):⁴⁵⁸ (a) operations of identification of the population and registration of voters;⁴⁵⁹ and (b) reform

⁴⁵⁹ The specific task was to contribute, in close liaison with the working group mentioned in paragraph 17 of resolution 1721 (2006), to the security of the operations of identification of the population and registration of voters, within its capabilities and its areas of deployment.

15. United Nations Advance Mission in the Sudan

Establishment, mandate and composition

To build on the momentum of the progress made in the peace process under the Intergovernmental Authority on Development between the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army, the Council, by resolution 1547 (2004) of 11 June 2004, welcomed the Secretary-General's proposal⁴⁶⁸ to establish a special political mission, the United Nations Advance Mission in the Sudan (UNAMIS), for an initial period of three months.⁴⁶⁹

Pursuant to resolution 1547 (2004), UNAMIS, dedicated to the preparation of the international monitoring foreseen in the Framework Agreement on Security Arrangements during the Interim Period, signed in Naivasha, Kenya, on 25 September 2003,⁴⁷⁰ was mandated to facilitate contacts with the parties concerned and to prepare for the introduction of an envisaged peace support operation following the signing of a comprehensive peace agreement.⁴⁷¹

As proposed by the Secretary-General and endorsed by the Council in resolution 1547 (2004), UNAMIS, at its establishment, under the authority of a Special Representative of the Secretary-General, included up to 25 military liaison officers, security staff and a strong mission support element comprising international personnel, including political and civil affairs staff, public information officers and experts in logistics and administration, as well as in other requisite areas of expertise.⁴⁷² Through an exchange of letters with the Secretary-General, the Council confirmed the appointment of a Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan and head of the peace support operation to be authorized by the Council at the conclusion of the comprehensive peace agreement.⁴⁷³

⁴⁶⁰ The specific task was to assist, in close liaison with the working group mentioned in paragraph 15 of resolution 1721 (2006), in formulating a plan on the restructuring of the defence and security forces and in preparing possible seminars on security sector reform to be organized by the African Union and the Economic Community of West African States.

⁴⁶¹ The additional task was to provide as necessary, within its capabilities and its areas of deployment, logistical support for the Independent Electoral Commission, in particular for the transportation of electoral material.

⁴⁶² In the area of law and order, UNOCI was mandated to perform the additional task of supporting the Government of Côte d'Ivoire in ensuring the neutrality and impartiality of public media by providing, as necessary, security for the premises of Radio Télévision Ivoirienne, while eliminating the task of assisting the Ivorian parties in the implementation of temporary and interim security measures in the northern part of the country, as provided in paragraph 6 of the Pretoria Agreement.

Mandate implementation

During the period under review, by a series of resolutions, the Council extended the mandate of UNAMIS four times, on the recommendations of the Secretary-General,⁴⁷⁴ for periods of up to three months, the last until 24 March 2005.⁴⁷⁵

The Council, by resolution 1556 (2004) of 30 July 2004, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, requested the Secretary-General to incorporate into the mission contingency planning for the Darfur region.⁴⁷⁶ By resolution 1574 (2004) of 19 November 2004, welcoming the preparatory work carried out by UNAMIS, the Council endorsed the proposals in the Secretary-General's reports of 28 September 2004 and 2 November 2004⁴⁷⁷ to increase the staffing of UNAMIS, including an additional six military officers and six police officers to provide extra liaison functions with the expanded African Union mission, as well as additional staff in various fields, including civil affairs, humanitarian relief, public information, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and return and reintegration to facilitate progress towards a comprehensive agreement and prepare for the United Nations to provide rapid support in critical areas once the agreement was concluded.⁴⁷⁸

Termination/transition to a new mission

On 24 March 2005, by resolution 1590 (2005), by which it established the United Nations Mission in the Sudan, the Council requested that the Secretary-General transfer all functions performed by UNAMIS to the United Nations Mission in the Sudan, together with staff and logistics of the office as appropriate.⁴⁷⁹

Establishment, mandate and composition

Subsequent to the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement between the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army in Nairobi on 9 January 2005, based on the recommendations of the Secretary-General⁴⁸⁰ and the request of the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement for the establishment of a peace support mission,⁴⁸¹ on 24 March 2005, the Security Council, by resolution 1590 (2005), decided to establish the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS), for an initial period of six months.⁴⁸²

Pursuant to resolution 1590 (2005), the mandate of UNMIS was (a) to support implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement by performing a series of specific tasks;⁴⁸³ (b) to facilitate and

⁴⁸³ The specific tasks were (i) to monitor and verify the implementation of the N'Djamena ceasefire agreement and to investigate violations; (ii) to liaise with bilateral donors on the formation of joint integrated units; (iii) to observe and monitor movement of armed groups and redeployment of forces in the areas of UNMIS deployment in accordance with the ceasefire agreement; (iv) to assist in the establishment of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme as called for in the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, and its implementation through voluntary disarmament and weapons collection and destruction; (v) to assist the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in promoting understanding of the peace process and the role of UNMIS by means of an effective public information campaign; (vi) to assist the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in addressing the need for a national inclusive approach, including the role of women, towards reconciliation and peacebuilding; (vii) to assist the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in restructuring the police service in the Sudan to develop a police training and evaluation programme and to otherwise assist in the training of civilian police; (viii) to assist the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in promoting the rule of law, including an independent judiciary, and the protection of human rights of all people of the Sudan through a comprehensive and coordinated strategy with the aim of combating impunity and contributing to a long-term peace and stability and to assist the parties to the Agreement to develop and consolidate the national coordinate, within its capabilities and in its areas of deployment, the voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons, and humanitarian assistance, inter alia, by helping to establish the necessary security conditions; (c) to assist the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement by providing humanitarian demining assistance, technical advice and coordination; and (d) to contribute towards international efforts to protect and promote human rights in the Sudan, as well as coordinate international efforts towards the protection of civilians with particular attention to vulnerable groups within the capabilities of UNMIS and in close cooperation with other United Nations agencies, related organizations and non-governmental organizations.⁴⁸⁴ The Council also requested that UNMIS closely and continuously liaise and coordinate at all levels with the African Union Mission in the Sudan (AMIS) with a view to expeditiously reinforcing the effort to foster peace in Darfur, especially with regard to the Abuja peace process and AMIS.⁴⁸⁵ Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council also authorized UNMIS to take the necessary action, in the areas of deployment of its forces and as it deemed within its capabilities, to protect United Nations personnel, facilities, installations, and equipment, ensure the security and freedom of movement of United Nations personnel, humanitarian workers, joint assessment mechanism and assessment and evaluation commission personnel, and, without prejudice to the responsibility of the Government of the Sudan, to protect civilians under imminent threat of physical violence.⁴⁸⁶

In accordance with resolution 1590 (2005), UNMIS consisted of up to 10,000 military personnel and an appropriate civilian component including up to 715 civilian police personnel.⁴⁸⁷ The Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of the Mission had been appointed prior to the legal framework; (ix) to ensure an adequate human rights presence, capacity, and expertise within UNMIS to carry out human rights promotion, civilian protection and monitoring activities; and (x) to provide guidance and technical assistance to the parties to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement to support the preparations for and conduct of elections and referenda provided for by the Comprehensive Peace Agreement.

Mandate implementation

During the period under review, in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary-General,⁴⁹⁰ the Council extended the mandate of UNMIS six times, by a series of resolutions, for periods of up to six months, the last until 30 April 2008.⁴⁹¹

In accordance with the Secretary-General's recommendation,⁴⁹² by resolution 1706 (2006) of 31 August 2006, and in order to support the early and effective implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement signed on 5 May 2006, the Council decided that the mandate of UNMIS, without prejudice to its existing mandate and operations as provided for in resolution 1590 (2005), should be expanded and that the Mission should be deployed to Darfur.⁴⁹³ The Council decided that the mandate of UNMIS in Darfur should be to support implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement and the N'Djamena Agreement on Humanitarian Ceasefire on the Conflict in Darfur, including by performing a number of specific tasks.⁴⁹⁴

By resolution 1769 (2007) of 31 July 2007, the Council, in establishing an African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur, decided that the authorized strength of UNMIS should revert to that specified in resolution 1590 (2005) upon the transfer of authority from the African Union Mission in the Sudan to the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur.⁵⁰⁰

17. African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur

Pursuant to the joint report, issued on 5 June 2007, of the Secretary-General and the Chairperson of the African Union Commission,⁵⁰¹ the Council, by its resolution 1769 (2007) of 31 July 2007, decided to authorize the establishment of the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID) for an initial period of 12 months in support of the early and effective implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement and the outcome of the ongoing negotiations between the Government of the Sudan and other parties.⁵⁰²

As set out in the report of the Secretary-General and the Chairperson of the African Union,⁵⁰³ the Council decided⁵⁰⁴ that the mandate of UNAMID would be (a) to contribute to the restoration of necessary security conditions for the safe provision of humanitarian assistance and to facilitate full humanitarian access throughout Darfur; (b) to contribute to the protection of civilian populations under imminent threat of physical violence and prevent attacks against civilians, within its capability and areas of deployment, without prejudice to the responsibility of the Government of the Sudan; (c) to monitor, observe compliance with and verify the implementation of various ceasefire agreements signed since 2004, as well as to assist with the implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement and any subsequent agreements; (d) to assist the political process in order to ensure that it was inclusive, and to support the African Union-United Nations joint mediation in its efforts to broaden and deepen commitment to the peace process; (e) to contribute to a secure environment for economic reconstruction and development, as well as the sustainable return of internally displaced persons and refugees to their homes; (f) to contribute to the promotion of respect for and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Darfur; (g) to assist in the promotion of the rule of law in Darfur, including through support for strengthening an independent judiciary and the prison system, and assistance in the development and consolidation of the legal framework, in consultation with relevant Sudanese authorities; and (h) to monitor and report on the security situation at the Sudan's borders with Chad and the Central African Republic. In order to achieve these broad goals, the operation's tasks would include (a) support for the peace process and good offices;⁵⁰⁵ (b) security;⁵⁰⁶ (c) rule of ⁵⁰⁵ The specific tasks were (i) to support the good offices of the African Union-United Nations Joint Special Representative for Darfur and the mediation efforts of the Special Envoys of the African Union and the United Nations; (ii) to support and monitor the implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement and subsequent agreements; (iii) to participate in and support the major bodies established by the Darfur Peace Agreement and any subsequent agreements in the implementation of their mandate; (iv) to facilitate the preparation and conduct of the Darfur-Darfur Dialogue and Consultation, as stipulated in the Darfur Peace Agreement; (v) to assist in the preparations for the conduct of the referendums provided for in the Darfur Peace Agreement; (vi) to ensure the complementary implementation of all peace agreements in the Sudan, particularly with regard to the national provisions of those agreements, and compliance with the Interim National Constitution; and (vii) to liaise with UNMIS, the African Union Liaison Office for the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and other stakeholders to ensure complementary implementation of the mandates of UNMIS, the African Union Liaison Office and the hybrid operation in Darfur.

⁵⁰⁶ The specific tasks were (i) to promote the re-establishment of confidence, deter violence and assist in monitoring and verifying the implementation of the redeployment and disengagement provisions of the Darfur Peace Agreement; (ii) to monitor, investigate, report and assist the parties in resolving violations of the Darfur Peace Agreement and subsequent complementary agreements through the Ceasefire Commission and the Joint Commission; (iii) to monitor, verify and promote efforts to disarm the Janjaweed and other militias; (iv) to coordinate non-combat logistical support for the movements; (v) to assist in the establishment of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme; (vi) to contribute to the creation of the necessary security conditions for the provision of humanitarian assistance and to facilitate the voluntary and sustainable return of refugees and internally displaced persons to their homes; (vii) in the areas of deployment of its forces and within its capabilities, to protect the hybrid operation's personnel, facilities, installations and equipment, to ensure the security and freedom of movement of United Nations-African Union personnel, humanitarian workers and Assessment and Evaluation Commission personnel, to prevent disruption of the implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement by armed groups and protect civilians under imminent threat of physical violence and prevent attacks and threats against civilians; (viii) to monitor through proactive patrolling the parties' policing activities in camps for internally displaced persons, demilitarized and buffer zones and areas of control; (ix) to support the establishment and training of community police in camps for internally displaced persons, to support capacity-building of the Government of the Sudan police in Darfur and to support the institutional development of the police of the movements; (x) to support the efforts of the Government of the Sudan and of the police of the movements to maintain public order and build the capacity of Sudanese law enforcement in this regard through specialized training and joint operations; and (xi) to provide technical mine-action advice and coordination and demining capacity to support the Darfur Peace Agreement.

⁵⁰⁷ The specific tasks were (i) to assist in the implementation of the provisions of the Darfur Peace Agreement and any subsequent agreements relating to human rights and the rule of law and to contribute to the creation of an environment conducive to respect for human rights and the rule of law; (ii) to assist all stakeholders and local government authorities, in particular in their efforts to transfer resources in an equitable manner from the federal Government to the Darfur states, and to implement reconstruction plans and existing and subsequent agreements on land use and compensation issues; (iii) to support the parties to the Darfur Peace Agreement in restructuring and building the capacity of the police service in Darfur; (iv) to assist in promoting the rule of law; (v) to ensure an adequate human rights and gender presence capacity, and expertise in Darfur in order to contribute to efforts to protect and promote human rights in Darfur, with particular attention to vulnerable groups; (vi) to assist in harnessing the capacity of women to participate in the peace process; and (vii) to support the implementation of provisions included in the Darfur Peace Agreement and any subsequent agreements relating to upholding the rights of children.

paragraphs 7 and 8 of resolution 1556 (2004).⁵⁰⁹ Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council decided that UNAMID was authorized to take the necessary action, in the areas of deployment of its forces and as it deemed within its capabilities (i) to protect its personnel, facilities, installations and equipment, and to ensure the security and freedom of movement of its own personnel and humanitarian workers; and (ii) to support early and effective implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement, prevent the disruption of its implementation and armed attacks, and protect civilians, without prejudice to the responsibility of the Government of the Sudan.⁵¹⁰

Pursuant to resolution 1769 (2007), UNAMID, incorporating personnel of the African Union Mission in the Sudan (AMIS) and the United Nations heavy and light support packages to the Mission, consisted of up to 19,555 military personnel, including 360 military observers and liaison officers, and an appropriate civilian component up to 3,772 police personnel and 19 formed police units comprising up to 140 personnel each.⁵¹¹ The Council decided that, no later than October 2007, UNAMID should (a) establish an initial operational capability for the headquarters, including the necessary management and command and control structures, through which operational directives would be implemented; (b) as of October 2007, complete preparations to assume operational command authority over the light support package, personnel deployed to AMIS, and such heavy support package and hybrid personnel as might be deployed by that date, in order to perform such tasks under its mandate; and (c) no later than 31 December 2007, would assume authority from AMIS with a view to achieving full operational capability and force strength as soon as possible thereafter. The Council also decided that there would be unity of command and control which, in accordance with basic principles of peacekeeping, meant a single chain of command, and that command and control structures and backstopping would be provided by the United Nations.⁵¹² By the same resolution, the Council further welcomed the appointment of the African Union-United Nations Joint Special Representative for Darfur and a Force Commander.⁵¹³

On 22 June 2005, by resolution 1608 (2005), the Council supported the recommendations of the Secretary-General⁵³⁶ for (a) a temporary increase, during the electoral period and subsequent political transition, of 750 personnel to the currently authorized military strength in order to create a rapid reaction force in Haiti to provide increased security; (b) an increase of 50 military personnel in order to create a sector headquarters in Port-au-Prince; and (c) a temporary increase of 275 personnel to the strength of the Mission's civilian police component during the electoral period. The Council further decided that, for a temporary period, MINUSTAH would consist of a military component of up to 7,500 troops of all ranks and up to 1,897 civilian police. The Council also requested that MINUSTAH concentrate the use of its resources, including civilian police, towards increasing security and protection during the electoral period including a review, as appropriate, of the rules of engagement of the individual civilian police officers; and that MINUSTAH and the Haitian authorities take all necessary steps to achieve optimal coordination between the Mission's civilian police and the Haitian National Police; and that the Mission strengthen its capacity to implement quick-impact projects.⁵³⁷

By resolution 1702 (2006) of 15 August 2007, welcoming the successful and peaceful political transition to an elected Government, as well as the election of a new President and Parliament, the Council decided that MINUSTAH should consist of a military component of 7,200 troops of all ranks and a police component of up to 1,951 officers, and authorized the deployment of 16 correction officers seconded from Member States in support of the Government of Haiti to address the shortcomings of the prison system. It also requested MINUSTAH to reorient its disarmament, demobilization and reintegration efforts, to further that goal, towards a comprehensive community violence reduction programme adapted to local conditions. It further decided that MINUSTAH, consistent with its existing mandate under resolution 1542 (2004) would assist with the restructuring and maintenance of the rule of law, public safety and public order should, provide assistance and advice to the Haitian authorities, in monitoring, restructuring, reforming and strengthening of the justice sector.

Termination of mandate

During the period under review, UNTOP was renewed three times for a period of one year, the final period ending on 1 June 2007, through exchanges of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council.⁵⁴¹ At the end of its mandate on 1 June 2007, the Office was terminated.⁵⁴²

22. United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA), established pursuant to resolution 1401 (2002), continued to promote peace and stability in Afghanistan by leading efforts of the international community in conjunction with the Government of Afghanistan in rebuilding the country and strengthening the foundations of peace and constitutional democracy.

Mandate implementation

During the period under review, the Council, by a series of resolutions,⁵⁴³ decided to extend the mandate of UNAMA four times on the basis of the reports of the Secretary-General⁵⁴⁴ for further periods of 12 months, the last of which ended on 23 March 2008.

By resolution 1536 (2004) of 26 March 2004, the Council requested UNAMA, with the support of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to continue to assist the Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission in the full implementation of the human rights provisions of the new Afghan Constitution, in particular those regarding the full enjoyment by women of their human rights.⁵⁴⁵ It also requested UNAMA to support the establishment of a fair and transparent judicial system, and work towards the strengthening of the rule of law.⁵⁴⁶

Subsequent to the launching of the Afghanistan Compact⁵⁴⁷ on 31 January 2006, by resolution 1662 (2006) of 23 March 2006, the Council endorsed the recommendations of the Secretary-General⁵⁴⁸ that the mandate of UNAMA be (a) to provide political and strategic advice for the peace process, including strengthening the emerging democratic institutions of the State; (b) to provide good offices, as appropriate; (c) to assist the Government of Afghanistan in the coordination and monitoring of the implementation of the Afghanistan Compact, and co-chair the Joint Coordination and Monitoring Board; (d) to continue to promote human rights through an independent role in monitoring human rights violations and capacity-building of national institutions, in close collaboration with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights; (e) to continue to provide technical assistance in sectors where the United Nations had a demonstrated comparative advantage and expertise in Afghanistan, including in the disbandment of illegal armed groups and support to the Independent Electoral Commission; and (f) to continue to manage all United Nations humanitarian relief, recovery, reconstruction and development activities in Afghanistan, under the overall authority of the Special Representative and in coordination with the Government of Afghanistan. Regarding the structure and composition of UNAMA, the Mission would retain its previous structure with a few modifications to scope and size. The Mission would continue to be headed by a Special Representative of the Secretary-General, whose Office would remain to be supported by two pillars of (a) political affairs and (b) relief, recovery and development, but with some increase in international and national officers at UNAMA headquarters. UNAMA would maintain its current presence of eight regional offices and two subregional offices, and extend the reach of the regional offices, security circumstances permitting, by establishing an additional presence in other provincial capitals, according to their strategic importance.⁵⁴⁹

By resolution 1746 (2007) of 23 March 2007, the Council stressed the role of UNAMA to promote a more coherent international engagement in support of Afghanistan, to extend its good offices through outreach in Afghanistan, to support regional cooperation in the context of the Afghanistan Compact, to promote humanitarian coordination and to continue to contribute to human rights protection and promotion, including monitoring of the situation of civilians in armed conflict. It also welcomed the expanded presence of UNAMA in the provinces, through regional and provincial offices, which supported efforts at the central level to coordinate and monitor the implementation of the Afghanistan Compact and assist the efforts of the Government of Afghanistan and its international partners in improving the delivery of services to Afghan citizens throughout the country and encouraged further progress in this regard, including in the southern and eastern provinces, security circumstances permitting.⁵⁵⁰

23. United Nations Mission of Support in East Timor

During the period under review, the United Nations Mission of Support in East Timor (UNMISSET), established pursuant to resolution 1410 (2002), continued (a) to provide assistance to core administrative structures critical to the viability and political stability of East Timor; (b) to provide interim law enforcement and public security and assist in the development of a new law enforcement agency in East Timor, the East Timor Police Service; and (c) to contribute to the maintenance of the external and internal security of East Timor.

Mandate implementation

At the beginning of the period under review, the Council, welcoming the recommendations of the Secretary-General,⁵⁵¹ extended the mandate of UNMISSET twice, by resolutions 1543 (2004) and 1573 (2004), for periods of six months until 20 May 2005.⁵⁵²

By resolution 1543 (2004) of 14 May 2004, the Council decided to reduce the size of UNMISSET and revise its tasks, in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary-General,⁵⁵³ and decided accordingly that UNMISSET should have the following mandate: (a) support for the public administration and justice system of Timor-Leste and for justice in the area of serious crimes; (b) support to the development of law enforcement in Timor-Leste; and (c) support for the security and stability of Timor-Leste. The Council also decided that UNMISSET should include up to 58 civilian advisers, 157 civilian police advisers, 42 military liaison officers, 310 formed troops and a 125-person International Response Unit. The Council further decided that internationally accepted human rights principles should continue to form an integral part of training and capacity-building carried out by UNMISSET.⁵⁵⁴

Termination/transition to a new mission

By resolution 1573 (2004) of 16 November 2004, the Council requested UNMISSET to focus increasingly on implementing its exit strategy, particularly with a view to ensuring increasing involvement and ownership of the Timorese in the mission's three programme areas of the Mission, so that, when it departed from Timor-Leste, its responsibilities could be taken over by the Timorese, with the continued assistance of the United Nations system and bilateral and multilateral partners.⁵⁵⁵

By resolution 1599 (2005) of 28 April 2005, the Council commended UNMISSET and welcomed the continuing progress made towards the completion of key tasks inscribed in its mandate, particularly during its consolidation phase, in accordance with resolutions 1543 (2004) and 1573 (2004), while deciding to establish a follow-on special political mission in Timor-Leste, the United Nations Office in Timor-Leste.⁵⁵⁶ The mandate of UNMISSET was terminated on 20 May 2005.

Leste,⁵⁵⁷ on 28 April 2005, the Council, by resolution 1599 (2005), established the United Nations Office in Timor-Leste (UNOTIL) as a follow-on special political mission to UNMISSET for a period of one year, until 20 May 2006.

Pursuant to resolution 1599 (2005), UNOTIL was mandated (a) to support the development of critical State institutions through provision of up to 45 civilian advisers; (b) to support further development of the police through provision of up to 40 police advisers, and support the development of the Border Patrol Unit, through provision of up to 35 additional advisers, 15 of whom might be military advisers; (c) to provide training in observance of democratic governance and human rights through provision of up to 10 human rights officers; and (d) to monitor and review progress of the above tasks.⁵⁵⁸ The Council also requested that, when implementing its mandate, UNOTIL emphasize proper transfer of skills and knowledge in order to build the capacity of the public institutions of Timor-Leste to deliver their services in accordance with international principles of rule of law, justice, human rights, democratic governance, transparency, accountability and professionalism.⁵⁵⁹ UNOTIL was to be led by a Special Representative of the Secretary-General, who would direct the operations of the mission and coordinate all United Nations activities in Timor-Leste through his office, with due attention to the safety of personnel, and facilitated by appropriate levels of logistics support, including transportation assets, such as air transport when necessary.⁵⁶⁰ Subsequently the Special Representative was appointed through an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Council.⁵⁶¹

During the period under review, the Council, by a series of resolutions, and on the basis of requests of the Government of Timor-Leste,⁵⁶² extended the mandate of UNOTIL for periods of up to two months, the last until 25 August 2006, with a view of planning for the role of the United Nations following the expiration of the mandate of UNOTIL.⁵⁶³

Termination/transition to new mission

At the end of the mandate of UNOTIL on 25 August 2006, the Council, by resolution 1704 (2006) of that date, commended UNOTIL while establishing a follow-on mission, the United Nations Integrated Mission in Timor-Leste.⁵⁶⁴

25. United Nations Integrated Mission in Timor-Leste

On the basis of the recommendations of the Secretary-General⁵⁶⁵ and the requests by the Government of Timor-Leste,⁵⁶⁶ the Council, by resolution 1704 (2006) of 25 August 2006, decided to establish the United Nations Integrated Mission in Timor-Leste (UNMIT), for an initial period of six months with the intention to renew for further periods.⁵⁶⁷

Pursuant to resolution 1704 (2006), the mandate of UNMIT was (a) to support the Government of Timor-Leste and relevant institutions with a view to consolidating stability, enhancing a culture of democratic governance and facilitating political dialogue among Timorese stakeholders in their efforts to bring about a process of national reconciliation and to foster social cohesion; (b) to support Timor-Leste in all aspects of the 2007 presidential and parliamentary electoral process; (c) to ensure, through the presence of United Nations police, the restoration and maintenance of public security in Timor-Leste through the provision of support to the Timorese national police as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General;⁵⁶⁸ (d) to support the Government to liaise on security tasks and to establish a continuous presence in three border districts alongside armed United Nations police officers assigned to district police stations, through the

(n) to monitor and review progress in all of the above tasks.⁵⁷⁰

Pursuant to resolution 1704 (2006), UNMIT consisted of an appropriate civilian component, including up to 1,608 police personnel, and an initial component of up to 34 military liaison and staff officers and was headed by a Special Representative of the Secretary-General, who would direct the operations of the Mission and coordinate all United Nations activities in Timor-Leste.⁵⁷¹ The Special Representative was appointed through an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Council.⁵⁷²

Mandate implementation

By resolution 1745 (2007) of 22 February 2007, on the recommendation of the Secretary-General,⁵⁷³ the Council extended the mandate of UNMIT until 26 February 2008.⁵⁷⁴

On the basis of the request of the Government of Timor-Leste⁵⁷⁵ and the recommendations of the Secretary-General, the Council, by resolution 1745 (2007), decided to increase the authorized force strength of UNMIT by up to 140 police personnel in order to permit the deployment of an additional formed police unit to supplement the existing formed police unit, particularly during the pre- and post-electoral period.⁵⁷⁶

26. United Nations Observer Mission in Bougainville

Establishment, mandate and composition

The Secretary-General, by a letter dated 19 December 2003,⁵⁷⁷ informed the Council that, in accordance with the request of the Government of Papua New Guinea supported by the Bougainville parties, he intended to establish the United Nations Observer Mission in Bougainville (UNOMB) for six months, as a follow-on from the United Nations Political Office in Bougainville (UNPOB) whose mandate would expire on 31 December 2003. The Observer Mission would finish the residual tasks of UNPOB and support the efforts of the parties in the transitional period leading to the elections. By a letter dated 23 December 2003,⁵⁷⁸ the Council took note of that intention.

The mandate of UNOMB was (a) to chair the Peace Process Consultative Committee, which consulted with parties on the peace process in general, and make preparations for elections, in particular; (b) to report on the security and the subsequent destruction of the contained weapons; (c) to monitor the constitutional process leading to the adoption of the Bougainville Constitution; (d) to verify and certify substantial compliance by the parties in the handing-in of weapons and whether the level of security was conducive to the holding of elections, in accordance with the amended Constitution of Papua New Guinea, and, if requested by any of the parties, (e) to perform other good offices, as appropriate, or when requested to do so by the parties.⁵⁷⁹

UNOMB comprised a Head of Mission, one political adviser and two support staff.⁵⁸⁰

Mandate implementation

During the period under review, the mandate of UNPOB was extended on two occasions through exchanges of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council for further periods of six months, the last of which ended on 30 June 2005.⁵⁸¹

Termination

In a statement by the President of 15 June 2005, the Council noted with satisfaction that the performance of UNOMB had demonstrated that a small United Nations special political mission with a clearly defined mandate could make a critical contribution to a regional conflict resolution effort in an efficient and effective manner.⁵⁸² Upon the expiration of its mandate on 30 June 2005, the Mission was terminated.

Establishment, mandate and composition

By a presidential statement dated 1 December 2006,⁵⁸³ the Council noted the request of the parties for United Nations assistance in implementing key aspects of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement signed on 21 November 2006 by the Government of Nepal and the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist), in particular monitoring of arrangements relating to the management of arms and armed personnel of both sides and election monitoring, and expressed support for the intention of the Secretary-General to send a technical assessment mission to Nepal,⁵⁸⁴ with a view to proposing a fully developed concept of United Nations operations, including a United Nations political mission to deliver the assistance requested, and to dispatch an advance deployment of up to 35 monitors and 25 electoral personnel.

On the basis of the recommendations of the Secretary-General,⁵⁸⁵ the Council, by resolution 1740 (2007) of 23 January 2007, authorized the establishment of a United Nations political mission in Nepal, the United Nations Mission in Nepal (UNMIN) for a period of 12 months, until 23 January 2008.⁵⁸⁶

Pursuant to resolution 1740 (2007), the mandate of UNMIN was (a) to monitor the management of arms and armed personnel of both sides, in line with the provisions of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement; (b) to assist the parties, through a Joint Monitoring Coordinating Committee, in implementing their agreement on the management of arms and armed personnel of both sides; (c) to assist in the monitoring of the ceasefire arrangements; (d) to provide technical support for the planning, preparation and conduct of the election of a Constituent Assembly in a free and fair atmosphere; and (e) to provide a small team of electoral monitors to review all technical aspects of the electoral process, and report on the conduct of the election.⁵⁸⁷

In accordance with resolution 1740 (2007), the Mission would operate under the leadership of a Special Representative of the Secretary-General, with a planned staff of 1,073 personnel.⁵⁸⁸ The Special

28. United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), established pursuant to resolution 186 (1964), continued to fulfil its mandate to use its best efforts to prevent a recurrence of fighting and additional functions performed since a de facto ceasefire in August 1974 to supervise the ceasefire lines, provide humanitarian assistance and maintain the buffer zone.

Mandate implementation

On the basis of reports of the Secretary-General,⁵⁹⁰ the Council on eight occasions successively extended the mandate of UNFICYP for further periods of six months, the last until 15 June 2008.⁵⁹¹

Following the rejection of the proposed Comprehensive Settlement of the Cyprus Problem in the referenda of 24 April 2004,⁵⁹² by resolution 1568 (2004) of 22 October 2004, the Council endorsed the recommendations of the Secretary-General⁵⁹³ for the amendment of the concept of operations and force level of UNFICYP, namely, that the military component should be reduced to 860 all ranks, including up to 40 military observers/liaison officers; and the number of civilian police should be increased, while remaining within the current authorized strength; in addition, the political and civil affairs component of the Mission should be strengthened.⁵⁹⁴

During the period under review, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), established pursuant to resolution 50 (1948), continued to assist and cooperate with the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force in the Golan Heights and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, in accordance with its terms of reference.⁵⁹⁸

32. United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), established pursuant to resolution 350 (1974), continued, during the period under review, to monitor the ceasefire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic and to supervise the disengagement of Israeli and Syrian Arab Republic forces and to supervise the areas of separation and limitation, as provided in the agreement on disengagement. On the basis of the Secretary-General's reports,⁵⁹⁹ the Council decided, on eight occasions, to extend its mandate for further periods of six months, the last until 30 June 2008.⁶⁰⁰

33. United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), established pursuant to resolutions 425 (1978) and 426 (1978), continued to fulfil its mandate to confirm the withdrawal of Israeli forces, to restore international peace and security and assist the Government of Lebanon in restoring its effective authority in the area.

Mandate implementation

⁵⁹⁸ Since the establishment of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization, the Council has assigned it different tasks without formally changing its mandate: the supervision of the General Armistice, the supervision of the armistice following the Suez war, the supervision of the ceasefire between Egypt and Israel in the Sinai, and the supervision of the truce between Israel and Lebanon and Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic, in collaboration with the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, respectively.

Furthermore, by an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and its President,⁶⁰⁵ the Council, in response to the Secretary-General's recommendations,⁶⁰⁶ authorized the reinforcement of UNIFIL with a maritime unit for controlling the coastline.

34. United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq (UNAMI), established pursuant to resolution 1500 (2003), continued to coordinate the activities of the United Nations in post-conflict processes in Iraq.

Mandate implementation

The Council adopted four resolutions on the basis of the recommendations of the Secretary-General⁶⁰⁷ and the requests of the Government of Iraq,⁶⁰⁸ extending the mandate of UNAMI for further periods of one year, the last until 10 August 2008.⁶⁰⁹

Subsequent to the formation of a sovereign Interim Government of Iraq, as presented on 1 June 2004, which would assume full responsibility and authority by 30 June 2004 for governing Iraq, the Council, by resolution 1546 (2004) of 8 June 2004, adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, decided that in implementing, as circumstances permitted, their mandate to assist the Iraqi people and Government, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and UNAMI, as requested by the Government of Iraq should (a) play a leading role to assist in the convening, during the month of July 2004, of a national conference to select a Consultative Council; advise and support the Independent Electoral Commission of Iraq, as well as the Interim Government of Iraq and the Transitional National Assembly, on the process for holding elections; and promote national dialogue and consensus-building on the drafting of a national constitution by the people of Iraq; and also (b) advise the Government of Iraq in the development of effective civil and social services; contribute to the coordination and delivery of reconstruction, development, and humanitarian assistance; promote the protection of human rights, national reconciliation, and judicial and legal reform in order to strengthen the rule of law in Iraq; and advise and assist the Government of Iraq on initial planning for the eventual conduct of a comprehensive census.⁶¹⁰

In September and October 2004, through an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and its President,⁶¹¹ the Council welcomed the arrangement proposed by the Secretary-General to establish an integrated United Nations security structure to carry out access control and patrols within Mission facilities; to provide personal security details for personnel both within United Nations premises and on the move; and to conduct training and coordinate security arrangements between UNAMI and other United Nations organizations, as well as with the multinational force in Iraq authorized by resolutions 1511 (2003) and 1546 (2004). The UNAMI integrated security structure would consist of four elements, namely, international security staff, protection coordination officers, personal security details and three guard units. Each guard unit would consist of up to 160 armed civilian police, paramilitary or military personnel and have the specific responsibility of controlling access to and conducting patrols within UNAMI premises.

By resolution 1770 (2007) of 10 August 2007, the Council decided that, as circumstances permitted, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Iraq and UNAMI, at the request of the Government of Iraq, should (a) advise, support and assist the Government and people of Iraq on advancing their inclusive, political dialogue and national reconciliation; on the development of processes for holding elections and referendums; on constitutional review and the implementation of constitutional

1. United Nations Office for West Africa

At the beginning of the period under review, the United Nations Office for West Africa (UNOWA), established in November 2001 by the Secretary-General, continued to carry out the following tasks: (a) enhance linkages in the work of the United Nations and other partners in the subregion, by promoting an integrated subregional approach and facilitating coordination and information exchange, with due regard to specific mandates of United Nations organizations as well as peacekeeping operations and peacebuilding support offices; (b) liaise with and assist, as appropriate, the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and the Mano River Union, in consultation with other subregional organizations and international partners; (c) carry out good offices roles and special assignments in countries of the subregion, on behalf of the Secretary-General, including in the areas of conflict prevention and peacebuilding efforts; and (d) report to Headquarters on key developments of subregional significance.

Mandate implementation

During the period under review, the mandate of UNOWA was extended twice, by exchanges of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Council, for periods of three years, subject to a midterm review in 2006 and 2009, respectively; the last extension was until 31 December 2010.⁶¹³

In an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and its President in December 2004 and January 2005,⁶¹⁴ the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention to strengthen UNOWA to enable it to perform its mandate more effectively. UNOWA was entrusted with the overall mandate of enhancing the contribution of the United Nations towards the achievement of peace and security priorities in West Africa. In addition to the original mandate, UNOWA was asked to carry out additional tasks as assigned by the Secretary-General and the Security Council, including providing support to the work of the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission and follow-up of the relevant recommendations contained in the report of the Security Council mission to West Africa of June 2004,⁶¹⁵ and of the Council's recommendations on cross-border issues in West Africa.⁶¹⁶ The tasks of UNOWA would include enhancing harmonization of the activities of the various United Nations missions and other regional entities, strengthening cooperation with ECOWAS and other key regional and international partners and working on cross-border issues in the region.⁶¹⁷

In a statement by the President on 25 February 2005, emphasizing the need to pursue security sector reforms aiming at improving civil-military relations in countries emerging from conflict situations and creating a culture of peace and stability and promoting the rule of law, the Council requested UNOWA to further explore with interested Governments and organizations ways in which security sector reforms could be formulated and implemented.⁶¹⁸ The report on the midterm review was submitted to the Council on 18 May 2007.⁶¹⁹

By an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council in November and December 2007,⁶²⁰ the mandate of UNOWA was revised in accordance with three objectives. Under its first objective to enhance capability within West Africa towards a harmonized subregional approach to peace and security, UNOWA was mandated (a) to facilitate systematic and regular linkages in the work of the United Nations in the subregion for defining and harmonizing national and subregional policies and strategies, with due regard to specific mandates of United Nations organizations, as well as peacekeeping operations and peacebuilding support offices;⁶²¹ (b) to liaise with and assist, as appropriate ECOWAS, the Mano River Union and other key partners in their promotion of peace and stability in the subregion;⁶²² and (c) to perform good offices role in countries of the subregion on conflict prevention and peacebuilding efforts.⁶²³ Under the tools being used by the United Nations system; (iv) to identify and raise awareness on emerging threats to peace and security, with particular attention will be given to the Sahelian band and fragile States; (v) to identify positive trends and promote activities in consultation with and participation of the private sector, including civil society organizations, to raise awareness of subregional issues and United Nations approaches; (vi) to reinforce cooperation on cross-cutting issues, including the rule of law, economic issues, human rights and gender issues aimed at mainstreaming them in the deliberations/recommendations of joint initiatives with Governments, civil society, the academic and private sectors, and other partners in the region; and (vii) to make use of UNOWA leverage, and political and strategic network to rally international support to subregional efforts and national commitments to tackle cross-cutting threats to human security and subregional peace.

⁶²² Under this function, the activities were (i) to implement and update the joint programme of work developed by UNOWA and the ECOWAS Commission to address selected areas relating to conflict prevention and peacebuilding; (ii) to assist the ECOWAS Commission in the implementation of its comprehensive Strategic Conflict Prevention Framework, as well as the ECOWAS Protocol relating to the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management, Resolution, Peacekeeping and Security; implement subregional action plans, strategies and recommendations formulated with/by ECOWAS and other key partners, including the civil society and the private sector; (iii) to promote awareness of the need to address the protection of children, youth, and women during crises as priority issues in West Africa; (iv) to strengthen cooperation with the International Contact Group for the Mano River Basin; and (v) to strengthen cooperation with international partners, including the European Union (within the agreed framework of ECOWAS/European Union/UNOWA cooperation) and the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as regional partners such as civil society organizations and the private sector.

⁶²¹ Under this function, the activities were (i) to facilitate inter-mission and inter-agency cooperation among United Nations missions in the subregion at the political level, at the military level, and at the expert level; (ii) to hold regular consultations of heads of United Nations regional agencies for West Africa to develop common strategies; (iii) to establish and conduct activities of subregional working groups aiming to foster greater interaction among the various planning and response

second objective to enhance efforts towards addressing cross-border issues, including good governance practices and measures; mainstreaming security sector reform into development strategies; formulating a meaningful, effective and integrated subregional approach that encompasses priorities and concerns related to humanitarian, human rights and gender issues; and curbing corruption, youth unemployment, rapid urbanization, transitional justice and cross-border illicit activities. UNOWA was tasked (a) to promote good governance practices and confidence-building measures, including curbing corruption and improving electoral processes;⁶²⁴ (b) to take an integrated approach to security sector reform as part of economic development strategies;⁶²⁵ (c) to develop and promote better knowledge and awareness of subregional problems confronting West Africa;⁶²⁶ and (d) to integrated subregional approach by supporting and partnering with ECOWAS and other subregional partners in their conflict prevention and peacebuilding efforts.

⁶²⁴ Under this function, the activities were (i) to undertake regular consultations and contribute to the deepening of civic education aimed at strengthening democratic, transparent and accountable governance in the States of the subregion; (ii) to assist ECOWAS and its member States in their efforts to improve electoral processes through a more robust election-monitoring capacity; (iii) to follow up on implementation of a subregional approach to the greater involvement of women in peace and security issues, within the framework of the implementation of United Nations Security Council resolution 1325 (2000); (iv) to facilitate the identification of practical ways of curbing or minimizing emerging or potential tensions in specific border areas of West Africa, including through the formulation of integrated border strategies; and (v) to assist ECOWAS in the implementation of its initiative on borders as zones of peace.

⁶²⁵ Under this function, the activities were (i) to undertake broad consultations with Governments, and, in particular, security institutions, civil society and development partners on gender, poverty alleviation, human rights and humanitarian mainstreaming in security sector reforms; and (ii) to promote capacity-building of armed and security forces in civic, human rights, humanitarian and gender approaches as part of security sector reforms.

⁶²⁶ Under this function, the activities were (i) to undertake studies, organize forums and seminars and help develop practical and concerted strategies for addressing current and emerging issues, including the subregional dimensions of youth unemployment, fast growing urbanization, security sector reform, transitional justice, the proliferation of small arms and light weapons, drug strengthen cooperation with the ECOWAS Commission and with representatives of ECOWAS member States at ECOWAS headquarters in Abuja, focusing on governance and development issues.⁶²⁷ Under the final objective to carry out additional tasks assigned by the Secretary-General and the Security Council, it was given the function of facilitating the implementation of the International Court of Justice ruling of 10 October 2002 on the land and maritime boundary dispute between Cameroon and Nigeria.⁶²⁸ and human trafficking, piracy and terrorist threats; (ii) to prepare periodic updates on the subregional impact of conflict situations on sustainable peace and development; and (iii) to develop targeted public information strategies on subregional issues in West Africa, with a focus on human rights and economic governance and their impact on peace and security.

⁶²⁷ Under this function, the activities were (i) to assist ECOWAS in the implementation of its new Strategic Vision for Regional Development, adopted at the ECOWAS Heads of State Summit in Abuja on 15 June 2007, as well as its Protocol on the Free Movement of Persons and on the Right of Residence and Establishment; (ii) to assist ECOWAS in the implementation of its Protocol on Democracy and Good Governance, including through regular working group sessions as well as joint programmes and activities; and (iii) to increase the participation of the public sector, civil society, the academic community and the private sector in ECOWAS-UNOWA joint initiatives and activities addressing governance issues and challenges.

⁶²⁸ Under this function, the activities were (i) to assist the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission in the implementation of activities related to its mandate, including the demarcation of the land boundary between the two countries; the civilian observation following the peaceful and orderly transfer of authority in the Lake Chad area, along the land boundary and in the Bakassi peninsula; (ii) to assist the follow-up committee in monitoring the implementation of the Greentree Agreement (12 June 2006) on the withdrawal and transfer of authority in the Bakassi peninsula; (iii) to assist the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission in addressing issues related to the needs of the affected populations in border areas and in the Bakassi peninsula; and (iv) to assist the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission to make recommendations on confidence-building measures, such as the development of projects to promote joint economic ventures and cross-border cooperation, and the revitalization of the Lake Chad Basin Commission.

Establishment, mandate and composition

In a letter dated 7 May 2007 to the President of the Council,⁶²⁹ the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention to establish a United Nations Regional Centre for Preventive Diplomacy at Ashgabat at the initiative of the Governments of five Central Asian countries.

The Centre would be established in parallel with the phasing down and closure of the United Nations Tajikistan Office of Peacebuilding with the following functions: (a) to liaise with the Governments of the region and, with their concurrence, with other parties concerned on issues relevant to preventive diplomacy; (b) to monitor and analyse the situation on the ground and to provide the Secretary-General with up-to-date information related to conflict prevention efforts; (c) to maintain contact with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Commonwealth of Independent States, the Shanghai Cooperation Organization and other regional organizations, encourage their peacemaking efforts and initiatives, and facilitate coordination and information exchange with due regard to their specific mandates; (d) to provide a political framework and leadership for the preventive activities of the United Nations country teams in the region and to support the efforts of the Resident Coordinators and those of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, in promoting an integrated approach to preventive development and humanitarian assistance; and (e) to maintain close contact with the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan to ensure a comprehensive and integrated analysis of the situation in the region.

In a letter from the President of the Council, the Council took note of the intention of the Secretary-General.⁶³⁰

G. Peacebuilding Commission

Establishment

By resolution 1645 (2005) of 20 December 2005, the Security Council, acting concurrently with the General Assembly, in accordance with Articles 7, 22 and 29 of the Charter, and with a view to operationalizing the decision of the 2005 World Summit,⁶³¹ decided to establish the Peacebuilding Commission as an intergovernmental advisory body.⁶³² It also decided that the arrangements for the Peacebuilding Commission would be reviewed after five years to ensure that they were appropriate to fulfil the agreed functions of the Commission.⁶³³

Mandate

Pursuant to resolution 1645 (2005), the main purposes of the Peacebuilding Commission were (a) to bring together all relevant actors to marshal resources and to advise on and propose integrated strategies for post-conflict peacebuilding and recovery; (b) to focus attention on the reconstruction and institution-building efforts necessary for recovery from conflict and to support the development of integrated strategies in order to lay the foundation for sustainable development; and (c) to provide recommendations and information to improve the coordination of all relevant actors within and outside the United Nations, to develop best practices, to help to ensure predictable financing for early recovery activities and to extend the period of attention given by the international community to post-conflict recovery.⁶³⁴ The Council also underlined that in post-conflict situations with which it was actively seized, in particular when there was a United Nations-mandated peacekeeping mission on the ground or under way and given the primary responsibility of the Council for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the Charter, the main purpose of the Commission would be to provide advice to the Council at its request.⁶³⁵

⁶³¹ See General Assembly resolution 60/1.

⁶³³ Resolution 1645 (2005), paras. 1 and 27.

⁶³⁴ Ibid., para. 2.

⁶³⁵ Ibid., para. 16.

Composition

By resolution 1645 (2005), the Council decided that the Commission would meet in various configurations and have a standing Organizational Committee, responsible for developing its own rules of procedure and working methods, comprising (a) seven members of the Security Council, including permanent members, selected according to rules and procedures decided by the Council; (b) seven members of the Economic and Social Council, elected from regional groups according to rules and procedures decided by the Council with due consideration to those countries that had experienced post-conflict recovery; (c) five top providers of assessed contributions to United Nations budgets and of voluntary contributions to United Nations funds, programmes and agencies, including a standing peacebuilding fund, that were not among those selected in (a) or (b) above, selected by and from among the 10 top providers, giving due consideration to the size of their contributions, according to a list provided by the Secretary-General, based on the average annual contributions in the previous three calendar years for which statistical data were available; (d) five top providers of military personnel and civilian police to United Nations missions that were not among those selected in (a), (b) or (c) above selected by and from among the 10 top providers, giving due consideration to the size of their contributions, according to a list provided by the Secretary-General, based on the average monthly contributions in the previous three calendar years for which statistical data were available; and (e) seven additional members elected according to rules of procedure decided by the General Assembly, with due consideration to representation from all regional groups in the overall composition of the Committee and to representation from countries that had experienced post-conflict recovery. Members of the Organizational Committee serve for renewable terms of two years, as applicable.⁶³⁶

In accordance with resolution 1645 (2005), country-specific meetings of the Commission, upon the invitation of the Organizational Committee, also included as members representatives of (a) the country under consideration; (b) countries in the region engaged in the post-conflict process and other countries that were involved in relief efforts and/or political dialogue, as well as relevant regional and subregional organizations; (c) the major financial, troop and civilian police contributors involved in the recovery effort; (d) the senior United Nations representative in the field and other relevant United Nations representatives; and (e) such regional and international financial institutions as might be relevant.⁶³⁷

Appointments to the Organizational Committee. By resolution 1646 (2005) of 20 December 2005, the Council decided, pursuant to paragraph 4 (a) of resolution 1645 (2005), that the permanent members listed in Article 23 (1) of the Charter would be members of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission and that, in addition, the Council would select annually two of its elected members to participate in the Organizational Committee. For 2006 and 2007, Denmark and the United Republic of Tanzania, and Panama and South Africa, respectively, were selected as the two members of the Council's elected member category for the Organizational Committee for a term of one year.⁶³⁸

Monitoring and reporting. By resolution 1646 (2005), the Council decided that the annual report referred to in paragraph 15 of resolution 1645 (2005) would also be submitted to the Security Council for an annual debate.⁶³⁹ On 25 July 2007, the Peacebuilding Commission submitted the report on its first session to the Security Council.

Requests for advice on Burundi and Sierra Leone. In a letter dated 21 June 2006 from its President to the Secretary-General, the Council requested the advice of the Peacebuilding Commission, in accordance with paragraph 12 of resolution 1645 (2005), on the situations in Burundi and Sierra Leone, which had expressed their desire to be considered by the Peacebuilding Commission.⁶⁴⁰ In a letter dated 20 December 2006 to the President of the Council, the Chair of the Peacebuilding Commission informed the Council that, following the inclusion of Burundi and Sierra Leone in the Commission's agenda on 23 June 2006, it had held two country-specific meetings on each of those two countries in 2006 and that both countries had made progress.⁶⁴¹ By a letter dated 11 December 2007 to the Chair of the Peacebuilding Commission, the President of the Council supported the request of the Government of Guinea-Bissau to be placed on the agenda of the Commission and stated that the Council supported that request and invited the Commission to provide advice on the situation in Guinea-Bissau. The Council considered that the advice of the Commission would be particularly useful in the areas of (a) governmental capacity to institute effective oversight and management of national finances, and comprehensive public sector reform, including effective anti-corruption policies and programmes; (b) action by the national Government and the international community to develop effective, accountable and sustainable security systems and to strengthen the independence of the judiciary and the rule of law, taking account, in particular, of the dangers posed by drug trafficking and organized crime; and (c) ongoing development of democratic accountability and preparations for elections in 2008.⁶⁴²

Subsidiary organs of the Security Council proposed but not established

Note

During the period under review, there was one instance in which a subsidiary organ was formally proposed but not created. The proposal was submitted in the form of a draft resolution and related to the situation in Cyprus.⁶⁴³

Proposal submitted at the 4947th meeting of the Council, on 21 April 2004, with respect to the situation in Cyprus

On 16 April 2004, shortly before the holding of two separate but simultaneous referenda in Cyprus on the Comprehensive Settlement of the Cyprus Problem (the “Annan plan”), the Secretary-General submitted a report on his mission of good offices in Cyprus.⁶⁴⁴ In the report, the Secretary-General drew the attention of the Security Council to appendix E of the Annan plan, by which the Council would be requested to, inter alia, establish a new United Nations operation to monitor the implementation of the Comprehensive Settlement. Bearing in mind that the provisions for the new United Nations operation would have to enter into force simultaneously with the Comprehensive Settlement on 29 April, and the need to reassure Cypriots that the Council would be prepared to meet the responsibilities foreseen in the plan, the Secretary-General requested the Council to consider taking action in advance of the referenda of 24 April, while making the entry into force of the plan contingent on the outcome of the referenda.

At its 4947th meeting, on 21 April 2004, the Council considered a draft resolution to that effect, submitted by the United Kingdom and the United States,⁶⁴⁵ by which the Council would have decided, inter alia, to terminate the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus and to establish a new operation in Cyprus, to be known as the United Nations Settlement Implementation Mission in Cyprus, with responsibilities including monitoring, verification and supervision of the implementation of the Comprehensive Settlement, contingent on the outcome of the 24 April referenda and the entry into force of the Comprehensive Settlement.

The draft resolution was put to the vote and received 14 votes in favour and 1 against (Russian Federation), and was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member.⁶⁴⁶

⁶⁴³ Instances in which members of the Security Council, during Council proceedings, or Member States in communications to the President of the Council, proposed the creation of subsidiary organs without submitting their suggestions in the form of draft resolutions were not considered.

Introductory note

This chapter, as in previous volumes, deals with relations of the Security Council with the other principal organs of the United Nations: the General Assembly (part I); the Economic and Social Council (part II); the International Court of Justice (part IV); and the Secretariat (part V). During the period under review, no material relating to the Trusteeship Council (part III) required treatment. This chapter does not contain any material relating to the Military Staff Committee, which had been included in previous supplements. The functions of the Military Staff Committee in relation to the Security Council, to the extent that they are governed by Articles 45, 46 and 47 of the Charter, are covered in chapter XI, part V, of the present Supplement.

Part I Relations with the General Assembly

Note

Part I concerns various aspects of the relationship between the Security Council and the General Assembly.

Section A deals with the election by the General Assembly of non-permanent members of the Security Council. Section B considers the practice of the General Assembly in making recommendations to the Council under Articles 10 and 11 of the Charter of the United Nations, and calling its attention under Article 11 (3) to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security. Section C concerns the limitation imposed by Article 12 (1) on the authority of the General Assembly to make recommendations with respect to any dispute or situation while the Council is exercising the functions assigned to it by the Charter in respect of that dispute or situation. It also describes the procedure under Article 12 (2) by which the Secretary-General notifies the Assembly of matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Council, and when the Council ceases to deal with such matters. Section D considers those instances in which a decision by the Council must be taken prior to that of the General Assembly, for example, the admission, suspension, or expulsion of members, the appointment of the Secretary-General, and the election of the judges of the International Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, respectively. Section E refers to the annual and special reports submitted by the Council to the General Assembly. Section F concerns relations between the Council and certain subsidiary organs established by the General Assembly which have reported to or otherwise played a part in the work of the Council. Section G deals with the Peacebuilding Commission, a subsidiary body, which was established by both the Council and the General Assembly.

A. Election by the General Assembly of non-permanent members of the Security Council

1. The Security Council shall consist of fifteen Members of the United Nations. The Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America shall be permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly shall elect ten other Members of the United Nations to be non-permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid, in the first instance to the contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization, and also to equitable geographical distribution.

2. The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of the non-permanent members after the increase of the membership of the Security Council from eleven to fifteen, two of the four additional members shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.

Note

During the period under review, in accordance with Article 23 of the Charter, the General Assembly, at each regular session, elected five non-permanent members of the Security Council to replace those members whose terms of office were to expire on 31 December of the respective year. At the fifty-ninth, sixtieth and sixty-second sessions, the Assembly elected the five non-permanent members in the course of one plenary meeting. At the sixty-first session, the Assembly elected four non-permanent members at its 32nd plenary meeting and the fifth non-permanent member at its 49th plenary meeting. B. Recommendations by the General Assembly to the Security Council in the form of resolutions under Articles 10 and 11 of the Charter

Article 10

The General Assembly may discuss any questions or any matters within the scope of the present Charter or relating to the powers and functions of any organs provided for in the present Charter, and except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations to the Members of the United Nations or to the Security Council or to both on any such questions or matters.

Article 11

1. The General Assembly may consider the general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and the regulation of armaments, and may make recommendations with regard to such principles to the Members or to the Security Council or to both.

2. The General Assembly may discuss any questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security brought before it by any Member of the United Nations, or by the Security Council or by a state which is not a Member of the United Nations in accordance with Article 35, paragraph 2, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations with regard to any such questions to the state or states concerned or to the Security Council or to both. Any such question on which action is necessary shall be referred to the Security Council by the General Assembly either before or after discussion.

3. The General Assembly may call the attention of the Security Council to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security.

4. The powers of the General Assembly set forth in this Article shall not limit the general scope of Article 10.

Note

During the period under review, the General Assembly made a number of recommendations — in the form of resolutions — to the Security Council regarding the maintenance of international peace and security. Several of those recommendations were of a general nature, touching upon the “powers and functions” of the Council under the Charter, and/or upon “the general principles of cooperation in the maintenance of international peace and security”. As such, they may be seen to be illustrative of the recommendation-making powers of the General Assembly under Articles 10 and 11 (1) of the Charter, respectively. A table of those recommendations is set out below.

In other instances, the General Assembly did not make recommendations to the Security Council with regard to specific questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security, nor request action from the Council with regard to such questions, in accordance with Article 11 (2) of the Charter.

The General Assembly did not draw the attention of the Security Council to any situations under Article 11 (3).

Recommendations on matters relating to the Council’s powers and functions or with regard to the general principles of cooperation in the maintenance of international peace and security

| 59/314 13 September 2005 | Draft outcome document of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly of September 2005 | Encourages the Security Council to consider ways to strengthen its monitoring and enforcement role in counter-terrorism, including by consolidating State reporting requirements, taking into account and respecting the different mandates of its counter-terrorism subsidiary bodies. |
| 60/1 16 September 2005 | 2005 World Summit Outcome | Calls upon the Security Council, with the support of the Secretary-General, to improve its monitoring of the implementation and effects of sanctions, to ensure that sanctions are implemented in an accountable manner, to review regularly the results of such monitoring and to develop a mechanism to address special economic problems arising from the application of sanctions in accordance with the Charter. Calls upon the Security Council, with the support of the Secretary-General, to ensure that fair and clear procedures exist for placing individuals and entities on sanctions lists and for removing them, as well as for granting humanitarian exemptions. Recommends that the Security Council continue to adapt its working methods so as to increase the involvement of States not members of the Council in its work, as appropriate, enhance its accountability to the membership and increase the transparency of its work. Requests the Security Council to consider the composition, mandate and working methods of the Military Staff Committee. |
| 60/286 8 September 2006 | Revitalization of the General Assembly | Urges the Presidents of the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council to meet periodically to ensure increased cooperation and coordination of their work programmes in accordance with their respective responsibilities under the Charter; the President of the Assembly shall inform Member States about the outcome of those meetings on a regular basis. Invites the Security Council to further its initiatives to improve the quality of its annual report to the General Assembly, mandated by Article 24, paragraph 3, of the Charter, in order to provide the Assembly with a substantive and analytical report. Invites the Security Council to update the General Assembly on a regular basis on the steps it has taken or is contemplating with respect to improving its reporting to the Assembly. Also invites the Security Council to submit periodically, in accordance with Articles 15 and 24 of the Charter, special subject-oriented reports to the General Assembly for its consideration on issues of current international concern. |
| 62/159 18 December 2007 | Protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism | Encourages the Security Council and its Counter-Terrorism Committee to strengthen the links and to continue to develop cooperation with relevant human rights bodies, in particular with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism and other relevant special procedures and mechanisms of the Human Rights Council, giving due regard to the promotion and protection of human rights in the ongoing work pursuant to relevant Security Council resolutions relating to terrorism. |

C. Practice in relation to Article 12 of the Charter

1. While the Security Council is exercising in respect of any dispute or situation the functions assigned to it in the present Charter, the General Assembly shall not make any recommendation with regard to that dispute or situation unless the Security Council so requests.

2. The Secretary-General, with the consent of the Security Council, shall notify the General Assembly at each session of any matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Security Council and shall similarly notify the General Assembly, or the Members of the United Nations if the General Assembly is not in session, immediately the Security Council ceases to deal with such matters.

Note

During the period under review, there was no discussion in the Security Council of the nature of the limitation placed by Article 12 (1) upon the authority of the General Assembly to make recommendations. Nor did the Council request that the General Assembly make a recommendation in respect of a dispute or situation in accordance with the exception provided for in Article 12 (1). The General Assembly did, however, adopt a resolution at its tenth emergency special session on illegal Israeli actions in Occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which followed the earlier rejection by the Security Council of two draft resolutions on a parallel agenda item. Thus, in effect, the Security Council and the General Assembly considered and made decisions on the same agenda item (case 1).

In accordance with Article 12 (2), the Secretary-General continued to notify the General Assembly of “matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Security Council” and of matters with which the Council had ceased to deal.¹ These notifications were based upon the summary statement of matters of which the Security Council is seized and of the stage reached in their consideration, circulated each week to the members of the Security Council, in accordance with rule 11 of the provisional rules of procedure of the Council.² The items in the notifications were the same as those in the summary statements for the relevant period, apart from those items not considered to relate to the maintenance of international peace and security.

The matters being dealt with by the Security Council were divided in the notifications into two categories: (a) matters discussed during the period since the last notification; and (b) other matters of which the Council remained seized, but which it had not discussed at a formal meeting since the last notification. As a matter of practice, when the Council subsequently ceased to deal with a matter listed in a notification, the Secretary-General so informed the General Assembly through the circulation of an addendum to the relevant notification. However, no such addendum was issued during the period under review.

The consent of the Council, required by Article 12 (2), was obtained through the circulation by the Secretary-General to the members of the Council of copies of the draft notifications. The General Assembly formally took note of the various notifications.

At the 5564th meeting of the Security Council, held on 9 November 2006 in connection with the situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question, a permanent member of the Council exercised its negative vote on the text of a draft resolution.³ After the Council’s meeting, by a letter dated 14 November 2006, the representative of Qatar requested, on behalf of the States members of the

² Rule 11 reads as follows: “The Secretary-General shall communicate each week to the representatives on the Security Council a summary statement of matters of which the Security Council is seized and of the stage reached in their consideration”.

League of Arab States, the resumption of the tenth emergency special session of the General-Assembly;⁴ and by a letter dated 15 November 2006, the representative of Cuba, in his capacity as the Chairman of the Coordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement, conveyed the support of the Non-Aligned Movement for that request.⁵

At the tenth emergency special session of the General Assembly, on illegal Israeli actions in occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, resumed on 17 November 2006 under the “uniting for peace” formula,⁶ several speakers regretted the failure of the Security Council to uphold its responsibilities owing to the negative vote of a permanent member of the Council.⁷ The representative of Cuba, speaking on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, stated that by convening the meeting, the General Assembly was playing the role and exercising the authority inherent in it with regard to issues relating to the maintenance of international peace and security, as set out in Articles 10, 11, 12, 13, 14 and 35 of the Charter of the United Nations.⁸ At the end of the meeting, the General Assembly adopted resolution ES-10/16, which was similar in substance to the draft resolution vetoed in the Security Council, with identical provisions in several paragraphs.

D. Practice in relation to provisions of the Charter involving recommendations by the Security Council to the General Assembly

Note

On a number of matters, the Charter of the United Nations provides for joint decision-making by the Security Council and the General Assembly, but requires the decision by the Council to be taken first. This is the case, for instance, with respect to the admission, suspension, or expulsion of members

(Articles 4, 5 and 6), the appointment of the Secretary-General (Article 97), and the conditions under which a State that is not a United Nations member may become a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice (Article 93 (2)).⁹ In addition, the statutes of the Tribunals established for Rwanda and the former Yugoslavia provide for the Security Council to submit a list of candidates to the General Assembly, from which the Assembly would elect the judges of the Tribunals (article 12 of the statute of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia; article 13 of the statute of the International Tribunal for Rwanda).¹⁰

This section considers briefly the Council’s practice during the period under review in relation to the admission of members, the appointment of the Secretary-General, and the election of the judges of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and of the International Tribunal for Rwanda. No question arose concerning the conditions of accession to the statute of the International Court of Justice.

¹⁰ The full titles of the two Tribunals are as follows: (1) International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994; and (2) International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991. The procedure for the election of judges of the two Tribunals is set out in article 13 (2), (3) and (4) of the statute of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and article 12 (2), (3), (4) and (5) of the statute of the International Tribunal for Rwanda. In each case, in accordance with the statute, the Secretary-General forwards to the President of the Security Council the nominations received. The Security Council then convenes a meeting, in accordance with the understanding reached in its prior consultations, and adopts a resolution establishing the list of candidates for judges. Subsequently, the President of the Security Council formally transmits, by letter, the text of the resolution to the President of the General Assembly. The Assembly then proceeds to elect the judges from the list contained in that resolution.

1. Membership in the United Nations

The admission of a State to membership in the United Nations, and the suspension or expulsion of a Member State from the Organization, is effected by “the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council” (Articles 4 (2), 5 and 6 of the Charter). In accordance with rule 60 of its provisional rules of procedure, the Council submits to the General Assembly, within specified time limits, its recommendations concerning each application for membership together with a record of its discussions of the application.

During the period under review, the Council recommended the admission of one State to membership in the United Nations.¹¹ It made no negative recommendations which would have required submission of a special report to the General Assembly. The Council did not discuss or recommend the suspension or expulsion of any Member.

2. Appointment of the Secretary-General

Article 97

The Secretariat shall comprise a Secretary-General and such staff as the Organization may require. The Secretary-General shall be appointed by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. He shall be the chief administrative officer of the Organization.

Rule 48

... Any recommendation to the General Assembly regarding the appointment of the Secretary-General shall be discussed and decided at a private meeting.

In accordance with rule 48 of the provisional rules of procedure, the meetings of the Security Council to consider the question of a recommendation to the General Assembly regarding the appointment of the Secretary-General were held in private, and the Council voted by secret ballot. A communiqué circulated at the end of each meeting, in accordance with rule 55, indicated the stage reached in the consideration of the recommendation. During the period under review, the Council considered and unanimously adopted a recommendation of this nature (case 2).

Case 2

At its 5547th meeting, held in private on 9 October 2006, the Security Council considered the question of the recommendation for the appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Resolution 1715 (2006), recommending that Mr. Ban Ki-Moon be appointed Secretary-General of the United Nations for a term of office from 1 January 2007 to 31 December 2011, was adopted by acclamation.¹² The nomination was made several months before the expiration of the term in office of the then Secretary-General, Mr. Kofi Annan. By a letter dated 9 October 2006 addressed to the President of the General Assembly,¹³ the President of the Security Council transmitted the recommendation to the President of the General Assembly.¹⁴

3. Election of the judges of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and of the International Tribunal for Rwanda

Note

The procedure for the election of judges of the two Tribunals is set out in article 13 (2), (3) and (4) of the statute of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and article 12 (2), (3), (4) and (5) of the statute of the International Tribunal for Rwanda.¹⁵

¹² Resolution 1715 (2006) was adopted by the Security Council at its 5547th (closed) meeting, on 9 October 2006. This was the fourth time a resolution regarding the appointment of the Secretary-General had been adopted by acclamation in the Security Council. For previous instances, see Repertoire, Supplement 2000-2003.

¹⁴ At the 31st plenary meeting of its sixty-first session, on 31 October 2006, the General Assembly adopted resolution 61/3, by which it appointed Mr. Ban Ki-Moon Secretary-General of the United Nations.

¹⁵ For the text of the statute of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, see S/25704, annex, which was adopted in Council resolution 827 (1993) of 25 May 1993. For the text of the statute of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, see Council resolution 955 (1994)

In each case, in accordance with the statute, the Secretary-General forwarded to the President of the Security Council the nominations received. The Security Council then convened a meeting, in accordance with the understanding reached in its prior consultations, and adopted a resolution establishing the list of candidates for judges. Subsequently, the President of the Security Council formally transmitted, by a letter, the text of the resolution to the President of the General Assembly. The Assembly then proceeded to elect the judges from the list contained in that resolution (cases 3 and 4).

International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia

At its 5057th meeting, on 14 October 2004, the Security Council adopted resolution 1567 (2004) whereby, in accordance with article 13 bis, subparagraph 1 (d), of the statute of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, it established a list of 22 candidates, taking due account of the adequate representation of the principal legal systems of the world, from which the General Assembly could elect the 11 judges of the Tribunal. The list was formally conveyed to the President of the General Assembly by a letter dated 14 October 2004 from the President of the Security Council. By a letter of the same date,¹⁶ the President of the Security Council transmitted to the President of the General Assembly the text of resolution 1567 (2004). At its fifty-ninth session, at the 57th plenary meeting, on 18 November 2004, in accordance with article 13 (2) (d) of the statute, the General Assembly elected 14 judges for the Tribunal, that is, those candidates who received the absolute majority of the votes of States Members of the United Nations and of the non-member States maintaining permanent missions at United Nations Headquarters. In accordance with article 13 (4) of the statute, the judges were elected for a term of four years, beginning on 17 November 2005.

International Tribunal for Rwanda

As the mandate of 11 permanent judges of the International Tribunal for Rwanda was set to expire in May 2007, but trials were expected to continue well beyond that time, by identical letters dated 3 May 2006 addressed to the Presidents of both the General Assembly and the Security Council,¹⁷ the Secretary-General transmitted a letter from the President of the Tribunal, Erik Møse, requesting the extension of the term of office for those officials until the end of 2008, the expected deadline for the completion of all the Tribunal's proceedings. The letter noted that all "single-accused" trials in progress were due to be completed between May 2006 and May 2007. New trials would commence as soon as judges and courtroom space became available and would continue well beyond May 2007. However, the statute of the Tribunal for Rwanda did not provide for extending the term of office of the permanent judges. In the absence of such a provision, the approval of the Security Council would be needed to extend the term of office of 11 permanent judges until 31 December 2008.

In response to the request by the Secretary-General and notwithstanding the provisions of article 12 (bis) paragraph 1 (b) of the statute of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, by resolution 1684 (2006) of 13 June 2006, the Security Council decided to extend the term of office of 11 permanent judges of the Tribunal until 31 December 2008. By a letter of the same date,¹⁸ the President of the Security Council transmitted to the President of the General Assembly the text of resolution 1684 (2006).

E. Reports of the Security Council to the General Assembly

Article 24, paragraph 3

The Security Council shall submit annual and, when necessary, special reports to the General Assembly for its consideration.

Article 15, paragraph 1

The General Assembly shall receive and consider annual and special reports from the Security Council; these reports shall include an account of the measures that the Security Council has decided upon or taken to maintain international peace and security.

¹⁸ A/60/906-S/2006/437.

Note

In accordance with Article 24 (3) of the Charter, the Security Council continued to submit annual reports to the General Assembly.¹⁹ Following an explanatory statement by the Secretariat, each report was adopted, without a vote, at a meeting of the Council.

At its 5769th meeting, on 25 October 2007, the Council adopted its draft annual report to the General Assembly for the period from 1 August 2006 to 31 July 2007. Prior to the adoption of the annual report, the representatives of Slovakia and China made statements. The representative of Slovakia expressed the view that the Council needed to go further and concentrate more on the substance of the report and on key political messages about the important work of the Security Council.²⁰ With regard to the question how to further enhance the quality of the annual report in the future, the representative of China shared the views of the representative of Slovakia, and thought that this question should be one element for consideration during the preparation of the following year's report. He noted that, taking into account past practice and the actual work of each year, and drawing upon the Council's collective wisdom, the Council should be able to find a way to improve its work on the report.²¹

During the period under review, a few communications made explicit references to Article 24 (3), in dealing with the issue of annual and special reports of the Security Council to the General Assembly.²²

During the period covered by this Supplement, the Council did not submit any special reports to the General Assembly — under, for example, rule 60 (3) of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.²³

F. Relations with subsidiary organs established by the General Assembly

Note

Certain subsidiary organs established by the General Assembly have played a part in the work of the Security Council, either because they have been placed in a special relationship to the Council by a resolution of the General Assembly, or because the Council has made use of their services or invited their officers to participate in its meetings.

During the period under review, there was no constitutional discussion bearing on the relations between such subsidiary organs and the Security Council. Those subsidiary organs still active included the Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council; the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations; and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People.²⁴

All of these organs submitted reports and recommendations to the Security Council and/or the General Assembly. The table at the end of this section lists communications from the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People to the Council.

During the period under consideration, no decision adopted by the Security Council contained references to the Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council or the ²³ Rule 60 (3) provides that if the Security Council does not recommend an applicant State for membership or postpones the consideration of the application, it "shall submit a special report to the General Assembly with a complete record of the discussion".

²⁴ The Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People is a subsidiary organ of the General Assembly.

Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. References were made, however, to the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations in four decisions of the Council (case 5).

On several occasions, during the period under review, invitations to attend Security Council meetings were addressed to the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (see table below).²⁵ All invitations were extended as a matter of course and without any discussion. The letters of request were read into the record of the meeting by the President of the Security Council and were generally not issued as documents of the Council. During the period under consideration, the President of the Security Council attended meetings of two subsidiary organs of the General Assembly (case 6).

²⁵ The participation of the representatives of these organs in meetings of the Security Council is also detailed in chapter III.

In a presidential statement dated 31 May 2005 in connection with the item entitled “United Nations peacekeeping operations”,²⁶ and a presidential statement dated 27 October 2005 in connection with the item entitled “Women and peace and security”,²⁷ the Council welcomed the comprehensive report on sexual exploitation and abuse by United Nations peacekeeping personnel,²⁸ prepared by the Advisor to the Secretary-General on this issue, and welcomed the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations on its resumed session of 2005.²⁹ It also urged the Secretary-General and troop-contributing countries to ensure that the recommendations of the Special Committee which fell within their respective responsibilities were implemented without delay.

By resolution 1674 (2006) of 28 April 2006, in connection with the item entitled “Protection of civilians in armed conflict”, the Council, while condemning all acts of sexual exploitation, abuse and trafficking of women and children by military, police and civilian personnel involved in United Nations operations and welcoming the efforts undertaken by United Nations agencies and peacekeeping operations to implement a zero-tolerance policy, requested the Secretary-General and personnel-contributing countries to continue to take all appropriate action necessary to combat those abuses by such personnel, including through the full implementation without delay of those measures adopted in the relevant General Assembly resolutions based upon the recommendations in the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations.²⁹

By a presidential statement dated 26 October 2006 in connection with the item entitled “Women and peace and security”,³⁰ while reiterating its condemnation of all acts of sexual misconduct by all categories of personnel in United Nations peacekeeping missions, the Council urged the Secretary-General and troop-contributing countries to ensure the full implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations.³¹

G. Peacebuilding Commission

Note

During the period under review, in accordance with Articles 7, 22 and 29 of the Charter, the Peacebuilding Commission was established as a subsidiary body of the Security Council and the General Assembly, by resolutions adopted concurrently by the two organs on 20 December 2005.³⁵ The main purpose of the Peacebuilding Commission was to bring together all relevant actors to marshal resources and to advise on and propose integrated strategies for post-conflict peacebuilding and recovery.

The present section describes the decisions and deliberations of the Security Council that reflect on the Council's relations with the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council within the context of the Peacebuilding Commission.

1. Decisions of the Council relating to the Peacebuilding Commission

By resolution 1645 (2006), reaffirming the respective responsibilities and functions of the organs of the United Nations as defined in the Charter and the need to enhance coordination among them, and acting concurrently with the General Assembly, the Security Council established the Peacebuilding Commission as an intergovernmental advisory body.³⁶ By the same resolution, the Council decided that the Commission would have a standing Organizational Committee, responsible for developing its own rules of procedure and working methods, comprising, inter alia, (a) seven members of the Security Council, including permanent members, selected according to rules and procedures decided by the Council; (b) seven members of the Economic and Social Council, elected from regional groups according to rules and procedures decided by the Council; and (c) seven additional members elected according to rules and procedures decided by the

General Assembly.³⁷ The members of the Organizational Committee were to serve for renewable terms of two years. It further decided that the Organizational Committee would decide the agenda of the Commission based on requests for advice from the Security Council, the Secretary-General, and from the Economic and Social Council or the General Assembly with the consent of the concerned Member State on the verge of lapsing or relapsing into conflict and with which the Council was not seized in accordance with Article 12 of the Charter.³⁸ The Council underlined that the advice of the Commission to provide sustained attention as countries moved from transitional recovery towards development would be of particular relevance to the Economic and Social Council, bearing in mind its role as a principal body for issues of economic and social development.³⁹ Furthermore, in paragraph 15 of the resolution, the Council noted that the Commission would submit an annual report to the General Assembly and that the General Assembly would hold a debate to review the report.

By resolution 1646 (2005) of 20 December 2005, the Security Council decided that, pursuant to paragraph 4 (a) of resolution 1645 (2005), the Council's permanent members would be members of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission and that the Council would select annually two of its elected members to participate in that Committee.⁴⁰ Furthermore, it decided that the report mentioned in paragraph 15 of resolution 1645 (2005), should also be submitted to the Security Council for an annual debate.⁴¹

In a statement of the President dated 8 January 2007, the Council emphasized the importance of post-conflict peacebuilding to assist countries emerging from conflict in laying the foundation for sustainable peace and development and, in that context, welcomed the establishment of the Peacebuilding Commission which should play an important role to achieve the objective of improving United Nations capacity to coordinate with regional organizations, countries in the relevant regions, donors, troop contributors and recipient countries and to perform peacebuilding activities, in particular from the start of peacekeeping operations through stabilization, reconstruction and development. The Council appreciated the progress made thus far in the initial work of the Commission on Burundi and Sierra Leone.⁴²

In several other instances relating to countries emerging from conflict, the Council in its decisions welcomed the role of the Peacebuilding Commission,⁴³ encouraged the concerned government to continue its close engagement with the Peacebuilding Commission,⁴⁴ and took note of a request by a concerned government for its country to be placed on the agenda of the Peacebuilding Commission.⁴⁵

⁴³ In connection with the situation in Burundi: By a statement of the President dated 30 May 2007, the Council welcomed the briefing by the Chair of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission on its activities relating to Burundi and, in that context, encouraged the Government of Burundi and the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi to work closely with all stakeholders in order to devise a sound strategic framework to foster the commitment of the Government and all its partners to the priorities for consolidating peace in Burundi (S/PRST/2007/16). By resolution 1791 (2007) of 19 December 2007, the Council took note of the briefing of the Chairman of the Burundi configuration of the Peacebuilding Commission on 6 December 2007, welcomed the Peacebuilding Commission's close engagement on Burundi, including the finalization with the Government of Burundi of the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding and the adoption of the Monitoring and Tracking Mechanism, and looked forward to its implementation in the same spirit of partnership (sixth preambular paragraph).

⁴⁴ In connection with the situation in Sierra Leone: Taking note of the country-specific meetings of the Peacebuilding Commission held on 12 October and 13 December 2006, at which the Commission discussed four priority areas for peacebuilding efforts in Sierra Leone, by resolution 1734 (2006) of 22 December 2006, the Council encouraged the Government to continue its close engagement with the Peacebuilding Commission and international donors to continue to provide support to the Government (seventh preambular paragraph and para. 6). Emphasizing that the Government of Sierra Leone bore the primary responsibility for peacebuilding, security and long-term development in the country, by resolution 1793 (2007) of 31 December 2007, the Council encouraged the Government of Sierra Leone to continue its close engagement with the Peacebuilding Commission, including through the regular monitoring of progress in the implementation of the Sierra Leone Peacebuilding Cooperation Framework, and international donors to continue to provide support to the Government (para. 6).

⁴⁵ In connection with the situation in Guinea-Bissau: By a

In other instances during its thematic debates, the Council specifically referred to the role of the Peacebuilding Commission in post-conflict countries, and underlined the importance of the Peacebuilding Commission to assist countries emerging from conflict. The Council emphasized the important role that the Peacebuilding Commission could play in ensuring continuous international support to countries emerging from conflict. For example, in connection with the situation in the Great Lakes region, by resolution 1653 (2006) of 27 January 2006, the Council welcomed the establishment of the Peacebuilding Commission and underlined its potential importance to the work of the Council in that region.⁴⁶ In connection with the agenda items entitled: “Strengthening international law: rule of law and maintenance of international peace and security”;⁴⁷ “Peace consolidation in West Africa”;⁴⁸ “Threats to international peace and security”;⁴⁹ statement of the President dated 24 October 2007, the Council took note of the letter from the Prime Minister of Guinea-Bissau requesting that his country be placed on the agenda of the Peacebuilding Commission, and expressed its intent to consider the request as a matter of priority (S/PRST/2007/38).

⁴⁷ By a statement of the President dated 22 June 2006, the Council attached vital importance to promoting justice and the rule of law, including respect for human rights, as an indispensable element for lasting peace. In that regard, the Council considered enhancement of the rule of law activities as crucial in the peacebuilding strategies in post-conflict societies and emphasized the role of the Peacebuilding Commission (S/PRST/2006/28).

“Maintenance of international peace and security: role of the Security Council in supporting security sector reform”;⁵⁰ “Cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations in maintaining international peace and security”;⁵¹ “Women and peace and security”;⁵² “The role of regional and subregional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security”;⁵³ and “Maintenance of international peace and security”⁵⁴ the Council specifically referred to the role of the Peacebuilding Commission.

⁵⁰ By a statement of the President dated 21 February 2007, the Council took note of the work already carried out by the Peacebuilding Commission concerning Burundi and Sierra Leone, and requested it to continue advising the Council on the issue of security sector reform in the framework of its activities related to those countries. Furthermore, the Council requested the Peacebuilding Commission to include consideration of security sector reform programmes in designing integrated peacebuilding strategies for its continued engagement with those countries, with a view to developing best practices regarding comprehensive, coherent, and nationally owned security sector reform programmes (S/PRST/2007/3).

⁵² By a statement of the President dated 26 October 2006, the Council welcomed the role that the Peacebuilding Commission could play in mainstreaming gender perspectives into the peace consolidation process. In that context, the Council welcomed in particular the Chairman’s summaries at its country-specific meetings on Sierra Leone and Burundi on 12 and 13 October 2006 (S/PRST/2006/42).

2. Discussion arising in connection with the Peacebuilding Commission

During the period under review, the Council met twice to consider the item entitled “Post-conflict peacebuilding”. Several issues, notably, the composition of the Peacebuilding Commission and the importance of effective interaction between the Peacebuilding Commission, the Security Council and other United Nations organs were stressed during the debates of the Council.

(a) Questions regarding the composition of the Peacebuilding Commission

At the 5335th meeting of the Council, on 20 December 2005, speaking after the adoption of resolutions 1645 (2005) and 1646 (2005), the representative of Brazil stated that he firmly supported the Commission’s establishment to fill the institutional gap between action to keep peace and the activities required to consolidate and sustain peace. He further stated that his delegation had voted in favour of resolution 1645 (2006) in support of the aspirations of developing countries in post-conflict situations which would benefit from greater coordination and from the availability of resources in peacebuilding activities. He recognized that, in accordance with the Charter, the primary responsibility for questions pertaining to international peace and security rested with the Security Council. However, he emphasized that, when peacebuilding activities came into play, a greater role for the Economic and Social Council should have been provided for in the resolution, especially given the efforts towards a reformed and active Economic and Social Council. Furthermore, he noted that the new Commission should have been able to determine its own agenda and provide advice to any organ of the Organization, and it should not operate as a subsidiary body of the Security Council. He further stated that paragraph 4 of the resolution was aimed at correcting geographical imbalances, but the composition should be subjected to a rotation and no permanent membership should be established.⁵⁵ Supported by the representatives of Argentina and Algeria, the representative of Brazil objected to the inclusion of Council members in the composition of the Peacebuilding Commission and stated that his delegation had abstained in the voting on resolution

1646 (2005), because it departed from principles agreed upon concurrently by the General Assembly and the Security Council in resolution 1645 (2005) on the establishment of the Peacebuilding Commission.⁵⁶ The representative of Argentina stated that his delegation could not support the inclusion of members of the Security Council in the composition of the Peacebuilding Commission.⁵⁷ The representative of Algeria noted that resolution 1646 (2005) was hardly in line with resolution 1645 (2006), especially with regard to the representation of members of the Security Council in the Peacebuilding Commission.⁵⁸

(b) Importance of an effective interaction between the Peacebuilding Commission, the Security Council and other United Nations organs

At the 5627th meeting of the Security Council, on 31 January 2007, the President of the Economic and Social Council emphasized that there was a strong correlation between low levels of development and violent conflict. Therefore more focused efforts should be made to advance and oversee the implementation of mutually agreed goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and the Economic and Social Council was ready to assist the Peacebuilding Commission in ensuring this. Furthermore, he indicated that there were many perspectives that the Economic and Social Council could share with the Peacebuilding Commission, and that, through increased interaction and readiness to share relevant experience, it could contribute to strengthening the value added by the Peacebuilding Commission. In that respect, the Economic and Social Council was ready to share its lessons learned, especially given that the pioneering work of its ad hoc advisory groups on countries emerging from conflict was, in a way, a forerunner to the Peacebuilding Commission.⁵⁹

The Chairman of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission underlined that the Commission was the Security Council’s body, and it would perform only in accordance with the means that the Council and the international community put at its disposal in order to meet the high expectations of the populations of countries emerging from conflict.⁶⁰

The Assistant Secretary-General for Peacebuilding Support emphasized that the links between the Commission and the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council were critical in order to address the critical and fragile period in the life of a country ravaged by conflict. In that context, the Peacebuilding Commission could fulfil its mandate to advise on and propose integrated strategies for peacebuilding and to identify critical elements of peacebuilding in the countries under its consideration, bringing them together under an integrated strategic approach.⁶¹

The representative of Ghana stated that, indeed, the Peacebuilding Commission offered a unique opportunity to test the efficacy of the growing preference for an integrated approach to United Nations missions and, probably, to point the way towards improved foreign aid management.⁶²

A few speakers highlighted the importance of effective interaction between the Peacebuilding Commission, the Security Council, and other organs of the United Nations. The representative of France emphasized that it was vital that flexible and effective interaction between the Commission and the Security Council be developed in practice. He hoped that the Council would regularly consider the work of the Peacebuilding Commission, and that the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council would devote particular attention to the new body's work, as provided for in the resolutions that established the Commission. He stated that by making it possible to identify goals and priorities shared by all actors and to coordinate their activities in accordance with a timetable for intervention that was robust but adapted to immediate priorities, the Peacebuilding Commission could become an essential instrument for setting countries emerging from crisis firmly on the path to peace and sustainable development.⁶³ The representative of China noted that the coordination among the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, according to their respective mandates, played an important role in peacebuilding. He stated that the relationship between them should be complementary rather than competitive and should enable them to capitalize on their respective comparative advantages.⁶⁴

At the same meeting, several delegations⁶⁵ supported the idea of arranging regular meetings between the Chairmen of the Peacebuilding Commission and the Presidents of the Council and other relevant organs. The representative of France said that, as the Peacebuilding Commission began to meet more regularly, the Council should seek to fully integrate in its work the results of the new body's efforts. He noted that the Council ought to be able to share in the added value that the Commission should bring to its collective effort to promote peace and security.⁶⁶ The representative of the Russian Federation underlined that particular attention had to be given to enhancing cooperation between the Commission and the Council, and stressed that it was important to establish a timely exchange of information and show a clear division of labour.⁶⁷ After receiving reports from the Peacebuilding Commission, the representative of Japan suggested that the Council consider issuing its reaction in the form of a presidential statement or another form of statement to encourage further interaction in the process of formulating and implementing an integrated strategy.⁶⁸ The representative of the United Kingdom considered that the Council could establish an effective working relationship with the Peacebuilding Commission in three key areas, namely, the Council could seek the Commission's advice before a mandate renewal or the establishment of a new peacekeeping operation; the Council could receive such advice and act on it appropriately; and the Commission could provide early warning of impending conflict or relapse.⁶⁹ The representative of Slovakia noted that this was an important and timely opportunity to explore ways and mechanisms for interaction between the Council and the Peacebuilding Commission in order to strengthen the synergy of efforts aimed at helping post-conflict countries to manage the difficult transition from war to peace. He shared the view that the Commission should be used as a source of advice on peacebuilding strategies and mandates.⁷⁰

At its 5761st meeting, on 17 October 2007, the Council considered the first report of the Peacebuilding Commission on its first session.⁷¹ With regard to the development of working methods, the Chairman referred to the provisions of the Security Council and General Assembly resolutions dealing with the Commission's rules of procedure. He noted that the Commission recognized the need to continue to develop its provisional rules of procedure in the light of the evolving practical work of the Commission. On its operational relationships with other bodies, he noted that the Commission still had to identify how best to engage with the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, and the most appropriate mechanisms for providing advice and follow-up. Further consideration should be given as to how the Commission could enhance its cooperation with other United Nations intergovernmental bodies. In that regard, periodic interaction between the Commission and the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council would be useful. Such strengthened relations would also contribute to enhancing the visibility of the Commission's work and improving coordination among the bodies.⁷²

Relations with the Economic and Social Council

Practice in relation to Article 65 of the Charter

Article 65

The Economic and Social Council may furnish information to the Security Council and shall assist the Security Council upon its request.

Note

This part concerns the relationship between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council. Section A concerns decisions of the Council which contain reference to either Article 65 of the Charter of the United Nations or the Economic and Social Council. Section B concerns deliberations (cases 7-14) of the Security Council during the course of which the importance of closer ties between the two organs was stressed, particularly in the context of post-conflict peacebuilding.

A. Requests or references to the Economic and Social Council in decisions of the Security Council

During the period under consideration, the Security Council did not formally address a request for information or assistance to the Economic and Social Council. In its decisions, however, the Council made one explicit reference to Article 65 of the United Nations Charter.⁷³ In several other decisions, in the context of different agenda items, the Council made reference to the Economic and Social Council (see tables in subsections 1 and 2 below).

1. Resolutions containing references to the Economic and Social Council

| Resolution | Situation | Relevant provisions |

| 1576 (2004) | The question concerning Haiti | Welcoming the establishment of the Core Group on Haiti and the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti of the Economic and Social Council (fifth preambular paragraph) |
| 1625 (2005) | Threats to international peace and security | Affirms its determination to strengthen United Nations conflict prevention capacities by requesting, as necessary and appropriate, information and assistance from the Economic and Social Council in accordance with Article 65 of the Charter (para. 2 (e)) |
| 1645 (2005) | Post-conflict peacebuilding | Decides that the Organizational Committee shall, giving due consideration to maintaining a balance in addressing situations in countries in different regions in accordance with the main purposes of the Commission as stipulated above, establish the agenda of the Commission based on the following: Requests for advice from the Economic and Social Council or the General Assembly with the consent of a concerned Member State in exceptional circumstances on the verge of lapsing or relapsing into conflict and with which the Security Council is not seized in accordance with Article 12 of the Charter (para. 12 (b)) Also underlines that the advice of the Commission to provide sustained attention as countries move from transitional recovery towards development will be of particular relevance to the Economic and Social Council, bearing in mind its role as a principal body for coordination, policy review, policy dialogue and recommendations on issues of economic and social development (para. 17) |

| S/PRST/2004/20 | The situation in Guinea-Bissau | The Council also commends the efforts by the Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa of the Council, the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau of the Economic and Social Council and the Group of Friends of Guinea-Bissau aimed at assisting the country to address both its short-term post-conflict crisis and longer-term development goals |
| S/PRST/2004/40 | Women and peace and security | The Council recognizes that significant progress has been made in the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) in certain areas of the United Nations peace and security work. The Council expresses its readiness to further promote the implementation of this resolution, and in particular through active cooperation with the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly |
| S/PRST/2005/1 | The question concerning Haiti | The Council expresses its intention to organize a mission to Haiti before 1 June 2005, possibly in conjunction with a mission of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti of the Economic and Social Council |
| S/PRST/2005/20 | Post-conflict peacebuilding | The Council underlines the fact that, for countries emerging from conflict, significant international assistance for economic and social rehabilitation and reconstruction is indispensable. In this regard, the Council acknowledges the role the Economic and Social Council plays, including in sustainable development, and reiterates its willingness to improve cooperation with United Nations bodies and organs directly concerned with peacebuilding |
| S/PRST/2005/39 | The situation in Guinea-Bissau | The Council therefore welcomes the decision taken by the Economic and Social Council on 26 July 2005 to extend the mandate of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau, and commends the Advisory Group for its work |

B. Constitutional discussion arising in connection with the Economic and Social Council

Note

The issue of the relations between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council arose frequently in Security Council debates, particularly in the context of post-conflict peacebuilding. Frequently emphasized was the idea of closer cooperation and collaboration between the Council and the Economic and Social Council and other United Nations organs, particularly in addressing the challenges of peacebuilding in countries emerging from conflict, and in addressing the transition from post-conflict peacebuilding to development. The roles of the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council within the Peacebuilding Commission also re-established the relationship between the two bodies.⁷⁴

The work of the Ad Hoc Advisory Groups on Guinea-Bissau and Haiti of the Economic and Social Council played an important role in the work of the Security Council Ad Hoc Working Group, as it linked both Councils to areas pertaining to peace and development. In its resolution 2004/59, the Economic and Social Council commended the ad hoc advisory groups on African countries emerging from conflict for their work and made several recommendations to enhance their effectiveness, including more interaction between the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council.

During the period under consideration, the interaction between the two Councils increased significantly, notably with the participation of the President of the Economic and Social Council in the meetings of the Security Council (see table).

During the period under review, there were two occasions when the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council collaborated in their missions to the field. While the Security Council was undertaking a mission to West Africa from 22 to 28 June 2004, the mission was joined in Guinea-Bissau by the Chairman of the Economic and Social Council Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau on 27 and 28 June 2004.⁷⁵

mentioned in the presidential statement of 12 January 2005.⁷⁷

In several instances during the debates, speakers explicitly referred to Article 65 of the Charter, and encouraged greater use of the provision.⁷⁸ This is reflected in the case studies below:

The case studies below each address a different issue before the Security Council, with a view to outlining the evolving relationship between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council. The case studies analysed include the Council's involvement with the Economic and Social Council in countries emerging from conflict, such as Guinea-Bissau (case 7) and Haiti (case 8). Particularly evident is the evolving practice of the Council to encourage the involvement of the Economic and Social Council in thematic issues, such as children and armed conflict (case 9), complex crises and United Nations response (case 10), maintenance of international peace and security (case 11), post-conflict peacebuilding (case 12), protection of civilians in armed conflict (case 13) and women and peace and security (case 14).

The situation in Guinea-Bissau

In the report of the Secretary-General on developments in Guinea-Bissau and on the activities of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in that country, it was highlighted that in order to support the country in the implementation of the emergency economic management plan, a special multidonor emergency economic management fund for Guinea-Bissau, initiated by the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau,⁷⁹ had been set up.⁸⁰ Furthermore, the Secretary-General commended the work undertaken by the Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa of the Security Council, the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau of the Economic and Social Council and the Group of Friends of Guinea-Bissau, and emphasized that their combined efforts had played a significant role in energizing the United Nations system to assist the country in addressing both its short-term post-conflict crisis and longer-term development goals. He stressed that the emergency economic management fund established as a result of those efforts was a useful instrument in channelling financial assistance to the country.⁸¹

At the 4992nd meeting, on 18 June 2004, in connection with the situation in Guinea-Bissau, the President of the Security Council made a statement on behalf of the Council, in which the Council commended the efforts by the Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa, the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau and the Group of Friends of Guinea-Bissau aimed at assisting the country to address both its short-term post-conflict crisis and longer-term development goals.⁸²

By a letter dated 2 November 2004 addressed to the President of the Council,⁸³ the President of the Economic and Social Council brought to the attention of the Council developments concerning the ad hoc advisory groups on African countries emerging from conflict, and drew the Council's attention to the latest report concerning Guinea-Bissau.⁸⁴ He emphasized that the joint mission to Guinea-Bissau of the Council and the Ad Hoc Advisory Group in June 2004 was another step forward in the United Nations endeavour to address post-conflict situations in a comprehensive manner.

In his report on developments in Guinea-Bissau and on the activities of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in that country, dated 15 December 2004,⁸⁵ the Secretary-General noted that the emergency economic management fund, which had been providing financing for critical social needs and for the minimum functioning of the State in priority sectors, had been depleted and would cease to be operational by the end of the year. He also welcomed the constructive efforts of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa, the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau and the Group of Friends of Guinea-Bissau and their active role in energizing Guinea-Bissau's partners to assist the country in addressing its short-term post-conflict and longer-term development objectives.

At the 5248th meeting, on 19 August 2005, the President of the Council made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁸⁶ in which the Council welcomed the decision taken by the Economic and Social Council on 26 July 2005 to extend the mandate of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau, and commended the group for its work.

In his report on developments in Guinea-Bissau and on the activities of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in that country dated 16 March 2005, the Secretary-General welcomed the extension of the mandate of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau and trusted that it would continue to play the constructive role it had played to date in supporting the country to address its pressing short-term and longer-term development goals and in the mobilization of international support for Guinea-Bissau.⁸⁷

The question concerning Haiti

At its 5090th meeting, on 29 November 2004, the Council adopted resolution 1576 (2004), in which it underlined the fact that political reconciliation and economic reconstruction efforts remained key to the stability and security of Haiti, and welcomed the establishment of the Core Group on Haiti and the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti of the Economic and Social Council.⁸⁸

At the 5110th meeting, on 12 January 2005, the representative of Brazil asserted that the international community had to combine various immediate impact projects so as to restore the hope of the poor and unemployed, with the assistance of Haitian institutions, which could also facilitate the planning of a long-term strategy. The representative emphasized that he was convinced that, working jointly with the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and its Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti would make an important contribution to those goals. He noted that his delegation had long been promoting, under Article 65 of the Charter, closer cooperation between the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council, which would make the provision of assistance by donors and international institutions more transparent.⁸⁹ The representative of Romania stated that the proposed mission of the Security Council to Haiti, possibly in conjunction with a similar mission by the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti, would be a step in the right direction towards making Haiti a stable, prosperous and democratic State.⁹⁰ Similarly, the representative of the Philippines voiced his support for a mission in conjunction with the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti.⁹¹ The representatives of Greece,⁹² Benin,⁹³ Luxembourg,⁹⁴ Guatemala,⁹⁵ Uruguay⁹⁶ and El Salvador⁹⁷ welcomed the reactivation of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti of the Economic and Social Council. The representative of Guatemala believed that the Ad Hoc Advisory Group was a mechanism that had contributed to revitalizing the link between the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council.⁹⁸ The representative of Uruguay asserted that the Advisory Group had to coordinate its work with the Core Group established by the Security Council in paragraph 5 of resolution 1542 (2004) in order to avoid any overlap.⁹⁹

At the close of the meeting, the President issued a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰⁰ in which the Council expressed its intention to organize a mission to Haiti before 1 June 2005, possibly in conjunction with a mission of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti of the Economic and Social.

In a letter dated 31 March 2005 addressed to the Secretary-General,¹⁰¹ the President of the Council indicated that a mission would be sent to Haiti from 13 to 16 April 2005, in conjunction with the mission of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti. In an annex to the letter, the terms of reference were laid out which specified that the mission was to explore ways, in coordination with the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti, to assist the Transitional Government in the preparation and implementation of developmental projects in Haiti.

In the report of the Security Council mission to Haiti issued on 6 May 2005,¹⁰² the mission welcomed the opportunity to undertake its visit in conjunction with the Ad Hoc Advisory Group, and looked forward to continuing its collaboration so that immediate and medium-term measures could provide the basis on which long-term development could occur.

At its 5178th meeting, on 13 May 2005, the Council considered the report of the Security Council mission to Haiti. During the debate, the representative of Brazil emphasized that the Ad Hoc Advisory Group could play an important role in establishing, in conjunction with Haitian authorities, a long-term institution-building and development strategy.¹⁰³ The representative of Canada stressed that the Economic and Social Council would have an important contribution to make as the United Nations sought to play a positive role in the long, challenging work that laid ahead. He further indicated that the report of the Ad Hoc Group would include a series of concise recommendations for consideration by the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH), the United Nations country team and the donor community. In that regard, it was recommended that the Economic and Social Council focus on mechanisms for capacity-building support, play a role in promoting the socioeconomic dimensions of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, develop a strong advocacy role on poverty and promote a smooth transition from the Mission to sustained economic development once the mandate of MINUSTAH had been fulfilled. Moreover, the representative of Canada praised the simultaneous presence in Haiti of the two Councils, and said that this was a prototype of what had been recommended by the Secretary-General as the Peacebuilding Commission.¹⁰⁴

The representative of Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of the European Union, emphasized that security and development were interlinked elements of a comprehensive solution to the crisis in Haiti, as illustrated by the fact that the Security Council mission took place in conjunction with that of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti of the Economic and Social Council, and that a long-term United Nations presence was required in Haiti with the need for improved coordination between MINUSTAH and the various development actors in Haiti.¹⁰⁵ The representative of Chile highlighted that the presence of the Ad Hoc Group and the Security Council missions in Haiti, the first such visit to the Latin American and Caribbean region, reaffirmed the United Nations commitment to the process of Haiti's political stabilization and economic and social reconstruction. He further asserted that there could be no doubt that the United Nations presence in Haiti should be viewed as a fourth-generation peacekeeping operation whose goals were not limited merely to the suppression of violence. He stated that the collective task would be crowned with success when progress was made towards eradicating the causes of political instability and violence. In that context, he welcomed the integrated approach to Haiti by the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council.¹⁰⁶

The representative of Guatemala stressed that the work carried out by the Council and the Economic and Social Council in connection with post-conflict situations offered an opportunity for very productive action. He emphasized that the joint mission to Haiti and the ongoing support that the two Councils had been providing to each other with respect to Haiti in the fulfilment of their respective mandates attested to the renewed climate of cooperation, and welcomed the development.¹⁰⁷ The representative of Peru believed that the simultaneous visit of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group was very appropriate, as was the fact that some of its meetings in Haiti were carried out jointly with the Security Council mission, as this was a modality which was not often employed but enriched the understanding of the problems besetting countries such as Haiti. In addition to the Security Council's task of maintaining peace and security, that approach enabled the Economic and Social Council to promote the development agenda that would make it possible to rebuild such countries.¹⁰⁸

The representative of Spain emphasized that the missions — of the two Councils highlighted the complementarity of those organs when they addressed complex crises such as the one in Haiti.¹⁰⁹ The representative of Haiti stressed that the Council mission and the Ad Hoc Advisory Group attested to the great interest of the United Nations system in the cause of the development of Haiti. He specifically thanked the Economic and Social Council for its involvement in the long-term development process in Haiti, and outlined that the Ad Hoc Advisory Group was an eloquent testimony of that Council's great interest in the economic future of his country.¹¹⁰ In closing, the President of the Council paid tribute to the members of the Security Council mission and the mission of the Economic and Social Council for their contributions to the promotion of peace and stability in Haiti.¹¹¹

At the 5397th meeting, on 27 March 2006, the President of the Economic and Social Council, noting the clear risk of destabilization and political violence in poor countries and the difficulty of maintaining stability when massive international assistance was lacking, underlined the importance for the two Councils to work hand in hand to respond to the problems in Haiti.

Children and armed conflict

In the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict dated 9 February 2005,¹¹² it was suggested that the Economic and Social Council could periodically devote its high-level segment to a review of the subject of children and armed conflict, focusing particularly on the issue of monitoring and reporting.¹¹³

At the 5129th meeting, on 23 February 2005, the representative of Japan indicated that he shared the views expressed in the report of the Secretary-General on the issue, and indicated that the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council should, as appropriate, consider actions according to their respective mandates.¹¹⁴ The representative of Brazil emphasized that the Council had to recognize the essential roles of and collaborate closely with other destinations for action such as the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as they were equipped to respond to the social and economic dimensions of this complex issue.¹¹⁵ Finally, the representative of Argentina expressed understanding for the Council's special responsibility for the protection of children in armed conflicts because of its close connection with the maintenance of international peace and security, but also asserted that there should be better coordination in addressing this subject between the Council and the General Assembly on one hand, and between the Council and the Economic and Social Council on the other, in conformity with Article 65 of the Charter. He further asserted that, with regard to the Economic and Social Council, the Council should explore the proposal of dedicating high-level sessions to the examination of the issue of children and armed conflict.¹¹⁶

Complex crises and United Nations response

At its 4980th meeting, on 28 May 2004, the Council considered the item entitled “Complex crises and United Nations response”. During the debate, the President of the Economic and Social Council noted that complex crises necessitated collaborative responses in which the various organs of the United Nations had a complementary role. She emphasized that the most important contribution of the Economic and Social Council to the response by the United Nations to countries in crisis had been its involvement in African countries emerging from conflict. This involvement materialized with the creation of the Ad Hoc Advisory Groups on Guinea-Bissau and Burundi, whose mandate was to examine the humanitarian and economic needs of the countries in question. In that regard, she stated that the Ad Hoc Advisory Groups had fostered a coordinated approach to the situations in Guinea-Bissau and Burundi within the United Nations system at large, which advocated and pushed for greater coherence in the work of the United Nations system. Furthermore, she indicated that, to ensure coherence, those initiatives by the Economic and Social Council had to be linked to the work of the Security Council. She was pleased that the respective bodies were interacting in a more frequent and coherent way, as illustrated by the reference to the Economic and Social Council in the Security Council’s presidential statements on issues of common concern.¹¹⁷

The representative of Spain emphasized that increased interaction between the Council and other United Nations organs had become ever more necessary to provide a consistent and integrated response to the challenges inherent in complex crises. In this regard, he underlined that the Economic and Social Council was highly suited to performing such work, pursuant to Article 65. He also cited a specific example of increased interaction between the Council and the Economic and Social Council in the participation of representatives from one of the Ad Hoc Advisory Groups in the Security Council’s mission to West Africa in June of that year.¹¹⁸

¹¹⁸ Ibid., p. 7.

The representative of China stated that the Security Council, given its primary responsibility for conflict prevention, had to formulate an integrated preventive strategy suited to the characteristics of complex crises. He recommended that the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and various United Nations agencies, on the basis of their comparative advantages, and acting within their respective competences, should develop synergy in their conflict prevention efforts. He emphasized that the United Nations should devote greater attention to development, strive to help developing countries eradicate poverty and develop their economies, and increase its involvement in post-conflict regional and national reconstruction. In that regard, the Economic and Social Council could play an even greater role.¹¹⁹

The representative of Algeria expressed his belief that the gap in dealing with complex crises should be overcome by means of a bolder, more precise approach to detecting and preventing conflicts and by making development a dimension of complex United Nations operations, at the same integral level as the humanitarian and human rights dimensions. He stated that he had been inspired to make this assertion by the lucid analysis of the ad hoc advisory groups of the Economic and Social Council on African countries emerging from conflict, which had spelled out the objective limits of the post-conflict involvement of the United Nations Development Group.¹²⁰ The representative of the Philippines stated that the Ad Hoc Advisory Groups on Guinea-Bissau and Burundi were laudable efforts, but the advisory role and the ad hoc nature of those working groups were not adequate. He stated that there were concerns, for instance, about what to do after the mandate had lapsed, and underlined the need for continuity and an institutional mechanism that would integrate security policy, economic development and institution-building in those areas.¹²¹

The representative of Angola asserted that the Economic and Social Council had been called upon to play an ever-increasing role in the prevention of conflict, in the framework of an integrated approach recognized by the international community as valuable to achieve peace, security, respect for human rights and sustainable development. He stated that specific cases of the involvement of the Economic and Social Council in Africa — in Guinea-Bissau and Burundi — were very good examples. He further noted that the critical role that the Economic and Social Council played in addressing the root causes of conflict and its contribution to a comprehensive and multidisciplinary discussion on the prevention of armed conflicts in the regional context were recognized as valuable contributions to the prevention of armed conflict and to peacebuilding. In addition, the ad hoc working groups and advisory groups on countries emerging from conflict had produced commendable work, and their recommendations were important contributions in conflict prevention and resolution.¹²²

The representative of the United Kingdom suggested that a strengthened partnership between the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on peace and security matters could address the full spread of threats more effectively, and emphasized that Article 65 could be utilized more. He further stated that the Ad Hoc Groups on Burundi and Guinea-Bissau were interesting developments to build on. He pointed out that those groups signalled an emerging role for the Economic and Social Council to work with countries to build their conflict prevention and peacebuilding capacities and to raise awareness of potential needs among the wider United Nations membership.¹²³ Similarly, the representative of Germany stated that building on experiences with the Security Council's Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa and the Economic and Social Council ad hoc advisory groups on African countries emerging from conflict, and possible arrangements for more intensive cooperation between the two Councils could be explored.¹²⁴ While suggesting a few recommendations aimed at improving the United Nations response to complex crises as well as the effectiveness of peacebuilding programmes and activities, the representative of Romania suggested that the Security Council should further support United Nations organs and mechanisms in their security and development efforts. In that regard, it should convene a meeting to review the relationship between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, drawing from the experience in Guinea-Bissau.¹²⁵

Maintenance of international peace and security

During the period under review the Council met several times to discuss the broad issue of the maintenance of international peace and security in various specific contexts.

(a) The responsibility of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security: HIV/AIDS and international peacekeeping operations

At its 5228th meeting, on 18 July 2005, the Council considered the item entitled “The responsibility of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security: HIV/AIDS and international peacekeeping operations”. During the debate, the representative of the Russian Federation emphasized that the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, which, in keeping with their respective mandates, were charged with undertaking a comprehensive consideration of all aspects of the question of HIV/AIDS, had already done a great deal to craft an effective strategy to deal with the spread of the pandemic.¹²⁶ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania highlighted that resolution 1308 (2000) was a “trailblazing initiative” in generating international awareness and in promoting international action to combat HIV/AIDS beyond international peacekeeping personnel, and that it followed in the path of the defining leadership and roles of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in that regard.¹²⁷

(b) Strengthening international law: rule of law and maintenance of international peace and security

At its 5474th meeting, on 22 June 2006, the Council considered the item entitled “Strengthening international law: rule of law and maintenance of international peace and security”. During the debate, the representative of Egypt asserted that any enforcement mechanism applied by the Council should fully respect the principles of the sovereignty and political independence of States, and that any encroachment by the Council on the competence of the General Assembly or the Economic and Social Council should cease.¹²⁸ The representative of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela highlighted that Article 24 of the Charter did not necessarily provide the Council with the competency to address issues that corresponded to the functions and powers of the General Assembly or the Economic and Social Council.¹²⁹ The representative of Nigeria underlined the need for close collaboration among the Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in the crucial task of facilitating the restoration and consolidation of the rule of law in conflict and post-conflict society, and stressed, in particular, the importance of cooperation between the newly established Peacebuilding Commission, the Council, the Economic and Social Council and relevant United Nations agencies and civil society entities in post-conflict reconstruction efforts.¹³⁰

(c) Maintenance of international peace and security: role of the Security Council in supporting security sector reform

At its 5632nd meeting, on 20 February 2007, the Council considered the item entitled “Maintenance of international peace and security: role of the Security Council in supporting security sector reform”. During the debate, the President of the Economic and Social Council stated that the traditional division between security issues, on the one hand, and development issues, on the other, was both artificial and unsustainable. He emphasized that this was the perspective under which the Economic and Social Council ad hoc advisory groups on Africa had operated. The President noted that within the context of the mandate to promote an integrated approach to relief, reconstruction and development and to encourage the mobilization of resources, the Advisory Groups on Guinea-Bissau and Burundi had called for more attention to be paid to security sector reform as a way of addressing one of the key structural causes of conflict in many fragile countries. He further noted that the Economic and Social Council and the ad hoc groups had always seen the military as key interlocutors for dialogue, and drew attention to Economic and Social Council resolution 2005/2, in which the Council had welcomed the recommendation by the Security Council to establish a voluntary emergency fund, to be administered by the United Nations Development Programme, to support efforts related to the planning and implementation of military reform.¹³¹

The representative of Angola asserted that the debate in the General Assembly on the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and the experience of the ad hoc working groups on countries emerging from conflict had also produced valuable ideas on the issue of security sector reform.¹³² The representative of China suggested that the United Nations could formulate a comprehensive approach to security sector reform by drawing on practices that had proved effective over years of United Nations peacekeeping operations, and asserted that the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and relevant United Nations missions should be more involved, and coordination and communication between the United Nations and relevant regional organizations should be strengthened.¹³³ The representative of Indonesia emphasized that in order to develop viable security sector reform structures, the Council should consult with relevant organs, including the Economic and Social Council.¹³⁴

The representative of the Russian Federation stressed that supporting national efforts in security sector reform in countries emerging from crisis was an area of close constructive partnership and complementarity between the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in order to achieve a common goal, and thus enhance the effectiveness of international work in the area of peacebuilding.¹³⁵ The representative of Egypt asserted that the debate on security sector reform had fallen into the grey area which the Council attempted to exploit in order to strengthen its control of an issue that fell primarily within the prerogatives of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.¹³⁶ The representative of Honduras suggested that the Economic and Social Council should carry out its own debate to share ideas, with the aim of achieving consensus and a comprehensive strategy on security sector reform, in consultation with all organs of the system such as the Human Rights Council and the Peacebuilding Commission.¹³⁷ Finally, the representative of the Sudan indicated that security sector reform should be the subject of an in-depth and transparent study, to be carried out by all Member States. Carrying out such a study should not prejudice the other principal organs of the United Nations with a stake in this matter: the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and other relevant bodies.¹³⁸

(d) Maintenance of international peace and security

At its 5705th meeting, on 25 June 2007, the Council considered the item entitled “Maintenance of international peace and security”. During the debate, the President of the General Assembly highlighted that, in post-conflict situations, the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council should collectively and clearly debate on how best to develop, through the Peacebuilding Commission, a development-oriented approach to foster the factors of stability and prosperity and to prevent the relapse of countries into conflict.¹³⁹ The President of the Economic and Social Council asserted that, in line with Article 65 of the Charter, the two Councils could consider, on an ad hoc basis, the establishment of a format to discuss development-oriented approaches to the use of natural resources. Such a forum could be useful for advancing their understanding of the link between natural resources and security.¹⁴⁰

The representative of Qatar stated that the topic of natural resources did not fall within the Council’s competence and mandate, rather that it lay at the heart of the competence and mandate of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. He stressed that dealing with the topic in the Council infringed on the prerogatives of both bodies and undermined the democratic principles of the United Nations, and therefore it would be more useful for States to discuss the issue of natural resources in the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in the context of the development agenda.¹⁴¹ The representative of China also expressed his support for the continued discussion of the issue of natural resources in the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council,¹⁴² and the representative of Italy recognized the importance of the role and experience of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in the field of natural resources.

The representative of Italy also referred to the significance of the myriad United Nations frameworks overseen by the Economic and Social Council intended to improve the management and sustainable use of natural resources at the global level, and suggested that it might be useful for the future to consider those activities in a more coherent framework, bearing in mind their broader impact on long-term conflict prevention.¹⁴³

The representative of Egypt asserted that, undoubtedly, the link between natural resources and conflicts lay at the very centre of the intersection between the prerogatives of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on an equal footing with the Security Council, each within the limits of its responsibilities as set forth in the Charter. He underlined that it was necessary to expand cooperation and coordination and to establish a real partnership among the three organs and regional and subregional organizations, and the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes dealing with the development aspects of the causes of conflict.¹⁴⁴

The representative of Brazil highlighted that the Charter foresaw that issues relating to economic and social development, as was the case with natural resources, including energy, fell within the purview of the functions and powers of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. He underlined that any relevant national debate on the issue of natural resources should first take place at the forum of universal representation, which was the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and their relevant subsidiary bodies. In line with addressing the root causes of conflicts, he stressed the importance of deepening the cooperation among the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as set out in Article 65 of the Charter.¹⁴⁵ The representative of Benin welcomed the proposal by the President of the Economic and Social Council to establish a forum between the two Councils on the link between natural resources and conflict, and asserted his belief that that proposal could form part of the institutionalization of conflict prevention within the United Nations.¹⁴⁶

(e) Maintenance of international peace and security: role of the Security Council in conflict prevention and resolution, in particular in Africa

At its 5735th meeting, on 28 August 2007, the Council considered the item entitled “Maintenance of international peace and security: role of the Security Council in conflict prevention and resolution, in particular in Africa”. During the debate, the representative of Haiti made a statement on behalf of the President of the General Assembly and recalled the 2005 World Summit during which the Heads of State had stressed the need for the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Secretary-General to coordinate their activities within their respective Charter mandates.¹⁴⁷ The Acting Chairman of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission emphasized the importance of increasing cooperation and engagement between the Security Council and the Peacebuilding Commission, and expressed the hope that the Commission would address how best it could engage with the Council, as well as with the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.¹⁴⁸ The representative of China emphasized that the Council, the Economic and Social Council, the Peacebuilding Commission and the General Assembly should set an example for the international community by enhancing their communication and exchanges and learning from one another so as to make up for their own shortfalls with a view to making concerted efforts.¹⁴⁹ The representative of Indonesia emphasized that the sources of conflict were frequently economic and social in nature, and consequently the Security Council should more closely engage its partners in the United Nations system that are competent in economic and social issues, as laid out in Article 65.¹⁵⁰ The representative of the Sudan said that another matter that should be given consideration was strengthening the role of the United Nations in economic and social sectors, and that the various United Nations bodies, such as the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, should be bolstered.¹⁵¹ The representative of Argentina noted that resolution 1625 (2005) aimed at strengthening the effectiveness of the role of the Security Council in the prevention of armed conflicts, particularly in Africa, by means of a wide range of actions. Coordinating those actions with the work of the Secretariat and the Economic and Social Council was the key to its operationalization.¹⁵²

(f) Security Council Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa

During the period under consideration, the Ad Hoc Working Group enhanced its working relationship with the Ad Hoc Advisory Groups on Guinea-Bissau and Burundi of the Economic and Social Council.

In a note, the President transmitted a letter dated 30 March 2004 addressed to him by the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa.¹⁵³ The letter included recommendations of the meeting of the Ad Hoc Working Group with the Ad Hoc Advisory Group of the Economic and Social Council on Burundi, held on 15 March 2004. One of the several recommendations made by the Advisory Group and the Working Group on Burundi was to consider ways in which the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council could work together comprehensively to assist in peace, reconciliation, recovery and rehabilitation in Burundi.

In a note, the President transmitted a letter dated 30 December 2005 addressed to him by the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa,¹⁵⁴ forwarding the annual report of the Working Group for 2005. The report included a summary of the wrap-up open debate held in the Council on 30 March 2005,¹⁵⁵ which favoured an extensive exchange of views on the situation in Africa and on the ways and means to increase the effectiveness of the efforts made by the Council to cope with them. During the debate, speakers recommended that, while prevention of conflict should be considered a vanguard task to be tackled by the United Nations as a whole, the Security Council should enhance coordination and cooperation with other United Nations bodies, in order to help address deep-rooted social and economic causes of conflict in Africa and to ensure development and employment through fair trade, as a way to prevent either the outbreak or the resurgence of conflicts. For this purpose they welcomed the greater involvement of the Economic and Social Council in this task, in particular by means of the creation of ad hoc working groups such as those established for Burundi and Guinea-Bissau.

While underlining the need to combine peace and security efforts with long-term development strategies, several speakers welcomed the collaboration of the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council in that regard.¹⁵⁶ The representative of Pakistan noted that the recognition of the inextricable link between peace and development had opened the window for increased cooperation and coordination between the two Councils, and expected that relationship to develop further in an institutionalized way.¹⁵⁷ While welcoming the greater involvement of the Economic and Social Council, in particular by means of the ad hoc working groups such as those established for Burundi and Guinea-Bissau, the representative of Brazil observed that the Council still lacked the formal institutional frameworks and adequate channels necessary to maximize the quality of the two Councils' responses. He noted that his delegation had consistently called for the adoption of rules and procedures to put Article 65 of the Charter fully into force, in order to explore its many potential benefits.¹⁵⁸

During the period under review the Council met several times to consider peacekeeping and post-conflict situations, each with a slightly different emphasis.

(a) Post-conflict national reconciliation: role of the United Nations

At its 4903rd meeting, on 26 January 2004, the Council considered the item entitled "Post-conflict national reconciliation: role of the United Nations". During the debate, the representative of Brazil said that there was much the Council could do in conflict resolution, and in conceiving and conducting long-term post-conflict initiatives, particularly if it made more extensive use of the provisions of Article 65 and sought the collaboration of the Economic and Social Council as it had done in the cases of Guinea-Bissau and Burundi, with some success.¹⁵⁹

(b) The role of business in conflict prevention, peacekeeping and post-conflict peacebuilding

At its 4943rd meeting, on 15 April 2004, the Council considered the item entitled "The role of business in conflict prevention, peacekeeping and post-conflict peacebuilding". During the debate, the representative of Germany underlined that political and economic stability in conflict prevention, as well as in post-conflict recovery, were closely related, and that this had to be reflected inside and outside the broader United Nations system. He emphasized that much had already been done to improve coherence and efficiency between the different actors as evidenced by the establishment of the ad hoc advisory groups for African countries emerging from conflict of the Economic and Social Council.¹⁶⁰

The President of the Economic and Social Council noted that, in recent years, the Economic and Social Council had taken a more active role in developing a capacity to respond to the countries emerging from conflict, thereby helping to prevent human conditions from getting worse. She noted that although the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council had begun to collaborate in those endeavours, much more could be done by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council working together to develop a comprehensive and a more rapid response capacity for countries in special situations, where speed, scale and time were of the essence.¹⁶¹

The representative of Brazil shared the views expressed by the President of the Economic and Social Council, to the effect that much more could be done by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, working together, to develop a comprehensive and more rapid response to countries in special situations and also to envisage a long-term perspective towards both sustainable development and conflict prevention.¹⁶²

(c) United Nations peacekeeping operations

At its 4970th meeting, on 17 May 2004, the Council considered the item entitled “United Nations peacekeeping operations”. During the debate, the representative of Algeria underlined that the Council could not act in isolation in regard to peacekeeping operations, and that by creating special advisory groups to study the situations of countries emerging from conflict, the Economic and Social Council, for its part, lent important support to peace.¹⁶³ The representative of Angola noted that quick-impact projects, referred to in the Brahimi report in the context of peacebuilding, should also be used proactively for preventive purposes and should be linked to longer-term strategy. In that context, he welcomed the growing cooperation between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, as experienced in the cases of Guinea-Bissau and Burundi.¹⁶⁴

The representative of the Russian Federation indicated that the experience of peacekeeping in Africa clearly demonstrated the intricate linkage of the task of establishing peace with the full social and economic restoration of those countries that had suffered from conflict. His delegation supported the importance of continuing an in-depth consideration of “a rational division of labour” between the Council, the Economic and Social Council and specialized agencies and programmes during the transition from peacekeeping to peacebuilding.¹⁶⁵ The representative of Brazil noted that it was important that the limitations of peace operations be understood and that other resources be available to complement them. In that regard, the role of the Economic and Social Council was crucial, as it promoted efforts and measures towards development. He further noted that the ad hoc groups for Guinea-Bissau and Burundi were excellent instances of the contribution to peacebuilding of the Economic and Social Council in an integrated effort with the Security Council.¹⁶⁶ The representative of Bangladesh emphasized that models for the active engagement of the Economic and Social Council in post-conflict reconstruction should be developed to lessen the Security Council’s burden, with coordinated support from the United Nations Development Group, donors, the international financial institutions and civil society.¹⁶⁷

(d) Role of civil society in post-conflict peacebuilding

At its 4993rd meeting, on 22 June 2004, the Council considered the item entitled “Role of civil society in post-conflict peacebuilding”. During the debate the President of the Economic and Social Council emphasized that civil society organizations were increasingly indispensable partners in post-conflict peacebuilding, as their number, diverse mandates and varying operational capacities made coordination essential to ensure the coherence and impact of their combined efforts.¹⁶⁸ The representative of the United States outlined that the Economic and Social Council and its various ad hoc advisory groups provided an important link with civil society and this would allow the Security Council to benefit from their expertise as it moved forward.¹⁶⁹ The representative of Bangladesh emphasized that the Economic and Social Council as the principal intergovernmental body mandated to promote policy processes in addressing deep-rooted socioeconomic, cultural, environmental or structural causes of conflict, should be the lead institution in involving civil society organizations in post-conflict peacebuilding policy recommendations. He noted that it must act as a United Nations system-wide conduit for the transmittal of early warnings and best practices to the Security Council and the General Assembly.¹⁷⁰

(e) Civilian aspects of conflict management and peacebuilding

At its 5041st meeting, on 22 September 2004, the Council considered the item entitled “Civilian aspects of conflict management and peacebuilding”. During the debate, the representative of Brazil highlighted recent experiences relating to conflicts in countries with very low levels of development, which illustrated the limitations of a purely or primarily military approach to peacebuilding. He emphasized that, without a broader perspective, and without considering economic and social variables, a lasting solution would not be reached. He suggested that the United Nations should develop instruments and mechanisms that translated this awareness into real strategies. He noted that Article 65 of the Charter offered an opportunity to enhance cooperation between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, thereby broadening the scope of multilateral cooperation in conflict management and peacebuilding. He recalled that the Economic and Social Council, not the Security Council, was the Charter organ with responsibility for matters relating to social development, and stated that it was part of the work of the Security Council to promote the work of the Economic and Social Council in fulfilling its tasks, so as to ease the work of the Security Council and prevent it from interfering in its own work. He underlined the importance of integrating political, social and economic elements into crisis management strategies, and noted that, to that end, action could be based on “the wise provision of Article 65 ... which reminds us of the absolute need to address security issues in their socio-economic context and even provides guidance on how to do so from the institutional and multilateral standpoints”.¹⁷¹

The representatives of Pakistan¹⁷² and Angola¹⁷³ also emphasized the necessity for coordination between the Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in effective conflict management and peacebuilding, and the representative of Algeria

similarly advocated that a greater role should be given to the Economic Social Council.¹⁷⁴

(f) Post-conflict peacebuilding

At its 5187th meeting, on 26 May 2005, the Council considered the item entitled “Post-conflict peacebuilding”. During the debate, the Deputy Secretary-General stated that the United Nations system and its principal organs had to function in a coherent fashion. He added that, in recent years, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council had each extended the scope of their activities in post-conflict situations, and that both had critical roles to play.¹⁷⁵ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania emphasized the value of institutional partnership within the United Nations system, and asserted that the creation of the ad hoc advisory groups on African countries emerging from conflict of the Economic and Social Council attested to that, as it was instrumental in linking up the two Councils in areas of common concern related to peace and development.¹⁷⁶ The representative of Argentina said that coordination by the Council with the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with the provisions of Article 65 of the Charter, had a fundamental role to play in the promotion of sustainable development.¹⁷⁷ The representative of Brazil expressed the belief that the Peacebuilding Commission proposed by the Secretary-General was one of the many important topics on the reform agenda, as it was adequately balanced between the involvement of the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council in its composition, as well as in its operation.¹⁷⁸ The representative of Algeria noted that peacebuilding activities could not be the sole responsibility of the Council, and that the Economic and Social Council had to be brought in whenever the issues involved were related to social and economic development. He further noted that such collaboration would not only be consistent with the prerogatives that the Charter accorded to each organ: it would also enable a greater number of Member States to contribute, leading to a more rational and effective handling of the issue.¹⁷⁹

The President of the Security Council made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁸⁰ in which the Council underlined the fact that, for countries emerging from conflict, significant international assistance for economic and social rehabilitation and reconstruction was indispensable. In that regard, the Council acknowledged the role the Economic and Social Council played, including in sustainable development, and reiterated its willingness to improve cooperation with United Nations bodies and organs directly concerned with peacebuilding.

At its 5261st meeting, on 14 September 2005, the Council adopted resolution 1625 (2005), in which it affirmed its determination to strengthen United Nations conflict prevention capacities by requesting, as necessary and appropriate, information and assistance from the Economic and Social Council in accordance with Article 65 of the Charter.¹⁸¹ Following the adoption of the resolution, while underlining the importance of the Peacebuilding Commission, the representative of Brazil noted that better coordination between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council would ensure that situations such as those in Haiti and Guinea-Bissau were adequately addressed.¹⁸²

At its 5335th meeting, on 20 December 2005, the Council adopted resolution 1645 (2005),¹⁸³ by which it decided that the agenda of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission should be based on several requests, including requests for advice from the Economic and Social Council or the General Assembly with the consent of a concerned Member State on the verge of lapsing or relapsing into conflict and with which the Security Council was not seized in accordance with Article 12 of the Charter. It also underlined that the advice of the Commission to provide sustained attention as countries moved from transitional recovery towards development would be of particular relevance to the Economic and Social Council, bearing in mind its role as a principal body for coordination, policy review, policy dialogue and recommendations on issues of economic and social development.¹⁸⁴

Protection of civilians in armed conflict

At its 4990th meeting, on 14 June 2004, the Council considering the item entitled “Protection of civilians in armed conflict”. During the debate, the representative of Pakistan emphasized that most contemporary conflicts were complex in nature, requiring a comprehensive, coherent and multidimensional response. The United Nations was an institution best suited to generate such an integrated approach, with the Secretary-General, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and its relevant functional commissions, and the General Assembly working in synergy within their respective roles and mandates.¹⁸⁵ In a similar vein, the representative of Brazil said that, in order to look for more complementarity, the Council could work in close coordination with the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in the field of the protection of civilians, especially as the critical issue of funding for humanitarian missions was beyond the Council’s purview.¹⁸⁶ The representative of the Philippines called for a recommitment to the road map that identified the responsibilities of the various entities within the United Nations, including the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, and requested a wide dissemination of this road map throughout the United Nations system to maximize contributions to realizing the common objective of effectively protecting civilians in all areas and at all levels.¹⁸⁷ The representative of Ukraine highlighted that further strengthening of cooperation between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council had an important role in areas that were at the heart of peacebuilding.¹⁸⁸ The representative of Japan also emphasized the importance of collaboration between the Council and other organs such as the Economic and Social Council in the effective protection of civilians in armed conflict. He further asserted that a seamless transition from humanitarian assistance to reconstruction was extremely important, and that his

Case 14

Women and peace and security

In his report on women and peace and security dated 13 October 2004,¹⁹⁰ the Secretary-General provided an overview of the progress achieved thus far in the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000). He described the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, and highlighted resolution 2004/4, in which the Economic and Social Council requested all United Nations entities to strengthen their efforts at gender mainstreaming and to develop action plans with specific timelines for implementing the gender mainstreaming strategy; called for measures to strengthen commitment and accountability at the highest levels within the United Nations and underlined the importance of monitoring and reporting; and also requested United Nations entities to provide effective support to gender specialists, gender focal points and gender theme groups, and urged continued efforts towards the full implementation of resolution 1325 (2000).

At the 5066th meeting, on 28 October 2004, the representative of the Philippines welcomed the Secretary-General's intention to work towards a comprehensive system-wide strategy and action plan for gender mainstreaming in the work of the Organization, and to interface that strategy with the policies and plans adopted by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.¹⁹¹ The representative of Algeria raised concerns about the Security Council exceeding its own area of competency owing to the multidimensional and multisectoral nature of the issue, which would threaten to weaken the authority of organs and mechanisms that dealt with the status of women. He stressed the need to ensure that the Council's actions were in accordance with its mandate and complemented the work of other players, particularly the Economic and Social Council.¹⁹² The representative of Pakistan also emphasized the need for the Security Council to enhance its coordination with the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, with a view to evolving a composite approach, particularly with regard to the economic, social and political empowerment of women.¹⁹³ The representative of Brazil underlined the particular need for cooperation between the Council and the Economic and Social Council, under Article 65 of the Charter, to link peace, security, reconstruction and development, and also emphasized the existing success stories of cooperation between the two Councils, such as the ad hoc groups for Guinea-Bissau and Burundi.¹⁹⁴ The representative of the Russian Federation indicated that he was pleased that the issue of women and peace and security was being given increased attention by the Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.¹⁹⁵ The representative of Mexico further emphasized that it was of paramount importance that the content of resolution 1325 (2000) be ingrained in the daily work of the Main Committees of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Secretariat.¹⁹⁶ Finally, the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic highlighted the fact that the Council's interest in the issue of women and peace and security had further strengthened and promoted the integration of existing General Assembly and Economic and Social Council mechanisms relating to the protection of women in armed conflict, strengthening measures to empower women and to promote their equal participation in peacekeeping operations and important decision-making in the post-conflict reconstruction of States and societies.¹⁹⁷

At the close of the meeting, the President issued a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁹⁸ in which the Council recognized that significant progress had been made in the implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) in certain areas of the United Nations peace and security work. The Council also expressed its readiness to further promote the implementation of the resolution, in particular through active cooperation with the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

The Secretary-General, in his report on women and peace and security dated 10 October 2005,¹⁹⁹ emphasized that intergovernmental bodies, such as the Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council played a critical role in providing oversight and ensuring accountability of United Nations entities as they formulated policies, standards and norms for gender mainstreaming and empowerment.

At its 5294th meeting, on 27 October 2005, the Council again considered the item. During the debate, the representative of Algeria emphasized that the Council should not impinge on the prerogatives of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council or the Commission on the Status of Women, which were the appropriate bodies for the development of policies and norms with respect to the status of women and gender equality, and, therefore, it was necessary for the Council to work in conjunction with the other participants in the system.²⁰⁰ The representative of Argentina said that the obstacles to the full implementation of resolution 1325 (2000) arose from both the instability of conflict situations themselves and the lack of respect for the human rights of women. He emphasized that the latter fell within the purview of other bodies such as the Economic and Social Council, and called upon Member States to carry out the commitments they had entered into, especially under the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action.²⁰¹ The representative of Brazil asserted that the possibility of cooperation between the Council and the Economic and Social Council under Article 65 could not be disregarded in the area of intergovernmental oversight.²⁰²

Relations with the Trusteeship Council

This part concerns the relationship between the Security Council and the Trusteeship Council in relation to those trust territories designated as “a strategic area or areas”, under Articles 77 and 82 of the Charter. Article 83, paragraph 1, provides that “all functions of the United Nations relating to strategic areas, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendment, shall be exercised by the Security Council.” Article 83, paragraph 2, further provides that the Security Council shall avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council to perform those functions of the United Nations under the trusteeship system relating to political, economic, social and educational matters in the strategic areas. Those supervisory functions are specified in Articles 87 and 88 of the Charter.

During the period under review, although remaining in existence, the Trusteeship Council was inactive and did not carry on any activity.²⁰³

²⁰³ The Trusteeship Council suspended its operation on 1 November 1994 after the last remaining Trust Territory, Palau, attained independence.

Part IV

Relations with the International Court of Justice

Note

This part concerns the relationship between the Security Council and the International Court of Justice. Section A deals with the election of the members of the Court, which requires that action be taken by the Security Council in conjunction with the General Assembly, with both organs proceeding independently. During the period under review there were two rounds of elections to elect six members to fill casual and regular vacancies of the Court (see cases 15 and 16). Section B reflects on the discussion that continued in the Security Council regarding the respective roles of the Council and the Court in connection with the judgment of the Court in the case concerning the Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro) (see case 17); and the respective roles of the Council and the Court in connection with the Palestinian question following the advisory opinion of the Court on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (see case 18). It also deals with the Council's debate on strengthening international law, during which the role of the Court was emphasized (see case 19). An instance is also described where the Secretary-General and the Security Council, by means of communications, welcomed the ruling of the Court in a dispute between Cameroon and Nigeria concerning the Bakassi peninsula (see case 20).

During the period under review, by a note verbale dated 29 September 2005 addressed to the Secretary-General,²⁰⁴ Costa Rica communicated that it had filed a case against Nicaragua before the Court concerning the navigational rights of Costa Rica on the San Juan River. There were no subsequent communications on this question during the period, nor did the Council meet to discuss it.

A. Practice in relation to the election of members of the International Court of Justice

The procedure for election of members of the Court is set out in Articles 4 and 8 and 10 to 14 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice; rules 150 and 151 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly; and rules 40 and 61 of the provisional rules of procedure of the Security Council.

For each of the two elections (cases 15 and 16) held during this period, the Security Council began the procedure to fill a vacancy, or vacancies, by fixing the date of election, in accordance with Article 14 of the Court's Statute and the Council's practice, through the adoption of a resolution.²⁰⁵ The Security Council and the General Assembly then proceeded independently with the elections.²⁰⁶ At the Security Council meetings, the President of the Council drew attention to a memorandum²⁰⁷ by the Secretary-General describing the composition of the Court and setting out the procedure to be followed in the conduct of the election. He reminded the Council that Article 10 (1) of the Court's Statute provided that "Those candidates who obtain an absolute majority of votes in the General Assembly and in the Security Council shall be considered as elected", adding that the required majority in the Security Council was, therefore, eight votes. He explained further that the voting would proceed by secret ballot.

²⁰⁵ In one instance, the Council adopted resolution 1571 (2004) fixing the date of the election; in the remaining five instances, relating to the election to fill regular vacancies of the Court, it appears that the Council set the date of election informally.

²⁰⁶ For the verbatim records of the relevant Security Council meetings see S/PV.5121 and S/PV.5299; for the verbatim records of the relevant General Assembly plenary meetings see A/59/PV.21 and A/60/PV.44.

At its 5070th meeting, on 4 November 2004, the Council considered the item entitled “Date of election to fill a vacancy in the International Court of Justice”.²⁰⁸ The Council adopted resolution 1571 (2004), by which it decided that the election should be held on 15 February 2005.

At its 5121st meeting, on 15 February 2005, the Council elected a member of the International Court of Justice to fill a vacancy in the Court caused by the resignation of one of its members.²⁰⁹ On the first ballot, one candidate obtained the required majority of votes in the Council. The President stated that he would communicate the result of the vote to the President of the General Assembly, and requested the Council to remain in session until the result of the voting in the General Assembly had been received. Subsequently, he informed members of the Council that he had received a letter from the President of the General Assembly informing him that the same candidate had received an absolute majority in the General Assembly at the 81st plenary meeting of its fifty-ninth session. The candidate in question was therefore elected a member of the Court. As the new member was elected to replace a member whose term of office had not expired, he was elected to the remainder of his predecessor’s term of office, expiring on 5 February 2009.

At its 5299th meeting, on 7 November 2005, the Council proceeded with the election of five members of the International Court of Justice, to fill the seats which would become vacant on 5 February 2006. On the first ballot six candidates obtained the required majority of votes in the Council. As more than five candidates received the required majority, the Council then held a second ballot in accordance with paragraph 13 of the Secretary-General’s memorandum.²¹⁰ The results of the second ballot were similar to that of the first, namely that six candidates obtained the required majority of votes. The President then communicated to the Council that six candidates had also obtained the required majority in the second ballot in the General Assembly, and accordingly a third ballot was held in the Council and the General Assembly.²¹¹

It was communicated to the Council that the President of the General Assembly had suspended the third ballot until later the same day, and the President of the Council proposed to proceed in the same way and to resume the ballot later at the same meeting, to which all the Council members agreed.

At the same meeting, at the third ballot, it was communicated to the Council that, by letters dated 7 November 2005, the representatives of Sweden and Tunisia had informed the Legal Counsel that their respective national groups had separately decided to withdraw the candidacy of Mr. Abdelfattah Amor. Since Mr. Amor’s candidacy was nominated only by the national groups of Sweden and Tunisia his name was not included on the third ballot. The third ballot once again resulted in more than five candidates obtaining the majority necessitating a fourth ballot. It was communicated to the Council that the General Assembly would also need to conduct a fourth ballot.

The Council proceeded to a fourth ballot. Prior to the announcement of the result of the fourth ballot the President informed the Council that he had received a letter from the President of the General Assembly stating that five candidates had received an absolute majority in the General Assembly’s fourth ballot. It was then revealed that in the fourth ballot of the Council more than five candidates had obtained the required majority.

As the General Assembly had already approved five candidates it did not vote again. The fifth ballot then proceeded in the Council. This, once again, resulted in more than five candidates with an absolute majority.

The Council accordingly proceeded with a sixth ballot, and in this ballot only the required number of candidates, five, received the required majority. The ²¹⁰ S/2005/446, para. 13, describes the composition of the Court and sets out the procedure to be followed in the conduct of the election.

President communicated the result of the vote to the President of the General Assembly and requested the Council to remain in session to await a communication from the President of the General Assembly, in keeping with procedure, so the results could be read out simultaneously. Subsequently, he announced that he had received a letter from the President of the General Assembly informing the Council that the same candidates had received the required majority of votes in the Assembly at the 44th plenary meeting of its sixtieth session. The candidates in question were therefore elected members of the International Court of Justice for a term of office of nine years, beginning on 6 February 2006.

B. Consideration of the relationship between the Security Council and the Court

Article 94

1. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party.
2. If any party to a case fails to perform the obligations incumbent upon it under a judgment rendered by the Court, the other party may have recourse to the Security Council, which may, if it deems necessary, make recommendations or decide upon measures to be taken to give effect to the judgment.

Article 96

1. The General Assembly or the Security Council may request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question.
2. Other organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies, which may at any time be so authorized by the General Assembly, may also request advisory opinions of the Court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities.

Article 41 of the Statute of the Court

1. The Court shall have the power to indicate, if it considers that circumstances so require, any provisional measures which ought to be taken to preserve the respective rights of either party.

2. Pending the final decision, notice of the measures suggested shall forthwith be given to the parties and to the Security Council.

Case 17

During the period under review, the International Court of Justice issued its judgment in the case concerning the Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro) on 26 February 2007. Prior to the ruling of the Court, by a letter dated 12 October 2006 addressed to the President of the Council,²¹² the Secretary-General transmitted the thirtieth report of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, in which the High Representative asserted that the relationship between Bosnia and Herzegovina and Serbia had been complicated by the case pending before the International Court of Justice.

By a letter dated 3 May 2007 addressed to the President of the Security Council,²¹³ the Secretary-General transmitted a report from the High Representative for Bosnia and Herzegovina. In the report the High Representative outlined how the ruling of the Court on 26 February had brought to the fore the issue of constitutional reform within Bosnia and Herzegovina. He explained that, as a result of the ruling, the Bosniak politicians had seized upon the Court's verdict and pointed out that it was the army and police of the wartime Republika Srpska that had committed genocide in and around Srebrenica in July 1995. Consequently, the Bosniaks demanded that the Srebrenica municipality be removed from Republika Srpska jurisdiction and that the Republika Srpska itself be abolished.²¹⁴ Encouraged by the findings of the Court, the Bosniaks continued to pursue their goal of an entity-free Bosnia and Herzegovina²¹⁵ in contrast to the federal state system desired by the Serbs,²¹⁶ and the report indicated that this had caused “reverberations” throughout the country.²¹⁷

In response, by a letter dated 15 May 2007 addressed to the President of the Council,²¹⁸ the President of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia transmitted an assessment and report pursuant to paragraph 6 of Council resolution 1534 (2004) regarding the completion strategy of the Tribunal.²¹⁹ In the light of the judgment of the International Court of Justice, the President of the Tribunal expressed the determination of the Office of the Prosecutor to continue actively seeking support from States and international organizations to obtain the arrest of remaining fugitives, and expressed hope that the international community and especially concerned States would give effect to the findings of the Court.

At its 5675th meeting, on 16 May 2007, the Council considered the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. During the debate, the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina highlighted the political tensions within Bosnia and Herzegovina following the judgment of the International Court of Justice, which had threatened stability in the State as politicians sought to exploit the ruling for their own gains. The High Representative then outlined the obligations placed upon Serbia as a result of the judgment, but asserted that Serbia had “not delivered on that obligation” and that no results had been forthcoming since the ruling.²²⁰ Finally, he stated that the Court’s verdict acknowledged that genocide had occurred in Srebrenica, and made it clear that the United Nations had special responsibilities to its people and encouraged the Council to establish a

United Nations Day of Srebrenica to commemorate the tragic events that had occurred there.²²¹

The representative of Italy endorsed the ruling of the International Court of Justice, and asserted that the ruling should be applied scrupulously so as to further ascertain responsibility and to ensure that justice prevailed.²²² The representative of Belgium emphasized that the ruling of the Court should not be used as a pretext to review the political and institutional architecture of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and called for the cessation of all nationalized rhetoric and the depoliticization of certain topics within the country.²²³ The representative of the United Kingdom emphasized that Bosnian leaders should not exploit the judgment to stir up Srebrenica as a means of undermining the Dayton Peace Agreement.²²⁴

By a letter dated 30 May 2007 addressed to the Secretary-General,²²⁵ the representative of Pakistan, in his capacity as Chairman of the Organization of the Islamic Conference Group, transmitted a resolution adopted at the thirty-fourth session of the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, in which the Ministers took note of the decision by the International Court of Justice on the matter of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and declared that the judgment must be fully implemented.

At its 5697th meeting, on 18 June 2007, the Council considered the item concerning the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and the International Tribunal for Rwanda. During the deliberations, the representative of France welcomed the measures taken by the Belgrade authorities in handing over two indictees to The Hague, in accordance with its international commitments set out in the ruling of the International Court of Justice.²²⁶ The representative of the United Kingdom welcomed the judgment of the Court, and affirmed the obligations placed upon Serbia by part of that judgment, that the remaining accused should be tried before the Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.²²⁷

By a letter dated 10 August 2007 addressed to the President of the Council,²²⁸ the Secretary-General transmitted a report of the Secretary-General of the Council of the European Union and High Representative of the Union for the Common Foreign and Security Policy, on the activities of the European Union military mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina. In the report, it was emphasized that the political situation within Bosnia and Herzegovina had deteriorated, mainly as a result of the ruling of 26 February of the International Court of Justice, which had sparked strong reactions.

By a letter dated 5 November 2007 addressed to the President of the Council,²²⁹ the Secretary-General transmitted the thirty-second report of the High Representative for Bosnia and Herzegovina, covering the period from 1 April to 30 September 2007. In his report, the High Representative made clear that the political fallout from the judgment of the Court had continued to define domestic politics during the first half of the reporting period, and the Bosniak political leaders continued to use the Srebrenica genocide as a means of attacking both the constitutional order and the legitimacy of the Republika Srpska,²³⁰ and this combination had contributed to an unfavourable political environment for achieving the reforms to which the Office of the High Representative was committed.²³¹ However, the High Representative also recognized that the tensions over Srebrenica in the wake of the judgment had lessened overall by the end of the reporting period.²³²

On 9 July 2004, the International Court of Justice issued its advisory opinion on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in which it held that Israel was under an obligation to terminate its breaches of international law, to cease forthwith the works of construction of the wall being built by it in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, and to dismantle forthwith the structure therein situated.²³³ Subsequent to the ruling, the Security Council received numerous communications from the Secretary-General and Member States²³⁴ and held many debates on the Palestinian question.²³⁵ Member States in their communications condemned the actions of Israel in continuing with the construction of the wall in flagrant violation of the advisory opinion of the Court, and urged Israel to comply with its legal obligations arising from the judgment of the Court, General Assembly resolutions and international law.

At its 4895th meeting, on 16 January 2004, the Council considered the item entitled “The situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question”. During the debate, the issue of the construction of the separation barrier was raised by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, who indicated that the General Assembly had requested that the International Court of Justice provide an advisory opinion on the legality of the construction of the separation barrier.²³⁶

In identical letters dated 27 February 2004 addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Council,²³⁷ the Permanent Observer of Palestine denounced the actions by Israel in “continuing to kill and wound Palestinian civilians”, and also for continuing the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, with total contempt for the resolutions of the United Nations and in complete disregard of the ongoing advisory proceedings of the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences arising from the continued construction.

Council, the representative of Israel expressed his disappointment that the legality of the wall was being challenged by the International Court of Justice, and asserted that it was “tragic that the security fence, the very counter-terrorist defensive measure that could have saved each passing life” was being challenged in the Court, especially because, in areas currently protected by the security fence, the incidence of terrorist attacks had been significantly reduced.²³⁸

At the 4929th meeting, on 23 March 2004, the Permanent Observer of Palestine expressed grave concern about Israel’s continued building of the expansionist wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, even after the matter had been submitted to the International Court of Justice at the request of the General Assembly.²³⁹ The representative of Saudi Arabia remarked upon Israel being a “State marked by hostility to international law and the norms of human society”. He asserted that international relations were in a very grave situation because of the precedence being granted to the logic of force over law, and because of the lack of respect for international norms which had given rise to strange and distorted interpretations of those norms which did not accord with opinions handed down by the International Court of Justice.²⁴⁰

By identical letters dated 21 June 2004 addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Council,²⁴¹ the Permanent Observer of Palestine declared that “Israel, the occupying Power, continue[d] to build its expansionist wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in direct violation of General Assembly resolution ES-10/13 of 21 October 2003”,²⁴² and furthermore that the occupying Power had continued “to confiscate even more Palestinian land, to bulldoze and destroy more Palestinian property and to accelerate the building of the wall also in blatant disregard for Assembly resolution ES-10/14, in which the Assembly requested the International Court of Justice to urgently render an advisory opinion on the issue, and in contempt for the ongoing deliberations of the Court”.

At the 5002nd meeting, on 13 July 2004, the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process and Personal Representative of the Secretary-General to the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Palestinian Authority drew the Council’s attention to the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the West Bank, issued on 9 July, in particular to the fact that the Court called on the United Nations to consider what further action was required to bring an end to the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall.²⁴³

At the 5007th meeting, on 20 July 2004, the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States addressed the Council, and described the decision of the International Court of Justice as “a strong and wise response to those who are seeking to make use of negative measures against principles of international law or who are following a double standard”.²⁴⁴

In identical letters dated 6 August 2004 addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Council, the Permanent Observer of Palestine recalled that the Court had found that Israel’s construction of the wall was in breach of several of its legal obligations, and had concluded that Israel was under an obligation to terminate its breaches of international law and to cease its construction of the wall. Furthermore, the Court spelled out the obligations of States in that regard and determined that the United Nations, including the General Assembly and Security Council, should consider what further action was required to bring an end to the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall and its regime, taking due account of the advisory opinion. The Permanent Observer noted that, immediately after both the Court’s rendering of the advisory opinion and the Assembly’s adoption of resolution ES-10/15, Israeli officials publicly rejected the advisory opinion, speaking with ill-respect and disdain for the Court, for the opinion and for the Assembly, and defiantly declared Israel’s intention to continue constructing the wall. He further stated that this had to be a matter of direct and critical concern for the United Nations, including the General Assembly and the Security Council.²⁴⁵

²⁴⁵ S/2004/630.

By identical letters dated 24 August 2004 addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Council, the Permanent Observer of Palestine asserted that all Israeli settlement policies and practices were being carried out in flagrant and grave violation of international law, particularly the Fourth Geneva Convention. He stated that this fact was confirmed by the justices of the International Court of Justice in the advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, which determined, inter alia, that the Israeli settlements had been established in breach of international law. The Permanent Observer also reiterated that, “as concluded by the International Court of Justice, the unlawful construction of the wall by Israel, the occupying Power, is intricately related to this unlawful colonial settlement campaign in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem”, and that those “illegal practices are preventing the realization of the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to self-determination in their independent State of Palestine”.²⁴⁶

At the 5039th meeting, on 17 September 2004, the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs reported to the Council that, despite the advisory opinion of the Court, the Israeli policy of confiscating and/or levelling Palestinian land continued. He informed the Council that he was awaiting further details to be published on the exact routing of the parts of the barrier that remained to be constructed in the West Bank, and that Israel was currently revising long sections of the barrier route in accordance with the ruling of the Israeli High Court, which had instructed the Government to respond to the advisory opinion rendered by the International Court of Justice, which might have a further impact on the route of the barrier.²⁴⁷

At the 5049th meeting, on 4 October 2004, the Permanent Observer of Palestine reiterated the obligations placed upon Israel arising from the ruling of the Court and its request that the Security Council take additional measures to bring an end to the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall. He noted that the General Assembly had responded favourably and had taken the first step, as set out in resolution ES-10/15. He further noted that the Security Council had not yet responded, and called on the Council to become engaged in the political process, thus giving it momentum and further force.²⁴⁸

At the same meeting, the representative of Romania emphasized that the illegal construction of the wall, as determined by the International Court of Justice, was contributing to the very harsh conditions facing the Palestinian people, as the wall cut off the productive resources: their best arable land and their major water sources.²⁴⁹ The representative of Pakistan said that the continued construction of the wall in defiance of the Court’s ruling was a manifestation of an objective, that of the permanent annexation of occupied Palestinian territories.²⁵⁰ The representative of Tunisia, speaking on behalf of the Group of Arab States, emphasized the commitments placed on Israel as a result of the advisory opinion of the Court, and reminded the Council that the International Court of Justice had requested the United Nations, particularly the Security Council, to adopt additional measures to put an end to the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall.²⁵¹ The representative of the League of Arab States questioned how, in the face of continued actions by Israel in contravention of the ruling of the Court, the Security Council could remain a silent observer of the daily war crimes perpetrated by Israel’s occupation forces against the Palestinian people. He called upon the Council to adopt the necessary measures to prevail upon Israel to renounce its policy of occupation, settlement-building, killings and destruction and to compel Israel to return to the negotiating table.²⁵² The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic underlined the repeated warnings received about the plans by the Head of the Government of Israel, and highlighted how he was increasing the number of settlements in the West Bank and “continuing to build the racist separation wall”, in defiance of the opinion of the International Court of Justice.²⁵³

In a letter dated 1 October 2004 addressed to the Secretary-General, the representative of Turkey, in his capacity as Chairman of the Organization of the Islamic Conference Group, transmitted the final communiqué of the annual coordination meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Organization of the Islamic Conference. In the communiqué, they strongly welcomed the advisory opinion of 9 July 2004 of the International Court of Justice and took note of “the negative and defiant response by Israel” to the advisory opinion and its declarations to continue constructing the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem.²⁵⁴

In identical letters dated 30 December 2004,²⁵⁵ and also in two subsequent identical letters,²⁵⁶ addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Council, the Permanent Observer of Palestine indicated that Israel continued to pursue its illegal settlement and wall campaign in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in blatant violation of and contemptuous disregard for the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice.

In identical letters dated 26 January 2005 addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Council,²⁵⁷ the Permanent Observer of Palestine stated that Israel had resumed construction of a section of the wall by the illegal settlement of Ariel, which was located 12 miles deep into the West Bank, despite the ruling of the Court.

By identical letters dated 22 February 2005,²⁵⁸ and subsequent identical letters dated 17 May 2005,²⁵⁹ addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Council, the representative of the Permanent Observer Mission to Palestine informed the Council that Israel was continuing to pursue its illegal policies and practices in spite of the ruling by the Court. He asserted that the Council had the duty to address the issue and to take the necessary measures to ensure that Israel upheld its responsibilities and legal obligations, and that Member States also upheld their legal obligations, as mentioned in the advisory opinion.

In a letter dated 18 April 2005 addressed to the President of the Council,²⁶⁰ the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States transmitted a letter from its Secretary-General and the texts of the resolutions and the Algiers Declaration adopted by the Council of the League of Arab States at its seventeenth session. In the letter, the League of Arab States reaffirmed the importance of the legal finding of the International Court of Justice and the necessity of observing the legally binding obligations arising therefrom upon Israel and the States Members of the United Nations, and called upon the General Assembly and the Security Council to follow up on the decision of the Court by ensuring fulfilment of the legal obligations determined by the Court.

At the 5230th meeting, on 21 July 2005, the representative of Palestine asserted that the approval by the Government of Israel on 10 July of the route inside East Jerusalem of the separation wall was a grave development. She stated that it was a direct challenge to the international community, as it coincided with the one-year anniversary of the advisory opinion on the wall, in which the Court ruled that the wall was illegal. She reiterated that the international community must abide by the legal opinion of the Court, and looked forward to the day when the international community, in particular the Security Council, would ensure that Israel respected international law in accordance with the Court’s opinion.²⁶¹ The representative of Brazil voiced the opinion that Israel should be encouraged to reverse its decision on the matter of the construction of the wall around Jerusalem and to comply with the advisory opinion of the Court in all activities related to the wall.²⁶²

The representative of China noted similarly that the Israeli decision to accelerate construction of the wall one year after the issuance of the Court’s judgment contravened the relevant United Nations resolutions and principles, and would exacerbate Israeli-Palestinian discord.²⁶³ The representative of Japan deplored the construction of the wall inside the Green Line, in violation of the findings of the Court, and asserted it was adversely affecting the livelihood of Palestinians and was prejudicial to the outcome of the final status negotiations.²⁶⁴ The representative of Argentina emphasized that Israel should act in conformity with international law with respect to the construction of the separate barrier, and called upon the Government of Israel to abide by the judgment of the Court.²⁶⁵ The representative of Benin further asserted that the continued construction of the wall, despite the ruling of the Court, was a real challenge for the international community, and urged the Government of Israel to substantially implement the Court's decision, and this sentiment was echoed by the representative of the Philippines.²⁶⁶

In a letter dated 29 September 2005 addressed to the Secretary-General,²⁶⁷ the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in his capacity as Chairman of the Group of Arab States and on behalf of the States members of the League of Arab States, commented on the statement delivered by the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process to the Council during the briefing held on 23 September 2005.²⁶⁸ In his statement, the Special Coordinator had referred repeatedly to Israel's need for security as the reason behind the building of the wall. The Arab Group reiterated that the Court had rejected the argument that the wall was needed for security reasons, and had stated: "the Court is not convinced that the construction of the wall along the route chosen was the only means to safeguard the interests of Israel".²⁶⁹

In his report on the peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine²⁷⁰ submitted on 7 November 2005 in accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/31, the Secretary-General reiterated his call to Israel to abide by the judgment of the International Court of Justice. Included in the report was a note verbale dated 2 August 2005 from the Permanent Observer of Palestine in which he recalled the ruling of the Court which determined the applicable rules and principles of international law, including humanitarian law and human rights law, and regretted that Israel continued to defy the international community and engage in grave violations and breaches of international law and international humanitarian law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. The Permanent Observer further asserted that the direct and grave impact of this ongoing illegal situation on the efforts to achieve a peaceful settlement of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict was unquestionable and had to be urgently addressed by both the General Assembly and the Security Council; this was a duty that was affirmed by the Court in clear and definitive terms. In his observation, the Secretary-General expressed concern about Israel's continued construction of the barrier in the West Bank, and reiterated his call to Israel to abide by its legal obligations as set forth in the advisory opinion of the Court.

At the 5312th meeting, on 30 November 2005, the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs reiterated the Secretary-General's call on Israel to abide by its legal obligations as set forth in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice and in General Assembly resolution ES-10/15.²⁷¹

In identical letters dated 19 January 2006 addressed to the Secretary-General and President of the Council,²⁷² the Permanent Observer of Palestine highlighted the danger that the continued Israeli settlement activities posed to the safety of Palestinian civilians and their properties across the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and urged the international community to insist that Israel respect its obligations, including ceasing the construction of the wall which the Court had deemed illegal.

At the 5411th meeting, on 17 April 2006, the representative of France expressed his concern at the continuation of the Israeli settlement policy in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, at the route of the separation barrier, which contravened the advisory opinion of the Court.²⁷³ The continuation of the construction was also a matter of concern for the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic.²⁷⁴ The representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran spoke of Israel's defiance of the advisory opinion of the Court, and asserted that the impunity with which Israel had been allowed to carry out its "war crimes" had emboldened it to continue such policies and practices.²⁷⁵ The representative of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela expressed the belief that a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the Palestinian problem — the nucleus of the Arab-Israeli conflict — had to be based on the relevant United Nations resolutions and the advisory opinion of the Court.²⁷⁶ In concluding, the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States stated that the “Israeli occupying authorities” were expanding their illegal policy of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and continued to erect the barrier in flagrant violation of the advisory opinion of the Court.²⁷⁷

At the 5472nd meeting, on 21 June 2006, the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs informed the Council that Israel was continuing the barrier construction despite the ruling of the Court, and that the route of the section of the barrier in Jerusalem had been approved by the Israeli High Court of Justice on 23 May 2006.²⁷⁸

In his report on the peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine²⁷⁹ submitted on 19 September 2006 in accordance with General Assembly resolution 60/39, the Secretary-General observed that the continuing construction of the barrier encroaching on Palestinian land contradicted the legal obligations of Israel set forth in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice and General Assembly resolution ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004. Quoted in the report was a note verbale dated 4 August 2006 from the Permanent Observer of Palestine which highlighted the fact that the advisory opinion rendered by the Court on 9 July 2004 regarding Israel’s expansionist wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, continued to be blatantly disrespected by Israel.²⁸⁰

At its 5552nd meeting, on 19 October 2006, the Council was addressed by the Special Representative for the Middle East Peace Process, who stated that settlement activity continued in the West Bank, and construction of the barrier had continued in defiance of the advisory opinion of the Court.²⁸¹ During the debate, the Permanent Observer of Palestine affirmed that his Government categorically rejected any unilateral plans by the Israelis in the West Bank, because the purpose of such plans was to annex more territory as a fait accompli and to annex the occupied eastern part of Jerusalem, which, in addition to the continuance of construction in violation of the ruling of the Court, obviated the possibility of a peaceful resolution in which two States lived side by side in peace and security.²⁸² The representative of Cuba, speaking on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, said that Israeli construction of the barrier continued in defiance of the ruling of the Court, and stressed that if the construction of the wall was not stopped or reversed, it would be impossible to reach a two-State solution to the conflict.²⁸³

At the 5568th meeting, on 21 November 2006, the representative of France called upon the Israelis to refrain from any unilateral action that might prejudice the results of final status negotiations or undermine prospects for the creation of a viable Palestinian State, and, in keeping with the advisory opinion of the Court, to put an end to its settlement activities and to the building of the wall inside the West Bank.²⁸⁴

At the 5584th meeting, on 12 December 2006, the Secretary-General noted that “as Palestinians watch this activity, they also see a barrier being built through their land, in contravention of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice ... Their despair at the occupation only grows, as does their determination to resist it”.²⁸⁵ The representative of France emphasized that Israel had a duty to refrain from any unilateral action that would undermine the prospects for creating a politically, economically and geographically viable Palestinian State, and must put an end to settlement activities and the construction of the wall in accordance with the advisory opinion of the Court.²⁸⁶

At its 5667th meeting, on 25 April 2007, the Council was briefed by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, who informed the Council that Israel continued to construct the wall in the West Bank, ignoring the advisory opinion of the Court.²⁸⁷ The representative of Indonesia deplored the continuing practice of construction in contravention of the judgment of the Court, and highlighted the harmful consequence of the wall to the Palestinian people within its boundaries.²⁸⁸ The Permanent Observer of Palestine pointed out that, in continuing construction in disregard of the advisory opinion, Israel was in violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention and other applicable international law.²⁸⁹ The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic noted that Israel continued to violate the truce agreement, committing daily killings and destroying Palestinian property, in addition to continuing the construction of the wall in flagrant violation of the ruling of the Court.²⁹⁰

In identical letters dated 17 May 2007 addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Council,²⁹¹ the representative of the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine emphasized that the international community should urgently take measures to uphold international law and hold Israel accountable for its actions, and compel Israel to comply with the judgment of the Court.

By a letter dated 23 May 2007 addressed to the President of the Council, the representative of South Africa communicated to the Council the final document of the United Nations African meeting on the question of Palestine, in which it was highlighted that “the participants were highly critical of Israel’s routinely disproportionate and indiscriminate military operations in Palestinian population centres”, and reminded Israel of its responsibilities under international law. The participants also noted that the construction of the wall inside the West Bank continued at an accelerated pace in complete disregard of the judgment of the Court. They called upon Governments and intergovernmental organizations and others to meet their legal obligations faced with Israel’s non-compliance, and take appropriate actions.²⁹²

By two letters dated 6 June 2007²⁹³ and 7 June 2007²⁹⁴ addressed to the Secretary-General, the representative of Cuba, in his capacity as Chair of the Coordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement, conveyed the viewpoint of the Non-Aligned Movement, which demanded that Israel cease the illegal construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and condemned the flagrant challenge and disrespect by Israel for the advisory opinion of the Court.

At the 5736th meeting, on 29 August 2007, the Permanent Observer of Palestine noted that Israel was continuing to unlawfully construct the wall in total disrespect of the advisory opinion, and strongly asserted that the wall and the settlements had to be dismantled.²⁹⁵

In his report on the peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine the Secretary-General noted with concern the route of the wall in contravention of Israel’s legal obligations set forth in the advisory opinion of the Court.²⁹⁶

By a letter dated 18 October 2007 addressed to the Secretary-General, the representative of Pakistan, in his capacity as Chair of the Organization of the Islamic Conference Group, communicated the final communiqué of the annual coordination meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of States members of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, in which they reiterated their condemnation of Israel’s continuing construction of the wall in flagrant violation of international law and in total disrespect for the advisory opinion of the Court.²⁹⁷

In identical letters dated 28 December 2007 addressed to the President of the Council,²⁹⁸ the Permanent Observer of Palestine asserted that the illegal settlement activities being carried out by Israel constituted grave violations and breaches of the United Nations resolutions, the Fourth Geneva Convention, the judgment of the International Court of Justice, and Israel’s obligations and commitments under the road map.

During the period under review the Council was seized with the matter of strengthening international law. At the meetings of the Council, emphasis was placed on the importance of the International Court of Justice. In addition, a decision was adopted emphasizing the important role of the Court as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations.

By a letter dated 22 February 2005 addressed to the Secretary-General, the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya proposed a number of reforms of the United Nations, including a more decisive division of roles for the organs of the United Nations, namely, to make the General Assembly a legislative body, the Security Council an executive body, and the International Court of Justice the judicial body.²⁹⁹ The representative asserted that dividing the roles of the organs this way would ensure that the judicial decisions made by the Court would be implemented by the executive, the Security Council.

At its 5474th meeting, on 22 June 2006, the Council considered the item entitled “Strengthening international law: rule of law and maintenance of international peace and security”. During the debate, Judge Rosalyn Higgins, President of the International Court of Justice, said that while the Charter provided that the Council could inform parties to resolve their disputes through judicial settlement, the Council had long failed to use that provision. She emphasized the important role of the Court in settling legal disputes of any nature and encouraged the Council to adopt a policy whereby, when a dispute arose, it strongly indicated to the parties that they are expected to have recourse to the Court.³⁰⁰ Several Council members indicated their support for a strengthened relationship between the Council and the Court, and praised the Court for its role in peaceful settlement.³⁰¹ The representative of the United Kingdom asserted the “absolutely central role” the Court had to play in maintaining international peace and security,³⁰² while the representative of Peru underlined the pivotal role that the principal organ of the United Nations played in the maintenance of international peace and security and stressed the contributions of the Court to the achievement of the fundamental purposes of the United Nations by means of the peaceful settlement of disputes.³⁰³ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania recognized and underlined the role of the Court in complementing the role of the Security Council.³⁰⁴ Emphasizing the recommendation that legal disputes should be referred to the Court, the representative of Mexico stated that the Council had to develop its institutional capacity to prevent the outbreak of situations that threatened peace and, in particular, strive to help the parties to a dispute to resolve it, in keeping with the procedures set out in the Charter.³⁰⁵

Following the meeting, by a statement of the President dated 22 June 2006,³⁰⁶ the Council called upon Member States to settle disputes by peaceful means, including recourse to the International Court of Justice. The Council also emphasized the important role of the Court, as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, in adjudicating disputes among States.

During the period under review, the Council was seized of the dispute between Cameroon and Nigeria regarding the Bakassi peninsula and the subsequent judgment of the International Court of Justice on the issue.³⁰⁷ While the Council held no meeting to address this issue, and adopted no decision, it received several communications from the Secretary-General and Member States concerning the implementation of the judgment of the Court.

By a letter dated 17 March 2004 addressed to the President of the Council,³⁰⁸ the Secretary-General provided an appraisal of activities undertaken by Cameroon and Nigeria through his good offices, in furtherance of the implementation of the ruling of the Court of 10 October 2002 on the land and maritime boundary between the two countries. The Secretary-General reported that at the first meeting of the Heads of State of Cameroon and Nigeria both had requested the establishment of a Mixed Commission mandated to consider the implications of the Court's decision. He gave a summary of the progress of the work of the Mixed Commission and commended it.

In a letter dated 29 July 2004 addressed to the President of the Council,³⁰⁹ the representative of Cameroon transmitted a joint communiqué concerning the border dispute between Cameroon and Nigeria, in which it was emphasized that the two States were cooperating with each other in an effort to implement the judgment of the Court, and both expressed satisfaction at the work of the Mixed Commission in facilitating the peaceful implementation of the ruling and settlement of the dispute. Moreover, both Heads of State extended appreciation and gratitude to the Secretary-General for his ceaseless efforts in the implementation of the Court's judgment.

In a letter dated 14 December 2004 addressed to the President of the Council,³¹⁰ the Secretary-General outlined the mandate, functions and activities of the United Nations Office for West Africa (UNOWA) for the period from 1 January 2005 to 31 December 2007. One of the mandated functions was to facilitate, mainly through the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in his capacity as Chairman of the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission, the implementation of the work plan approved by Cameroon and Nigeria towards the implementation of the ruling of the Court.

By a letter dated 1 August 2005 addressed to the President of the Council,³¹¹ the Secretary-General informed the latter that, through his good offices, he had facilitated the implementation of the ruling of the Court on the land and maritime boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria. Furthermore, he applauded the work of the Mixed Commission, which had moved the process forward smoothly and peacefully, and kept open the dialogue and communication between Cameroon and Nigeria in furtherance of the judgment of the Court.

By a letter dated 20 June 2006 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³¹² the Secretary-General referred to the agreement between Cameroon and Nigeria concerning the modalities of withdrawal and transfer of authority in the Bakassi peninsula.

By a letter dated 21 June 2006 addressed to the Secretary-General,³¹³ the representative of Austria transmitted a statement on the agreement on the Bakassi peninsula, issued on 20 June 2006, in which the European Union congratulated the Governments of Nigeria and Cameroon for signing the agreement concerning the modalities of withdrawal and transfer of authority in the Bakassi peninsula, and on their commitment to implement by peaceful means the judgment of the Court, and called it an "inspiring example for the peaceful settlement of differences in accordance with international law".

By a letter dated 28 September 2006 addressed to the President of the Council,³¹⁴ the Secretary-General once again reported on the achievements and activities undertaken by the Mixed Commission in implementing the ruling of the Court. He informed the President that it was his intention to ask for additional resources from the regular budget of the Mixed Commission for 2007 to help advance the peaceful implementation of the Court's ruling.

By a letter dated 17 October 2006 addressed to the Secretary-General,³¹⁵ the President of the Security Council acknowledged his letter of 28 September indicating his intention to continue the activities of the United Nations support team for the Mixed Commission with funding from the regular budget. He further stated that the Council requested further information and clarification in writing on the activities expected to be performed by the Mixed Commission in 2007 and following years.

As requested by the Council, by a letter dated 1 November 2006 addressed to the President of the Council,³¹⁶ the Secretary-General outlined the activities to be performed by the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission to foster the implementation of the judgment of the Court.

By a letter dated 28 November 2007 addressed to the President of the Council,³¹⁷ the Secretary-General transmitted the mandate and functions of UNOWA from January 2008 to December 2010, which included facilitating the implementation of the ruling of the Court on the land and maritime boundary dispute between Cameroon and Nigeria.

By a letter dated 30 November 2007 addressed to the President of the Council,³¹⁸ the Secretary-General communicated the latest achievements and activities carried out by the Mixed Commission as it continued to support and facilitate the peaceful implementation of the Court's judgment. The Secretary-General indicated that the four sections of the ruling of the Court had been resolved in May 2007, and the Mixed Commission would continue to contribute to the reaching of an agreement on oil and gas fields straddling the maritime boundary between the two countries. The Secretary-General also communicated his intention to ask for additional resources from the regular budget to assist the Mixed Commission in its work.

Part V Relations with the Secretariat

Article 98

The Secretary-General shall act in that capacity³¹⁹ in all meetings of the General Assembly, of the Security Council, of the Economic and Social Council, and of the Trusteeship Council, and shall perform such other functions as are entrusted to him by these organs ...

³¹⁹ Article 97 of the Charter stipulates that the Secretary-General shall be the chief administrative officer of the Organization.

Article 99

The Secretary-General may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security.

Note

This part is concerned with the functions other than those of an administrative nature entrusted to the Secretary-General by the Security Council under Article 98 of the Charter³²⁰ (section A) and with the Secretary-General's power of initiative under Article 99 (section B).

A. Functions other than those of an administrative nature entrusted to the Secretary-General by the Security Council

This section deals with the functions entrusted to the Secretary-General by the Security Council with respect to international peace and security. His functions in that regard continued to expand during the period under review, as the activities of the Council continued to expand and diversify. In addition to carrying on his responsibilities in the area of peaceful settlement of disputes (political/diplomatic functions) and peacekeeping (security functions), the Secretary-General was entrusted with the implementation of sanctions regimes (legal functions). The section is illustrative of the practice and does not aspire to be comprehensive.³²¹

Measures to ascertain the facts

In a number of instances, the Secretary-General was asked to investigate the facts of a particular situation or his efforts to do so were endorsed.

(a) In relation to the situation in the Central African Republic, the Council expressed its concern at the possible consequences to that country of the crises in the subregion. Accordingly, it welcomed with satisfaction the Secretary-General's initiative in asking the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic to assess the implications of developments in neighbouring countries on the situation in the Central African Republic and vice versa.³²²

(b) Also, in relation to the Central African Republic, the Council requested the Secretary-General to explore, in close consultation with the authorities of that country and its development partners, the possibility of setting up a follow-up committee or enlarging the Committee of Foreign Partners to Follow Up on the Electoral Process in order to support the reconstruction efforts initiated by the Central Africans. It invited the Secretary-General to report to it on his consultations, through his Representative in the Central African Republic, no later than 31 October 2005.³²³

(c) With regard to the situation in Côte d'Ivoire, the Council requested the Secretary-General to establish as soon as possible the international commission of inquiry, as recommended by the commission of inquiry of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and requested by the Government of Côte d'Ivoire, in order to investigate all human rights violations committed in Côte d'Ivoire since 19 September 2002 and determine responsibility.³²⁴

(d) In relation to the situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Council expressed grave concern at the allegations of sexual exploitation and misconduct by civilian and military personnel of the United Nations peacekeeping mission, and requested the Secretary-General to continue to fully investigate those allegations, to take the appropriate action in accordance with the Secretary-General's bulletin on special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and sexual abuse.³²⁵

(e) With regard to the situation in Guinea-Bissau, the Council recognized the importance of containing and reversing the threat of drug trafficking to the peace consolidation process in Guinea-Bissau. It further recognized in particular the important role of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime. The Council requested the Secretary-General to report on this matter as soon as possible.³²⁶

(f) With regard to the item "Reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan", the Council requested that the Secretary-General rapidly establish an international commission of inquiry in order immediately to investigate reports of violations of international humanitarian and human rights law in Darfur by all parties, to determine also whether acts of ³²⁰ The functions and powers of the Secretary-General in regard to the meetings of the Security Council, conferred under Article 98, are delineated in rules 21 to 26 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure; see also, chap. I, part IV.

genocide had occurred, and to identify the perpetrators of such violations with a view to ensuring that those responsible were held accountable. It also requested the Secretary-General, in conjunction with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to take appropriate steps to increase the number of human rights monitors deployed to Darfur.³²⁷

(g) In relation to the same item, the Council requested the Secretary-General to report to it on the protection of civilians in refugee and internally displaced persons camps in Chad and on how to improve the security situation on the Chadian side of the border with the Sudan.³²⁸

(h) With regard to the situation in Georgia, the Council requested the Secretary-General to include detailed information on developments in the Kodori Valley and on the progress on efforts for the return of refugees and internally displaced persons, particularly to the Gali district, in his next report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.³²⁹

(i) In relation to the situation in the Middle East, the Council requested the Secretary-General to follow closely the situation in Lebanon and to report urgently on the circumstances, causes and consequences of the terrorist bombing in Beirut.³³⁰

(j) In relation to the same situation, the Council requested the Secretary-General to consult urgently with the Government of Lebanon with a view to facilitating the establishment and operation of the investigation commission, and requested also that he report to the Council accordingly and notify it of the date the commission began its full operations.³³¹

(k) Also, in relation to the same situation, the Council noted with appreciation the process launched by the Secretary-General to investigate the cartographic, legal and political implications of the proposal contained in the seven-point plan of the Government of Lebanon.³³²

Good offices

The Secretary-General was often requested to exercise or continue to exercise his “good offices” function. His independent political role in preventing or mediating conflicts between or within States, or his role in this regard was endorsed in the following instances.

(a) With regard to the situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Council requested the Secretary-General to continue to use his good offices in facilitating a political solution to address the underlying causes of the crisis in the Kivus, in close consultation with the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Governments of the region and other regional and international partners.³³³

(b) With regard to the situation between Ethiopia and Eritrea, the Council reiterated its support for the initiative of the Secretary-General to exercise his good offices by appointing a Special Envoy to facilitate the implementation of the Algiers Agreements, the decision of the Boundary Commission and the relevant resolutions and decisions of the Security Council, and to encourage the normalization of diplomatic relations between the two countries, and emphasized that that appointment did not constitute an alternative mechanism.³³⁴

(c) With regard to the reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan, the Council requested the Secretary-General to provide good offices and political support for the efforts to resolve all ongoing conflicts in the Sudan.³³⁵

(d) With regard to the situation in Myanmar, the Council welcomed the mission by the Secretary-General’s Special Adviser to Myanmar, Mr. Ibrahim Gambari, reaffirmed its strong and unwavering support for the Secretary-General’s good offices mission as mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 61/232, and expressed its appreciation for the personal engagement of the Secretary-General. The Council also noted that the good offices mission was a process, and encouraged the sustained support and engagement of the international community in helping Myanmar.³³⁶

Joint efforts to promote a political settlement

In several instances, the Secretary-General was asked to undertake diplomatic efforts in conjunction with regional arrangements or other actors in order to achieve a political settlement.

(a) In relation to the situation in Burundi, the Council urged the Government of Burundi to step up its efforts to combat impunity and to promote and protect human rights, paying particular attention in that context to reducing the high level of gender-based violence and violence against children. It encouraged the Secretary-General and the Burundian authorities to pursue their dialogue with a view to agreeing on the establishment of a transitional justice mechanism based on the highest standards of justice and international human rights.³³⁷

(b) In relation to the same situation, the Council, acknowledging the crucial importance of reconciliation for peace and national unity in Burundi, shared the view that a future truth commission should contribute to it. The Council requested the Secretary-General to initiate negotiations with the Government and consultations with all Burundian parties concerned on how to implement his recommendations, and to report to the Security Council by 30 September 2005 on the details of implementation, including costs, structures and time frame.³³⁸

(c) In relation to the situation in the Central African Republic, the Council requested the Secretary-General to reinforce cooperation between the United Nations and States members of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community with a view to facilitating and strengthening initiatives aimed at addressing trans-border insecurity in the subregion and bringing to an end the violations by armed groups of the territorial integrity of the Central African Republic.³³⁹

(d) In relation to the situation in Somalia, the Council requested the Secretary-General to consider and to suggest in his next report ways to develop the role of the United Nations in support of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development-facilitated Somali reconciliation process.³⁴⁰

(e) In relation to the same situation, the Council requested the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed of developments at the Somali National Reconciliation Conference and to make timely recommendations on what additional measures could be taken by the Council in support of the Conference and its outcome.³⁴¹

(f) Also, in relation to the situation in Somalia, the Council requested the Secretary-General to assist the transitional federal institutions with the national reconciliation congress, and requested him to report back to the Council within 60 days on progress made by those institutions in pursuing an all-inclusive political process and reconciliation.³⁴²

(g) Also, in relation to that situation, the Council requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the African Union, the League of Arab States and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, to do what he could to assist in furthering ceasefire arrangements and the political dialogue, especially in Mogadishu.³⁴³

(h) In relation to the situation in the Western Sahara, the Council called upon the parties to enter into negotiations without preconditions in good faith, taking into account the developments of the past months, with a view to achieving a just, lasting and mutually acceptable political solution which would provide for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara. The Council requested the Secretary-General to set up those negotiations under his auspices, and invited Member States to lend appropriate assistance to such talks.³⁴⁴

(i) In relation to the situation in the Middle East, the Council requested the Secretary-General to develop, in liaison with relevant international actors and the parties concerned, proposals to implement the

Peacekeeping and implementation of peace agreements

Concerning peacekeeping, in addition to carrying out responsibilities with regard to ongoing missions, the Secretary-General took on additional functions in relation to seven new peacekeeping operations³⁴⁶ and six political missions³⁴⁷ established during the period from 2004 to 2007. Most of these new missions were multifunctional, with political, humanitarian, social and economic components. They were tasked with helping to regroup and demobilize combatants, destroy weapons, coordinate humanitarian assistance, monitor human rights and organize elections. The Secretary-General had the responsibility for executive direction and command of these peacekeeping operations — their establishment, deployment, withdrawal and the implementation of their mandates. In addition, the Secretary-General consulted the African Union and the parties to the Darfur Peace Agreement, including the Government of National Unity, on a plan and timetable for transition from the African Union Mission in the Sudan to a United Nations operation in Darfur.³⁴⁸ Furthermore, by a statement of the President dated 8 January 2007, the Council recognized the importance of a more strategic approach to the oversight and direction of peacekeeping, to maximize the prospects for successful transition in the countries concerned, and so as to make possible the most effective use of scarce peacekeeping resources. To this end, the Council requested the Secretary-General to focus in managing and reporting on peacekeeping missions on the steps needed to achieve the objectives of the mission, both by the host Government and by the international community, and to propose to the Council, as appropriate, initiatives to accelerate the transition process.³⁴⁹

The Secretary-General was also tasked to report to the Council on the progress of the implementation of peace agreements. For example, in connection with the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Council requested the Secretary-General to continue to submit to it reports from the High Representative, in accordance with annex 10 of the Peace Agreement and the conclusions of the Peace Implementation Conference held in London on 4 and 5 December 1996, and later Peace Implementation Conferences, on the implementation of the Peace Agreement.³⁵⁰

Support to international and special tribunals

During the period under review, the Secretary-General was requested to make practical arrangements for the election of ad litem judges for the International Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda.³⁵¹

The Secretary-General was also requested to take the steps and measures necessary to establish the Special Tribunal in Lebanon. By resolution 1757 (2007) the Council requested the Secretary-General, in coordination, when appropriate, with the Government of Lebanon, to undertake the steps and measures necessary to establish the Special Tribunal in a timely manner and to report to the Council within 90 days and thereafter periodically on the implementation of the resolution.³⁵² addition to providing all necessary assistance to the committees established to monitor implementation of the sanctions, the Secretary-General was requested to report immediately to the Security Council, through the Committee, any hindrance or difficulty in implementing the tasks in relation to the situation in Côte d'Ivoire.³⁵⁴

B. Matters brought to the attention of the Security Council by the Secretary-General

At its 5261st meeting, on 14 September 2005, under the item entitled "Threats to international peace and security", the Security Council adopted resolution 1625 (2005), in which it invoked Article 99 of the Charter, and affirmed its determination to strengthen United Nations conflict prevention capacities by (a) assessing regularly the developments in regions at risk of armed conflict and encouraging the Secretary-General to provide information to the Council on such developments pursuant to Article 99 of the Charter.³⁵⁵ In another instance, Article 99 was invoked by a Member State in a communication: by a letter dated 8 September 2004 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³⁵⁶ the representative of Pakistan noted that the role of the Secretary-General pursuant to Article 99 was critical. He stated that more frequent use should be made of the provisions of resolutions 1296 (2000) and 1366 (2001), in which the Council encouraged the Secretary-General to convey to it his assessment of potential threats to international peace and security in accordance with Article 99.

During the period under review, the Secretary-General did not expressly invoke Article 99. However, he drew the attention of the Council to a deteriorating situation which was already on the Council's agenda, and requested the Council to consider taking appropriate action.³⁵⁷ In addition, the Secretary-General exercised the implicit rights conferred upon him under Article 99³⁵⁸ by initiating, for example, good offices missions in respect of Myanmar, Uganda/Lord's Resistance Army, and Ethiopia and Eritrea. In the case of Myanmar, the Council welcomed the mission by the Secretary-General's Special Adviser to Myanmar, reaffirmed its strong and unwavering support for the Secretary-General's good offices mission as mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 61/232, and expressed its appreciation for the personal engagement of the Secretary-General.³⁵⁹ In connection with Uganda/Lord's Resistance Army, by a letter dated 21 November 2007 addressed to the President of the Security Council,³⁶⁰ the Secretary-that the United Nations should respond positively to the request of Nepal for assistance in the peace process there. He said that, over the past years, he had been consulting and working closely with all sides in Nepal to encourage a negotiated political solution to the conflict and that the current circumstances appeared to provide the best opportunity yet for achieving that aim. Therefore, he believed that the United Nations should respond immediately and concretely. It should dispatch an advance deployment of essential personnel, and it should complete rapidly the necessary technical assessment for the full deployment of a United Nations mission to deliver the assistance requested and develop a complete concept of operations for such a mission.

³⁵⁸ In the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs, Supplement No. 8, vol. VI (1989-1994), under Article 99 it is stated that "the implicit powers of the Secretary-General in the spirit of Article 99 have been more liberally construed to include the right to initiate fact-finding missions, investigative commissions and the offer of good offices or mediation". Introductory note

The present chapter considers the practice of the Security Council in its recommendations to the General Assembly concerning applications for membership in the United Nations.

Part I sets forth in tabular form the application for admission considered and the decisions taken thereon by the Security Council and the General Assembly during the period under review.

Parts II to V concern the procedures employed by the Council in the consideration of the application. The parts entitled “Consideration of the adoption or amendment of rules 58-60 of the provisional rules of procedure”, and “The roles of the General Assembly and the Security Council” do not appear in the present Supplement as no material was found for inclusion therein.

During the period under review, the Council recommended the admission of one State to membership in the United Nations.

Part I

Applications for admission to membership in the United Nations and action taken thereon by the Security Council and the General Assembly, 2004-2007

Note

As in the previous Supplements to the Repertoire, part I contains information on the applications before the Council during the period under review and the decisions taken thereon by the Council and the General Assembly. Section A (Applications recommended by the Security Council), section B (Discussion of the question in the Security Council), and section C (Action taken by the Security Council and the General Assembly on the applications submitted for membership) have been maintained from previous Supplements. The sections entitled “Applications pending on 1 January 2004”, “Applications that failed to obtain a recommendation” and “Applications pending at the end of the period under review” do not appear in the present Supplement as no material was found for inclusion therein.

A. Applications recommended by the Security Council

In the period 1 January 2004 to 31 December 2007, the Security Council recommended one State for admission to membership in the United Nations, namely, Montenegro.

B. Discussion of the question in the Security Council

The Council held two meetings¹ to consider the application of Montenegro for admission to membership.

Part II

Presentation of applications

Material concerning the presentation of the application of Montenegro — that is, the submission of the application to the Secretary-General, its immediate communication to representatives on the Security Council pursuant to rule 59 of the provisional rules of procedure and its subsequent inclusion in the provisional agenda of the Council — may be found in the table in section C of Part I above. The application of Montenegro, submitted on 5 June 2006, was circulated by the Secretary-General on 16 June 2006 and included in the agenda of the Council on 21 June 2006.

Part III

Referral of applications to the Committee on the Admission of New Members

During the period under review, the application of Montenegro was referred by the President of the Security Council to the Committee on the Admission of New Members. There was no proposal to waive the application of rule 59 of the provisional rules of procedure.²

Part IV

Procedures in the consideration of applications within the Security Council

In connection with the application of Montenegro, the Council adopted the draft resolution submitted by the Committee on the Admission of New Members without a debate or a vote, “in accordance with the understanding reached in prior consultations among members of the Council”.³ Following the adoption of the resolution, the President of the Council made a statement on behalf of the members of the Council.⁴

² Rule 59 provides, inter alia, that “unless the Security Council decides otherwise, the application shall be referred by the President to a Committee of the Security Council upon which each member of the Security Council shall be represented”.

Part V

Practice relative to the applicability of Articles 4, 5 and 6 of the Charter

During the period under review, the Council did not consider or take measures under Articles 5 or 6 of the Charter. In the presidential statement issued at the 5743rd meeting of the Council held to consider the admission of Montenegro to membership in the United Nations,⁵ reference was made to the criteria for membership contained in Article 4 (1).⁶

⁶ The text of Article 4 (1) reads as follows: “Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving States which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgement of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations”.

Introductory note

Chapter VIII of the Repertoire focuses on the substance of each of the questions included in the agenda of the Security Council that relate to its responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. Examining the entire chain of proceedings of the Council on each item gives an overall sense of their political context.¹ The range of items covers broadly those that may be deemed to fall under Chapters VI and VII of the Charter.

The overview of the proceedings of the Council provided in chapter VIII of the Repertoire constitutes a framework within which the procedural developments recorded in chapters I to VII and the legal and constitutional discussions recorded in chapters X to XII may be considered. Chapter VIII also examines the substantive aspects of the Council's practice that are not covered in other chapters of the Repertoire.

The agenda items are grouped by region, for ease of reference, with an additional category of thematic issues. Within each region, items are listed in the order in which they were first included in the list of matters of which the Council is seized.

Generally, individual sections cover all proceedings relating to a specific item. In exceptional cases, in order to improve the coherence of the text, related items have been grouped together under the heading "Items relating to".

The material included in chapter VIII is drawn from the formal meetings of the Council, and includes summaries of the statements made in the Council and of all Council documents, including reports and letters, that were referred to during the meetings.² The chapter also includes summaries of all of the decisions that were adopted at those formal Council meetings.³

Each section is organized around the decisions taken by the Council on each agenda item. All of the meetings leading to a decision are included under the heading for that decision. Meetings that do not lead to a decision are grouped together under the heading "Deliberations".

When the Council includes a new item in its agenda, the section covering its first consideration bears the heading "Initial proceedings".

Some meetings have been grouped together, and an overview of all developments at the meetings is provided. In some of these cases, similar resolutions, generally renewing the mandate of a subsidiary body and adopted without debate, have also been grouped together. In such cases, a brief overview of the main provisions of the resolutions is provided.

Meetings with countries contributing troops to a peacekeeping mission are grouped with the item that covers that mission.

² Other documents relating to a specific item but not mentioned at a formal meeting of the Council are listed in the annual report of the Security Council to the General Assembly.

³ The summaries are based on those contained in the Index to Proceedings of the Security Council.

Information on formal meetings held in private is given in a footnote to the subsequent open meeting.

Unless otherwise noted, representatives of States Members of the United Nations who were invited to participate in the Council's proceedings were invited under rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, and all other speakers were invited under rule 39.⁴

Unless otherwise indicated, draft resolutions were prepared in the course of the Council's prior consultations.

⁴ See chapter III for more information.

Africa

1. The situation concerning Western Sahara

Decisions of 30 January 2004 to 28 October 2005: 1523 (2004), 1541 (2004), 1570 (2004), 1598 (2005) and 1634 (2005)

At its 4905th, 4957th, 5068th, 5170th and 5295th meetings,¹ the Security Council adopted resolutions,² unanimously and without debate, by which it extended the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) for periods of six months,³ and reaffirmed its support for the peace plan and the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy, based on the recommendations contained in the reports of the Secretary-General on the situation concerning Western Sahara.⁴

In his reports, the Secretary-General provided information about the activities of his Personal Envoy; the release of all prisoners of war by the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (Frente Polisario) and the situation of the political detainees and unaccounted-for persons; the implementation of the confidence-building measures; the security situation in the region and the violation of the military agreements; and the problem of illegal migration. Regarding the activities of his Personal Envoy, he briefly recapitulated the main developments of the negotiations since the beginning, namely the agreement over the settlement plan and the lack of willingness of the parties to implement it; the proposal for a draft framework agreement and its subsequent rejection by the Frente Polisario and Algeria; the four options presented to the Security Council that would not have required the agreement of the parties; and, finally, the proposed peace plan for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara. Regarding this last point, he briefed Council members about the progress of the meetings with the authorities of Morocco and the Frente Polisario. He stressed that, while the Frente Polisario had agreed to the proposal, Morocco had clearly stated that an autonomy-based solution could only be final, rejecting the idea of a transitional period or of the possibility of independence. Thus, he considered that the positions of the parties had remained far apart, a situation that, together with the harsh public statements emanating periodically from the parties, as well as demonstrations and allegations of human rights abuses, suggested that the situation could deteriorate in the absence of a mutually acceptable solution that would provide for self-determination. He added that it was clear from past actions by the Council that there was opposition to a non-consensual solution, which left the Council with two options: to terminate MINURSO and return the issue of Western Sahara to the General Assembly; or to try again to get the parties to work towards acceptance and implementation of the peace plan.

Over the course of those meetings, the attention of the Council was drawn to a letter from Morocco, which noted, inter alia, that the “chronicle of grave violations of the rights of the Moroccans detained in Algerian territory” had been continuing and expressed concern over conditions in the Tindouf refugee camp.⁵ Attention was also drawn to a letter from Algeria, which responded to the letter from Morocco, stating that “rather than acknowledging the crimes committed against the Sahrawi people for three decades”, Morocco had resorted “to diatribes against its Algerian neighbour”. The letter stressed that the ““thousands of Moroccan civilians who are still in the camps”, over whom Morocco was expressing concern, “were Sahrawi refugees, duly identified by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, who have had no other choice but to flee abroad as their homeland was being invaded and occupied by the Kingdom of Morocco and to whom Algeria has generously offered asylum". The letter concluded by urging the Security Council not to allow Morocco to stall progress on the peace plan for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara indefinitely.⁶

Decision of 28 April 2006 (5431st meeting):
resolution 1675 (2006)

At the 5431st meeting, on 28 April 2006, at which statements were made by the representatives of Argentina, Denmark, France, Japan, Slovakia, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United Kingdom and the United States, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 19 April 2006.⁷

In his report, the Secretary-General detailed, inter alia, the efforts of his Personal Envoy. However, he stressed that the question had remained at an impasse since there was a total lack of agreement on how to enable the people of Western Sahara to exercise their right to self-determination. The Secretary-General observed that a new plan would be doomed from the outset to be rejected by Morocco unless it excluded the provision of a referendum with independence as an option; but the United Nations could not endorse a plan that would exclude a genuine referendum while claiming to provide for self-determination. He stated that an indefinite prolongation of the deadlock was not acceptable as it would be "a recipe for violence" and thus, direct negotiations without preconditions was the only recourse remaining. Nonetheless, he noted that, while no country would admit that it favoured a continuation of the impasse, it was clear that there were two factors that combined to create a "powerful temptation" to acquiesce to the impasse: Western Sahara was not high on the local political agenda; and there was great store set on continuing good relations with both Morocco and Algeria. He concluded by stressing that the Council could not wait for the question of Western Sahara to deteriorate from being a source of potential instability in the region to becoming a threat to international peace and security, but needed to work to get negotiations off the ground.

The President (China) drew the attention of the Council to letters from Algeria and Namibia dated 24 and 26 April 2006, respectively, expressing concern over attempts to legalize "the occupation of Western Sahara" through proposals of solutions based on the denial of the right of the people to self-determination; and expressing strong support for the peace plan, which had been approved by the Security Council.⁸

Most representatives stressed that they had voted in favour of extending the mandate of MINURSO hoping that the parties would use that time to make real progress towards reaching a mutually acceptable solution. They emphasized also that they could not impose a solution so any plan would have to be mutually acceptable.⁹ The representative of the United States, noting that Morocco had expressed the intention of putting forward "an autonomy plan for the territory", encouraged Morocco to submit a plan that was "strong and credible" to serve as the basis of a new United Nations-led negotiating process.¹⁰ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania stressed that the right of self-determination of the people of Western Sahara could not be subject to any preconditions.¹¹

The President drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States;¹² it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1675 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General to provide a report on the situation in Western Sahara before the end of the mandate period;

Decided to extend the mandate of MINURSO until 31 October 2006; decided to remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 31 October 2006 (5560th meeting):
resolution 1720 (2006)

At the 5560th meeting, on 31 October 2006, at which statements were made by the representatives of France, the United Kingdom and the United States, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 16 October 2006.¹³

In his report, the Secretary-General stated that Morocco was continuing to work on an autonomy proposal to be presented in the next few months, while the Frente Polisario had restated its attachment to the Western Saharan people's right to self-determination to be exercised in a referendum including the option of independence. While the situation had produced "a broad trend of resignation to the status quo", when the Frente Polisario were asked whether they preferred the continuation of the impasse or negotiations without preconditions, they had responded that they preferred a continuation of the impasse, even though they realized that "this could only lead to renewed armed struggle". He stressed that only an "open-ended approach" to negotiations would work and that the failure to start negotiations would constitute a major setback for Morocco, which was "anxious to obtain international recognition of its sovereignty over Western Sahara", as well as for the Frente Polisario, which risked having the international community grow "more accustomed to the control of Morocco over Western Sahara". He recommended that the Council call on the two parties, joined by Algeria and Mauritania, to enter into negotiations without preconditions with a view to achieving a mutually acceptable political solution that would provide for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara.

The representatives of France, the United Kingdom and the United States stressed that they expected the parties to use the six-month extension of the mandate of MINURSO to aggressively negotiate a mutually acceptable solution, and reiterated that a solution could not be imposed by the Council. Furthermore, the representatives of the United Kingdom and United States underlined that MINURSO could not be considered a viable alternative to a permanent solution. The representatives of France and the United States also urged Morocco to move quickly to submit a comprehensive and credible autonomy proposal.¹⁴

At the same meeting, the President (Japan) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States;¹⁵ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1720 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General to provide a report on the situation in Western Sahara before the end of the mandate period;

Decided to extend the mandate of MINURSO until 30 April 2007;

Decided to remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 30 April 2007 (5669th meeting):
resolution 1754 (2007)

At the 5669th meeting, on 30 April 2007, at which a statement was made by the representative of South Africa, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 13 April 2007.¹⁶

In his report, the Secretary-General provided information, inter alia, about the latest initiatives by the parties regarding the solution of the conflict. The representative of Morocco had submitted a "Moroccan initiative for negotiating an autonomy statute for the Sahara region", which could serve as "a basis for dialogue, negotiation and compromise", while the Secretary-General of the Frente Polisario had handed over a document summarizing its position that the question of Western Sahara was a decolonization problem that should be solved on the basis of the implementation of the principle of self-determination, and that the solution to the conflict lay in the exercise of the legitimate right to self-determination by means of a referendum. The Secretary-General again recommended that the Council call on the two parties, joined by Algeria and Mauritania, to enter into negotiations without preconditions with a view to achieving a mutually acceptable political solution that would provide for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara.

¹⁶ S/2007/202, submitted pursuant to resolution 1720 (2006).

The representative of South Africa expressed regret over several aspects of the draft resolution before the Council, including the use of the word “credible” when referring to the efforts made by Morocco, as it conveyed the unintended meaning that the plan of Morocco was more worthy than the one from the Frente Polisario, and the words “to move the process forward”,¹⁷ as that prejudged the situation ahead. He also complained about the fact that his delegation was given less than 24 hours to decide on the draft resolution. However, he stressed that he had decided to reluctantly support the draft resolution because he did not want to stand in the way of creating a platform whereby the people of Morocco and the people of Western Sahara would have an opportunity to negotiate among themselves.¹⁸

The President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States;¹⁹ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1754 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Called upon the parties to enter into negotiations without preconditions in good faith;

Requested the Secretary-General to set up these negotiations under his auspices and invited Member States to lend appropriate assistance to such talks;

Requested the Secretary-General to provide a report by 30 June 2007 on the status and progress of these negotiations and a report on the situation in Western Sahara before the end of the mandate period;

Decided to extend the mandate of MINURSO until 31 October 2007.

report of the Secretary-General dated 19 October 2007.²⁰

In his report, the Secretary-General stated, regarding the meetings that were held between the parties, that both parties had confirmed their respect for self-determination and their commitment to collaborating with the United Nations, as well as acknowledging that the current status quo was unacceptable. Yet, their positions had remained far apart and the negotiations had not been resumed. The main problems were the definition of “self-determination” and the distinction between “preconditions” and “fundamental positions”. He explained that neither the view of Morocco that its sovereignty over Western Sahara should be recognized, nor that of the Frente Polisario that the final status of the territory should be decided in a referendum with independence as an option, could be accepted as preconditions, though were widely known to be the respective parties’ fundamental positions. However, these fundamental positions had prevented each party from seriously discussing the other party’s proposal. He recommended that the Council call on the parties to enter into “genuine negotiations” to ensure a more substantial implementation of resolution 1754 (2007).

The representative of South Africa expressed regret that the draft resolution before the Council did not include any mention of human rights violations in Western Sahara, and he considered that the omission, vis-à-vis the fact that the Security Council “is very vocal about human rights issues in other parts of the world”, would be seen as a double standard on the part of the Council. He added that “this double standard is the reason that people sometimes do not take the decisions of this Council seriously”. He stated that his delegation continued “to be amazed by the relentless attempts by some members of this Council to try to describe the Moroccan proposal as being ‘a serious and credible effort to move the resolution forward’. The fact is that the Moroccan proposal for autonomy is a unilateral attempt to prevent the Sahrawi people from claiming their right to self-determination”. He considered that any attempt to place one proposal over the other would undermine the negotiation process. In conclusion, he stated that the need to extend the mandate of MINURSO was important enough to

2. The situation in Liberia

Decision of 12 March 2004 (4925th meeting): resolution 1532 (2004)

At the 4925th meeting,¹ on 12 March 2004, the President (France) drew the attention of the Security Council to a draft resolution.² It was then put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1532 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, inter alia:

Decided that, to prevent former Liberian President Charles Taylor, his immediate family members, in particular Jewell Howard Taylor and Charles Taylor, Jr., senior officials of the former Taylor regime, or other close allies or associates as designated by the Committee established by paragraph 21 of resolution 1521 (2003) from using misappropriated funds and property to interfere in the restoration of peace and stability in Liberia and the subregion, all States in which there were, at the date of adoption of resolution 1521 (2003) or at any time thereafter, funds, other financial assets and economic resources owned or controlled directly or indirectly by Charles Taylor, Jewell Howard Taylor, and Charles Taylor, Jr. and/or those other individuals designated by the Committee, including funds, other financial assets and economic resources held by entities owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by any of them or by any persons acting on their behalf or at their direction, as designated by the Committee, shall freeze without delay all such funds, other financial assets and economic resources, and shall ensure that neither these nor any other funds, other financial assets or economic resources were made available, by their nationals or by any persons within their territory, directly or indirectly, to or for the benefit of such persons;

Decided to review the measures imposed in paragraph 1 of the resolution at least once a year, the first review taking place by 22 December 2004 in conjunction with its review of the measures imposed in paragraphs 2, 4, 6 and 10 of resolution 1521 (2003), and to determine at that time what further action is appropriate.

Decision of 17 June 2004 (4991st meeting): resolution 1549 (2004)

At its 4981st meeting, on 3 June 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General regarding Liberia.³ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that there had been general respect for and maintenance of the ceasefire in Monrovia and other parts of the country since December 2003, although a number of minor ceasefire violations perpetrated by elements of all three armed groups had been reported outside the capital. He stressed that much remained to be done to rigorously apply and implement the recommendations for reform of the timber sector in a transparent and accountable manner and that the National Transitional Government of Liberia was making gradual progress in preparing its application to join the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme for diamonds. He added that the assistance provided by some Member States and international organizations to the National Transitional Government of Liberia in its efforts to reform the timber industry and adhere to the Kimberley Process was vital to enabling Liberia to make progress towards meeting the goals and objectives of resolution 1521 (2003), which could facilitate an early review of existing sanctions.

The Council also included in its agenda the third progress report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL).⁴ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that UNMIL continued to make steady progress in stabilizing Liberia and creating the necessary security conditions for the full implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, as well as the delivery of humanitarian assistance and the commencement of the national recovery. He noted that the deployment of UNMIL troops throughout the country was almost complete, and the implementation of the disarmament, demobilization, rehabilitation and reintegration programme was on track. He underlined that the mechanisms for monitoring the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement were also functioning more effectively. However, he pointed out that the security situation could again turn volatile until the disarmament and demobilization of combatants was completed. He appealed to Member States to provide the assistance for the police service in Liberia as well as for the programme for the reintegration of former combatants and the repatriation of non-Liberian combatants and commended the United States for its provision of assistance for the restructuring and training of Liberia's armed forces. Finally, he remarked on the importance of beginning the preparations for the 2005 elections as soon as possible, considering the numerous difficulties facing the electoral process.

At the same meeting, the Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Liberia and the Chairman of the National Transitional Government of Liberia, following which all Council members made statements.

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Liberia affirmed that the deployment throughout Liberia had greatly improved security along its long and porous borders. Nonetheless, he pointed out that there were worrying signs because some of the heavy weapons had not yet been turned in. He expressed the view that the Council needed to reiterate its strong support for the October 2005 election date and its insistence that the elections would be held as scheduled. He noted that concrete measures were being taken to enhance inter-mission cooperation, in particular the sharing of assets and military information, in cooperation with their colleagues in the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI) and the United Nations Office for West Africa. Finally, he highlighted the fact that the National Transitional Government of Liberia badly needed reliable sources of revenue in order to function effectively. All necessary support needed to be given to the Government of Liberia so it could meet the requirements of resolution 1521 (2003) and allow for the lifting of sanctions.⁵

The Chairman of the National Transitional Government of Liberia affirmed that he was there for one primary reason: "to plead with the Council to lift the sanctions on my country", specifically on timber and diamonds. Noting that the primary reason for the imposition of the sanctions had been that the resources were being used by the "erstwhile Government" to purchase arms for the purposes of fuelling conflict within the subregion and suppressing its people, he underscored that the war was over and that Liberia was at peace with its neighbours. He affirmed that the Transitional Government was committed to the rule of law, human rights and social justice, as well as to using the natural resources of the country for the benefit of all the people. He underlined that they had taken a series of actions to meet the requirement of the Council for lifting sanctions on the export of their timber products and that they had submitted themselves to the internationally recognized Kimberley Certification Process. He also welcomed the decision of the Government of the United States to unilaterally lift sanctions on the importation of diamonds from Liberia.⁶

The majority of the speakers highlighted the deployment of UNMIL, the resumption of the disarmament process as well as the achievements made by the National Transitional Government of Liberia, including the action taken to restore State control over natural resources. Most of the representatives welcomed the efforts of coordination between the various United Nations peacekeeping operations in West Africa. A number of representatives expressed concern about the fact that arms trafficking had not been dismantled. Some speakers remarked on the importance of Liberia for peace and stability in the West African region as a whole. A few speakers welcomed the holding of the summit of the Mano River Union towards the activation of dialogue and cooperation among the States of the region. The majority of representatives declared that, in considering when to lift the sanctions, they would continue to follow the progress made by Liberia.

The representative of the United States expressed concern about the fact that the civilian staffing for UNMIL was behind schedule and stressed that the Special Representative needed to have all the means necessary to carry out his work. He emphasized that all parts of the United Nations system involved in the disarmament, demobilization, rehabilitation and reintegration process needed to begin the rehabilitation and reintegration phase immediately. He observed that a “history of corrupt practices in Liberia had fostered an environment in which abuses of power had been permitted to flourish”. He believed that the time had come for the National Transitional Government to establish transparent accounting and auditing mechanisms to ensure that all Government revenues were employed to improve the lives of all Liberians. Finally, he held the view that former President Charles Taylor remained a threat to Liberia and that he needed to be held “accountable for his actions in Sierra Leone” and appear before the Special Court.⁷

The representative of China endorsed the idea that the Security Council needed to make a decision on the sanctions on Liberia as soon as possible.⁸

Noting that the sanctions had been imposed for the sake of peace in Liberia and that the Government had become a partner for peace of the Security Council, the representative of Algeria stressed that the issue of sanctions no longer needed to be a “source of controversy between Liberia and the Council”.⁹

The representative of Angola recognized that the results achieved by UNMIL had exceeded expectations. He opined that the Council should therefore respond to the plea made by the Chairman of the National

Transitional Government of Liberia concerning the lifting of sanctions.¹⁰

The representative of Germany suggested that UNMIL could become a model for the new type of multidimensional peacekeeping missions the Council had been aiming at. In particular, he cited the use of quick-impact projects as a useful tool that might have potential for other peacekeeping missions.¹¹

The representative of Benin expressed concern about the delay in reviewing, ratifying and issuing certain important legal texts, especially those on human rights. He warned about the need to ensure that truly national political parties were created, free of all regionalist, ethnic or tribal tendencies and answering solely to the precise criteria established in advance by a charter of parties. He added that an evaluation of the impact of sanctions imposed against individuals was required in order to ensure their effectiveness since available information would seem to indicate that resolution 1532 (2004) had had “only limited effect on the targeted individuals”.¹²

The representative of Pakistan emphasized the clear distinction between the arms and travel bans, on the one hand, and the economic sanctions on diamonds and timber, on the other; and expressed support for the lifting of the diamond sanctions given the progress made by the authorities of Liberia on that issue.¹³

At its 4991st meeting, on 17 June 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 26 May 2004,¹⁴ as well as a letter dated 1 June 2004 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003) concerning Liberia,¹⁵ transmitting the report of the Panel of Experts pursuant to paragraph 22 of resolution 1521 (2003). In its report, the Panel of Experts observed that, although there had been no evidence of weapons trafficking into Liberia since August 2003, the sanctions on arms needed to remain. The Panel underlined that the National Transitional Government of Liberia was currently applying the regulations of international civil aviation and had begun taking steps towards the establishment of an effective certificate of origin scheme for trade in rough diamonds. The Panel also maintained that the sanctions on Liberia had contributed to ending the armed conflict in the country despite some adverse effects, such as the high rates of unemployment.

The President (Philippines) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹⁶ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1549 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to re-establish the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to Council resolution 1521 (2003) for a further period to commence no later than 30 June until 21 December 2004 to undertake the following tasks: (a) to conduct a follow-up assessment mission; (b) to assess the progress made towards the goals described in paragraph 5, 7 and 11 of resolution 1521 (2003); (c) to monitor the implementation and enforcement of the measures imposed by resolution 1532 (2004); and (d) to assess the socioeconomic and humanitarian impact of the measures imposed by both resolutions;

Further requested the Panel to provide a midterm report to the Council no later than 30 September 2004 and a final report by 10 December 2004;

Requested the Secretary-General to appoint five experts by 30 June to fulfil the Panel's mandate;

Urged all States and relevant organizations to cooperate fully with the Committee and the Panel of Experts.

Decision of 17 September 2004 (5036th meeting): resolution 1561 (2004)

At its 5036th meeting, on 17 September 2004, the Council included in its agenda the fourth progress report of the Secretary-General on UNMIL.¹⁷ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the capacity of the National Transitional Government of Liberia to deliver basic services and extend civil administration throughout the country remained limited. He expressed concern about the problems that the Government was encountering in functioning as a cohesive administration. He welcomed the establishment of a high-level National Transitional Government of Liberia-United Nations-Economic Community of West African States consultative mechanism and noted the progress of the National Elections Commission.

A statement was made by the representative of the United States,¹⁸ who affirmed that it was the policy of his Government to ensure that members of the armed services of his country participating in United Nations peace operations were "protected from criminal prosecution or other assertion of jurisdiction by the International Criminal Court". Nevertheless, in that instance, the United States maintained that there were sufficient bilateral protections with the Government of Liberia to facilitate continued United States participation in UNMIL, even though there were no express provisions providing such protection for personnel in the mandate extension.¹⁹

The President (Spain) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;²⁰ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1561 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNMIL until 19 September 2005;

Called on all Liberian parties to demonstrate their full commitment to the peace process and to work together to ensure that free, fair and transparent elections took place as planned no later than October 2005;

Requested the Secretary-General through his Special Representative to continue to report periodically to the Council on progress made by the Mission in the implementation of its mandate.

Decision of 21 December 2004 (5105th meeting): resolution 1579 (2004)

At its 5105th meeting, on 21 December 2004, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 23 September 2004 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003) addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the midterm report of the Panel of Experts pursuant to paragraph 2 of resolution 1549 (2004).²¹ In its report, the Panel of Experts observed that corruption remained widespread in Liberia, and that the humanitarian situation was critical. The Panel emphasized that UNMIL remained hampered by the Security Council mandate, which did not provide the Mission with full executive authority that allowed, for example, the arrest of those undermining peace or failing to disarm. It also pointed out that few of the necessary reforms in the timber sector had been implemented and that it was unlikely that the Government of Liberia would be able to meet the full requirements necessary for its participation in the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme for some time.

The Council also included in its agenda a letter dated 6 December 2004 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003), transmitting the report of the Panel of Experts pursuant to paragraph 2 of resolution 1549 (2004).²² In its report, the Panel observed that the efforts of the National Transitional Government of Liberia to satisfy the requirements of the Security Council for the lifting of the embargo on the export of Liberian rough diamonds remained hampered by a lack of funding and institutional capacity. The Panel indicated that the first full-year budget of the National Transitional Government had not given any sign of macro-economic policy orientation and that there had been large variations between the purposes for which amounts had been sanctioned by the Legislative Assembly and the purposes for which the funds had been actually spent.

A statement was made by the representative of the United States,²³ who supported the ongoing efforts of the United Nations to ensure peace and stability in Liberia and the region, and its recognition that the premature lifting of sanctions at that time “would threaten the re-emergence of armed conflict”. He added that the United States was actively engaged in assisting the authorities of Liberia to restructure both Liberia’s timber and diamond sectors as a means to expedite the eventual lifting of sanctions, once necessary and appropriate control mechanisms had been established.²⁴

The President (Algeria) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France, Germany, Romania, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States;²⁵ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1579 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to renew the measures on arms and travel imposed by paragraphs 2 and 4 of resolution 1521 (2003) for a further period of 12 months from the date of adoption of the resolution, and to review them after six months; to renew measures on timber imposed by paragraph 10 of resolution 1521 (2003) for a further period of 12 months and to review them after six months; to renew measures on diamonds imposed by paragraph 6 of resolution 1521 (2003) for a further period of six months but to review them after three months in the light of the Kimberley Process visit and preliminary report of the Expert Panel requested in paragraph 8 of the resolution;

Decided to re-establish the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to resolution 1549 (2004) for a further period until 21 June 2005.

Decision of 21 June 2005 (5208th meeting):
resolution 1607 (2005)

At its 5208th meeting, on 21 June 2005, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 13 June 2005 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003) addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the report of the Panel of Experts submitted pursuant to paragraph 8 (e) of resolution 1579 (2004).²⁶ In the report, the Panel of Experts expressed concern about the recruitment of combatants by insurgents in Liberia, mainly to fight in Côte d’Ivoire and Guinea; the probability of some involvement of Liberians in the assassination attempt on the President of Guinea; the effectiveness of the embargo on the export of diamonds; and the lack of transparency and accountability in the Liberian system. The Panel pointed out that the UNMIL deployment was complete, but its limited mandate undermined the Mission’s ability to exert authority throughout Liberia. It recommended, inter alia, cooperation between the various United Nations missions in the subregion and a robust mandate to UNMIL to assist the National Transitional Government of Liberia and any future Government with its control of illegal mining.

The Council also included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General of 7 June 2005.²⁷ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the conclusion of the disarmament and demobilization process and the dissolution of the armed factions had signalled the successful completion of the implementation of the ceasefire agreement and that the progress made towards organization of the October 2005 elections provided hope that the peace process would be brought to a successful conclusion. He suggested that the Council might consider broadening the mandate and increasing the resources of UNMIL to enable it to assist the National Transitional Government in providing security in the diamond- and timber-producing areas.

The representative of Liberia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;²⁸ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1607 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided, on the basis of its assessments of progress made by the National Transitional Government of Liberia towards meeting the conditions for lifting the measures imposed by resolution 1521 (2003), to renew the measures on diamonds imposed by paragraph 6 of resolution 1521 (2003) for a further period of six months;

Urged UNMIL to intensify its efforts, as mandated in resolution 1509 (2003), to assist the National Transitional Government of Liberia in re-establishing its authority throughout Liberia, including diamond-producing and timber-producing areas, and restoring proper administration of natural resources;

Decided to re-establish the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to resolution 1579 (2004) for a further period until 21 December 2005;

Requested the Secretary-General, acting in consultation with the Committee, to appoint as soon as possible no more than five experts, with the appropriate range of expertise, in particular on arms, timber, diamonds, finance, humanitarian and socioeconomic and any other relevant issues.

Decision of 19 September 2005 (5263rd meeting): resolution 1626 (2005)

At its 5263rd meeting, on 19 September 2005, the Council included in its agenda the eighth progress report of the Secretary-General on UNMIL.²⁹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed the determination of the Liberian people to participate in the polls and the peaceful manner in which the electoral process had been conducted so far. He indicated that the UNMIL was then moving towards a new phase of its operations which would focus on the conduct of free and fair elections, as well as the provision of security during the elections and in the run-up to the installation of the new Government in January 2006.

The President (Philippines) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;³⁰ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1626 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that the mandate of UNMIL should be extended until 31 March 2006;

Authorized UNMIL to deploy from November 2005 up to 250 United Nations military personnel to Sierra Leone to provide security for the Special Court for Sierra Leone;

Authorized a temporary increase in the UNMIL personnel ceiling, to a total of 15,250 United Nations military personnel, for the period from 15 November 2005 to 31 March 2006 in order to ensure that the support provided to the Court did not reduce the capabilities of the Mission in Liberia during its political transition period;

Authorized UNMIL to deploy an adequate number of military personnel to Sierra Leone, if and when needed, to evacuate UNMIL military personnel deployed to Sierra Leone and officials of the Special Court for Sierra Leone in the event of a serious security crisis affecting those personnel and the Court.

Decision of 11 November 2005 (5304th meeting): resolution 1638 (2005)

At the 5304th meeting, on 11 November 2005, the President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Denmark, the United Kingdom and the United States.³¹ Statements were made by the representatives of Argentina and Brazil.

The representative of Brazil emphasized that the promotion of the rule of law in a country needed to be exercised primarily by national institutions, with international assistance if so requested; and that adherence to the rule of law needed to be based on strict observance of the domestic legal framework and of international law.³²

³² S/PV.5304, p. 2.

The representative of Argentina stressed that peace could never really be achieved until those who had committed the gravest crimes against humankind were brought to justice and he therefore supported the mandate given to UNMIL to “apprehend Mr. Charles Taylor” and to facilitate his transfer to the Special Court for Sierra Leone for prosecution in the event that he returned to Liberia.³³

The draft resolution was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1638 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that the mandate of UNMIL should include the following additional element: to apprehend and detain former President Charles Taylor in the event of a return to Liberia and to transfer him or facilitate his transfer to Sierra Leone for prosecution before the Special Court for Sierra Leone and to keep the Government of Liberia, the Government of Sierra Leone and the Council fully informed;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 20 December 2005 (5336th meeting):
resolution 1647 (2005)

At its 5336th meeting, on 20 December 2005, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 7 December 2005 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003) addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the report of the Panel of Experts submitted pursuant to paragraph 14 (e) of resolution 1607 (2005).³⁴ In its report, the Panel of Experts noted the insufficient measures taken by Liberia to fulfil the requirements for lifting sanctions and it recommended that the Government of Liberia needed to further endeavour to demonstrate its commitment to transparency and accountability.

The representative of Liberia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Denmark, France, Japan, Romania, the United Kingdom and the United States;³⁵ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1647 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided, on the basis of its assessment of progress made to date towards meeting the conditions for lifting the measures imposed by resolution 1521 (2003) to renew the measures on arms and travel imposed by resolution 1521 (2003) for a further period of 12 months; to renew the measures on diamonds and timber for a further period of six months; to renew the above measures at the request of the new Government of Liberia, once the Government reported to the Council that the conditions set out in resolution 1521 (2003) for terminating the measures have been met, and provided the Council with information to justify its assessment;

Reiterated the Council’s readiness to terminate these measures once the conditions set forth in resolution 1521 (2003) had been met;

Called on the international donor community to support the incoming Government of Liberia by providing generous assistance to the peace process, including for reintegration of ex-combatants, reconstruction and humanitarian appeals;

Decided to re-establish the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to resolution 1607 (2005) for a further period until 21 June 2006;

Requested the Secretary-General to appoint no more than five experts, with the appropriate expertise, in particular on arms, timber, diamonds, finance, humanitarian and socioeconomic issues, and further requested the Secretary-General to make the necessary financial and security arrangements to support the work of the Panel.

Deliberations of 17 March 2006
(5389th meeting)

At the 5389th meeting, on 17 March 2006, statements were made by all the members of the Council as well as the President of Liberia.

The President of Liberia affirmed that their strategy for peacebuilding was constructed on four pillars, focusing on security, the rule of law and governance, economic revitalization and basic services, and infrastructure. She assured the Council that her Government was putting in place mechanisms that would enhance transparency in governance, consistent with the requirements for the lifting of timber and diamond sanctions. She informed Council members about the establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, the reconstitution of Liberia’s Supreme Court and the formulation of an anti-corruption action plan. She mentioned her request to the President of Nigeria to consult with colleagues in the subregion and in the international community on the resolution of the issue of former President Charles Taylor. Finally, she urged the Council to maintain its support for UNMIL and the donor countries and organizations to contribute to the recovery and development agenda.³⁶

The majority of speakers recognized the new signs of recovery and reform in Liberia; the example of the President of Liberia as the first woman to be elected head of State in Africa in full respect for democratic principles; and the commitment of the President of Liberia to promoting national reconciliation and reforming the diamond and timber sectors. Most of the speakers expressed, inter alia, the necessity of the presence of UNMIL and support for the talks between the Presidents of Liberia and Nigeria and other African leaders on sending the former President Charles Taylor to the Special Court for Sierra Leone. A number of representatives called for a review of the sanctions regime. A few speakers also expressed concern about the fragile and unstable regional environment, specifically in Côte d'Ivoire.

Decision of 31 March 2006 (5406th meeting):
resolution 1667 (2006)

At its 5406th meeting, on 31 March 2006, the Council included in its agenda the tenth progress report of the Secretary-General on UNMIL.³⁷ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the installation of the new democratically elected Government of Liberia had marked the completion of the two-year transition process set out in the Comprehensive Peace Agreement signed by the Liberian parties in August 2003 and that the President of Liberia had shown commendable determination in harnessing the opportunities and fulfilling the hopes of the people of Liberia. He underlined that the Transitional Government had not been able to meet the conditions for the lifting of timber and diamond sanctions. He remarked that the continued presence of UNMIL remained indispensable during the consolidation phase and, therefore, recommended the extension of the mandate of UNMIL and the increase of the Mission's police strength.

The representative of Liberia was invited to participate in the discussion and a statement was made by the representative of France. The representative of France welcomed the arrest and the transfer to the special court for Sierra Leone of Charles Taylor and wished to pay a sincere tribute to the President of Nigeria for his decisive action and to the Liberian authorities for their determination to ensure "that justice is finally done". He emphasized that any attempt to separate the situation in Liberia from that in Côte d'Ivoire made no sense and that the Council needed to pay particular attention to what Africans were telling them.³⁸

The President (Argentina) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 22 March 2006 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council³⁹ and a draft resolution.⁴⁰ The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1667 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that the mandate of UNMIL should be extended until 30 September 2006;

Decided to extend the provisions of paragraph 6 of resolution 1626 (2005) for the period specified above;

Reaffirmed its intention to authorize the Secretary-General to redeploy troops between UNMIL and the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire on a temporary basis in accordance with the provisions of resolution 1609 (2005), as needed;

Requested the Secretary-General to review his recommendations for a drawdown plan for UNMIL and to present further recommendations in his next regular report to the Council on the progress of the Mission in the implementation of its mandate.

Decision of 13 June 2006 (5454th meeting):
resolution 1683 (2006)

At its 5454th meeting, on 13 June 2006, the Council invited the representative of Liberia to participate in the discussion. The President (Denmark) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution,⁴¹ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1683 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that the measures imposed by paragraphs 2 (a) and (b) of resolution 1521 (2003) should not apply to the weapons and ammunition already provided to members of the Special Security Service for training purposes and that those weapons could remain in the custody of the Special Security Service for unencumbered operational use;

Also decided that those measures should not apply to limited supplies of weapons and ammunition intended for the use for the Government of Liberia police and security forces who had been vetted and trained since the inception of UNMIL;

Decided that a request made in accordance with paragraph 2 of the resolution should be submitted to the Committee by the Government and the exporting State, and, in case of approval, the Government should subsequently mark the weapons, maintain a registry of them and formally notify the Committee of those steps;

Reiterated the importance of continuing assistance by the Mission and requested it to inspect inventories of weapons and ammunition obtained in accordance with paragraphs 1 and 2 of the resolution and to make periodic reports to the Committee.

Decision of 20 June 2006 (5468th meeting):
resolution 1689 (2006)

At its 5468th meeting, on 20 June 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 7 June 2006 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003) addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the report of the Panel of Experts submitted pursuant to paragraph 9 (e) of resolution 1647 (2005).⁴² The Panel noted that, regarding timber, the sanctions were generally effective and there was no evidence of exports. The President of Liberia had also declared all logging concessions null and void due to their failure to comply with the rule of law. Regarding diamonds, the Panel noted that a lack of government capacity and the absence of a clear mandate of interdiction for UNMIL had hampered efforts to curb illegal digging in the interior.

The representative of Liberia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Denmark) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁴³ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1689 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided not to renew the measure in paragraph 10 of resolution 1521 (2003) that obligated Member States to prevent the import into their territories of all round log and timber products originating in Liberia;

Decided to review that decision after a period of 90 days and expressed its determination to reinstate the measure in paragraph 10 of resolution 1521 (2003) unless the Council was informed by that time that the forestry legislation proposed by the Forest Reform Monitoring Committee had been passed;

Urged the speedy adoption of the forestry legislation proposed by the Forest Reform Monitoring Committee;

Further decided that the measures imposed by paragraph 6 of resolution 1521 (2003) should be renewed for an additional six months with a review by the Council after four months, to allow the Government of Liberia sufficient time to establish an effective certificate of origin regime for trade in Liberian rough diamonds;

Requested that the Secretary-General renew for an additional six months the mandate of the Panel of Experts re-established according to paragraph 9 of resolution 1647 (2005), and requested that the Panel of Experts report to the Council through the Committee no later than 15 December 2006 its observations and recommendations.

Decision of 13 July 2006 (5487th meeting):
resolution 1694 (2006)

At its 5487th meeting, on 13 July 2006, the Council included in its agenda the eleventh progress report of the Secretary-General on UNMIL.⁴⁴ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the country's relative stability had allowed increased freedom of movement, facilitated the return of refugees and internally displaced persons and aided the gradual resurgence of economic activity. However, serious disturbances created by former personnel of the Armed Forces and others underlined the fragility of peace. He stressed that the relative stability continued to overwhelmingly rely on the presence of UNMIL, as Liberia did not yet have its own army and the new police force was still in the formative stages.

The representative of Liberia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United States of America;⁴⁵ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1694 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to increase the authorized size of the UNMIL civilian police component by 125, and to decrease the authorized size of the military component by 125, from the current authorized levels.

Decision of 29 September 2006 (5542nd meeting): resolution 1712 (2006)

At its 5542nd meeting, on 29 September 2006, the Council included in its agenda the twelfth progress report of the Secretary-General on UNMIL.⁴⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that despite progress that had been made in implementing a number of important structural reforms, Liberia remained heavily dependent on UNMIL for the provision of security, particularly in the light of the volatile situation in the subregion, particularly in Côte d'Ivoire.

The representative of Liberia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Greece) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution,⁴⁷ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1712 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that the mandate of UNMIL should be extended until 31 March 2007;

Reaffirmed its intention to authorize the Secretary-General to redeploy troops between UNMIL and the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire on a temporary basis in accordance with the provisions of resolution 1609 (2005), as needed;

Endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations for a phased, gradual consolidation, drawdown and withdrawal of the UNMIL troop contingent, as the situation permitted and without compromising the security of Liberia.

Decision of 20 December 2006 (5602nd meeting): resolution 1731 (2006)

At its 5602nd meeting, on 20 December 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 13 December 2006 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003) addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the report of the Panel of Experts submitted pursuant to paragraph 9 (e) of resolution 1647 (2005).⁴⁸ The Panel noted that Liberia was not yet in a position to demonstrate the internal controls necessary for the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme, and thus the lifting of sanctions on diamonds was not warranted. It also noted that allegations of recruitment for the war in Côte d'Ivoire had persisted.

The representative of Liberia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Qatar) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution,⁴⁹ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1731 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided, on the basis of its assessment of progress made to date towards meeting the conditions for lifting the measures imposed by resolution 1521 (2003) to renew the measures on arms imposed by paragraph 2 of resolution 1521 (2003) and modified by paragraphs 1 and 2 of resolution 1683 (2006) and to renew the measures on travel imposed by paragraph 4 of resolution 1521 (2003) for a further period of 12 months; that the measures on arms imposed by paragraphs 2 (a) and (b) of resolution 1521 (2003) should not apply to supplies of non-lethal military equipment, excluding non-lethal weapons and ammunition, as notified in advance to the Committee established by paragraph 21 of resolution 1521 (2003); to renew the measures on diamonds imposed by paragraph 6 of resolution 1521 (2003) and renewed by paragraph 4 of resolution 1689 (2006) for an additional six months with a review by the Council after four months, to allow the Government of Liberia sufficient time to establish an effective certificate of origin regime for trade in Liberian rough diamonds that is transparent and internationally verifiable; to review any of the above measures at the request of the Government of Liberia, once the Government reported to the Council that the conditions set out in resolution 1521 (2003) for terminating the measures had been met, and provided the Council with information to justify its assessment;

Decided to extend the mandate of the current Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to paragraph 5 of resolution 1689 (2006) for a further period, until 20 June 2007;

Requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures, in this exceptional instance, to reappoint the current members of the Panel of Experts as referred to in his letter to the President of the Security Council dated 27 June 2006⁵⁰ and to make the necessary financial and security arrangements to support the work of the Panel.

Decision of 30 March 2007 (5652nd meeting):
resolution 1750 (2007)

At its 5652nd meeting, on 30 March 2007, the Council included in its agenda the fourteenth progress report of the Secretary-General on UNMIL.⁵¹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the overall political situation in Liberia had remained relatively stable although the unpredictable situations in Côte d'Ivoire and Guinea created an environment that posed additional challenges to efforts to build sustained stability in Liberia.

The representative of Liberia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (South Africa) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution,⁵² it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1750 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided the mandate of UNMIL should be extended until 30 September 2007;

Reaffirmed its intention to authorize the Secretary-General to redeploy troops, as needed, between UNMIL and UNOCI on a temporary basis in accordance with the provisions of resolution 1609 (2005);

Called on the Government of Liberia, in close coordination with UNMIL, to take further steps towards achieving those benchmarks with a view to a phased, gradual consolidation, drawdown and withdrawal of the UNMIL troop contingent, as the situation permitted and without compromising the security of Liberia.

Decision of 27 April 2007 (5668th meeting):
resolution 1753 (2007)

At its 5668th meeting, on 27 April 2007, the Council invited the representative of Liberia to participate in the discussion. The President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁵³ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1753 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to terminate the measures on diamonds imposed by paragraph 6 of resolution 1521 (2003) and renewed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1731 (2006);

Encouraged the Kimberley Process to report in 90 days to the Council on Liberia's application to the Kimberley Process and called on the Government of Liberia to carry out the recommendations of the expert mission identified for the period following admission to the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme;

Decided to review the termination of the measures in paragraph 6 of resolution 1521 (2003) after consideration of the report of the Panel of Experts.

Decision of 20 June 2007 (5699th meeting):
resolution 1760 (2007)

At its 5699th meeting, on 20 June 2007, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 7 June 2007 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003) addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the report of the Panel of Experts submitted pursuant to paragraph 9 (e) of resolution 1731 (2006).⁵⁴ The Panel noted that, as a direct consequence of the lifting of sanctions on the export of Liberia rough diamonds, Liberia had been formally admitted to membership of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme on 4 May 2007. Noting that the Government had welcomed the lifting of sanctions on timber and diamonds, the Panel expressed concern that the lifting was likely to increase unrealistic expectations among the population about the Government's ability to provide immediate employment and improved social services. Such expectations had the potential to place undue stress on the Government's efforts to revive the economy.

The representative of Liberia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Belgium) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁵⁵ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1760 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General to establish a Panel of Experts to undertake the following tasks: (a) to conduct a follow-up assessment mission to Liberia and neighbouring States, in order to investigate and compile a report on the implementation, and any violations, of the measures imposed by resolution 1521 (2003); (b) to assess the impact of and effectiveness of the measures imposed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1532 (2004); (c) to assess the implementation of forestry legislation passed by the Liberian Congress on 19 September 2006 and signed into law by President Johnson Sirleaf on 5 October 2006; (d) to assess the Government of Liberia's compliance with the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme; (e) to report to the Council through the Committee by 6 December 2007 on all these issues; (f) to cooperate with other relevant groups of experts; (g) to identify and make recommendations regarding areas where the capacity of States in the region could be strengthened to facilitate the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 4 of resolution 1521 (2003) and paragraph 1 of resolution 1532 (2004);

Called upon all States and the Government of Liberia to cooperate fully with the Panel of Experts in all the aspects of its mandate.

Decision of 20 September 2007 (5745th meeting): resolution 1777 (2007)

At its 5745th meeting, on 20 September 2007, the Council included in its agenda the fifteenth progress report of the Secretary-General on UNMIL.⁵⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the Government had remained focused on consolidating its authority, fighting corruption, implementing the Governance and Economic Management Assistance Programme, reforming the security sector, regaining control and regulation of its natural resources and strengthening the capacity of its institutions. However, the slow progress in strengthening the security sector was a source of great concern. He noted that the proposed drawdown plan for UNMIL allowed for a gradual phased transfer of responsibility for the security of Liberia to the Government in a manner that gave it the opportunity to build its capacity.

The representative of Liberia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁵⁷ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1777 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

⁵⁷ S/2007/549.

Decided that the mandate of UNMIL should be extended until 30 September 2008;

Reaffirmed its intention to authorize the Secretary-General to redeploy troops, as needed, between UNMIL and UNOCI on a temporary basis in accordance with the provisions of resolution 1609 (2005);

Endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendation for a reduction of 2,450 in the number of personnel deployed as part of the UNMIL military component;

Further endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendation for a reduction of 498 in the number of officers deployed as part of the UNMIL police component;

Requested the Secretary-General to monitor progress on the core benchmarks;

Expressed its intention to review by 30 September 2008 the Secretary-General's recommendations for further UNMIL reductions, in the context of the security situation in Liberia and the subregion.

Decision of 19 December 2007 (5810th meeting): resolution 1792 (2007)

At its 5810th meeting, on 19 December 2007, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 5 December 2007 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521 (2003) addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the report of the Panel of Experts submitted pursuant to paragraph 9 (e) of resolution 1760 (2007).⁵⁸ The Panel noted that it had found no evidence of significant movements of arms or ex-combatants across Liberia's borders during the reporting period, although armed robbery rates for Monrovia had increased dramatically. That had raised the profile of the debate over rearming Liberia's security services and had highlighted some of the challenges confronting the establishment of sustainable rule of law.

The representative of Liberia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Italy) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁵⁹ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1792 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to renew the measures on arms imposed by paragraph 2 of resolution 1521 (2003) and modified by paragraphs 1 and 2 of resolution 1683 (2006) and by paragraph 1 (b) of resolution 1731 (2006) and to renew the measures on travel imposed by paragraph 4 of resolution 1521 (2003) for a further period of 12 months; that Member States should notify the Committee established by paragraph 21 of resolution 1521 (2003) upon delivery of all arms and related materiel supplied in accordance with paragraph 2 (e) or 2 (f) of resolution 1521 (2003), paragraph 2 of resolution 1683 (2006), or paragraph 1 (b) of resolution 1731; to review any of the above measures at the request of the Government of Liberia, once the Government reported to the Council that the conditions set out in resolution 1521 (2003) for terminating the measures had been met, and provided the Council with information to justify its assessment;

Decided to extend the mandate of the current Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to paragraph 1 of resolution 1760 (2007) for a further period, until 20 June 2008;

Requested the Secretary-General to reappoint the current members of the Panel of Experts and to make the necessary financial and security arrangements to support the work of the Panel.

3. The situation in Somalia

Decision of 25 February 2004 (4915th meeting): statement by the President

At its 4915th meeting, on 25 February 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Somalia dated 12 February 2004.¹ In his report, the Secretary-General noted that the agreement reached at the Somali Leaders' Consultation in Nairobi had marked a breakthrough that promised to allow further progress at the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, which had stalled for some time. The next and final phase of the reconciliation process would involve the selection of members of the transitional national parliament, who in turn would elect the president for the transitional period. He stressed that progress in the political arena had to be accompanied by improvements in the security situation on the ground, which would, in turn, accord the necessary credibility to the political agreement. The Secretary-General further emphasized the necessity for the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) frontline States to narrow differences among themselves with regard to the Somali reconciliation process and to speak with one voice. He observed that the mission to the region in November 2003 of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 751 (1992) and the adoption of resolution 1519 (2003) had demonstrated the Council's determination to give full effect to the implementation of the arms embargo on Somalia. In accordance with the Council's request in resolution 1519 (2003), the Secretary-General announced that he had established a Monitoring Group composed of four experts, for a period of six months, based in Nairobi, with a mandate, inter alia, to investigate violations of the arms embargo and to provide a list of arms embargo violators for possible future action by the Council. He also reported that insecurity and violence in many parts of the country and recent tensions over control of the Sool and Sanaag regions underlined the fact that a comprehensive peace was both urgent and necessary in Somalia. Somali leaders and their militias had to be aware that they would be held accountable for continued violations of human rights.

The representative of Somalia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (China) made a statement on behalf of the Council,² by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its firm support for the Somali National Reconciliation process;

Called upon the Somali parties to conclude the Somali National Reconciliation Conference by establishing a viable transitional government and working towards a comprehensive security arrangement;

Condemned those who obstructed the peace process and called on neighbouring countries to continue to participate fully in the peace process;

Called on the international community to continue its efforts to support IGAD and called on the donor countries to contribute to the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, the Trust Fund for Peacebuilding in Somalia and the inter-agency appeal for Somalia;

Expressed serious concern regarding the humanitarian situation in Somalia and called on the Somali leaders to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance and to assure the safety of all international and national aid workers;

Reiterated its readiness to assist the Somali parties and support IGAD.

Decision of 14 July 2004 (5003rd meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5003rd meeting, on 14 July 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 9 June 2004.³ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the outcome of the two recent meetings of the IGAD Ministerial Facilitation Committee held in Nairobi demonstrated a renewed cohesiveness among the IGAD Foreign Ministers on the issue of national reconciliation in Somalia. A coherent regional approach was essential if the Facilitation Committee was to provide political leadership during the proceedings of phase III of the peace process and the finalization of the Somali National Reconciliation Conference. Moreover, the two-month time frame, given by the IGAD Ministers to conclude the Conference, placed extraordinary pressure on the Somali parties in the region. Somali leaders had until the end of July to reach agreement on several contentious issues and form an inclusive transitional federal government for Somalia. He further urged IGAD, the African Union, the League of Arab States, the European Union and the Security Council to consider what additional measures could be taken in support of peace and reconciliation in Somalia. The active engagement of the Security Council and the putting in place of the Monitoring Group could provide much-needed impetus in that regard. The international community would also need to encourage the recent signs of harmonization of the divergent positions in the subregion vis-à-vis Somalia if the peace process were to enjoy the maximum chances of success. While violence and armed conflict continued to exacerbate vulnerabilities in Somalia and despite access constraints, aid agencies had been responding to various humanitarian crises in fluid security environments.

The representative of Somalia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Romania) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its firm support for the Somali national reconciliation process and the ongoing Somali National Reconciliation Conference in Kenya;

Welcomed the launching of phase III of the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, and encouraged all parties to continue in their ongoing efforts to move the process forward and agree on a durable and inclusive solution to the conflict in Somalia and the establishment of a transitional federal government for Somalia;

Reiterated that the Somali parties should abide by and implement expeditiously the Eldoret Declaration of 27 October 2002 on the cessation of hostilities,⁵ and called on the Somali parties to continue working towards a comprehensive security arrangement for Somalia; condemned those who obstructed the peace process and reiterated that those who persisted on the path of confrontation and conflict would be held accountable;

Welcomed the decision by the African Union to dispatch a reconnaissance mission to prepare the ground for the deployment of military monitors to Somalia;

Reiterated serious concern regarding the humanitarian situation in Somalia, and called on Somali leaders to facilitate the delivery of much-needed humanitarian assistance and to assure the safety of all international and national aid workers.

Decision of 17 August 2004 (5022nd meeting):
resolution 1558 (2004)

At its 5022nd meeting, on 17 August 2004, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 11 August 2004 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 751 (1992) to the President of the Council, transmitting the report of the Monitoring Group on Somalia, by which the Group made recommendations concerning the arms embargo.⁶

⁶ S/2004/604; the report was submitted pursuant to paragraph 6 of resolution 1519 (2003).

The President drew attention to a draft resolution;⁷ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1558 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee established pursuant to resolution 751 (1992) of 24 April 1992, to re-establish, within 30 days and for a period of six months, the Monitoring Group as referred to in paragraph 2 of resolution 1519 (2003), with the following mandate:

(a) To continue the tasks outlined in paragraphs 2 (a) to (d) of resolution 1519 (2003);

(b) To continue refining and updating information on the draft list of those who continued to violate the arms embargo inside and outside Somalia, and their active supporters, for possible future measures by the Council, and to present such information to the Committee as and when the Committee deemed appropriate;

(c) To continue making recommendations based on its investigations, on the previous reports of the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to resolutions 1425 (2002) of 22 July 2002 and 1474 (2003) of 8 April 2003, and on the first report of the Monitoring Group;

(d) To work closely with the Committee on specific recommendations for additional measures to improve overall compliance with the arms embargo;

(e) To provide to the Council, through the Committee, a midterm report and a final report covering all the tasks set out above.

Decision of 26 October 2004 (5064th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5064th meeting, on 26 October 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 8 October 2004.⁸ While commending the progress witnessed in recent weeks at the Somali National Reconciliation Conference, the Secretary-General urged Somali leaders to seize the opportunity to complete the process by electing a transitional president and support in good faith the new transitional federal government that was to be formed. He also welcomed the readiness of the African Union to deploy monitors to Somalia and encouraged the international community to support the mission of the African Union, including its disarmament, demobilization and reintegration aspect. He further welcomed the planning efforts that were under way in Nairobi, involving the United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS), the United Nations country team, the Somalia Aid Coordination Body, the European Commission, the League of Arab States and others, to come up with a peacebuilding framework, as envisaged in the presidential statements of 31 October 2001 and 25 February 2004.⁹ Those efforts were expected to lead to the formulation of a “rapid assistance package”. He further noted that at that stage of progress in the Somali peace process, there would likely be a call for an expanded peacebuilding role and presence for the United Nations, to assist the Somali parties in implementing their agreement. At the same time, he believed that any enhanced role for the United Nations in Somalia had to be incremental and should be based on the outcome of discussions with the new government. He reiterated that political progress had to be accompanied by efforts on the part of Somali leaders to bring about tangible improvement in the security situation on the ground.

The representative of Somalia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (United Kingdom) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its previous resolutions and the statements by its President on the situation in Somalia;

Reiterated its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of situation in Somalia;

Commended the recent progress made at the Somali National Reconciliation Conference in Nairobi;

Looked forward to the formation in the near future of a Transitional Federal Government;

Encouraged the Transitional Federal Parliament and the President to make further steps to select a Prime Minister and efficient and effective Cabinet and to develop a preliminary programme of action and timetable for the transitional period;

Commended countries and international organizations for supporting and assisting the Somali national reconciliation process;

Shared the Secretary-General’s view that there would be a call for an expanded peacebuilding role and presence for the United Nations in Somalia;

Urged Somali leaders to create a favourable environment for the future Transitional Federal Government.

Decision of 19 November 2004 (5083rd meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5083rd meeting, held in Nairobi, on 19 November 2004,¹¹ statements were made by all Council members and the representatives of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Nigeria and Somalia,¹² as well as by the IGAD facilitator.

Speakers commended the progress made in the Somali national reconciliation process and welcomed the election of the President of the Transitional Federal Government, the formation of the Somali parliament and the appointment of a Prime Minister. Speakers also expressed support for the decision of the African Union to deploy an observer mission in Somalia.

The representative of Kenya pointed out that, despite those achievements, the peace process faced the very critical and delicate situation of stabilizing the security situation inside Somalia before the Federal Government could relocate.¹³ Referring to the challenge posed by the need to restore peace and security throughout Somalia, the representative of Somalia noted that the new Government possessed no trained army, no organized police or any other security personnel. Therefore, he requested the Council to take the necessary steps to phase in a peacebuilding mission, including the deployment of a stabilization force in Somalia, in the most immediate future. Furthermore, he stated that a formal request to the African Union for a stabilization force, composed of 15,000 to 20,000 troops, had already been made.¹⁴ Several speakers appealed to the Council to endorse a peacekeeping mission in Somalia to improve the security situation,¹⁵ while other speakers called for an expanded peacebuilding role and presence of the United Nations in Somalia.¹⁶

The representative of the United Kingdom stressed that the precondition to the deployment of a large force was the restoration of a degree of stability in Somalia. Until that objective was achieved, he expressed support for providing maximum help for the African Union observer mission.¹⁷

The President (United States) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its previous resolutions and statements of its President on the situation in Somalia;

Reiterated its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia;

Commended the recent progress made in the Somali national reconciliation process, especially the establishment of the Transitional Federal Parliament;

Commended member States of IGAD in particular and other countries and international organizations for supporting and assisting the Somali reconciliation process;

Reaffirmed its support for the commitment of the African Union to assist in the transitional process, in particular the planning for a mission in Somalia;

Encouraged donor countries and organizations to provide support to the efforts of the future Somali government and institutions to ensure their ability to function inside Somalia and to assist in the reconstruction of Somalia.

Decision of 7 March 2005 (5135th meeting):
statement by the President

In his report dated 18 February 2005,¹⁹ the Secretary-General observed that the IGAD peace process had produced a power-sharing arrangement for a transitional period in Somalia, which stretched over a period of five years. While that had clearly been the most inclusive peace process ever, involving all clans and most major faction leaders, it could not be said that either peace or reconciliation had been achieved or that the fighting inside Somalia had ceased. Recalling the request made by the President of the Transitional Federal Government after his election for a large number of peacekeepers from the African Union to help the Transitional Federal Government to relocate to Somalia, a consensus had emerged that the most feasible option might be a protection force fielded by the African Union. In consultation with the African Union, the United Nations was prepared to support the planning of such a protection force. He further noted that, as the Transitional Federal Government began to address its relocation to Somalia, the Parliament, as a matter of priority should seek an agreement from all factions and militia leaders to cease hostilities and enter into immediate negotiations for a comprehensive ceasefire agreement. If requested, the United Nations would be ready to provide advice during the negotiation of such an agreement. The Secretary-General insisted that greater efforts should be made to enforce the arms embargo on Somalia. He stressed that improved monitoring capacity and the establishment of enforcement measures would considerably enhance overall security. He added that, as previously encouraged by the Council, the Coordination and Monitoring Committee had been established as a mechanism through which donor countries and regional and subregional organizations were providing support to the efforts of the Transitional Federal Government. He further detailed areas where an expanded United Nations role would be required in the immediate future, which would require an expansion of UNPOS.

At its 5135th meeting, on 7 March 2005, in which the representative of Somalia was invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General. The President (Brazil) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed all its previous decisions concerning the situation in Somalia, in particular the statement by its President of 19 November 2004;

Reaffirmed its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia;

Welcomed the progress made in the Somali national reconciliation process, in particular the ongoing relocation efforts of the Transitional Federal Government;

Commended efforts of the African Union and IGAD in support of the Transitional Federal Government;

Reiterated its support for the efforts of the African Union in assisting the process of transition in Somalia;

Urged all Somali factions and militia leaders to cease hostilities and encouraged them and the Transitional Federal Government to enter into immediate negotiations for a comprehensive and verifiable ceasefire agreement leading to final disarmament;

Expressed its gratitude to all donors who had supported the peace process in Somalia and encouraged donor countries to contribute to the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Somalia;

Welcomed the establishment of the Coordination and Monitoring Committee chaired jointly by the Transitional Federal Government and the United Nations;

Welcomed the efforts of the United Nations Political Office in Somalia and its leading role in coordinating support for the Transitional Federal Government to implement the agreements reached at the Somali National Reconciliation Conference;

Reaffirmed its full support of the peace process in Somalia and the commitment of the United Nations to assist in that regard.

Decision of 15 March 2005 (5142nd meeting):
resolution 1587 (2005)

At its 5142nd meeting, on 15 March 2005, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 8 March 2005 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 751 (1992) to the President of the Council, transmitting the report of the Monitoring Group on Somalia.²¹

The representative of Somalia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Brazil) drew attention to a draft resolution;²² it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1587 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General to re-establish within 30 days, and for a period of six months, the Monitoring Group referred to in paragraph 3 of resolution 1558 (2004);

Further requested the Secretary-General to make the necessary financial arrangements to support the work of the Monitoring Group;

Requested the Committee to consider and recommend to the Council ways to improve the implementation of and compliance with the arms embargo, including ways to develop the capacity of States in the region to implement the arms embargo, in response to continuing violations;

Further requested the Committee to consider, when appropriate, a visit to Somalia and/or the region by its Chairman and those he might designate, as approved by the Committee, to demonstrate the Security Council's determination to give full effect to the arms embargo.

Decision of 14 July 2005 (5227th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5227th meeting, on 14 July 2005, the Council again included in its agenda the letter dated 8 March 2005 from the Chairman of the Committee,²³ as well as the report of the Secretary-General dated 16 June 2005.²⁴

In his report, the Secretary-General observed that it was of utmost importance that the Transitional Federal Government and the transitional federal institutions relocated to Somalia so as to ensure continued credibility with the people of Somalia and the international community. However, the Government's relocation plan had become fraught with controversy and opposition, which could assume further divisions along clan and regional lines. He further noted that there was an urgent need for Somali leaders to enter into a serious dialogue in the search for a consensus on the important issues regarding relocation. The Secretary-General reiterated his appeal to the Transitional Federal Government and Parliament to seek an agreement from all faction and militia leaders to cease hostilities and enter into immediate negotiations for a comprehensive ceasefire agreement. The United Nations was ready to support negotiations for such an agreement, in collaboration with other partners. He further noted that while the Coordination and Monitoring Committee could be a useful mechanism to oversee and guide assistance to Somalia, there was a need to complete the process of making it structurally stronger in order to allow for quick responses to problems. Planning was under way for a peace support mission for Somalia by IGAD and the African Union, but deployment of any foreign military force in Somalia would require an exemption from the Security Council arms embargo. The recent report of the Monitoring Group on Somalia made it clear that violations continued to occur and weapons and explosives continued to flow into the country. The enforcement of the arms embargo, with improved monitoring capacity and the establishment of enforcement measures, would considerably enhance security in Somalia.

²⁴ S/2005/392, submitted pursuant to the statement by the President of 31 October 2001 (S/PRST/2001/30).

The President (Greece) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its concern at the recent disagreements and increased tensions among Somali leaders, which threatened the viability of the transitional federal institutions;

Called on all leaders in Somalia to exercise maximum restraint and take immediate effective steps to reduce tension;

Urged the transitional federal institutions to conclude without delay a national security and stabilization plan;

Stressed that improving the humanitarian situation was an essential component of support for the peace and reconciliation process;

Reiterated that ensuring humanitarian access to all Somalis in need and providing guarantees for the safety and security of aid workers was an immediate priority and obligation of the transitional federal institutions;

Deplored the recent hijacking of a vessel off the coast of Somalia that had been chartered by the World Food Programme and was carrying food aid for tsunami victims;

Reaffirmed its full support for the peace process in Somalia and the commitment of the United Nations to assist the regional and subregional efforts in that regard.

Decision of 14 October 2005 (5280th meeting):
resolution 1630 (2005)

At its 5280th meeting, on 14 October 2005, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 5 October 2005 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 751 (1992) to the President of the Council, transmitting the report of the Monitoring Group on Somalia.²⁶

The President (Romania) drew attention to a draft resolution;²⁷ it was adopted unanimously without debate as resolution 1630 (2005), by which the Council acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to request the Secretary-General to re-establish within 30 days, and for a period of six months, the Monitoring Group referred to in paragraph 3 of resolution 1558 (2004), with the following mandate:

(a) To continue the tasks outlined in paragraphs 3 (a) to (c) of resolution 1587 (2005);

²⁶ S/2005/625; the report was submitted pursuant to paragraph 3 (i) of resolution 1587 (2005).

(b) To continue to investigate, in coordination with relevant international agencies, all activities, including in the financial, maritime and other sectors, which generated revenues used to commit arms embargo violations;

(c) To continue to investigate any means of transport, routes, seaports, airports and other facilities used in connection with arms embargo violations;

(d) To continue refining and updating information on the draft list of those individuals and entities who violated the measures implemented by Member States inside and outside Somalia, and their active supporters;

(e) To continue making recommendations based on its investigations, on the previous reports of the Panel of Experts;

(f) To work closely with the Committee on specific recommendations for additional measures to improve overall compliance with the arms embargo;

(g) To assist in identifying areas where the capacities of States in the region could be strengthened to facilitate the implementation of the arms embargo;

(h) To provide to the Council, through the Committee, a midterm briefing within 90 days from its establishment;

(i) To submit, for the Council's consideration, a final report covering all the tasks set out above, no later than 15 days prior to the termination of the Monitoring Group's mandate.

Decision of 9 November 2005 (5302nd meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5302nd meeting, on 9 November 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 11 October 2005.²⁸ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that some progress had been made in the peace process in Somalia, particularly regarding the formation and return of the transitional federal institutions back to the country. However, the peace process remained fragile. He stressed the importance and urgency of the effective functioning of the transitional federal institutions. The Secretary-General expressed concern that the political tensions between the leaders of the transitional federal institutions had given rise to military preparations on their part. He further noted persistent reports of increased violations of the arms embargo and called on the Somali leaders and countries in the region not to be part of an exacerbation in political and military tensions. Observing that the threat of violence had to be averted by all concerned, he urged once again the Somali leaders to enter into a comprehensive ceasefire agreement. He further drew attention to the events that had forced the relocation of international United Nations staff from Jawhar early in September and stressed that tangible improvement in the security situation on the ground was an essential responsibility of the Somali leaders.

The President (Russian Federation) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its concern over recent reported military activities and hostile rhetoric, and emphasized that any resort to military force as a means for dealing with the current difference within the transitional federal institutions was unacceptable;

Underlined its strong support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in his efforts at facilitating the peace process in Somalia, supporting ongoing Somali-owned internal initiatives;

Affirmed its continuing support to the transitional federal institutions and reiterated the need for a national security and stabilization plan to be agreed;

Condemned the increased inflow of weapons into Somalia and the continuous violations of the United Nations arms embargo;

Expressed serious concern over the increasing incidents of piracy off the coast of Somalia;

Strongly urged the transitional federal institutions to ensure humanitarian access and provide guarantees for the safety and security of aid workers;

Condemned in the strongest terms the killing of a United Nations national security officer on 3 October in Kismayo;

Reaffirmed its full support for the peace process in Somalia and the commitment of the United Nations to assist in that regard.

Decision of 15 March 2006 (5387th meeting):
statement by the President

In his report dated 21 February 2006,³⁰ the Secretary-General observed that the signing of the Aden Declaration on 5 January 2006 had created encouraging prospects for reconciliation among the leaders of the Somali transitional federal institutions, and welcomed the announcement that the first session of the Transitional Federal Parliament inside Somalia would be held in Baidoa on 26 February. He noted, however, that the peace process remained fragile. The immediate priorities for the transitional federal institutions would include the development of a national security and stabilization plan, the promotion of reconciliation, and the urgent need to improve the humanitarian situation and quality of life of the Somali people. The deteriorating food security situation presented serious humanitarian challenges, which were also likely to have significant consequences. Believing that reconciliation efforts would foster improved security and humanitarian access, he encouraged the international community to continue to support political reconciliation efforts, especially with regard to the preparation and convening of the Transitional Federal Parliament. He welcomed the renewed engagement of IGAD and the African Union in the Somali peace process and called on them, in accordance with the provisions outlined in the presidential statement of the Security Council of 14 July 2005 “to work out a detailed mission plan in close coordination with the broad consensus of the transitional federal institutions and consistent with a national security and stabilization plan”,³¹ which would also be necessary for the reform of the security sector in Somalia.

At its 5387th meeting, on 15 March 2006, in which the representative of Somalia was invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General.

The President (Argentina) made a statement on behalf of the Council,³² by which the Council, inter alia:

³⁰ S/2006/122, submitted pursuant to the statement by the President of 31 October 2001 (S/PRST/2001/30).

Reaffirmed all its previous statements and resolutions concerning the situation in Somalia, in particular the statements by its President of 14 July 2005 and 9 November 2005;

Encouraged all leaders and members of the transitional federal institutions to continue their efforts towards inclusive dialogue and consensus-building within the framework of the transitional federal institutions and in accordance with the Transitional Federal Charter of the Somali Republic adopted in February 2004;

Called on the Transitional Federal Parliament to promote peace and reconciliation in its work towards implementing the Transitional Federal Charter;

Urged the members of the transitional federal institutions to continue to organize their work in accordance with the Transitional Federal Charter, such as the formation of independent commissions and parliamentary committees, which would provide a framework for addressing the complex and divisive issues of the transitional period;

Reiterated the urgent need for a rapid finalization of an agreed national security and stabilization plan, to include a comprehensive and verifiable ceasefire agreement, as well as plans for the restoration of public safety and security institutions and the implementation of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration;

Condemned the increased inflow of weapons into Somalia and the continuous violations of the United Nations arms embargo and further reminded all States of their obligations to comply fully with the measures imposed by resolution 733 (1992) and urged them to take all necessary steps to hold violators accountable;

Reaffirmed its full support to the peace process in Somalia and welcomed the commitment of the United Nations to assist in that regard.

Decision of 10 May 2006 (5435th meeting):
resolution 1676 (2006)

At its 5435th meeting, on 10 May 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 4 May 2006 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 751 (1992) to the President of the Council, transmitting the report of the Monitoring Group on Somalia.³³

The President (Congo) drew attention to a draft resolution;³⁴ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1676 (2006), by which the Council acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

³³ S/2006/229; the report was submitted pursuant to paragraph 3 (i) of resolution 1630 (2005).

Requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee established pursuant to resolution 751 (1992), to re-establish within 30 days, and for a period of six months, the Monitoring Group referred to in paragraph 3 of resolution 1558 (2004), with the following mandate:

(a) To continue the tasks outlined in paragraphs 3 (a) to (c) of resolution 1587 (2005);

Decision of 13 July 2006 (5486th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5486th meeting, on 13 July 2006, in which the representative of Somalia was invited to participate, the President (France) made a statement on behalf of the Council,³⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the agreement reached in Khartoum on 22 June between the Transitional Federal Government and the Islamic Courts;

³⁵ S/PRST/2006/31.

Urged all parties involved in the dialogue to engage constructively at the next round of talks;

Expressed its grave concern at the deteriorating humanitarian situation in Somalia;

Welcomed the fact that the Transitional Federal Government and the Transitional Federal Parliament had been able to agree on 14 June 2006 to adopt the National Security and Stabilization Plan for Somalia;

Expressed its readiness to consider a limited modification of the arms embargo to enable the transitional federal institutions, on the basis of a sustainable peace process, to develop Somalia's security sector and national institutions capable of responding to security issues.

Decision of 29 November 2006 (5575th

At its 5575th meeting,³⁶ on 29 November 2006, in which the representative of Somalia was invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 21 November 2006 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 751 (1992) to the President of the Council, transmitting the report of the Monitoring Group on Somalia.³⁷

The President (Peru) drew attention to a draft resolution submitted by Qatar;³⁸ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1724 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee established pursuant to resolution 751 (1992), to re-establish within 30 days, and for six months, the Monitoring Group referred to in paragraph 3 of resolution 1558 (2004), with the following mandate:

Decision of 6 December 2006 (5579th meeting):
resolution 1725 (2006)

At the 5579th meeting, on 6 December 2006, at which statements were made by the representatives of the Congo, Qatar, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States,³⁹ the President (Qatar) drew attention to a draft resolution submitted by the Congo, Ghana, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States;⁴⁰ it was adopted unanimously as resolution 1725 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to authorize IGAD and member States of the African Union to establish a protection and training mission in Somalia, to be reviewed after an initial period of six months by the Security Council with a briefing by IGAD;

Endorsed the specification in the deployment plan for the peacekeeping mission of IGAD that those States that bordered Somalia would not deploy troops to Somalia;

Decided that the measures imposed by paragraph 5 of resolution 733 (1992) and further elaborated in paragraphs 1 and 2 of resolution 1425 (2002) should not apply to supplies of weapons and military equipment and technical training and assistance intended solely for the support of or use by the force;

and encouraged Member States to provide financial resources for the IGAD peacekeeping mission.

After the vote, speakers encouraged all Somali parties to reach a peaceful political settlement through comprehensive dialogue and stressed the need for international support of the new IGAD mission.

The representative of the United States viewed the deployment of a regional force to Somalia as a key element in preventing conflict. He noted that while both the transitional federal institutions and the Union of Islamic Courts (UIC) had violated the terms of the Khartoum Declaration, UIC had done so through concrete military expansion. UIC had sought to destabilize the Horn of Africa region through irredentist claims on the Somali-populated regions of neighbouring States and support for insurgent groups in Ethiopia. He further stated that the primary objective of the IGAD mission was to help stabilize Somalia by providing security in Baidoa, and protection and training for the transitional federal institutions, but not to engage in offensive actions against UIC. He added that a security protocol, including a verifiable ceasefire and military disengagement, was the next step towards a longer-term solution.⁴¹

The representative of Qatar cautioned that the resolution just adopted should not have a negative impact and should not be construed as being directed at one party at the expense of another.⁴² The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania opined that it was "not a perfect resolution" but was a step in the right direction.⁴³

Called upon all parties to draw back from conflict, recommit to dialogue, immediately implement resolution 1725 (2006) and refrain from any actions that could provoke or perpetuate violence and violations of human rights;

Reaffirmed its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia through the Transitional Federal Charter;

Reiterated that the Transitional Federal Charter and institutions offered the only route to achieving peace and stability in Somalia, and emphasized the need for continued credible dialogue between the transitional federal institutions and the Union of Islamic Courts.

Decision of 20 February 2007 (5633rd meeting):

At its 5614th meeting, on 26 December 2006, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of UNPOS. The Special Representative reported that the crisis in Somalia had escalated dangerously as the hostilities between the Transitional Federal Government and the Union of Islamic Courts had expanded across a 400-km-wide front. The fighting had compounded an already serious humanitarian crisis, resulting in additional displacement of populations. While the Council had authorized the creation of the IGAD peacekeeping mission by resolution 1725 (2006), neither IGAD nor the African Union had identified potential troop contributors or possible sources of funding for the mission. The Special Representative stated that the conflict involved foreign forces and the use of heavy weapons and aircraft. There had been consistent reports of the presence of troops from Ethiopia inside Somalia deployed in support of the Transitional Federal Government, while Eritrean troops were reported on the side of UIC. While Eritrea had consistently denied the presence of its troops inside Somalia, Ethiopia had declared that it had taken "self-defensive measures" inside Somalia. UIC had rejected Council resolution 1725 (2006), maintaining that the deployment of foreign forces in Somalia was tantamount to an invasion of the country. Civilians had been caught up in the fighting and the outbreak of fighting had severely undermined the provision of relief assistance to 2 million conflict- and flood-affected people in south-central Somalia. Moreover, reports from Mogadishu indicated that children were being forcibly recruited into fighting forces. He concluded by urging the Council to call on the two sides to halt the fighting immediately, to abide by resolution 1725 (2006) and urgently return to dialogue, without preconditions. Failure to reach a political settlement through negotiations could have serious consequences for the entire region.⁴⁵

At the 5633rd meeting, on 20 February 2007, the President (Slovakia) drew attention to a letter dated 22 January 2007 from the representative of the Congo.⁴⁶ Statements were made by the representatives of France, Italy, South Africa and the United Kingdom.⁴⁷

The President (Slovakia) also drew attention to a draft resolution submitted by the Congo, Ghana, Panama, Slovakia, South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States;⁴⁸ it was adopted unanimously as resolution 1744 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General to assist the transitional federal institutions with the national reconciliation congress;

Decided to authorize member States of the African Union to establish for a period of six months a mission in Somalia;

Decided that States providing specified supplies or technical assistance should notify the Committee established pursuant to resolution 751 (1992) in advance and on a case-by-case basis;

Requested the Secretary-General to send a technical assessment mission to the African Union headquarters and Somalia;

Decided that, having regard to the establishment of the African Union Mission in Somalia, the measures contained in paragraphs 3 to 7 of resolution 1725 (2006) should no longer apply.

After the vote, speakers welcomed the authorization of the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM), but stressed that only a fully inclusive political process, owned and conducted by the Somalis, could solve the Somali crisis. The representative of Italy believed that, in order to be successful, it was essential for AMISOM to be unequivocally perceived by the Somali population as instrumental in supporting dialogue and reconciliation.⁴⁹ The representative of South Africa hoped that the deployment of AMISOM would signal that the international community, through the Security Council, would in the coming months also be able to deploy to help the Somali people rebuild their country.⁵⁰

Decision of 30 April 2007 (5671st meeting): statement by the President

In his report dated 20 April 2007,⁵¹ the Secretary-General observed that the situation in Somalia provided an opportunity to re-establish solid institutions of governance and to finally turn the page on 16 years of instability. Stressing that the primary responsibility for achieving peace and stability lay with the Somali leaders and people, he believed that the planned National Reconciliation Congress would be an important step in that direction. The Congress, which was not to be viewed as an end in itself but part of an ongoing reconciliation and State-building process, necessitated the support of the international community. He further urged the international community to urgently support AMISOM with all the means at its disposal, so that the mission could complete deployment and carry out its mandate effectively, thereby facilitating the withdrawal of the remaining Ethiopian forces and contributing to a more stable and secure environment in Somalia. It would be imperative to secure an immediate end to the fighting, through a cessation of hostilities and a commitment to peace by all stakeholders. There was also a need to dissuade some regional actors from contributing to instability and the proliferation of arms in Somalia, while encouraging positive contributions from others. He recommended that the Council review the situation in Somalia again by mid-June 2007, with a view to determining whether conditions were in place for the deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation, subject to progress in the reconciliation process and developments on the ground. Notwithstanding that deployment, he noted that the Council might wish to consider authorizing the Secretariat to begin appropriate contingency planning for a possible operation in order to reduce the lead time required. With regard to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants, he recommended that the United Nations should start immediately with preparatory activities in anticipation of the establishment and implementation of a national programme in that area.

At its 5671st meeting, on 30 April 2007, in which the representative of Somalia was invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General. The President (United Kingdom) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁵² by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its grave concern at the renewed fighting in Somalia, and deeply deplored the loss of civilian life;

Demanded that all parties in Somalia comply fully with international humanitarian law, protect the civilian population, and guarantee complete, unhindered and secure access for humanitarian assistance;

Urged Somalia's transitional federal institutions to show leadership and commitment to reach out to all components of Somali society, and in particular to intensify their dialogue with the clans in Mogadishu;

Called on all parties in Somalia, the region and the wider international community to reject violence, to deny safe haven to extremist elements, to pursue any differences they might have with the transitional federal institutions through dialogue, and to summon the political will to take the necessary steps to allow the transitional federal institutions to deliver a sustainable, all-inclusive political process.

Decision of 14 June 2007 (5695th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5695th meeting, on 14 June 2007, in which the representative of Somalia was invited to participate, the President (Belgium) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁵³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its support for the National Reconciliation Congress as a mechanism for much-needed political dialogue and reconciliation in Somalia;

Expressed its grave concern regarding the recent pattern of attacks by extremist elements in Somalia;

Condemned the attack on the Prime Minister on 3 June 2007 and the attack on the forces of AMISOM in Mogadishu on 16 May 2007;

Underlined its appreciation for the efforts of the Ugandan forces currently deployed in Mogadishu under AMISOM and

Uganda's invaluable contribution to peace and stability in Somalia;

Emphasized the urgent need for appropriate contingency planning for a possible United Nations mission to be deployed in Somalia if the Security Council decided to authorize such a mission;

Emphasized again the need for strengthened efforts to provide humanitarian relief assistance to Somalia.

Decision of 23 July 2007 (5720th meeting):

At its 5720th meeting,⁵⁴ on 23 July 2007, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 17 July 2007 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 751 (1992) to the President of the Council, transmitting the report of the Monitoring Group on Somalia.⁵⁵

The President (China) drew attention to the report of the Secretary-General dated 25 June 2007.⁵⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that concerns remained regarding the security of the venue of the National Reconciliation Congress, its independence and inclusiveness and its expected outcome. Stressing that a genuine and all-inclusive dialogue and political process was the only way to achieve sustainable peace in Somalia, he encouraged the National Governance and Reconciliation Committee to make the Congress as inclusive and transparent as possible and to engage with all the key stakeholders. The outcome of the Congress should address critical political and security issues, including a comprehensive ceasefire and an agreed framework for disarming. The Secretary-General also condemned all acts of violence in Somalia, including the killing of AMISOM soldiers, and called on all parties to cease hostilities and engage in peace efforts. There was an urgent need to strengthen AMISOM capabilities on the ground, including the expedited completion of its full deployment, to help create conditions conducive for dialogue and reconciliation and to facilitate the withdrawal of Ethiopian troops. He reiterated his satisfaction over the expressed intention of Ethiopia to withdraw its forces and called on all States in the region to respect Somalia's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. He further noted that a United Nations operation would succeed only if it was deployed in support of a political process, not as a substitution for one. In the absence of the necessary conditions, not only would a peacekeeping operation be more likely to fail in its objectives and possibly be exposed to a number of security threats, but the Organization would likely find it very difficult to generate the number of troops and other personnel required for an operation of the size envisaged for Somalia. If conditions for peacekeeping were not in place, the Security Council and the wider international community might wish to consider alternative options. He further suggested that a joint mission of independent mandate holders could be a possible option to gather facts about alleged human rights and humanitarian abuses. He concluded by pointing out that recent developments in Somalia demonstrated the degree to which national and regional security conditions were intertwined in the Horn of Africa. Long-term security for Somalia would not be possible without addressing the regional aspects of the crisis. He reiterated the need to explore measures to deal with the regional dimension of the Somali crisis and to find ways to address the security concerns of Somalia and its neighbours, including the reinforcement of the existing regional security architecture.

The President (China) drew attention to a draft resolution submitted by the United Kingdom;⁵⁷ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1766 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of the Monitoring Group referred to in paragraph 3 of resolution 1558 (2004) and requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary administrative measures to re-establish the Monitoring Group for a further period of six months, with the following mandate:

(a) To continue the tasks outlined in paragraphs 3 (a) to (c) of resolution 1587 (2005);

(b) To continue to investigate, in coordination with relevant international agencies, all activities, including in the financial, maritime and other sectors, which generated revenues used to commit arms embargo violations;

(d) To continue refining and updating information on the draft list of those individuals and entities who violated the measures implemented by Member States and to present such information to the Committee;

(e) To continue making recommendations based on its investigations, on the previous reports of the Panel of Experts and on the previous reports of the Monitoring Group;

(f) To work closely with the Committee on specific recommendations;

(g) To assist in identifying areas where the capacities of States in the region could be strengthened to facilitate the implementation of the arms embargo;

(h) To provide to the Council, through the Committee, a midterm briefing within 90 days from its establishment;

(i) To submit, for the Council's consideration, through the Committee, a final report covering all the tasks set out above, no later than 15 days prior to the termination of the Monitoring Group's mandate.

Decision of 20 August 2007 (5732nd meeting):
resolution 1772 (2007)

At its 5732nd meeting, on 20 August 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 25 June 2007.⁵⁸ The representative of Somalia was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Congo) drew attention to a letter dated 18 July 2007 from the representative of Ghana⁵⁹ and a letter dated 13 August 2007 from the Secretary-General.⁶⁰

The President also drew attention to a draft resolution;⁶¹ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1772 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

(a) To support dialogue and reconciliation in Somalia by assisting with the free movement, safe passage and protection of all those involved with the process referred to in paragraphs 1 to 5 of the resolution;

(b) To provide, as appropriate, protection to the transitional federal institutions to help them carry out their functions of government, and security for key infrastructure;

(c) To assist, within its capabilities, and in coordination with other parties, with implementation of the National Security and Stabilization Plan, in particular the effective re-establishment and training of all-inclusive Somali security forces;

(d) To contribute, as may be requested and within capabilities, to the creation of the necessary security conditions for the provision of humanitarian assistance;

(e) To protect its personnel, facilities, installations, equipment and mission, and to ensure the security and freedom of movement of its personnel; urged member States of the African Union to contribute to the mission in order to help create the conditions for the withdrawal of all other foreign forces from Somalia; decided that States providing supplies or technical assistance in accordance with paragraph 11 (b) of the resolution should notify the Committee established pursuant to resolution 751 (1992) in advance and on a case-by-case basis.

Decision of 19 December 2007 (5812th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5805th meeting, on 17 December 2007, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Somalia. Statements were made by all Council members and the representatives of Portugal (on behalf of the European Union),⁶² Norway and Somalia.

The Special Representative informed the Council that the conflict in Somalia continued to be a threat to peace and security which required a definitive, lasting solution. He offered three possible options for international involvement in Somalia, which included: maintaining the status quo; withdrawing completely from Somalia, thereby accepting the international community's inability to protect the population and bring about a lasting peace; or taking immediate and effective action on the political and security fronts. With regard to the first option, the Special Representative stressed that the "wait and see" attitude adopted by the international community would not provide meaningful progress towards lasting peace and would likely mean a spillover of the violence into neighbouring regions. While the second option of withdrawal would be an easy alternative, he stressed that the decision to intervene in some conflict situations while ignoring others would have far-reaching effects in terms of public opinion. With regard to the third option, he stated that the Somalia crisis was an international problem which required the United Nations to mobilize a consensus to stabilize the country. As such, action on the political front required the establishment of a government of national unity and the inclusion of the opposition as part of the political process. He advocated that discussions between the Transitional Federal Government and the opposition, as well as with members of the business community and the Somalia diaspora, should be held in a location close to Somalia. He further stressed that action on the political and security fronts had to be carried out concurrently and, in that regard, he called for the strengthening of AMISOM. He believed that Saudi Arabia, and one or two members of NATO, could assist with a new initiative to reinforce AMISOM with extra capacity. With the Secretary-General's support, he intended to pursue that roadmap to peace and called on the Council to support those two actions. In concluding, the Special Representative emphasized that if the current violence and neglect continued, the consequences would be catastrophic for the region, for the credibility of the United Nations and, above all, for Somalis themselves.⁶³

The representative of Somalia wholeheartedly endorsed the third option presented by the Secretary-General and suggested that the Council should take the following three actions: implement already decided-upon measures, such as the deployment of AMISOM; find an acceptable formula to move Somalia forward in both the political and security spheres; and emphasize the need for humanitarian assistance.⁶⁴

The representatives of South Africa and France emphasized that neither the status quo nor withdrawal were viable options and hoped that the Council would seriously examine the third option laid out by the Special Representative.⁶⁵ The representative of Panama held that a lack of action would jeopardize the Council's credibility.⁶⁶ The representative of Italy believed that a multi-track approach encompassing the political, security and humanitarian spheres was the only way forward.⁶⁷ A number of speakers called for the strengthening of UNPOS.⁶⁸

Several representatives expressed appreciation for the role of AMISOM and urged the international community to increase its financial and logistical support to that force. Many speakers also urged African troop-contributing countries to deploy their promised troops without delay. The representatives of China, South Africa and the Russian Federation believed that the United Nations should eventually replace AMISOM.⁶⁹ A number of speakers underlined the need for contingency planning for a United Nations peacekeeping operation in Somalia.⁷⁰ While believing that the deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation remained the paramount goal, the representative of Italy expressed support for the strengthening of AMISOM.⁷¹ Several speakers supported the proposal for a technical assessment mission to Somalia.⁷²

The representative of Belgium, however, did not believe that a United Nations peacekeeping force was possible under the current circumstances.⁷³ The representatives of Panama and the Congo agreed and said that the Council should consider either a multinational force or a peacekeeping operation.⁷⁴

A majority of speakers expressed concern at the deteriorating humanitarian situation and urged all parties to cooperate with humanitarian relief agencies and facilitate their access. Referring to continued violations of the arms embargo, several representatives

Welcomed the briefing it had received on 17 December 2007 from the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Somalia;

Reaffirmed its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia;

Welcomed the appointment of the new Prime Minister of Somalia;

Expressed its deep concern at the deteriorating humanitarian situation, aggravated by the prevailing security conditions in Somalia, and emphasized again the need for strengthened efforts to provide humanitarian relief assistance to Somalia;

Demanded that all parties in Somalia ensured unfettered access for all humanitarian assistance to vulnerable populations;

Reiterated its strong support for AMISOM, called on all Somali parties to cooperate fully with it, urged again the international community to provide financial resources, personnel, equipment and services for the full deployment of AMISOM, and repeated its request that the Secretary-General consult with the African Union Commission on what further support might be provided to AMISOM;

Reiterated its request that the Secretary-General develop the existing contingency plans for the possible deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation to succeed AMISOM.

4. The situation concerning Rwanda

Decision of 20 March 2007 (5650th meeting): resolution 1749 (2007)

At the 5650th meeting of the Security Council, on 20 March 2007, the representative of Rwanda was invited to participate and a statement was made by the representative of Indonesia. The President (South Africa) then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1749 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, inter alia, decided to terminate with immediate effect the measures imposed by paragraph 11 of resolution 1011 (1995) and decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

After the adoption of the resolution, the representative of Indonesia, as Chair of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 918 (1994) concerning Rwanda, welcomed the measure, which was a follow-up to the recommendation of the Committee on the need to terminate the measures imposed by paragraph 11 of resolution 1011 (1995), which required that States that export arms or related material destined for use by the Government of Rwanda notify the Committee of such shipments. He also noted that the resolution reflected positive developments in Rwanda and the Great Lakes region.²

5. The situation in Burundi

Decision of 21 May 2004 (4975th meeting): resolution 1545 (2004)

At its 4975th meeting,¹ on 21 May 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on Burundi.² In his report, the Secretary-General observed that significant political progress had been made towards ending hostilities in Burundi and only one of the armed groups, Forces nationales de libération (Palipehutu-FNL) the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu- Agathon Rwasa, remained outside the peace process. He noted that the African Union, with the support of troops provided by Ethiopia, Mozambique and South Africa, had made a significant impact on the peace process by deploying the African Mission in Burundi before the conclusion of a comprehensive ceasefire. He recalled that, in view of the serious financial and logistical difficulties it had encountered, the African Union had requested the assistance of the United Nations in taking over its peacekeeping presence in Burundi, a request which had been strongly supported by the Government. As a sustainable peace in Burundi was necessary for long-term stability in the Great Lakes region and would have a positive impact on the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the work of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC), he recommended that the Council deploy a multidimensional United Nations peacekeeping operation to support the peace process in Burundi. He recalled that the elections were supposed to be held in less than eight months and he stressed that if the United Nations were going to expand its presence in the country, then much work would be required in a very short amount of time. That work would include the necessary acceleration of the disarmament, demobilization, reinsertion and reintegration process; the priority of bringing FNL into the peace process; and dealing with the question of national reconciliation, particularly the core problems of impunity and the “horrendous abuses of human rights” that had been committed by all sides to the conflict.

The representatives of Burundi and the Chairperson of the African Union were invited to participate in the discussion. The Secretary-General was also present.

The President (Pakistan) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;³ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1545 (2004) by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, inter alia:

Decided to authorize the deployment of a peacekeeping operation in Burundi called the United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB);

Decided that ONUB would be headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General who chaired the Implementation Monitoring Committee of the Arusha Agreement, and would initially be composed of existing African Mission in Burundi forces;

Decided further that ONUB should consist of a maximum of 5,650 military personnel, including 200 observers and 125 staff officers, up to 120 civilian police personnel, as well as the appropriate civilian personnel;

Requested the Secretary-General to conduct all the activities of the United Nations system in Burundi and to facilitate the coordination with other national, regional and international actors, in particular the African Union, of activities in support of the transition process, while ensuring that ONUB personnel gave special attention to issues related to gender equality, as well as to the specific needs of children;

Requested further the Secretary-General to conclude agreements with States neighbouring Burundi to enable ONUB forces to cross their respective borders in pursuit of armed combatants;

Urged the international financial institutions and the donor community to continue to contribute to the economic development of Burundi;

Decided that ONUB should carry out its mandate in close cooperation with the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular concerning monitoring and prevention of movements of combatants across the border between Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as well as the implementation of the disarmament and demobilization programmes.

¹ During this period, in addition to the meetings covered in this section, the Council held a number of meetings in private with the troop-contributing countries to the United Nations Operation in Burundi (UNOB), pursuant to resolution 1353 (2001), annex II, sections A and B. The meetings were held on 24 November 2004 (5088th), 23 May 2005 (5182nd), 28 November 2005 (5310th), 27 June 2006 (5475th), and 21 December 2006 (5604th).

Decision of 15 August 2004 (5021st meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5021st meeting, on 15 August 2004, the President (Russian Federation) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned with the utmost firmness the massacre of refugees from the Democratic Republic of the Congo which occurred on the territory of Burundi, in Gatumba, on 13 August 2004;

Requested the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Burundi, in close contact with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Democratic Republic of the Congo, to establish the facts and report on them to the Council as quickly as possible;

Called upon the authorities of Burundi and of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to cooperate actively so that the perpetrators and those responsible for those crimes be brought to justice without delay;

Called upon all States in the region to ensure that the territorial integrity of their neighbours was respected;

Recalled in this respect the Declaration on the principles of good-neighbourly relations and cooperation adopted in New York on 25 September 2003;

Requested ONUB and MONUC to offer their assistance to the Burundian and Congolese authorities with a view to facilitating the investigation and to strengthening the security of vulnerable populations.

Decision of 1 December 2004 (5093rd meeting):
resolution 1577 (2004)

At its 5093rd meeting,⁵ on 1 December 2004, the Council included in its agenda the second report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB).⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that steady progress had been observed in the peace process, and major developments had been seen in the decision by the majority of Burundian parties to extend the transitional period under the existing arrangements for at least six months, the adoption of a clear electoral calendar and the adoption of a post-transition constitution to be put to a popular referendum. He expressed concern about, inter alia, the major political and social tensions; the delay in adopting key legislation; the continuing refusal of FNL to join the peace process; the extent of human rights violations; and the culture of impunity. He stressed the need to urgently engender regional cooperation and welcomed the forthcoming summit of the International Conference on the Great Lakes. The Secretary-General also reported to the Council about the report on the joint investigation by ONUB and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights⁷ into the massacre on 13 August of 152 Congolese refugees at the Gatumba refugee camp near the border to the Democratic Republic of the Congo. He noted that despite the extensive investigation, there was no clear evidence of who had organized the atrocity, although investigators believed that FNL had participated in the attack, but was likely not alone. A national investigation was still ongoing.

Statements were made by the representatives of France, Germany, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States.⁸

The representatives of France, Germany, Spain and the United Kingdom advocated for breaking the cycle of human rights violations and impunity in Burundi. These speakers welcomed the intention of the Government of Burundi to refer the Gatumba massacre to the International Criminal Court following its own internal investigations, and welcomed the support of the Council for the efforts being made by States to end impunity, which included efforts made in cooperation with international institutions and tribunals, notably the International Criminal Court.⁹

The representative of the United States reiterated that it was the policy of the Government of the United States to ensure that its citizens, including members of its armed forces participating in peace operations, were protected from criminal prosecutions or other assertion of jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court. He added that his delegation supported the resolution based on the understanding that it in no way directed, encouraged or authorized ONUB to cooperate with or support the Court, and that it did not change the existing mandate of ONUB regarding the investigation of violations of humanitarian law.¹⁰

The President (Algeria) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹¹ it was adopted unanimously as resolution 1577 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that the mandate of ONUB, as defined in its resolution 1545 (2004), should be extended until 1 June 2005;

Urged all the Governments and parties concerned in the region to denounce the use of and incitement to violence, to condemn unequivocally violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law, and actively to cooperate with ONUB and MONUC and with efforts of States aimed at ending impunity;

Requested ONUB and MONUC to continue to provide their assistance, within their mandate, to the Burundian and Congolese authorities, with a view to facilitating the completion of the investigation into the Gatumba massacre and to strengthening the security of vulnerable populations;

Requested the Secretary-General to keep it informed on a regular basis of developments in the situation in Burundi, the implementation of the Arusha Agreement, the execution of the ONUB mandate and the action taken by the Burundian authorities following the Council's recommendations in the fight against impunity, and to submit a report on these developments every three months.

Decision of 14 March 2005 (5141st meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5141st meeting, on 14 March 2005, the Council included in its agenda the third report of the Secretary-General on ONUB.¹² In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the six-month extension of the transitional period that had begun on 1 November had allowed the Burundian parties to advance the peace process despite some delays in the electoral calendar. The Transitional Government had passed a number of important laws, including one establishing a National Truth and Reconciliation Commission. He also noted other progress, including the imminent referendum on a new constitution, the preparation for elections, and the commencement of the demobilization, disarmament and reintegration process. He expressed concern about considerable political tensions in the country, as well as the extent of human rights violations and the culture of impunity. He also underlined the importance of continuing the same level of regional and international engagement to ensure the sustainability of peace after the elections.

The representative of Burundi was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Brazil) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the approval by the Burundian people of the post-transitional Constitution, through the referendum of 28 February 2005 whose final results had just been declared;

Called upon all Burundians to remain committed to the course of national reconciliation, for further steps remained to be taken;

Invited in particular the political leadership in the country to work together towards the common goal of holding, expeditiously, local and national elections that were free and fair;

Encouraged the donor community to continue providing its assistance to that end.

Decision of 23 May 2005 (5184th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5184th meeting, on 23 May 2005, the representative of Burundi was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Denmark) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Took note with satisfaction of the declaration of 15 May 2005 made by the President of Burundi and by the leader of Palipehutu-FNL, in particular the commitment by both parties to immediately cease hostilities, agree within a month on a permanent ceasefire, and negotiate without disturbing the electoral process;

Shared the understanding that this declaration was a first step that should allow FNL to be rapidly integrated, in a negotiated manner, into the transitional process currently in progress in Burundi;

Commended the efforts of States of the Regional Initiative, as well as those made by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, to bring the peace and national reconciliation process in Burundi to a successful conclusion;

Reiterated that bringing an end to the climate of impunity in Burundi and the Great Lakes region was essential to that process and urged all Burundian parties to exert greater efforts to ensure success of the transition, national reconciliation and stability of the country in the longer term.

Decision of 31 May 2005 (5193rd meeting):
resolution 1602 (2005)

At its 5193rd meeting, on 31 May 2005, the Council included in its agenda the fourth report of the Secretary-General on ONUB.¹⁵ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that while there had been important advances, progress in the peace process had been slow, resulting in a further extension of the transitional period, and the process of reform had not yet become irreversible. What was required was the necessary political will of the Burundian parties to conclude the transitional process and to ensure that the electoral calendar was adhered to and that elections were carried out in a peaceful environment. He joined the Heads of State of the Regional Initiative in endorsing the efforts of the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania to facilitate an agreement with FNL. He expressed concern about the continuing political tensions, atmosphere of impunity and the devastating debt burden. He pointed out the contribution of ONUB to the progress achieved in the peace process and recommended the extension of its mandate.

The representative of Burundi was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Denmark) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹⁶ it was adopted unanimously as resolution 1602 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of ONUB until 1 December 2005;

Called upon all Burundian parties to exert greater efforts to ensure success of the transition, national reconciliation and stability of the country in the longer term, in particular by refraining from any actions which might affect the cohesion of the Arusha Agreement process;

Requested the Secretary-General to continue to keep it informed in his reports on the situation in Burundi of actions taken in the fight against impunity.

Decision of 20 June 2005 (5207th meeting):
resolution 1606 (2005)

At its 5203rd meeting, on 15 June 2005, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 11 March 2005 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the report of the assessment mission on the establishment of an international judicial commission of inquiry for Burundi.¹⁷ In the report, the assessment mission recommended the establishment of a twin mechanism: a non-judicial accountability mechanism in the form of a truth commission, and a judicial accountability mechanism in the form of a special chamber within the court system of Burundi. It also pointed out that the United Nations could no longer engage in establishing commissions of inquiry and then disregard their recommendations without seriously undermining the credibility of the Organization in promoting justice and the rule of law. It proposed, inter alia, a comprehensive approach to the pursuit of truth and justice by the United Nations; the engagement of the Secretary-General in negotiations with the Government of Burundi on the practical implementation of the proposals; and a broad-based, genuine and transparent process of consultation with a range of national actors and civil society to incorporate the views of the people of Burundi.

The Council then heard briefings by the Assistant Secretary-General for Legal Affairs and the Minister of Justice of Burundi, following which all Council members made statements.

The Assistant Secretary-General for Legal Affairs noted the background to the request for the establishment of an international judicial commission of inquiry, which included the four other international commissions established between 1993 and 1995, three of which had been at the request of the Council. All of those four commissions had been limited to the events of 1993, the coup d'état, the assassination of the President and the massacres that followed, but had not addressed the cycle of inter-ethnic killings that went back to the 1960s. Therefore, he stressed that the demands for the establishment of a commission of inquiry whose temporal jurisdiction extended over four decades of Burundi's recent history were an appeal for fairness in establishing and recounting the historical truth and putting the 1993 massacres in a broad historical perspective. He detailed, inter alia, the proposed mandate and composition of the truth commission as well as the proposed legal basis under Burundian law and composition of the special chamber. He also called for international funding to the accountability mechanism and suggested the Council to mandate the Secretary-General to engage in negotiations with the Government of Burundi on the practical implementation of these proposals.¹⁸

The representative of Burundi expressed support for the recommendations of the assessment mission, which had met the dual concerns of the political negotiators in Arusha and of the people of Burundi as a whole to establish the truth, and to bring the guilty to justice and punish them. However, he maintained that the version of the truth commission did not “highlight sufficiently the aspect of reconciliation”. He, therefore, requested that the Security Council give priority to the ongoing discussions on national reconciliation as well as to specify the financing modalities for the twin mechanism. There was also a need to undertake a broad-based consultation involving all sectors of society in order to sound out the people of Burundi and encourage them to support the new truth and justice mechanisms.¹⁹

The majority of the speakers endorsed the recommendations of the assessment mission and supported the Security Council authorizing the Secretary-General to begin negotiations with the Government of Burundi to implement those recommendations. Most of the representatives welcomed the determination of the Government of Burundi to eradicate the culture of impunity. Some speakers also underlined the importance of the contribution of the Great Lakes region countries to the peace process in Burundi.

At its 5207th meeting, on 20 June 2005, the Council again included in its agenda the letter dated 11 March 2005 from the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the assessment mission.²⁰ The representative of Burundi was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (France) drew attention to a draft resolution;²¹ it was then adopted unanimously as resolution 1606 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General to initiate negotiations with the Government and consultations with all Burundian parties concerned on how to implement his recommendations, and to report to the Council by 30 September 2005 on details of implementation, including costs, structures and time frame;

Decided to remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 30 August 2005 (5252nd meeting): statement by the President

At the 5252nd meeting, on 30 August 2005, the representative of Burundi was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Japan) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²² by which the Council, inter alia:

Acknowledged the election of Pierre Nkurunziza as President of the Republic of Burundi, on 19 August 2005;

Paid tribute to the spirit of peace and dialogue demonstrated by the Burundian people throughout the transitional period, and commended them for their encouraging participation in the electoral process;

Called on all parties to respect the will of the Burundian people, the elected Government and the commitments agreed during the transitional process;

Encouraged the new authorities to continue on the course of stability and national reconciliation and to promote social concord;

Reaffirmed in this regard that it was essential to bring an end to the climate of impunity;

Commended the critical contribution of the Regional Initiative for Peace in Burundi, the African Union and the United Nations Operation in Burundi made to the peace process;

Called upon all international partners of Burundi, including the States of the Regional Initiative and the main donors, to remain committed, and encouraged them to agree with the Burundian authorities on the most appropriate framework to coordinate their support to reforms currently under way and to the consolidation of peace.

Decision of 22 September 2005 (5268th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5268th meeting, on 22 September 2005, the Council included in its agenda the special report of the Secretary-General on ONUB.²³ In his report, the Secretary-General welcomed the successful conduct of the national elections, the inauguration of a democratically elected President and the conclusion of the transitional process. He congratulated the new President of Burundi on his election and encouraged him to continue to adhere to the principles of ethnic and political inclusivity. He maintained that despite the promising contacts between the Transitional Government and FNL, negotiations had not produced tangible results. He pointed out the significant challenges to the new Government, particularly the restoration of peace and stability as well as the need for continuing negotiations with FNL to conclude a comprehensive ceasefire. Finally, he recommended the early establishment of an international support mechanism as a partners' forum for Burundi. He stated that he would provide recommendations on the size and mandate of ONUB in the post-transitional phase by 15 November, but he did not anticipate an immediate reduction in the mission's military strength, although the civilian component would undergo necessary adjustments.

The representative of Burundi was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Philippines) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Took note of the Secretary-General's proposal to establish a partners' forum as an international support mechanism; also took note of the declaration adopted on 13 September 2005 in New York during the summit on Burundi;

Welcomed the decision to establish a forum of Burundi's partners and encouraged the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to conclude discussions with all concerned partners in order to establish the forum as soon as possible;

Reiterated its call to the donor community to pursue bilateral and multilateral efforts to support the country.

Decision of 30 November 2005 (5311th meeting): resolution 1641 (2005)

At its 5311th meeting, on 30 November 2005, the Council included in its agenda the fifth report of the Secretary-General on ONUB.²⁵ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that, despite the achievements made, the overall situation in Burundi remained very fragile. He maintained that the immediate and most urgent priority was to ensure that the armed conflict with FNL was brought to an end and suggested that the Council and the region might wish to give due consideration to the use of targeted measures against those among the FNL leaders who continued to obstruct a peaceful solution. He informed Council members about, inter alia, security sector reform; the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process; the economic and social crisis; United Nations assistance in the establishment of the truth and reconciliation commission and special chamber; and the humanitarian situation. On the question of the pace of the withdrawal for ONUB, he cautioned against a hasty or premature international disengagement and stressed the need to ensure that the recent gains achieved by the Burundian people were not jeopardized.

The President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution²⁶ and a letter dated 23 November 2005 from the representative of Burundi addressed to the President of the Security Council.²⁷ The Council heard a briefing by the Foreign Minister of Burundi.

The representative of Burundi affirmed that, with respect to security, there was peace throughout the country except for a few pockets, but he noted that FNL had refused to engage in talks to join all of the other people of Burundi on the path to reconstruction and development. He detailed the security and economic situation of the country and stressed the urgent need to financially strengthen multilateral agencies, including United Nations agencies, so that they could shift from humanitarian support to development support. He affirmed that a joint analysis by the Government of Burundi and ONUB had led to a decision to recommend a gradual disengagement, in an orderly manner, beginning on 1 January 2006. Finally, he recommended that the next mandate of ONUB focus on monitoring the borders between Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo; support for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process and reform of the security sector; and support for human rights, transitional justice and demining.²⁸

The draft resolution was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1641 (2005) by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia, decided to extend the mandate of ONUB until 15 January 2006 and to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 21 December 2005 (5341st meeting):
resolution 1650 (2005)

At its 5341st meeting, on 21 December 2005, the Council again included in its agenda the fifth report of the Secretary-General on ONUB.²⁹ The representative of Burundi was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (United Kingdom) again drew the attention of the Council to the letter dated 23 November 2005 from the representative of Burundi,³⁰ and to a draft resolution.³¹ The draft resolution was then adopted unanimously as resolution 1650 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of ONUB until 1 July 2006;

Authorized the temporary redeployment of military and civilian police personnel among ONUB and MONUC and requested in this regard the Secretary-General to begin consultations with the countries contributing military and civilian police personnel to those missions;

Underlined that any personnel redeployed should continue to be counted against the authorized ceiling on military and civilian personnel of the mission from which they were being transferred, and that any such transfer should not have the effect of extending the deployment of personnel after the expiration of the mandate of their original mission, unless the Council decided otherwise;

Urged the Government to complete the implementation of the programme of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration;

Urged the international partners for the development of Burundi, including the concerned bodies of the United Nations, to continue to provide their support for the reconstruction of the country, particularly through an active participation in the donors conference to be organized in early 2006;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 23 March 2006 (5394th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5394th meeting, on 23 March 2006, the Council included in its agenda the sixth report of the Secretary-General on ONUB.³² In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the Government had focused its initial steps on enhancing longer-term prospects for the people of Burundi, and had put forward an ambitious legislative programme. Nonetheless, he cautioned that the country still faced acute humanitarian and social crises and an extremely fragile security and economic situation. He expressed the view that a multifaceted approach was needed to resolve the long-standing FNL question. He encouraged the leaders of the Regional Peace Initiative for Burundi and of the facilitation of the Burundi peace process to reinvigorate their support for the peace process to bring it to a conclusion. He underlined that the plan to withdraw ONUB from Burundi by 31 December 2006 had been developed in consultation with the Government, following its specific and strong request for the early disengagement of the United Nations peacekeeping presence.

The representative of Burundi was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Argentina) made a statement on behalf of the Council,³³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the statements recently made by the leader of the Forces nationales de libération, Agathon Rwasa, in Dar es Salaam, expressing his readiness to negotiate with a view to put a final end to violence;

Urged both parties to seize this opportunity for negotiations with a view to bringing peace to the whole country;

Encouraged the Burundian parties to continue on the course of the reforms agreed in Arusha, while maintaining the spirit of dialogue, consensus and inclusion which had made possible the success of the transition in their country;

Invited the States of the Regional Initiative to continue to work with the Burundian authorities on the consolidation of peace in the country and in the region;

Encouraged the international community — including the relevant United Nations agencies — to continue to support the Burundian authorities following the disengagement of ONUB in the long term.

Decision of 30 June 2006 (5479th meeting):
resolution 1692 (2006)

At its 5479th meeting, on 30 June 2006, the Council included in its agenda the seventh report of the Secretary-General on ONUB.³⁴ In his report, the Secretary-General welcomed, inter alia, both the decision of FNL to negotiate without preconditions and the Government's decision to engage in talks with the armed group; the signing on 18 June of the Agreement on Principles towards Lasting Peace, Security and Stability in Burundi; and the agreement between the Government of Burundi and the United Nations on the priority peace consolidation areas. He also expressed concern about the increasing national and international criticism directed at the Government's approach towards opposition political parties and media. He, therefore, urged the Government of Burundi to ensure an inclusive and transparent approach to the political decision-making process as well as to uphold freedom of expression, and to remain open to dialogue with civil society, political parties and other stakeholders. Finally, he added that enhancing the capacity of the army and police was urgently required in order to minimize any security vacuum following the departure of the ONUB military contingents. Finally, he welcomed the agreement between the Government and the United Nations on the priority peace consolidation areas that would require continued United Nations support. He encouraged the Security Council to give due consideration to his recommendation to establish a United Nations integrated office in Burundi, which would signal a shift in the focus of United Nations engagement in the country to reflect the positive developments in the peace process. In the meantime, he recommended a final extension of the ONUB mandate until 31 December 2006.

The representative of Burundi was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Denmark) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;³⁵ it was then adopted unanimously as resolution 1692 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of ONUB until 31 December 2006;

Decided to extend until 30 September 2006 the authorization to redeploy temporarily a maximum of one infantry battalion, a military hospital and 50 military observers from ONUB to MONUC, in accordance with resolution 1669 (2006), with the intention of renewing such authorization according to future decisions by the Security Council concerning the renewal of the mandate of MONUC;

Welcomed the intention of the Secretary-General to establish an integrated office of the United Nations in Burundi.

Decision of 25 October 2006 (5554th meeting):
resolution 1719 (2006)

At its 5554th meeting, on 25 October 2006, the Council again included in its agenda the seventh report of the Secretary-General on ONUB and the addendum thereto.³⁶ In the addendum to the report, the Secretary-General outlined a mandate and structure for the proposed United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi (BINUB). He stated that the establishment of the office would enable the international community, through the United Nations, to play an important role in the next critical phase in strengthening national capacity to effectively address the root causes of conflict as well as in the promotion of socioeconomic development.

The representative of Burundi was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Japan) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;³⁷ it was then adopted unanimously as resolution 1719 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General to establish the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi for an initial period of 12 months, commencing on 1 January 2007, to support the Government in its effort towards long-term peace and stability throughout the peace consolidation phase in Burundi;

Called upon the Government of Burundi and Palipehutu-FNL to expeditiously implement in good faith the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement which they signed at Dar es Salaam on 7 September 2006 and to pursue their efforts to resolve outstanding issues in a spirit of cooperation.

³⁸ At its 5678th meeting, held in private on 21 May 2007, the Council invited the Executive Representative of the Secretary-General for Burundi. The members of the Council heard a briefing by the representative of Norway Secretary-General on BINUB.³⁹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that ONUB had been terminated and BINUB formally established since his last report. He noted that the overall situation remained fragile, but that the Government had taken some positive steps, including the improvement of relations with the media and civil society; the commitment to improve the human rights situation and fight corruption; and the pledge by the ruling party's new leadership to work in an inclusive and cooperative spirit with all political parties. He welcomed, inter alia, the revival of the Economic Community of the Great Lakes Countries, Burundi's formal accession to the East African Community; and the engagement of the Government of Burundi with the Peacebuilding Commission. He also expressed concern about the lack of resources and limited capacities to meet the high expectations of the people of Burundi for immediate peace dividends, as well as the current impasse in implementing the comprehensive ceasefire agreement. He stated that the Government's commitment to moving the process forward and to accommodating FNL demands was commendable.

The President (United States) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 13 February 2007 from the representative of France,⁴⁰ and made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the establishment of the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi and the support it provided to the peace consolidation process;

Urged the Government to intensify its efforts on all aspects of reform of the security sector and to address the issue of human rights abuses committed by members of the security services, including by bringing perpetrators to justice and encouraged international partners, including BINUB in accordance with its mandate, to increase their support for this endeavour;

Urged the Government to step up its efforts to combat impunity and to promote and protect human rights;

Deliberations of 28 November 2007 (5786th meeting)

At its 5786th meeting, on 28 November 2007, the Council heard a briefing by the Minister of Safety and Security of South Africa and Facilitator of the Burundi Peace Process, following which all Council members made statements.

The Facilitator of the Burundi Peace Process informed the Council of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement that had been signed by the Government of Burundi and FNL, but said that a number of problems had emerged. He noted that a Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism had been established with the participation of FNL, which had later withdrawn. In June there had been a meeting between the President of Burundi and the head of FNL, in which a number of steps had been agreed, including the return of FNL to Burundi. However, there had been a split in FNL that had seen a number of combatants abandoning their positions and attempting to join the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, as well as attacks on those trying to leave. He called for help on behalf of the African Union and the Regional Initiative from the international community and the United Nations for the process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, particularly of those FNL members who had already made themselves available, and to put pressure on the leadership of FNL to fully implement the ceasefire agreement.⁴²

Most speakers welcomed the establishment of a new National Unity Government on 14 November 2007 as well as the resumption of the work of the parliament. The majority of the representatives called for, inter alia, the full implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement, and for FNL to rejoin the peace process, specifically to retake their place within the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism without delay or preconditions. Several speakers commended the efforts of the Government of South Africa, the Regional Peace Initiative, the Special African Union Task Force, the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi, and the Facilitator of the Burundi Peace Process. A number of speakers expressed support for the draft statement to the press on Burundi prepared by the delegation of France.

The representative of South Africa called on the Security Council and the international community to act in unison in support of the Regional Peace Initiative and its programmes as well as on the international community to exert pressure on FNL to rejoin the peace process. He also pointed out that it was important that the process continued to receive the full support of the Security Council, in line with Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations.⁴³

The representative of the Congo believed that the difficulties besetting the subregion were such that the risk of a new outbreak of violence would also have a collateral effect on neighbouring countries and could even undo the efforts of the international community there, including in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. As a result, echoed by the representative of China, he supported the appeal for facilitation assistance.⁴⁴

resolution 1791 (2007)

At its 5793rd meeting, on 6 December 2007, the Council included in its agenda the second report of the Secretary-General on BINUB.⁴⁵ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the political situation had deteriorated considerably during the previous period, due to a political crisis triggered by tensions in the ruling CNDD-FDD party and the detention of its former Chairman. The deterioration of the overall security situation and the continued human rights violations were also of concern. Nonetheless, the appointment of an inclusive Government on 14 November as well as the positive outcome of the dialogue between the President of Burundi and the Union pour le progrès national and the Front pour la démocratie au Burundi were encouraging developments in the peace consolidation process. He reiterated that it was imperative that FNL resume its participation in the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism without delay or preconditions. He encouraged the Security Council and the African Union to explore additional ways to support the process and expressed the belief that BINUB needed to play a more robust role in support of the peace process between the Government of Burundi and FNL, in full coordination with regional and international partners.

The Council heard a briefing by the representative of Norway, Chairman of the Burundi configuration of the Peacebuilding Commission.⁴⁶

The Chairman informed Council members that the Peacebuilding Commission had concluded the development of a strategic framework for peacebuilding in Burundi and adopted a monitoring and tracking mechanism for that framework. He also recommended that the Council closely monitor the situation in Burundi, and that it consider, if necessary, taking appropriate action with a view to the effective implementation of the ceasefire by the set date.⁴⁷

At its 5809th meeting, on 19 December 2007, the Council again included in its agenda the second report of the Secretary-General on BINUB.⁴⁸

The representative of Burundi was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Italy) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁴⁹ it was then adopted unanimously as resolution 1791 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend until 31 December 2008 the mandate of BINUB as set out in resolution 1719 (2006);

Encouraged the authorities and political actors in Burundi to continue their dialogue;

Urged Palipehutu-FNL to return to the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism without delay or preconditions and to immediately release all children associated with it;

Encouraged the Government of Burundi to pursue its efforts regarding peace consolidation challenges.

6. The situation in Sierra Leone

Decision of 30 March 2004 (4938th meeting): resolution 1537 (2004)

At its 4938th meeting,¹ on 30 March 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) dated 19 March 2004.² In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the carefully calibrated exit strategy for UNAMSIL that had been approved by the Security Council after the national elections in 2002 had yielded significant benefits for the country. In particular, the extended presence of the Mission had created a stable security environment and given the Government the opportunity to consolidate the peace and promote national recovery. He noted several achievements that included the extension of State authority throughout the country, the completion of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, the successful launching of the Special Court, the completion of the work of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and the successful resettlement of internally displaced persons and returnees. Progress had also been made in implementing the benchmarks that were intended to build the capacity of the Government to assume responsibility for national security and recovery, and make it possible for UNAMSIL to begin disengaging without putting peace at risk. However, progress in many of those areas remained fragile, and the serious shortfalls facing the armed forces in logistics and infrastructure meant that it was not possible for the Government to assume effective responsibility for the country's external security by the time the UNAMSIL mandate was terminated in December. Therefore, on the basis of the findings of an interdepartmental assessment mission led by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations in Sierra Leone from 9 to 19 February 2004, the Secretary-General recommended the establishment of a residual United Nations peacekeeping operation in Sierra Leone after the termination of the mandate of UNAMSIL on 31 December 2004 to facilitate a seamless transition to the follow-on mission that would provide more time to complete key residual tasks of UNAMSIL, allow the Special Court to complete its work and give the country extra space to further stabilize and recover.

The representative of Sierra Leone was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;³ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1537 (2004), by which the Council, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General, inter alia:

² S/2004/228, submitted pursuant to resolution 1492 (2003).

Decided that the mandate of UNAMSIL should be extended for a period of six months, until 30 September 2004;

Decided that a residual UNAMSIL presence would remain in Sierra Leone, for an initial period of six months from 1 January 2005, reduced from the December 2004 level of 5,000 troops by 28 February 2005 to a new ceiling of 3,250 troops, 141 military observers and 80 United Nations civilian police personnel, and requested the Secretary-General to proceed with planning on the basis of the recommendations in his report;

Requested the Secretary-General to provide by 15 September 2004 a progress report, including progress made in the work of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, progress in resolving the conflict in Liberia, further increases in the capability of the Sierra Leone Police and armed forces, and strengthened cooperation among United Nations missions in the subregion;

Requested UNAMSIL to share its experience with the United Nations Mission in Liberia and the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire and to carry out its mandate in close liaison with them.

Decision of 17 September 2004 (5037th meeting): resolution 1562 (2004)

At its 5037th meeting, on 17 September 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on UNAMSIL dated 9 September 2004.⁴ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the overall gradual progress and stable political environment in Sierra Leone had continued to facilitate the consolidation of peace in the country, although many challenges remained on the path to achieving long-term stability and recovery, particularly with regard to the security sector, the restoration of the rule of law, and the promotion of human rights and sustainable development. In order to continue with the gradual drawdown of UNAMSIL and to ensure a seamless transition from the current configuration of UNAMSIL to its residual presence in Sierra Leone, the Secretary-General therefore recommended that the mandate of the Mission be extended for a period of nine months, until 30 June 2005, to contribute to the further stabilization of the country and the subregion.

The representative of Sierra Leone was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Spain) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁵ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1562 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, inter alia:

Decided that the mandate of UNAMSIL should be extended until 30 June 2005;

Decided further that the tasks of the residual UNAMSIL presence, which should remain in Sierra Leone for an initial period of six months from 1 January 2005, as set out in paragraph 5 of resolution 1537 (2004) of 30 March 2004, should be the following:

To monitor the overall security situation, to support the Sierra Leone armed forces and police in patrolling the border and diamond-mining areas;

To support the Sierra Leone Police in maintaining internal security; to assist the Sierra Leone Police with its programme of recruitment, training and mentoring designed to strengthen further the capacity and resources of the Police;

To protect United Nations personnel, installations and equipment and ensure the security and freedom of movement of United Nations personnel, within its capabilities and its areas of deployment;

To monitor the repatriation, reception, resettlement and reintegration of Sierra Leonean ex-combatants from abroad;

To monitor, investigate, report and promote the observance of human rights;

To disseminate information on the Mission's mandate and purpose and publicize the Government's primary responsibility for national security;

To monitor progress towards consolidation of State authority throughout the country;

Authorized the residual UNAMSIL presence to use all necessary means to carry out its mandate, within its capabilities and its areas of deployment.

Deliberations of 24 May 2005 (5185th meeting)

At its 5185th meeting, on 24 May 2005, at which no statements were made, the Council heard a briefing from the President of the Special Court for Sierra Leone on the Court's efforts to implement its mandate in accordance with resolution 1315 (2000) and the Agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Sierra Leone. The representative of Sierra Leone was invited to participate in the discussion.

In his briefing, the President of the Special Court for Sierra Leone described the progress made by the Special Court, since the inception of its operations in July 2002, in particular in the areas of personnel, infrastructure, prosecutorial activities and judicial activities, and outlined the challenges ahead, with reference to the issues of funding, security and cooperation of States.⁶

Decision of 30 June 2005 (5219th meeting):
resolution 1610 (2005)

At its 5219th meeting,⁷ on 30 June 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on UNAMSIL dated 26 April 2005.⁸ In his report, the Secretary-General noted that the outstanding challenges in ensuring peace consolidation in Sierra Leone would be best addressed by the Government with the support of United Nations agencies and programmes, as well as bilateral donors, which were most suited for post-conflict capacity-building. Observing that an adjustment in the strategy of the United Nations involvement in Sierra Leone was warranted, he recommended a final extension of the mandate of UNAMSIL. The Secretary-General also indicated that, after the termination of UNAMSIL, a strong United Nations system presence was likely to be needed in Sierra Leone to continue to build peace by enhancing political and economic governance and also the national capacity for conflict prevention.

The representative of Sierra Leone was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 29 June 2005 from the representative of Sierra Leone addressed to the President of the Security Council,⁹ transmitting a letter from the President of Sierra Leone to the Secretary-General, in which he expressed support for a follow-on United Nations presence after the withdrawal of UNAMSIL that would help support the Government in capacity-building and preparing for the elections, as well as in the areas of peace consolidation, governance, development, human rights and security.

The President also drew attention to a draft resolution;¹⁰ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1610 (2005), by which the Council, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General, and acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that the mandate of UNAMSIL should be extended for a final period of six months until 31 December 2005;

Requested the Secretary-General to finalize the necessary planning for an appropriate integrated United Nations system presence in Sierra Leone with the capacity and expertise to coordinate the activities of United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, to cooperate with the donor community, and to continue to support the efforts of the Government of Sierra Leone after UNAMSIL had withdrawn;

Urged the Government of Sierra Leone to continue its efforts to develop an effective police force, armed forces, penal system and independent judiciary;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 31 August 2005 (5254th meeting):
resolution 1620 (2005)

At its 5254th meeting, on 31 August 2005, the Council continued its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General dated 26 April 2005, and the addenda thereto.¹¹ In the second addendum, the Secretary-General recommended the establishment of a United Nations integrated office in Sierra Leone.

The representative of Sierra Leone was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Japan) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹² it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1620 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General to establish the United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone for 12 months beginning on 1 January 2006 with the following tasks:

(a) To assist the Government in: building the capacity of State institutions; developing a national action plan for human rights and establishing the national human rights commission; building the capacity of the National Electoral Commission; enhancing good governance, transparency and accountability of public institutions; strengthening the rule of law; strengthening the Sierra Leonean security sector; promoting a culture of peace, dialogue and participation; developing initiatives for the protection and well-being of youth, women and children;

(b) To liaise with the Sierra Leonean security sector;

(c) To coordinate with United Nations missions and offices and regional organizations in West Africa in dealing with cross-border challenges such as the illicit movement of small arms, human trafficking and smuggling and illegal trade in natural resources;

(d) To coordinate with the Special Court for Sierra Leone; requested the Secretary-General to continue planning for security for the Special Court for Sierra Leone and to keep the Council regularly informed of progress with establishing the United Nations integrated office in Sierra Leone, and thereafter with the implementation of the resolution; decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 20 December 2005 (5334th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5334th meeting, on 20 December 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on UNAMSIL dated 12 December 2005.¹³ In his report, the Secretary-General provided an assessment of the situation in Sierra Leone as UNAMSIL departed, an analysis of the Mission's accomplishments and exit strategy as well as an update on preparations for the establishment of the United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone (UNIOSIL). The Secretary-General reported that administrative preparations for setting up UNIOSIL, which would become operational on 1 January 2006, were in the final stages, as the budget and staffing proposals, as well as logistical and security arrangements were being finalized.

All members of the Council and the representative of Sierra Leone made statements, and the Council heard a briefing from the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Sierra Leone on the situation in the country on the eve of the departure of UNAMSIL.

In his briefing, the Special Representative analysed the Mission's exit strategy, its achievements and shortcomings, emphasizing that the Mission had completed most of the tasks assigned to it, including the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of over 72,000 combatants, the return of over half a million refugees, the restoration of Government authority throughout the country, and the retraining and restructuring of the country's security apparatus. He also noted that organizational preparations for the 2008 elections were ongoing and he expressed hope that the holding of a free and credible poll would constitute a key benchmark in the achievement of long-term stability in Sierra Leone.¹⁴

In their statements, members of the Council, inter alia, welcomed the successful completion of the mandate of UNAMSIL; expressed support for the innovative approach applied by UNAMSIL, including its exit strategy based on benchmarks, the concept of an integrated mission and the coordination mechanism for subregional peacekeeping forces; hoped that the lessons that could be drawn from the peacekeeping experience in Sierra Leone could enrich the body of best practices for the design and management of peacekeeping operations; stressing that Sierra Leone was entering a new phase towards stabilization and sustainable peace, welcomed the establishment of UNIOSIL; recognized the importance of a cohesive and long-term approach towards Sierra Leone and urged the international community to continue to assist the country during the peacebuilding phase, particularly during the elections. With respect to the subregion, they welcomed the increased cooperation between the United Nations missions and entities as well as the regional efforts by the Economic Community of West African States and the Mano River Union.

At the end of the discussion, the President (United Kingdom) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Commended UNAMSIL for its invaluable contribution over the last six years to democracy and prosperity;

Noted with satisfaction the innovations in the Mission's methods of operation that might prove useful best practice in making other United Nations peacekeeping operations more effective and efficient;

Encouraged Sierra Leone's development partners to continue their support;

Encouraged all States, particularly States in the subregion, to cooperate fully with the Special Court for Sierra Leone and to provide it with the necessary financial resources;

Continued to emphasize the importance of a regional approach to the countries of West Africa.

Decision of 16 June 2006 (5467th meeting): resolution 1688 (2006)

¹³ S/2005/777, submitted pursuant to resolution 1620 (2005).

At its 5467th meeting, on 16 June 2006, the Council included in its agenda letters dated 31 March and 15 June 2006 from the representatives of the Netherlands¹⁶ and the United Kingdom,¹⁷ respectively, addressed to the President of the Security Council. In his letter, the representative of the Netherlands informed the President that, after receiving a letter from the President of the Special Court for Sierra Leone seeking the consent of the Government of the Netherlands to hold the trial of Charles Taylor in the Netherlands, his Government had informed the Special Court that it was willing to host the trial of Charles Taylor, provided that a few conditions, outlined in a letter from the Government of the Netherlands to the Special Court for Sierra Leone dated 29 March 2006, were met. By his letter, the representative of the United Kingdom transmitted a ministerial statement of 15 June 2006 by which the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs agreed to allow former President Charles Taylor, if convicted and should circumstances require, to enter the United Kingdom to serve any sentence imposed by the Court.

A statement was made by the representative of the Russian Federation.¹⁸ The President (Denmark) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United Kingdom;¹⁹ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1688 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Took note of the intention of the President of the Special Court to authorize a Trial Chamber to exercise its functions away from the seat of the Special Court;

Welcomed the willingness of the Netherlands to host the Special Court and the willingness of the International Court of Justice to allow the use of its premises for the detention and trial of former President Taylor by the Special Court, including any appeal; requested all States to cooperate to that end, and encouraged them to ensure that any evidence or witnesses were, upon the request of the Special Court, promptly made available to the Special Court;

Requested the Secretary-General to assist, as a matter of priority, in the conclusion of all necessary legal and practical arrangements, including for the transfer of former President Taylor to the Special Court;

¹⁷ S/2006/406.

¹⁸ The representatives of Liberia and Sierra Leone were invited to participate in the meeting, but did not make statements.

¹⁹ S/2006/405.

Requested the Special Court, with the assistance of the Secretary-General and relevant States, to make the trial proceedings accessible to the people of the subregion, including through video link;

Decided that the Special Court should retain exclusive jurisdiction over former President Taylor during his transfer to and presence in the Netherlands in respect of matters within the statute of the Special Court, and that the Netherlands should not exercise its jurisdiction over former President Taylor except by express agreement with the Special Court; decided further that the Government of the Netherlands should facilitate the implementation of the decision of the Special Court to conduct the trial of former President Taylor in the Netherlands;

Decided that the measures imposed by subparagraph 4 (a) of resolution 1521 (2003) of 22 December 2003 should not apply to former President Taylor for the purposes of any travel related to his trial before the Special Court, as well as any travel related to the execution of the judgment, and also to exempt from the travel ban the travel of any witnesses whose presence at the trial was required;

Decided to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation stated that, although agreeing on the need to hold a trial for Charles Taylor away from the seat of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, his country believed that, for the purposes of the resolution, action under Chapter VII of the Charter was unique and exceptional in nature and did not set a precedent for resolving similar issues.²⁰

Decision of 22 December 2006 (5608th meeting): resolution 1734 (2006)

At its 5608th meeting, on 22 December 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on UNIOSIL dated 28 November 2006.²¹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that, although Sierra Leone continued to make progress in its peacebuilding efforts, the country still faced major challenges which needed the sustained support of the international community, especially in its efforts to address the root causes of the conflict. He added that the successful conduct of the upcoming elections in 2007 and the wide acceptance of the outcome would be important indicators of the sustainability of peace and stability in the country. He therefore recommended the extension of the mandate of UNIOSIL for a further period of six months and an increase of the mission's strength by 5 additional officers and that of the Police Section by 10 additional police officers to ensure effective support for Sierra Leone's security sector in carrying out its election-related responsibilities.

Statements were made by the representatives of the United Kingdom and the Netherlands.²² The President (Qatar) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;²³ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1734 (2006), by which the Council, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNIOSIL, as outlined in resolution 1620 (2005), until 31 December 2007;

Endorsed the increase in the number of personnel of UNIOSIL recommended in paragraph 70 of the report of the Secretary-General of 28 November 2006, for the period from 1 January to 31 October 2007 in order to enhance the support provided by UNIOSIL for the elections and its ability to carry out its functions elsewhere in Sierra Leone;

Requested the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed of progress made in the implementation of the mandate of UNIOSIL and the resolution.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the United Kingdom recognized the huge steps taken by Sierra Leone since the departure of UNAMSIL, underlining in particular the work done by the Special Court for Sierra Leone and the trial of former President Charles Taylor. Noting that the upcoming presidential and parliamentary elections would be crucial towards building a sustainable democracy, he underlined three priority areas in the next year: first, the fight against corruption; second, the civil service reform; and third, the development of clear policies and strategies to tackle poverty and generate economic development.²⁴ The representative of the Netherlands, in his capacity as Chairman of the Sierra Leone configuration of the Peacebuilding Commission, informed the Council that, after the decision of the Commission to include Sierra Leone in its agenda, discussions were undertaken by the Commission at two-week meetings on Sierra Leone. He reported on some key outcomes of the discussion, underlining that a foundation was laid for a comprehensive approach to post-conflict reconstruction and development and for a strong partnership between the Government of Sierra Leone and the international community.²⁵

Deliberations of 8 June 2007 (5690th meeting)

At its 5690th meeting, on 8 June 2007, the Council heard briefings by the President and the Prosecutor of the Special Court for Sierra Leone. Statements were made by all members of the Council and the representatives of Canada, Germany (on behalf of the European Union),²⁶ Nigeria, the Netherlands and Sierra Leone and the Deputy Secretary-General. The President (Belgium) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 7 June 2007 from the representative of Canada addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting, in that State's capacity as Chair of the Management Committee of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, the Court's completion strategy and a summary of the Court's completion budget.²⁷

In his briefing, the President of the Special Court for Sierra Leone updated the Council on the status of the legal proceedings at the Special Court and its completion strategy. He informed the Council that the trial of members of the Civil Defence Force and Armed Forces Revolutionary Council had concluded and a judgement was expected shortly. On the trial of the Revolutionary United Front, he reported that the defence was currently presenting its case and a judgement was expected by June 2008. He further reported that the trial of the former President of Liberia, Charles Taylor, had commenced on 4 June, and it was projected that the trial proceedings would last until November 2008. As for the completion strategy, he stated that the Special Court for Sierra Leone was expected to conclude all its judicial activity, both in Freetown and in The Hague, by the end of 2009. On the continuing challenges facing the Special Court, he stipulated that secure funding was required, as well as cooperation of the international community to negotiate and conclude additional agreements for the enforcement of potential sentences and the relocation of witnesses.²⁸

The Prosecutor of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provided the Council with an overview of the duties of his office, including its accomplishments and future role in the indictment of former President Charles Taylor for war crimes. He also echoed the appeal made by the President of the Special Court, reiterating that the Special Court needed additional resources, and urged Member States to renew their support.²⁹

The Deputy Secretary-General commended the work of the Special Court and noted that this new model of justice would be beneficial to the people of Sierra Leone. Recalling that the Special Court had contributed to the restoration of peace and security in Sierra Leone and the region, she reiterated her request that the international community support the Special Court to ensure the successful completion of its mandate.³⁰

In their statements, recognizing the progress made by the Court in its trials, particularly that of former President Charles Taylor in The Hague, in the fight against impunity, most speakers, inter alia, stressed that it was essential that the international community supported the Special Court and appealed to Member States to respond positively to the calls for financial contributions. The representative of the Russian Federation questioned whether the timeline projecting the end of the trial was realistic considering the hearings had already been delayed.³¹ The representative of the United States stated that the Special Court represented a test of a new model of international justice that had mixed jurisdiction and was seated in the country where the crimes had been committed. Similarly, the representative of France noted that the Special Court had broken new grounds in its communication strategy, coordination with the United Nations Mission in Liberia and cooperation with the International Court of Justice and that it had served as a source of inspiration for the Special Tribunal for Lebanon.³² The representative of Germany, on behalf of the European Union, echoed by the representative of Belgium, noted that the Court was contributing to the development of international criminal law, by instituting landmark proceedings that investigated the use of child soldiers and forced marriages.³³ The representative of Sierra Leone expressed support for the Special Court, and stated that the independence of the Court had been a critical factor in its ability to do its work and reach the people of Sierra Leone. While highlighting a few of the challenges faced by the Court, he stated that for the trial of Charles Taylor in The Hague it was important to ensure the perception of it being independent, as it was taking place on the premises of the International Criminal Court, and that the people of Sierra Leone had the access that they had come to expect to trials being conducted on their behalf.³⁴

Decision of 28 June 2007 (5708th meeting):
statement by the President

At the Council's 5708th meeting, on 28 June 2007, no statements were made. The representative of Sierra Leone was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Belgium) made a statement on behalf of the Council,³⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its strong support for the Special Court;

Particularly noted the contribution of the Special Court to strengthening stability in Sierra Leone and the subregion and bringing an end to impunity; welcomed the commencement of the trial of Charles Taylor on 4 June 2007 in The Hague following the adoption of resolution 1688 (2006);

Acknowledged the Special Court's progress towards achieving its completion strategy;

Emphasized the vital need for further pledges of voluntary contributions in order to allow the Special Court to complete its mandate in a timely manner, and asked all State Members of the United Nations to consider making such pledges;

Urged States to consider supporting the Special Court by entering into appropriate arrangements with the Special Court for witness relocation and enforcement of sentences;

Recognized that further arrangements would be needed to address residual matters after trials and appeals were completed, including issues arising from long-term enforcement of sentences for convicted persons, the future trial of any indictees remaining at large, witness protection and the preservation of the archives of the Special Court;

Commended the important outreach activities of the Special Court in bringing its judicial work to the attention of the people of Sierra Leone.

At its 5804th meeting, on 14 December 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on UNIOSIL dated 4 December 2007.³⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General, on the basis of the findings of a technical assessment mission by the Department for Peacekeeping Operations as well as a request for further assistance from the United Nations by the President of Sierra Leone,³⁷ recommended an extension of the mandate of UNIOSIL for a final period of nine months to enable it to, inter alia, assist the new Government in: supporting the 2008 local elections and constitutional reform; facilitating the engagement of Sierra Leone with the Peacebuilding Commission; strengthening the security sector; assisting in building the capacity of critical State institutions, supporting the reform of the judicial sector; and addressing the root causes of the conflict, as identified by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. The Secretary-General also recommended that UNIOSIL be replaced by a leaner integrated political office, which would focus on carrying forward the peace consolidation process, mobilizing international donor support, supporting the work of the Peacebuilding Commission and the Peacebuilding Fund and completing any residual tasks left over from the mandate of UNIOSIL, in particular promoting national reconciliation and supporting the constitutional reform process.

The Council heard a briefing by the representative of the Netherlands in his capacity as Chairman of the Sierra Leone configuration of the Peacebuilding Commission,³⁸ who reported that the Peacebuilding Commission and the Government of Sierra Leone had adopted a peacebuilding cooperation framework on 12 December 2007. He reported that the framework constituted a major milestone for Sierra Leone as it would guide the work of both the Commission and the Government over the next three years in addressing the challenges and threats most critical to sustaining and consolidating peace in Sierra Leone. Although recognizing that the primary responsibility to address such challenges rested with the people and the Government of Sierra Leone, he called on the Council and the international community to continue supporting the work of Peacebuilding Commission and the implementation of the framework.³⁹

At its 5813th meeting, on 21 December 2007, the Council again included in its agenda the aforementioned report of the Secretary-General. The representative of Sierra Leone made a statement. The President (Italy) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United Kingdom;⁴⁰ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1793 (2007), by which the Council, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNIOSIL, as outlined in resolution 1620 (2005), until 30 September 2008;

Requested the Secretary-General to submit by 31 January 2008, and for the Council's consideration, a completion strategy for UNIOSIL including at least a 20 per cent reduction in staff numbers by 31 March 2008, a continued mission at 80 per cent of the current strength until 30 June 2008, and the termination of the UNIOSIL mandate by 30 September 2008;

Expressed its intention that, on the expiration of its mandate, UNIOSIL should be replaced by a United Nations integrated political office to focus on carrying forward the peacebuilding process, mobilizing international donor support, supporting the work of the Peacebuilding Commission and Fund, and completing any residual tasks left over from the UNIOSIL mandate;

And acting under Chapter VII of the Charter:

Decided to exempt from the measures imposed by paragraph 5 of resolution 1171 (1998) the travel of any witnesses whose presence at trial before the Special Court for Sierra Leone was required.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of Sierra Leone expressed his country's gratitude to the Security Council for responding positively to the request for the extension of the presence of UNIOSIL and also to the recommendation

7. The situation in the Great Lakes region

Deliberations of 27 October 2004 (5065th meeting)

At its 5065th meeting, on 27 October 2004, the Security Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Great Lakes region. No Council members made statements during the meeting.

In his briefing, the Special Representative outlined the steps forward with respect to the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region, and the first summit to be held in the context of the Conference. Organized jointly by the United Nations and the African Union, the objective of the Conference was the adoption of a regional stability, security and development pact.

The Special Representative noted that the preparatory regional process preceding the Conference had yielded several results. There had been an increase in the number of members in the Conference, which now consisted of 11 core members.¹ The enlargement was important for ensuring the consistency and unity of the Conference. A number of priority areas had also emerged as a result of the process, including peace and security, governance and democracy, economic development, regional integration and humanitarian and social issues.

In concluding, he stated that following the Dar es Salaam summit on 19 and 20 November, an inter-ministerial committee would be set up, tasked with creating a programme of action and a protocol to implement the Declaration adopted at the summit. In the light of that protocol and programme of action, the stage would be set for the Nairobi summit to be held in 2005.²

Decision of 27 January 2006 (5359th meeting): resolution 1653 (2006)

At its 5359th meeting, held at the ministerial level on 27 January 2006, the Council included in its agenda the item entitled "Peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region" and a letter dated 18 January 2006 from the Permanent Representative of the United Republic of Tanzania addressed to the Secretary-General.³ All Council members made statements, as did 30 other Member States.⁴ Statements were also made by the Commissioner for Peace and Security of the African Union, and the Commissioner for Development and Humanitarian Aid of the European Commission.⁵

The President (United Republic of Tanzania) drew the attention of the Council to the report of the Secretary-General dated 25 January 2006, regarding the preparations for the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region.⁶ She also drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution.⁷

During the debate, most speakers urged unshakable commitment to the Great Lakes region, stressing that the peace processes would remain fragile for some time, and that the promise of a strong Central Africa risked relapsing into conflict without steadfast international support and economic assistance. At the same time, many speakers called for enhanced cooperation between the Security Council and the Peace and Security Council of the African Union in order to promote and maintain peace and security in the region.

Speakers generally agreed that the regional approach taken by the Security Council was the right one, and that the region's long-term stability required a growing pool of democratic nations with inclusive governments, stable institutions and functioning judiciaries.

Among recent positive developments speakers highlighted were the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region in November 2004 and the resulting Dar es Salaam Declaration, as both a framework for negotiations and an outline of guiding principles for action. Speakers also stressed the importance of implementing the reconstruction plan set out by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Great Lakes Region.

The President, speaking in her capacity as representative of the United Republic of Tanzania, recalled the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, and stressed the need to work together to avoid a repeat of such catastrophes and to create a better future. Collective political will was needed to prevent and resolve conflicts, consolidate peace and build institutions of democratic governance based on the rule of law and respect for human rights. She emphasized that the Security Council was the key partner in promoting and maintaining peace and security in the region, and expressed appreciation at the response and initiatives of the Council to work with the region. Nevertheless, she stressed, residual and new challenges remained. Thus, there was a need to consolidate what had been achieved so far and mobilize the support of the international community in accomplishing those objectives. The newly established Peacebuilding Commission should focus its early attention on the region, as the necessary political environment for irreversible peace was created. She said that the countries of the region wanted to assure the Security Council and other members of the international community of their collective political determination to make the Great Lakes process a practical accomplishment. They were working at the national and international levels to create mechanisms to strengthen mutual confidence and trust as a basis for peace and stability in the region. Similarly, they had embraced democracy and good governance not only as intrinsic values, but also as necessary for their peaceful coexistence and crucial for their development. The desirability of a regional approach in that endeavour could not be overemphasized.⁸

The representative of the Congo said that recent developments had shown that significant progress was being made in terms of peace and security. While stating that the political transition in the Democratic Republic of the Congo was going favourably after the organization of the constitutional referendum, he encouraged all parties there to work tirelessly within the peaceful transition for peace and stability.⁹

The representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo welcomed the partnership that had been created between the Great Lakes States and the international community to build a new regional security order. In the context of efforts undertaken by his government to strengthen domestic security, he appreciated the publication of a list of persons to be subject to sanctions for violating the arms embargo against his country, as well as resolution 1649 (2005), which provided for sanctions against those exploiting natural resources. He stated that his Government wished to request the Council to exert pressure on States to extradite criminals responsible for violations.¹⁰

The representative of Rwanda commended the progress of the political process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and noted that many of the pillars of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement of 1999 had slowly but surely been realized. Instead of confrontation and conflict, States in the region were now exploring avenues of increased cooperation. Nevertheless, the representative stressed, in order to ensure lasting peace, the "unfinished business" of the Lusaka agreement needed to be addressed. There still remained one key impediment to lasting peace — the presence of "genocidal forces" and other armed groups in the region, whose sole purpose was the continued destabilization of the region.¹¹

The representative of Uganda stressed that the most urgent challenge and the biggest obstacle to peace in the Great Lakes region remained the problem of the negative forces, especially the Allied Democratic Forces, the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, the People's Redemption Army, and the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA).¹² The representative of France emphasized that armed groups in the region, whether or not they were a threat to security, were the main cause of suffering; external support to them must be stopped. He also said that the question of protection of civilians was on the minds of all, as women and children remained at the mercy of LRA in northern Uganda. The recent killing of eight Guatemalan peacekeepers serving with MONUC had moreover given the problem a regional dimension.¹³

Many speakers welcomed the establishment of the Peacebuilding Commission pursuant to Security Council resolution 1645 (2005) and General Assembly resolution 60/80, and expressed hope that it would play an important role in peacebuilding and conflict resolution in the Great Lakes region.¹⁴

Following the debate, the draft resolution¹⁵ was adopted unanimously as resolution 1653 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Urged the countries of the Great Lakes region to continue in their collective efforts to develop a subregional approach for promoting good relations, peaceful coexistence, peaceful resolution of disputes as envisaged in the Dar es Salaam Declaration;

Called upon the countries of the region to agree on confidence-building measures based on effective and concrete actions;

Urged all States concerned to take action to bring to justice perpetrators of grave violations of human rights and international humanitarian law and to take appropriate measures of international cooperation and judicial assistance in this regard;

Strongly condemned the activities of militias and armed groups operating in the Great Lakes region;

Called upon all States in the region to deepen their cooperation with a view to putting an end to the activities of illegal armed groups; urged the governments concerned in the region to enhance their cooperation to promote lawful and transparent exploitation of natural resources among themselves and in the region.

Decision of 16 November 2006 (5566th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5566th meeting, on 16 November 2006, the President (Peru) drew the attention of Council members to a letter dated 3 November 2006 from the Permanent Representative of Uganda to the President of the Council, transmitting the agreement on the cessation of hostilities between the Government of Uganda and the Lord's Resistance Army.¹⁶ No statements were made during the meeting. The President made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed efforts aimed at bringing an end to the long-running conflict in northern Uganda; welcomed the cessation of hostilities which took effect on 29 August 2006, and was renewed on 1 November 2006, and stressed the importance of both parties respecting that cessation of hostilities;

Demanded that the Lord's Resistance Army immediately release all women, children and other non-combatants, in accordance with Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) on children and armed conflict, and that the peace process be concluded expeditiously;

Welcomed the announcement by the Government of Uganda of the establishment of a Joint Monitoring Committee to oversee the delivery of a prioritized Emergency Action Plan to tackle the humanitarian issues in northern Uganda.

Decision of 20 December 2006 (5603rd meeting): statement by the President

At the 5603rd meeting, on 20 December 2006, the President (Qatar) drew attention to a letter dated 4 October 2006 from the Secretary-General, stating his intention to extend the mandate of the Office of his Special Representative for the Great Lakes region until 31 December 2006, and to finalize the preparations for the second summit on the Great Lakes region, to be held in Nairobi on 14 and 15 December 2006,¹⁸ and a letter containing the President's response to the Secretary-General.¹⁹

The Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Great Lakes region and the First Executive Secretary of the Secretariat of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region. Following the briefings, all Council members made statements, as did the representatives of Canada²⁰ the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Finland²¹ and Rwanda.

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Great Lakes region heralded the Nairobi Pact of 15 December as historic and forward-looking. He said the summit had been a convergence of efforts to turn the page on what, for decades, had seemed like an inevitable spiral of violence, conflict, war and humanitarian and social tragedy. He highlighted that it should be remembered, however, that 6 of the 11 countries in the region had emerged from violent conflicts; a seventh was still confronted by a regional rebellion; and an eighth was trying to implement three peace agreements simultaneously. The Security Council itself knew that the nature of interrelations between peoples and countries of a region meant that an internal conflict could easily become regional. It must be ensured, therefore, that the United Nations continued to play a role of peacemaking and peacebuilding in the Great Lakes region, and there must be continued close cooperation between the African Union and the United Nations at this crucial time in the history of the region.²²

The First Executive Secretary of the Secretariat of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region, noting that the Security Council had been instrumental in convening the Conference, appealed to the Council to extend the Office of the Special Representative until March 2007, in order to assist the new Conference Secretariat by providing technical support and allowing a smooth handover of the residual responsibilities. The future of the region lay in implementing the Nairobi Pact, and the Secretariat would hold high the values of ownership, partnership and complementarity that had guided the Great Lakes region peace process thus far.²³

In their statements, all Council members reiterated their appreciation of the signing of the Pact on Security, Stability and Development in the Great Lakes Region. Members pointed out that, although that region had seen recurring ethnic violence, wars and grave human rights violations, there were strong signs of improvement. Speakers in particular drew attention to the successful elections in Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and the ceasefire agreement between the Government of Uganda and the Lord's Resistance Army. Many speakers underlined the value and necessity of the regional dimension of approaches to conflict prevention and development in the Great Lakes region, as well as the cooperation between regional organizations, the United Nations and other international actors. Several members highlighted the need to fight illegal exploitation of natural resources, which was the main channel for funding of conflicts.²⁴

The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania, noting that the Council had been seized with issues of the Great Lakes region for more than 10 years, acknowledged the Council's role in shepherding the peace processes in Burundi, the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda, the Sudan and Uganda. He stated that Rwanda was no longer on the agenda; Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo had held democratic elections; and a Comprehensive Peace Agreement was being implemented in southern Sudan. He further opined that once implemented, the Nairobi Pact would be an indispensable partner of the Security Council in maintaining peace and security in East and Central Africa. It bore all the hallmarks of what the United Nations stood for in pursuit of peace, security, development and respect for human rights to attain larger freedom in a comprehensive manner.²⁵

The representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo described the second summit on the Great Lakes region as an historic event for the region as well as for the international community. She welcomed the new momentum based on a new regional security order, the expansion and integration of economic and commercial space, democracy and good governance, the stabilization and improvement of the collective handling of social and humanitarian problems resulting from the internal readjustments going on in each of the Great Lakes countries, and the adaptation to the rules of this new peaceful coexistence among States. She further noted that this new agreement had been crowned with success in the signing of the regional Pact for Stability, Security and Development. She stressed that the Council had identified three principal and closely linked aspects of the regional conflict that should be addressed in parallel: the outcome of the inter-Congolese dialogue, the withdrawal of foreign forces from Congolese territory, and the disarmament, demobilization and repatriation of armed groups.²⁶

After the debate, the President made a statement²⁷ on behalf of the Council, by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the decision to establish a Regional Follow-up Mechanism, to include a Conference Secretariat, as well as the decision to establish the offices of the Conference Secretariat in Bujumbura;

Supported the request of the Regional Inter-Ministerial Committee to extend the mandate of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for a final period of three months, until 31 March 2007, with a view to ensuring regional ownership of the Follow-up Mechanism and completing successfully the transition to the Conference Secretariat;

Appealed to the countries of the region, the Group of Friends, the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes and the international community to consider providing assistance to the Conference Secretariat and the Special Fund for Reconstruction and Development in the Great Lakes Region, and to support implementation by the parties of the Pact on Security, Stability and Development.

Deliberations of 9 March 2007 (5637th meeting)

At its 5637th meeting, on 9 March 2007, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Great Lakes region. The representatives of Belgium, China, the Congo, France, Ghana, Indonesia, Italy, Qatar, the Russian Federation, Slovakia, South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States also took the floor.²⁸

The Special Representative focused on the transition of his office's responsibility to the secretariat of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region, as well as on the lessons learned during his four-year tenure.

The Special Representative stated that, while his office had received diplomatic and political support from the Council in New York and in the field, this support could have been more effective if it had been accompanied by support in terms of staff recruitment. The Council preferred to maintain the Office's staffing at the skeletal level, leaving the office dependent on personnel support from other United Nations agencies and offices. He stressed that it was essential that the Council acknowledge the consequences. The Council could not issue a mandate as important as organizing an international conference on the Great Lakes region that included 11 countries without providing the resources necessary to complete the task. The Special Representative also emphasized the importance of the Council in supporting and accompanying the ratification process of the Pact on Security, Stability and Development in the Great Lakes Region. He stated that the Conference process had created an atmosphere of trust, but this atmosphere was tenuous and, without prompt ratification and rapid implementation of the Pact, the situation could deteriorate at any moment.²⁹

All speakers expressed gratitude to the Special Representative for a job well done and concurred with him that the international community, particularly the United Nations and the Group of Friends of the Great Lakes Region, should continue to provide support and cooperation with a view to facilitating the region's peace process as well as its reconstruction and development. The representatives of France and the Congo hoped that the United Nations would remain committed to the region,³⁰ with the latter also calling on the Council, together with the Secretariat, to define all modalities through which the United Nations could provide assistance.³¹

The representatives of the United States, Italy and the United Kingdom stated that the Pact on Security, Stability and Development would lead to lasting peace in the region.³² The representative of South Africa held that its provisions would provide positive means for sustainable development.³³ These speakers therefore called for the prompt ratification of the Pact by all concerned States and for its full implementation. The representatives of Belgium and Qatar stressed the need for the Follow-up Mechanism, through the Conference Secretariat, to be fully operational as soon as possible.³⁴ Underlining the regional ownership of the process, the representatives of the United States and Slovakia called on the States in the region to carry out their commitments under the Pact by, among other things, fulfilling their budget obligations to ensure the functioning of the secretariat.³⁵ The representatives of the United Kingdom, Italy and Slovakia expressed frustration at the lack of progress in the Juba talks between the Government of Uganda and the Lord's Resistance Army.³⁶ The representative of the United Kingdom also drew attention to the Darfur crisis, deploring the fact that the people in Darfur had been denied "most basic means of survival".³⁷

Responding to questions raised and comments made, the Special Representative underlined that the lack of good governance and widespread corruption had been among the causes of the conflicts in the region over the past decades. With regard to the Pact, he said that it would come into force after the ratification by 8 of the 11 signatories. He cautioned that as long as the treaty had not been duly ratified, there would be no obligation for a Government to implement it. The Special Representative maintained that the United Nations must be equipped with the mechanisms and strategies to support implementation of the Pact, both at the institutional and operational levels. He noted that the United Nations Development Programme had already finalized its regional strategy and other agencies were doing the same. On the financial front, the Special Representative indicated that implementing the whole range of measures approved within the framework of the Conference would cost about $2 billion. At this juncture, he opined that the "fire-fighter approach" was insufficient; rather, it was better to prevent conflict than to have to pay for reconstruction and rehabilitation afterwards.³⁸

Decision of 22 March 2007 (5644th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5644th meeting, on 22 March 2007, the President (South Africa) made a statement on behalf of the Council,³⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Recalled and reaffirmed its presidential statement of 16 November 2006 on talks between the Government of Uganda and the Lord's Resistance Army and stressed its support for a negotiated settlement;

Urged LRA to immediately release all women, children and other non-combatants;

Welcomed the appointment of, and efforts undertaken so far by, the Secretary-General's Special Envoy for the LRA-affected areas, and looked forward to his continued engagement on the issue;

Welcomed the meeting between the Government of Uganda and LRA on 11 March 2007, with community representatives present, and the progress made towards a resumption of talks; and looked forward to further progress in the talks and the renewal of the cessation of hostilities agreement;

Urged the United Nations Secretariat and the countries and regional actors involved to provide further support where possible to the Special Envoy and the mediation team; noted the improved security and humanitarian situation in northern Uganda but looked forward to further progress on improving the living conditions for civilians there;

Urged the international community and the Government of Uganda to sustain and improve humanitarian and development support, including through Uganda's Emergency Action Plan as overseen by the Joint Monitoring Committee.

mission carried out by the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs;

Recalled that the continued presence of illegal armed groups, in particular the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, the ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe and the dissident militia of Laurent Nkunda, was one of the root causes of conflict in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo and constituted a threat to regional stability;

Reiterated its demand that these groups lay down their arms and engage voluntarily and without preconditions in their demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration, as appropriate;

Encouraged the authorities of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Republic of Rwanda to implement fully their commitments in the Nairobi communiqué;

Stressed its readiness to facilitate and support the implementation of these commitments;

Reiterated its full support to the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo for its action on the ground.

8. The situation concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo

Decision of 15 January 2004 (4894th meeting): resolution 1522 (2004)

At the 4894th meeting,¹ on 15 January 2004, in which the representatives of Belgium and the Democratic Republic of the Congo were invited to participate, the President (Chile) drew attention to a draft resolution;² it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1522 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided that its demand for the demilitarization of Kisangani and its surroundings laid down in paragraph 3 of resolution 1304 (2000) should not apply to restructured and integrated forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and to the armed forces included in the comprehensive programme for formation of an integrated and restructured national army;

Urged the Government of National Unity and Transition to take appropriate measures for the restructuring and integration of the armed forces;

Called upon the international community to provide further assistance for the integration and restructuring of the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in accordance with resolution 1493 (2003).

Decision of 12 March 2004 (4926th meeting): resolution 1533 (2004)

On 17 November 2003 the Secretary-General submitted the fourteenth report on the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC),³ in which he observed that, while significant progress had been achieved in the Democratic Republic of the Congo over the previous five months, considerable work remained to be done on a number of key issues of the peace process. On the positive side, former belligerents were working together in the Transitional Government, the process of uniting the territory had begun, and there were encouraging trends in peacemaking at the local level. Moreover, MONUC and the wider international community were prepared to assist in strengthening the peace process through free and fair elections, and the relations between the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda had been improving. Nonetheless, significant challenges remained, which included the continuing presence of foreign armed combatants in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo and ongoing allegations of the presence of Rwandan military personnel in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Noting that the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of Congolese combatants was intricately linked to local-level political and economic dynamics in the eastern part of the country, he underlined the need for the Transitional Government to extend State administration throughout the eastern part. He further expressed gratitude to the Government of France and the European Union for quickly deploying a multinational force, for a limited period of time to Bunia. The presence of a robustly equipped force in Bunia, under Chapter VII of the Charter, had helped to stave off an impending humanitarian crisis. He also reported that, despite significant challenges, the efforts of MONUC and other international partners in stabilizing the situation in Ituri had had positive results. However, the humanitarian situation remained “catastrophic”. He believed that the elections planned for mid-2005 would be vital for establishing the foundation for a new, democratic and peaceful order in that country. Drawing attention to the danger posed by the “incessant” flow of arms into the country, despite the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1493 (2003), and its link to the illegal exploitation of natural resources, the Secretary-General proposed that the Council consider a three-tiered approach to addressing the issue. Under the first tier, MONUC would continue to carry out its monitoring mandate, collecting and categorizing information in accordance with the means made available to it. Under the second tier, a small group of three to four technical experts would be formed to collect and conduct preliminary investigations of information both within the Democratic Republic of the Congo and in other countries, as necessary. That group of experts would report to a third tier, a sanctions committee, which in turn would report and make recommendations to the Security Council and address the issue at the political level with Member States. As the Panel of Experts on the Illegal Exploitation of Natural Resources and Other Forms of Wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo had completed its work, the Secretary-General believed that the Transitional Government should be encouraged to adopt the necessary laws to ensure the fair and equitable management of natural resources.

At its 4926th meeting, on 12 March 2004, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General on MONUC.³ The President (France) then drew attention to a letter dated 23 October 2003 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council, transmitting the final report of the Panel of Experts.⁴ Statements were made by the representatives of Pakistan and the United States.

The President also drew attention to a draft resolution;⁵ it was adopted unanimously as resolution 1533 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, inter alia:

Requested MONUC to continue to use all means to carry out the tasks outlined in resolution 1493 (2003);

Authorized MONUC to seize or collect, as appropriate, the arms and any related material whose presence in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo violated its provisions, and to dispose of such arms as appropriate;

Decided to establish a Committee of the Security Council consisting of all members of the Council to undertake the following tasks: (a) to seek from all States information regarding the actions taken by them to implement the measures imposed by resolution 1493 (2003); (b) to examine information concerning alleged violations of the measures; (c) to present regular reports to the Council on its work; (d) to consider the lists referred to in paragraph 10 (g) of the resolution with a view to submitting recommendations to the Council for possible future measures to be taken; (e) to receive notifications in advance from States made under paragraph 21 of resolution 1493 (2003) and to decide, if need be, upon any action to be taken;

Requested the Secretary-General to create, within 30 days, and for a period expiring on 28 July 2004, a group of experts to: (a) examine and analyse information gathered by MONUC; (b) to gather and analyse all relevant information in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, countries of the region and in others, flows of arms and related materiel, as well as networks operating in violation of resolution 1493 (2003); (c) to consider and recommend ways of improving the capabilities of States interested;

Requested the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to communicate to the Council information gathered by MONUC and reviewed by the Group of Experts, concerning supply in arms and related materiel to armed groups and militias, and any possible presence of foreign military in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

After the vote, the representative of the United States welcomed the adoption of the resolution as a critical step in the collective effort to reduce the illegal flow of weapons in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. He believed that the newly created sanctions Committee, devoted to overseeing the implementation of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1493 (2003), would constitute a useful tool that the Council could use to compel adherence by the non-compliant parties. He further stressed that the value of the information and recommendations brought to the attention of the Council by experts was contingent upon whether the Council acted in response to those findings.⁶

The representative of Pakistan drew attention to the importance of tracking financial resources for eliminating the root causes of conflict and indicated that his delegation would have liked to have an appropriate reflection of that included in the resolution. However, in the spirit of flexibility, his delegation had supported the decision.⁷

Decision of 14 May 2004 (4969th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 4969th meeting, on 14 May 2004, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (Pakistan) drew attention to a letter dated 26 April 2004 from the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to the President of the Council.⁸

⁸ S/2004/327, by which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo drew the attention of the Council to the situation prevailing in North and South Kivu and at the frontier with Rwanda, where MONUC had confirmed that soldiers of the Rwandan Defence Forces were still present in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The President made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned any impediments to the freedom of movement of MONUC and reaffirmed its full support for the efforts of MONUC to stabilize the situation in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and encouraged MONUC to continue to report to it on the military situation in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Attached great importance to respect for the national sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Demanded that the Government of Rwanda take measures to prevent the presence of any of its troops on the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Reaffirmed its support for the commitments made by the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda in Pretoria, on 27 November 2003;

Urged all Governments in the region to encourage the re-establishment of confidence between neighbouring countries.

Decision of 7 June 2004 (4985th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 4985th meeting, on 7 June 2004, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (Philippines) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned the seizure of the town of Bukavu on 2 June 2004;

Reaffirmed its commitment to and respect for national sovereignty, political independence, territorial integrity and unity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Urged all parties represented in the Government of National Unity and Transition to remain fully committed to the peace process;

Warned the neighbouring States of the consequences of support to the armed rebel groups;

Welcomed the initiative of the Chairperson of the Commission of the African Union aimed at overcoming the current crisis;

Reiterated its full support to MONUC and condemned the recent killing of three of its personnel.

At the 4994th meeting, on 22 June 2004, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (Philippines) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its grave concern at the continued violence and threats to the peace and transition process and condemned any involvement by outside forces in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Urged all parties to remain fully committed to the peace process and to respect the Government of National Unity and Transition;

Warned all parties against any attempt at belligerent actions or violations of the embargo imposed by resolution 1493 (2003);

Urged the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to respond to the request made by MONUC to establish a joint verification mechanism for their common security;

Urged the Governments of Rwanda, Uganda and Burundi not to provide any support to armed groups in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Condemned the deaths of innocent civilians and human rights abuses in the east of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and called for such incidents to be fully investigated.

Decision of 27 July 2004 (5011th meeting):
resolution 1552 (2004)

At its 5011th meeting, on 27 July 2004, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 15 July 2004 addressed to the President of the Council by the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1533 (2004) concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, transmitting the report of the Group of Experts.¹² In its report, the Group of Experts recommended, inter alia, border control and Customs measures aimed at preventing all forms of assistance to armed groups; measures designed to ensure effective air-traffic monitoring and control; enhancement of the capability of MONUC; and the renewal of the arms embargo for a period covering the next mandate of MONUC.

The President (Romania) then drew attention to a draft resolution;¹³ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1552 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided, in the light of the failure by the parties to comply with its demands in resolution 1493 (2003), to renew, until 31 July 2005, the provisions of paragraphs 20 to 22 of resolution 1493 (2003) and all the provisions of resolution 1533 (2004);

Decided further that it would review those measures by 1 October 2004, and periodically thereafter;

Requested that the end the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee, to re-establish, within 30 days and for a period expiring on 31 January 2005, the Group of Experts referred to in paragraph 10 of resolution 1533 (2004);

Requested the Group of Experts to report to the Council in writing before 15 December 2004, through the Committee, on the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493 (2003), with recommendations in that regard, in particular regarding the lists provided for by paragraph 10 (g) of resolution 1533 (2004).

Decision of 29 July 2004 (5014th meeting):
resolution 1555 (2004)

At the 5014th meeting, on 29 July 2004, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (Romania) drew attention to a draft resolution;¹⁴ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1555 (2004), by which the Council, noting that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of MONUC, as contained in resolutions 1493 (2003) and 1533 (2004), both adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, until 1 October 2004;

Requested the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council, before 16 August 2004, on the execution by MONUC of its mandate;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 1 October 2004 (5048th meeting):
resolution 1565 (2004)

¹⁴ S/2004/605.

At its 5048th meeting, on 1 October 2004, the Council included in its agenda the third special report of the Secretary-General on MONUC, dated 16 August 2004¹⁵ and a letter dated 3 September 2004 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council.¹⁶ Statements were made by the Secretary-General and the representative of the United States.¹⁷

In his special report, the Secretary-General noted that the events of the past few months had demonstrated that if the political process did not move forward, it would run off track and risk collapse. Therefore, he called for a renewed commitment by the Transitional Government, the Security Council and the international community to work in full partnership to see the transitional process through to the elections scheduled for 2005. He further urged the Transitional Government to address the issue of human rights abuses and emphasized that the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda and Uganda had to make concrete progress to ensure that the flow of arms across their borders was brought to an end. Observing that the expectations among the Congolese regarding the role MONUC could play under a Chapter VII mandate far outweighed what any external partner could ever do to assist a peace process as MONUC could not implement the transitional process on behalf of the Transitional Government or create stability, he recommended that the Council consider increasing the military strength of MONUC from 10,800 to 23,900 and expanding the Mission's civilian police component from 140 to 507 personnel.¹⁵

In his letter, the Secretary-General expressed concern about the volatile security environment prevailing in the Democratic Republic of the Congo following the crisis that had erupted in Bukavu in May and June, and the massacre of Congolese Banyamulenge refugees in Gatumba, Burundi, on 13 August 2004. In view of the possibility of a further deterioration of the situation, he proposed that, without prejudice to its consideration of the future expansion of MONUC, the Council consider taking an urgent decision to deploy emergency reinforcements to MONUC, so that the Mission could be provided with the necessary capability to address any immediate security concerns.¹⁶

The President (United Kingdom) drew attention to a draft resolution;¹⁸ it was adopted unanimously as resolution 1565 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the deployment of MONUC until 31 March 2005;

Authorized the increase in the strength of MONUC by 5,900 personnel, including up to 341 civilian posts;

Decided that MONUC would have a new mandate in support of the Government of National Unity and Transition;

Authorized MONUC to use all necessary means to carry out its tasks; requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council within one month on reforms necessary to improve the structures of MONUC;

Requested the Secretary-General, through his Special Representative, to coordinate all activities of the United Nations system in the country, and to submit a report, before 28 February 2005, on the execution by MONUC of its mandate;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

After the adoption of the draft resolution, the Secretary-General praised the decision of the Council to expand the strength of MONUC, which in his opinion would contribute to improving the Mission's operational capabilities that were severely under-resourced. However, he noted that the newly approved ceiling of 16,700 in total fell well below the figure recommended in his report. Consequently, MONUC would have to review the scope of the support it could provide for the peace process. He reiterated his position that the total military and police strength he had recommended was the minimum required to effectively meet the challenges in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and hoped that the Council would favourably revisit the issue of the Mission's requirements in the future.¹⁹

The representative of the United States explained that his delegation supported the resolution with the understanding that the decision did not direct MONUC to cooperate with the International Criminal Court.²⁰

Decision of 7 December 2004 (5095th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5095th meeting, on 7 December 2004, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (Algeria) drew attention to a number of communications from the representatives of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda.²¹

The President made a statement on behalf of the Council,²² by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its very deep concern at multiple reports of military operations by the Rwandan army in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Condemned any such military actions that were contrary to its resolutions;

Demanded that Rwanda withdraw any forces in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Called on all Governments to commit themselves to the multilateral mechanisms they had agreed to establish;

Urged all Member States to fully comply with their obligations under resolution 1493 (2003);

Welcomed steps taken to establish the plan aimed at accelerating the disarmament of foreign armed groups;

Called upon Rwanda and the Democratic Republic of the Congo to explore ways to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of those combatants based on existing mechanisms;

Called on the Congolese authorities to accelerate the integration of the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and encouraged the donor community to provide coordinated financial and technical assistance to that task;

Condemned any attempt aimed at undermining the unity and territorial integrity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

Decision of 2 March 2005 (5133rd meeting): statement by the President

At the 5133rd meeting, on 2 March 2005, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (Brazil) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned with the utmost firmness the attack against a patrol of MONUC by the Front des Nationalistes et Intégrationnistes in Ituri on 25 February 2005, resulting in the murder of nine Bangladeshi peacekeepers;

Called upon the Government of National Unity and Transition immediately to take all necessary measures to bring to justice the perpetrators, sponsors and authors of that attack and to strengthen its support for the implementation of the disarmament and community reintegration programme for Ituri militiamen;

Reminded all States in the region of their responsibility to ensure compliance for the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1493 (2003);

Further urged those States to ensure that their territories could not be used by any Congolese armed group, notably the Ituri militia, whose activities perpetuated a climate of insecurity that affected the whole region;

Reaffirmed its full support for MONUC, and urged MONUC to continue to fulfil its mandate with determination.

Decision of 30 March 2005 (5155th meeting): resolution 1592 (2005)

At its 5155th meeting, on 30 March 2005, the Council included in its agenda the seventeenth report of the Secretary-General on MONUC.²⁴ In that report, the Secretary-General called on the Transitional Government to take resolute action on several fronts, particularly in regard to elections, security sector reform and the establishment of rule of law. With respect to the situation in Ituri, he emphasized the need for the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda and Uganda to ensure that their territories were not used to support the flow of arms into the region. He called on the international community to step up its efforts for security sector reform, particularly to assist in the training and equipping of the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and emphasized that the establishment of an integrated and professional army and police force was a key element of the exit strategy for MONUC. With the full deployment of the MONUC brigades in the Kivus, the Mission's capacity to support the maintenance of security and the protection of civilians in the Kivus had been significantly enhanced. He further announced that the African Union and some Member States were examining, in consultation with the United Nations, the possibility of deploying troops into the Democratic Republic of the Congo to forcibly disarm the ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe. Stressing the central role played by MONUC in supporting the Transitional Government in its efforts to prepare the new elections and ensure stable governance, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council extend the Mission's mandate for one year.

²¹ By a letter dated 30 November 2004 to the President of the Council, the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo informed the Council that Rwandan regular troops had crossed the Congolese border in order to attack the town of Mutongo in North Kivu province and requested that the Council meet urgently in order to firmly condemn that attack (S/2004/935). By a letter dated 30 November 2004 to the President of the Council, the representative of Rwanda presented his Government's account of the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (S/2004/933). By a letter dated 6 December 2004 to the President of the Council, the representative of Rwanda transmitted a communiqué issued by his Government in response to the declaration by the President of the Democratic Republic of the Congo calling on all Congolese to mobilize, inter alia, to fight a Rwandan invasion on the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (S/2004/951).

The Council extended an invitation to the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to participate in the discussion. The President (Brazil) then drew attention to a draft resolution;²⁵ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1592 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of MONUC until 1 October 2005;

Reaffirmed its demand that all parties cooperate fully with the operations of MONUC and that they ensure the safety of all United Nations personnel;

Emphasizing that MONUC was authorized to use all necessary means to carry out its tasks and deter any attempt at the use of force, stressed that MONUC might use cordon and search tactics to prevent attacks;

Demanded that the Governments of Uganda and Rwanda, as well as the Democratic Republic of the Congo put a stop to the use of their territories in support of violations of the arms embargo or activities of armed groups in the region;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 12 April 2005 (5162nd meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5162nd meeting, on 12 April 2005, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (China) drew attention to a letter dated 4 April 2005 from the representative of Rwanda to the President of the Council, transmitting a communiqué issued by his Government concerning the decision of the ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe to disarm unconditionally and return to Rwanda.²⁶

The President then made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the statement issued by the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR) in Rome, on 31 March 2005, in which they condemned the 1994 genocide and committed themselves to renounce the use of force and cease all offensive operations against Rwanda;

Called on FDLR to turn their positive words into action and to demonstrate their commitment to peace by immediately handing all their arms to MONUC and by taking part in the programme put in place for their earliest voluntary and peaceful return to Rwanda;

Encouraged all other armed groups in the Democratic Republic of the Congo that had not yet done so to renounce likewise the use of force and to take part without delay in the programmes of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration;

Urged the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to work together, in close cooperation with MONUC, to make use of the chance given to them to contribute to peace and stability in the whole Great Lakes region of Africa;

Urged the Government of Rwanda to guarantee the return and reintegration of FDLR.

Decision of 18 April 2005 (5163rd meeting):
resolution 1596 (2005)

At its 5163rd meeting, on 18 April 2005, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 25 January 2005 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1533 (2004) to the President of the Council, transmitting the report of the Group of Experts.²⁸ In that report, given the complexity of the Congolese political landscape and the varying allegiances of the members of the Transitional Government, the Group of Experts recommended that the target of the embargo as defined in resolution 1493 (2003) be revisited with a view to clarifying the terms and exemptions of the embargo. The Group also recommended that the État-major du renseignement militaire in Kinshasa be instituted as the sole procuring and authorizing agent on behalf of the Transitional Government and integrated army for military hardware and other forms of military equipment. Furthermore, to enhance the effectiveness of the monitoring mechanism and embargo enforcement, the Security Council should extend the arms embargo to the entire territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, with the exception of the État-major and MONUC and for supplies of non-lethal material and training for humanitarian or protective use. The report also contained a number of recommendations related to monitoring mechanisms, civil aviation, border control and financial aspects, arms flows and violations, and bilateral, regional and international efforts.

The representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (China) then drew attention to a draft resolution;²⁹ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1596 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Reaffirmed the measures established by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493 (2003) and extended until 31 July 2005 by resolution 1552 (2004);

Decided that those measures from then on would apply to any recipient in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and reiterated that assistance included financing and financial assistance related to military activities;

Decided that all future authorized shipments of arms and related materiel consistent with such exemptions noted in paragraph 2 (a) of the resolution should only be made to receiving sites as designated by the Government of National Unity and Transition, in coordination with MONUC, and notified in advance to the Committee;

Decided that each Government in the region, in particular those of States bordering Ituri and the Kivus, as well as that of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, should maintain a registry for review by the Committee and the Group of Experts of all information concerning flights originating in their respective territories en route to destinations in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as well as flights originating in the Democratic Republic of the Congo en route to destinations in their respective territories;

Decided that, during the period of enforcement of the measures referred to above, all States should take the necessary measures to prevent the entry into or transit through their territories of all persons designated by the Committee as acting in violation of the measures taken by Member States;

Decided that all States should, during the period of enforcement of the measures, immediately freeze the funds, other financial assets and economic resources which were on their territories from the date of adoption of the resolution, which were owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by persons designated by the Committee.

Decision of 29 June 2005 (5218th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5218th meeting, on 29 June 2005, the Council included in its agenda the special report of the Secretary-General, dated 26 May 2005, on elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.³⁰ In the special report, the Secretary-General noted that despite security, operational and political challenges, with sufficient focus and support by the Transitional Government and assistance from international partners, elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo could be held within a reasonable period of time. He stressed the primary responsibility of the Transitional Government for creating the conditions necessary for stability in the post-transition period and for the success of the electoral process. He welcomed the adoption of a Constitution that put in place a structure ensuring checks and balances among the executive, legislative and judicial branches, and provided for balance of power within the executive branch of government. He also expressed concern at the state of security sector reform. Underlining the role played by MONUC in disarming more than 12,000 combatants in Ituri and in improving the security environment in North and South Kivu, he recommended that the Council increase the Mission's military strength to a total of 19,290. In his view, the additional military personnel, who would be deployed only temporarily for the period of the elections and their immediate aftermath, could play a significant role in ensuring stability in highly volatile areas and in allowing the electorate the right to participate in the process, as well as ensuring the security of MONUC and other international personnel in high-risk areas. Furthermore, he recommended the strengthening of the Mission's civilian police component by an additional 261 civilian police and five formed police units, in order to undertake training and institution-building activities at the central and ground levels.

The representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (France) made a statement on behalf of the Council,³¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Took note of the joint decision reached by the two Houses of Parliament of the Democratic Republic of the Congo on 17 June 2005 to extend for six months, renewable once, the transitional period that was to expire on 30 June 2005;

Called on all Congolese parties to respect that decision and urged in particular the candidates and political parties to refrain from any action that might disrupt that process;

Urged all parties and transitional institutions to make every effort to respect scrupulously the timetable for polls developed by the Independent Electoral Commission, and in particular to begin preparations for the referendum on the draft Constitution as soon as possible;

Called on the transitional authorities to accelerate those reforms remaining to be carried out, in particular drafting of the electoral law and integration of the security forces;

Called upon the Congolese authorities to exercise efficient, transparent and comprehensive control over State finances and encouraged them to continue consultations with their international partners, in full respect for the sovereignty of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and to put in place credible arrangements to strengthen support for good governance and transparent economic management.

Decision of 13 July 2005 (5226th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5226th meeting, on 13 July 2005, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (Greece) made a statement on behalf of the Council,³² by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned with the utmost firmness the massacre of some 50 people, most of them women and children, which had occurred on 9 July 2005 in Ntulu-Mamba, in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Requested the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Democratic Republic of the Congo to establish the facts and report to the Council as quickly as possible;

Called upon the Congolese authorities to prosecute and bring to justice expeditiously the perpetrators and those responsible for those crimes;

Stressed the need to bring to an end attacks by armed groups on local populations;

Demanded that FDLR abide by the commitment given in Rome put an end to the armed conflict and settle without further delay the issue of the repatriation of their combatants.

Decision of 29 July 2005 (5243rd meeting):

By a letter dated 26 July 2005 to the President of the Council, the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1533 (2004) transmitted the report of the Group of Experts.³³ In its report, the Group of Experts stressed the importance of inter-State cooperation in the Great Lakes region for countering violations of the arms embargo. While commending the Tripartite Commission and the bilateral Joint Verification Mechanism for their work towards improving intergovernmental communication, the Group believed that the arms embargo demanded a flexible and permanent mechanism for unambiguous information-sharing and cooperative action between States at the tactical and political levels. The Group of Experts recommended that: the existing sanctions regime should be maintained well into the post-electoral period; sufficient means should be allocated to MONUC for deployment on the borders and in the airports of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to support existing national customs structures and for monitoring of airspace and airport activities; enhanced traceability systems for all important natural resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo should be developed under the direction of the Government which should be required to report on the development and implementation of those systems to the Committee; the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo should request the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) to assist in providing the technical expertise necessary to improve national aviation security standards; and the World Bank, ICAO and other multilateral organizations should assist the Transitional Government in developing the capacity of its Civil Aviation Authority.

At its 5243rd meeting, on 29 July 2005, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned letter and extended an invitation to the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to participate in the discussion.

³³ S/2005/436; the report was submitted pursuant to paragraph 22 of resolution 1596 (2005).

The President (Greece) drew attention to a draft resolution;³⁴ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1616 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to renew until 31 July 2006 the provisions of paragraphs 20 to 22 of resolution 1493 (2003), and reaffirmed paragraphs 2, 6, 10 and 13 to 16 of resolution 1596 (2005);

Requested the Secretary-General to re-establish the Group of Experts within 30 days and for a period expiring on 31 January 2006, drawing on the expertise of the members of the Group of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1596 (2005);

Requested the Group of Experts to continue fulfilling its mandate to update the Committee on its work by 10 November 2005, and to report to the Council in writing, through the Committee, before 10 January 2006, including information on the sources of financing which were funding the illicit trade in arms.

Decision of 6 September 2005 (5255th meeting): resolution 1621 (2005)

At its 5255th meeting, on 6 September 2005, the Council again included in its agenda the special report of the Secretary-General on elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.³⁵ The Council extended an invitation to the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to participate in the discussion.

The President (Philippines) then drew attention to a draft resolution;³⁶ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1621 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Authorized an increase in the strength of MONUC of 841 personnel, including up to five formed police units of 125 officers each and the additional police personnel;

Requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps with a view to downsizing or repatriating those additional personnel from 1 July 2006 at the latest;

Authorized MONUC, in accordance with the recommendation and with its mandate as defined in paragraphs 5 (f) and 7 (c) of resolution 1565 (2004), and acting in close coordination with the United Nations Development Programme, to provide additional support to the Independent Electoral Commission for the transport of electoral materials.

Decision of 30 September 2005 (5272nd meeting): resolution 1628 (2005)

On 26 September 2005, the Secretary-General submitted the nineteenth report on MONUC,³⁷ in which he stated that, in spite of delays, largely caused by logistical problems, encouraging progress had been made in the voter registration process, an important step towards the holding of democratic elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. He considered it vital that the necessary legislation, including the electoral law, be adopted by the Transitional Government and Parliament with a minimum of delay so that the elections could be organized no later than June 2006. In that context, MONUC was expanding its extensive role nationwide in providing logistical and other support to the Independent Electoral Commission. The Secretary-General also remarked that considerable progress had been made in training the Congolese National Police, who would provide security for the elections. Noting that an enhancement of the military capacity of MONUC would be required to address the threats posed by armed groups in Katanga and contribute to establishing the necessary security conditions for elections in that province, the Secretary-General hoped that the Council would give due consideration to his recommendation for an increase of 2,580 in the Mission's force strength. He further stressed the importance of good governance and was of the opinion that, in the remaining months of the transition, the Transitional Government should focus on extending State administration throughout the country and improving delivery of basic services to the population. The Secretary-General further noted the "continuing humanitarian catastrophe" in the country and reaffirmed the importance of disarming and demobilizing foreign armed groups on the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. He reported that some progress had been achieved in the reform of the armed forces and called for increased support by international partners for security sector reform. He informed the Council that the constitutional referendum was scheduled to be held before the expiration of the first extension of the transition on 31 December and that the Parliament was likely to have voted, by that time, for the second and final six-month extension of the transition, in order to allow the Independent Electoral Commission to organize the elections. In that context, he recommended that the mandate of MONUC be extended for one year, until 1 October 2006, which would include the period until the elections and the immediate post-transitional period following the installation of the new Government.

At its 5272nd meeting, on 30 September 2005, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General and extended an invitation to the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to participate in the discussion.

The President (Philippines) drew attention to a draft resolution;³⁸ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1628 (2005), by which the Council, noting that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region, inter alia, decided to extend the mandate of MONUC, as contained in resolutions 1565 (2004), 1592 (2005), 1596 (2005) and 1621 (2005), adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, until 31 October 2005; and to remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 4 October 2005 (5275th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5275th meeting, on 4 October 2005, in which the representatives of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda and Uganda were invited to participate, the President (Romania) drew attention to the nineteenth report of the Secretary-General on MONUC³⁹ and to a letter dated 3 October 2005 from the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to the President of the Council.⁴⁰

The President made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed concern over the presence of foreign armed groups in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Recognized the decision taken on 16 September 2005 by the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Uganda, Rwanda and

Burundi, acting within the framework of the Tripartite Plus Joint Commission, to set the deadline of 30 September 2005 for FDLR to disarm or otherwise to face measures intended to compel them to do so;

Demanded that FDLR proceed voluntarily with their disarmament and return to Rwanda without any delay or preconditions;

Demanded the full cooperation of FDLR with the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda in Arusha, particularly with regard to the arrest and transfer of indictees who remained at large;

Noted with concern the incursion of members of the Lord's Resistance Army into the Democratic Republic of the Congo and welcomed the intention of the Congolese Armed Forces to disarm that group in cooperation with MONUC and in accordance with its mandate;

Called upon all armed groups in the Great Lakes region of Africa to act without delay to lay down their arms and join the processes of political transition under way in the region.

Decision of 28 October 2005 (5296th meeting):
resolution 1635 (2005)

At its 5296th meeting, on 28 October 2005, the Council included again in its agenda the nineteenth report of the Secretary-General on MONUC.⁴²

The President (Romania) drew attention to a draft resolution;⁴³ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1635 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of MONUC until 30 September 2006;

Authorized an increase of 300 personnel in the military strength of MONUC;

Requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps with a view to downsizing or repatriating that additional strength from 1 July 2006 at the latest, and to report to the Council before 1 June 2006 on the assessment to be made for that purpose;

Called upon the transitional institutions and on all Congolese parties to ensure that free, fair and peaceful elections took place, and that the timetable for polls developed by the Independent Electoral Commission was scrupulously respected;

Called on the Government of National Unity and Transition to carry out reform of the security sector;

Called on the donor community to continue to engage firmly in the provision of assistance needed for the integration, training and equipping of the Armed Forces and of the National Police of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Requested MONUC to continue to provide advice and assistance as well as the necessary support, to the effective follow-up to the meeting on 21 September 2005 between the Espace présidentiel and the International Committee in Support of the Transition, to strengthen support for good governance and transparent economic management;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decisions of 21 December 2005 (5340th meeting): resolution 1649 (2005) and statement by the President

At the 5340th meeting, on 21 December 2005, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (United Kingdom) drew attention to a draft resolution;⁴⁴ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1649 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that, for a period expiring on 31 July 2006, the provisions of paragraphs 13 to 16 of resolution 1596 (2005) should extend to the following individuals, as designated by the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1533 (2004): (a) political and military leaders of foreign armed groups operating in the Democratic Republic of the Congo; (b) political and military leaders of Congolese militias receiving support from outside the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Decided that the measures imposed above as well as those under paragraph 13 of resolution 1596 (2005) should not apply where the Committee authorized in advance, and on a case-by-case basis, the transit of individuals returning to the territory of the State of their nationality, or participating in efforts to bring to justice perpetrators of grave violations of human rights or international humanitarian law;

Decided that the tasks of the Committee set out in paragraph 18 of resolution 1596 (2005) should extend to the provisions set out above;

Requested the Secretary-General and the Group of Experts established under resolution 1533 (2004) to assist the Committee in the designation of the leaders referred to above;

Decided that the provisions of paragraphs 2 to 5 of the resolution should enter into force on 15 January 2006, unless the Secretary-General informed the Council that the process of disarmament of those foreign armed groups and Congolese militias operating in the Democratic Republic of the Congo was being completed;

Decided that, no later than 31 July 2006, it should review the measures set forth above, in the light of progress accomplished in the peace and transition process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular with regard to the disarmament of foreign armed groups.

The President also made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Commended the people of the Democratic Republic of the Congo for the successful holding of the referendum on the draft Constitution;

Paid tribute to the work of the Independent Electoral Commission, which had been able, with unprecedented and outstanding logistical support from MONUC and with the assistance of the international community, to take up that challenge;

Recalled its support for the holding of elections in the coming months, which had to take place before the end of the transitional period on 30 June 2006;

Urged the Government of National Unity and Transition to live up to the expectations of the Congolese people and to do its utmost to ensure that the next polls were held in accordance with the timetable of the Independent Electoral Commission.

Decision of 25 January 2006 (5356th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5356th meeting, on 25 January 2006, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (United Republic of Tanzania) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴⁶ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned with the utmost firmness the attack against a detachment of MONUC, which had occurred on 23 January 2006 in the national park of Garamba, resulting in the death of eight Guatemalan peacekeepers and the severe wounding of five others;

Considered that aggression to be an unacceptable outrage;

Called upon the Government of National Unity and Transition immediately to take all necessary measures to bring to justice those responsible for the attack;

Also condemned with the utmost firmness the recent seizure of villages in the area of Rutshuru, North Kivu province, by insurgent elements;

Decision of 31 January 2006 (5360th meeting):
resolution 1654 (2006)

At the 5360th meeting, on 31 January 2006, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (United Republic of Tanzania) drew attention to a draft resolution;⁴⁷ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1654 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General to re-establish the Group of Experts referred to in paragraph 10 of resolution 1533 (2004) and paragraph 21 of resolution 1596 (2005), within 30 days and for a period expiring on 31 July 2006;

Requested the Group of Experts to update the Committee on its work by 10 April 2006, and to report to the Council in writing, through the Committee, before 10 July 2006;

Decided to remain seized of the matter.

Decision of 10 April 2006 (5408th meeting):
resolution 1669 (2006)

At its 5408th meeting, on 10 April 2006, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 30 March 2006 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council.⁴⁸ In that letter, the Secretary-General indicated the intention to temporarily redeploy military personnel and resources from the United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB) to MONUC, as previously authorized by the Council by resolution 1650 (2005), for an initial period ending on 31 December 2006. The battalion would operate in the central area of Katanga Province and carry out the mandate entrusted to MONUC by the Council in resolution 1291 (2000) and all subsequent relevant resolutions. The military observers would be deployed in teams to various areas of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in the context of the increased military observer capacity required during the electoral process.

The President (China) drew attention to a draft resolution;⁴⁹ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1669 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to authorize the Secretary-General to redeploy temporarily a maximum of one infantry battalion, a military hospital and up to 50 military observers from ONUB to MONUC, until 1 July 2006, according to resolution 1650 (2005), and with the intention to renew such authorization according to future decisions by the Security Council concerning the renewal of the mandates of ONUB and MONUC;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 25 April 2006 (5421st meeting):
resolution 1671 (2006)

At its 5421st meeting, on 25 April 2006, a Council included in its agenda a letter dated 12 April 2006 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council.⁵⁰ By that letter, the Secretary-General informed the Council that, while the referendum on the draft constitution of the Democratic Republic of the Congo had been held on 18 and 19 December 2005 with minimal security problems, the United Nations remained concerned about the possibility of violence occurring before, during or after the upcoming elections, which neither the forces of MONUC nor the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo would have the capacity to contain. In response to the request of the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, the European Union had agreed to provide support to MONUC during the electoral period, subject to the authorization of the Council under Chapter VII of the Charter.⁵¹ He held that the deployment of such a force would be an important contribution to the international community's efforts to support the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in ensuring the successful holding of elections under secure conditions in the country.

The President (China) drew attention to a letter dated 30 March 2006 from the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to the President of the Council, transmitting a communiqué reporting that the Supreme Defence Council of his country had recommended endorsing the initiative for the establishment of a European Union force to reinforce the security arrangements for the electoral process.⁵²

The representative of France made a statement. The President drew attention to a draft resolution;⁵³ it was adopted unanimously as resolution 1671 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Authorized for a period ending four months after the date of the first round of the presidential and parliamentary elections, the deployment of the European Union force in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Decided that the authorization for the deployment should not exceed the term of the mandate of MONUC and would be subject, beyond 30 September 2006, to the extension of the mandate of MONUC;

Stressed that the European Union force was authorized immediately to take all appropriate steps, including the deployment of advance elements in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in order to prepare its full operational capability.

The representative of France welcomed the adoption of the resolution as a proof of the commitment of the international community, particularly the United Nations and the European Union, to the peace process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The European Union force would be an important element in ensuring that the elections scheduled for June went smoothly. He further pointed out that it would not be necessary to adopt another resolution to renew the mandate of force when the Council decided, by 30 September, to extend the mandate of MONUC, which was his delegation's interpretation of the provision contained in the resolution, shared by other Council members.⁵⁴

On 13 June 2006, the Secretary-General submitted the twenty-first report on MONUC,⁵⁵ in which he expressed his gratitude to the international community for its considerable political, financial, technical and logistical support of the electoral process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in preparation for the historic elections to be held in the coming months. He stressed that the elections and their outcome should provide an opportunity to continue the process of national dialogue, consolidation of peace and progress towards the long-term unity and stability of the country. He announced that MONUC and its partners would continue to support the Government's efforts towards securing the elections and strongly welcomed the decision of the European Union to assist the United Nations in that endeavour. He reported that, despite some progress, the political and security situation in Ituri, the Kivus and Katanga remained tenuous. Drawing attention to the human rights violations, he urged the Congolese authorities to accelerate the establishment of a reformed army and police force and to ensure that those responsible were swiftly brought to trial by an independent and credible justice system. He further deplored the humanitarian situation. He observed that in the post-electoral period, the sustained engagement of the international community and the establishment of follow-up consolidation mechanisms would be critical. In his view, the new Government would have to establish a national action plan, including benchmarks and coordinated programmes of donor support targeted at key objectives, such as the poverty reduction strategy, the United Nations action plan and security sector reform. Lastly, he announced his intention to provide the Council proposals for the post-electoral role of MONUC after the possible second round of the presidential elections.

At its 5480th meeting, on 30 June 2006, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General and extended an invitation to the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to participate in the discussion.

The President (Denmark) drew attention to a draft resolution;⁵⁶ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1693 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend until 30 September 2006 the increase in the military and civilian police strength of MONUC authorized by resolutions 1621 (2005) and 1635 (2005);

Requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps with a view to downsizing or repatriating that additional strength by 30 September 2006;

Decision of 31 July 2006 (5502nd meeting):

By a letter dated 18 July 2006 to the President of the Council, the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1533 (2004) transmitted the report of the Group of Experts.⁵⁷ In the report, observing that the internal trafficking in arms and ammunition constituted a genuine threat to the peace process, the Group continued to recommend that all arms held and imported by the Democratic Republic of the Congo be separately registered and marked. The Group further noted that, although some FDLR members had been listed by the Council as subject to financial and travel sanctions, it would be advantageous if FDLR organizations were listed as sanctionable entities and if membership in those organizations were to lead to automatic financial sanctions and travel bans. The Group also made a number of recommendations aimed at preventing the use of civil aviation in the illicit transport of arms and ammunition. Taking into account the link between the illegal exploitation of natural resources and the funding of arms embargo violations, the Group recommended that the Council declare for one year all illegal exploration, exploitation and commerce of natural resources from the Democratic Republic of the Congo to be a sanctionable act in order to assist the new Government in its efforts to stabilize and promote the legal exploitation and commerce of natural resources. With regard to customs and migratory flows, the Group reiterated its earlier recommendations on the reinforcement of border controls and encouraged donors to strengthen the capacities of customs and immigration services.

At its 5502nd meeting, on 31 July 2006, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned report of the Group of Experts.

The President (France) drew attention to the report of the Group of Experts transmitted through a letter dated 26 January 2006 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1533 (2004) to the President of the Council;⁵⁸ the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;⁵⁹ and the report of the Council mission on the electoral process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁶⁰

The President also drew attention to a draft resolution;⁶¹ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1698 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to renew until 31 July 2007 the provisions of paragraphs 20 to 22 of resolution 1493 (2003), as amended and expanded by paragraph 1 of resolution 1596 (2005) and by paragraph 2 of resolution 1649 (2005);

Requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary administrative measures as expeditiously as possible with a view to extending the mandate of the Group of Experts for a period expiring on 31 July 2007;

Requested the Group of Experts to continue fulfilling its mandate by 20 December 2006 and again before 10 July 2007;

Requested the Group of Experts to include in its report further recommendations on feasible and effective measures the Council might impose to prevent the illegal exploitation of natural resources financing armed groups and militias in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

Requested the Secretary-General to enable the Group of Experts to perform the tasks set out in the resolution without prejudice to the execution of the other tasks in its mandate, by providing it with the necessary additional resources;

Decided that, for a period expiring on 31 July 2007, the provisions of paragraphs 13 to 16 of resolution 1596 (2005) should extend to the following individuals: political and military leaders recruiting or using children in armed conflict in violation of applicable international law and individuals committing serious violations of international law involving the targeting of children in situations of armed conflict;

Requested the working group of the Security Council on children in armed conflict, the Secretary-General and his Special Representative for children in armed conflict, as well as the Group of Experts to assist the Committee in the designation of the individuals mentioned above, by making known without delay to the Committee any useful information;

Reaffirmed its demand that all parties and all States cooperate fully with the work of the Group of Experts and that they ensure the safety of its members and unhindered and immediate access, in particular to persons, documents and sites the Group of Experts deemed relevant to the execution of its mandate;

Further demanded that all parties and all States ensure the cooperation with the Group of Experts of individuals and entities within their jurisdiction or under their control, and called on all States in the region to implement fully their obligations.

Decision of 3 August 2006 (5504th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5504th meeting, on 3 August 2006, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (Ghana) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁶² by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its appreciation to the Independent Electoral Commission for the untiring efforts they had made to ensure that the polls could take place in the best possible conditions, and looked forward to the official announcement of the results by the Commission;

Deplored the incidents which had occurred in Kinshasa, Mbuji Mayi and Mweka;

Endorsed the opinion of the International Committee in Support of the Transition, who had welcomed, in that context, the work of the National Police forces;

Urged all political actors in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to continue to work to ensure that the electoral process proceeded in a free, transparent and peaceful manner, in accordance with the agreed timetable.

Decision of 22 September 2006 (5533rd meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5533rd meeting, on 22 September 2006, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (Greece) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁶³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Paid tribute once again to the extraordinary commitment of the citizens of the Democratic Republic of the Congo demonstrated by their peaceful participation in the first stage of democratic elections of historical importance to their nation;

Deplored the violence that had erupted in Kinshasa from 20 to 22 August 2006 between security forces loyal to President

Kabila and Vice-President Bemba, and commended the effective action of the European Union force in support of MONUC;

Called on all political parties and in particular President Kabila and Vice-President Bemba to restate their commitment to the peace process and to work within the framework they had agreed to establish with the facilitation of MONUC as a means of peacefully resolving political differences;

Reiterated its support to the Independent Electoral Commission and to the High Media Authority;

Emphasized the need for all political parties to act responsibly within the framework of democratic institutions after the elections.

Decision of 29 September 2006 (5541st meeting):
resolution 1711 (2006)

At its 5541st meeting, on 29 September 2006, the Council included in its agenda the twenty-second report of the Secretary-General on MONUC.⁶⁴ In his report, the Secretary-General noted that, despite concerns over irregularities and isolated incidents of violence, the successful elections of 30 July represented a landmark step in the peace process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. He encouraged President Kabila and Vice-President Bemba to reaffirm their commitment to the electoral calendar, which had established 29 October as the date for the second round of presidential elections. Pledging the support of the United Nations in ensuring the timely and successful holding of those elections, he stressed that the parties and candidates had to take all possible steps to ensure that elections were held under secure conditions and were credible and transparent. He further deplored the violent incidents that had occurred from 20 to 22 August in Kinshasa and considered as worrisome the use of the media to incite hatred and violence during the electoral process. He reiterated the importance of a comprehensive plan for security sector reform and drew attention to the many challenges facing the Democratic Republic of the Congo in the post-elections period which would require the continuing support of a United Nations peacekeeping operation. He explained that the envisaged post-electoral tasks of MONUC, in cooperation with the United Nations country team and the international community, would include: providing support to the new Government and civil society in strengthening democratic institutions; promoting the rule of law and basic human rights; building an adequate security environment and architecture; strengthening economic management; and establishing and consolidating State authority nationwide. The Secretary-General recommended an extension of the mandate of MONUC for a period of four and a half months, until 15 February 2007, to allow sufficient time for consultations with the new Government on the Mission's future role. He further recommended the extension, until 15 February 2007, of the authorization to redeploy the troops from ONUB to MONUC in accordance with resolution 1669 (2006).

⁶⁴ S/2006/759, submitted pursuant to resolutions 1635 (2005) and 1565 (2004).

The President (Greece) drew attention to a draft resolution;⁶⁵ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1711 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of MONUC, as contained in resolutions 1565 (2004), 1592 (2005), 1596 (2005), 1621 (2005) and 1635 (2005), until 15 February 2007;

Decided to extend until 15 February 2007 the increase in the military and civilian police strength of MONUC authorized by resolutions 1621 (2005) and 1635 (2005);

Decided to extend until 31 December 2006 the authorization contained in resolutions 1669 (2006) and 1692 (2006) for the Secretary-General to redeploy temporarily a maximum of one infantry battalion, a military hospital and 50 military observers from ONUB to MONUC; and expressed its intention to re-examine this issue before 31 December 2006.

Decision of 7 November 2006 (5562nd meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5562nd meeting, on 7 November 2006, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (Peru) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁶⁶ by which the Council, inter alia:

Took note of the fact that voting generally had taken place in an orderly and safe atmosphere;

Deplored the isolated incidents that had occurred;

Called on all political actors and the Congolese people to await and receive those results calmly and responsibly, refraining from any incitement to hatred or recourse to violence and respecting democratic institutions and the rule of law; stressed that the new authorities and all Congolese political actors would be responsible for ensuring the long-term sustainability of the restoration of peace and stability and for continuing to promote national reconciliation and the establishment of democratic institutions and the rule of law in the country.

(Qatar) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁶⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Congratulated President Joseph Kabila on his election and commended once again the Congolese people for their civic responsibility;

Looked forward to the completion of the electoral process, and reiterated the need for all political parties to act responsibly after the elections within the framework of democratic institutions and the rule of law;

Expressed its sincere appreciation for the central role played by the Independent Electoral Commission, the Congolese National Police, MONUC, the European Union Force and by all the regional and international partners;

Paid tribute to the donor community for their assistance and encouraged the international community as a whole to continue to assist the Democratic Republic of the Congo during the process of peace consolidation, reconstruction and recovery;

Expressed its serious concern at the recent hostilities launched by non-integrated army units in Sake, in North Kivu province, and at the impact that those actions had had on the civilian population including women, children and the elderly;

Called on those units to cease their hostilities, return without delay to their initial positions and submit themselves to the army integration or demobilization process;

Encouraged MONUC, in accordance with its mandate, to continue to address with determination such security challenges, and supported the steps it had taken recently in that regard, particularly in the district of Ituri and the North Kivu province.

Decision of 22 December 2006 (5610th meeting):
resolution 1736 (2006)

At the 5610th meeting, on 22 December 2006, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (Qatar) drew attention to a letter dated 15 November 2006 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council.⁶⁸ In that letter, recalling resolution 1711 (2006) by which the Council had expressed its intention to re-examine the issue of redeployment of one infantry battalion, a military hospital and 50 military observers from ONUB to MONUC before 31 December 2006 with a view to ensuring that MONUC had adequate capacities to perform its mandate fully until 15 February 2007, the Secretary-General warned that, should the 916 troops deployed to MONUC under the authorized strength of ONUB be withdrawn on 31 December 2006, the security situation in northern and central Katanga, where they were deployed, would most likely worsen, with a consequent negative impact on stability and reductions in return of internally displaced persons in the province. He requested that the Council consider a temporary increase in the authorized military strength of MONUC to accommodate the 916 troops authorized at that time under the ONUB mandate, from 1 January until 15 February 2007.

The President also drew attention to a draft resolution submitted by France;⁶⁹ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1736 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Authorized, from 1 January 2007 until the expiry of the current mandate of MONUC on 15 February 2007, an increase in the military strength of MONUC of up to 916 military personnel, to allow for the continued deployment to MONUC of the infantry battalion and the military hospital currently authorized under the ONUB mandate and expressed its intention to examine that issue further before 15 February, in the context of the Secretary-General's forthcoming proposals, with a view to ensuring that MONUC had adequate capabilities to perform its mandate;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 15 February 2007 (5630th meeting):
resolution 1742 (2007)

At its 5616th meeting, on 9 January 2007, the Council was briefed by the High Representative for the Common Foreign and Security Policy and Secretary-General of the Council of the European Union, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, and the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs. Statements were made by several members of the Council⁷⁰ and by the representatives of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Germany (on behalf of the European Union).⁷¹

Recalling the military involvements of the European Union in the Democratic Republic of the Congo since 2003, through operation Artemis in Bunia in summer 2003 and the European Union force, which had been authorized by resolution 1671 (2006) and concluded after four months in November 2006, the representative of Germany noted that the joint efforts of the European Union and the United Nations had helped to provide stability, defuse tensions and deter potential spoilers during critical stages of the election process. Welcoming the success of the first democratic elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in more than 40 years, he conveyed the commitment of the European Union to continue its support for the consolidation of stability and reconstruction in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, notably through assuming a coordinating role for international efforts in the security sector, in close cooperation with the United Nations.⁷²

The High Representative for the Common Foreign and Security Policy of the European Union highlighted the role of the European Union force as a deterrent factor, in particular by containing a possible spread of violence during the elections in close cooperation with MONUC, and called the overall mission a success. He opined that some key elements for its success included the definition of a clear mandate, both in scope and timeframe, and a high degree of interaction with MONUC. He observed that, while the transitional period had entered its final phase, the peace process still faced significant challenges and expressed the determination of the European Union to continue to work with the United Nations.⁷³

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations noted that, during the critical period of the elections, the European Union force had complemented the massive effort of MONUC by adding extra capacity and flexibility and by helping to address security challenges and any potential escalation that could have arisen in the country. Speaking of positive developments in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, he mentioned the appointment of former presidential candidate Mr. Antoine Gizenga as Prime Minister, the formation of the National Assembly, and the decline in fighting between the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the renegade forces of Laurent Nkunda in North Kivu, among others. He announced that MONUC stood ready to support the newly elected Government as it began to address the many challenges remaining, including the completion of the transitional agenda and the implementation of the new constitution. He warned against early disengagement following the elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo as that had resulted elsewhere in the resumption of conflict requiring a new, costlier international intervention.⁷⁴

The Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, reporting on the involvement of the United Nations in the electoral process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo since 2003, commended the manner in which the elections had been conducted by the Electoral Commission and welcomed the establishment of the first democratically elected national institutions in more than four decades. He stressed, however, that many challenges remained, including the holding of local elections. In his view, the establishment of local structures and institutions freely chosen by their constituents was essential for the legitimate extension of State authority, improved governance and the building of durable peace in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, with consequences for the region.⁷⁵

Council members generally commended the successful conduct of the elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as well as the role that the European Union force had played in assisting MONUC in the process, particularly in advancing security sector reform.

In that context, a few representatives praised the deployment of the European Union force as a useful example of cooperation between the European Union and the United Nations.⁷⁶ In response to the question raised by the representative of the United Kingdom regarding the future role to be played by the European Union in helping tackle other difficult problems in Africa,⁷⁷ the High Representative for the Common Foreign and Security Policy of the European Union stated that good lessons had already been drawn and would be useful in other parts of Africa, in particular in Darfur.⁷⁸

Concurring with the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, the representative of South Africa warned that a premature disengagement of forces was likely to have negative consequences.⁷⁹ Noting that the mandate of MONUC was set to expire on 15 February, the representative of Qatar stated that the successful formation of the Government would help the Secretary-General to conduct fruitful consultations with the Congolese authorities on the future of MONUC.⁸⁰

At the 5630th meeting, on 15 February 2007, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (Slovakia) drew attention to a letter dated 15 January 2007 from the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to the President of the Council, asking the Council to consider the possibility of a technical renewal, limited in time, of the mandate of MONUC, in order to give the new Government the necessary flexibility in the determination of the next mandate of the Mission along with the United Nations.⁸¹

The President also drew attention to a draft resolution;⁸² it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1742 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate and personnel strength of MONUC, as set out in its resolutions 1565 (2004), 1592 (2005), 1596 (2005), 1621 (2005), 1635 (2005) and 1736 (2006), until 15 April 2007;

Requested the Secretary-General to report, as soon as possible and not later than 15 March 2007, on his consultations with the Congolese authorities and to submit recommendations on adjustments the Council might consider making to the mandate and capacities of MONUC;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 3 April 2007 (5653rd meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5653rd meeting, on 3 April 2007, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (United Kingdom) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁸³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Deplored the violence which had occurred from 22 to 25 March in Kinshasa between the Congolese security forces and the security guards of Senator Jean-Pierre Bemba;

Expressed its grave concern at the loss of lives, in particular of civilians, and urged all parties to respect the sanctity of human life and the principles of human rights;

Expressed its regret at the destruction and pillaging, including of some diplomatic missions, which had taken place during the clashes;

Emphasized the legitimacy of the new democratically elected institutions and the need for those institutions to ensure the protection of the population;

Urged all Congolese stakeholders to pursue negotiated solutions to their differences with respect for the constitutional framework and the law;

Reiterated the importance of the international community's continuing support for the peace consolidation process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, particularly with a view to carrying out urgently security sector reform, and the need to ensure concerted action by international partners to that end.

Decision of 13 April 2007 (5660th meeting):
resolution 1751 (2007)

At its 5660th meeting, on 13 April 2007, the Council included in its agenda the twenty-third report of the Secretary-General on MONUC.⁸⁴ In the report, the Secretary-General observed that, after the successful conduct of the 2006 elections in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the new Government faced the daunting task of realizing its ambitious programme for 2007-2011. Expressing concern at the most recent political developments in that country, which included, inter alia, allegations of widespread electoral corruption, he urged political leaders in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to respect the principles of transparency, inclusiveness and tolerance of dissent. He announced that, at the request of the new Government, MONUC would offer assistance for the holding of local elections. Referring to the security challenges posed by armed groups in the east, the Secretary-General stressed the importance of progress in security sector reform for the restoration and consolidation of peace and the exit strategy for MONUC. He reported that consultations regarding the future of MONUC were under way with the Congolese authorities and the international community and recommended that the Council approve a post-transition mandate for MONUC, during which it would continue to operate at the existing authorized strength until 31 December 2007 as a fully integrated Mission, reinforcing and complementing the work of the United Nations country team. He underscored that an operational plan for the gradual downsizing and eventual withdrawal of MONUC and a responsible exit strategy would require clear linkages between the achievement of benchmarks in key areas and the handover of responsibility to other actors, including the Government, the United Nations family and other international actors.

The representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (United Kingdom) drew attention to a draft resolution;⁸⁵ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1751 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia, decided to extend the mandate and personnel strength of MONUC, as set out in its resolutions 1565 (2004), 1592 (2005), 1596 (2005), 1621 (2005), 1635 (2005) and 1736 (2006), until 15 May 2007; and to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 15 May 2007 (5674th meeting):

At its 5674th meeting, on 15 May 2007, the Council again included in its agenda the twenty-third report of the Secretary-General on MONUC⁸⁶ and extended an invitation to the representative of Democratic Republic of the Congo to participate in the discussion.

The President (United States) drew attention to a draft resolution;⁸⁷ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1756 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the deployment of MONUC until 31 December 2007 and authorized the continuation until that date of up to 17,030 military personnel, 760 military observers, 391 police trainers and 750 personnel of formed police units;

Decided that MONUC would have the mandate, within the limits of its capabilities and in its areas of deployment, to assist the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in establishing a stable security environment in the country;

Urged the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to strengthen its efforts with a view to effectively extending the State's authority throughout its territory, establishing its control over the exploitation and export of natural resources, and improving the transparency of the management of the revenues from the exploitation of those natural resources;

Demanded that the militias and armed groups that were still present in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo lay down their arms and engage voluntarily and without any further delay or preconditions in their demobilization, repatriation or resettlement, and reintegration;

Urged all States, especially those in the region, including the Democratic Republic of the Congo itself, to take appropriate steps to end the illicit trade in natural resources, including if necessary through judicial means, and, where necessary, to report to the Council, and called upon the international financial institutions to assist the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in establishing effective and transparent control over the exploitation of natural resources.

Decision of 23 July 2007 (5721st meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5721st meeting, on 23 July 2007, in which the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo was invited to participate, the President (China) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁸⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its deep concern at the deteriorating security situation in the east of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular in North and South Kivu;

Urged all actors involved to refrain from any action leading to a military confrontation, that could result in further tension and aggravate the ongoing humanitarian crisis in the Kivus, and to seek a solution to the current crisis through political and diplomatic means;

Encouraged MONUC, in conformity with its mandate, to assist the Government, including through the provision of good offices, in its efforts to find a lasting solution to the crisis in the Kivus through promoting reconciliation and political dialogue.

Decision of 31 July 2007 (5726th meeting): resolution 1768 (2007)

By a letter dated 16 July 2007 to the President of the Council, the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1533 (2004) transmitted the report of the Group of Experts.⁸⁹ In that report, based on new investigations into the widespread diversion of natural resources in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Group of Experts reconfirmed the need for enhanced controls of natural resources and for the international community to lend its support to the project to develop a certification system for precious and semi-precious minerals and stones, as well as other mineral substances produced by small-scale miners. The Group also made recommendations designed to enhance aircraft security and proposed the restructuring of government civil aviation services. Noting that widely compromised supply chains and the lack of adequate due diligence systems undermined the measures authorized by the Council to prevent financial assistance to illegal armed groups, the Group recommended that companies which could not demonstrate due diligence practices be sanctioned. In order to ensure institutional knowledge on the embargo and improve its capacity to investigate potential violators, the Group recommended the creation of a database specific to the arms embargo imposed against the Democratic Republic of the Congo. In that connection, the Group also recommended that the authority of the MONUC mechanism for collecting and reporting information on embargoed material be extended to include additional technical details. In the event that non-enforcement of sanctions was the result of a lack of capacity of Member States, the Group recommended that its mandate include the task, in cooperation with those countries, of assessing their capacity needs and, where possible, suggesting ways to improve their ability to enforce targeted sanctions.

At its 5726th meeting, on 31 July 2007, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned letter containing the report of the Group of Experts⁸⁹ and extended an invitation to the representative of Democratic Republic of the Congo to participate in the discussion.

⁸⁹ S/2007/423; the report was submitted pursuant to paragraph 4 of resolution 1698 (2006).

The President (China) drew attention to a draft resolution;⁹⁰ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1768 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend until 10 August 2007 the measures on arms embargo imposed by resolution 1493 (2003) as amended and expanded by resolution 1596 (2005);

Decided to extend, for the same period, the measures on transport imposed by resolution 1596 (2005);

Decided to extend, for the same period, the financial and travel measures imposed by resolutions 1596 (2005) and 1649 (2005), and resolution 1698 (2006);

Decided to extend, for the same period, the mandate of the Group of Experts referred to in paragraph 3 of resolution 1698 (2006);

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 10 August 2007 (5730th meeting): resolution 1771 (2007)

At its 5730th meeting, on 10 August 2007, the Council included again in its agenda the letter dated 16 July 2006 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1533 (2004) to the President of the Council,⁹¹ and invited the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to participate in the discussion.

The President (Congo) drew attention to a draft resolution submitted by France;⁹² it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1771 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to renew until 15 February 2008 the measures on arms imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493 (2003) as amended and expanded by paragraph 1 of resolution 1596 (2005);

Decided further that the measures referred to above should not apply to technical training and assistance agreed to by the Government and intended solely for support of units of the army and police of the Democratic Republic of the Congo that were in the process of their integration in the provinces of North and South Kivu and the Ituri district;

Decided to renew, for the period specified above, the measures on transport imposed by paragraphs 6, 7 and 10 of resolution 1596 (2005);

⁹⁰ S/2007/465.

⁹² S/2007/485.

Decided that, no later than 15 February 2008, it should review the measures set forth in the resolution, with a view to adjusting them, as appropriate, in the light of the consolidation of the security situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular progress in security sector reform including the integration of the armed forces and the reform of the national police, and in disarming, demobilizing, resettling or repatriating, as appropriate, and reintegrating Congolese and foreign armed groups.

Decision of 21 December 2007 (5814th meeting):

On 14 November 2007, the Secretary-General submitted the twenty-fourth report on MONUC,⁹³ by which he noted that the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo had demonstrated a strong determination to exert its sovereign responsibilities throughout the country. However, long-standing security challenges in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo continued to overshadow the positive developments. In his view, those challenges required MONUC to maintain a robust capacity in the east and a continued police, rule of law, human rights, political and civil affairs presence throughout the country. He therefore recommended the renewal of the Mission's mandate for a period of one year, and that it retain its existing complement of military, police and civilian personnel at least until the end of local elections. Gradual drawdown might then commence, subject to progress towards meeting benchmarks such as the successful completion of the local elections and ensuring the security of the population. He believed that the problems posed by all foreign armed groups on Congolese soil, particularly FDLR, could not be solved through a purely military solution, but required a common approach and close cooperation among the Governments in the region. In that context, the Secretary-General welcomed the increased dialogue among Great Lakes countries, both bilaterally and through mechanisms such as the Great Lakes Pact and the Tripartite Plus Joint Committee. As the protection of civilians remained central to the resolution of the crisis in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo, he announced that MONUC would continue to focus on its mandate for the protection of civilians. He further insisted that a strong security sector programme was needed in order to enable the Congolese authorities to assume their full responsibilities as MONUC began its drawdown, and urged the Government and its international partners to seize the opportunity presented by the planned round table on security sector reform to develop a detailed and coherent blueprint without delay. Lastly, he recommended that the Council authorize MONUC to provide full support to the local elections scheduled for 2008, subject to progress by the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and relevant national institutions in putting in place the legal, institutional and financial frameworks needed to conduct credible polls.

At its 5814th meeting, on 21 December 2007, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned report⁹³ and invited the representative of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to participate in the discussion.

The President (Italy) then drew attention to a draft resolution;⁹⁴ it was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1794 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate and capacity of MONUC, as set out in resolution 1756 (2007), until 31 December 2008 and authorized the continuation until that date of up to 17,030 military personnel, 760 military observers, 391 police personnel and 6 formed police units comprising up to 125 personnel each;

Requested MONUC to attach the highest priority to addressing the crisis in the Kivus in all its dimensions, in particular through the protection of civilians and support for the implementation of the Nairobi Joint Communiqué; demanded that the militias and armed groups still present in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular FDLR, the ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe and the dissident militia of Laurent Nkunda and the Lord's Resistance Army, lay down their arms and engage voluntarily and without any further delay or preconditions in their demobilization, repatriation, resettlement, and reintegration, as appropriate;

Also demanded, recalling its resolution 1698 (2006), that all armed groups, in particular the forces of Laurent Nkunda and FDLR, immediately stop recruiting and using children and release all children associated with them;

Requested MONUC to undertake a thorough review of its efforts to prevent and respond to sexual violence, and to pursue a comprehensive mission-wide strategy, in close cooperation with the United Nations country team and other partners, to strengthen prevention, protection, and response to sexual violence, including through training for the Congolese security forces in accordance with its mandate, and to regularly report on actions taken in that regard, including factual data and trend analyses of the problem.

9. The situation in the Central African Republic

Decision of 28 October 2004 (5067th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5067th meeting, on 28 October 2004, the Security Council invited the representative of the Central African Republic to participate in the discussion. The President (United Kingdom) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the spirit of consensus which the Central African parties have shown and which attests to their determination to continue the transition process to the end;

Encouraged the Central Africans to continue their efforts to ensure the success of the constitutional referendum in November and the satisfactory organization of free, transparent and democratic presidential and legislative elections in January 2005;

Welcomed the assistance provided by the international community to the stabilization and recovery of the Central African Republic;

Called upon international donors and the international financial institutions to continue to provide resolute support to the Central African Republic;

Expressed its concern at the deterioration of the State's finances and of the public sector, and called on the Central African authorities to act with determination in order to address this situation;

Encouraged the Central African authorities to continue to combat with determination human rights violations.

Decision of 22 July 2005 (5232nd meeting): statement by the President

At its 5232nd meeting, on 22 July 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in the Central African Republic and the activities of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic (BONUCA).² In his report, the Secretary-General observed that, following two rounds of elections, held on 13 March and 8 May 2005 respectively, General François Bozizé had been elected as the next President of the Central African Republic. Despite a few shortcomings, the electoral process had been deemed to be free, reliable, fair and transparent. Noting that concerns remained regarding the security situation, the Secretary-General reported that the authorities of the Central African Republic were concerned that armed gangs, which continued their attacks throughout the country, could be used for political destabilization of the new regime. He added that efforts by BONUCA to restructure the country's armed forces and to complete the reintegration of former combatants were continuing. On the economic situation, the Secretary-General stated that the country's finances remained in crisis and deeply dependent on external budget support, but added that growth was expected to resume in most sectors in 2005. He indicated that serious human rights abuses had taken place throughout the country, including by law enforcement agencies, and stated that BONUCA continued its sensitization and training programmes.

The Council invited the representative of the Central African Republic to participate in the discussion. The President (Greece) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Stated that it was deeply gratified by the successful holding of the presidential and legislative elections, welcomed the establishment of the newly elected institutions whose stability was necessary to ensure lasting peace in the Central African Republic;

Commended the Multinational Force of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community, France, the European Union, China and Germany for providing decisive support to them;

Called upon international donors and the international financial institutions to continue to assist the Central African Republic generously;

Requested the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of setting up a follow-up committee or enlarging the Committee

Reiterated its full support for BONUCA;

Welcomed the courageous efforts of the Government to implement the reforms advocated by the bilateral partners and international financial institutions aimed at improving the management of the national treasury, ensuring transparency in economic activities and good governance;

Expressed serious concern that instability along the border areas of Chad, the Sudan and the Central African Republic represented a threat to security and stability in the Central African Republic and its neighbours;

Reaffirmed its commitment to the territorial integrity of the Central African Republic;

Requested the Secretary-General to reinforce cooperation between the United Nations and member States of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community;

10. Items relating to peace and security in Africa

A. The situation in Africa

Deliberations of 24 September 2004 (5043rd meeting)

At its 5043rd meeting, on 24 September 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda, under the item entitled "The situation in Africa", a briefing by the President of Nigeria and current Chairman of the African Union. Statements were made by all Council members, the Secretary-General and the President of Nigeria.¹

The President of the Council (Spain) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 22 September 2004 from the representative of Nigeria, transmitting a communiqué issued by the Peace and Security Council of the African Union regarding the situation in the Darfur region of the Sudan and the situation in Somalia.² He then provided some introductory remarks in his national capacity, recalling his recent visit to the Sudan the previous week. While expressing the view that the humanitarian situation in Darfur was beginning to slowly improve, he also noted that attacks on the civilian population had not stopped entirely and that it was therefore essential that all the parties respected the ceasefire agreement. Underlining the importance of the African Union's role in Darfur by, inter alia, sponsoring the Abuja peace negotiations, he recalled that the international community expected all the parties to negotiate in good faith to reach an agreement that could be implemented as soon as possible. Finally, in connection with the situation in the south of the Sudan, he advocated an early conclusion of the Naivasha negotiations, which could have very positive effects on the situation in Darfur.³

In his statement, the Secretary-General deemed the tragedy in Darfur to be one of the greatest challenges the international community faced, with the urgent task being the protection of civilians from violence and human rights abuses. Recalling that the United Nations was supporting the African Union to strengthen its operations in all parts of Darfur, the Secretary-General said that the expansion of the African Union's mission should be supported with substantial international resources, including logistics support, equipment and financing. Similarly, recalling that the United Nations was also supporting the leadership of the African Union in the political process to achieve a genuine political settlement, the Secretary-General called on the international community to support the African Union in such a task, by making "unambiguously clear" to both sides of the conflict that they were expected to resume negotiations for a political settlement in Darfur with the spirit of compromise necessary to reach an agreement.⁴

The President of Nigeria and current Chairman of the African Union concurred that the situation in Darfur posed serious challenges to the African Union and to the international community and referred to the peace talks in Abuja as one of the most important steps undertaken under the leadership of the African Union to address the situation in Darfur. Stating that the African Union was determined to bring peace to Darfur since the peace and security of the Sudan would positively impact the subregion as well as the whole African continent, he emphasized the collaborative role that the international community, particularly the United Nations through the Security Council, could play in strengthening the African Union's efforts in the region. He therefore urged donors and the international community to enhance the African Union's capacity by providing logistics, training, the deployment of personnel and the wherewithal to maintain a force level of approximately 3,000 troops in Darfur. The challenge, he added, was to determine which member States of the African Union would contribute to the force and to the necessary logistics and resources. Adding that such a force should be in place only until a permanent political arrangement had been agreed upon and implemented, he noted that, in light of the limited experience of the African Union with such operations, command and control would likewise be a challenge.

Turning to other issues affecting Africa, the President of Nigeria welcomed the recent extension of the mandates of the United Nations Mission in Liberia and the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone; and welcomed the Secretary-General's recommendations on expanding the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC). Concluding his statement, he urged the Security Council to continue its current positive role in support of all efforts in Africa and the international community at large to increase its level of assistance, especially in the areas of capacity-building and infrastructure development, to ensure the achievement of social and economic development in Africa.⁵

In their reactions to the briefing, most Council members generally expressed concern for the situation in Darfur, recognizing that the most urgent priority was to stop the killings and end all violence against civilians; reiterated that the Security Council was determined to keep up the pressure on the Government of the Sudan and the rebel groups to return to the negotiating table and remain committed to the peace process; and supported the efforts of the African Union in this regard.

Asked by the representative of the United States whether the Security Council and interested countries were doing enough in Darfur or could do anything different, the President of Nigeria expressed the view that the five permanent members of the Council should act in a uniform manner to put unvarying pressure on both the Government of the Sudan and the rebels.⁶ Stressing that the Council's immediate priority in Darfur was to end the violence against civilians, the representative of the United Kingdom observed that the Government of the Sudan needed assistance in this regard and, therefore, encouraged the Government itself and the African Union to quickly identify what reinforcements were needed on the ground in Darfur, as well as what the Government of the Sudan was prepared to accept and what the African Union could provide.⁷ The representative of China stated that the priority was to achieve, as soon as possible, expanded deployment by the African Union and for the international community to provide all possible assistance in that connection. Noting that the genesis of the Darfur problem was very complicated, he stressed that only through a political settlement would there be durable peace in the region of Darfur. He therefore supported the African Union in this regard and called on all parties, especially the rebel groups, to demonstrate more flexibility so that a comprehensive agreement could be achieved.⁸ The representative of France stated that the Council needed to be very demanding of the Government of the Sudan to fulfil all its obligations, particularly the combating of impunity and the end of violence, and appealed to the international community to provide adequate assistance to the African Union.⁹ The representative of Brazil stressed that preventive action and early warning were at the core of regional organizations' assets and that there was, therefore, a need to find innovative ways to work within a logic of conflict avoidance that involved eradicating underdevelopment, lack of education, poverty and hunger. He argued that the growing interrelationship between security and economic and social development underscored the need for better cooperation between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council through Article 65 of the Charter.¹⁰ The representative of Angola, echoed by the representative of Romania, noted that the situation in Darfur provided the Council with the opportunity to take better advantage of Chapter VIII of the Charter regarding cooperation with regional organizations.¹¹ The representative of Chile suggested that, in the light of the discussion on cooperation between the African Union and the Council, it might be interesting to hold a joint meeting of the Council and the African Union Peace and Security Council.¹²

Deliberations of 19 December 2005 to 4 April 2007 (5331st, 5525th, 5571st and 5655th meetings)

At its 5331st meeting, on 19 December 2005, the Council included in its agenda a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator. Following the briefing statements were made by all Council members.

In his briefing, the Under-Secretary-General elaborated on the deteriorating situation in Darfur; reported on the violent attacks by the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) in northern Uganda, southern Sudan and most recently in the Democratic Republic of the Congo; and informed the Council of his recent trip to

Zimbabwe, where the situation was worsening due to food shortages. With reference to the sustainability of the humanitarian operation in the Darfur, he stressed the need for an expanded and more effective security presence on the ground as soon as possible in order to provide protection to civilians and allow internally displaced persons to return to their homes. In connection with the regional crises caused by the activities of LRA, he invited the Council to strongly condemn LRA attacks against civilian and humanitarian workers and insist on the immediate cessation of violence. To help the Council consider further steps and improve its understanding of LRA, the Under-Secretary-General suggested the appointment by the Council of a panel of experts, as well as the holding of regular updates on the effects of LRA activities in the region. Finally, with reference to the humanitarian situation in Zimbabwe, he invited the United Nations and the humanitarian community at large to try to engage more actively with the Government of Zimbabwe to address the enormous humanitarian crisis. In closing, he urged the international community to support and fund a more ambitious development and humanitarian agenda, adding that humanitarian crises resulted from a total absence of peace and security and that humanitarian aid could not be an alibi for unwillingness to address the root causes of conflict.¹³

Council members expressed concern at the deepening humanitarian situations in Darfur, northern Uganda, southern Sudan and Zimbabwe and noted, inter alia, the need to tackle the root causes of such humanitarian situations, and the importance of a regional approach.

Referring to the situation in Darfur, several members stressed the importance of ensuring a positive outcome of the Abuja negotiations in order to stabilize the situation and ensure effective protection for the civilian population.¹⁴ Likewise, in connection with the humanitarian situation in northern Uganda and southern Sudan caused by the attacks of LRA, the representatives of Denmark and Japan emphasized the need for a resumption of dialogue between the Government of Uganda and LRA.¹⁵

On the situation in Zimbabwe, some members urged the Government of Zimbabwe to demonstrate greater willingness to engage in a dialogue with the international community in order to provide assistance and protection to its own people.¹⁶ Reiterating the importance his country attached to this situation and noting that it considered the current food crisis to be a threat to regional peace and security, the representative of the United States urged the Government of Zimbabwe to reach out to its people, political parties and civil society groups and engage in a dialogue aimed at reaching a sustainable political settlement. He suggested that the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs pay a visit to Zimbabwe as well as to other countries in the region.¹⁷ Similarly, the representatives of France and Denmark suggested that it might be useful if the Secretary-General himself visited Zimbabwe, while the representative of the United Kingdom insisted on the necessity for seeing substantial progress before the international community could think of the Secretary-General himself getting involved in the issue.¹⁸

At the end of the meeting, while responding to questions from Council members about the possibility of a high-level visit to Zimbabwe, the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator confirmed that the President of Zimbabwe had invited the Secretary-General to the country and that the latter was planning to send the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs on a mission to engage in dialogue with the leaders of the country.¹⁹

At its 5525th meeting, on 15 September 2006, the Council included in its agenda a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator, who addressed the Council and answered questions on the humanitarian situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Uganda following his recent visit to the countries. All Council members made statements.

In his briefing, although acknowledging that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo had improved with more relief workers on the ground, the Under-Secretary-General noted that immunity remained a major obstacle to further progress. In this regard, he urged the Council and other Member States to put pressure on the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to end all violence against civilians. He also called upon the Council to show its commitment by maintaining the current strength of MONUC and by exerting pressure on the Government to end impunity and promote the rule of law and good governance. Turning to the “more promising” situation in northern Uganda, the Under-Secretary-General said that he had seen “improvement on almost every indicator”, including “greater humanitarian access, smaller numbers of night commuters and better security environment in the camps of internally displaced persons. Highlighting the signing on 26 August of a Cessation of Hostilities Agreement between the Government of Uganda and LRA, he underlined the importance for the Council to help move forward the process in order to reach a final agreement as soon as possible.²⁰

Following the briefing, members of the Council stated that they were encouraged by the recent improvements in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Uganda and welcomed the progress made; but continued to be concerned at the enormous challenges facing the two countries, as not all the factors of instability had been eliminated. They welcomed the ceasefire between the Government of Uganda and LRA and reiterated that the issue of impunity should be addressed in both countries in order to achieve lasting peace.

At its 5571st meeting, on 22 November 2006, the Council included in its agenda a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator on critical humanitarian challenges in Africa, particularly the situation in Darfur and the peace talks between the Government of Uganda and LRA. Following the briefing, statements were made by all Council members.

Concerning the situation in the Sudan, and particularly in Darfur, the Under-Secretary-General reported that, since his last mission to Darfur, the Government of the Sudan was still failing to protect its own citizens, even in areas without rebels, resulting in an increase of the number of people in need of emergency assistance to 4 million, with an unprecedented 2 million internally displaced persons. To alleviate the dire situation on the ground, the Under-Secretary-General recommended an immediate cessation of hostilities and respect for the ceasefire by all parties as well as the immediate and lasting implementation of all freedom of movement guarantees afforded by the Government of the Sudan. On the high-level meeting between the United Nations and the African Union on 16 November in Addis Ababa, he expressed the hope that the agreement reached on the establishment of a hybrid United Nations/African Union force would mark a historic turning point, re-energizing the peace process, strengthening the ceasefire and facilitating effective peacekeeping. Finally, he called for an immediate deployment in Darfur of a more effective force with the mandate, resources, and capabilities to deploy proactively to areas of risk for civilian populations and facilitate the protection of humanitarian activities.

Turning to the Juba peace process between the Government of Uganda and LRA, the Under-Secretary-General indicated that, except for small incidents, the cessation of hostilities had been respected, allowing hundreds of thousands of internally displaced persons to start returning to northern Uganda. He added, however, that he was struck by the vulnerability of the peace process, which had made little substantial progress since the cessation of hostilities was signed in August 2006. Recalling his recent meeting with the LRA leadership, he said that he had urged it to move towards a speedy end to the conflict and to ensure the reassembly of the LRA forces. Concluding, the Under-Secretary-General stressed that it was crucial for the United Nations to continue funding the mediation effort by the Juba Initiative Project, which was led by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs; maintain political assistance to the mediation efforts; and provide immediate assistance to the assembly areas.²¹

In their statements following the briefing, members of the Council, inter alia, expressed deep concern about the worsening humanitarian situation in Darfur and its negative impact on the wider region, particularly on Chad and the Central African Republic; urged all parties concerned to take action to implement the ceasefire, ensure the delivery of humanitarian relief to the needy population, and revive the deadlocked political process; deplored the failure of the Government of the Sudan to protect its own people and called for a greater role of the international community in that regard; welcomed the outcome of the recent meeting between the United Nations and the African Union in Addis Ababa and called for its prompt translation into concrete steps.

While the representatives of the United Kingdom and the Congo said they were perplexed by the disconnect between the deteriorating humanitarian situation on the ground and progress in the political process,²² the representative of China maintained that it would be very hard to settle humanitarian crises without stability in place.²³ Likewise, the representative of the Russian Federation held that political progress would have a positive impact on the management of the humanitarian crises.²⁴ With regard to the deployment of a peacekeeping force in Darfur, the representative of Denmark stressed that a robust and efficient international force on the ground was the only way forward.²⁵ The representative of the United States reiterated that an effective peacekeeping operation should be deployed under United Nations command and control,²⁶ while the representative of France stated that an expanded international peacekeeping presence could be effective only if the parties established and implemented a genuine ceasefire and resumed the political peace process initiated by the Abuja Agreement.²⁷

On the situation in northern Uganda, most members commended the renewal on 1 November of the ceasefire agreement between the Government and LRA, while urging both sides to implement the provisions of the agreement and move the Juba peace process forward; expressed satisfaction concerning the improvement of the humanitarian situation; and urged LRA to quickly release detained non-combatants, women and children in particular. Concerning the issue of impunity, several speakers held the view that the issue must be addressed in the peace talks, reaffirming that without justice and an end to impunity there could not be lasting peace.²⁸ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania noted that peace and justice should not be mutually exclusive and that the issue of immunity must be handled tactfully so as not to compromise the strategic objectives.²⁹

At its 5655th meeting, on 4 April 2007, the Council included in its agenda a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator on his first mission to the Sudan, Chad, and the Central African Republic. Following the briefing, statements were made by all Council members.

After explaining his findings in each of the three countries, highlighting the complexity of the conflicts in each of them, the Under-Secretary-General emphasized the need to address the regional as well as internal aspects of those conflicts and advocated a political solution through dialogue and mediation, aided from outside where necessary, but relying on national actors. He stressed that there was no more important actor in this than the Security Council.³⁰

Council members were unanimous in expressing concern about the worsening humanitarian situation in Darfur and about the fact that the situation seriously affected the situation in neighbouring countries, such as Chad and the Central African Republic. The representative of Panama welcomed the fact that no Council member had argued that the issues belonged within the purview of other forums of the Organization, and noted that when human suffering crossed borders, that alone made it an issue that the Council needed to address.³¹

Specifically concerning the situation in Darfur, several delegations called on the parties to endeavour to find a political solution; welcomed the recent agreement between the United Nations and the Government of the Sudan to lift restrictions for humanitarian workers in Darfur, and renewed the appeal to the Government of the Sudan to respect such agreement and remove bureaucratic obstacles, including delays in issuing visas and work permits for humanitarian workers. Noting that efforts should be made to avoid political approaches that would exacerbate the situation, the representative of China stated that it was imperative to take a targeted approach to address both the “root causes and the symptoms”, avoiding any politicization of humanitarian issues.³² The representative of the Russian Federation maintained that the humanitarian problems in Darfur could be resolved only with the attainment of a stable political solution to the crisis, therefore requiring that all armed groups that remained outside the Darfur Peace Agreement became part of that Agreement.³³

On the situation in Chad and the Central African Republic, the representatives of France, Belgium, Slovakia and the United States reaffirmed their support for the idea of deploying a peacekeeping force to eastern Chad, in its border areas with the Sudan.³⁴ The representative of the United Kingdom underlined the need for an adequate protection of civilians, including those in the United Nations camps,³⁵ while the representative of the Russian Federation found it justifiable to use the Central Emergency Response Fund to help the underfinanced humanitarian activities in the Sudan, Chad and the Central African Republic, with funds allocated on an “objective and non-politicized” basis.³⁶

B. Africa's food crisis as a threat to peace and security

Deliberations of 30 June 2005 (5220th meeting)

At its 5220th meeting, on 30 June 2005, at which all members of the Council made statements, the Council included in its agenda, under the item entitled "Africa's food crisis as a threat to peace and security", a briefing by Mr. James Morris, Executive Director of the World Food Programme.

The Executive Director asserted that the greatest humanitarian crisis the international community faced was the gradual disintegration of social structures in southern Africa due to hunger, AIDS, recurring drought and failing governance. He elaborated that HIV/AIDS had taken one million lives during the previous year and created 14 million orphans in sub-Saharan Africa, in addition to undermining the capacity of communities to produce food and disrupting the educational and health systems. He believed that the prevalence of hunger served as an accurate barometer for the level of social instability, as hunger was both a cause and an effect of political conflict. He expressed regret that although hungry people had a right to assistance and food should not be used as a weapon of war, aid distribution was often politically motivated and food aid was in sharp decline. In his view, competition for limited food resources, population movements and large numbers of internally displaced persons and refugees caused by hunger posed a threat to stability and security in the region. He noted that food aid had not only been a critical component in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration efforts, but also a tool to restore social and economic stability, support education, help rebuild communities, and give people the means to safeguard their own welfare. With regard to the role of the Council in supporting humanitarian efforts, the Executive Director declared that the Council's focus on the issue of hunger transmitted a powerful message. In conclusion, he welcomed donor attention to emergencies not apparent to the public eye and thanked the Council for its support.³⁷

Council members shared the concerns of the effects of the triple threat of food insecurity, HIV/AIDS and weakened governance, particularly to the countries of southern Africa. According to the representative of the Philippines, the briefing reinforced the "incontrovertible link" between the maintenance of peace and security and development, and the representative of Brazil welcomed the opportunity for the Council to examine the correlation between famine and armed conflict.³⁸ In the view of the representative of Benin, peace and security were threatened by "protracted destabilization" in sub-Saharan countries as a result of the combined effects of conflicts, climatic conditions and the fight for survival and control of the meagre resources available.³⁹ Acknowledging that humanitarian challenges had not been taken up by the Council, the representative of Romania declared that the Council welcomed the opportunity to be informed of and to examine humanitarian challenges that could constitute "ominous threats" to regional peace, security and stability.⁴⁰ The representative of the United Kingdom held that the underlying causes of hunger were very complex, although there was no doubt that hunger had links both to governance and to the Council's principal concern of peace and security.⁴¹ In the view of the representative of China, the Council should recognize the direct relationship between conflicts in Africa and the issue of food crises.⁴²

The representative of the United Kingdom argued that the Council should be better at predicting and preventing conflict, and the representative of Benin suggested that the credibility of the United Nations, particularly of the Council, would benefit from enhancing its conflict-prevention capacities.⁴³ The representatives of Japan and Greece called for comprehensive remedies to address the complexity of the problem, while the representative of the United States held that the international community should develop flexible tools to accommodate the unique causes of each particular crisis.⁴⁴

The representative of Benin emphasized that political disputes should not affect the delivery of humanitarian assistance, and the representative of Algeria believed that food should never become an instrument of war or diplomatic coercion.⁴⁵

A number of Council members expressed particular concern over the crisis in Zimbabwe, particularly with respect to the estimated 275,000 people recently left homeless, which had caused further deterioration of the humanitarian situation there.

C. Peace and security in Africa

Initial proceedings⁴⁶

Deliberations of 25 September 2007 (5749th meeting)

By a letter dated 19 September 2007 to the Secretary-General,⁴⁷ the representative of France indicated that a debate on the topic “Peace and security in Africa” would be held in the Council on 25 September under the presidency of France and that the meeting would be chaired by the President of France, Nicolas Sarkozy. The letter also contained a concept paper aimed at guiding the discussion, including questions around the main challenges to peace and security in Africa and ways to meet these challenges, such as the promotion of effective partnerships between the United Nations and Africa.

At its 5749th meeting, held on 25 September 2007 at the level of Heads of State and Government,⁴⁸ the Council included the above-mentioned letter in its agenda. All Council members made statements, as did the Secretary-General and the Chairperson of the African Union Commission.

⁴⁶ At its 5261st meeting, held on 14 September 2005 to consider the agenda item entitled “Threats to international peace and security”, the Council addressed the issue of peace and security in Africa and adopted resolution 1625 (2005) thereon. See section 53 (Threats to international peace and security) of the present chapter.

The President of the Council (France) mentioned that this was the fourth summit of its kind, following similar summits in 1992, 2000 and 2005.

The Secretary-General then noted that although many African countries were facing peace and security challenges, there were some encouraging signs as well. While the United Nations was working with the African Union to better address conflicts, such as the development of an African standby force, he also intended to propose the strengthening of the Department of Political Affairs to make better use of good offices and of promoting the prevention of conflicts. The United Nations would remain committed to development and peacebuilding in Africa.⁴⁹

Speakers praised the close cooperation between the United Nations and the African Union and appreciated that the Secretary-General had given top priority to Africa, especially the Darfur crisis, and they all stressed the need to further enhance this partnership.

The representative of South Africa said that Africa’s capacity and resources to cope with conflicts was however missing despite Africa’s efforts to gain its own peace and stability.⁵⁰ This was echoed by many speakers who agreed on the need to promote capacity and institution-building in Africa so it could better respond to internal crises.⁵¹

While welcoming cooperation with the United Nations, African leaders held that primary responsibility for peace and security on the continent rested with African States.⁵² The representative of South Africa emphasized that Africa was committed to addressing its own problems. In this respect, he mentioned a number of successful African initiatives in Côte d'Ivoire, Liberia, Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Sudan.⁵³ The representative of Panama opined that the future of Africa was in the hands of Africans, but that the international community could play an important role in working with the continent to realize its future hopes,⁵⁴ and the representative of France saw no contradiction between mobilizing assistance for Africa and the desire of African States to take their fate into their own hands.⁵⁵ The representative of the Russian Federation, for his part, expressed support for a more active and responsive role of African States in advancing the goals of national reconciliation, disarmament and governance.⁵⁶

Most speakers focused their statements on the Darfur crisis and on the situation in Somalia. Several of them noted that the cooperation between the United Nations and the African Union was being tested in Darfur, and that the hybrid peacekeeping force would provide a framework for future cooperation.⁵⁷ The Chairperson of the African Union however voiced concerns that promised support thus far from partners in the international community to equip and airlift the African troops in Darfur had been inadequate and slow to materialize. Regarding the situation in Somalia, he urged the Security Council to step in and ensure that the African Union Mission in Somalia would be replaced by a peacekeeping operation by early in the next year.⁵⁸ Many other speakers also called for the provision of support to the African Union peacekeeping efforts in Somalia.⁵⁹

The representative of the United States welcomed the deployment of the African Union Mission in the Sudan, but warned that 7,000 troops were not enough, "if you believe what is taking place on the ground is genocide". He called on the Government of the Sudan to facilitate the deployment of a robust peacekeeping force to save lives and stressed that there must be more consistent pressure to help the people of Darfur.⁶⁰ This was echoed by the representative of the United Kingdom.⁶¹ On this point, the Chairperson of the African Union said that the African Union had told the Sudanese to have faith and had no doubt that United Nations resolutions would be implemented.⁶² In addition, many speakers welcomed the resolution adopted earlier by the Council establishing a multidimensional international presence in Chad and the Central African Republic with a view of stopping the spillover effects of the Darfur crisis.⁶³

Finally, speakers suggested that economic growth and social improvement could help prevent conflict.⁶⁴ Some also stressed that it was crucial to address the grievances of the past and to fight impunity.⁶⁵ For the representative of Belgium, naming and shaming was not enough: punishment was key and the International Criminal Court had an important role to play in that regard.⁶⁶ The representatives of Slovakia, Panama and the United Kingdom expressed particular concern at the deteriorating humanitarian situation in Zimbabwe, and the United Kingdom urged the Secretary-General to send a humanitarian mission there.⁶⁷

In his statement made at the end of the debate, the Chairperson of the African Union Commission noted that peace operations were financed one by one and therefore were too slow to deploy. However, although Africa must be helped, it did not justify unbridled intervention as Africa, he said, was no longer "anyone's backyard". He also suggested that the United Nations review Chapter VIII of the Charter in a creative light and integrate a regional component in all of its actions. At the same time, the dynamic of integration must result in the reduction of foreign military bases currently operating in Africa. He

11. The situation between Eritrea and Ethiopia

Decisions of 12 March 2004 to 13 September 2005: resolutions 1531 (2004), 1560 (2004), 1586 (2005) and 1622 (2005)

At its 4924th, 5032nd, 5139th, and 5259th meetings,¹ the Security Council adopted unanimously and without debate resolutions extending the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) on the basis of reports of the Secretary-General.² In his reports, the Secretary-General noted that, inter alia, the general situation in and around the Temporary Security Zone remained relatively stable, but, in the absence of progress on the demarcation of the border and full cooperation with the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission and UNMEE, that stability should be considered as fragile; the need for implementation of the final and binding decision of 13 April 2002 of the Boundary Commission and improvement of bilateral relations through dialogue; and that the continuing stalemate in the peace process raised questions about the future of UNMEE, which was never meant to support a status quo indefinitely. He recommended that UNMEE should continue its presence at that time, as a stabilizing factor.

By those resolutions,³ the Council, inter alia, extended the mandate of UNMEE for subsequent six-month periods; called on the parties concerned to cooperate with UNMEE and the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission and to create the necessary conditions for demarcation to proceed; demanded the removal of restrictions on UNMEE; decided to monitor closely the steps taken by the parties in the implementation of their commitments under the Algiers Agreements, including through the Boundary Commission, and to review any implications for UNMEE; and called on Eritrea to enter into dialogue and cooperation with the Secretary-General's Special Envoy for Ethiopia and Eritrea.

Decision of 4 October 2005 (5276th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5276th meeting, on 4 October 2005, the President (Romania) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its grave concern at the decision of the Government of Eritrea to restrict all types of UNMEE helicopter flights within Eritrean airspace or coming to Eritrea, effective from 5 October 2005;

Emphasized that the aforementioned decision gravely contravened the call in resolution 1312 (2000) on the parties to provide UNMEE with the access, assistance, support and protection required for the performance of its duties;

Reaffirmed that both parties bore the primary responsibility for the implementation of the Algiers Agreements and the decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission;

Called on both parties to show maximum restraint and to refrain from any threat of use of force against each other.

Decision of 23 November 2005 (5308th meeting): resolution 1640 (2005)

¹ Held on 12 March and 14 September 2004 and 14 March and 13 September 2005. During this period the Council also held a number of meetings in private, with the troop-contributing countries to the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, pursuant to resolution 1353 (2001), annex II, sections A and B. The meetings were, held on 10 March 2004 (4922nd), 10 September 2004 (5029th), 11 March 2005 (5138th), 9 September 2005 (5257th), 19 October 2005 (5286th), 13 March 2006 (5383rd), 8 May 2006 (5433rd), 26 September 2006 (5536th), 16 January 2007 (5620th) and 24 July 2007 (5722nd).

President of the Council,⁵ transmitting a report on the visit to Ethiopia and Eritrea by the Ambassador of Japan, in his capacity as Chairman of the Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations. In his letter, the Chairman of the Working Group observed that the current stalemate was filled with risk, and any incidents might cause a further deterioration. He underlined that the restrictions on UNMEE were a clear violation of the Algiers Agreements, and, therefore, Eritrea needed to be persuaded to lift the restrictions. Full compliance with the Boundary Commission's decision by Ethiopia also needed to be achieved urgently, and he recommended that a new resolution should urge Ethiopia to fully accept the decision.

The President also drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁶ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1640 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Deeply deplored Eritrea's continued imposition of restrictions on the freedom of movement of UNMEE and demanded that the Government of Eritrea reverse, without further delay or preconditions, its decision to ban UNMEE helicopter flights, as well as additional restrictions imposed on the operations of UNMEE;

Called on both parties to show maximum restraint and to refrain from any threat or use of force against each other;

Requested the Secretary-General to monitor the parties' compliance with the demands above and to report to the Council in 40 days;

Demanded that Ethiopia accept fully and without further delay the final and binding decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission and take immediately concrete steps to enable the Commission to demarcate the border completely and promptly;

Called upon both parties to work, without preconditions, to break the current stalemate through diplomatic efforts.

Decision of 7 December 2005 (5317th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5317th meeting, on 7 December 2005, the President (United Kingdom) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned the decision of the Government of Eritrea to request some members of UNMEE to leave the country within 10 days, which was inconsistent with the obligations of the Government of Eritrea to respect the exclusively international nature of the peacekeeping operation;

Unequivocally demanded that Eritrea immediately reverse its decision without preconditions.

Decision of 14 December 2005 (5326th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5326th meeting, on 14 December 2005, the President (United Kingdom) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Agreed to temporarily relocate military and civilian staff of UNMEE from Eritrea to Ethiopia solely in the interest of the security of the staff, and intended to maintain an UNMEE military presence in Eritrea during the period in which it was reviewing future plans for UNMEE;

Strongly condemned Eritrea's unacceptable actions and restrictions on UNMEE;

Stated its intention to review promptly all options for the deployment and functions of UNMEE;

Emphasized the urgent need for progress in implementation of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission delimitation decision.

Decision of 24 February 2006 (5380th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5380th meeting, on 24 February 2006, the President (United States) drew the attention of the members to a letter dated 22 February 2006 from the representative of the United States addressed to the President of the Council,⁹ transmitting the statement made by the Witnesses to the Algiers Agreement at their meeting on 22 February 2006. He then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Called upon both parties to show maximum restraint and refrain from any threat or use of force against the other;

Recalled that, under the Algiers Agreements, both Eritrea and Ethiopia had agreed to accept the delimitation and demarcation decisions of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission as final and binding and called on both sides to cooperate with the Boundary Commission to implement its decisions without further delay;

Urged the Boundary Commission to convene a meeting with the parties to prepare to resume demarcation and strongly urged the two parties to attend the Boundary Commission meeting and to cooperate with and abide by the requirements;

Demanded that the parties permit the UNMEE to perform its duties without restrictions and provide UNMEE with the necessary access, assistance, support and protection required for the performance of those duties;

Called upon Member States to provide continued support for UNMEE and contributions to the Trust Fund.

Decisions of 14 March 2006 to 30 July 2007:
resolutions 1661 (2006), 1670 (2006), 1678
(2006), 1681 (2006), 1710 (2006), 1741 (2007)
and 1767 (2007)

At its 5384th, 5410th, 5437th, 5450th, 5540th, 5626th and 5725th meetings,¹¹ the Council adopted unanimously and without debate seven resolutions extending the mandate of UNMEE on the basis of reports of the Secretary-General.¹² In his reports, the Secretary-General noted that, inter alia: the prevailing unstable, tense and volatile situation in the Temporary Security Zone was due to an accumulation of unresolved issues, in particular, the stalemated demarcation process, Ethiopia's refusal to accept without preconditions the delimitation decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission, and troop movements by Eritrea into the Temporary Security Zone; that UNMEE had had to operate under "unacceptable conditions for far too long"; that despite its reduced relevance, the presence of UNMEE could still help reduce the chance of conflict; but if there were to be no progress in the coming months towards the carrying out of the Boundary Commission's recommendation, the Council could then consider converting the United Nations operation into an observer or liaison mission.

By those resolutions,¹³ the Council, inter alia, extended the mandate of UNMEE; demanded that the parties fully comply with resolution 1640 (2005); approved the reduction of military personnel while maintaining the maximum authorized force levels; demanded that Ethiopia accept the decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission and allow it to demarcate the border; demanded that Eritrea remove its troops from the Temporary Security Zone and reverse all its restrictions on UNMEE movement and operations and provide it necessary access, assistance, support and protection; regretted the lack of progress on demarcation and called on both parties to refrain from any threat or use of force, and cooperate fully with UNMEE and the Boundary Commission, and expressed its willingness to reconsider changes to UNMEE in the light of subsequent progress towards demarcation.

Decision of 13 November 2007 (5778th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5778th meeting, on 13 November 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on Eritrea and Ethiopia of 1 November 2007.¹⁴ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the military situation in the Temporary Security Zone and adjacent areas had remained tense. Eritrea had brought additional military personnel and equipment into the Zone and both countries conducted rotations, training and troop regroupment of their forces in the border area. Eritrea also continued to maintain all restrictions that it had imposed on UNMEE. He noted that the meeting of the two parties with the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission on 6 and 7 September had failed to resolve the impasse on the demarcation of the boundary. The continued stalemate on that issue and the continued military build-up, which had already resulted in shooting incidents that underscored the risk of further miscalculation, were causes for serious concern. He called on both parties to exercise the utmost restraint and to pull back their forces and reduce military activities in the border area.

The President (Indonesia) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Stressed the importance of the commitment of both Ethiopia and Eritrea to lay the foundation for sustainable peace in the region and, aware of the responsibilities of the United Nations under the Algiers Agreements; underscored the acceptance without preconditions by both Ethiopia and Eritrea of the final and binding delimitation decision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission;

Urged the parties to take concrete steps to implement immediately and without preconditions the delimitation decision of the Boundary Commission, taking into account the parties' commitments regarding the Temporary Security Zone;

Called upon the parties to refrain from using force and to settle their disagreements by peaceful means;

Confirmed the parties' primary responsibility to resolve the border issue and their other differences, and expressed its readiness to endorse the commitments made by both parties;

Commended and fully supported the continuing operations of UNMEE, underscored the importance for the parties to provide UNMEE with the necessary access, assistance, support and protection required for the implementation of its mandate and welcomed the ongoing efforts by the Secretary-General towards the earliest appointment of a Special Representative.

12. The situation in Guinea-Bissau

Decision of 18 June 2004 (4992nd meeting): statement by the President

At its 4992nd meeting, on 18 June 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on developments in Guinea-Bissau.¹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed the important progress made towards restoring constitutional order in Guinea-Bissau, with the conduct of credible legislative elections and the installation of a new National Popular Assembly and a new Government, as well as with the holding of elections for the President and the Vice-President of the Supreme Court of Justice. With these achievements and with the transfer of power from the National Transition Council to the newly elected Assembly, the first phase of the transition period that had been agreed upon by the military and the Government in a Political Transition Charter signed on 28 September 2003, following the military coup d'état, had been completed. He welcomed the new priorities set by the Government, namely to consolidate national reconciliation; ensure the return to constitutional order; fortify the rule of law and the respect of human rights; develop stable relations with neighbouring countries and international partners and create necessary institutional capacity for good governance, accountable and transparent financial management and the improvement of socioeconomic conditions. He also noted the instrumental contribution of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNOGBIS) to the protection of human rights in Guinea-Bissau and to the ongoing constructive political dialogue between the Government, the Assembly and international partners. He welcomed the progress made in the demobilization, reinsertion and reintegration programme. However, he expressed concern at the difficult economic situation and noted the shortfall in the multi-donor Emergency Economic Management Fund for Guinea-Bissau, which prevented the full payment of all salary arrears. He concluded that despite the progress the democratization process in Guinea-Bissau remained fragile and that the support of the international community remained paramount.

The Council extended an invitation to the representative of Guinea-Bissau to participate in the discussion. The President (Philippines) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,² by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its satisfaction regarding progress made by national authorities towards restoring constitutional order, in accordance with the Transition Charter provisions and calendar;

Encouraged all parties, and the new Government established on 12 May 2004, to faithfully adhere to the provisions of the Transition Charter in order to achieve and consolidate national reconciliation and to ensure the full restoration of constitutional order;

Expressed, nonetheless, its concern with the fragility of the democratization process in Guinea-Bissau, due mainly to the country's deep-rooted structural problems, including the weakness of State institutions and structures, as well as persistent economic and social crisis;

Further expressed its concern about the need to improve the situation of the military, in particular the payment of salary arrears, which continued to be seen as a potentially destabilizing factor;

Underlined the importance it attached to the organization of a round table which it considered of utmost relevance to addressing some of the most urgent needs of Guinea-Bissau.

Decision of 2 November 2004 (5069th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5069th meeting, on 2 November 2004, the Council extended an invitation to the representative of Guinea-Bissau. The President (United States) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its deep concern at developments in Guinea-Bissau that led to the killings, on 6 October 2004, of the Chief of General Staff of the Armed Forces and of the Chief of Human Resources;

Condemned in the strongest terms such use of force to settle differences or address grievances;

Took note of the signature of a memorandum of understanding, in Bissau, on 10 October 2004, and of the establishment of a commission to monitor its implementation;

Urged all political parties to continue working, in good faith, with national authorities to complete the implementation of the Political Transition Charter before the holding of presidential elections by April 2005;

Stressed the need for urgent measures by the international community to assist the Government of Guinea-Bissau to overcome the present crisis, in particular to reinforce the capacity of legitimate authorities to maintain political stability and to determine sound solutions to the country's most urgent and fundamental challenges;

Reiterated its call on the international community to maintain its confidence in the process of democratic consolidation in Guinea-Bissau and to uphold its commitments to development in that country.

Decision of 22 December 2004 (5107th meeting): resolution 1580 (2004):

At its 5107th meeting, on 22 December 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on developments in Guinea-Bissau.⁴

In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the situation in Guinea-Bissau had been further complicated by the military mutiny of 6 October, led by a group of officers motivated by grievances over salaries, poor living conditions and corruption within the military hierarchy. Those responsible insisted the mutiny had not been a coup d'état aimed at changing the political status quo, yet they subsequently obtained from the authorities the appointment of their nominee as new Chief of General Staff. In reaction to that, many political and civil society actors voiced deep misgivings about impunity following the commitment by the Government in the memorandum of understanding, signed with the military, to a possible blanket amnesty for all those involved in military interventions since 1980. Qualified optimism was replaced by growing scepticism and an enhanced perception that the military posed the greatest obstacle to the consolidation of democracy and peace. The Secretary-General underlined the critical economic and social situation and reported that the humanitarian situation was worrying following the mutiny. He also noted the pressing need for the reform of the police force and the elimination of mine-related risks. In addition, he recommended that the mandate of UNOGBIS be revised to take into account new tasks and the importance of strengthening the capacity of national stakeholders. The revised mandate would integrate development and peace and security activities with a view to defining a cohesive peacebuilding strategy in the immediate, medium and long term. It would also contribute to institutional capacity-building; to the prevention of national and regional proliferation of small arms and to military reform. The Secretary-General recommended that a special fund be set up to facilitate the planning and implementation of the military reform process.

The President (Algeria) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁵ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1580 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNOGBIS for one year;

Decided also to revise the mandate of UNOGBIS; called upon the National Assembly of Guinea-Bissau, while addressing the issue of granting amnesty for all those involved in military interventions since 1980, to take account of principles of justice and fight against impunity;

Strongly urged the Government, together with military authorities and other concerned parties to agree on a national plan for reform of the security sector, in particular military reform; appealed to the international community to continue to provide assistance to help Guinea-Bissau to meet its immediate needs as well as its structural challenges.

Decision of 31 March 2005 (5157th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5157th meeting, on 31 March 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on developments in Guinea-Bissau.⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General noted that the country had improved noticeably despite recurrent challenges. He noted that the forthcoming presidential elections would put a formal end to the transition set in motion by the Political Transition Charter and would mark the full restoration of constitutional order in the country, provided that they were properly prepared and managed. He also noted the beginning of the new session of the National Popular Assembly. He observed that the economic situation in Guinea-Bissau had improved slightly but that the Government remained unable to pay all salary arrears. He also observed that while the primary responsibility for completing the political transition, managing conflict, reforming the institutions and relaunching the economy of the country rested with the Government and the people of Guinea-Bissau, the international community should remain active and generous in its support. The Secretary-General underlined the need for a cohesive peacebuilding strategy among all actors. Based on the conclusions of the United Nations multidisciplinary review mission sent to Guinea-Bissau from 12 to 17 February 2005, he recommended that, within the framework of its revised mandate, UNOGBIS focus on promoting political dialogue; developing stable civil-military relations; promoting implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects and advancing a comprehensive and integrated United Nations peacebuilding strategy. He also recommended that its capacities be adjusted to meet the requirements of its revised mandate.

⁶ S/2005/174.

The Council extended an invitation to the representative of Guinea-Bissau. The President (Brazil) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Recognized some progress made in some areas in Guinea-Bissau, including the electoral process;

Strongly condemned any attempts to incite violence and to impede ongoing efforts towards peace, stability and social and economic development; expressed growing concern at recent political developments in Guinea-Bissau, in particular the decision by the Partido da Renovação Social to select ex-President Koumba Yalá as its presidential candidate;

Also expressed its deep concern at the fact that peace efforts had not yet generated sufficient social and economic benefits for the population that could discourage the use of force;

Stressed the urgent need for international support to the electoral process;

Called upon Guinea-Bissau's international development partners to cooperate with the Government of Guinea-Bissau, which had been fully engaged in the implementation of the Political Transition Charter;

Welcomed initial measures taken by the Chief of General Staff regarding the reform of the Armed Forces;

Encouraged full inclusiveness and renewed commitment to reconciliation in the Armed Forces, and development of constructive civilian-military relations based on the Armed Forces as an institution subordinated to the elected civilian authorities; and reaffirmed the role of UNOGBIS in encouraging and supporting national efforts to reform the security sector.

Decision of 19 August 2005 (5248th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5248th meeting, on 19 August 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on developments in Guinea-Bissau.⁸ In his report, the Secretary-General referred to the highly polarized atmosphere as Guinea-Bissau was preparing the holding of presidential elections. He also noted the threat of former President Yala to take power by force if prevented from running in the elections, despite the provision of the Transitional Charter banning his participation in political activities for five years. The Secretary-General observed, however, that, according to the electoral needs assessment mission he had dispatched the necessary technical conditions were in place for the first round of elections. He reported that, since tensions remained high in the country, he had decided to appoint a Special Envoy for Guinea-Bissau to facilitate the holding of peaceful and credible elections and help bring the transition to a successful conclusion. He welcomed the process of reconciliation within the armed forces and the reaffirmation by the military leadership of its subordination to civilian authority. In other developments, he also expressed concern over the increase in organized crime operators. He noted the increased awareness of international human rights standards and the improvements regarding civil and political rights. He emphasized the need for a reform of the public administrative and security sector. In addition, the fact-finding mission on small arms dispatched to Guinea-Bissau had developed a project proposal for the establishment of a national small arms commission and for the execution of a small arms collection and destruction programme in the city of Bissau.

The Council extended an invitation to the representative of Guinea-Bissau to participate in the discussion. The President (Japan) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Took note of the appeal filed with the Supreme Court of Justice by one of the contenders and strongly encouraged all parties to honour their commitments and accept the final ruling of the Court;

Urged them to refrain from any actions that could jeopardize the efforts towards peace and stability in Guinea-Bissau;

Underlined the importance of their timely diplomatic efforts aimed at promoting national dialogue and respect for the rule of law;

Welcomed the decision taken by the Economic and Social Council on 26 July 2005 to extend the mandate of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau; invited the Secretary-General to present recommendations in his next report regarding the updating of the mandate and role of UNOGBIS in the consolidation of peace and stability in Guinea-Bissau in the post-transition period.

Decision of 19 October 2007 (5762nd meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5762nd meeting, on 19 October 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on developments in Guinea-Bissau.¹⁰ In his report, the Secretary-General expressed concern over the continuing division and rivalry for power among political parties and over the use of Guinea-Bissau as a transit point for illegal drugs coming from Latin America and bound for Europe. He called for the protection of public servants investigating drug trafficking in Guinea-Bissau, welcomed the joint project undertaken by the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and UNOGBIS and welcomed the efforts for a collective and integrated response to the issue. He also reported concerns by civil society organizations regarding what they saw as pressures relating to freedom of the press and freedom of expression in connection with their report on drug trafficking, which marked a reversal in the positive trend of the previous three years, during which Guinea-Bissau was not cited among countries with a poor record of respect for freedom of the press. He underlined that unless those challenges were addressed, the important achievements made towards consolidating the country's nascent democratic and constitutional order could be jeopardized. He observed that the economic and financial situation had remained stable but fragile as the new Government had not managed to clear all salary arrears inherited from the previous government, thus entailing a series of strikes by municipal workers. He also reported that the Prime Minister of Guinea-Bissau had requested that his country be placed on the agenda of the Peacebuilding Commission.¹¹

The Council extended an invitation to the representative of Guinea-Bissau. The President (Ghana) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹² by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its support for the continuing efforts to consolidate peace in Guinea-Bissau;

Noted with deep concern the threat posed by drug and human trafficking which would undermine the important gains made with respect to rule of law, democratic and transparent governance;

Called upon the Government to take concerted action to safeguard the safety and security of those officials who are involved in combating these activities;

Welcomed the decision by the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) to convene later in the year a regional conference on combating drug trafficking;

Called for urgent consideration of how the United Nations system might improve its support for Guinea-Bissau's fight against international drug trafficking and organized crime;

Recognized in particular the important role of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime;

Welcomed the initiative to hold an international conference in Lisbon, on drug trafficking on Guinea-Bissau in December 2007;

Expressed its concern with the fragility of the democratization process in Guinea-Bissau as well as persistent economic and social crisis;

Welcomed the scheduled convening of legislative elections in 2008;

Welcomed the improved dialogue between the Government of Guinea-Bissau and the Bretton Woods institutions and urged the Government to continue to implement its commitments in the areas of fiscal responsibility, reforms of the justice sector and good governance;

Encouraged the authorities of Guinea-Bissau to carry out their commitment concerning security sector reform;

Reaffirmed that peace and stability in Guinea-Bissau were critical for peace and security in the West African subregion, and welcomed the role being played by the African Union, ECOWAS and the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries, in the peacebuilding process in Guinea-Bissau.

13. The situation in Côte d'Ivoire

Decision of 4 February 2004 (4909th meeting): resolution 1527 (2004)

In his report on the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire (MINUCI) dated 6 January 2004,¹ the Secretary-General noted with concern the prolonged political impasse in Côte d'Ivoire, which could have taken a turn for the worse with the attempt by the Young Patriots and elements of the Forces armées nationales de Côte d'Ivoire (FANCI) to cross the ceasefire line and launch attacks on the Forces nouvelles. He welcomed the initiatives by the President, Laurent Gbagbo, and the Prime Minister, Seydou Diarra, to meet with the Forces nouvelles as well as the return of the Forces nouvelles to the Government of National Reconciliation. While asserting that such positive developments had given fresh impetus to the peace process, the Secretary-General emphasized that fundamental issues underlying the Ivorian crisis had to be addressed to ensure the irreversibility of the process. Should the Ivorian parties make sufficient progress in that regard by 4 February 2004, when the mandates of MINUCI, the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) Mission in Côte d'Ivoire and the French forces would expire, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council consider authorizing the deployment of a multidimensional United Nations peacekeeping operation to support the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire. The peacekeeping operation would comprise a military component with a troop strength of 6,240, including 200 military observers and 120 staff officers, and a civilian component consisting of enhanced disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, electoral, human rights, public information, civil affairs, political, civilian police and judicial components. In that connection, the Secretary-General stressed that if the Council were to approve his recommendation on the establishment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation in Côte d'Ivoire, the Council and troop-contributing countries must ensure that the requisite resources were available and not at the expense of other missions.

At its 4909th meeting,² on 4 February 2004, the Council included the above-mentioned report in its agenda and extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (China) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;³ it was then put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1527 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, inter alia:

Decided that the mandate of MINUCI should be extended until 27 February 2004;

Decided to renew until 27 February 2004 the authorization given to Member States participating in ECOWAS forces together with French forces supporting them;

Called on the signatories of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement to carry out expeditiously their responsibilities under the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement; requested the Secretary-General, pending a decision by the Security Council on the reinforcement of United Nations presence in Côte d'Ivoire, to prepare the possible deployment of a peacekeeping operation within five weeks after such decision by the Council.

Decision of 27 February 2004 (4918th meeting):
resolution 1528 (2004)

At its 4918th meeting, on 27 February 2004, the Council again included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on MINUCI.⁴ In an addendum to the report dated 9 February 2004,⁵ the Secretary-General presented the findings and recommendations of a small United Nations technical team which had recently visited Côte d'Ivoire to collect more detailed information regarding the civilian police and judicial component of the proposed United Nations peacekeeping operation. On the basis of those findings, the Secretary-General recommended that (a) a total of 350 United Nations civilian police officers be deployed in Côte d'Ivoire in a phased manner; (b) a small judicial unit, comprising up to five international staff members, be established to support the re-establishment of the administration of justice in all areas affected by the conflict; and (c) a corrections unit, comprising one international staff member and eight seconded corrections officers, be established to support efforts at re-establishing the prison system in the north and strengthening the system in the south.

The Secretary-General made a statement.⁶ The President (China) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁷ it was then put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1528 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to establish the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI) for an initial period of 12 months as from 4 April 2004;

Decided to renew the mandate of MINUCI until that date;

Decided that UNOCI would comprise a military strength of a maximum of 6,240 United Nations personnel, including 200 military observers and 120 staff officers, and up to 350 civilian police officers;

Decided that the mandate of UNOCI should be: monitoring of the ceasefire and movement of armed forces, disarmament, demobilization, reintegration, repatriation and resettlement, protection of United Nations personnel, institutions and civilians, support for humanitarian assistance, support for the implementation of the peace process, assistance in the field of human rights, public information and law and order;

Authorized UNOCI to use all necessary means to carry out its mandate;

Requested the Secretary-General and the Government of National Reconciliation to conclude a status-of-forces agreement within 30 days;

Decided to renew until 4 April 2004 the authorization given to the French forces and ECOWAS forces through its resolution 1527 (2004);

Authorized for a period of 12 months from 4 April 2004 the French forces to use all necessary means in order to support UNOCI.

After the adoption of resolution 1528 (2004), the Secretary-General welcomed the significant steps recently taken by the Ivorian parties in the right direction, but warned that some hard-line elements in Côte d'Ivoire remained determined to undermine the peace process. He affirmed that a strengthened United Nations presence in Côte d'Ivoire would help the Government of National Reconciliation to implement the programme of demobilization, disarmament, reintegration and repatriation, facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance and the restoration of State authority throughout the country, and contribute to the promotion of human rights, the re-establishment of the rule of law and the preparation for the holding of fair and transparent general elections in 2005.⁸

Decision of 30 April 2004 (4959th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 4959th meeting, on 30 April 2004, the Council extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (Germany) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its grave concern at the events which had occurred in Côte d'Ivoire at the end of March and at the current impasse in the peace process defined in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement;

Decided to deploy UNOCI to support the process of peaceful settlement of the crisis, which was to culminate in 2005 with the organization of free, fair and transparent elections.

Decision of 25 May 2004 (4977th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 4977th meeting, on 25 May 2004, the Council extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (Pakistan) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its grave concern at the events which had occurred in Côte d'Ivoire at the end of March and at the current impasse in the peace process defined in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement;

Reaffirmed the individual responsibility of each of the Ivorian actors to ensure the full implementation of the Agreement;

Reiterated its complete readiness to take any necessary further steps, against individuals who blocked the full implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement;

Strongly condemned the violations of human rights and international humanitarian law committed in Côte d'Ivoire and expressed its determination to ensure that those responsible for all these violations were identified and that the Government of Côte d'Ivoire brought them to justice;

Reaffirmed the urgency of disbanding militias and armed groups and proceeding with operations to regroup the opposing forces in order to permit the start of disarmament and demobilization which must precede their reintegration into the regular army or civilian life;

Firmly rejected the assertion that disarmament could be delayed until after the 2005 elections and called on all parties to move immediately to begin this process.

Decision of 5 August 2004 (5018th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5018th meeting, on 5 August 2004, the Council extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (Russian Federation) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the signature, on 30 July 2004 in Accra, by all the political forces of Côte d'Ivoire, of an agreement (the "Accra III Agreement") that consolidated the implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis process;

Welcomed the concrete measures agreed upon by the signatories of the Accra III Agreement;

Urged the parties to adhere strictly to the deadlines that had been fixed, in particular to settle the issue of the eligibility to the Presidency of the Republic and to start the disarmament;

Urged all parties to implement, in good faith, the obligations they had undertaken in signing the Accra III Agreement;

Took note with profound concern of the preliminary results of the investigation led by UNOCI on the massacres that had occurred in Korhogo;

Reiterated its full support for the international commission of inquiry put in place by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in order to establish the facts and circumstances of the perpetration of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law which had occurred in Côte d'Ivoire since 19 September 2002, and, as far as possible, to identify their authors.

Decision of 6 November 2004 (5072nd meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5072nd meeting, on 6 November 2004, the Council invited the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (United States) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 6 November 2004 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council, in which the Secretary-General, recalling resolution 1528 (2004) by which the Council had established UNOCI under Chapter VII of the Charter and set out the mandate of the Operation, urged the Council to confirm that UNOCI was authorized to use all necessary means, within its capabilities and areas of deployment, to prevent any hostile action within the Zone of Confidence.¹² The President then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned the attack against the French forces in Bouaké on 6 November 2004;

Further condemned any effort by any party to send forces through the Zone of Confidence; demanded the immediate cessation of all military operations;

Expressed its full support for the action taken by French forces and UNOCI and confirmed that they were authorized to use all necessary means to carry out fully their mandate;

Strongly recalled the obligations of all Ivorian parties to refrain from any violence against civilians and to cooperate fully with UNOCI.

Decision of 15 November 2004 (5078th meeting): resolution 1572 (2004)

At the 5078th meeting, on 15 November 2004, the President (United States) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Chile, France, Germany, Romania, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States,¹⁴ a letter dated 10 November 2004 from the representative of the Gambia to the President of the Council,¹⁵ and a letter dated 9 November 2004 from the representative of Nigeria to the President of the Council.¹⁶ Statements were made by the representatives of China, France and Angola.¹⁷

The draft resolution was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1572 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Condemned the air strikes committed by the national armed forces of Côte d'Ivoire and demanded that all Ivorian parties to the conflict fully comply with the ceasefire;

Demanded that Ivorian authorities stop all radio and television broadcasting inciting hatred and violence;

Decided that all States should, for 13 months from the date of adoption of the resolution, take the necessary measures to prevent the direct or indirect supply, sale or transfer to Côte d'Ivoire, from their territories or by their nationals, or using their flag vessels or aircraft, of arms or any related materiel, as well as any assistance related to military activities;

Decided that all States should, for 12 months, prevent the entry into or the transit through their territories of all persons designated as a threat to the peace and national reconciliation process in Côte d'Ivoire;

Decided that all States should, for the same period of 12 months, freeze the funds, other financial assets and economic resources owned or controlled by the persons identified previously above;

Decided that, at the end of 13 months, the Security Council should review these measures imposed;

Decided to establish a Committee of the Security Council consisting of all members of the Council to undertake the tasks;

Requested all States to report to the Committee actions taken to implement the measures imposed;

Decided that the measures imposed should enter into force on 15 December 2004 unless the Security Council determined before then that the signatories of the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements were embarked towards full implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement.

After the adoption of resolution 1572 (2004), the representative of China explained that his country favoured further Council action in the light of the serious situation in Côte d'Ivoire, but at the same time believed that the objective of such action should be to encourage the various parties to comply with the ceasefire and to resume the peace process. On the basis of that principle and taking into account the views of the States members of the African Union, he had voted for the resolution.¹⁸ The representative of France held that the resolution aimed to promote the only political solution that the Council had supported, namely implementation by all the Ivorian parties of the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements. He held that the Council should act immediately by adopting an arms embargo and deciding on a mechanism for individual sanctions if the commitments made by the parties had not been honoured by 15 December 2004. He opined that by adopting resolution 1572 (2004), the Council had demonstrated the intention to support the initiatives of ECOWAS and the African Union and that

Côte d'Ivoire must move forward towards the elections in October 2005.¹⁹ For his part, the representative of Angola held the view that, since the situation in Côte d'Ivoire remained tense and fragile, the Council should pressure the concerned parties in a manner that would not radicalize their positions but instead continue to stimulate dialogue among them. He stressed that the main and only objective of resolution 1572 (2004) should be bringing the parties back to the process of the implementation of the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements by assisting them in finding the appropriate way to calm the ongoing tension.²⁰

Decision of 16 December 2004 (5103rd meeting): statement by the President

At its 5103rd meeting, on 16 December 2004, the Council extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (Algeria) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,²¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reaffirmed its conviction that the full implementation of resolution 1572 (2004) was a key element in ensuring that all Ivorian parties committed themselves fully to the implementation of the peace and national reconciliation process in Côte d'Ivoire;

Requested the Committee established by resolution 1572 (2004) to continue its work, taking fully into account the developments of the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire arising from the facilitation efforts undertaken by the African Union;

Demanded that all Ivorian parties stop all incitement to violence and hatred in broadcast, written and other media, and called upon the Committee to monitor this closely without delay;

Also demanded that all Ivorian parties ensure freedom of the press and unlimited access to information throughout Côte d'Ivoire;

Expressed its intention to consider without delay further steps to ensure the effective monitoring and implementation of the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1572 (2004).

Decision of 1 February 2005 (5118th meeting): resolution 1584 (2005)

At the 5118th meeting, on 1 February 2005, in which the representative of Côte d'Ivoire was invited to participate, the President (Benin) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by

Denmark, France, Romania, the United Kingdom and the United States.²² The draft resolution was subsequently put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1584 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Authorized UNOCI and the French forces which supported it to monitor the implementation of the measures imposed by resolution 1572 (2004), including by inspecting the cargo of aircraft and of any transport vehicle using the ports, airports, airfields, military bases and border crossings of Côte d'Ivoire; and to collect, as appropriate, arms and any related materiel brought into Côte d'Ivoire and to dispose of such arms and related materiel as appropriate;

Requested the French forces to provide, as appropriate, security assistance to UNOCI;

Demanded that all Ivorian parties provide unhindered access to UNOCI and French forces which supported it to enable them to carry out their tasks;

Requested the Secretary-General to create, within 30 days, and for a period of six months, a group of experts consisting of no more than three members to examine and analyse information gathered by UNOCI and the French forces in the context of the monitoring mandate;

Requested the Secretary-General and the Government of France to communicate as appropriate to the Security Council, through the Committee, information gathered by UNOCI and, when possible, reviewed by the Group of Experts, about the supply of arms and related materiel to Côte d'Ivoire;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 4 April 2005 (5159th meeting): resolution 1594 (2005)

On 18 March 2005, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council the fourth progress report on UNOCI.²³ In that report, the Secretary-General noted with concern that the security situation in Côte d'Ivoire remained precarious since the November 2004 crisis, with a marked increase in dangerous activities by militia-type groups. Recalling that the President of South Africa, Thabo Mbeki, had been leading an Africa Union mediation mission to promote the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire, the Secretary-General reiterated his appeal to President Gbagbo, the Forces nouvelles and the leaders of all Ivorian political movements to demonstrate the necessary political will and carry out the African Union plan of action without further delay or risk the possibility of renewed hostilities. With respect to the elections scheduled for October 2005, the Secretary-General was concerned that the time remaining for their proper organization was rapidly running out and that further delays could increasingly jeopardize the holding of the elections. Noting that certain parties had asked for an enhanced United Nations role in the electoral process, he made it clear that such requests required the agreement of all Ivorian parties. The Secretary-General stated that while the UNOCI and French forces would continue to complement each other in providing security in support of the peace process, additional resources were required for UNOCI to discharge effectively its expanded mandate and to ensure the safety and security of United Nations personnel. As such, he reiterated his request that the Council approve the additional military, civilian police and civilian resources proposed in his third progress report on UNOCI.²⁴ It was also crucial that UNOCI would be provided with the requisite technical capacity and other resources to enhance its effectiveness in monitoring the arms embargo. He further recommended that the mandate of UNOCI be extended for a period of 12 months until 4 April 2006. Finally, the Secretary-General emphasized that the Ivorian leaders bore full responsibility for finding a way out of the crisis and must make the hard decisions and visionary compromises that were urgently required. Those who failed to accept this responsibility should face firm actions by the international community, including implementation of the individual measures envisaged in resolution 1572 (2004). The Secretary-General urged the Council to regularly gauge the effect of that resolution on the ground, stressing the importance for the Council to send a clear message that it would not tolerate any incitement to provoke or attack the UNOCI and French forces.

At its 5152nd meeting, on 28 March 2005, the Council included in its agenda the fourth progress report on UNOCI²³ and heard briefings by the Principal Deputy Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire and the Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa. Following the briefings, statements were made by all members of the Council as well as by the representative of Côte d'Ivoire.

The Principal Deputy Special Representative of the Secretary-General noted that the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire had not made any significant progress since November 2004 and suggested that the Council should consider the use of all provisions of resolution 1572 (2004) to support the next key steps of the peace process. He was concerned at increasing uncertainty about whether the general elections could be held in 2005 according to the agreed timetable, warning that failure to do so could lead to a greater crisis. Recalling that UNOCI had been entrusted additional responsibilities under resolution 1584 (2005) and stressing that the present strength of UNOCI was a cause of serious concern, the Principal Deputy Special Representative reiterated the requests by the Secretary-General to reinforce UNOCI and extend its mandate. Meanwhile, he was deeply concerned at the continuing serious human rights situation in Côte d'Ivoire and hoped that the Council would promptly give all the necessary attention to the report of the International Commission of Inquiry into allegations of serious violations of human rights in the country.²⁵

The Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa observed that in the wake of the attacks carried out by the Ivorian Air Force against the Forces nouvelles from 4 to 6 November 2004, the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire seemed to have reached a cul-de-sac. As a result, the Chairperson of the African Union asked President Mbeki of South Africa to act as the mediator of the African Union to expedite the Ivorian peace process. After having considered the interventions that had been made since 2002 to resolve the Ivorian crisis and engage the entire spectrum of the Ivorian political leadership, the African Union mediation had reached three conclusions: first, as mandated, it should seek a solution of the Ivorian crisis within the framework of the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra II and III Agreements; secondly, it should work out a road map with specific time frames and a variety of steps to put the Ivorian peace process back on course; and, thirdly, all the Ivorian parties should agree to those propositions and commit themselves to a peaceful and negotiated resolution. The Deputy Minister stressed that the peace settlement of the Ivorian crisis required the cooperation and involvement of all the Ivorian leaders. It was therefore vital that the international community operated on the basis of the principle and practice of inclusion rather than that of exclusion, and that the Security Council and the African Union considered imposing effective sanctions against those spoilers who acted wilfully to obstruct the peace process. The Deputy Minister further stressed that the fundamental and long-term solution to the Ivorian crisis required addressing issues that bore on nationality, political rights, the land question and coexistence in a multicultural, multi-ethnic and multi-religious society. In that connection, he informed the Council that the road map for the Ivorian peace process was jointly drawn up by the African Union mediation and the representatives of the United Nations, the African Union, ECOWAS, the European Union, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. He added that a critical meeting between President Mbeki and the principal political leaders of Côte d'Ivoire would take place in South Africa on 3 April 2005 in order to resolve the outstanding challenges concerning the implementation of the road map. Finally, the Deputy Minister noted that the African Union mediation had welcomed the Secretary-General's recommendation regarding the emergency deployment of an additional 1,226 troops to Côte d'Ivoire.²⁶

In the subsequent discussion, the Council members expressed deep concern at the serious situation in Côte d'Ivoire, notably the impasse in the political process, the deteriorating security climate, the continuing delays in the preparations for the elections and the widespread culture of impunity. They urged the Ivorian parties to implement in full their commitments under the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements in the best interest of the Ivorian people and the Ivorian State. In that context, a number of speakers held that the Council must stand ready to take firmer action against those individuals who obstructed the peace process and violated human rights, including by imposing sanctions envisaged in resolution 1572 (2004) against them.²⁷ Noting that the increased lawlessness in Côte d'Ivoire was the result of the culture of impunity, the representative of Denmark urged the Council to carefully study the findings of the International Commission of Inquiry and make the report, without the annex, publicly available.²⁸

Members spoke highly of the ongoing African Union mediation led by President Mbeki and promised to continue to support its future efforts. They looked forward to the holding of the meeting in Pretoria between President Mbeki and the key Ivorian political leaders on 3 April, hoping that the meeting would lead to positive outcomes. The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania observed that a main challenge for supporting the African Union mediation was to formulate appropriate incentives to sustain the current peaceful political atmosphere of compromise and to move towards a situation in which all parties had a shared stake. He called on the Council to work with President Mbeki to identify and apply the appropriate mix of incentives and other measures in the context of previous Council resolutions.²⁹ For their part, the representatives of Japan and Argentina stressed the importance of the Council being regularly informed of the developments in the mediation process.³⁰

Voicing concern at the delays in the preparations for the elections as a result of the ongoing political tensions, a number of speakers underlined that everything possible had to be done to ensure the holding of the elections as scheduled;³¹ the representative of Brazil noted that the elections could be held only if there was sufficient security on the ground and if certain preconditions were met, including the adoption of relevant legislation and the disarmament of the rebels and militias.³² In addition, various members stated that to achieve lasting peace an effective disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme must be launched,³³ the parties ought to refrain from inciting hatred and violence and spreading disinformation in the media,³⁴ and the dire humanitarian situation should be addressed.³⁵

Many members held that UNOCI must be strengthened to effectively discharge its increased mandate and expressed support for the recommendation of the Secretary-General on reinforcing UNOCI.³⁶ However, while asserting that UNOCI should consider using all the tools at its disposal, the representative of the United States continued to question the utility of expanding the strength of UNOCI beyond its current mandate when the parties had not shown political will to move the peace process forward.³⁷ For his part, the representative of Japan called for further discussions on the appropriate force level of UNOCI so as to best optimize the peacekeeping operation assets and resources that were deployed and available in the subregion of West Africa as a whole.³⁸ In the meantime, although many members supported the extension of the UNOCI mandate for an additional period of 12 months as requested by the Secretary-General,³⁹ the representative of France proposed that the mandate be extended for one month, until 4 May 2005, so that the Council would have sufficient time to consider the results of the meeting in Pretoria.⁴⁰ Concurring with such a rollover of the mandate of UNOCI, the representative of the United Kingdom underlined the importance of the Council ensuring that its strategy in Côte d'Ivoire, the strength and mandate, the rules of engagement and the tasks given to UNOCI were all fully consistent with one another.⁴¹

Stating that his intervention was aimed “merely to ensure a balance of information”, the representative of Côte d'Ivoire affirmed that the general tone of the Secretary-General's report⁴² apparently showed “a considerable degree of sympathy for the point of view and attitude of the Forces nouvelles, the former rebels and opposition parties, while the position of the legitimate authorities is systematically called into question”. He cautioned that such an approach risked

“offering comfort to the former rebels in their intention to change the institutions of the country by violence and encouraging other rebellions in the subregion to develop”. He specifically took issue with the contents of paragraphs 7, 8, 9, 13, 17, 21, 22 and 35 of the Secretary-General's report. Meanwhile, the representative noted that his Government would announce its decision with regard to the modalities for the renewal of the mandate of UNOCI following the meeting in Pretoria on 3 April. The decision would take account of the outcome of that important meeting, he added, while hoping that the international community would follow suit.⁴³ In response, the Principal Deputy Special Representative of the Secretary-General stressed that the Secretary-General's report simply described what had actually happened without any comments and represented views based on the understanding of the spirit of the various agreements concerning Côte d'Ivoire.⁴⁴

In his further statement, the Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa held that good progress had actually been made in certain areas in the last few months. The current question was how to ensure a quicker implementation of the key agreements, particularly with regard to the amendment of article 35 of the Constitution, the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process and the elections. The Deputy Minister hoped that, at the meeting in Pretoria on 3 April, the Ivorian leaders, while sitting together for the first time since the outbreak of the crisis, would agree to make a decisive leap forward so that a breakthrough could be soon achieved.⁴⁵

At its 5159th meeting, on 4 April 2005, the Council again included in its agenda the fourth progress report of the Secretary-General on UNOCI⁴⁶ and extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (China) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁴⁷ it was then put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1594 (2005) by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that the mandate of UNOCI and of the French forces which supported it should be extended for one month until 4 May 2005;

Decision of 4 May 2005 (5173rd meeting):
resolution 1600 (2005)

At the 5169th meeting, on 26 April 2005, the President (China) drew attention to a letter dated 25 April 2005 from the representative of South Africa to the President of the Council.⁴⁸ The Council then heard briefings by the Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa and the representative of Nigeria, following which statements were made by all Council members and by the representative of Côte d'Ivoire.

The Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa said he was pleased to note that the three-day meeting in Pretoria between the African Union mediator, President Thabo Mbeki, and the five main Ivorian political leaders had culminated in the signing of the Pretoria Agreement, which provided new hope to the Ivorian people and brought a new urgency to the implementation of previous undertakings. He recalled that the meeting was held in a very cordial and relaxed atmosphere, which in itself was a significant achievement, and a number of key issues had been addressed, such as the declaration of an immediate and final cessation of all hostilities in Côte d'Ivoire, the commencement of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process and the finalization of the amendment of article 35 of the Constitution of Côte d'Ivoire. The Deputy Minister reported that, as requested by the Pretoria Agreement, the mediator had communicated his determination on article 35 to the Ivorian leaders. President Gbagbo subsequently undertook extensive consultations with a wide range of interlocutors, the emerging central message from which was that he should use article 48 to effect the amendment of the Constitution as determined by the mediator. Among other progresses, the Deputy Minister noted that FANCI and the Forces nouvelles had agreed to commence the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process on 15 May 2005; that an increasing number of ministers from the Forces nouvelles had returned to Abidjan to assume their ministerial responsibilities; and that Ivorian Radio and Television had toned down its negative reporting and begun to broadcast positive reports on the Pretoria Agreement. In the meantime, the Deputy Minister highlighted that the Ivorian parties had asked the United Nations to urgently assist them in the areas of elections and security. On the issue of elections, he recalled that the Ivorian leadership had requested the United Nations to immediately establish an impartial structure that would assist the entire electoral process in Côte d'Ivoire and intervene with the relevant Ivorian authorities where necessary. On the issue of security, he clarified that the Ivorian leaders had asked for assistance in three areas, namely, the protection of the Forces nouvelles cantonment sites; the recruitment, training and deployment of a police contingent of 600 personnel in the north to avoid a security vacuum after the cantonment of the Forces nouvelles; and the disarmament of the militias. The Deputy Minister maintained that the Council should adjust the mandate of UNOCI to cater for the election supervision mechanism and support the disarmament of the militias, as well as to strengthen UNOCI in order for it to carry out the additional tasks emanating from the Pretoria Agreement. In conclusion, stressing that the international community should provide adequate and immediate funding for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, the Deputy Minister implored the Council to take the necessary decisions and steps to ensure the holding of the elections as agreed. The African Union stood ready to act together with the Council in that regard, he noted, opining that achieving peace and stability in Côte d'Ivoire would have a positive impact on other countries that were emerging from conflict and attempting to work towards creating conditions for their elections.⁴⁹

Speaking on behalf of the Chairman of the African Union, the President of Nigeria, Olusegun Obasanjo, held that the Pretoria Agreement marked an important milestone in the African Union's efforts to find a peaceful solution to the Ivorian crisis and that it was high time for all stakeholders to take concrete actions. He held that the Council ought to strengthen the United Nations presence in Côte d'Ivoire to make it visible throughout the country, and to endorse the Pretoria Agreement and the mediator's ruling on article 35 of the Constitution. He further urged the Council to review and expand the mandate of UNOCI urgently so that the mission could help actualize the commitments undertaken by the Ivorian parties.⁵⁰

The Council members welcomed the signing of the Pretoria Agreement on 6 April 2005 as a significant achievement and urged all parties concerned to make every effort to implement fully and effectively the provisions of the Agreement. In that context, several speakers stressed that the Pretoria Agreement complemented the Linas-Marcoussis and Accra III Agreements and that the provisions of all those agreements should be implemented.⁵¹ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania urged the media in Côte d'Ivoire to support the recent peace accomplishments and sustain their current positive tone in a spirit of national reconciliation.⁵² The representative of the United States noted that a real cessation of violence was vital for the Agreement to succeed.⁵³ The representative of Algeria believed that the likely obstacles to the implementation of the Agreement would be easier to overcome if the African Union mediation continued to be supported and trusted by the international community.⁵⁴

For the peace process to move forward, various members highlighted the importance of holding free and fair elections as scheduled;⁵⁵ finalizing the amendment of article 35 of the Constitution of Côte d'Ivoire at an early date;⁵⁶ and quickly commencing and implementing the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme.⁵⁷ On elections, the representative of the United Kingdom held that it would be important to measure progress against the benchmarks set by the United Nations.⁵⁸ On article 35, the representative of France hoped that the expected decision on the amendment of the article by President Gbagbo would make it possible to overcome this major obstacle of the peace process once and for all.⁵⁹ On the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, the representative of Algeria pointed out that international financial and technical assistance was critical to bring the process to a successful conclusion.⁶⁰

Several representatives emphasized that the Council should continue to monitor the implementation of the sanctions regime against Côte d'Ivoire given the lack of progress on the ground.⁶¹ While noting that it was not a priority to move forward on sanctions in the light of the signing of the Pretoria Agreement, the representative of the United Kingdom held that sanctions had been important in keeping the Ivorian peace process on track.⁶² The representative of Japan considered it not appropriate to immediately apply targeted sanctions against individuals since the Ivorian parties had shown their readiness to revitalize the peace process through the Pretoria Agreement.⁶³ The representative of Greece underlined the importance of the parties in Côte d'Ivoire and the countries of the region cooperating with the Group of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1584 (2005).⁶⁴

A number of members held that the capacity of UNOCI must be strengthened to meet its increased mandate in support of implementation of the Pretoria Agreement and noted in that regard their readiness to favourably consider the reinforcement of UNOCI.⁶⁵ Recalling that the rationale for the previously proposed reinforcement of 1,200 personnel had been based on the deteriorating security situation in Côte d'Ivoire, the representative of the United Kingdom urged members to adjust their expectations, taking into account the developments on the ground following the signing of the Pretoria Agreement. He further stressed the need for an evolving strategy for the peacekeeping operation to be gradually replaced by policing and by the Ivorians carrying it out themselves.⁶⁶

The representative of Côte d'Ivoire confirmed that the Pretoria Agreement was being implemented by all its signatories. He called for close cooperation between the various Ivorian parties and the international community for the success of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, which had recently been relaunched after a suspension for several months. He informed the Council that on 27 April President Gbagbo was scheduled to make a statement on article 35 of the Constitution to the nation in support of peace. He stated that his country would appreciate receiving electoral expertise and assistance from the United Nations in accordance with the terms of the Constitution. Finally, the representative hoped that in its future draft resolutions on African crisis situations the Council would take into account the reality on the ground, as well as the need to standardize the command structures of impartial forces engaged in peacekeeping in Africa, which would strengthen the impartiality of the forces and create the conditions for trust.⁶⁷

At its 5173rd meeting, on 4 May 2005, in which the representative of Côte d'Ivoire was invited to participate, the Council again included in its agenda the fourth progress report of the Secretary-General on UNOCI⁶⁸ and a letter dated 25 April 2005 from the representative of South Africa to the President of the Council.⁶⁹ The President (Denmark) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁷⁰ it was then put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1600 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter; inter alia:

Called on all parties to implement fully the Pretoria Agreement of 6 April 2005;

Urged all the Ivorian parties to take all necessary steps to ensure that the forthcoming general elections were free, fair and transparent; decided that the mandate of UNOCI and of the French forces which supported it should be extended for one month, until 4 June 2005;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

resolution 1603 (2005)

At its 5194th meeting, on 3 June 2005, in which the representative of Côte d'Ivoire was invited to participate, the Council again included in its agenda the fourth progress report of the Secretary-General on UNOCI.⁷¹ The President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution,⁷² as well as two letters from the representative of South Africa to the President of the Council, dated 25 April 2005⁷³ and 23 May 2005,⁷⁴ respectively. The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1603 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Endorsed the Pretoria Agreement and demanded that all the signatories to the agreement and all the Ivorian parties concerned implement it fully and without delay;

Demanded that all the Ivorian parties take all necessary steps to ensure that the forthcoming general elections were free, fair and transparent; requested the Secretary-General, on the basis of the Pretoria Agreement, to designate, as an exceptional arrangement, after consultations with the African Union and President Thabo Mbeki, a High Representative for the elections in Côte d'Ivoire, autonomous from UNOCI, to assist in particular in the work of the Independent Electoral Commission and of the Constitutional Council, without prejudice to the responsibilities of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General;

Decided that the mandate of UNOCI and of the French forces which supported it should be extended until 24 June 2005, with a view to renewing it, in this specific instance, for a period of seven months.

Decision of 24 June 2005 (5213th meeting):
resolution 1609 (2005)

At its 5213th meeting, on 24 June 2005, the Council included in its agenda the fifth progress report of the Secretary-General on UNOCI, dated 17 June 2005.⁷⁵ In his report, the Secretary-General noted that since the signing of the Pretoria Agreement on 6 April 2005, some progress had been made towards its implementation, notably the resolution of the issue concerning eligibility for the presidency, the agreement on the timing and modalities of the national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, the removal by FANCI and the Forces nouvelles of their heavy weapons from the Zone of Confidence and the approval and implementation of the provisions regarding the statute and management of Ivorian Radio and Television. At the same time, other key provisions of the Agreement had yet to be swiftly implemented, particularly with regard to the restoration of the full integrity of the Government of National Reconciliation and the preparations for the first round of the presidential elections. The Secretary-General said that UNOCI must be urgently reinforced so that it had the capacity to effectively carry out its mandated responsibilities as well as those tasks envisaged for it under the Pretoria Agreement. He therefore requested the Council to authorize the deployment of an additional 2,076 troops and three formed police units comprising 375 officers to assist in the provision of security and the maintenance of law and order during the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and electoral processes, along with a limited reinforcement in the civilian component of the mission.⁷⁶

The representative of Côte d'Ivoire was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁷⁷ it was subsequently put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1609 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that the mandate of UNOCI and of the French forces which supported it should be extended, in this specific instance, for a period of seven months, until 24 January 2006;

Authorized an increase in the military component of UNOCI of up to 850 additional personnel as well as an increase in the civilian police component of up to a ceiling of 725 civilian police personnel, including three formed police units, and the necessary additional civilian personnel;

Decided to review the troop levels of UNOCI by 31 December 2005, including the civilian police component, in the light of the situation in Côte d'Ivoire after the forthcoming general elections and on the basis of the tasks remaining to be carried out, with a view to further reduction as appropriate;

Authorized UNOCI to use all necessary means to carry out its mandate, within its capabilities and its areas of deployment;

Authorized from the date of adoption of the resolution the French forces to use all necessary means in order to support UNOCI in accordance with the agreement reached between UNOCI and the French authorities.

Decision of 6 July 2005 (5221st meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5221st meeting, on 6 July 2005, the Council extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (Greece) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁷⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the efforts undertaken by the African Union mediation so that the forthcoming elections in Côte d'Ivoire were credible and held as planned, and reiterated its full support to the African Union mediator; recalled that it had endorsed the Pretoria Agreement signed on 6 April 2005; and demanded that all the signatories to the Agreement and all the Ivorian parties concerned implement fully and without delay all the commitments made with the African Union mediation and complied scrupulously with the timetable agreed on 29 June 2005 in Pretoria;

Affirmed that it stood ready, in close consultation with the African Union mediation, to implement individual sanctions provided for in paragraphs 9 and 11 of resolution 1572 (2004) against those who did not comply with those commitments or constituted an obstacle to their full implementation.

statement by the President

⁷⁸ S/PRST/2005/28.

⁷⁹ At its 5253rd meeting, held in private on 31 August 2005, the Council heard briefings by the Minister of Defence of South Africa, the representative of Nigeria (representing the Chairman of the African Union) and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for members to a letter dated 6 October 2005 from the representative of Nigeria to the President of the Council.⁸⁰ The Council heard briefings by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Nigeria, the Commissioner of the African Union Commission, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire and the High Representative for the elections in Côte d'Ivoire, following which the representative of Côte d'Ivoire made a statement.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Nigeria was concerned about the potentially explosive situation in Côte d'Ivoire, noting that it had become increasingly clear that the transition period envisaged in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement could not be completed with the expected holding of elections on 30 October 2005. It was therefore urgently necessary for the international community to consider ways and means to manage the situation on the ground after that date. In that context, the Minister recalled that both the African Union Peace and Security Council and ECOWAS had recently held summits to address the Ivorian crisis and made decisions concerning the possible developments in Côte d'Ivoire provided that no elections would be held by 30 October 2005. He reiterated the request by the Peace and Security Council that the Council consider a substantial increase in the strength of UNOCI so that it could effectively take up increased responsibilities. The current authorized troop levels of UNOCI, he noted, were "far too low" for a credible disarmament in Côte d'Ivoire to be achieved. In closing, the Minister appealed to the Council to act with the same sense of urgency as demonstrated by the Peace and Security Council and ECOWAS by promptly endorsing their decisions on Côte d'Ivoire as well as by strengthening UNOCI. He also stressed the need to ensure that all the structures that were essential for the governance of Côte d'Ivoire after 30 October 2005 must be put in place before that date.⁸¹

The Commissioner of the African Union Commission informed the Council that the African Union Peace and Security Council had taken a number of important decisions on Côte d'Ivoire for the period after 30 October 2005, including extending the transitional arrangements contained in the Linas-Marcoussis Agreement for a period not exceeding 12 months. The Peace and Security Council had also clarified the role of the international community in support of the Ivorian peace process, particularly that expected of the United Nations. The Commissioner underlined that the decisions of the Peace and Security Council of 6 October 2005 were aimed at injecting new impetus into the peace process through greater determination and involvement by the international community, as well as by greater support for and pressure on the Ivorian parties in the implementation of their commitments and obligations. He called on the Ivorian parties and the international community to take full advantage of the extended transition period to address all outstanding issues. The parties must comply strictly with their commitments and obligations, and the international community should stand ready to exert the necessary pressure and sanctions against defaulting parties. Meanwhile, the role and presence of both UNOCI and the High Representative for elections in Côte d'Ivoire must be strengthened. Finally, the Commissioner urged the Council to support the decisions of the Peace and Security Council and take all other necessary measures to further advance the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire.⁸²

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire observed that the Ivorian leaders had not embraced the new path to peace as identified by the African Union Peace and Security Council. At the same time, several major challenges stood in the way towards lasting peace and security, particularly the rampant insecurity, the stalemate in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process and in the preparations for elections, as well as the aggressive media environment. Of particular concern were the continued violations of human rights, which constituted both a cause and a consequence of the Ivorian crisis. He expressed concern at the fact that the perpetrators of those violations had thus far enjoyed near-total impunity and reaffirmed the call by the Secretary-General that the Council should urgently consider the report of the International Commission of Inquiry into allegations of serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Côte d'Ivoire. In closing, the Special Representative noted that a number of measures ought to be taken to follow up with the decisions of the Peace and Security Council. These included (a) the Peace and Security Council decisions should be endorsed by the Council; (b) an urgent meeting of the international working group aimed at defining a new timetable for the implementation of the remaining provisions of the Pretoria Agreement should be encouraged; (c) a new Ivorian Prime Minister and national Government should be in place as soon as possible; (d) timely recommendations should be made on the role of the National Assembly after its mandate ended in December 2005; (e) President Obasanjo and President Mbeki should be supported in their forthcoming visit to Côte d'Ivoire; and (f) the role of the United Nations needed to be clarified, given the critical and concrete tasks that it was expected to perform in support of the implementation of key aspects of the peace process.⁸³

The High Representative for the elections in Côte d'Ivoire noted that the key role of the Independent Electoral Commission in conducting the electoral process and clarifying questions regarding nationality, identification and naturalization was confirmed only after a further intervention by the African Union mediator upon his request. Given that the composition of the Commission had been finalized and its bureau was expected to be elected soon, the High Representative held that the most delicate task facing it was the identification question and the criteria for voter eligibility. The High Representative stressed that the electoral work could proceed effectively only in an environment with adequate security throughout the country, as freedom of movement and freedom of thought were indispensable to guarantee truly democratic elections accepted by all. He believed that the proposed extension of the transition for a period not exceeding 12 months was largely sufficient for the preparing and holding of free and fair elections.⁸⁴

The representative of Côte d'Ivoire said that the sixth report of the Secretary-General on UNOCI⁸⁵ seemed to have failed to sufficiently take into account the fact that Côte d'Ivoire had been at war for three years and that the northern and western half of the country was being occupied by the rebels. In the meantime, he reiterated the commitment of his Government to ensure safety for goods and persons and freedom of movement for the impartial forces. With regard to the decisions taken by the African Union Peace and Security Council, he indicated that, as the presidential election could not be held as scheduled, primarily because the rebels were still armed and the country was still divided, President Gbagbo would remain in office until the new president was sworn in. He was convinced that the arrangements for government after 30 October 2005 proposed by the Peace and Security Council would make it possible for the peace process to continue, which was currently blocked primarily by the stalled disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process. He strongly hoped that the Council would endorse the decisions of the Peace and Security Council and underlined that discussions on a so-called "constitutional vacuum" must be ended so that all the parties could start preparing for free and transparent elections on the basis of the various agreements, particularly the road map provided for in the Pretoria Agreement of 6 April 2005 and the Pretoria Declaration of 29 June 2005.⁸⁶

At the 5281st meeting,⁸⁷ on 14 October 2005, in which the representative of Côte d'Ivoire was invited to participate, the President (Romania) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁸⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Appreciated the efforts of the African Union, ECOWAS, the leaders of the region, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the High Representative for the elections to promote peace and stability in Côte d'Ivoire, and reiterated its full support for these efforts;

Endorsed the decision of the African Union Peace and Security Council on the situation in Côte d'Ivoire adopted at its 40th meeting, held at the level of Heads of State and Government, expressed its intention to take rapidly all necessary measures to support as appropriate its implementation, in order to organize free, fair, open, transparent and credible elections as soon as possible and no later than 30 October 2006;

resolution 1632 (2005)

At its 5283rd meeting, on 18 October 2005, the Council extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (Romania) then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁸⁹ it was subsequently put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1632 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of the Group of Experts to 15 December 2005 and requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary administrative measures;

Requested the Group of Experts to submit a brief written update to the Council, through the Committee established by paragraph 14 of resolution 1572 (2004), before 1 December 2005, on the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraph 7 of resolution 1572 (2004) and affirmed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1584 (2005), with recommendations in this regard;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 21 October 2005 (5288th meeting):
resolution 1633 (2005)

At the 5288th meeting, on 21 October 2005, in which the representative of Côte d'Ivoire was invited to participate, the President (Romania) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution,⁹⁰ and again to the letter dated 6 October 2005 from the representative of Nigeria to the President of the Council.⁹¹ The draft resolution was subsequently put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1633 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Urged the Chairperson of the African Union, the Chairperson of ECOWAS and the African Union mediator to consult with all the Ivorian parties in order to ensure that a new Prime Minister should be appointed by 31 October 2005;

Stressed that the Prime Minister must have all the necessary powers and all the governmental financial, material and human resources to ensure the effective functioning of the Government, to guarantee security and the redeployment of the administration and public services throughout the territory of Côte d'Ivoire, to lead the programme of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and the operations of disarmament and dismantling of militias, and to ensure the fairness of the identification process and of voter registration, leading to the organization of free, open, fair and transparent elections, with the support of the United Nations;

Requested the International Working Group to draw up a road map in consultation with all Ivorian parties, with a view to holding free, fair, open and transparent elections as soon as possible and no later than 31 October 2006;

Demanded that all Ivorian parties stop all incitement to hatred and violence in media and disarmament and immediately start dismantling of militias throughout the national territory; urged countries neighbouring Côte d'Ivoire to prevent any cross-border movement of combatants or arms into Côte d'Ivoire.

Decision of 30 November 2005 (5314th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5314th meeting, on 30 November 2005, the Council extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (Russian Federation) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁹² by which the Council, inter alia:

Affirmed that the rapid appointment of a Prime Minister of Côte d'Ivoire was crucial to relaunch the peace process leading to the holding of free, fair, open and transparent elections no later than 31 October 2006;

Expressed its deep concern at the persistent disagreements among Ivorian parties on the appointment of the Prime Minister and considered that the Prime Minister must be designated without any further delay;

Expressed its full support for the International Working Group, endorsed its final communiqué of 8 November 2005, welcomed its decision to hold its second meeting on 6 December 2005 in Abidjan, and urged the Group to keep the Council informed of the conclusions of its work;

Reaffirmed its readiness, in close consultation with the African Union mediation, to impose individual measures provided for in paragraphs 9 and 11 of resolution 1572 (2004) and in resolution 1633 (2005).

Decision of 9 December 2005 (5318th meeting):

President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council members to a letter dated 8 December 2005 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council.⁹³ He subsequently made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁹⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the appointment of Mr. Charles Konan Banny as Prime Minister of Côte d'Ivoire, and expressed its full support for him;

Endorsed the final communiqué of the International Working Group of 6 December 2005; reaffirmed its support for the decision of the African Union Peace and Security Council, which stressed that the ministers should be accountable to the Prime Minister, who should have full authority over his Cabinet;

Recalled and reaffirmed that the Prime Minister must have all the necessary powers and resources described in resolution 1633 (2005), and stressed the importance of the full implementation of the resolution by the Ivorian parties under the monitoring of the International Working Group;

Urged the establishment without delay of the Government so that the Prime Minister could implement as soon as possible the road map defined by the International Working Group, and requested the Mediation Group and the International Working Group to monitor this matter closely;

Reiterated its full support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the High Representative for the elections.

Decision of 15 December 2005 (5327th meeting): resolution 1643 (2005)

At its 5327th meeting, on 15 December 2005, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 7 November 2005 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1572 (2004) concerning Côte d'Ivoire to the President of the Council, transmitting the final report of the Group of Experts on Côte d'Ivoire.⁹⁵ In that report, the Group observed that the defence expenditure of Côte d'Ivoire was high and that the Security Council should call upon the Government of Côte d'Ivoire to submit a comprehensive breakdown of that expenditure for 2005. While the amount of revenue from cocoa production and exports and how it was allocated lacked fiscal transparency, there was no credible evaluation of current illegal export volumes of rough diamonds from Côte d'Ivoire. In addition, the Group held that the fruit terminal at Abidjan port was clearly a strategic location for the unloading of military goods and equipment and required increased UNOCI monitoring. The Group also reiterated an observation in its previous report⁹⁶ that the Committee needed to clarify as a matter of urgency the situation in which the lack of determination as to the names of individuals or organizations for an asset freeze or travel ban had caused the widespread frustration on the part of Member States at not being able to fully implement resolution 1572 (2004).

The representative of Côte d'Ivoire was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to letters from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council dated 28 November 2005⁹⁷ and 8 December 2005,⁹⁸ respectively, as well as a draft resolution submitted by France.⁹⁹ The draft resolution was subsequently put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1643 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to renew until 15 December 2006 the provisions of paragraphs 7 to 12 of resolution 1572 (2004);

Decided that any attack or serious obstacle to the freedom of movement of UNOCI, the French forces, the High Representative for the elections and the International Working Group constituted a threat to the peace and national reconciliation process, and requested the Secretary-General and the Government of France to report to it immediately any serious obstacle or attack;

Decided that all States should take the necessary measures to prevent the import of all rough diamonds from Côte d'Ivoire to their territory; requested all States concerned to report to the Committee, within 90 days, on the actions they had taken to implement resolution 1572 (2004) and the present resolution, and authorized the Committee to request whatever further information it might consider necessary;

Decided that at the end of the period mentioned above, the Council should review the measures imposed by resolution 1572 (2004) and by the present resolution;

Requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee, to re-establish, within 30 days and for a period of

Decision of 19 January 2006 (5350th meeting):
statement by the President

On 3 January 2006, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council the seventh progress report on UNOCI.¹⁰⁰ In that report, the Secretary-General observed that the decision of 6 October 2005 of the African Union Peace and Security Council,¹⁰¹ which had been endorsed by the Council in its resolution 1633 (2005), had helped to prevent a dangerous political and security crisis following the end of President Gbagbo's mandate on 30 October 2005, thereby giving the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire a new lease on life. He welcomed the appointment of Mr. Charles Konan Banny as the new Prime Minister for the transition period and the formation of his Government, but cautioned that the peace process brooked no further delays. In terms of those individuals and groups who obstructed the overall peace process, the Council should consider imposing targeted measures against them. The Secretary-General urged the Prime Minister to work with the International Working Group and the Mediation Group on Côte d'Ivoire to swiftly finalize the road map for the transition period. He further called upon the political parties to work with the Prime Minister and the High Representative for the elections to promptly resolve the ongoing artificially created dispute within the Independent Electoral Commission. He fully supported the view of the International Working Group that, if need be, the High Representative should invoke his arbitration authority to decisively settle the matter.

The Secretary-General emphasized that the Council's strong political determination to move the Ivorian peace process forward must be matched by the commensurate reinforcement of UNOCI to realize the goals set out in resolution 1633 (2005). He urged anew the Council to swiftly approve his recommendations of reinforcing UNOCI, including an increase in the troop levels by four battalions (3,400 troops) as well as the immediate deployment of three additional formed police units (375 officers) and 100 civilian police officers. He recommended that the mandate of UNOCI be extended for a period of 12 months, until 24 January 2007, to adequately cover the post-election period in Côte d'Ivoire. Finally, reiterating the need for financial support for the effective implementation of the road map for the Ivorian peace process, especially the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and the electoral process, he implored the Security Council and the General Assembly to consider authorizing the funding of the office of the High Representative for the elections from assessed contributions.

At its 5350th meeting, on 19 January 2006, the Council included the above-mentioned report in its agenda and extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (United Republic of Tanzania) subsequently made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰² by which the Council, inter alia:

Strongly condemned the recent violent attacks against UNOCI and international non-governmental organization facilities in Côte d'Ivoire by street militias and other groups associated with the "Young Patriots", as well as their instigators;

Called upon all Ivorians to refrain from any hostile action, and demanded the immediate end of this violence and of all hatred messages in the media, in particular the attacks against the United Nations;

Welcomed the urgent mission to Abidjan led by President Obasanjo;

Underlined the fact that the occupation of the facilities of Ivorian Radio and Television constituted an attack against freedom and neutrality of information as well as a breach of the principles of the process of national reconciliation, of previous resolutions of the Security Council and of the peace agreements;

Reiterated its full support for the Prime Minister, Mr. Charles Konan Banny.

Decision of 24 January 2006 (5354th meeting):
resolution 1652 (2006)

At its 5354th meeting, on 24 January 2006, the Council again included in its agenda the seventh progress report of the Secretary-General on UNOCI¹⁰³ and extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (United Republic of Tanzania) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution,¹⁰⁴ as well as a letter dated 20 January 2006 from the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to the President of the Council.¹⁰⁵

The draft resolution was subsequently put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1652 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNOCI and of the French forces which supported it until 15 December 2006;

Decided to extend the provisions of paragraph 3 of resolution 1609 (2005) until 15 December 2006;

Expressed its intention to keep under review the tasks and the troop level of UNOCI.

Decision of 6 February 2006 (5366th meeting):
resolution 1657 (2006)

At its 5366th meeting, on 6 February 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 1 February 2006 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council.¹⁰⁶ In that letter, the Secretary-General, taking into account further consideration by the Council of his recommendations on the reinforcement of UNOCI, indicated his intention to temporarily redeploy up to one mechanized infantry battalion and one formed police unit from the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL) to UNOCI for an initial period of three months.

The President (United States) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France;¹⁰⁷ it was then put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1657 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to authorize the Secretary-General to redeploy immediately a maximum of one infantry company from UNMIL to UNOCI, until 31 March 2006, in order to provide extra security coverage for United Nations personnel and property, and to perform other tasks mandated to UNOCI, without prejudice to any future decision by the Council concerning the renewal of the mandate and level of troops of UNMIL and a further extension of the redeployment mentioned above;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 23 February 2006 (5378th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5378th meeting, on 23 February 2006, the President (United States) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its full support for the International Working Group and endorsed its fourth final communiqué, of 17 February 2006;

Also endorsed the arbitration by the High Representative for the elections according to which the election of the Bureau of the Independent Electoral Commission was in compliance with the Pretoria Agreement;

Urged the Ivorian parties to ensure the effective functioning of the Independent Electoral Commission as soon as possible;

Underscored the imperative to guarantee the independence and neutrality of Ivorian Radio and Television;

Urged the Ivorian State authorities to facilitate, notably in the west, the return of humanitarian agencies and organizations.

Decision of 29 March 2006 (5400th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5399th meeting, on 29 March 2006, the Council heard a statement by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Côte d'Ivoire. He noted that, despite the violence in Abidjan and in the west of the country in mid-January, the general situation in his country had been satisfactory since the formation of the new Government in December 2005. He recalled that to further move the peace process forward two meetings had recently been held in Yamoussoukro, namely a Government seminar aimed at defining the modalities for the implementation of the road map and a round-table summit among the four major Ivorian political leaders. At that summit, the leaders took a number of decisions. They noted that resolution 1633 (2005) and the Constitution of Côte d'Ivoire were not incompatible and urged that the President and the Prime Minister find appropriate solutions to avoid potential conflicts relating to the execution of their respective authorities. They urged the Prime Minister to consult with the relevant parties to determine the powers and operating rules of the Independent Electoral Commission so that the elections could be organized in a fair, transparent and credible manner. They agreed to meet frequently to ensure that political life in Côte d'Ivoire was conducted in a calm environment and with respect for the values of fraternity and democracy.

The Minister observed that immediately following the convening of the two meetings, progress had been made in the implementation of resolution 1633 (2005) and the road map. The Independent Electoral Commission had started its work after many months of uncertainty; the Secretary-General of the Forces nouvelles had returned to Abidjan after 17 months of absence; and the Government had put in place the electoral and identification processes, which would proceed simultaneously. In addition, it also became possible to partially begin redeploying the State administration in the areas of education in the regions under the control of the Forces nouvelles. Stressing the need to consolidate the ongoing climate of trust and make the progress irreversible, the Minister highlighted that the issue of security must be settled as a matter of top priority and that one of the most urgent tasks was to improve the conditions of soldiers in the national army. He also informed the Council that an inter-ministerial commission had been set up to coordinate humanitarian action on a national scale.

While reaffirming that the peace and reconciliation process had taken a positive turn, the Minister stressed that much remained to be done, including financing the electoral process at all stages; completing the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process; strengthening security throughout the country, particularly in the west bordering Liberia; resolving humanitarian problems and supporting human rights; strengthening the capacities of judicial institutions; reducing the high unemployment rate among young people; and carrying out the return of refugees and displaced persons. In closing, while strongly hoping that a new High Representative for the elections would be appointed as soon as possible, the Minister noted that his Government supported the Secretary-General's proposal to strengthen UNOCI and would ask the Council to consider it positively.¹⁰⁹

At the 5400th meeting, on 29 March 2006, in which the representative of Côte d'Ivoire was invited to participate, the President (Argentina) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹¹⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its full support for the International Working Group and endorsed its fifth final communiqué, of 17 March 2006;

Urged Ivorian leaders to fulfil all their commitments, in particular those made in Yamoussoukro on 28 February 2006, and to rapidly implement the road map, in good faith and in a spirit of trust, in order to organize free, fair, open and transparent elections by 31 October 2006;

Underlined the urgency of progress in the identification process, the establishment of the electoral registers and the commencement of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme;

Called on donor countries to provide the Prime Minister with all the necessary support for the full and immediate implementation of the road map;

Reiterated its grave concern at the situation in the west;

Urged UNOCI to continue its redeployment in this region and called also for the return of this region to civilian authority;

Strongly condemned the persistence of violations of human rights, the attacks against members of the Government, the obstacles to the freedom of movement of impartial forces, and the incitements to hatred and violence in the media;

Requested the Ivorian authorities to guarantee, in close liaison with UNOCI, that all steps be taken to preserve the independence of Ivorian Radio and Television.

Decision of 27 April 2006 (5428th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5426th meeting, on 27 April 2006, the Council heard a statement by the Prime Minister of Côte d'Ivoire, who reiterated that the general situation in his country remained relatively satisfactory, although events were not proceeding as quickly as he had wished. In that context, he recalled that the Government had taken several initiatives towards the reconciliation and restoration of confidence among the parties, notably the two meetings held in Yamoussoukro in February which had led to significant progress in the political, military and administrative areas. In the political area, the restoration of dialogue among the political leaders helped dispel distrust that separated them and removed obstacles to the implementation of the various agreements, resolution 1633 (2005) and the road map. In the military area, the former belligerents resumed the talks that had been interrupted for more than a year. At the administrative level, State authorities were expected to be redeployed in the national education and higher education sectors in the regions controlled by the Forces nouvelles. Noting that the progress made thus far had to be made irreversible by enhancing the climate of confidence, the Prime Minister shared the concern expressed by the Secretary-General in his eighth report on UNOCI¹¹¹ over the consequences of any further delays in the implementation of the key deadlines set by resolution 1633 (2005) and the road map. Stating that a safe atmosphere of confidence could be ensured only by a military presence that was more significant and could also act as a deterrent, he underlined that the human, material and financial capabilities of UNOCI should be further strengthened. Finally, the Prime Minister noted that as the main concern of all Ivorians and of his Government, security throughout the country, not only in Abidjan, but also in the western region and in Bouaké, must be guaranteed. He therefore hoped that the number of additional blue helmets to reinforce UNOCI would be as close as possible to that requested by the Secretary-General.¹¹²

At the 5428th meeting,¹¹³ on 27 April 2006, at which the Prime Minister of Côte d'Ivoire was present, the President (China) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹¹⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its full support for the International Working Group and endorsed its sixth final communiqué, of 20 April 2006;

Expressed its grave concern at the serious delay in the implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and of the identification operations; shared the concern expressed by the Secretary-General in paragraph 74 of his report dated 11 April 2006 over the consequences of any additional delays in the implementation of the key deadlines of the road map;

Invited therefore the Prime Minister and the Government of National Reconciliation he led to take immediately all the measures necessary to the simultaneous implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and identification operations;

Also invited the International Working Group, in accordance with paragraph 10 of resolution 1633 (2005), to report to it any hindrance or difficulty which the Prime Minister might face in implementing his tasks.

Decision of 24 May 2006 (5442nd meeting):
statement by the President

On 11 April 2006, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council the eighth report on UNOCI.¹¹⁵ In that report, the Secretary-General observed that the recent initiatives taken by the Prime Minister had given fresh impetus to the Ivorian peace process. He welcomed the mechanisms for the implementation of the road map which had been set up during the Government seminar and the summit of the Ivorian leaders in February, but he cautioned that considerable challenges remained ahead. In that context, the Secretary-General underlined that the progress achieved so far could be sustained only if further concrete and dynamic action was taken to begin the implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, the dismantling of the militias, the redeployment of State authority and the preparations for the elections. He urged the Ivorian parties to agree without delay on the modalities for implementing the crucial identification process, adding that the United Nations was prepared to assist in that respect. Fearing that as long as the militias and the Young Patriots remained mobilized, the security situation in Côte d'Ivoire would continue to be fragile and potentially volatile, he stressed that the disarmament process, including disarmament of the militias, must start immediately.

To complete the extremely complex peace process, the Secretary-General noted, would require the mobilization of significant resources and the full adherence of the Ivorian parties to the principles and objectives laid down in the peace agreements and Council resolutions. He emphasized that the window of opportunity for full implementation of the road map was very narrow and cautioned that any further delays or disruptions in the peace process would hinder the timely organization of the elections by 31 October 2006. The Secretary-General reaffirmed his appeal to the Council to give positive consideration to his recommendations on reinforcement of UNOCI as contained in his seventh report on UNOCI¹¹⁶ and reiterated in his letter dated 22 March 2006 to the President of the Council.¹¹⁷ He held that the disturbances in the country in January 2006 had attested to the need to reinforce UNOCI operational capabilities so that it could not only perform its original mandate more effectively, but also take up the new challenging tasks ascribed to it by the road map. The Secretary-General urged the Ivorian parties to take concrete measures to guarantee the freedom of movement and operations of all international personnel in Côte d'Ivoire and hoped that those committing attacks against the United Nations would be held personally accountable for their actions. He was also deeply concerned at the possible spillover of insecurity in Côte d'Ivoire into the subregion, particularly to Liberia.

At its 5442nd meeting, on 24 May 2006, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned eighth report of the Secretary-General on UNOCI¹¹⁸ and extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (Congo) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹¹⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its full support for the International Working Group and endorsed its seventh final communiqué, of 19 May 2006;

Called upon the community of donors to provide the necessary financial resources to the High Representative for the elections;

Reiterated its grave concern at the serious delay in the implementation of the road map;

Strongly condemned acts of violence against civilians and political leaders; demanded that all parties refrain from inciting violence and called on the authorities to identify and punish those responsible for the violence;

Urged all parties to cooperate closely with the Prime Minister to create the conditions for the holding of free, open and fair elections by 31 October 2006;

Underlined that targeted measures were to be imposed against persons blocking the implementation of the peace process.

Decision of 2 June 2006 (5451st meeting):
resolution 1682 (2006)

President (Denmark) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution,¹²⁰ as well as a letter dated 25 May 2006 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council¹²¹ and a letter dated 22 May 2006 from the President of the Council to the Secretary-General.¹²²

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1682 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Authorized until 15 December 2006 an increase in the strength of UNOCI of up to 1,500 additional personnel, including a maximum of 1,025 military personnel and 475 civilian police personnel;

Expressed its intention to keep under review the appropriate personnel level of UNOCI, in the light of the situation in Côte d'Ivoire and in the subregion;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 19 July 2006 (5491st meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5491st meeting, on 19 July 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 12 July 2006 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council¹²³ and extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (France) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹²⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Urged all Ivorian parties to implement, in close liaison with the impartial forces, all their commitments made at the meeting held in Yamoussoukro on 5 July 2006 and to accelerate the implementation of the road map in order to create the conditions indispensable for the holding of free, open, fair and transparent elections by 31 October;

Requested the Secretary-General to report to it before the September meeting on the obstacles remaining to the implementation of the road map and on those responsible;

Expressed its full support for the International Working Group and endorsed its eighth final communiqué, of 23 June 2006;

Reiterated its full support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the High Representative for the elections.

Decision of 7 August 2006 (5505th meeting): statement by the President

At the 5505th meeting, on 7 August 2006, in which the representative of Côte d'Ivoire was invited to participate, the President (Ghana) again drew the attention of the Council members to a letter dated 12 July 2006 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council,¹²⁵ and to a second letter dated 26 July 2006.¹²⁶ He then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹²⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its utmost concern and condemned the acts of violence committed by organized groups, in particular the Young Patriots, which had led to the deaths of civilians, and further condemned the attack of 24 July against the High Representative for the elections;

Condemned also the incidents of 15 July at the premises of Ivorian Radio and Television;

Called on the Ivorian authorities to strengthen security measures at Ivorian Radio and Television;

Demanded that the Defence and Security Forces of Côte d'Ivoire, including the Republican Guard, act within the law of the land at all times to ensure full security of the population;

Considered that it was necessary to deploy throughout the territory of Côte d'Ivoire as many mobile courts as possible.

Decision of 14 September 2006 (5524th meeting): resolution 1708 (2006)

At its 5524th meeting, on 14 September 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 13 September 2006 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1572 (2004) to the President of the Council, transmitting the final report of the Group of Experts on Côte d'Ivoire.¹²⁸ In that report, the Group noted that while no evidence of gross violations of Security Council measures had been found, the Committee needed to urgently address a number of incidents that were believed to constitute violations. It held that the inspection process by UNOCI must be reviewed, cautioning that the monitoring system could be easily circumnavigated if there was a serious deterioration of the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire. While the targeting of three Ivorian individuals in February 2006 appeared at the time to have had a calming effect, the Group was concerned that the targeting of additional individuals by the Committee without effective monitoring and compliance systems in place by States neighbouring Côte d'Ivoire could be counterproductive.

The representative of Côte d'Ivoire was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Greece) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹²⁹ it was then put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1708 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of the Group of Experts to 15 December 2006 and requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary administrative measures;

Requested the Group of Experts to submit a brief written update to the Council, before 1 December 2006, on the implementation of the measures imposed by resolutions 1572 (2004) and 1643 (2005) with recommendations in this regard; decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 1 November 2006 (5561st meeting): resolution 1721 (2006)

On 17 October 2006, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council the tenth progress report on UNOCI.¹³⁰ In that report, the Secretary-General noted that, in spite of some initial progress, implementation of the decisions taken at the Yamoussoukro high-level meeting he had convened on 5 July 2006¹³¹ had encountered deliberate obstruction by some political leaders, resulting in a new stalemate. The impasse emanated mainly from major disagreements among the Ivorian parties on fundamental issues concerning the procedures for issuing certificates of nationality and the related preparation of the voters' list. Consequently, the second transition period, like the previous one, was coming to a close without elections. In that context, the Secretary-General stressed that the African Union and the Security Council must capitalize and build upon the proposals made by the ECOWAS leaders concerning the way forward after the current transition period expired on 31 October 2006, and put in place the requisite measures to accelerate the peace process and guarantee the success of the anticipated new transition arrangements. He strongly believed that the duration of the new transition should be determined strictly on the basis of the time required to complete the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, to conduct effective identification, to dismantle the militias, to re-establish State authority throughout the country and to finalize the preparations for the elections. He considered it important to make clear to the Ivorian leaders that the envisaged further extension of the transition period should be the last. Should they fail to move towards the elections again, ECOWAS, the African Union and the Security Council should consider putting in place transitional governance arrangements comprising eminent, non-partisan personalities from civil society to complete the remaining transition processes and conduct the long-overdue elections.

To eliminate the existing loopholes and avoid previously encountered obstacles, the Secretary-General held that the Council ought to consider setting a number of ground rules and safeguards for the third transition period, as follows: (a) international instruments that set out the special arrangements for the transition period, such as Council resolutions and the various peace agreements, should take precedence where there might be a divergence with the Ivorian Constitution and national laws; (b) the Prime Minister should have the necessary authority over all relevant public offices and the Defence and Security Forces on all issues pertaining to the implementation of the road map; (c) all commanders of the Defence and Security Forces and political leaders should be held personally responsible for activities that disrupted the implementation of the road map and be subject to the imposition of individual sanctions by the Council, with the more serious cases referred to the International Criminal Court; (d) all parties should allow the Ivorian population and the impartial forces complete freedom of movement throughout the country; (e) the Prime Minister should have full and unfettered authority to implement the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, the identification process, the dismantling of the militias and the earliest re-establishment of State authority throughout the country, as well as to commit the necessary funds to ensure the implementation of those key processes; and (f) articles 35 and 48 of the Constitution of Côte d'Ivoire should not be invoked during the transition period in respect of those key processes.

With regard to the transition institutions, the Secretary-General stressed the importance of establishing, under the Prime Minister's authority, two task forces on the restructuring of the Defence and Security Forces and on the identification process. He recommended that the United Nations play an enhanced role in the Ivorian peace process and urged the Council to review the mandate of UNOCI and augment its resources. Concerning the electoral process, the Secretary-General underlined the need to ensure that the High Representative for the elections had the authority to make binding determinations on all issues pertaining to the electoral process and that his Office was sufficiently funded, including by assessed contributions. He highlighted that each stage of the Ivorian electoral process should be certified by the High Representative. Finally, noting that ECOWAS and the African Union could play an equally critical role in supporting the new transition process, the Secretary-General urged the two regional bodies to forge unity among the regional actors and mediators to ensure that all mediation efforts were harmonized and properly coordinated. He hoped that the planned summit of the African Union Peace and Security Council, having reviewed the concrete recommendations by the ECOWAS leaders, would come up with clear decisions on the way forward in Côte d'Ivoire in order to meet the various imperatives for an effective and expeditious implementation of the peace process.

At its 5561st meeting,¹³² on 1 November 2006, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned report and extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion.¹³³ The President (Peru) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution,¹³⁴ as well as a letter dated 18 October 2006 from the representative of the Congo to the President of the Council.¹³⁵

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1721 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Endorsed the decision of the African Union Peace and Security Council that President Laurent Gbagbo should remain Head of State as from 1 November 2006 for a new and final transition period not exceeding 12 months;

Endorsed the decision of the Peace and Security Council to renew the mandate of the Prime Minister, Mr. Charles Konan Banny, as from 1 November 2006 for a new and final transition period not exceeding 12 months, and endorsed also the decision of the Peace and Security Council that the Prime Minister should not be eligible to stand for the presidential elections to be organized by 31 October 2007;

Demanded the immediate resumption of the programme for the disarmament and dismantling of militias throughout the national territory, stressed that the programme was a key element of the peace process, and underlined the individual responsibility of the leaders of the militias in the full implementation of this process; demanded that all the Ivorian parties concerned, in particular the armed forces of the Forces nouvelles and the armed forces of Côte d'Ivoire, participate fully and in good faith in the work of the quadripartite commission responsible for overseeing the implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and the operations for the disarmament and dismantling of militias;

Demanded that all Ivorian parties end all incitement to hatred and violence, in radio and television broadcasting as well as in any other media, and urged the Prime Minister to establish and implement without delay a code of conduct for the media, in conformity with the decisions taken in Yamoussoukro on 5 July 2006 and the decision of the Peace and Security Council;

Demanded that all Ivorian parties cooperate fully with the operations of UNOCI and the French forces which supported it.

Decision of 15 December 2006 (5591st meeting): resolution 1726 (2006)

On 4 December 2006, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council the eleventh progress report on UNOCI.¹³⁶ In that report, the Secretary-General noted that while it was welcomed in the subregion as a major step forward, resolution 1721 (2006) had received mixed reactions from the Ivorian parties. On the one hand, President Gbagbo had expressed the view that all the peace plans devised by the international community to date had failed and that the Ivorian people should therefore find their own solution to the crisis. Those remarks were generally considered as an attempt to walk away from resolution 1721 (2006). On the other hand, the Forces nouvelles and the opposition parties had welcomed the resolution, with the former saying that it had addressed their major concerns and the latter calling for a boycott of the consultations initiated by President Gbagbo aimed to find an alternative framework for addressing the crisis. For his part, the Prime Minister was determined to implement the resolution, stressing that there was no need for another framework to resolve the Ivorian crisis.

The Secretary-General maintained that resolution 1721 (2006) provided a sound framework, as well as the necessary tools and safeguards, for bringing the Ivorian peace process to a successful conclusion in the coming 12 months. He appealed to the four main Ivorian leaders to seize the opportunity offered by the final extension of the transition period, work together with the Prime Minister to build on the initial positive steps in the areas of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, identification and the restoration of State authority, and make the hard compromises needed to take their country out of crisis. Mindful of the fact that the current transition period was expected to be completed by 31 October 2007, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council authorize the renewal of the mandate of UNOCI for an additional year, until 15 December 2007. While calling on the Council to approve his recommendations relating to the United Nations contribution in support of the key implementation processes, he also sought the support of the Council for an expanded presence of the civil affairs, political affairs, human rights and the rule of law components of UNOCI in the northern and western parts of the country to support the restoration of State administration in those areas. Finally, in view of the need to adjust the overall posture of the UNOCI military component and to enhance its role in maintaining overall security in the country, facilitating freedom of movement and protecting civilians, the Secretary-General urged the Council to approve the deployment of the remaining three battalions to UNOCI as recommended in his seventh report.¹³⁷ He noted in that regard that the Council could take advantage of the adjustment in the strength of UNMIL, in particular the envisaged departure of one battalion from that mission at the end of 2006, to reinforce UNOCI.

At its 5591st meeting, on 15 December 2006, the Council included in its agenda the eleventh progress report of the Secretary-General on UNOCI and extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. resolution 1739 (2007)

At its 5617th meeting, on 10 January 2007, the Council again included in its agenda the eleventh progress report of the Secretary-General on UNOCI¹⁴³ and extended an invitation to the representative of Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (Russian Federation) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France;¹⁴⁴ it was then put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1739 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that the mandates of UNOCI and of the French forces which supported it should be extended until 30 June 2007;

Decided to extend the provisions of paragraph 3 of resolution 1609 (2005) and of paragraph 2 of resolution 1682 (2006);

Authorized UNOCI to use all necessary means to carry out its mandate;

Requested UNOCI to carry out its mandate in close cooperation with UNMIL;

Council.¹⁴⁵ He then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁴⁶ by which the Council, inter alia:

Endorsed the Ouagadougou Political Agreement of 4 March 2007 (S/2007/144) and called upon the Ivorian parties to implement it fully, in good faith and within the timetable set out in the Agreement;

Took note of the agreement among the parties on the institutional arrangements and supported the appointment of Mr. Guillaume Soro as Prime Minister; expressed its readiness to take further steps, in the light of the progress achieved, in order to help the parties in implementing their commitments and to support the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire, in particular the electoral process;

Requested the Secretary-General to submit to it recommendations by 15 May 2007 on the role that the United Nations should play to support the implementation of the peace process, taking into account the latest developments in Côte d'Ivoire.

Deliberations of 18 May 2007 (5676th meeting)

On 14 May 2007, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council the thirteenth progress report on UNOCI.¹⁴⁷ In that report, the Secretary-General noted that the Ivorian parties had met several key deadlines for the implementation of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement, including the establishment of the integrated command centre, the formation of a new Government led by Guillaume Soro as Prime Minister, the proclamation of an ordinance granting amnesty for certain crimes relating to national security and the start of the process of lifting the Zone of Confidence and establishing the green line. At the same time, mainly due to the limited capacity of national institutions, the parties were unable to meet the deadline for beginning the implementation of the more complex cluster of tasks consisting of the dismantling of the militias, the cantonment of combatants, the redeployment of State officials throughout the country and the launching of the mobile court hearings for the identification of the population.

¹⁴⁵ S/2007/144, transmitting the Ouagadougou Political Agreement signed on 4 March 2007 by Laurent Gbagbo, President of Côte d'Ivoire, Guillaume Soro, Secretary-General of the Forces nouvelles, and Blaise Compaoré, President of Burkina Faso and Chairman of ECOWAS, in his capacity as Facilitator.

¹⁴⁷ S/2007/275, submitted pursuant to the statement by the President of 28 March 2007 (S/PRST/2007/8).

Noting that the Ouagadougou Political Agreement seemed to have created a widespread impression that the signatories were seeking a limited role for the United Nations in the peace process, the Secretary-General reported the findings of a United Nations technical assessment mission that had recently visited Côte d'Ivoire to clarify the future role of the United Nations. The mission concluded that all national and international stakeholders had stressed the need for continued United Nations assistance for the Ivorian peace process and that no Ivorian leaders had called for the withdrawal of UNOCI. However, the Ivorian parties had divergent views regarding the role of the United Nations in the electoral process, particularly with regard to the certification and arbitration roles of the High Representative for the elections. While the Prime Minister and the opposition parties held that the role of the United Nations in the electoral process should remain unchanged since the issue was not addressed by the Ouagadougou Political Agreement, President Gbagbo maintained his objection to the arbitration role and other functions of the High Representative for the elections as defined in resolution 1721 (2006), only accepting the United Nations responsibility for international certification of the electoral process.

The Secretary-General recommended that the United Nations should adjust its role in Côte d'Ivoire to effectively support the new phase of the peace process. He held that the drawdown of the military component of UNOCI should not begin at the current stage but that the priority should be to deploy the UNOCI troops to each of the 17 cantonment sites to supervise and support the disarmament and demobilization process and the storage of weapons. Once the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process and the restoration of State administration throughout the country were completed, UNOCI would conduct a review of its troop levels and determine the military resources required to support the remaining tasks. He held that the completion of the presidential election and the installation of the elected Government would be the next key benchmarks that should trigger the beginning of the withdrawal of UNOCI. As such, it was recommended that the mandate of the mission be extended for a further period of six months, until December 2007. With regard to the police component of UNOCI, the Secretary-General noted that the United Nations police would deploy to two new locations in the north while one formed police unit would be redeployed from Abidjan to Boundiali, in the north-west, to provide security for the increased number of United Nations police as well as other UNOCI personnel and equipment to be deployed to the north. In addition, UNOCI would deploy more personnel of its civilian component in the north and west to support the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and the restoration of State administration in those areas. On the role of the High Representative for the elections, the Secretary-General urged the Council to consider entrusting the certification role to his Special Representative who should be assisted in that regard by a small unit, separate from the UNOCI electoral component and consisting of up to three staff.

In closing, the Secretary-General observed that, while the advent of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement had taken the Ivorian peace process to a unique turning point, the political will alone would not sustain the peace process. The Ivorian authorities would need the assistance of the United Nations and other international partners to develop the capacity of the main national institutions involved in the implementation of the Agreement, especially the newly formed integrated command centre. In that regard, the Secretary-General underlined that the international partners should provide the necessary support and advice to ensure that the peace process was conducted in accordance with internationally accepted standards. This would require regular consultations with the parties, he stated, urging the parties and the Facilitator to involve the international partners in the monitoring and evaluation mechanisms for the agreement.

At its 5676th meeting, on 18 May 2007, in which the representative of Côte d'Ivoire was invited to participate, the Council included the above-mentioned report in its agenda and heard a statement by the Minister of National Security of Burkina Faso. Speaking on behalf of President Blaise Compaoré, the Facilitator of the inter-Ivorian dialogue, the Minister welcomed the Council's endorsement of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement through its presidential statement of 28 March 2007.¹⁴⁸ He asserted that the Agreement marked a real turning point in the process of emerging from the crisis in Côte d'Ivoire. To further promote the peace process, he informed the Council that the Facilitator had agreed with the parties to appoint a special representative in Abidjan and had also been considering the establishment of two advisory bodies to support the Evaluation and Monitoring Committee. One would be national in nature with the aim to provide information and hear the views and suggestions of other components of Ivorian society. The other would be of an international nature, with a view to enabling all partners involved in the process of ending the crisis to carry out follow-up and support for the follow-up. The Minister stated that the Facilitator hoped that the Council would support the establishment of the two planned bodies. He recalled that the Facilitator had urged the United Nations to continue to provide technical and financial support to the Ivorian peace process until the end of the crisis. He noted that the Facilitator was in support of the certification role by the United Nations in the electoral process to be played under the responsibility of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire. Finally, he cautioned that while the Ivorian peace process was currently well under way, it could prove vulnerable. As such, the Facilitator should continue to be supported by the international community so that he could assist the Ivorian people until the holding of free, democratic, open and transparent presidential elections.¹⁴⁹

Decision of 20 June 2007 (5700th meeting):

At its 5700th meeting, on 20 June 2007, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 11 June 2007 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1572 (2004) to the President of the Council, transmitting the report of the Group of Experts.¹⁵⁰ In that report, it was noted that no gross violations of the sanctions had been found, but that the inspections carried out by the experts and the impartial forces had been hindered by the reticence of certain Ivorian stakeholders, particularly the Government's Defence and Security Forces, who had questioned the need to verify the implementation of the embargo in the light of the new framework for peace and reconciliation between the two warring parties. Meanwhile, the experts had confirmed the lack of transparency surrounding the management of the most lucrative industries, such as petroleum and cocoa, but obtained no specific information on possible violations of the embargo imposed on diamond exports.

The President (Belgium) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution,¹⁵¹ it was then put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1761 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of the Group of Experts, as set out in resolution 1727 (2006), until 31 October 2007, and requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary administrative measures.

Decision of 29 June 2007 (5711th meeting):
resolution 1763 (2007)

At its 5711th meeting, on 29 June 2007, the Council again included in its agenda the thirteenth progress report of the Secretary-General on UNOCI¹⁵² and extended invitations to the representatives of Burkina Faso and Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. Decision of 29 June 2007 (5712th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5712th meeting, on 29 June 2007, the Council extended invitations to the representatives of Burkina Faso and Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (Belgium) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁵⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Condemned the attack committed on 29 June 2007 in Bouaké against the Prime Minister of Côte d'Ivoire;

Stressed that the perpetrators of this criminal act must be brought to justice;

Recalled its support for the political agreement signed by President Laurent Gbagbo and Mr. Guillaume Soro in Ouagadougou on 4 March 2007;

Stressed that it was critical that all parties continued to work within the framework of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement, which was the way to settle the crisis in Côte d'Ivoire.

Decision of 16 July 2007 (5716th meeting):
resolution 1765 (2007)

At its 5716th meeting, on 16 July 2007, the Council again included in its agenda the thirteenth progress report of the Secretary-General on UNOCI¹⁵⁵ and extended invitations to the representatives of Burkina Faso and Côte d'Ivoire to participate in the discussion. The President (China) then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹⁵⁶ it was put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1765 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that the mandate of UNOCI and of the French forces which supported it should be extended until 15 January 2008;

Endorsed the recommendations of the report of the Secretary-General dated 14 May 2007 and requested UNOCI, within its existing resources, to support the full implementation of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement; called upon all concerned parties to ensure that the protection of women and children was addressed in the implementation of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement;

Decided to terminate the mandate of the High Representative for the elections;

Decided therefore that the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire should certify that all stages of the electoral process provided all the necessary guarantees for the holding of open, free, fair and transparent presidential and legislative elections in accordance with international standards, and requested the Secretary-General to take all the necessary steps so that the Special Representative had at his disposal a support cell providing him all the appropriate assistance to fulfil this task;

Supported the establishment of an international consultative organ to accompany the Ivorian political forces and the Facilitator in the implementation of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement.

Deliberations of 22 October 2007
(5765th meeting)

On 1 October 2007, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council the fourteenth progress report on UNOCI.¹⁵⁷ In that report, he noted that the security situation in Côte d'Ivoire had remained generally calm since the signing of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement on 4 March 2007. While the situation in the volatile west of the country continued to improve, that in the north became increasingly insecure owing to the continued absence of the national law enforcement agencies and a functioning justice system. The Secretary-General expressed deep concern at the 29 June 2007 attack on the Prime Minister, which created tensions and undermined the positive atmosphere engendered by the Ouagadougou Political Agreement. However, the Secretary-General observed that the overall political atmosphere in Côte d'Ivoire had remained positive, making it possible for the Ivorian parties to achieve some concrete progress on the ground.

The Secretary-General noted that the implementation of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement started losing momentum in June, mainly because of the limited capacity of national institutions in charge. As a result, no progress had been made in unifying the Defence and Security Forces of Côte d'Ivoire and the Forces nouvelles, and the implementation of various key tasks had been significantly delayed, particularly with regard to the dismantling of the militias, the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, the restoration of State administration throughout the country, the identification of the population and the registration of voters. Deeply worried about the consequences of a slackening of momentum in the peace process, the Secretary-General urged the Prime Minister and President Gbagbo to take the necessary measures to move forward with the implementation of the Agreement. The Secretary-General expressed concern at the continuing human rights violations in the country, which were characterized by abuses inflicted on civilians by the Defence and Security Forces and Forces nouvelles elements. He stressed that the leadership of the two forces had an obligation to address those problems and to ensure discipline among their personnel. He urged the Government to dismantle the militias in the west and in Abidjan without further delay, and to enforce the law against the leaders and members of the so-called student groups that intimidated and carried out acts of violence against civilians, civil society organizations and United Nations personnel and property. Finally, noting that the two benchmarks identified in his thirteenth report on UNOCI,¹⁵⁸ namely the completion of the disarmament and demobilization process and the restoration of State administration throughout the country, had yet to be met, the Secretary-General recommended that the troop levels of UNOCI be maintained at current levels, with a view to conducting a further review in that regard in his next report on UNOCI.

At its 5765th meeting, on 22 October 2007, the Council included in its agenda the fourteenth progress report of the Secretary-General on UNOCI¹⁵⁷ and heard briefings by the Principal Deputy Special Representative of the Secretary-General for UNOCI and the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Burkina Faso, following which all Council members and the representative of Côte d'Ivoire made statements.¹⁵⁹

The Principal Deputy Special Representative affirmed that the overall security situation in Côte d'Ivoire remained generally stable and that the continued commitment of the Ivorian leaders to take ownership of the peace process had yielded some progress in the implementation of the key tasks provided for in the Ouagadougou Political Agreement. For its part, UNOCI continued to provide logistical, technical and security support to the Ivorian parties in implementing the key aspects of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement. The mission was finalizing the establishment of a certification cell within the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and practical modalities for the certification of the electoral process were expected to be defined soon. The Principal Deputy Special Representative held that restructuring the Ivorian armed forces remained a crucial task. To help address the problem, the Facilitator intended to submit, in the near future, concrete proposals to President Gbagbo and the Prime Minister related to the issue of ranks and quotas for Forces nouvelles elements that would be part of the unified army. He observed that the very positive partnership between the United Nations and the Facilitator, as well as the recent appointment in Abidjan of the Facilitator's Special Representative, constituted encouraging prospects for accelerating the process of implementing the Ouagadougou Political Agreement. He added that efforts were under way to develop synergy between the Facilitator's arbitration and the validation of UNOCI and certification functions to define criteria for ensuring the effective performance of those functions.¹⁶⁰

Speaking on behalf of President Blaise Compaoré of Burkina Faso, the Facilitator of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Burkina Faso observed that the Agreement had led to a fundamental change in the political situation in Côte d'Ivoire where military and political tensions had given way to a genuine dialogue. The Minister noted that despite the multiple difficulties in implementing the Ouagadougou Political Agreement, the Facilitator continued to have faith in the Ivorian parties and their ability to overcome their differences to consolidate peace and national reconciliation. In that respect, he stated that the signatories had agreed to establish an institutional framework to implement the Ouagadougou Political Agreement according to the agreed timeline covering the period from March to December 2008.¹⁶¹

In the subsequent discussion, the Council members commended President Compaoré for his tireless efforts at facilitating the implementation of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement. They reiterated their full support for the Agreement, which constituted a real chance for Côte d'Ivoire to emerge from the crisis. Stressing that the United Nations continued to have an important role to play in the Ivorian peace process, they hoped that the newly appointed Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire would give a new impetus to the peace process.

Many members voiced concern at the delays in meeting key deadlines provided for in the Agreement, particularly with regard to the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, the disarmament and dismantling of militias, the identification of the population, the registration of voters and the restoration of State administration throughout the country.¹⁶² Several were worried about the resultant significant slackening in the momentum to implement the Agreement.¹⁶³ However, the representative of South Africa remained optimistic about the peace process, noting that all Ivorian parties had demonstrated the political will to abide by the agreed-upon time frames. He was supportive of the remarks of the Prime Minister that preserving the credibility of the electoral process was more important than adhering to strict deadlines.¹⁶⁴ On the way forward, some underlined the urgent need to resolve the question of ranks and numbers of the Forces nouvelles expected to join the unified national army,¹⁶⁵ while others attached great importance to the holding of free, fair and open elections, including by ensuring a credible and inclusive identification and registration process through mobile court hearings.¹⁶⁶ In the light of the daunting challenges ahead, many supported the Secretary-General's recommendations on preserving the current mandate and troop levels of UNOCI.¹⁶⁷

Many members drew particular attention to the disturbing human rights situation in Côte d'Ivoire, including reports of human trafficking.¹⁶⁸ The representative of Panama observed that the intervention of the International Criminal Court could be an important way to fight impunity in Côte d'Ivoire and he regretted the fact that the Government had "shown resistance" to a possible mission of the Court.¹⁶⁹ However, the representative of Côte d'Ivoire held that allegations of human rights violations in his country in the Secretary-General's report were not based on facts that could be verified by all. He solemnly requested UNOCI staff to be stricter when drafting the Secretary-General's reports, "as these reports involve the reputation of a State and of an entire people who are ready to correct their weaknesses".¹⁷⁰

As to sanctions, the representative of Slovakia said he hoped that the available measures would be fully implemented to promote stability in Côte d'Ivoire.¹⁷¹ Similarly, the representative of Qatar noted that the arms embargo and targeted sanctions imposed by the Council should be adhered to.¹⁷² For his part, the representative of Côte d'Ivoire recalled that the Ouagadougou Political Agreement had explicitly requested the Council to immediately lift the individual sanctions imposed on actors in the Ivorian crisis and that the two signatories had requested an immediate special authorization to import the light weapons necessary to maintain public order and security. However, he noted that almost eight months after the Agreement was signed, none of the measures expected of the United Nations in support of its implementation had been taken. On the contrary, an outdated draft resolution for the extension of sanctions for another year was being circulated despite the dramatic changes on the ground since the sanctions regime had been adopted in 2005.¹⁷³

The representatives of China and Panama urged the international community, the United Nations and regional organizations to continue to support the Ivorian peace process.¹⁷⁴ The representative of Côte d'Ivoire called for an "innovative interpretation of Chapter VIII of the Charter" so that the three African members on the Council could be allowed to initiate draft resolutions on Côte d'Ivoire. Asking why France was "so intent on hounding Côte d'Ivoire and some of its political actors", the representative, citing remarks made by the Chairperson of the African Union at a Council meeting on 25 September 2007, stressed that the international partners "must let Africans run their own business" and that while financing is important, it does not justify unbridled intervention or conduct.¹⁷⁵

Decision of 29 October 2007 (5772nd meeting):

At its 5772nd meeting, on 29 October 2007, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 17 October 2007 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1572 (2004) to the President of the Council,¹⁷⁶ transmitting the report of the Group of Experts. In that report, the Group noted that it had observed a lack of understanding on the part of certain Ivorian political authorities as to the Group's mission in the light of the ongoing reconciliation process. The Group also noted the discrepancy between the weapons lists provided by the Defence and Security Forces of Côte d'Ivoire and the Forces nouvelles and their real capacities. The Group confirmed the lack of transparency in the management of revenue in the coffee and cocoa and hydrocarbon sectors. The Group continued its investigation into possible violations of the embargos on diamond exports, uncovering evidence of persistent activity in the Tortiya and Séguéla mining areas and confirmation of the use of Malian smuggling rings to move Ivorian diamonds out of the country.

The representative of Côte d'Ivoire was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Ghana) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by France;¹⁷⁷ it was then put to the vote and adopted, unanimously and without debate, as resolution 1782 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to renew until 31 October 2008 the provisions of paragraphs 7 to 12 of resolution 1572 (2004) and of paragraph 6 of resolution 1643 (2005);

Also decided to review the measures imposed by resolution 1572 (2004) in particular its paragraphs 7, 9 and 11 and by paragraph 6 of resolution 1643 (2005);

Demanded in particular that the Ivorian authorities put an immediate end to any violation of measures imposed by paragraph 11 of resolution 1572 (2004) including those violations mentioned by the Group of Experts in its report dated 21 September 2007;

Decided that any serious obstacle to the freedom of movement of UNOCI and of the French forces which supported it, or any attack or obstruction of the action of UNOCI, of the French forces, of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, of the Facilitator mentioned in paragraph 10 of resolution 1765 (2007) or his Special Representative in Côte d'Ivoire should constitute a threat to the peace and national reconciliation process for the purposes of paragraphs 9 and 11 of resolution 1572 (2004);

Also decided to extend the mandate of the Group of Experts as set out in paragraph 7 of resolution 1727 (2006) until 31 October 2008.

14. Items relating to West Africa

A. Cross-border issues in West Africa

Initial proceedings

Decision of 25 March 2004 (4933rd meeting): statement by the President

At its 4933rd meeting, on 25 March 2004, the Security Council adopted the item entitled "Cross-border issues in West Africa" and included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 12 March 2004 on ways to combat subregional and cross-border problems in West Africa.¹

In his report, the Secretary-General stressed that the various cross-border problems facing West Africa were interlinked and that none of them could be solved at the national level alone, but rather required a regional approach. To that end, the Secretary-General presented a number of practical recommendations, including by increasing harmonization among the United Nations actors in the subregion, strengthening the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) secretariat and implementing the ECOWAS Moratorium on the Importation, Exportation and Manufacture of Small Arms and Light Weapons in West Africa, promoting disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, encouraging security sector reform, reducing extortion at roadblocks and "naming and shaming" parties who contravened humanitarian norms and international law. The Secretary-General called for a fundamental change in the long-standing political approach that had prevailed in the region and promoted authoritarianism. He emphasized that preventing abuse by State and non-State actors and ensuring respect for the rights and security of the peoples living in all parts of the region must be central to any strategy to ensure stability and development in West Africa. In conclusion, the Secretary-General stressed the need for the regional and international community to provide targeted assistance to national Governments of the region and respond at an earlier stage to governance and humanitarian crises and hoped that the Council would act upon his recommendations.

The Council heard briefings by the Secretary-General, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Ghana, in his capacity as Chairman of ECOWAS, the Executive Secretary of ECOWAS, the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and the Associate Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Following the briefings, statements were made by all members of the Council,² as well as by the representatives of Ireland (on behalf of the European Union)³ and Japan.

In his briefing, the Secretary-General reiterated that the recommendations contained in his report could not be carried out solely on a country-by-country basis, but that their implementation would require a multifaceted regional approach. Special attention should be paid to the proliferation of small arms, the illegal exploitation of natural resources and the use of child soldiers and mercenaries, as well as to roadblocks. The Secretary-General observed that the root causes of the region's problems were linked above all to questions of governance, human rights and transparency. He cautioned that should authoritarianism and the culture of violence, exclusion and impunity remain, possible progress made in addressing those cross-border problems would likely be temporary and fragile at best. Therefore, he urged Governments of the region to establish solidly democratic institutions and effective regional organizations.⁴

While noting the fact that the United Nations Office for West Africa (UNOWA) had failed to fully consult with ECOWAS member States or its secretariat in preparing the Secretary-General's report, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Ghana and Chairman of ECOWAS underlined the need to develop a comprehensive approach to address the many interlinked root causes of cross-border problems. He noted that ECOWAS believed that the best solution was to find a way to restore peace to the entire region and added that it had identified some potential destabilizing factors, including a sudden and total withdrawal of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL).⁵

The Executive Secretary of ECOWAS concurred that a regional approach was required to address cross-border problems, notably the upsurge in the use of mercenaries and child soldiers, the proliferation of small arms and extortion at roadblocks. He found the Secretary-General's recommendations to be useful and appropriate for collective action by the international community and considered the successful disarmament, demobilization, resettlement and reintegration processes in Liberia and Côte d'Ivoire to be critical in addressing the proliferation of small arms in the region. He hoped that the drawdown of UNAMSIL would be aligned with the duration of the United Nations missions in Liberia and Côte d'Ivoire.⁶

The Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs observed that humanitarian and human rights efforts alone usually were insufficient in providing protection to vulnerable groups in armed conflict and welcomed the fact that the Council was willing and able to take additional measures to protect civilians. He emphasized the need to forge closer links at the regional level between humanitarian, political and economic actors so as to better coordinate and implement disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes. He called for a more comprehensive approach to deal with the underlying root causes, such as poverty, a lack of good governance and the rule of law, and considered that the implementation of the main recommendations of the Secretary-General would contribute significantly to addressing primary humanitarian concerns.⁷

Affirming that UNDP had been addressing the development dimension of crisis and conflict up front by mainstreaming prevention and peacebuilding in its development work, the Associate Administrator of UNDP stated that UNDP had developed an integrated regional development strategy for West Africa, in addition to carrying out initiatives to address specific problems related to cross-border issues that included support for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and small-arms programmes in the region. He stressed the importance of adopting a holistic approach that would closely link peacebuilding and development and held the view that "new and innovative" regional approaches to development, such as a subregional poverty reduction strategy, could help the international community to attain its common objectives in West Africa.⁸

In the subsequent discussion, speakers generally agreed that a regional approach was required to deal with cross-border problems in West Africa. They welcomed and endorsed the action-oriented recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's report and noted their readiness to further study how to implement the recommendations. In that context, most speakers highlighted the need to enhance coordination among the United Nations missions in the region,⁹ while several also positively reacted to the Secretary-General's recommendation on joint border patrols by those missions.¹⁰ On the other hand, while concurring with the need for a more effective use of United Nations assets across the region, the representative of the United Kingdom observed that sharing resources across missions and across borders risked confusing mission mandates and potentially disrupting the lines of command and control. He stressed that these potential difficulties had to be tackled and overcome so that a regional approach by the United Nations interventions could be put in place.¹¹ The representative of the Russian Federation cautioned that the coordinated actions of United Nations forces in the subregion should be taken with due diligence so as not to violate the sovereignty of individual States or the mandates of specific missions.¹² At the same time, many speakers called for strengthening cooperation between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations, including ECOWAS and the Mano River Union.¹³ The representative of Chile explicitly pointed out that regional and subregional organizations should be more involved in tackling cross-border problems "within the framework of Chapter VIII of the Charter".¹⁴

A number of speakers attached importance to the successful conduct of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and security sector reform programmes in Sierra Leone, Liberia and Côte d'Ivoire.¹⁵ Many speakers held that the proliferation of small arms and child soldiers needed to be curbed by strengthening existing regional and national mechanisms, such as transforming the ECOWAS Moratorium into a legally binding instrument.¹⁶ Several speakers noted that development was a fundamental issue that must be given particular attention in order for a lasting peace to be achieved in the region.¹⁷

The representative of Algeria believed that cross-border problems in West Africa needed to be considered as "threats to international peace and security under the meaning of Chapter VII of the Charter, and treated as such".¹⁸ He urged the Council to adopt a long-term view to fight those problems. The representative was also of the view that illegal exploitation of natural resources should be included on the list of cross-border problems identified by the Secretary-General. The representative of the United Kingdom echoed the need to tackle the use and misuse of West Africa's rich natural resources.¹⁹ Similarly, as one of a few ideas to be added to the Secretary-General's report, the representative of France proposed that the countries of the region be assisted in strengthening their control over their natural resources through the support of United Nations peacekeeping operations and other mechanisms.²⁰ The representative of Pakistan considered that, given the established linkage between the illegal exploitation of natural resources and the fuelling of conflicts in West Africa, both the supply and the demand sides of the illegally exploited natural resources should be in the scope of sanctions. Therefore, he urged that "naming and shaming" and sanctions be applied to all those who were involved in illicit activities.²¹

At the end of the meeting, the President (France) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²² by which the Council, inter alia:

Requested the Secretary-General to encourage the United Nations missions in West Africa to share information and their logistics and administrative resources in order to increase their effectiveness and reduce costs;

Stressed the importance of a regional approach in the preparation and implementation of demobilization, disarmament and reintegration programmes;

Urged States in the region to promote the conditions for the safe return of refugees;

Urged ECOWAS member States to fully implement the Moratorium on the Importation, Exportation and Manufacture of Small Arms and Light Weapons in West Africa and to take all steps to better combat trafficking in small arms and light weapons;

Called on the Mano River Union States to resume dialogue and consider a summit of Heads of State to develop a common approach to their shared security issues and confidence-building measures;

Urgently called on donor countries and financial institutions to coordinate efforts to support ECOWAS in their efforts to reform the security sector.

Decision of 25 February 2005 (5131st meeting): statement by the President

At its 5131st meeting, on 25 February 2005, the Council included in its agenda the progress report of the Secretary-General dated 11 February 2005 on ways to combat subregional and cross-border problems in West Africa.²³ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that despite progress made in several States in West Africa, the subregion continued to be acutely vulnerable and that much remained to be done in order to achieve lasting peace. He noted with satisfaction the growth of a constructive partnership among the United Nations system, development partners and ECOWAS, as well as some of the Governments, civil society organizations and local communities in West Africa, but stressed that redoubled and better targeted efforts in many other areas could contribute more effectively to conflict prevention and peacebuilding in the subregion. In that regard, the Secretary-General called on ECOWAS member States to convert the moratorium on small arms and light weapons into a legally binding instrument at the earliest opportunity. While commending the progress in the implementation of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in Sierra Leone and Liberia, he cautioned that that process could not be successful without adequate funding for the reintegration and rehabilitation of ex-combatants. The Secretary-General underlined the vital importance of reducing the shocking levels of youth unemployment in the subregion. He also urged development partners to fund cross-border support services to alleviate the dire humanitarian situation in many parts of the subregion, particularly in those sensitive border areas affected by conflict whose population were at risk from a variety of cross-border problems. Finally, noting that security sector reform was an especially pressing priority for West Africa as a key tool for conflict prevention, he requested that a regionally integrated security sector reform programme be produced by UNOWA, in consultation with its partners in West Africa, before the end of 2005. In conclusion, the Secretary-General affirmed that while the primary responsibility for promoting peace in the region rested with West African leaders and communities themselves, the United Nations would continue to support endeavours towards a better future for the people of West Africa.

The Council heard briefings by the Secretary-General and his Special Representative for West Africa, as well as by the Special Adviser on Child Protection to the Executive Secretary of ECOWAS. In addition to all members of the Council, the representatives of Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea, Luxembourg (on behalf of the European Union),²⁴ Mali, the Niger, Nigeria (on behalf of the Group of African States) and Sierra Leone also made statements.

In his introductory remarks, the Secretary-General expressed concern that West Africa continued to face grave security challenges. He pointed out in that respect the issues of volatile border areas, a disturbing shortfall in the funding for security sector reform and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes and high youth unemployment levels. He recalled that in his report he had highlighted areas that required immediate and longer-term action and maintained that the recommendations contained therein were directed at a wide range of players, including the Security Council and other parts of the United Nations system, bilateral and multilateral development partners, the secretariat of ECOWAS, individual Member States and civil society organizations. He welcomed the recent efforts of ECOWAS and its members to address the complex challenges facing the region, as well as the constructive partnership emerging among ECOWAS, the United Nations system and other relevant actors.²⁵

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General for West Africa observed that the collective action by the international community in West Africa faced three broad challenges. With respect to the institutional challenge, he stressed that institutional collaboration among the United Nations entities in West Africa, as well as that between the United Nations and other partners in the subregion, especially ECOWAS, West African States and civil society, should be further strengthened. On the methodological challenge, he underlined the need to prioritize issues, areas and objectives, stating that the current key priorities included issues such as small arms, child soldiers, security sector reform, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, roadblocks and cross-border peacebuilding. On the doctrinal challenge, he opined that while it was a logical course of action to concentrate peacebuilding efforts on countries at war, countries not at war, such as Ghana and the Niger, deserved international support since they remained fragile and could be weakened by violence in neighbouring areas. The Special Representative expressed his confidence that ongoing collaboration between the international community and West African populations and States would help to overcome some of those daunting challenges.²⁶

The Special Adviser on Child Protection to the Executive Secretary of ECOWAS stated that the cross-border problems facing West Africa were all threats to peace, security and stability and that those threats stemmed from activities of organized gangs with networks in several countries of the subregion and even outside the region. Most of those gangs, which usually had political roots and might mutate into criminal gangs, survived by means of arms and drugs trafficking, money-laundering and human trafficking, and very often controlled the richest areas of the countries in crisis. The Special Adviser informed the Council that to prevent and combat negative activities of armed gangs, ECOWAS had established a number of instruments, such as the Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters and the Convention on Extradition. ECOWAS had identified three main strategic approaches to implement those instruments, namely through political, legal and development measures. Meanwhile, ECOWAS had also adopted a number of protocols to prevent conflict by promoting democracy and good governance as well as the free movement of goods and people. The Special Adviser concluded by stating that all the agreed-upon guidelines should be followed in order to bring about an environment conducive to good economic and social development in the subregion.²⁷

Speakers shared the assessment by the Secretary-General that the situation in West Africa was a mixed picture of positive developments and continuing challenges and reaffirmed the belief that concerted efforts on the basis of an integrated regional approach to conflict prevention were required in order to bring sustainable peace. In addition to commending the enhanced cooperation among the various United Nations political and peacekeeping missions in the subregion as well as between the United Nations system and other stakeholders, most speakers focused their respective statements on small arms, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and security sector reform, and border areas.

A large number of speakers noted that the proliferation of small arms remained a serious challenge which must be more effectively addressed, notably by ECOWAS member States converting the Moratorium into a legally binding instrument and by the international community supporting the ECOWAS Small Arms Control Programme.²⁸ In the context of trafficking of small arms, a number of speakers supported the Secretary-General's recommendation that United Nations peacekeeping operations be given the means to monitor and enforce arms embargoes.²⁹ Several speakers argued that “naming and shaming” was an effective tool to enforce the implementation of sanctions regimes and that the Council should consider publishing a list of individuals and entities violating arms embargoes and the ECOWAS moratorium.³⁰ In that regard, representatives of Brazil and Luxembourg, the latter speaking on behalf of the European Union, positively considered the recommendation by the Secretary-General concerning bringing those responsible for criminal activities such as trafficking in small arms, natural resources and human beings to the International Criminal Court for prosecution,³¹ while the representative of the United States said that his delegation had a different view as to the most appropriate forums in which to hear those particular cases.³²

Many speakers noted that successful disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and security sector reform processes were instrumental to conflict prevention and peacebuilding.³³ According to the representative of Denmark, depoliticizing the role of security forces and subjecting them to democratic oversight were prerequisites for preventing new conflict and building peace. She added that the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process should be tailored to specifically take into account the problem of children and discontented, disillusioned West African youth and that the United Nations should consider funding a larger share of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration-related activities in peace operations through assessed contributions.³⁴ The representative of the United States was concerned that funding for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes remained a challenge, while endorsing the need for greater security sector reform and the creation of democratic, professional security forces, drawn from all groups in various societies.³⁵ The representative of Japan stressed the importance of tackling the issue of reintegration, particularly the problem of youth unemployment, in order to avoid recurrence of conflict.³⁶ Considering the way to address cross-border issues in West Africa, a few representatives endorsed the proposed establishment of a peacebuilding commission.³⁷

Several speakers touched upon the issue of sensitive border areas and the need for developing integrated strategies for it.³⁸ The representative of the Russian Federation agreed with the Secretary-General regarding the need to strengthen the borders of African States and to create joint security mechanisms in border areas.³⁹ The representative of Benin urged UNOWA to give its full support to an ECOWAS plan aimed at establishing an association of West African border regions and towns.⁴⁰ The representative of Nigeria, speaking on behalf of the Group of African States, stated that the existing initiative entitled “Integrated strategies for sensitive border areas in West Africa”, which included participation of UNOWA, ECOWAS, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, development partners, civil society groups as well as concerned United Nations country teams and peace missions, should help prevent possible outbreaks of violence, restore trust and confidence in inter-State relations and promote peace and stability in the subregion, if fully implemented. He further held that the challenges of cross-border problems in West Africa could be effectively addressed only when opportunities for economic growth and development were enhanced.⁴¹ The representative of the Niger noted that the management of border areas was a major problem in the light of the high degree of mobility among the populations in the region, while cautioning that extortion and abuse at the border posts had often provoked a revolt among neighbouring populations, leading to crises between two adjacent countries.⁴²

Some noted that the best practices and lessons learned from West Africa, including cross-border and regional cooperation, could serve as examples and be applied to other regions and subregions.⁴³ A number of speakers concurred that the primary responsibility for promoting peace and stability in the subregion and dealing with cross-border issues lay with African States themselves⁴⁴ and in that context, some highlighted that African States should take ownership of the process of conflict resolution and peace consolidation.⁴⁵ The representative of the Russian Federation underlined that more thought needed to be given to new ideas about how the Security Council could help West African States to strengthen their peace processes, adding that work on such innovative ideas could take place in the Council's Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa.⁴⁶

Taking issue with the Secretary-General who had welcomed in his report the decision by the International Contact Group on Liberia to expand its mandate and scope to include the other countries in the Mano River Union, as well as Guinea-Bissau and Côte d'Ivoire,⁴⁷ the representative of Guinea made it clear that his Government considered that decision totally inappropriate and had already rejected it.⁴⁸

At the end of the meeting, the President (Benin) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its belief that action on cross-border and subregional issues should take place as part of a wider strategy of conflict prevention, crisis management and peacebuilding in the subregion;

Encouraged UNOWA further to promote an integrated and joint subregional approach with ECOWAS and the African Union, as well as with other key international partners and civil society organizations;

Welcomed the decision of the European Commission on 2 December 2004 to assist ECOWAS in implementing its plans to combat the illicit dissemination of small arms;

Emphasized the need to pursue security sector reforms aiming at improving civil-military relations in countries emerging from conflict situations and creating a culture of peace and stability and promoting the rule of law;

Urged the donor countries, international organizations and civil society to address the dire humanitarian situation in many parts of the subregion and to provide adequate resources in the framework of the consolidated appeals process 2005 for West Africa as part of a regional humanitarian response strategy to improve the human security of the people in dire need of protection or those whose coping capacities were close to exhaustion.

B. Peace consolidation in West Africa

Initial proceedings

Decision of 9 August 2006 (5509th meeting): statement by the President

By a letter dated 3 August 2006 addressed to the Secretary-General,⁵⁰ the representative of Ghana transmitted a concept paper to help guide the deliberations of the Security Council at an open debate on peace consolidation in West Africa to be held under Ghana's presidency. In the concept paper, it was noted that the political instability that afflicted the region had largely subsided, creating a unique opportunity for nation-building and the promotion of sustainable development. The paper identified broad cross-cutting themes, a discussion of which at the open debate was expected to result in concrete and realistic recommendations to enable the Security Council formulate definitive measures spanning the peace consolidation spectrum of conflict prevention, peacekeeping and peacebuilding.

At its 5509th meeting, on 9 August 2006, the Council adopted the item entitled "Peace consolidation in West Africa" and included in its agenda the above-mentioned letter. Following opening remarks by the President (Ghana), the Council heard briefings by the Secretary-General and his Special Representative for West Africa, as well as by the Executive Secretary of ECOWAS. The Council members made statements, as did the representatives of Brazil, Côte d'Ivoire, Egypt, Finland (on behalf of the European Union),⁵¹ Guatemala, Guinea, India, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Namibia, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, the Republic of Korea, Senegal, Sierra Leone and Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of).⁵²

outcomes of the ongoing United Nations reform process, the President stressed that while simmering tensions in States such as Côte d'Ivoire and Guinea-Bissau must be resolved before they became intractable, foundations of peace should be strengthened even in those countries that had not experienced any major upheavals or conflicts. He was of the view that many of the problems in West Africa could rightly be blamed on authoritarian rule, lack of good governance and unaccountable leadership. He was pleased to note in that regard the evident determination of the West African people to construct new societies founded on the principles of democratic accountability, respect for human rights and the rule of law. He acknowledged that ECOWAS was faced with severe constraints in terms of capacity and resources despite having been at the forefront of peace operations in West Africa, but assured that once empowered, it would be a reliable partner for peace and wealth creation for the benefit not only of the region, but also of the entire world. The President believed that the strategy for peace consolidation should focus on resolving ongoing conflicts as quickly as possible and preventing a relapse into conflict and a fresh outbreak of conflict, developing the institutional framework and relevant capacities for peace initiatives, mobilizing the required resources for such peace initiatives, and addressing the underlying causes of conflict in a comprehensive manner. It was particularly important to achieve the complete disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants, particularly child soldiers and mercenaries.⁵³

The Secretary-General reaffirmed his view that a holistic approach was needed to address the different but interconnected conflicts in West Africa and in that context welcomed the willingness of the West African leaders to engage in conflicts in the region, without following the usual tendency to uphold the principle of non-interference into internal affairs. He stressed that for peace to prevail and to last, the international community must develop meaningful peacebuilding initiatives, including reconciliation and confidence-building processes, as well as mechanisms to strengthen the rule of law. He voiced concern that many international responses to post-conflict situations had suffered from shortage of funds, lack of international coordination and a tendency to leave too soon. He hoped that the Peacebuilding Commission and UNOWA would play a role in addressing those weaknesses. He promised that the United Nations was committed to continuing to work with States of the subregion towards sustainable peace.⁵⁴

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General for West Africa observed that the subregion faced various new threats as a result of the ongoing political, economic and demographic transition, unemployment and informal migration of young people. He urged the Council to pay particular attention to countries in transformation by reinforcing their institutional capacities and assisting their vulnerable populations. Priority in that regard should be given to youth unemployment and its impact on national and regional peace and stability, unauthorized immigration and its increasing impact on local government and international relations, peaceful democratic change of Government as a means of preventing conflict, rapid urbanization and increasing insecurity, and support for private sector in Africa as a way of ensuring progress.⁵⁵

The Executive Secretary of ECOWAS observed that the Peacebuilding Commission was designed to fill a gaping hole in the peace activities of the United Nations, to assist countries in their transition from war to peace and stimulate stability, democracy and development. According to him, peace consolidation for West African countries should include four major components, namely: the rebuilding of democratic institutions including the judiciary, parliament and the civil service; security sector reform to establish competent, truly national security forces; support for the economic capacity of the Government to rebuild destroyed infrastructure and deliver social services to the people; and private sector development to create jobs and economic opportunities for the large army of unemployed people, especially youth. He held that the United Nations could lead international efforts to help consolidate peace in post-conflict countries through budget support programmes, project facilitation, especially the reconstruction of infrastructure, institution capacity enhancement and assistance in policy formulation. While believing that West Africa should be a natural beneficiary of the work of the Peacebuilding Commission, he was of the view that the Commission might not be in a position to take on many countries in its first year. As such, the various United Nations agencies on the ground, in coordination with UNOWA, should continue to support the countries concerned and ECOWAS initiatives for peace consolidation.⁵⁶

Most speakers welcomed the transition from war to democratic rule in Sierra Leone, Liberia and Guinea-Bissau, as well as efforts aimed at free and fair elections in Côte d'Ivoire. They held that despite the fragile security situation in those countries, West Africa as a whole was closer than ever to consolidating peace in a comprehensive and coordinated manner. They commended ECOWAS and the African Union for their leading role in that regard and urged further cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations, including the European Union, and international financial institutions.

Speakers stressed that the root causes of conflict must be tackled in the quest for lasting peace in West Africa. In that respect, some speakers highlighted the need to build the capacity of national institutions, especially in the areas of governance, the rule of law and the fight against impunity.⁵⁷ Others considered that more attention should be given to the issues of poverty, unemployment and underdevelopment.⁵⁸ Several speakers, however, opined that both a strategy to promote democracy and good governance and a strategy to reduce poverty were simultaneously required for peace to sustain.⁵⁹

Among those who stressed the importance of good governance, institution-building and respect for the rule of law and human rights, the representative of the Russian Federation stated that the most important means of preventing internal conflicts was strengthening the rule of law and developing democracy and good governance.⁶⁰ The representative of Denmark noted that while more efficient peacekeeping was only a first step in dealing with post-conflict situations, a far more sustainable approach was to ensure that national security institutions were in place early on in the transition process.⁶¹ The representative of France pointed out that the lack of good governance was at the root of the disturbances that the region had experienced.⁶² Concurring, the representative of the Niger held that the ECOWAS Protocol on Democracy and Good Governance should be promoted because it had deterrent potential when it came to preserving good governance.⁶³

Among those underlining the urgent need to reduce poverty and promote economic development, the representative of China argued that all problems in West Africa boiled down to development.⁶⁴ The representative of Sierra Leone noted that peace consolidation in West Africa was a development exercise which must be seen and addressed in the context of poverty alleviation programmes in the subregion.⁶⁵ The representative of Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) cautioned that extreme poverty was the greatest threat to peace as billions of people surviving on less than two dollars a day could be a source of destabilization.⁶⁶

Most speakers expressed hope that the recently created Peacebuilding Commission would play a critical role in assisting countries emerging from conflict to achieve sustainable peace and stability and many welcomed the fact that Sierra Leone had been selected among the first cases on its agenda.⁶⁷ The representative of Denmark observed that an important task for the Commission was looking for best practices in facilitating disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and security sector reform processes and the rule of law in post-conflict situations.⁶⁸ The representative of Greece held that the Commission must work closely with the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, national authorities and ECOWAS in order to achieve long-term goals, such as combating youth unemployment and the provision of health, social and educational services.⁶⁹ The representative of Japan stated that the Council and the Commission should take up issues of security, governance, reconstruction and socioeconomic development in accordance with their specific areas of responsibility, with the Commission offering constructive input to the Council. He further suggested that the Commission should prioritize the matters on its agenda and study carefully the peacebuilding strategies for each State under its consideration.⁷⁰ The representative of Guatemala also considered that the Commission should help national authorities establish priorities and devise realistic strategies and coherent policies adapted to the circumstances of each country.⁷¹ The representative of Egypt expected the Commission to play a leading role in ensuring efficient coordination among the various actors contributing to peacebuilding efforts. He noted with concern the limits to the capacity and role of the Security Council in addressing the requirements of the transition from conflict to comprehensive development, particularly as it had repeatedly hesitated to open channels of genuine and effective coordination with the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the relevant regional and subregional organizations.⁷² The representative of India held that the Peacebuilding Commission must not only work with the Security Council but also take into consideration inputs from other United Nations bodies and work under the overall guidance of the General Assembly.⁷³

On the issue of combating impunity, several representatives commended the arrest and trial of Charles Taylor.⁷⁴ The representative of Norway was of the view that a war-torn society could not be healed unless those responsible for crimes against humanity and violations of international humanitarian law were brought to justice.⁷⁵ The representative of Namibia believed that reconciliation was the key to sustainable peace and that the pursuit of justice should not aim to punish those who committed crimes, but to rehabilitate them and correct the mistakes that had been made.⁷⁶ For his part, the representative of Côte d'Ivoire emphasized that justice must be rendered at an appropriate time. He cautioned that if justice was pursued too early, it could undermine a still fragile peace and call into question the still timid confidence among former enemies. If too late, however, it could prevent a society from entering a new era through the revelation of the truth aimed at achieving national reconciliation.⁷⁷

The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania was of the view that there was no shortage of ideas on maintaining and consolidating peace in post-conflict situations in West Africa. What was lacking, he stressed, was the will, the resolve and the resources to effectively implement the many recommendations already on the table.⁷⁸ In that respect, several representatives reiterated the need to urgently stop the proliferation and illicit circulation of small arms and light weapons,⁷⁹ while others stressed the importance of the successful disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and security sector reform processes.⁸⁰ While the representative of Qatar urged the Council to recognize education as a vital tool for enhancing and consolidating peace, security and stability,⁸¹ the representative of Peru called for implementing educational curricula that would promote peace and development.⁸² The representative of Denmark advocated a greater focus on women in conflict resolution and peace consolidation.⁸³ Similarly, the representative of Namibia noted that post-conflict peacebuilding programmes should be designed for women, children and girls, especially in the areas of education and employment creation.⁸⁴

At the end of the meeting, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁸⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Stressed the importance of addressing the issue of peace consolidation in West Africa in a comprehensive and coordinated manner;

Stressed the primary role of each West African Government in peace consolidation for the benefit of all citizens;

Underlined the crucial importance of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants;

Reiterated the importance of finding effective solutions to the problem of refugees and internally displaced persons in the area;

Urged the international community to provide adequate resources as part of a coordinated humanitarian response strategy to improve the human security of the people of West Africa in need of such protection;

Stressed the need to ensure improved coordination of donor initiatives in order to make the best use of available resources;

Further stressed the need for continued and enhanced cooperation between the United Nations, ECOWAS and the African Union in peace consolidation initiatives;

Underscored the importance and the role of the Peacebuilding Commission in assisting countries emerging from conflict to achieve sustainable peace and stability;

Requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the ECOWAS secretariat, to submit to it by the end of the year a report with recommendations on the cooperation between the United Nations missions deployed in the region and on the cross-border issues in West Africa.

Initial proceedings

Decision of 22 April 2004 (4949th meeting): statement by the President

At its 4949th meeting, on 22 April 2004, the Security Council adopted as its agenda the item entitled “Decision of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to abandon its weapons of mass destruction programmes”.

The President (Germany) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the decision by the Socialist People’s Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to abandon its programmes for developing weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery and the positive steps taken to fulfil its commitments and obligations, including its active cooperation with the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons;

Took note that in its resolution 2004/18 the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency recognized the decision of the Socialist People’s Libyan Arab Jamahiriya as a step towards the realization of the goal of an Africa and a Middle East free of weapons of mass destruction and at peace.

A. Letter dated 25 May 2004 from the Permanent Representative of the Sudan to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council

Initial proceedings

Decision of 25 May 2004 (4978th meeting): statement by the President

At its 4978th meeting, on 25 May 2004, the Security Council adopted as its agenda the item entitled “Letter dated 25 May 2004 from the Permanent Representative of the Sudan to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/2004/425)”. In the letter, the representative of the Sudan, referring to his meeting with the President of the Council on 17 May 2004 on the humanitarian situation in Darfur, stated that the Government of the Sudan had taken a number of actions to facilitate the entry and clearance of equipment imported to be used for humanitarian purposes, including granting entry visas within 48 hours to all humanitarian workers from the United Nations, donors, the Red Cross and international non-governmental organizations and suspending the travel permit requirement for Darfur. He noted that the Government of the Sudan had appealed to the African Union to expedite the deployment of ceasefire observers as an important step in further facilitating humanitarian activities. It had also appealed to the population of Darfur to return to their villages, reaffirming its commitment to provide security and protection. He also reiterated the commitment of his Government to continue its full cooperation with the United Nations and the international community in its quest to alleviate the humanitarian situation of its citizens.

The President (Pakistan) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its grave concern over the deteriorating humanitarian and human rights situation and at the continuing reports of large-scale violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law in Darfur (Sudan);

Reiterated its call on the parties to ensure the protection of civilians and to facilitate humanitarian access to the affected population;

Emphasized the urgent need for all parties to observe the ceasefire and to take immediate measures to end the violence;

Welcomed the announcement by the Government of the Sudan that it would issue visas to all humanitarian workers within 48 hours of application;

Called upon the international community to respond rapidly and effectively to the consolidated appeal for Darfur;

Affirmed the need for the immediate appointment and appropriate accreditation of a permanent Resident Coordinator/Humanitarian Coordinator;

Encouraged the parties to step up their efforts to reach a political settlement to their dispute in the interest of the unity and sovereignty of the Sudan.

B. Reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan

Initial proceedings

Decision of 11 June 2004 (4988th meeting): resolution 1547 (2004)

At its 4988th meeting,² on 11 June 2004, the Security Council adopted as its agenda the item entitled “Report of the Secretary-General on the Sudan (S/2004/453)”. The representative of the Sudan was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Philippines) drew the attention of the Council to the report of the Secretary-General dated 3 June 2004.³ In his report, following a request by the Council to initiate preparatory work on how the United Nations could fully support the implementation of a comprehensive peace agreement between the Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People’s Liberation Movement/Army (SPLM/A), the Secretary-General observed that the recent signing of the protocols on power-sharing, on the areas of the Nuba Mountains and Southern Blue Nile, and on Abyei, had given a real prospect for peace in the Sudan. He therefore recommended the deployment of an advance team, for an initial period of three months and under the authority of a Special Representative of the Secretary-General, that would show the commitment of the international community to assist the parties and would also enhance the ability of the United Nations to engage quickly in assisting the Sudanese people in the transition to peace. The Secretary-General called on the parties to respect their commitments by implementing their agreements in good faith and by using their influence to ensure a complete halt to fighting, and also called upon the international community to continue to play its part during the final phase of negotiations and during the interim periods that would follow a comprehensive peace agreement. Observing that the situation in Darfur was catastrophic, the Secretary-General noted that a meaningful agreement on Darfur would be fundamental to the success of a future United Nations role in the Sudan, as to conduct a consent-based monitoring and verification operation in one part of the country while there was ongoing conflict in another part would prove politically unsustainable inside the Sudan and internationally, and therefore urged the parties to the conflict to conclude a political agreement without delay.

Statements were made by the representatives of Algeria, Germany, Pakistan, the United Kingdom and the United States. The President drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United Kingdom;⁴ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1547 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the Secretary-General's proposal to establish a United Nations advance team in the Sudan as a special political mission;

Endorsed the Secretary-General's proposals for the staffing of the advance team, and in this regard requested the Secretary-General to conclude all necessary agreements with the Government of the Sudan as expeditiously as possible;

Declared its readiness to consider establishing a United Nations peace support operation to support the implementation of a comprehensive peace agreement, and requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Council recommendations for the size, structure, and mandate of this operation, as soon as possible after the signing of a Comprehensive Peace Agreement;

Endorsed the conclusions of the Secretary-General with regard to the situation in the Sudan, in particular Darfur and the Upper Nile, as set out in paragraph 22 of his report;

Called upon the parties to use their influence to bring an immediate halt to the fighting in the Darfur region, in the Upper Nile and elsewhere;

Requested the Secretary-General to keep it informed of developments in the Sudan.

Speaking after the vote, most representatives welcomed the progress made in the north-south peace talks for the Sudan (the Naivasha peace process), led by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD), and welcomed the commitment of the United Nations to support the peace process as recommended by the Secretary-General.

The representatives of the United Kingdom and Germany welcomed the fact that the Council had demonstrated its unanimous support for the north-south peace agreement process for the Sudan and hoped to see similar progress in the difficult situation in Darfur.⁵ In particular, the representative of Germany observed that a sustainable peace would only be possible when all conflicts in the Sudan had been resolved, including the widespread violations of human rights.⁶ The representative of the United States, echoing the statement issued earlier by the leaders of the Group of Eight, urged the Government of the Sudan and SPLM/A to reach a comprehensive agreement that would include a timetable and security arrangements as quickly as possible. He also echoed the concern expressed by the Group of Eight over the humanitarian, human rights and political crisis in Darfur, and welcomed the announcement by the Government of the Sudan that restrictions on humanitarian access would be eased.⁷

The representative of Algeria called for mobilization of all resources to accompany the peace process under way in southern Sudan in order to avoid the possibility of failure. He stated that his delegation would have liked the resolution to have guaranteed ongoing international mobilization to accompany the peace process. He fully endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations, particularly those pertaining to the deployment of an advance team, with the prospect of establishing a United Nations operation after the conclusion of a comprehensive peace agreement in southern Sudan.⁸

Recalling that the cooperation of the relevant parties was vital for the implementation of any peace agreement, the representative of Pakistan stated that it was important to keep the Government of the Sudan engaged in the process. He noted that the resolution referred to the problems in Darfur, where there was a humanitarian crisis initiated by an armed rebellion and escalated by the response. He argued that what was important was for the international community to respond generously to the humanitarian crisis. He recalled that, as a State Member of the United Nations, the Sudan had all the rights and privileges under the Charter, including sovereignty and territorial integrity. Observing that long-term peace and unity in the Sudan were in the interest not only of its own people, but also of the international community, he stressed that it should be a matter of principle that any country concerned in any issue under the Council's discussion should have the right to participate and to speak in the Security Council and the Council should not have denied it in this case.⁹

(Romania) drew the attention of the Council to the following documents: a draft resolution submitted by Chile, France, Germany, Romania, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States;¹¹ letters dated, respectively, 12 and 27 July 2004, from the representative of Nigeria, in his capacity as Chairman of the African Union, transmitting the communiqués adopted by the Peace and Security Council of the African Union on 4 and 27 July 2004;¹² and a letter dated 22 June 2004 from the representative of the Sudan, informing the Council about a number of measures adopted by the President of the Sudan in relation to the situation in Darfur.¹³

Statements were made by most Council members and the representative of the Sudan.

Speaking before the vote, the representative of China stated that a satisfactory resolution of the political situation in Darfur would require three elements: first, the speedy alleviation of the severe humanitarian situation; secondly, the expediting of political negotiations to reach, as soon as possible, a comprehensive agreement based on respect for the Sudan's sovereignty and territorial integrity; and, thirdly, expeditious assistance by the international community. Expressing the hope that the Government of the Sudan would continue to honour its commitment to disarm the Janjaweed militia and other illegal groups, he held that the Government bore the primary responsibility to resolve the situation in Darfur and that the international community should make every effort to assist in this regard. Noting that the draft resolution under consideration by the Council still included mandatory measures against the Government of the Sudan, he believed that, since the parties were speeding up diplomatic efforts, such measures could not be helpful in resolving the situation in Darfur and might further complicate it. Regretting that the sponsors of the resolution had not taken seriously into consideration the concerns put forward by his delegation, the representative of China stated that his country would abstain in the voting of the draft resolution.¹⁴

The draft resolution was then put to a vote; it received 13 votes to none, with 2 abstentions (China, Pakistan), and was adopted as resolution 1556 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, inter alia:

Endorsed the deployment of international monitors to the Darfur region of the Sudan under the leadership of the African Union;

Urged Member States to provide personnel and other assistance including financing, supplies, transport, command support and communications;

Demanded that the Sudan fulfil its commitments to disarm the militias and requested the Secretary-General to report in 30 days and monthly thereafter on progress made;

Decided that all States should take the necessary measures to prevent the sale or supply of arms or related materiel of all types to entities operating in the Sudan, including technical training;

Decided that the measures imposed should not apply to supplies and related technical training and assistance to monitoring, verification or peace support operations; or supplies of non-lethal military equipment for humanitarian or human rights monitoring or supplies of protective clothing for United Nations and humanitarian personnel;

Requested the Secretary-General to activate inter-agency humanitarian mechanisms;

Extended the special political mission for an additional 90 days, to 10 December 2004, and requested the Secretary-General to incorporate into the mission contingency planning for the Darfur region.

Speaking after the vote, Council members who had voted in favour of the draft resolution, inter alia, expressed satisfaction that the resolution had been adopted since the gravity of the situation in Darfur called for a clear and urgent response by the Council; stressed that the resolution underlined in particular the Council's commitment to ensure that the Government of the Sudan fulfilled its duty to protect its own citizens; underlined the need for the Government of the Sudan to implement all the commitments it had made in its joint communiqué with the United Nations signed on 3 July 2004; expressed the hope that the situation on the ground would be greatly improved and that humanitarian assistance would reach all the people in need by the time of the next review; further expressed the hope that significant progress would be made in the political process and in establishing credible security conditions for civilians and humanitarian actors, and in disarming the Janjaweed militias and bringing their leaders to justice; and emphasized and welcomed the crucial role of the African Union both at the political and peacekeeping level.

Noting that resolution 1556 (2004) was the necessary response to help save the people of Darfur, the representative of the United States stated that the responsibility for the humanitarian disaster lay with the Government of the Sudan, which had not met the commitments undertaken in the joint communiqué with the Secretary-General to address the situation in Darfur. Against this background, he explained that the resolution, while not labelling the present situation in Darfur as genocide, did explicitly condemn acts of violence “with an ethnic dimension” and anticipated sanctions against the Government of the Sudan if the regular monthly cycle of reporting revealed a lack of compliance. He therefore added that the resolution gave the Government of the Sudan one small window of opportunity to improve the situation dramatically “in days and weeks, not months or years”.¹⁵ The representative of the United Kingdom, echoed by the representative of France, stated that the message to the Government of the Sudan and the rebels should be clear and firm and that, if commitments were not met and peace talks were not entered into constructively and in good faith, and if the atrocities did not end, the Council, when reviewing progress the following month, would be considering measures as provided for in Article 41 of the Charter.¹⁶ Similarly, the representative of Spain stated that if the Government of the Sudan did not fulfil its commitments, the Council must be prepared to adopt all measures necessary to guarantee the fulfilment of those commitments,¹⁷ while the representative of Germany stated that the Council explicitly reserved the right to impose sanctions if the Government of the Sudan failed to act rapidly.¹⁸

On the other hand, the representative of Pakistan explained that his delegation was not in a position to support the resolution since his country did not believe that the threat or imposition of sanctions against the Government of the Sudan was advisable. Believing that the Security Council would not need to take such further measures, and echoed by the representative of the Philippines, he looked forward to the report of the Secretary-General to be issued in 30 days, which, he hoped, would confirm that the Government of the

Sudan and the rebel groups were complying with their commitments and obligations.¹⁹ The representative of Pakistan welcomed the emphasis contained in the resolution on the need for a political solution to the Darfur crisis, as well the reference to the principle of preserving the territorial integrity of the Sudan. However, echoed by the representative of Brazil, he did not believe that the adoption of the entire resolution under Chapter VII was necessary.²⁰ The representative of Brazil added that although he recognized the reference to Article 41 of the Charter as a compromise, he believed that the text should have made clear that measures such as those envisaged in Article 41 should be adopted solely for the purpose of giving effect to the decisions of the Security Council contained in the resolution.²¹

The representative of the Russian Federation said that it was of fundamental importance that resolution 1556 (2004) did not foresee further Security Council action with regard to Darfur, which could only be taken to implement the Council’s decisions in the light of further developments in the situation and on the basis of relevant recommendations of the Secretary-General. He expressed the hope that the Council was sending a clear signal to the Government of the Sudan and the rebels regarding the need to implement quickly the commitments made.²²

The representative of Algeria, speaking on behalf of the three countries representing Africa on the Council, namely, Angola, Benin and his own country, stated that his delegation had supported the resolution in the belief that the international community could not remain passive and indifferent to the humanitarian crisis unfolding in Darfur. He was satisfied that the resolution contained strong and unequivocal support for and endorsement of the African Union’s leadership role and the various dimensions of its engagement in Darfur, including humanitarian, military and political, with the deployment of monitors and a protection force. He added that the resolution also supported the possibility of the African Union creating a full-fledged peacekeeping operation and sponsoring talks between the Government of the Sudan and the rebel groups, with a view to reaching a political solution to the tensions in Darfur.²³

The representative of the Sudan regretted the adoption of the resolution at a time when his Government was acting quickly to implement its agreement with the United Nations to address the situation in Darfur. He explained that his Government had sought to deal with the rebel groups through serious dialogue with the international community and had engaged in a constructive effort in good faith with the United Nations, as well as bilaterally with members of the international community, as established in the joint communiqué of 3 July 2004. Noting that his Government had started to implement the obligations contained in the joint communiqué, covering humanitarian, human rights, security and political issues, he stated that his Government had fulfilled all its commitments related to humanitarian issues and had established an independent investigation commission into human rights violations. He further regretted that, contrary to resolution 1547 (2004), which was adopted under Chapter VI of the Charter, resolution 1556 (2004) was adopted under Chapter VII. Nevertheless, he concluded that, despite such elements, his Government would comply with the provisions of the resolution, would continue its efforts to mitigate the suffering of civilians in Darfur and restore stability, and would redouble its efforts to ensure a peaceful settlement of the problem.²⁴

Decision of 18 September 2004 (5040th meeting): resolution 1564 (2004)

At its 5027th meeting, on 2 September 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 30 August 2004.²⁵ In his report, observing that the conflict in Darfur had resulted in the forced displacement of more than 1.3 million people within Darfur and across the border to Chad, the Secretary-General noted that, although certain measures taken by the Government of the Sudan in accordance with the joint communiqué of 3 July 2004 and the Darfur Plan of Action had resulted in some progress, the Government of the Sudan had not fully met its obligation to stop attacks against civilians and ensure their protection and had not taken concrete steps to bring to justice or identify any of the militia leaders or the perpetrators of the attacks, allowing the violations of human rights and the basic laws of war to continue in a climate of impunity. Recalling that, in both the joint communiqué and the Plan of Action, the Government had promised to resume the political talks on Darfur to reach a comprehensive solution acceptable to all parties in the conflict, the Secretary-General reported that the search for a political solution on Darfur was currently under way at the Abuja peace talks and urged the parties to continue and redouble their efforts, with the assistance of the African Union and the other international mediators, and to exercise maximum restraint on the ground and fully respect the Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement. The Secretary-General believed that a substantially increased international presence in Darfur was required as quickly as possible to help decrease the level of violence and enhance the protection of the civilian population, particularly those who had been displaced, as well as to monitor more effectively the implementation of the parties' commitments, including those under the Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement. By providing the population with an increased sense of security and protection, he added, a sizeable international presence would ease the level of tension, and create the necessary conditions for the population of Darfur to start their own reconciliation process and permit a voluntary and safe return, although not any time soon, of the displaced people. Lastly, the Secretary-General recalled that the crisis in Darfur could not be seen in isolation from the search for a comprehensive peace in the Sudan, therefore requiring simultaneous efforts by all concerned to restart and conclude the Naivasha peace talks as soon as possible in order to prove that peace negotiations could indeed produce results. Noting that the outcome of the talks in Naivasha could serve as a model for the talks on Darfur and instil more confidence among the rebels in the process, the Secretary-General concluded that any effort to make the conclusion of the IGAD-led process conditional on an end to the crisis in Darfur would be counterproductive, with consequences that could further destabilize the country and the region, and ultimately prolong the crisis in Darfur.

The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan and head of the peace support operation. The President (Spain) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 19 August 2004 from the representative of the Sudan, transmitting a message from the Minister for Foreign Affairs regarding the situation in Darfur and Security Council resolution 1556 (2004);²⁶ a letter dated 31 August 2004 from the representative of the Sudan, enclosing a letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs regarding the measures taken by the Government of the Sudan in compliance with resolution 1556 (2004) and the Darfur Plan of Action;²⁷ and a letter dated 18 August 2004 from the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States (LAS) addressed to the Secretary-General, transmitting the outcome of the extraordinary session of the Ministerial Council of LAS held on 8 August 2004 concerning the situation in Darfur.²⁸

In his briefing, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan informed Council members that through intensive discussions within the framework of the Joint Implementation Mechanism, the United Nations and its partners had been able to maintain pressure on the Government of the Sudan, while also offering to help in meeting the initial requirements contained in resolution 1556 (2004). Affirming that the Government had made progress in this respect, the Special Representative specified, inter alia, that it had improved security in some areas with concentration of internally displaced persons; had ceased all offensive military operations in these areas; had accepted international human rights monitoring and had established national mechanisms to investigate abuses; and had engaged in negotiations with rebel movements without pre-conditions. He emphasized, however, that the Government had not met its commitments in two key areas: it had not been able to stop attacks by militias against civilians, or to disarm those militias; and had not taken any concrete steps to bring to justice, or even identify, any militia leaders or perpetrators of those attacks. Affirming the responsibility of the Government to protect its people against attacks and violations of human rights, he urged the Government, if unable to fully protect its citizens by itself, to seek assistance from the international community. At minimum, he added, this would mean interpreting the monitoring mandate more broadly in order to cover the implementation of all agreements and be more pro-active. He therefore indicated that an expanded African Union mission in Darfur could provide a path towards that end that was independent from the parties, widespread, neutral, efficient and reliably backed by logistics and resources supplied by the international community. Echoing the report of the Secretary-General and affirming that there could be no end to the suffering in Darfur without a political settlement leading towards sustainable peace, he urged the parties to stay at the negotiation table and to seek assistance from the African Union and United Nations facilitators and mediators.²⁹

At its 5040th meeting, on 18 September 2004, the Council continued its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General dated 30 August 2004.³⁰ The President (Spain), drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Germany, Romania, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States;³¹ and to a letter dated 16 September 2004 from the representatives of Australia, Canada and New Zealand, requesting the Security Council to take a number of actions which included, inter alia, the support of an expanded African Union mission, the establishment of clear benchmarks in terms of actions expected by the Government of the Sudan, and the establishment by the Secretary-General of an impartial commission of experts to investigate violations of war crimes and crimes against humanity.³² Statements were made by Council members as well as the representative of the Sudan.³³

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Algeria stated that, in the light of the progress made by the Government of the Sudan in implementing its obligations under resolution 1556 (2004), his delegation would have expected the Security Council to take note of the progress and urge the Government of the Sudan to undertake further efforts in areas where shortcomings had been emphasized, particularly in the area of security. He added that his delegation did not expect the Council to again threaten the use of sanctions against the Government of the Sudan. He therefore observed that, despite some improvements made to the text of the draft resolution, the latter continued to pose problems for a number of reasons.

First, the draft resolution did not take into account the positive steps taken by the Government of the Sudan, but rather exclusively highlighted the shortcomings detected in the implementation of the Government's commitments. Second, the draft resolution foresaw the use of sanctions in reaction not only to non-compliance with the Council resolution, but also if there was a lack of cooperation with the African Union concerning the extension of its mandate, even though the Government had requested that the latter's mission be extended and strengthened and had committed itself to serious cooperation with the United Nations and the African Union. Third, the text called for the establishment of an international commission of inquiry charged with determining whether genocide had been committed in Darfur, despite the fact that the international community had deliberately set aside that question, at least for the time being, in order to avoid jeopardizing the provision of humanitarian aid. Regretting that the sponsors of the draft resolution had not shown flexibility on the aforementioned points, the representative of Algeria stated that, although recognizing some of the highly positive elements of the draft resolution, his delegation would abstain from the vote.³⁴

The President then put the draft resolution to the vote; it received 11 votes to none, with 4 abstentions (Algeria, China, Pakistan, Russian Federation), and was adopted as resolution 1564 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Declared its grave concern that the Government of the Sudan had not fully met its obligations noted in resolution 1556 (2004) and deplored the recent ceasefire violations by all parties;

Urged the Government of the Sudan and SPLM to conclude a comprehensive peace accord expeditiously as a critical step towards the development of a peaceful and prosperous Sudan;

Demanded that the Government of the Sudan submit to the African Union mission for verification documentation, particularly the names of those arrested for human rights abuses and violations of international humanitarian law;

Demanded that all armed groups, including rebel forces, cease all violence;

Requested that the Secretary-General rapidly establish an international commission of inquiry in order immediately to investigate reports of violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law in Darfur by all parties;

Declared that the Council, in the event the Government of the Sudan failed to comply fully with resolution 1556 (2004) or the present resolution should consider taking additional measures as contemplated in Article 41 of the Charter of United Nations.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation, emphasizing that the Government of the Sudan had achieved a certain amount of progress in implementing its obligations under resolution 1556 (2004), stated that the threat of sanctions was far from the best method of inducing the Government to fully implement its obligations with the United Nations. Noting that only "approved diplomatic methods" should be used, he held that linking sanctions with the peacebuilding efforts of the African Union was counterproductive and, therefore, stated that his delegation was unable to support the draft resolution.³⁵

Observing that the situation in Darfur was gradually improving, the representative of China was of the view that the Council and the international community should focus on encouraging the Government of the Sudan to continue to cooperate, rather than doing the opposite, and fully support the mediation efforts of the African Union, rather than increase its difficulties. He added that the Council should also work for an early agreement with a view to achieving a political solution between the Government and the rebels rather than sending the wrong signals and making negotiations difficult. For those reasons, he observed that his delegation had serious reservations about the text of the resolution, expressing concern that it would not contribute to a solution. Nevertheless, he added, since a key element of the current work of the Council was to support the African Union in extending its deployment in Darfur, his delegation had refrained from blocking the text. Taking note of the fact that the sponsors had repeatedly stated that the threat of sanctions would not be automatically implemented, the representative of China reiterated that his country's position against sanctions remained unchanged, consistent with the view that instead of helping resolve problems, they made them more complicated. Expressing his support for the expansion of the African Union's deployment in Darfur, he continued to believe that only a political settlement, achieved through negotiation, would lead to a final resolution of the crisis in Darfur.³⁶

Recalling that the resolution failed to recognize the progress made by the Government of the Sudan, the representative of Pakistan held that his delegation could not endorse the use or threat of sanctions, which he believed would be unhelpful, and therefore had abstained from the vote on the resolution. Adding that the impact of the threat of sanctions directed explicitly and solely against the Government of the Sudan could have a broader potential impact than resolution 1556 (2004), he stated that, apart from being unfair, such a threat might provoke a response that would be counterproductive, threatening international humanitarian relief, hardening the position of the rebels and eroding the mediation efforts of the African Union.³⁷

In their statements, the other speakers generally welcomed the adoption of the resolution; expressed the hope that the resolution would serve the purpose of relieving the suffering of the civilian population in Darfur; regretted that the Government of the Sudan had not fulfilled its commitments, in particular those concerning the disarmament of the Janjaweed, the protection of the civilian population, and the bringing to trial of those responsible for war crimes and crimes against humanity; urged the Government of the Sudan to fulfil its commitments under resolution 1556 (2004); supported the work of the African Union both in its efforts to facilitate a political agreement between the rebels and the Government of the Sudan and the role of the African Union mission; and underlined the importance of establishing a commission of inquiry to help ensure that those who were responsible for war crimes and crimes against humanity were brought to justice.

The representative of the United States observed that the purpose of resolution 1564 (2004) was mainly threefold: first, to fully back the African Union in undertaking an increased mission in Darfur; second, to call for the urgent completion of the north-south Naivasha negotiations as well as the Darfur negotiations in Abuja; and third, to encourage the international community to fulfil its pledges of humanitarian assistance to Darfur. Noting that action was necessary because the Government of the Sudan had failed to fully comply with resolution 1556 (2004), he recalled that the resolution stated that if the Government of the Sudan continued to persecute its people and did not cooperate fully with the African Union, the Council would have to consider sanctions against it and against individuals responsible for the crisis.³⁸

The representative of Germany, echoed by the representatives of France and the United Kingdom, observed that there had been some progress made by the Government of the Sudan in fulfilling its commitments, although its scope had been limited particularly with regard to the disarmament of the Janjaweed, the prosecution of human rights violations and the overall security situation for the population and the internally displaced persons in Darfur.³⁹ Observing that resolution 1564 (2004) struck the right balance between the application of pressure, which included the threat of sanctions without creating any automaticity, and the need for dialogue, the representative of Germany, supported by the representative of the United Kingdom, stated that pressure should be exerted on the Sudan in order to achieve the fulfilment of its responsibility to protect its own population. Stressing that the main point of the resolution was to support the role of the African Union in solving the crisis in Darfur and to obtain the cooperation of the Government of the Sudan with an expanded African Union mission, he noted that the Government of the Sudan should quickly take advantage of the present opportunity and demonstrate that it was prepared to take steps in the right direction, and concluded that the Council would have to keep the situation in the Sudan under close scrutiny in the coming weeks.⁴⁰

Similarly, the representative of France, in supporting the adoption of resolution 1564 (2004), stated that in order to pursue the sole objective of saving human lives, the Council should act resolutely and responsibly, exerting strong pressure on the Government of the Sudan and energetically supporting the African Union, whose role was essential if the requirements of the international community were to be met and the necessary cooperation of the Government of the Sudan was to be secured.

Nevertheless, as also noted by the representative of Benin, he had hoped the resolution would have received a higher number of favourable votes, given the importance of a united Security Council on such an issue.⁴¹

Echoed by the representative of Brazil, the representative of Benin supported the lead role of the African Union and voiced regret that a reference to Chapter VIII of the Charter, which would have highlighted the cooperation between the United Nations and the regional organization, had not been included in the text of resolution 1564 (2004). He also noted that the reference to the petroleum sector with respect to the threat of sanctions had lessened the prospect of a consensus given the controversial interpretations to which it might be subject.⁴²

Observing that the situation in Darfur remained extremely serious, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that it was appropriate for the Council to consider the issue under Chapter VII of the Charter. Recognizing that the progress achieved so far by the Government of the Sudan was provoked by the pressure of the international community, he believed that by repeating the clear threat of sanctions, the Council was underlining its commitment to ensuring that the Government of the Sudan achieved the targets set and met its responsibilities, the most basic of which was the protection of its own citizens. Adding that the resolution was equally addressed to the rebels, who were called upon to cooperate, he stressed that the resolution should not be interpreted as giving cover to the rebels to carry on their unacceptable behaviour.⁴³

Noting that he had voted in favour of the draft resolution on the understanding that its main thrust was to save lives in Darfur, the representative of Brazil was of the view that the resolution could have also acknowledged other positive steps taken by the Government of the Sudan, particularly those concerning the beginning of disarmament, improved security in certain areas of internally displaced persons and the deployment of additional police forces to the region. He noted with interest that the resolution also addressed the issue of the Sudanese rebel groups. In his view, however, the “excessive use of Chapter VII as an umbrella” for the whole operative part of the resolution ran the risk of misleading the parties concerned, which might understand that the peaceful settlement of disputes and diplomatic negotiations were not options considered by the Council. As for the possibility of the Council considering additional measures as contemplated by Article 41 of the Charter, the representative of Brazil stated that it was his understanding that the Council was not prejudging the nature of its substantive decision to be taken at an appropriate time.⁴⁴

Considering resolution 1564 (2004) as a follow-up to resolution 1556 (2004), which had received wide support in the Council and which he considered the framework resolution for the Council’s consideration of the question of Darfur, the representative of Romania, joined by the representative of Spain, stated that the resolution was a fair balance between acknowledging progress and continuing to provide energetic and continuous engagement of the Sudan to fully comply with its commitments.⁴⁵ Recalling that the resolution contemplated the imposition of sanctions, he specified that it did not contemplate their automatic imposition, which remained a matter of an adequate and gradual approach in keeping with the evolution on the ground, since the Council should continue to work with the Government of the Sudan to implement its commitments.⁴⁶

The representative of the Philippines recalled that a State had the responsibility to protect its citizens and, if unable or unwilling to do so, the international community, and in particular the Security Council, had the moral and legal authority to enable that State to assume such a responsibility.⁴⁷

Acknowledging that resolution 1564 (2004) was balanced and pressured both the Government of the Sudan and the rebel groups to negotiate in good faith, the representative of Spain expressed hope that the Government’s promises to cooperate with the African Union would soon be fulfilled through “sufficient and well-defined steps”, since the crisis not only posed a threat to regional security, but also to international peace and security which, in turn, required the international community to assist in finding a solution.⁴⁸

The representative of the Sudan, rejecting resolution 1564 (2004) as unfair, stated that his Government had shown that it had honoured its commitments and questioned whether the reference to sanctions in the resolution would help to resolve the problem or complicate it further. He stated that the quality of the resolution might have been improved by delaying its adoption since, as it stood, the resolution discouraged the people of Darfur from seeking a solution to the current crisis, rather than encouraging them to maintain cooperation and ongoing participation towards peace. Opining that the adoption of the resolution had undermined negotiations and the African Union's efforts, he added that proof of this was that the rebels had recently set impossible conditions, which had been drawn from the text of the draft resolution as originally submitted to the Council.⁴⁹

Deliberations of 5 October and 4 and 18 November 2004 (5050th, 5071st and 5080th meetings)

At its 5050th meeting,⁵⁰ on 5 October 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 28 September 2004.⁵¹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the special political mission mandated by resolution 1547 (2004) had been in place for three months, due to its relatively speedy initial deployment, with a considerably expanded focus since the adoption of resolution 1556 (2004). The Secretary-General also reported that work was under way to establish a future peace support operation to help facilitate the implementation of a comprehensive peace agreement between the Government and SPLM/A, although he expected considerable logistical and political challenges. Welcoming the decision of the Government and SPLM/A to resume negotiations in the context of the IGAD-led peace process, the Secretary-General observed that the parties were standing on the threshold of an agreement and should work together to agree to mutually acceptable implementation modalities for the pre-interim and interim periods that would follow a comprehensive peace agreement. Restating that the IGAD-led peace process was central to comprehensive peace in the Sudan, he noted that the peace process required an irreversible momentum and a defining agreement that would signal a break with the past. A successful conclusion of the peace process, he added, could be a catalyst to addressing the Darfur crisis and the wider problems of economic and political marginalization that adversely affected many in the Sudan, signalling to other marginalized peoples and groups in the Sudan, particularly the rebel groups in Darfur, that negotiation could succeed and peace could be attainable through political compromise. He therefore urged the parties to seize the opportunity before them and use it to ensure that a comprehensive and lasting peace could take hold throughout the Sudan.

The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan and head of the peace support operation. The President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to the report of the Secretary-General dated 4 October 2004 on the Sudan.⁵² In his report, the Secretary-General observed that despite the fact that the progress made by the Government of the Sudan had not been reversed, the Government had not fully met its obligations in key areas such as: the implementation of the ceasefire, the stopping of attacks on the civilian population, the disarmament of the militia and the prosecution of the perpetrators of atrocities. He noted that the most important step to be taken in the coming weeks was the beginning of the deployment of the expanded African Union force with a broad mandate, which could include, inter alia, the protection of the rights of internally displaced persons and refugees in their areas of origin; the safety of displaced persons in the camps and the safe and voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons to the areas of origin; monitoring the behaviour and actions of the police; and disarming fighters, including the Popular Defence Forces, the Janjaweed and other militia groups. Noting that the protection of civilians was a task belonging to the Government of the Sudan, he nevertheless observed that such a task could not be left to the Government alone, since too much confidence had been lost. He therefore emphasized that a third party, such as the African Union, could help to protect people by being present over a wide area and by acting as a deterrent. Turning to the Naivasha peace talks, the Secretary-General reiterated that, if successful, resumption of the north-south talks would contribute to the attainment of a political solution in Darfur, serving as a model. He therefore invited all parties to invest all their political energy in reaching a final result at the Naivasha peace talks and urged the international community to ensure that the momentum was sustained.

⁴⁹ Ibid., pp. 13-15.

⁵¹ S/2004/763, submitted pursuant to paragraph 7 of resolution 1547 (2004).

In his briefing on the situation in Darfur, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and head of the peace support operation stated that the Sudan had still not met its commitments in the key areas of systematically improving the security of civilians and making progress towards ending impunity. Regretting that there were still breaches of the N'Djamena ceasefire on both sides, he was of the view that a truly respected ceasefire could only come from the Abuja peace talks. Despite the lack of progress in the key areas of security and impunity, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General noted that resolution 1564 (2004) had laid a good foundation for further progress on the political front through supporting an expanded African Union mission and paving the way for resumed political negotiations. Turning to the peace talks in Naivasha between the Government and SPLM/A, he suggested that to ensure that the momentum was sustained, the Council could send a small mission to observe the peace talks and make clear that the international community would not easily accept further delays or hindrances from either party. Noting also that the Abuja talks on Darfur had been only partially successful, he found it deplorable that those had not addressed the main issues of political objectives and future economic development, especially since the lack of development represented one of the root causes of the crisis in the region. He therefore outlined three conditions to be met in order to achieve a comprehensive and sustainable solution to the conflicts in the Sudan: first, political leaders should protect citizens and guarantee their rights; second, the constitutional and institutional framework of the Sudan should reflect its existing diversities; and third, an economic development policy which fairly distributed the country's resources should be pursued. In helping the Sudan meet those conditions, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General stated that the international community should follow a long-term, comprehensive and unified strategy, which would include providing adequate humanitarian assistance; ensuring security and addressing root causes of the conflicts; creating conditions for a swift transition from relief and protection to rehabilitation, capacity-building and development; increasing financial assistance; supporting a comprehensive political solution, including through the use of the agreements reached in the north-south protocols as a model; pressuring the political leaders to change their policies towards the above objectives; and building confidence between opposing groups and preventing the conflicts from turning into general antagonism between people with different religious and ethnic backgrounds.⁵³

At its 5071st meeting, on 4 November 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 2 November 2004 on the Sudan.⁵⁴ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that, in spite of some progress in the peace talks, breaches of the ceasefire on an unacceptable scale had occurred including attacks and killings against civilians in Darfur. The failure of the Government to act convincingly to end impunity, as well as the increases in the numbers of internally displaced persons, he added, reflected the severity of the protection and security situation in Darfur. Recalling that the outcome of the north-south peace process could serve as a model for Darfur, he encouraged the international community to exercise a firm pressure on all parties to finalize the agreements by the end of the year and move to the implementation phase. He then added that negotiators at the north-south peace talks should commit themselves to working together to resolve the Darfur conflict immediately after the signature of the comprehensive agreement, for instance by strengthening and underpinning the political process already under way in Abuja. Observing that there was reluctance and distrust at the negotiation table in Abuja, he called on all parties and Member States with influence over the parties to reverse the worrisome trend. Finally, he called upon the Security Council to consider creative and prompt action to ensure effective implementation of the demands set out in its earlier resolutions.

The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan and head of the peace support operation. He expressed concern that the political agreements reached at the negotiating table might come too late to stop the rising violence and human suffering in Darfur and feared that the situation in Darfur might become unmanageable, and might easily enter a state of anarchy, unless greater efforts were made both at the negotiating table and on the ground. He therefore stated that the situation could be reversed only by a three-pronged approach: the speedy deployment of the expanded African Union force to deter violations; the speeding up of all negotiation processes; and ensuring that political leaders were held accountable for ongoing violations of agreements and violence. In conclusion, reiterating that the protection of people was the obligation of the Government of the Sudan and that movements were bound by the same principles of humanitarian law as formally recognized Governments, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General said that it was also the duty of the international community to consider further action if the action taken so far proved to be insufficient.⁵⁵

At the 5080th meeting, held in Nairobi, on 18 November 2004, statements were made by the President of Kenya, the Secretary-General, the First Vice-President of the Sudan, the representative of Nigeria in his capacity as Chair of the African Union, the Chairman of SPLM/A, and the President of Uganda in his capacity as Chairman of IGAD.

The President (United States) recalled that the Security Council was meeting in accordance with its resolution 1569 (2004). Observing that the location of the meeting was highly unusual, he stated that it was the demonstration of the very strong interest of the Council in the situation in the Sudan and its commitment to the country's future.⁵⁶

The President of Kenya, encouraged by the fact that the Council had decided to meet in Nairobi, stated that the international community should remain seized of the Naivasha peace process until the end, as the only way to demonstrate its commitment to the realization of enduring peace for the people of the Sudan.⁵⁷

The Secretary-General welcomed the fact that the Council had taken the rare and highly symbolic step of meeting in Africa. With reference to the Naivasha peace process, he emphasized the importance of an early conclusion of the negotiations, before the end of the year between the Government of the Sudan and SPLM/A and of an immediate implementation of what had been agreed, to help curb the spread of conflict and as a basis for resolving other conflicts. Turning to the conflict in Darfur and welcoming the signing by the parties in Abuja of protocols on the humanitarian situation and on security, the Secretary-General called upon the parties to abide strictly by those agreements. At the same time, he regretted that the security situation in Darfur continued to deteriorate, as both the Government and the rebel groups had breached the ceasefire agreements. He therefore said that, when crimes on such a scale were being committed and when a sovereign State appeared unable or unwilling to protect its own citizens, the international community, and specifically the Security Council, had a responsibility to act. So far, he noted, the Council had decided to exercise its responsibility by demanding compliance with its mandatory resolutions, while giving its full support to the efforts of the African Union mediation and monitoring mission. After the conclusion of the Naivasha process, he said that it was time to quickly involve all Sudanese stakeholders in a national conference to discuss the future governance of the country, with the United Nations and the African Union joining to support the process.⁵⁸

Recalling that the Government of the Sudan had made genuine efforts in the search of peace and had taken part in serious negotiations without any preconditions, the representative of the Sudan reiterated his country's support to finalizing the Naivasha peace process as soon as possible and looked forward to a genuine partnership with the international community in the implementation of the peace agreement. He concurred with the Secretary-General's view that the peace agreement would open the door to conducting a national dialogue to form a broad-based Government including other parties that were not party to the Naivasha negotiations. With reference to the situation in Darfur, reiterating his Government's commitment to all agreements reached in Abuja, he stated that the clear policy of his Government was to address the humanitarian situation, to end the fighting and all forms of hostility and to bring about sustainable development in the region. He also added that his country's vision of a political resolution in Darfur was based on the provisions of the Naivasha agreements and on the establishment of a foundation for decentralized government within a federal framework that provided the citizens of Darfur and the other peoples of the Sudan's governorates the ability to participate and to have additional authority in managing their own affairs.⁵⁹

The representative of Nigeria, in his capacity as Chair of the African Union, called for a total and comprehensive engagement of the Security Council and the international community in the peace process in the Sudan. Urging the parties to continue to cooperate with the Council and the international community to facilitate effective implementation of the resolutions adopted by the Council, he supported the Secretary-General's recommendation that outstanding issues should not be allowed to prevent the successful completion of the peace talks, since any delay in resolving them would adversely affect the United Nations pre-deployment arrangements in southern Sudan and other conflict areas.⁶⁰

The Chairman of SPLM/A reaffirmed the commitment of the movement to the peace process in the Sudan and to the Naivasha peace talks, assuring that SPLM/A was willing and prepared to work with the other party to swiftly complete and sign the framework comprehensive peace agreement in the shortest time possible. He then assured the Council that SPLM/A would seek to participate effectively in the coalition government of national unity and other levels of government to ensure the realization of a new political dispensation in the Sudan. He said that they were committed to the preservation of peace and the territorial integrity in the interim period, and to ensuring the holding of a free internationally monitored referendum on the right of self-determination for southern Sudan towards the end of the six-year interim period. Regarding the conflict in Darfur, recognizing that the situation was rapidly deteriorating, he held that the only way forward would be to expedite the conclusion of the Naivasha peace talks and subsequently install a broad-based coalition Government of national unity that could best deal with such threats. Reiterating that he did not see any serious obstacles that would prevent the signing of the final peace agreement by the end of 2004, he called upon the Council to adopt a resolution that, inter alia, recognized the six protocols signed already by the Government of the Sudan and SPLM/A as binding and irreversible commitments that the parties could not under any circumstances renegotiate and that should be implemented.⁶¹

The President of Uganda, in his capacity as Chairman of IGAD, held that, in a situation of conflict where internal forces had failed to address the problem, the regional players, with a close knowledge of the problem and often directly affected, should first intervene, followed by the international bodies such as the United Nations. With reference to the situation in the Sudan, he observed that the six protocols agreed upon at the Naivasha peace talks were a reasonable package and therefore urged the parties to resolve the outstanding issues without delay.⁶²

Decision of 19 November 2004 (5082nd meeting): resolution 1574 (2004)

At the 5082nd meeting,⁶³ held in Nairobi on 19 November 2004, statements were made by all Council members, the representatives of Australia (also on behalf of New Zealand), Japan, the Netherlands (on behalf of the European Union),⁶⁴ Norway, the Sudan, the Chairman of SPLM/A, and the Director of African Administration and African-Arab cooperation of LAS (on behalf of the Secretary-General of LAS).⁶⁵ The President (United States) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁶⁶ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1574 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Declared its strong support for the efforts of the Government of the Sudan and SPLM/A to reach a comprehensive peace agreement, encouraged the parties to redouble their efforts;

Urged the joint assessment mission of the United Nations, the World Bank and the parties, in association with other bilateral and multilateral donors, to continue their efforts to prepare for the rapid delivery of an assistance package for the reconstruction and economic development of the Sudan;

Demanded that Government and rebel forces and all other armed groups immediately cease all violence and attacks, including abduction, refrain from forcible relocation of civilians, cooperate with international humanitarian relief and monitoring efforts, ensure that their members comply with international humanitarian law, facilitate the safety and security of humanitarian staff, and reinforce throughout their ranks their agreements to allow unhindered access and passage by humanitarian agencies and those in their employ;

Decided to monitor compliance by the parties with their obligations in that regard and, subject to a further decision of the Council, to take appropriate action against any party failing to fulfil its commitments;

Strongly supported the decisions of the African Union to increase its mission in Darfur to 3,320 personnel;

Urged Member States to provide the required equipment, logistical, financial, material, and other necessary resources, and urged the Government of the Sudan and all rebel groups in Darfur to cooperate fully with the African Union.

After the vote, welcoming the balanced approach of the resolution which addressed coherently both the Naivasha negotiations in the framework of the north-south peace process and the Abuja negotiations on the Darfur conflict, many speakers, inter alia, applauded the initiative of the Council to hold a meeting on the Sudan in Africa; encouraged the Government of the Sudan and SPLM/A to sign a comprehensive peace agreement as soon as possible and, at the latest, by the end of the year; concurred that a successful conclusion of the Naivasha peace talks would also contribute to the solution of other conflicts, particularly the one in Darfur; expressed concern at the deteriorating humanitarian situation in Darfur; welcomed the signing in Abuja of the humanitarian and security protocols by the Government and the rebel groups and urged the parties to fulfil their obligations; and supported the efforts by the African Union and IGAD.

Reiterating that both the Government of the Sudan and the rebels should fulfil their commitments within the humanitarian and security protocols and end the attacks against the civilians in Darfur, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that resolution 1574 (2004) should not be interpreted as a reduction of the parties' commitments and obligations as set out in resolutions 1556 (2004) and 1564 (2004). Reiterating that the situation in the Sudan remained a threat to international security and stability in the region, he said that the Council needed to remain seized of the issue and stand ready to take tougher action if and when it was needed to enforce implementation.⁶⁷ Similarly, the representative of Spain stated that, if necessary, the Council should be prepared to take additional measures to oblige the parties to honour their commitments,⁶⁸ while the representative of France held that the parties should be aware that the Council would not fail to be extremely exacting to ensure that they complied fully with their commitments.⁶⁹ The representative of the United States emphasized that the resolution was a very clear message from the Council to the parties to stop the violence and atrocities perpetrated in Darfur.⁷⁰

The representative of the Russian Federation stated that an important part of stabilizing the situation in Darfur was to be played by the African Union monitoring mission, which, he added, should be appropriately supported. Further, he said, the Security Council should continue providing political assistance in the efforts to normalize the situation in Darfur and ensure implementation of agreements between the Sudan and the United Nations.⁷¹ The representative of China, echoed by the representative of Romania, noted that the signing of a comprehensive peace agreement would be only the first step in the north-south peace process, as the implementation of the agreement would be crucial. He therefore hoped that, once the agreement had been signed, the United Nations would deploy a peace operation and the international community would immediately begin a package of programmes to assist the Sudan in economic rehabilitation, development and reconciliation.⁷²

The representative of the Sudan confirmed his country's commitment to the implementation of the protocols and agreements signed, assuring the Council that the conclusion of the comprehensive peace agreement with SPLM/A was the quickest way to settle the crisis in Darfur.⁷³ Similarly, the Chairman of SPLM/A stated that his movement was committed to fulfilling the commitments that they had undertaken.⁷⁴

Deliberations of 7 December 2004 to 16 February 2005 (5094th, 5109th, 5119th, 5120th and 5125th meetings)

At its 5094th meeting, on 7 December 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 3 December 2004.⁷⁵ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the optimism generated on the political front by the commitments of the Government of the Sudan and SPLM/A to conclude the north-south peace talks and reach a final peace agreement by 31 December, as well as the signature of the humanitarian and security protocols in Abuja by the Government and the rebel movements, had been overshadowed by regression in the security situation. Reporting that in Darfur chaos was looming as order was collapsing, with ceasefire violations perpetrated even a few days after the commitments made by the parties to the Abuja protocols, he called upon the parties to abide by their commitments. Expressing concern that some elements on both sides had an interest in undermining the chances of concluding a comprehensive peace agreement by the end of the year, the Secretary-General stated that spoilers could not be allowed to derail the peace process. Recognizing that the conclusion of a comprehensive peace agreement would raise tremendous challenges for a United Nations mission in the Sudan and for the international community at large, he reported that the United Nations had started planning for the implementation phase of such a mission.

The Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, who reported that the month of November was marked by an increase of violence and a deterioration of the security situation in Darfur, including increased clashes between Government forces and the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army (SLM/A); reports of attacks in Western Darfur by the National Movement for Reform and Development; and increased activity by the Janjaweed and other pro-Government militias, leading to clashes with the Sudan Liberation Army. While stating that SLA was thought to be responsible for instigating much of the violence, he held that ceasefire violations occurred on both sides and noted that the Government of the Sudan had made little progress in disarming the Janjaweed and other pro-Government militias. Stating that the Government's inaction regarding the disarming of the militia underlined the need to strengthen even further the capacity of the African Union Mission in the Sudan (AMIS), as the only monitoring mechanism present in Darfur, the Under-Secretary-General observed that he was encouraged by the Mission's robust approach to get the parties to comply with their commitments. Emphasizing that the Mission would continue to play a critical role in establishing a secure environment, despite the increasingly challenging circumstances and the limited resources, he appealed to the international community to provide all necessary support to the Mission. Despite the escalation of violence in Darfur and the dire humanitarian situation, he noted that progress had been made at the negotiations in Abuja, with the next round of talks due to resume early in December to discuss the Declaration of Principles, which would form the basis of political objectives and institutions in Darfur.

Finally, recalling the pledge made in Nairobi by the Government and SPLM/A to conclude a final peace agreement by 31 December 2004, the Under-Secretary-General noted that the north-south peace talks provided some room for optimism since the technical-level discussions, as well as the high-level talks, had resumed in what was hoped would be the final round of talks. He concluded by stating that, once the comprehensive peace agreement had been signed, the Secretary-General would report to the Council and present his recommendations regarding the size, structure and mandate of a full mission to replace the existing advance mission, as recommended in resolution 1574 (2004).⁷⁶

At its 5109th meeting, on 11 January 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 7 January 2005.⁷⁷ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the situation in Darfur was in a political stalemate with regard to the peace talks, the parties having yet to commit to the implementation of the humanitarian ceasefire. With regard to reports that the armed groups were rearming and the conflict was spreading outside Darfur, the Secretary-General expressed his concern that a period of intense violence could occur unless swift action was taken. With regard to the political process itself, he held that action in three areas could be key to putting the Abuja process on the right track: first, encouraging the parties to commit themselves to proceeding with the political talks without further delay; second, assisting the parties to agree on a declaration of principles addressing the core issues of power and wealth-sharing, as well as integrating the Darfur peace talks into the wider process of peacemaking in the Sudan; third, creating a broad and strong support base for a sustainable peace through reconciliation and restoration of the social fabric in the region. The Secretary-General concluded by noting that it was essential to deploy as many personnel on the ground as possible as all agreed that an international presence often dissuaded attacks. He underlined that the African Union force, itself under threat of attack, had done more than any other outside agent to improve the security situation on the ground and whatever new initiatives were undertaken, the African Union, both in its troops on the ground and its leadership of the political process, remained, for the foreseeable future, the best mechanism for promoting peace in Darfur.

The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan and head of the peace support mission, who stated that the signing on 9 January 2005 of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement between the Government of the Sudan and SPLM/A constituted a milestone which heralded the definitive end of nearly four decades of brutal conflict and marked the beginning of the peacebuilding process. The next priority task should be stopping the fighting and resolving the conflict in Darfur. Reporting that the armed groups were rearming and that the conflict was spreading outside Darfur, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General observed that, despite regular statements to the contrary, the parties had yet to commit in practice to the implementation of the humanitarian ceasefire. The stalemate at the negotiating table, he reported, had led to the worsening of the security situation on the ground which, in turn, had not contributed to the willingness of the parties to engage in a dialogue on the root causes of the conflict and on political objectives. Emphasizing that the parties must be persuaded that it was in their interest to respect the ceasefire and to pursue a settlement through peaceful means, he outlined eight steps to do so, namely, (1) de-linking the talks on the political future of Darfur from those concerning security and humanitarian access; (2) empowering the Darfur ceasefire institutions as in the case of the north-south conflict; (3) urging the Governments and the rebel movements to exercise full restraint, avoiding any attacks as well as retaliation; (4) encouraging the Government and the rebel movements to withdraw behind reasonable and well-defined lines; (5) ensuring that the parties identified practical means to ensure the basic survival needs of their forces to diminish stealing and looting; (6) calling upon the Government to make a new start by disarming the Popular Defence Forces; (7) convincing the rebel movements to avoid blocking or disrupting peaceful seasonal movements of nomadic tribes and their cattle; and (8) ensuring that the Government prosecuted those responsible for major violations of human rights. Acknowledging the political momentum derived by the signature of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, he concluded that innovative action, consensus among all international actors, steady cooperation, perseverance and a well-defined common strategy were required.⁷⁸

At its 5119th meeting, on 4 February 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 31 January 2005.⁷⁹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that, following the signature of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the peace agreement should be immediately implemented and utilized to help to resolve other conflicts, particularly the one in Darfur. He recommended that the Security Council, acting under Chapter VI of the Charter, authorize the deployment of a multidimensional United Nations peace support operation with adequate resources, including a troop strength of 10,130, whose mandate would include, inter alia, providing good offices and political support for the peace process; monitoring adherence to the ceasefire and ensuring the security and freedom of movement of the United Nations personnel; taking action to protect civilians under imminent threat of physical violence; providing humanitarian assistance; and providing assistance to the Government of the Sudan in some aspects of governance, such as the development of a civilian administration and of a reformed police service.

The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and head of the peace support operation, who said that, in order to render peace sustainable, a comprehensive and unified approach was needed, addressing all causes of conflict in a holistic and balanced way, with peace and development being run by the Sudanese people themselves, and only facilitated by the international community.⁸⁰

At the 5120th meeting, on 8 February 2005, statements were made by the representative of the Sudan, the Chairman of SPLM/A, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and head of the peace support operation, and the Special Representative of the Chairperson of the Commission of the African Union in the Sudan.⁸¹

The President (Benin) drew the attention of the Council to the reports of the Secretary-General dated 31 January 2005⁸² and 4 February 2005;⁸³ the latter documented the overall performance by the Government of the Sudan and the rebel movements in terms of action taken to fulfil obligations and commitments related to Darfur over the period of approximately six months, from the signing of the joint communiqué on 3 July 2004⁸⁴ and the adoption of resolution 1556 (2004) to February 2005. The President also drew attention to a letter dated 31 January 2005 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting the report of the International Commission of Inquiry on Darfur.⁸⁵

The President then made a statement on behalf of the members of the Council. Praising the signature of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement as an historic moment for the Sudan, the President stressed the great responsibility of the international community to assist the parties in fulfilling their commitments and expressed support for the initiative to convene a donors' conference. He noted that Council members were starting to work on a resolution on ways and means for the establishment of a full-fledged United Nations peace support operation to help implement the Agreement. On Darfur, the President voiced the Council's deep concern at the continued ceasefire violations as well as attacks on civilians, humanitarian workers and African Union observers. He expressed full endorsement for the constructive and crucial role played by the African Union, and supported the Secretary-General's recommendation that the United Nations peacekeeping operation under consideration should cooperate with and support the African Union mission in Darfur. To prevent a further deterioration of the situation in Darfur, the President urged all parties to resume the Abuja talks in good faith and, in particular, the Vice-President of the Sudan to assume his new responsibility as the Government's chief negotiator.⁸⁶

The representative of the Sudan assured the Council of his Government's continued cooperation with the United Nations and readiness to discuss the details of the upcoming peace support operation. He called on the international community to, inter alia, support the parties' efforts towards a sustainable and permanent peace and, in this connection, requested them to lift any economic and trade restrictions and sanctions. Stressing the importance of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement as a basis for solving other conflicts in the Sudan, he provided a comprehensive vision to quickly conclude negotiations on Darfur, encompassing humanitarian, security, social and economic as well as political issues. In closing, he reiterated his Government's intention to negotiate peace in all parts of the Sudan on the basis of the principles of democracy, decentralization, good governance and equal rights, while, at the same time, highlighting the importance of the international community's constructive support.⁸⁷

On the establishment of a United Nations peace support operation in the Sudan, the Chairman of SPLM/A indicated that discussions were needed on the size of the force and on the troop-contributing countries. Stressing that the Comprehensive Peace Agreement was based on the concept of a "one country-two systems model", he appealed to the United Nations to accept this concept and to always reflect it when dealing with the Government of National Unity. At the end of the six-and-a-half-year interim period envisioned by the Agreement, he noted, the south would vote on whether to preserve a unified Sudan or opt for self-determination. Emphasizing that SPLM/A could share its views on how to adapt the Comprehensive Peace Agreement to the conflicts in Darfur and in eastern Sudan, he suggested that the parties in Darfur should be encouraged, preferably in the presence of the United Nations, to accept the Agreement as the basis for solving the conflict and commit themselves to a deadline for agreeing on the details of a negotiated settlement. He also strongly advised against waiting for a solution to Darfur before the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, insisting that southern Sudan should be able to enjoy a peace dividend irrespective of a resolution of the Darfur crisis.⁸⁸

Introducing the report of the Secretary-General on Darfur dated 4 February 2005,⁸⁹ the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan and head of the peace support operation reiterated that over the past six months, the performance of the Government had been uneven. While humanitarian access had improved, due to the lifting of restrictions on humanitarian assistance delivery, action on human rights, particularly measures to end impunity, had fallen short of what the Council had demanded and the ceasefire had not been complied with. He recalled that, although it had determined that the situation in Darfur was not genocide and that while the mass killings had stopped, the International Commission of Inquiry had concluded that the pattern of systematic violence had continued. The Special Representative of the Secretary-General stressed that violence could only be stopped by a third-party force and that any lasting solution required a political settlement. In this respect, he commented that the mandate of the African Union force was broad enough, but the force was too small and its deployment too slow, and appealed to all parties to find a creative way to expand the current force into one which could stop all attacks on civilians. Finally, he was of the view that with a third-party force acting as a buffer, the international community could help the parties in Darfur to reach a peace accord speedily, as in the case of the north-south peace process.⁹⁰

The Special Representative of the Chairperson of the Commission of the African Union in the Sudan, stating that the Secretary-General in his report on Darfur shared the African Union's concern over the deterioration of the security situation, said that the leadership of the African Union would carefully consider the recommendations of the Secretary-General on Darfur. On the deployment of the African Union force in Darfur, he informed the Council that, as at 7 February, of the 3,320 personnel that had been authorized, 370 military observers, 1,410 protection troops, 35 military police officers and 81 civilian police officers had been deployed, while 300 additional troops were expected from South Africa and Chad, with the expectation of achieving the full deployment in a few months. However, he emphasized that, regardless of the number of troops deployed, it was the responsibility of the Sudanese parties to bring the crisis to an end and he could not currently affirm that the parties had shown sufficient commitment in that regard.⁹¹

At its 5125th meeting, on 16 February 2005, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 31 January 2005 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council, transmitting the report of the International Commission of Inquiry on Darfur pursuant to resolution 1564 (2004).⁹²

The Council heard briefings by the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. The President (Benin) drew the attention of Council members to a letter dated 8 February 2005 from the representative of the Sudan addressed to the President of the Council, containing the response of the Government of the Sudan to the report of the International Commission of Inquiry on Darfur;⁹³ and to a letter dated 23 January 2005 from the representative of the Sudan addressed to the President of the Council, transmitting a summary of the report of the Commission of Inquiry established by the President of the Sudan on 8 May 2004 to investigate alleged human rights violations committed by armed groups in Darfur.⁹⁴

In his introductory statement, the Secretary-General, stressing that the report of the International Commission of Inquiry constituted one of the most important documents in the recent history of the United Nations, noted that such report made for “chilling” reading and was a call to “urgent action”. He reported that the Commission had established that many people in Darfur had been the victims of atrocities perpetrated on a very large scale for which the Government of the Sudan and the Janjaweed were responsible, including war crimes and, very likely, crimes against humanity. He also noted that the Commission had found credible evidence that rebel forces were responsible for serious violations, which might amount to war crimes. The Secretary-General recalled the Commission’s recommendation that the Council immediately refer the situation of Darfur to the International Criminal Court to ensure that those responsible for the aforementioned crimes were held accountable and did not go unpunished. The Secretary-General then appealed to the international community, led by the Security Council, to act urgently to stop further death and suffering in Darfur by considering the full range of options — including targeted sanctions, stronger peacekeeping efforts, new measures to protect civilians, and increased pressure on both sides for a lasting political solution.⁹⁵

In her briefing, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights recalled that, following the adoption of Security Council resolution 1564 (2004), the Secretary-General had appointed five outstanding international legal and human rights experts to form the International Commission of Inquiry with a mandate to, first, investigate reports of violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law in Darfur by all parties; secondly, determine whether or not acts of genocide had occurred; and thirdly, identify the perpetrators of such violations with a view to ensuring that those responsible were held accountable. Observing that they were clear and thoroughly documented, she reported that the Commission found that large-scale war crimes and crimes against humanity had been committed by Sudanese Government officials and by the Janjaweed militia and that, with regard to the rebels, the Commission had found credible evidence that members of SLM and the Justice and Equality Movement were also responsible for serious violations that might amount to war crimes. Secondly, she reported that the Commission had concluded that the Government of the Sudan had not pursued a policy of genocide, as the Commission did not find a demonstrated and specific intention, expressed as Government policy, to exterminate, in whole or in part, a national, ethnic, racial or religious group protected under the definition of genocide. However, she added, the Commission recognized that only a competent court could determine, on a case-by-case basis, whether individuals, including Government officials, ordered or participated in atrocities motivated by the genocidal intent to exterminate a protected group, in which case they could be found guilty of genocide. She therefore held the view that nothing in the Commission's report precluded the possibility of individuals being convicted of acts of genocide in relation to the events in Darfur. Thirdly, the High Commissioner reported that the Commission had identified 51 individuals suspected of having committed international crimes in Darfur, although it had decided to withhold the names from the public domain. Noting that the Commission had also reviewed the steps taken by the Government of the Sudan and the judicial authorities to address those crimes, she reported that the Commission had concluded that both the Government and the judiciary institutions were unwilling and unable to act and that any new initiative proposed by the Government of the Sudan to address these crimes could not be supported due, in particular, to the extent of involvement of Government officials. She therefore underlined the Commission's recommendation that the Security Council refer the situation of Darfur to the International Criminal Court, as the only credible way to bring alleged perpetrators to justice, having advised against other measures such as, for example, the establishment of mixed courts or an ad hoc international tribunal. Recalling that the Court, activated by the Security Council's referral, would be empowered to prosecute any persons for acts committed in Darfur that amounted to any of the crimes listed under the Rome Statute, she stated that the Court could be activated immediately. She also noted that the Commission had suggested the establishment of an international compensation commission for the victims as well as other immediate actions, including, for example, the protection of witnesses and victims and granting full and unimpeded access by the International Committee of the Red Cross and by United Nations human rights monitors to all those detained by the Sudanese authorities in relation to the situation in Darfur. The High Commissioner concluded her statement by emphasizing that the findings of the Commission of Inquiry irrefutably demonstrated that peace in Darfur would not be sustainable without immediate access to justice.⁹⁶

At its 5151st meeting, on 24 March 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 31 January 2005 and the addendum thereto dated 1 March 2005, including the financial implications for the deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation in the Sudan;⁹⁹ the letter dated 31 January 2005 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council, transmitting the report of the International Commission of Inquiry on Darfur;¹⁰⁰ and the reports of the Secretary-General dated 4 February 2005;¹⁰¹ and 4 March 2005.¹⁰² By the latter report, the Secretary-General observed the lack of any significant progress in the search for a political solution to the crisis in Darfur over the preceding month, as both sides had failed to capitalize on the momentum that was generated by the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. Following a meeting with the Chairperson of the African Union Commission, the Secretary-General reported that it had been agreed that an African Union-led assessment of current peacekeeping requirements in Darfur would be undertaken as a matter of urgency, with the United Nations and other key partners actively participating in the assessment. Finally, the Secretary-General emphasized that the international community should not miss the opportunity to strengthen the position of the African Union force in Darfur, as a fully staffed and effective AMIS would increase the chances that serious clashes could be prevented or minimized.

Statements were made by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations and the representative of the Sudan. The President (Brazil) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹⁰³ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1590 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to establish the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS) for an initial period of six months and further decided that UNMIS would consist of 10,000 military personnel and 715 civilian personnel;

Requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council within 30 days on options for how UNMIS could reinforce the effort to foster peace in Darfur;

Requested that the Secretary-General transfer all functions performed by UNAMIS to UNMIS and keep the Council regularly informed of the progress in implementing the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, respect for the ceasefire, and the implementation of the mandate of UNMIS;

Requested that the Secretary-General continue to report on a monthly basis on the situation in Darfur;

Requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to achieve actual compliance in UNMIS with the United Nations zero-tolerance policy on sexual exploitation and abuse;

And, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter:

Decided that UNMIS was authorized to take the necessary action, in the areas of deployment of its forces and as it deemed within its capabilities, to protect United Nations personnel, facilities, installations, and equipment;

Requested that the Secretary-General and the Government of the Sudan, following appropriate consultation with SPLM, conclude a status-of-forces agreement within 30 days of the adoption of the resolution;

Underscored the immediate need to rapidly increase the number of human rights monitors in Darfur and urged the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to accelerate the deployment of human rights monitors in Darfur to move forward with the formation of civilian monitoring protection teams.

After the adoption of the draft resolution, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, speaking on behalf of the Secretary-General, welcomed the Council's decision authorizing the establishment of UNMIS. Stating that UNMIS would play a key role in assisting the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and reinforce efforts to foster peace in Darfur, especially through supporting AMIS, he underlined the necessity to have the full cooperation of the parties to overcome the serious political hurdles that continued to confront the peace process. He warned that the United Nations would face unprecedented logistical obstacles in establishing a United Nations peace support operation in the Sudan given its extreme climate and prohibitive terrain. On Darfur, he welcomed the Council's explicit wish to reinforce efforts to foster peace, especially through support by UNMIS to the African Union mission. Stating that it was clear that the present state of affairs in Darfur could not be accepted, he recalled the clear recommendation of the International Commission of Inquiry that the Council immediately refer the situation to the International Criminal Court and stressed that "sanctions must also be kept on the table".¹⁰⁴

Reiterating his country's full commitment to implementing the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the representative of the Sudan welcomed the establishment of UNMIS and expressed his gratitude for the Council's efforts at supporting the implementation of the peace agreement. He asserted that his Government would continue to work towards creating a government of national unity that would carry out repatriation and reconstruction and stop the conflict in Darfur, and called on the Council to support his country in assuming its responsibilities.¹⁰⁵

Decision of 29 March 2005 (5153rd meeting):
resolution 1591 (2005)

At its 5153rd meeting, on 29 March 2005, the Council again included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 31 January 2005 and the addendum dated 1 March 2005;¹⁰⁶ the letter dated 31 January 2005 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council;¹⁰⁷ and the reports of the Secretary-General dated 4 February 2005¹⁰⁸ and 4 March 2005.¹⁰⁹

Statements were made by the representatives of Algeria, China, the Russian Federation, the Sudan, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States. The President (Brazil) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United States,¹¹⁰ which was put to a vote. It received 12 votes to none, with 3 abstentions (Algeria, China, Russian Federation), and was adopted as resolution 1591 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided, in the light of the failure of all parties to the conflict in Darfur to fulfil their commitments, to establish a Committee of the Security Council consisting of all the members of the Council to monitor implementation of the measures referred to in the resolution and paragraphs 7 and 8 of resolution 1556 (2004);

To request the Secretary-General to appoint for a period of six months, within 30 days, a Panel of Experts comprising four members and based in Addis Ababa, to travel regularly to El-Fasher and other locations in the Sudan, and to operate under the direction of the Committee;

That those individuals who impeded the peace process, constituted a threat to stability in Darfur and the region, committed violations of international humanitarian or human rights law or other atrocities, violated the measures implemented by Member States in accordance with paragraphs 7 and 8 of resolution 1556 (2004) and paragraph 7 of the resolution as implemented by a State, or were responsible for offensive military overflights described in the resolution, should be subject to the measures identified below;

That all States should take the necessary measures to prevent entry into or transit through their territories of all persons as designated by the Committee;

That all States should freeze all funds, financial assets and economic resources that were on their territories on the date of adoption of the resolution or at any time thereafter, that were owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by the persons designated by the Committee;

Decided that the measures referred to in the resolution should enter into force 30 days from the date of adoption, unless the Security Council determined before then that the parties to the conflict in Darfur had complied with all the commitments and demands referred to therein.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of Algeria, supporting the approach of the African Union to the settlement of the crisis in Darfur, regretted that the Council had been unable to adopt the resolution unanimously. Noting that there was consensus within the Council on the need to send a strong message to the parties to encourage them to return unconditionally to the Abuja peace talks and terminate the attacks against civilians, he stated that constructive proposals, in line with those of the African Group, had been put forward to rebalance the text of the resolution. Recalling his doubts concerning the usefulness of certain measures laid down by the resolution regarding the evolution of the crisis in Darfur and the negative impact they might have on the north-south peace process, he felt that the resolution did not take into consideration the early signs of a trend towards both parties respecting the ceasefire and regretted that the sponsors of the draft resolution had not made any effort to promote a consensus.¹¹¹

The representative of the Russian Federation held the view that the potential of political and diplomatic measures to defuse the conflict in Darfur had not been exhausted and stated that implementing such measures was particularly relevant at the beginning of the deployment of the United Nations peacekeeping operation in the south of the Sudan. Adding that it was important to give time to the Government of National Unity to show itself in a positive light, including with regard to Darfur, he stated that the imposition of sanctions against the Government was unlikely to create a constructive atmosphere for those efforts. He reiterated that sanctions were also hardly likely to help in drawing up an effective mechanism to assist the parties to quickly resume and move forward in the Abuja peace talks and raised doubts as to the practical ability to implement the sanctions regime imposed by the Security Council. He therefore emphasized that, if the situation allowed, the Council should as quickly as possible review the decision to impose an arms embargo, particularly in the light of the formation of the coalition Government of the Sudan, and take into account that both the African Union and LAS were unequivocally opposed to the strengthening of sanctions in the Darfur context. In these circumstances,

he concluded, his delegation was regrettably not in a position to support the resolution.¹¹²

Expressing his delegation's serious reservations about the resolution, the representative of China emphasized that his country had always taken a cautious approach to the issue of sanctions, abstaining on both resolutions 1556 (2004) and 1564 (2004). He therefore noted that it had been his delegation's consistent view that in dealing with the issue of Darfur, the Council should exercise the greatest caution with respect to measures that could make negotiations more difficult and have a negative impact on the peace process.¹¹³ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania stated that the situation in Darfur — with the peace process stalled and no sign of improvement in the humanitarian situation — had compelled him to vote for the resolution. Recalling that, following the signature of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the Government of the Sudan had committed to pursue a peaceful solution to the Darfur crisis, he observed that the new transitional Government should not be immediately subjected to a sanctions regime and should be given a chance to start in a positive atmosphere and an unfettered environment, and therefore appealed to the Council to consider reviewing the measures as soon as the new Government was in place.¹¹⁴

The representative of the Sudan argued that measures such as sanctions complicated the situation, since the Abuja negotiations had remained stalemated precisely because the other side had been waiting for the Council to impose sanctions against the Government.¹¹⁵ The representative of the United States pointed out that 12 members of the Council, including two African States, had voted for the resolution, which, he hoped, would address the situation in Darfur, contribute to ending the violence and lead to a successful resolution of the Abuja peace process.¹¹⁶

Decision of 31 March 2005 (5158th meeting):
resolution 1593 (2005)

At its 5154th meeting, on 30 March 2005, the Council continued its consideration of the letter dated 31 January 2005 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council.¹¹⁷ The President (Brazil) informed Council members that, following a request from the delegation of France, he had agreed to delay the consideration of the item for 24 hours.

At its 5158th meeting, on 31 March 2005, the Council resumed its consideration of the item. All members of the Council, as well as the representative of the Sudan, made statements. The President drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United Kingdom,¹¹⁸ which was put to a vote. It received 11 votes to none, with 4 abstentions (Algeria, Brazil, China, United States), and was adopted as resolution 1593 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to refer the situation in Darfur since 1 July 2002 to the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court;

Decided that the Government of the Sudan and all parties to the conflict in Darfur should cooperate with the Court and the Prosecutor; invited the Court and the African Union to discuss practical arrangements that would facilitate the work of the Prosecutor;

Also encouraged the Court to support international cooperation with domestic efforts to promote the rule of law, protect human rights and combat impunity in Darfur;

Decided that nationals, current or former officials or personnel from a contributing State outside Sudan which was not a party to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court should be subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of that contributing State for all alleged acts or omissions arising out of or related to operations in the Sudan established or authorized by the Council or the African Union, unless such exclusive jurisdiction had been expressly waived by that contributing State;

Recognized that none of the expenses incurred in connection with the referral should be borne by the United Nations and that such costs should be borne by the parties to the Rome Statute and those States that wished to contribute voluntarily.

After the vote, the representative of the United States stated that, by adopting the resolution and referring the situation in Darfur to the International Criminal Court for investigation and prosecution, the international community had established an accountability mechanism for the perpetrators of crimes and atrocities in Darfur. While expressing her delegation's preference for a hybrid tribunal in Africa, she held that it was important that the international community could speak with one voice in order to help promote effective accountability. Pointing to her delegation's objection to the principle that the Court should be able to exercise jurisdiction over the nationals, including government officials, of States not parties to the Rome Statute, she explained that her country was obliged to abstain in the voting on the resolution. She noted, however, that her delegation had not opposed the resolution because of the need for the international community to work together in order to end the climate of impunity in the Sudan and because it provided protection from investigation or prosecution for United States nationals and members of the armed forces of non-State parties.¹¹⁹

The representative of Algeria, explaining his delegation's abstention, reaffirmed that fighting impunity was a crucial element for the entrenchment of peace and stability but that the African Union was best placed to take charge of such a delicate undertaking. Regretting that the Council had not taken into consideration the proposal of the African Union based on justice and reconciliation, he maintained that the Council could not claim to be supportive of the African Union and then simply ignore its proposals.¹²⁰

The representative of China, while stressing the need to end impunity, believed that, when trying to ensure justice, it was also necessary to make every effort to avoid any negative impact on the political negotiations in Darfur, promote national reconciliation, as well as sustain the results of the north-south peace process. He therefore stated that his delegation would have preferred trials under the Sudanese judicial system, with appropriate technical assistance and monitoring by the international community to ensure the transparency and credibility of trials. Emphasizing that his country was not in favour of referring the question of Darfur to the International Criminal Court without the consent of the Government of the Sudan, he further explained that his delegation was afraid that it would not only severely complicate efforts to secure an early settlement of the Darfur issue, but also have unforeseeable consequences for the north-south peace process. Finally, recalling that China was not a State party to the Rome Statute and had major reservations regarding certain of its provisions, he said that his delegation could not accept any exercise of the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court against the will of non-State parties or endorse any Security Council authorization of such an exercise of jurisdiction by the Court.¹²¹

The representative of Brazil said that his country was in favour of the referral of the situation in Darfur to the International Criminal Court, but had not been able to join those who had voted in favour of the resolution, although it stood ready to fully cooperate with the Court. Reiterating that the Court provided all the necessary checks and balances to prevent possible abuses and politically motivated misuse of its jurisdiction, he nevertheless stated that the referral of criminal matters to the Court should not be approved at any cost. Noting that there were limits to negotiating the approval of the referral within the Council, which referred, first, to the responsibilities of the Council vis-à-vis an international instrument; secondly, to the integrity of the Rome Statute, which counted 98 ratifications; and thirdly, to the consistency of the position that his country had sustained since the negotiations on the Rome Statute, he stated that, for those reasons, his delegation abstained in the voting on the resolution. He explained that for the sake of the referral, he noted that his Government had agreed during negotiations to provisions that posed a serious level of difficulty for them, such as the exemption from jurisdiction for nationals of countries not parties to the statute. To go further would constitute a risky interference of the Council in the constitutional basis of an independent judicial body. He noted several other references in the resolution that were substantial issues that would not contribute to strengthening the role of the International Criminal Court. Therefore, his delegation had been prevented from voting in favour of a proposal that would be the appropriate instrument to help end impunity in Darfur.¹²²

The other members of the Council, who had voted in favour of the resolution, in line with the recommendations of the International Commission of Inquiry, welcomed the decision of the Council to refer the situation in Darfur to the International Criminal Court as the most efficient and effective way to deal with impunity and ensure justice to the people of Darfur.¹²³ The representatives of the Philippines,

Argentina and Benin expressed regret that the resolution contained a provision of immunity from jurisdiction, which ran counter to the spirit of the Rome Statute,¹²⁴ while the representatives of Denmark, Greece and the United Republic of Tanzania underlined that they were unable to accept that the resolution be in any way interpreted as seeking to circumvent the jurisdiction of the Court.¹²⁵

The representative of the Sudan regretted the adoption of the resolution as it would further complicate the situation on the ground. Recalling that his country was not a party to the Rome Statute, he noted that the exceptions contained in the resolution made its implementation extremely difficult and condemned the International Criminal Court as a tool to “impose cultural superiority”. He also voiced regret that the adoption of the resolution had occurred at a time when the Sudanese judiciary had significantly progressed in addressing impunity, and expressed the conviction that it would have been perfectly able to hold criminals accountable.¹²⁶

Decision of 12 May 2005 (5177th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5176th meeting, on 12 May 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on United Nations assistance to the African Union Mission in the Sudan dated 3 May 2005,¹²⁷ and the monthly report of the Secretary-General on Darfur dated 10 May 2005.¹²⁸

In his report on the United Nations assistance to AMIS, the Secretary-General observed that, although effective in the areas of its deployment, AMIS needed to be strengthened in order to expand its presence to the more vast and difficult terrain of Darfur. However, while AMIS could continue to rely on external support by UNMIS, the Secretary-General cautioned that the assistance that UNMIS could provide was limited, as the latter should focus all of its resources and attention on deploying in support of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, and not be compromised or unduly strained in the delicate start-up phase. The Secretary-General therefore stated that UNMIS could assist AMIS in a number of areas which included, inter alia: identification and support of police personnel; development of detailed operational plans for the expansion of AMIS; and technical advice in the areas of logistics, planning and management and training. Congratulating AMIS for having accomplished a remarkable amount in a very short time and despite significant constraints, the Secretary-General invited the States members of the African Union to identify personnel to join AMIS; called on the African Union Commission to strengthen planning and management capacity in order to support an expanded mission; and urged partners to provide the African Union with the means required to carry out its mission in Darfur.

In his monthly report on Darfur dated 10 May 2005, the Secretary-General reported that both the rebel movements and the militias had violated existing agreements and previous Security Council resolutions, continuing to manoeuvre to improve their positions while the peace talks remained stalled. Noting that tension in Darfur had increased, the Secretary-General urged the Government to make clear its acceptance of all Security Council resolutions, and to ensure that a cooperative policy was reflected by its officials at all levels. He therefore concluded by stating that events had clearly demonstrated that, without progress on the political level, the suffering of the civilian population of Darfur would continue, and called on all sides at the next round of the Abuja peace talks to act responsibly.

The Council heard a briefing by the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, who stated that the two reports of the Secretary-General were complementary. With regard to the monthly report on Darfur, he recalled that the report made it clear that instability, violence and civilian suffering continued in the region throughout the previous month and that a lasting solution could be found only through serious political engagement by the parties within the Abuja process, which had witnessed no tangible progress, as well as a considerable strengthening, in the short term, of AMIS. United Nations assistance to AMIS, the Assistant Secretary-General recalled that the African Union Peace and Security Council, on 28 April, had decided to more than double the size of AMIS. The Secretary-General had also proposed a number of areas where the United Nations could provide some support to the African Union, the modalities of which had been accepted by the African Union Commission. He stated that all possible steps should be taken to ensure that AMIS received the donor support required to expand expeditiously and effectively.¹²⁹

At its 5177th meeting, on 12 May 2005, the Council continued its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on United Nations assistance to the African Union Mission in the Sudan dated 3 May 2005,¹³⁰ and the monthly report of the Secretary-General on Darfur dated 10 May 2005.¹³¹ The President (Denmark) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹³² by which the Council, inter alia:

Applauded the vital leadership role the African Union was playing in Darfur and the work of AMIS on the ground; supported the findings of the joint assessment mission and also supported the subsequent decision taken by the African Union Peace and Security Council on 28 April 2005 to expand its mission in Darfur to 7,731 personnel by the end of September 2005;

Welcomed the ongoing deployment of UNMIS and looked forward to close coordination and cooperation between UNMIS and AMIS;

Emphasized the importance of increased coordinated international assistance for the African Union effort in Darfur and the readiness of the United Nations to continue playing a key role.

Deliberations of 29 June 2005 (5216th meeting)

At its 5216th meeting, on 29 June 2005, at which no statements were made by Council members, the Council heard a briefing by the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court. The President (France) drew the attention of the Council to the letter dated 31 January 2005 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council, transmitting the report of the International Commission of Inquiry on Darfur pursuant to resolution 1564 (2004).¹³³

In his briefing, the Prosecutor reported that, following the adoption of resolution 1593 (2005), the Court had initiated an extensive process of information gathering, analysis and admissibility assessment. Adding that the language of resolution 1593 (2005) should be converted into reality as soon as possible, he emphasized that the continued reporting to and engagement of the Security Council on those matters was vital. Noting that the referral of the situation in Darfur to the Court had brought an international, independent and impartial justice component to the collective international and regional efforts to end violence in Darfur, he stated that his office would work expeditiously to identify those individuals who bore the greatest responsibility for the crimes and to assess the admissibility of the selected cases.¹³⁴

Deliberations of 22 July 2005 (5231st meeting)

At its 5231st meeting,¹³⁵ on 22 July 2005, the Council included in its agenda the monthly report of the Secretary-General on Darfur dated 18 July 2005.¹³⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the overall situation in Darfur had improved considerably and that progress had been achieved in the humanitarian, security and human rights areas. However, he added, remaining obstacles needed to be acknowledged and addressed quickly, including, inter alia, the harassment of aid workers in Southern Darfur, the security situation as a whole, impunity and disarmament. Recognizing that the deployment of AMIS had helped to restore confidence, the Secretary-General stated that, although the responsibility of protecting the population remained in the hands of the local authorities, an expansion in the cooperation with AMIS could only improve the security situation on the ground. Finally, the Secretary-General welcomed the positive attitude by the authorities who had indicated their willingness to strengthen cooperation with the international community and leaders of internally displaced persons to establish a true partnership in addressing the challenges facing the civilian population in Darfur.

The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan and Head of UNMIS. Recalling that the approach taken by the Security Council was based on the positive effects of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement on other conflict situations in the Sudan, the Special Representative confirmed that the Agreement had had a “snowball” effect, reporting that the fifth round of the Abuja talks had made progress and led to the signing of the declaration of principle that would form the basis for future talks. He therefore urged the parties, despite the challenges, to do their utmost to implement the Agreement in full. With regard to UNMIS, he reported that, although the Mission was deploying steadily, it was meeting a number of difficulties which included, inter alia, the delay of some Member States’ contributions, the lack of infrastructure in the Sudan, and the adverse climatic conditions. Recalling that only one year earlier the international community had started to address the Sudanese problem with a comprehensive strategy, consisting of humanitarian, political and military chapters, the Special Representative held that a change in strategy was not required, although underlining that an intensification of the strategy, as well as a commitment to add an economic chapter, was crucial.¹³⁷

Decision of 2 August 2005 (5245th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5245th meeting, on 2 August 2005, in which the representative of the Sudan was invited to participate, the President (Japan) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹³⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its profound regret over the death of the First Vice-President of the Sudan Mr. John Garang de Mabior in a helicopter crash on 30 July 2005; commended the perseverance and commitment which the parties in the Sudan demonstrated in achieving the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the promise of a new future; called on all Sudanese to honour his memory by restoring peace and calm throughout the Sudan;

Stressed that the death of Mr. Garang should not deter the struggle of the Sudanese people for justice and dignity; and encouraged the people of the Sudan to refrain from violence and maintain peace in the midst of mourning;

¹³⁷ S/PV.5231, pp. 2-5.

¹³⁸ S/PRST/2005/38.

Reiterated its determination to assist the Sudanese people in their efforts to promote national reconciliation, resolve the conflict in Darfur and restore peace and stability throughout the country, and to build a prosperous and united Sudan.

Decision of 23 September 2005 (5269th meeting): resolution 1627 (2005)

At its 5269th meeting, on 23 September 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the Sudan dated 12 September 2005.¹³⁹ In his report, providing an assessment of the overall situation in the country, the Secretary-General observed that the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement was on track, although the formation of the Government of National Unity had encountered some difficulties. Regretting the delays in the deployment of UNMIS, due to a combination of administrative and logistical problems, the Secretary-General recommended that the mandate of UNMIS be renewed for a further period of 12 months.

The President (Philippines) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹⁴⁰ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1627 (2005), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNMIS until 24 March 2006, with the intention to renew it for further periods;

Requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council every three months on the implementation of the mandate of UNMIS, including its work to reinforce the efforts of AMIS to foster peace in Darfur.

Decision of 13 October 2005 (5277th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5277th meeting, on 13 October 2005, the President (Romania) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁴¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its grave concern at recent reports on an upsurge of violence in Darfur and insisted that all parties strictly abide by past ceasefire agreements;

Strongly condemned the attacks by armed groups which killed peacekeepers and civilians; urged all parties to ensure humanitarian access in Darfur;

¹³⁹ S/2005/579.

¹⁴⁰ S/2005/599.

¹⁴¹ S/PRST/2005/48.

Expressed its support for AMIS and recalled that the Government of the Sudan and Darfur rebel movements had to take necessary steps to facilitate the deployment and effectiveness of AMIS;

Remained firmly committed to the cause of peace in all of the Sudan and urged all parties to conclude a peace agreement without further delay.

Deliberations of 13 December 2005
(5321st meeting)

At its 5321st meeting, on 13 December 2005, at which no statements were made by Council members, and in the presence of the Secretary-General, the Council heard a briefing by the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court.

Reporting on the activities undertaken by the Court since his last update to the Council, the Prosecutor stated that, since the launch of investigations on 1 June 2005, his Office had started the first phase of the investigation, which consisted in gathering facts relating to the universe of crimes alleged to have been committed in Darfur, as well as to the groups and individuals responsible for those crimes. Afterwards, he said, the second phase of the investigation would focus on a selected number of criminal incidents and on those persons bearing the greatest criminal responsibility for those incidents. In light of the climate of insecurity and the lack of an effective system of protection, the Prosecutor reported that investigative activities had so far only taken place outside Darfur and that, despite those limitations, significant progress had been made. Following the establishment, on 22 September 2005, of the Government of National Unity, he reported that, in the lead-up to the transition, his Office had not made formal requests of the Sudan for assistance, but contacts with Sudanese authorities had been maintained. Recalling that the investigation of the situation in Darfur was taking place within a context of ongoing violence and multiple efforts to secure peace, as well as a complex process of political transition, the Prosecutor stated that his Office would continue to be sensitive to those dynamics while at the same time being conscious that accountability for the most serious crimes alleged to have been committed in Darfur was an essential component to an effective peace and transition. He therefore concluded that, after having made the first steps towards a cooperative relationship, during the next phase, his Office would seek the further assistance and cooperation of the Government of the Sudan in relation to the process of fact-finding and evidence-gathering.¹⁴²

Decisions of 21 December 2005 (5342nd meeting): resolution 1651 (2005) and statement by the President

At the 5342nd meeting,¹⁴³ on 21 December 2005, the President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹⁴⁴ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1651 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to resolution 1591 (2005) until 29 March 2006, and requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary administrative measures;

Requested the Panel of Experts to report and make recommendations to the Council, through the Committee established by paragraph 3 (a) of resolution 1591 (2005), prior to the termination of its mandate, on the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraphs 3, 6 and 7 of resolution 1591 (2005) and paragraphs 7 and 8 of resolution 1556 (2004).

After the adoption of the resolution, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁴⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the commencement in Abuja, of the seventh round of the African Union-led inter-Sudanese peace talks on Darfur;

Called on all parties to the conflict to fulfil their commitments to conclude a just and full peace accord without further delay; demanded that all parties refrain from violence and put end to atrocities on the ground, especially those committed against civilians;

Demanded that the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army, the Justice and Equality Movement and the Government of the Sudan immediately cease violence, comply with the N'Djamena Ceasefire Agreement, end impediments to the peace process and cooperate fully with AMIS, and that the Government of the Sudan disarm and control militias;

Further demanded that those responsible for violations of human rights and international humanitarian law be brought to justice without delay;

¹⁴² S/PV.5321, pp. 2-4.

¹⁴⁴ S/2005/812.

¹⁴⁵ S/PRST/2005/67.

Reaffirmed its determination to make full use of existing measures under the relevant Security Council resolutions on the Sudan, including holding accountable those responsible for violence and violations of the arms embargo, and those who impeded the peace process;

Appealed to donors to continue both supporting the crucial work of the African Union and its Mission in the Sudan in stemming the violence in this suffering region and providing critical humanitarian assistance to millions of war-afflicted civilians in Darfur and across the border in Chad.

Deliberations of 13 January 2006
(5344th meeting)

At its 5344th meeting, on 13 January 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the Sudan dated 21 December 2005¹⁴⁶ and the monthly report of the Secretary-General on Darfur dated 23 December 2005.¹⁴⁷

In his report on the Sudan, the Secretary-General observed that, while the peace process was on track, serious concerns about the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement remained and reminded the parties that there was no alternative to the Agreement's framework, which needed to be implemented earnestly and in full. With regard to southern Sudan, the Secretary-General observed that security had also become a matter of growing concern and urged the Government of National Unity and the Government of Southern Sudan to take appropriate measures to tackle the insecurity and protect the civilian population and United Nations and staff of non-governmental organizations in areas where the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) and other armed groups operated. Turning to the situation in Darfur, the Secretary-General noted that security on the ground urgently needed improvement, while the search for a durable political peace, including a permanent ceasefire, had to be intensified during the seventh round of negotiations in Abuja.

In his monthly report on Darfur of 23 December 2005, the Secretary-General reported that, despite the adoption of targeted measures and the referral of the situation in Darfur to the International Criminal Court, there had been a marked deterioration in the situation since September, including the proliferation of actors to the conflict, an increase in the number of inter-tribal clashes, the entry of destabilizing elements from Chad, and more instances of banditry. Reaffirming that the vast majority of armed militias had not been disarmed, and no major steps had been taken by the Government to bring to justice or even identify any of the militia leaders or the perpetrators of attacks, contributing to a prevailing climate of impunity, the Secretary-General strongly urged the Government of the Sudan to take decisive steps in this regard. Recalling that ultimately only a political solution could bring an end to the violence and allow some 2 million internally displaced persons and refugees to return, the Secretary-General stated that the Abuja talks were critical and must be decisive, despite the difficulties encountered in the lead-up to the talks. Concluding that the political efforts should go hand in hand with an enhanced security presence, which should address adequately the deteriorating situation on the ground, the Secretary-General welcomed that the African Union had decided to lead a second assessment mission, with the participation of key partners, including a team from the United Nations, to try to identify a way forward.

The Council heard briefings by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan and Head of UNMIS and the Special Envoy of the African Union for the Inter-Sudanese Peace Talks on the Conflict in Darfur.¹⁴⁸

In his briefing, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan stated that, since the deadline set at the Abuja peace talks to reach an agreement before the end of 2005 had been missed, the strategy for achieving peace in Darfur should be reconsidered. He held that the parties should commit themselves to reaching an agreement during the seventh round of talks and could learn from the way by which the Comprehensive Peace Agreement had been achieved. In this instance, he said, the precondition to continue negotiations for a fair distribution of power and wealth was an agreement on a sustained and lasting ceasefire. Despite the admirable efforts of AMIS, which lacked adequate resources and means to prevent attacks against civilians, the Special Representative reported that the security situation in ¹⁴⁸ The Secretary-General was present at the meeting, but did not make a statement.

Darfur was chaotic and that, looking back at three years of killing in Darfur, it was clear that the peace strategy had failed. He therefore held that a security force on the ground should be much bigger than the present one, be able to defend itself and deter attacks on civilians, be in place long enough to provide confidence or up to four years after a peace agreement, and have a broad mandate. The force would also need to be an integral element of a unified approach towards Darfur, including humanitarian, political, police, legal, human rights and reconstruction and economic development instruments.¹⁴⁹

In his remarks, the Special Envoy of the African Union for the Inter-Sudanese Peace Talks on the Conflict in Darfur provided an assessment of the ongoing negotiations in Abuja. Noting that negotiations were characterized by an unacceptable level of inflexibility and distrust by the parties, he regretted that the movements considered the peace talks as a tactical arena, while the battlefield appeared to be the strategic arena. As a means of providing fresh momentum to the Abuja peace process, he suggested the following way forward: (a) ensuring the effectiveness of the mechanisms established to implement the Humanitarian Ceasefire Agreement; (b) making clear to the parties that, if their approach to the Abuja talks continued to delay progress towards a settlement, the Security Council would hold them responsible for prolonging the suffering of the people of Darfur and threaten or use the instrument of sanctions in a credible and evident way; (c) ensuring consistency and coordination among the neighbouring countries facilitating the peace process and the mediation, particularly Chad, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Eritrea; (d) addressing some external conditions that caused concern, namely the state of relations and tension between Chad and the Sudan; (e) strengthening the role of international partners in the peace process; (f) ensuring secure funding for the peace talks; and (g) strengthening the presence and the means of AMIS on the ground.¹⁵⁰ behalf of the Council,¹⁵² by which the Council, inter alia:

Commended the efforts of the African Union for successful deployment of AMIS and for significant contribution to the provision of a secure environment for civilians and the humanitarian situation in Darfur;

Took note of the communiqué of 12 January 2006 of the Peace and Security Council of the African Union, in which the latter expressed its support, in principle, for a transition from AMIS to a United Nations operation, and requested the Chairperson of the African Union Commission to initiate consultations with the United Nations and other stakeholders on this matter;

Requested the Secretary-General to initiate contingency planning without delay, jointly with the African Union, in close and continuing consultation with the Security Council, and in cooperation and close consultation with the parties to the Abuja peace talks, including the Government of National Unity, on a range of options for a possible transition from AMIS to a United Nations operation;

Stressed the importance of urgently reaching a successful conclusion of the Abuja talks and called on all parties to negotiate in good faith in order to reach a peace accord as soon as possible;

Reiterated in the strongest terms the need for all parties in Darfur to end the violence and atrocities;

Demanded that all parties to the Darfur conflict cooperate fully with AMIS and fulfil all the obligations to which they had committed themselves.

Decision of 24 March 2006 (5396th meeting): resolution 1663 (2006)

At its 5392nd meeting, on 21 March 2006, the Council included in its agenda the monthly report of the Secretary-General on Darfur dated 9 March 2006¹⁵³ and the report of the Secretary-General on the Sudan dated 14 March 2006.¹⁵⁴

¹⁵⁴ S/2006/160, submitted pursuant to paragraph 11 of resolution 1590 (2005).

In his monthly report on Darfur, the Secretary-General reported on the initial phase of planning for a United Nations operation in Darfur. Observing that it would be erroneous to characterize any transition to a United Nations mission in Darfur as a substitution of an “African” force by an “international” force, he nevertheless noted that the new mission should be qualitatively different from AMIS, particularly with regard to force mobility, and should have the cooperation of the Government of the Sudan. The Secretary-General held that the planning of the new mission should take into consideration the ongoing violence and consistent violations of human rights in the region, including the displacement of more than 3 million people and increasing instability near the border with Chad. In this regard, he added that the main objectives of international efforts in Darfur should be to contribute to the protection of civilians at risk with a view to creating an environment conducive to national reconciliation. Emphasizing that the size, composition and capabilities of the military component of such a mission would depend on a range of factors, the Secretary-General noted that the determining factor should be the status of ceasefire arrangements in Darfur as, without an effective ceasefire fully respected by the parties, any international security presence in Darfur would have to be mandated and equipped to take robust action to protect civilians at risk. He therefore urged the parties at the peace talks in Abuja to show greater commitment and flexibility to achieve a negotiated settlement during the seventh round of talks.

In his report on the Sudan, reporting on the progress in the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the Secretary-General noted that, although the parties had taken a number of important steps in the right direction, there was cause for concern, particularly since the institutions of the Agreement designed to offer a political forum to consider and resolve differences over implementation had not yet begun to be used effectively by the parties. Regretting that the crisis in Darfur was having a direct and negative effect on the timely implementation of the Agreement, the Secretary-General observed that it was essential for all parties in Darfur to seriously engage in finding a swift and durable political solution to the conflict in order to avoid the prolonged suffering of civilian populations and to ensure that the region did not further slip into chaos. The Secretary-General concluded by emphasizing that the partners in the Government of National Unity needed to engage each other, through the institutions of the Agreement, negotiate in good faith and make the necessary compromises in the interest of the shared principles enshrined in the Agreement and the Interim National Constitution.

The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan and Head of UNMIS. In his briefing, the Special Representative, inter alia, focused his comments on the situation in Darfur, saying that the strategy should focus on two objectives, sustainable peace between the warring parties and the protection of unarmed civilians, in particular against movements not participating in the peace talks. He therefore held that three steps were necessary: first, the swift conclusion of an agreement at the Abuja talks on power and wealth-sharing, followed by an all-inclusive Darfur-Darfur dialogue among all stakeholders; secondly, a new ceasefire agreement that could hold; and thirdly, a robust peace force with an appropriate size to be deployed throughout the region in order to deter any attacks and instil confidence among the people. He therefore held the view that steps should be taken to augment AMIS as, regardless of whether a transition to a United Nations operation would take place, a substantial strengthening of the African Union peacekeeping force in Darfur was urgently required.¹⁵⁵

At its 5396th meeting, on 24 March 2006, the Council continued its consideration of the aforementioned reports of the Secretary-General.¹⁵⁶ The President (Argentina) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution,¹⁵⁷ and to two revisions to the text.¹⁵⁸ The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1663 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNMIS until 24 September 2006;

Reiterated its request that UNMIS closely and continuously liaise and coordinate at all levels with AMIS, and urged it to intensify its efforts in this regard;

Requested that the Secretary-General expedite the necessary preparatory planning for transition of AMIS to a United Nations operation; strongly condemned the activities of militias and armed groups such as LRA.

Decision of 29 March 2006 (5402nd meeting):
resolution 1665 (2006)

At its 5402nd meeting, on 29 March 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 30 January 2006 from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1591 (2005) concerning the Sudan addressed to the President of the Council,¹⁵⁹ transmitting the final report of the Panel of Experts on the Sudan.

The President (Argentina) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution,¹⁶⁰ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1665 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend until 29 September 2006 the mandate of the Panel of Experts originally appointed pursuant to resolution 1591 (2005) and extended by resolution 1651 (2005);

Requested the Panel of Experts to provide a midterm briefing on its work to the Committee and a final report no later than 30 days prior to termination of its mandate to the Council with its findings and recommendations; urged all States, relevant United Nations bodies and the African Union to cooperate fully with the Committee and the Panel of Experts.

Decision of 11 April 2006 (5409th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5409th meeting, on 11 April 2006, the President (China) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁶¹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Strongly commended the efforts of the African Union to achieve lasting peace in Darfur, which had its full support; regretted the decisions of the Government of National Unity not to renew the contract of the Norwegian Refugee Council and to deny the entry of the United Nations Emergency Relief Coordinator to Darfur;

Reiterated its full support for the Inter-Sudanese Peace Talks on the Conflict in Darfur in Abuja;

Demanded that all parties make the necessary efforts to reach an agreement;

Reiterated its commitment to the sovereignty, unity, independence and territorial integrity of the Sudan, which would be unaffected by the transition to a United Nations operation;

Stressed that the Secretary-General should consult jointly with the African Union, in close and continuing consultation with the Security Council, and in cooperation and close consultation with the parties to the Abuja peace talks, including the Government of National Unity, on decisions concerning the transition;

Stressed that a United Nations operation would have strong African participation and character;

Recalled its request in resolution 1663 (2006) that the Secretary-General expedite the necessary preparatory planning for the transition of AMIS to a United Nations operation;

Called in this regard for a United Nations assessment mission to visit Darfur by 30 April 2006;

Called on international and regional organizations and Member States to provide every possible additional assistance to a United Nations operation.

Decision of 25 April 2006 (5422nd meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5413th meeting, on 18 April 2006, the President (China) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 10 March 2006 from the representative of the Congo, in his capacity as representative of the Chairman of the African Union,¹⁶² transmitting a communiqué issued by the Peace and Security Council of the African Union at its 46th meeting, held on 10 March 2006, by which it decided to support in principle the transition from AMIS to a United Nations operation in Darfur, as well as to the monthly report of the Secretary-General on Darfur.¹⁶³

In his monthly report, the Secretary-General observed that the recent escalation of fighting between the parties, together with deliberate attacks on towns, villages and displaced persons' settlements and acts of banditry, had forced thousands more civilians to flee their homes and exposed them to a wide range of abuses. He noted that the most serious problems related to the continuation of attacks on unarmed civilians by militias, which, according to many African Union reports, received support from the army, although the Government had denied this. He said that the Government of the Sudan needed to take immediate action to reign in forces over which it had direct or indirect control. Stressing the need for international support, he noted that the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations had convened a meeting of a group of Member States on 19 March 2006 to discuss the crisis in Darfur. He also noted that the heightened violence in Western Darfur and the tenuous relationship between Chad and the Sudan continued to impinge negatively on the peace negotiations and, while the agreement signed between Chad and the Sudan in Tripoli on 8 February was an encouraging development, much more needed to be done to reinforce the process. Finally, he underlined that the United Nations was moving forward expeditiously in preparing plans for a possible transition to a United Nations operation in Darfur, which would be done in close coordination with the African Union.

The Council heard a briefing by the Special Envoy of the African Union for the Inter-Sudanese Peace Talks on the Conflict in Darfur and Chief Mediator. In his briefing, the Special Envoy, observing that a comprehensive peace agreement for Darfur was within reach, reported that the mediation team was in the process of presenting to the parties a far-reaching set of proposals which would cover the issues of power-sharing, wealth-sharing, security arrangements and the Darfur-Darfur dialogue, as well as implementation mechanisms and modalities. The African Union Peace and Security Council had also adopted a resolution indicating that it wanted a comprehensive Darfur peace agreement before the end of April 2006. However, he noted, it was necessary to extend maximum support to AMIS to ensure that once the ceasefire agreement had been signed, the force could be ready for an expanded mandate.¹⁶⁴

At the 5422nd meeting,¹⁶⁵ on 25 April 2006, the President (China) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁶⁶ by which the Council, inter alia:

Strongly commended and supported the efforts of the African Union to achieve lasting peace in Darfur;

Reiterated its full support for the Inter-Sudanese Peace Talks on the Conflict in Darfur in Abuja;

Further reiterated its endorsement of the decision by the African Union Peace and Security Council that an accord must be reached by 30 April;

Called on and expected the parties in Abuja to consider the proposals made by the Mediator with a view to reaching a lasting peace and security in Darfur and the Sudan as a whole;

Commended the various parties and stakeholders for their support for the peace process and encouraged them to continue supporting the parties in the implementation of the peace accord.

Decision of 25 April 2006 (5423rd meeting):
resolution 1672 (2006)

At the 5423rd meeting, on 25 April 2006, the President (China) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, Denmark, France, Japan, Peru, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States,¹⁶⁷ which was put to a vote; it received 12 votes to none, with 3 abstentions (China, Qatar, Russian Federation), and was adopted as resolution 1672 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided that all States should implement the measures specified in paragraph 3 of resolution 1591 (2005) with respect to the following individuals: Major General Gaffar Mohamed Elhassan (Commander of the Western Military Region for the Sudanese Armed Forces), Sheikh Musa Hilal (Paramount Chief of the Jalul Tribe in Northern Darfur), Adam Yacub Shant (Sudanese Liberation Army Commander) and Gabriel Abdul Kareem Badri (National Movement for Reform and Development Field Commander);

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of the Russian Federation, while concurring that violations of international humanitarian law should not go unpunished, held that the adoption of the resolution might have a negative impact on the prospects for concluding the peace agreement on Darfur in Abuja by the end of April 2006 and expressed the belief that, within the Sudanese context and also in broader terms, the implementation of sanctions should be closely linked with the task of promoting the process of a political settlement of the conflict and ensuring regional stability.¹⁶⁸ The representative of Qatar said that, in the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1591 (2005), his delegation had not seen clear and consistent evidence that would condemn the individuals in the way required for imposing sanctions in accordance with the Committee's measures and guidelines. He added that his delegation was of the view that it was necessary to leave any such accusations to the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court to deal with and not to influence any investigations. In addition, given the positive report of the African Union Special Envoy for the Inter-Sudanese Peace Talks on the Conflict in Darfur, and the positive developments in the Abuja peace process, he stated that it was not suitable to adopt this kind of resolution at this particular juncture and that it would have been preferable to postpone the vote until after the end of April 2006.¹⁶⁹ The representative of China believed that the timing for the adoption of the resolution was inappropriate given that the African Union-led peace talks were at a crucial juncture and that the priority for the Security Council should be to assist the African Union in bringing the Abuja talks to a conclusion before the end of April 2006. He added that if, as a result of resolution 1672 (2006), any party to the Abuja talks had second thoughts about signing such a peace accord, the conflict in the Darfur region would inevitably be prolonged or even intensify. Recalling that the proper settlement of the Darfur problem would also have an impact on the peace process between the north and south in the Sudan, on the neighbouring countries of Chad and the Central African Republic and on the subregion as a whole, he stated that the Council should send a constructive message and avoid actions that might give rise to misinterpretation or affect the peace process as a whole. The representative of China regretted that, despite a request for clarification, the matter had been submitted to the Council before convincing evidence could be established.¹⁷⁰

By contrast, welcoming the adoption of the resolution as an important first step in the fulfilment by the Security Council of its responsibilities regarding Darfur, the representative of the United States noted that the resolution, although regrettably not adopted unanimously, demonstrated that the Council was serious in its effort to restore peace and security in the region and that it would strengthen, and not interfere with the peace process in Abuja.¹⁷¹

Decision of 9 May 2006 (5434th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5434th meeting, on 9 May 2006, statements were made by all Council members, the representatives of Austria (on behalf of the European Union), Canada, the Netherlands, Nigeria, the Sudan, the Permanent Observer of LAS and the Secretary-General.¹⁷²

In his statement, the Secretary-General, welcoming the Darfur Peace Agreement signed in Abuja on 5 May 2006 as an historic opportunity to bring peace to Darfur, outlined a number of actions to be urgently taken, which included convincing the rebel leaders who decided to remain outside the peace process to sign the peace agreement, ensuring the implementation of the peace agreement and strengthening AMIS on the ground. Recalling that the reinforcement of AMIS could represent only a stopgap measure, the Secretary-General stated that AMIS should be transformed into a larger and more mobile United Nations operation, better equipped and with a stronger mandate. He therefore added that, jointly with the African Union, the additional resources needed by AMIS to implement key points of the Abuja agreement should be quickly determined, followed by a pledging conference. He then noted that transition to a United Nations operation in Darfur should be sped up, with the deployment of a technical assessment mission to Darfur to undertake a first-hand assessment of the situation on the ground and consult with the Government of the Sudan. Recalling that a peacekeeping mission could not succeed without the support and the cooperation of the parties at the highest level, the Secretary-General reported that he had written to the President of the Sudan requesting his support for the mission and appealed to the parties to immediately respect the ceasefire in Darfur and honour the commitments undertaken.¹⁷³

In their statements, the majority of Council members, inter alia, welcomed the signature of the Darfur Peace Agreement; urged the signatory parties to respect their commitments and implement the peace agreement in its entirety; urged all parties to join the peace agreement; called for the operational and financial strengthening of AMIS; expressed deep concern over the deteriorating humanitarian situation and looked forward to the deployment to the Sudan of the technical assessment mission with a view to speeding up the transition to a United Nations peacekeeping force in Darfur. With regard to the latter issue, several Council members underlined the need to obtain the consent of the Government of the Sudan,¹⁷⁴ with the representatives of the Russian Federation and China stating that the consent and cooperation of the Government of the Sudan were prerequisites for the deployment of a United Nations operation.¹⁷⁵ The representative of Denmark said that it was crucial to encourage pressure on the parties who did not sign the peace agreement and, in this regard, supported the position that all measures, including sanctions, should be put to use when appropriate.¹⁷⁶ The representative of France, echoed by the representatives of Greece and Japan, held that the question of Darfur should be approached from a regional perspective, and expressed particular concern over the destabilized situation in Chad.¹⁷⁷

At the end of the debate, the President (Congo) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁷⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the agreement of 5 May 2006 reached at the Intra-Sudanese Peace Talks in Abuja as a basis for lasting peace in Darfur;

Urged those movements that had not signed the agreement to do so without delay, noting the benefits it would bring them and the people of Darfur, and not to act in any way that would impede implementation of the agreement;

Stressed the need for AMIS to be urgently further strengthened in line with the conclusions of the joint assessment mission of 10 to 20 December 2005 so that it was able to support implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement until a United Nations operation was deployed;

Called for the Government of National Unity to facilitate immediately the visit of a joint United Nations and African Union technical assessment mission to Darfur;

Expressed its deep concern over the deteriorating humanitarian situation in Darfur;

Called on all the Sudanese parties to respect the neutrality, impartiality and independence of humanitarian assistance.

Decision of 16 May 2006 (5439th meeting):
resolution 1679 (2006)

At the 5439th meeting, on 16 May 2006, the President (Congo) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, the Congo, Denmark, France, Ghana, Greece, Peru, Slovakia, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States;¹⁷⁹ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1679 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Called upon the parties to the Darfur Peace Agreement to respect their commitments and implement the Agreement without delay, and urged those parties that had not signed the agreement to do so without delay and not to act in any way that would impede implementation of the agreement;

Called upon the African Union to agree with the United Nations to strengthen the capacity of AMIS to enforce the security arrangements of the Darfur Peace Agreement, with a view to a follow-on United Nations operation in Darfur;

Requested the Secretary-General to submit recommendations to the Council on all relevant aspects of the mandate of the United Nations operation in Darfur, including force structure, additional force requirements, potential troop-contributing countries and a detailed financial evaluation of future costs.

After the adoption of the draft resolution, the representatives of the Russian Federation and China stated that the reference in the resolution to Chapter VII of the Charter should not be construed as constituting a precedent for the Council's future discussion and adoption of new resolutions on the Sudan and stated that, if the United Nations was to deploy a peacekeeping operation in Darfur, the agreement and cooperation of the Government of the Sudan had to be obtained. The representative of China added that the contents of resolution 1679 (2006) were also inconsistent with the heading of Chapter VII “Actions with respect to threats to the peace, breaches of the peace, and acts of aggression”.¹⁸⁰ Similarly, the representative of Qatar said that the reference to Chapter VII of the Charter in resolution 1679 (2006) did not imply that the Security Council was prepared to carry out a transfer of responsibility from AMIS to a United Nations force prior to the approval of the Government of the Sudan.¹⁸¹

At the 5459th meeting, on 14 June 2006, statements were made by the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court and the representative of the Sudan.

The Prosecutor updated the Council on the activities undertaken by the Court since his last report to the Council. Recalling that by resolution 1674 (2006) the Council had concluded that the prevention of armed conflict required a comprehensive approach and that ending impunity, through appropriate national and international mechanisms, was essential to ensuring the non-recurrence of abuses, the Prosecutor stated that his Office was committed to contributing to such a comprehensive approach by investigating and prosecuting crimes within the Court’s jurisdiction. Given the scale of the alleged crimes in Darfur and the complexities associated with the identification of those individuals bearing the greatest responsibility for the crimes, he said that his Office currently anticipated the investigation and prosecution of a sequence of cases, rather than a single case dealing with the situation in Darfur as a whole. Reporting that his Office was collecting all available information from outside Darfur and had managed to make progress in its work despite serious obstacles, the Prosecutor emphasized that a new phase was starting, where unconditional cooperation by the Government of the Sudan and other parties to the conflict would be essential to complete the investigation and identify those most responsible for crimes committed in Darfur in an expeditious manner. He therefore concluded by stating that in the coming phase the Office would seek to complete the investigation of the first case and would continue to assess, on an ongoing basis, the admissibility of selected cases.¹⁸²

The representative of the Sudan recalled that his Government had responded positively to resolution 1593 (2005) by beginning a process of consultation with the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court and that national police and prosecutors were prosecuting the perpetrators of violations in Darfur. Stressing that a political settlement was the best possible solution to achieving peace and justice in Darfur, he said that the Government of the Sudan would continue its efforts to establish the rule of law and justice through the courts and other mechanisms set up in Darfur and called upon the Security Council to support its efforts towards internal dialogue in Darfur.¹⁸³

At its 5519th meeting,¹⁸⁴ on 31 August 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on Darfur dated 28 July 2006.¹⁸⁵ In his report, the Secretary-General, observing that there were signs that implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement might be experiencing major delays and long-term structural difficulties, regretted that two of the parties involved in the Abuja talks would not sign the Agreement and that the Agreement had not yet received support from a significant portion of the population in Darfur. The Secretary-General therefore urged the parties, in particular the Government of the Sudan, to implement the Agreement as soon as possible and, at the same time, called upon the international community to expand its assistance considerably. He recommended that the Council immediately authorize new levels of United Nations support to AMIS in a number of priority areas, including command and control; communications; enhanced mobility; engineering; training; location and sourcing of water; resource and administrative management; and public information. At the same time, the Secretary-General noted that the United Nations could not take over full peacekeeping responsibilities in the region until it had the consent and cooperation of the Government of the Sudan and had been able to gather together sufficient troop-contributing countries to mount the large multidimensional peacekeeping operation required. After outlining a mandate and a mission structure for the United Nations operation in Darfur, the Secretary-General recalled that transition to a United Nations operation should happen as soon as possible and stated that securing the consent of the Government of the Sudan would require continuing and intense discussion with the Government by Council members, key Member States and regional organizations, as well as the United Nations.

¹⁸⁴ At its 5460th meeting, held in private on 14 June 2006, the Council heard a briefing by the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court and had a constructive exchange of views. At its 5517th meeting, held in private on 28 August 2006, following briefings by the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations and the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator, the Council had an exchange of views with the Chargé d’affaires a.i. of the Permanent Observer Mission of the African Union to the United Nations, the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States (LAS) to the United Nations, and the Permanent Observer of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) to the United Nations.

The representative of the Sudan was invited to participate in the discussion. Statements were made by the majority of Council members.¹⁸⁶ The President (Ghana) drew the attention to the Council to the addendum to the report of the Secretary-General dated 28 July 2006, containing the preliminary cost estimates for United Nations support to AMIS.¹⁸⁷ The President then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, Denmark, France, Ghana, Greece, Slovakia, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States,¹⁸⁸ which was put to a vote. It received 12 votes to none, with 3 abstentions (China, Qatar, Russian Federation), and was adopted as resolution 1706 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided, without prejudice to its existing mandate and operations as provided for in resolution 1590 (2005) and in order to support the early and effective implementation of the

Darfur Peace Agreement, that the mandate of UNMIS should be expanded, that it should deploy to Darfur, and therefore invited the consent of the Government of National Unity for this deployment, and urged Member States to provide the capability for an expeditious deployment;

Decided that UNMIS should be strengthened by up to 17,300 military personnel and by an appropriate civilian component including up to 3,300 civilian police personnel and up to 16 formed police units;

Decided that the mandate of UNMIS in Darfur should be to support implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement and the N'Djamena Agreement on Humanitarian Ceasefire on the Conflict in Darfur;

And, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter:

Decided that UNMIS was authorized to use all necessary means, in the areas of deployment of its forces and as it deemed within its capabilities.

After the vote, the representative of the United States underlined that it was imperative to move immediately to the implementation of the resolution in order to fully stop the tragic events unfolding in Darfur, adding that each day of delay would only add to the suffering of the Sudanese people and “extend the genocide”. He therefore expected the full cooperation and support of the Government of the Sudan for the new United Nations peacekeeping force, and noted that failure on the part of the Government of the Sudan to do so would significantly undermine the Darfur Peace Agreement and prolong the humanitarian crisis in Darfur. Emphasizing that resolution 1706 (2006) set the foundation for an effective multidimensional international force, he stated that with the expansion of UNMIS it could be expected that the AMIS re-hatting would take place rapidly and smoothly and that the follow-on United Nations force would be fully operational, with a substantial African element at its core. Recalling that significant planning and logistical work had already been done, he said that the adoption of the resolution made it possible to finalize plans and details to deploy the international force.¹⁸⁹ The representative of the United Kingdom said that a transition to a United Nations operation was the only viable option for Darfur. She said that even those delegations that had abstained did not fundamentally disagree with the issues of the text, but rather with the timing. She added that the Council attached importance to continued dialogue with the Government of the Sudan in order to obtain its consent, which she hoped would be quickly forthcoming with the adoption of the resolution since the latter did not refer to the International Criminal Court nor was it adopted under Chapter VII in its entirety and stated clearly that the Council remained committed to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Sudan, which would be unaffected by a transition to a United Nations operation.¹⁹⁰ Similarly, while welcoming the timely adoption of the resolution, several Council members noted that the transition to a United-Nations-led operation was the best available option to cope with the increasingly deteriorating situation in Darfur, though emphasizing that the adoption of the resolution did not preclude further dialogue and the search of partnership with the Government of the Sudan.¹⁹¹

The representative of China noted that the transition from AMIS to a United Nations operation was a good and pragmatic approach, although such a transition could take place only once the consent of the Government of National Unity had been obtained. Recalling that the Secretary-General had suggested holding a direct high-level dialogue at the Security Council among the parties involved, he deemed that it had been unnecessary for the Council to vote on resolution 1706 (2006), since postponing the vote would have helped to create a good atmosphere among stakeholders, as well as an environment conducive to the smooth implementation of the resolution, rather than triggering further misunderstanding and confrontation. Therefore, he concluded, due to his reservations on the timing of the vote and on the text of the resolution which had not clearly included the need to receive the consent of the Government of National Unity, the representative of China stated that his delegation had been forced to abstain from the voting.¹⁹² Echoing the representative of China, the representative of the Russian Federation said that it was of fundamental importance that the resolution clearly state the overriding need for the consent of the Government of National Unity of the Sudan for the deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping mission in Darfur.¹⁹³

Explaining his abstention from voting, the representative of Qatar noted that more efforts should have been made on the political front to prepare the ground for the Sudan's voluntary consent to expanding the mandate and strength of the United Nations forces and deploying them to Darfur. Stating that his delegation would have preferred to provide financial and logistical support to AMIS in order to enable it to complete its mandate, he concluded that his delegation could not support the resolution, given its repercussions and the modalities of its implementation in the prevailing political atmosphere.¹⁹⁴

At its 5520th meeting, on 11 September 2006, the Council continued its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on Darfur dated 28 July 2006 and its addendum.¹⁹⁵ Statements were made by all Council members, the representative of the Sudan, the Permanent Observer for LAS to the United Nations, the Permanent Observer of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) to the United Nations, as well as by the Secretary-General.¹⁹⁶

The President (Greece) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 21 August 2006 from the representative of the Sudan to the President of the Security Council, transmitting a letter from the President of the Sudan, rejecting the transfer of the mandate of AMIS to a United Nations force in Darfur.¹⁹⁷

In his statement, deeply regretting the worsening of the humanitarian situation and the escalation of renewed fighting in Darfur, the Secretary-General urged the international community to take urgent action at such a critical stage. Deploring the deployment by the Government of the Sudan of additional troops in Darfur, in violation of the Darfur Peace Agreement, the Secretary-General reiterated that there could be no military solution to the crisis and that only a political agreement in which all stakeholders were fully engaged could bring real peace to the region. that the African Union had made very clear the need for transition from AMIS to a United Nations peacekeeping operation, he said that in the coming days the United Nations would work closely with the African Union to finalize a support package for AMIS, as a vital step for its transition to a United Nations mission. Observing that AMIS continued to have a vital role to play until the United Nations operation could be put in place, the Secretary-General regretted that the force still lacked the necessary resources and therefore called on the partners of AMIS to ensure that the mission could continue to work during the transition period. Recognizing that without the consent of the Government of the Sudan the transition to a United Nations mission would not be possible, the Secretary-General urged the Government to embrace the spirit of resolution 1706 (2006) and to give its consent. Finally, he appealed to Member States who were in a position to influence the Government of the Sudan to exert pressure and to the Security Council to send a clear, strong and uniform message.¹⁹⁸

While asserting his Government's commitment to dialogue and cooperation with the United Nations, as demonstrated by the presence of UNMIS in the Sudan, the representative of the Sudan complained that, in handling the crisis in Darfur, the Council had taken a path characterized by imbalance and a lack of credibility. Although opining that the dialogue with the United Nations had been unilateral and confrontational, he stated that his Government would keep the doors open to unlimited and unconditional cooperation with the international community in conformity with all principles and practices that respected the country's sovereignty and independence.¹⁹⁹

In their statements, both the Permanent Observer of LAS and the Permanent Observer of OIC underlined the importance of securing the consent of the Government of the Sudan prior to any deployment of United Nations forces in Darfur.²⁰⁰

Council members, inter alia, expressed concern about the deteriorating humanitarian, political and security situation in Darfur; endorsed the assessment by the Secretary-General on the ongoing humanitarian catastrophe in Darfur; noted with regret the refusal of the Government of the Sudan to accept and implement

Security Council resolution 1706 (2006); reiterated that there could not be any military solution to the conflict in Darfur and that the solution should be found through political means in the framework of the Darfur Peace Agreement; supported the extension of the mandate of AMIS; and agreed that an immediate reinforcement of the mission was necessary, particularly to avoid a security vacuum in the transition to a United Nations peacekeeping operation.

The representative of the United States, regretting that the Government of the Sudan had moved backwards by threatening the expulsion of AMIS, reiterated his delegation's view that a transition to a United Nations peacekeeping operation would represent the best option.²⁰¹ Noting that the Council's objective was to avert a humanitarian crisis in Darfur by working with the Government of the Sudan in respect of its territorial integrity in order to ensure that Darfur would not become a threat to the unity of the State or to the stability of the region, the representative of the United Kingdom questioned the assertion that a United Nations force in Darfur would be a breach of Sudanese sovereignty and, regretting the intransigence of the Government of the Sudan with regard to the deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation in Darfur, recalled that such charges had not been levelled against UNMIS in the south. He therefore held that efforts should be maintained to persuade the President of the Sudan to implement resolution 1706 (2006).²⁰²

The representatives of China and the Russian Federation stressed the importance for the Security Council of pursuing a dialogue with the Government of the Sudan in order to seek its consent for the transition of AMIS to a United Nations operation, advocating that the Council should respect the views of the Sudan, without imposing the deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation.²⁰³ Similarly, the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania stated that there was an urgent need for the United Nations and the African Union to re-engage the Government of the Sudan in exploring mutually reassuring approaches to implement Security Council resolution 1706 (2006).²⁰⁴ Recalling that the Government of the Sudan had put forward a comprehensive plan of action for Darfur that included several positive elements and regretting that the Security Council had not seriously considered that plan prior to adopting resolution 1706 (2006), the representative of Qatar called on the Council to study the plan and pursue consultations in good faith with the Government of the Sudan on the situation in Darfur, while avoiding the threat of sanctions.²⁰⁵ The representative of Denmark noted that if the Government of the Sudan continued to pursue its plans to militarily solve the conflict in Darfur, the instrument of sanctions should not be excluded, while the representative of Greece stressed that the Council should use all the tools at its disposal, including the sanctions mechanism provided in resolution 1591 (2005).²⁰⁶

At its 5528th meeting, on 18 September 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the Sudan dated 12 September 2006.²⁰⁷ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that, one year after the inauguration of the Government of National Unity, the parties had made progress, although on a limited scale, in carrying out their commitments under the Comprehensive Peace Agreement. At the same time, he regretted that the parties had not been able to resolve a number of contentious issues, which included the crucial areas of power and wealth-sharing as well as the preparation for national elections, and called upon the parties to fully meet all their obligations under the Agreement. Reiterating that the Comprehensive Peace Agreement remained the basis on which to build the Darfur Peace Agreement, the Secretary-General hoped that the leaders of the Sudan were fully aware of the possible consequences of their negative reaction to the proposals of the international community with regard to Darfur, concerning the strengthening of AMIS and the transition to a United Nations operation. Emphasizing that the United Nations was prepared to seek the political path, as agreed with the Government of the Sudan in Abuja, the Secretary-General stressed that the Security Council had a key role to play in this process, although its effectiveness depended on its ability to speak and act in complete unity. Finally, the Secretary-General recommended the renewal of the mandate of UNMIS for a period of 12 months.

The meeting, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Sudan and Head of UNMIS, following which statements were made by all Council members.²⁰⁸

In his briefing, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General reported that UNMIS had almost completed its deployment in southern Sudan and that the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement remained on track, despite a number of ongoing challenges and the urgent need for reconstruction and development assistance in southern Sudan. On the situation in Darfur, although the Darfur Peace Agreement had been signed only four months earlier, he noted that the Agreement was “nearly dead” and highlighted five essential conditions to revive the Agreement, namely, (1) encouraging all parties concerned to join the Darfur Peace Agreement; (2) ending violations of the Agreement through a real truce; (3) making the Ceasefire Commission fully representative and authoritative; (4) resuming talks to enhance the population’s faith in the Agreement; and (5) securing the consent of the Government of the Sudan for the transition from AMIS to a United Nations mission.²⁰⁹

The majority of Council members expressed cautious optimism regarding the limited progress in the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement; noted some positive developments as far as the security and humanitarian situation in the south was concerned and stressed that UNMIS had played a key role in that regard; concurred that greater progress in the implementation of the Agreement was needed in areas such as security sector reform, police reform and restructuring, preparation for the return of the internally displaced persons, future elections as well as the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme; urged all the parties to comply with their commitments under the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and stressed that the international community must continue to work to underpin the agreement; supported the Secretary-General's recommendation to renew the mandate of UNMIS; in connection with the situation in Darfur, agreed with the Secretary-General that peace in the Sudan was indivisible and that the crisis in Darfur could have a spillover effect on the rest of the country; acknowledged that the Comprehensive Peace Agreement could be severely affected if there was little progress on the Darfur Peace Agreement; reiterated the importance of continuing seeking ways and means to convince the Government of the Sudan to implement resolution 1706 (2006) and accept the transition from AMIS to a United Nations peacekeeping force in Darfur.

The representative of Qatar, affirming that the main obstacle to the peace efforts in Darfur lay with the rebel movements, urged the Security Council to deal clearly with such violations, without blaming the Government of the Sudan for its efforts to protect its national security and territorial integrity.²¹⁰

Responding to questions from Council members, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, inter alia, observed that the Government of the Sudan's objection to a United Nations mission in Darfur was mainly linked to its fear of being attacked by radical groups on the domestic scene. In order to facilitate the consent of the Government of the Sudan, he said that negotiations might result in a package in which the Government would accept the transition in exchange for certain commitments, for example, in the areas of debt relief, trade and security. He also suggested that the Council look at alternative options, should the Government of the Sudan insist on not accepting the proposed transition. He was confident that the Government of the Sudan would accept an African Union/United Nations mission with a Chapter VIII mandate.²¹¹

At its 5532nd meeting, on 22 September 2006, the Council continued its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on the Sudan dated 12 September 2006.²¹² The President (Greece) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United States;²¹³ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1709 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia, decided to extend the mandate of UNMIS until 8 October 2006, with the intention to renew it for further periods; and to remain actively seized of the matter.

Decision of 29 September 2006 (5543rd meeting): resolution 1713 (2006)

At the 5543rd meeting, on 29 September 2006, the President (Greece) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Denmark, France, Ghana, Greece, Slovakia, the United Kingdom and the United States.²¹⁴

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Qatar, recalling that his delegation had repeatedly advised the Panel of Experts and the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1591 (2005) to be more cautious in addressing the issue of Darfur, expressed concern at the way in which the Panel of Experts had put forward allegations and accusations against individuals without regard for a number of essential principles, including not encroaching on the jurisdiction of the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court. However, these concerns had been disregarded and the Panel had continued to treat as equals the Government of National Unity, which was the legitimate Government of the Sudan, and the rebel groups that were hindering the peace process. Stressing the need for the Panel of Experts to be neutral, transparent, and independent of all political influence, he hoped that the Panel could correct its working methods in the future.²¹⁵

The draft resolution was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1713 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend until 29 September 2007 the mandate of the Panel of Experts originally appointed pursuant to resolution 1591 (2005) and previously extended by resolutions 1651 (2005) and 1665 (2006);

Requested the Panel of Experts to provide a midterm briefing on its work to the Committee and a final report no later than 30 days prior to termination of its mandate to the Council with its findings and recommendations;

Urged all States, relevant United Nations bodies, and the African Union to cooperate fully with the Committee and the Panel of Experts.

Decision of 6 October 2006 (5545th meeting):
resolution 1714 (2006)

At its 5545th meeting, on 6 October 2006, the Council continued its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General dated 12 September 2006.²¹⁶ The President (Japan) drew the attention of the Council to the following documents: a letter dated 28 September 2006 from the Secretary-General,²¹⁷ transmitting the text of a letter from the Secretary-General and the Chairperson of the African Union Commission addressed to the President of the Sudan containing the details of a United Nations support package to AMIS for which the full cooperation of the Government of the Sudan was essential; and a letter dated 3 October 2006 from the representative of the Sudan,²¹⁸ transmitting a letter from the President of the Sudan addressed to the Secretary-General and the Chairman of the African Union Commission supporting the proposed United Nations package in support of AMIS. The President also drew the attention of Council members to a draft resolution submitted by the United States;²¹⁹ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1714 (2006), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNMIS until 30 April 2007;

Requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council every three months on the implementation of the mandate of UNMIS;

Called upon the parties to the peace agreements to respect their commitments and implement fully all aspects of the agreements without delay and called on those parties that had not signed the Darfur Peace Agreement to do so without delay;

Decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Deliberations of 14 December 2006
(5589th meeting)

At its 5589th meeting, on 14 December 2006, the Council heard a briefing by the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court.

The Prosecutor reported that his Office was in the process of completing an investigation and the collection of sufficient evidence to identify those who bore the greatest responsibility for some of the worst crimes committed in Darfur, and stated that, following a careful evaluation of the issue of admissibility, evidence provided reasonable grounds to believe that the individuals identified had committed crimes against humanity and war crimes. Despite the signing of the Darfur Peace Agreement, there were almost daily allegations of serious crimes in Darfur, some of which might fall within the jurisdiction of the Court. He therefore recalled that by referring the situation in Darfur to the Court, the Security Council had reaffirmed that peace and security required justice not only with reference to past crimes, but also to current crimes protracting the suffering of millions and threatening stability beyond the borders of Darfur.²²⁰

Decision of 19 December 2006 (5598th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5598th meeting,²²¹ on 19 December 2006, the President (Qatar) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 6 December 2006 from the representative of the Congo, in his capacity as Chairman of the African Union,²²² addressed to the President of the Security Council, transmitting a communiqué adopted by the Peace and Security Council of the African Union, which agreed to extend AMIS for a further period of six months and endorsed the three-phased United Nations support to AMIS. The President then made a statement on behalf of the Council,²²³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Endorsed the conclusions of the Addis Ababa high-level consultation on the situation in Darfur of 16 November 2006 and the communiqué of the 66th meeting of the Peace and Security Council of the African Union, held in Abuja on 30 November 2006;

Called for the conclusions and the communiqué to be implemented by all parties without delay, and to this end called on all parties to facilitate, per the Addis Ababa and Abuja agreements, the immediate deployment of the United Nations light and heavy support packages to AMIS and a hybrid operation in Darfur;

Reaffirmed its deep concern about the worsening security situation in Darfur and its repercussions in the region;

Decision of 30 April 2007 (5670th meeting):
resolution 1755 (2007)

At its 5670th meeting, on 30 April 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 17 April 2007.²²⁴ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement had reached a delicate stage, two critical reference points being the full and verified redeployment of forces in 2007 and the holding of free and fair midterm elections in 2009.

The representative of Qatar made a statement. The President (United Kingdom) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United States,²²⁵ and to a letter dated 17 April 2007 from the President of the Security Council addressed to the Secretary-General,²²⁶ by which the Council welcomed the confirmation from the representative of the Sudan of his Government's acceptance of the heavy support package for AMIS proposed by the African Union and the United Nations. Before the vote, the representative of Qatar stated that, after initial concerns related to the fact that the language of the draft resolution was not consistent with the recent positive developments in the relationship between the Government of the Sudan and the United Nations, his delegation agreed to support the draft resolution given the constructive attitude of the sponsor.²²⁷

The President then put to the vote the draft resolution; it was adopted unanimously as resolution 1755 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNMIS until 31 October 2007, with the intention to renew it for further periods;

Requested the Secretary-General to appoint urgently a new Special Representative for the Sudan and to report to the Council every three months on the implementation of the mandate of UNMIS;

Called upon those parties that had not signed the Darfur Peace Agreement to do so without delay.

Decision of 25 May 2007 (5684th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5684th meeting, on 25 May 2007, the President (United States) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 23 May 2007 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council,²²⁸ transmitting the report of the Secretary-General and the Chairperson of the African Union Commission on the hybrid operation in Darfur. The President then made a statement on behalf of the Council,²²⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the transmission of the report of the Secretary-General and the Chairperson of the African Union Commission on the hybrid operation in Darfur;

Called for the full implementation without delay of the United Nations light and heavy support packages of assistance to AMIS, as well as for the report of the Secretary-General and the Chairperson of the African Union Commission on the hybrid operation to be considered and taken forward immediately;

Further demanded that all parties meet their international obligations, support the political process, end violence against civilians and attacks on peacekeepers, and facilitate humanitarian relief.

Deliberations of 7 June 2007 (5687th meeting)

At its 5687th meeting, on 7 June 2007, the Council heard a briefing by the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court.

The Prosecutor reported that, on 27 April 2007, the judges of the Court had found that the evidence offered reasonable grounds to believe that Ahmad Harun, currently Minister of State for Humanitarian

Affairs of the Sudan, and Ali Kushayb, a militia/Janjaweed leader, had joined forces to persecute and attack civilians in Darfur and had committed war crimes and crimes against humanity. Reporting that the judges had accordingly issued arrest warrants to apprehend the two individuals, the Prosecutor called on the Security Council and regional organizations to urge the authorities of the Sudan to arrest the two individuals and surrender them to the Court, also expressing the hope that the issue of the Sudan's cooperation with the Court could be addressed during the forthcoming mission of the Security Council to the Sudan. The Prosecutor also stated that his Office continued to gather information on crimes in Darfur and to monitor the spillover of violence into Chad and the Central African Republic. Noting that his Office had recently opened an investigation in the Central African Republic, he added that any alleged crime perpetrated in Chad since the country's adherence to the Rome Statute in January 2007 could be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court.²³⁰

Decision of 31 July 2007 (5727th meeting):
resolution 1769 (2007)

At its 5727th meeting,²³¹ on 31 July 2007, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 5 June 2007 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council,²³² transmitting the revised report of the Secretary-General and the Chairperson of the African Union Commission on the hybrid operation in Darfur, as well as an addendum to the report including the preliminary cost estimate for the hybrid operation for a 12-month period. In the report, which represented the outcome of high-level consultations between the African Union and the United Nations, the Secretary-General and the Chairperson of the African Union Commission reiterated the necessity of a comprehensive approach to peace in Darfur, based on the interdependence of three tracks, namely the political process, the ceasefire and the peacekeeping operation. Urging members of the Security Council and regional stakeholders to support the ongoing mediation efforts, they stated that only a sustained political process supported by a strong peacekeeping operation in Darfur would assist with the region's integration into the Sudan. Recognizing that the hybrid operation would be an unprecedented undertaking for both the United Nations and the African Union, they emphasized that the operation's success would depend critically on whether the Government of the Sudan would see the hybrid operation as part of the long-term solution to the conflict in Darfur. It would be essential, they added, for the mandate of the operation to reflect the agreement of the parties on its role in monitoring and supporting the implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement and any subsequent agreements. Finally, they said that the implementation of the operation required as an immediate priority the reinforcement of AMIS through the deployment of the heavy support package.

Statements were made by members of the Council,²³³ the Secretary-General and the Senior Political Affairs Adviser of the Permanent Observer Mission of the African Union to the United Nations. The President (China) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Belgium, the Congo, France, Italy, Peru, Slovakia and the United Kingdom;²³⁴ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1769 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to authorize and mandate the establishment, for an initial period of 12 months, of an African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID) as set out in the resolution and pursuant to the report of the Secretary-General and the Chairperson of the African Union Commission of 5 June 2007, and further decided that the mandate of UNAMID should be as set out in paragraphs 54 and 55 of the report of the Secretary-General and the Chairperson of the African Union Commission of 5 June 2007;

Decided that UNAMID, which should incorporate AMIS personnel and the United Nations heavy and light support packages to AMIS, should consist of up to 19,555 military personnel, including 360 military observers and liaison officers, and an appropriate civilian component including up to 3,772 police personnel and 19 formed police units comprising up to 140 personnel each;

Decided that force and personnel generation and administration should be conducted as set out in paragraphs 113 to 115 of the report of the Secretary-General and the Chairperson of the African Union Commission of 5 June 2007;

²³⁰ S/PV.5687, pp. 2-5.

²³¹ At its 5688th meeting, held in private on 7 June 2007, the Council heard a briefing by the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court and had a constructive exchange of views.

²³² S/2007/307/Rev.1 and Add.1.

²³³ The representatives of the Congo and Peru did not make statements at the meeting.

²³⁴ S/2007/468.

Decided that UNAMID should monitor whether any arms or related material were present in Darfur in violation of the Agreements and the measures imposed by paragraphs 7 and 8 of resolution 1556 (2004);

Decided that the authorized strength of UNMIS should revert to that specified in resolution 1590 (2005) upon the transfer of authority from AMIS to UNAMID;

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter:

Decided that UNAMID was authorized to take the necessary action, in the areas of deployment of its forces, to protect its personnel, facilities, installations and equipment, and to ensure the security and freedom of movement of its own personnel and humanitarian workers; and to support early and effective implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement, prevent the disruption of its implementation and armed attacks, and protect civilians, without prejudice to the responsibility of the Government of the Sudan;

Requested that the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Chairperson of the African Union Commission, and the Government of the Sudan conclude within 30 days a status-of-forces agreement with respect to UNAMID.

Speaking after the vote, the Secretary-General commended the Security Council on its adoption of a “historic and unprecedented” resolution, while noting at the same time the significant challenges to establishing UNAMID. In order to meet the goal set by the resolution and assume authority in Darfur by the end of the year, he urged the Council to remain engaged and called upon Member States, especially troop-contributing countries, to provide support and commit troops to the mission. The Secretary-General also called on the Government of the Sudan to provide unequivocal and continuous support to UNAMID and maintained that only a political process would produce a sustainable peaceful solution.²³⁵

The majority of Council members welcomed the unanimous adoption of the resolution as an important step towards resolving the conflict, as well as the humanitarian tragedy in Darfur; referred to the unprecedented scale and complexity of UNAMID and called on the international community to support its rapid deployment; praised the cooperation between the African Union and the United Nations and commended the work carried out by AMIS; stressed that, while UNAMID was an important step forward, it should be seen as part of a comprehensive approach that would secure a political settlement. A number of representatives underlined the continuing need for the engagement with, and cooperation from, the Government of the Sudan.

The representative of the United Kingdom warned that, should the Government of the Sudan fail to live up to its obligations, consequences would follow.²³⁶ The representative of the United States urged the Government of the Sudan to implement resolution 1769 (2007) and to comply with the Darfur Peace Agreement, and cautioned that if the Government of the Sudan failed to comply, his country would move to adopt unilateral and multilateral measures.²³⁷

Decision of 28 September 2007 (5750th meeting): resolution 1779 (2007)

At the 5750th meeting, on 28 September 2007, the President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by the United Kingdom and the United States;²³⁸ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1779 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend until 15 October 2008 the mandate of the Panel of Experts originally appointed pursuant to resolution 1591 (2005) and previously extended by resolutions 1651 (2005), 1665 (2006) and 1713 (2006);

Requested the Panel of Experts to provide a midterm briefing on its work to the Committee and a final report no later than 30 days prior to termination of its mandate to the Council with its findings and recommendations; urged all States, relevant United Nations bodies, the African Union to cooperate fully with the Committee and the Panel of Experts.

Decision of 2 October 2007 (5752nd meeting): statement by the President

At the 5752nd meeting, on 2 October 2007, the President (Ghana) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²³⁹ by the Council, inter alia:

Condemned the murderous attack on African Union peacekeepers in Haskanita, Southern Darfur, reportedly committed by a rebel group, and demanded that no effort be spared so that the perpetrators were identified and brought to justice;

Conveyed its sympathy to the Governments, families and colleagues of those killed and injured; reiterated its support for AMIS;

Recalled the demand in resolution 1769 (2007) on all parties for an immediate cessation of hostilities and attacks on AMIS, civilians and humanitarian agencies;

Insisted that all parties in the Sudan comply with this demand and cooperate fully with the deployment of the United Nations light and heavy support packages to AMIS, and with UNAMID;

Deplored the fact that this attack took place on the eve of the peace talks starting on 27 October 2007 in Tripoli.

Decision of 24 October 2007 (5768th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5768th meeting, on 24 October 2007, the President (Ghana) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁴⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the convening of peace talks on 27 October 2007 in Sirte, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, under the leadership of the United Nations Special Envoy for Darfur and the African Union Special Envoy for Darfur;

Called on all parties to attend and to engage fully and constructively in the talks, and, as a first step, to urgently agree and implement a cessation of hostilities to be overseen by the United Nations and the African Union;

Underlined that an inclusive political settlement and the successful deployment of UNAMID were essential for re-establishing peace and stability in Darfur.

Decision of 31 October 2007 (5774th meeting):
resolution 1784 (2007)

At its 5774th meeting, on 31 October 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 23 October 2007.²⁴¹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the Comprehensive Peace Agreement was facing a difficult time and that failure by the parties to provide the political will to make concrete progress on the outstanding issues could undermine the integrity of the agreement. The Secretary-General reported that the six-year interim period had entered its second phase, during which the focus of the peace process would become increasingly political. In line with the schedule on the implementation of the Agreement, he encouraged the parties, with the support of the United Nations, to increase their efforts to prepare for the census and elections. He further commended the progress made by the Government of Southern Sudan in the establishment of institutions, particularly at the central, state and county levels, but expressed concern at the continued delays in the nationally led disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process. Reiterating that the full implementation of the Agreement was central to the attainment of a long-lasting peace throughout the Sudan, he again urged the parties to implement all provisions of the agreement without delay.

The President drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Belgium, France, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States;²⁴² it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1784 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNMIS until 30 April 2008, with the intention to renew it for further periods;

Requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council every three months on the implementation of the mandate of UNMIS, progress on implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, and respect for the ceasefire;

Urged UNMIS to continue its efforts consistent with its mandate to assess progress in redeployment of forces, in particular in the areas of Unity, Upper Nile, Southern Kordofan, Abyei and Blue Nile, and to reinforce its ability to assist the parties in reducing tension in areas of potential conflict between them and further urged the parties immediately to speed up efforts towards the completion of redeployment of forces;

Urged UNMIS to increase its support for the National Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Coordination Council and the Northern and Southern Sudan Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commissions and further urged donors to respond to calls for assistance from the joint United Nations Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Unit.

Deliberations of 27 November 2007
(5784th meeting)

At its 5784th meeting, on 27 November 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on the deployment of UNAMID dated 5 November 2007.²⁴³ In his report, the Secretary-General expressed concern that the security incidents occurred over the past month and the continuing delays in the deployment of UNAMID could lead to a further deterioration of the situation on the ground. Appealing to Member States to contribute the missing transportation and aviation capabilities for UNAMID, he warned that, without those critical units, the mission would not be able to implement its mandate. Recalling that the speedy and effective deployment of UNAMID also depended on the cooperation of the Government of the Sudan, he welcomed the most recent steps taken by the Government to establish an inter-ministerial committee and a technical mechanism to facilitate peacekeeping in Darfur and called on the Government to agree to the troop composition of UNAMID as submitted by the United Nations and the African Union. Noting that the beginning of the peace talks in Sirte represented a unique opportunity to achieve a definitive solution to the conflict in Darfur, and that the deployment of a robust African Union-United Nations peacekeeping force would make a difference and help to improve the security conditions on the ground, the Secretary-General urged all parties to commit to an immediate cessation of hostilities and engage constructively in the United Nations and African Union-led talks.

Statements were made by all Council members, the representative of the Sudan, the United Nations Special Envoy for Darfur and the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations.

In his briefing, the Special Envoy for Darfur, while highlighting the gradual deterioration in the humanitarian, security and political situation, reported that the tone of the Darfur peace talks in Sirte, which started on 27 October 2007, had been constructive. He acknowledged, however, that the atmosphere was less positive than at the time of the adoption of resolution 1769 (2007) and the successful Arusha consultations, due to, among other issues, a lack of cohesion and preparedness inside the rebel movements and the non-participation of some factions. He believed that, while maintaining the momentum through continuous engagement with the movements and the Government of the Sudan, reasonable time should be allowed for the composition of the Government's delegation and for the movements to finalize their preparations for the talks, avoiding risking the credibility of the process by rushing to convene substantive talks. He called on the international community, and in particular the Security Council, to urge the parties to intensify such preparations, without allowing them to derail the process.²⁴⁴

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations noted that while the first elements of the joint African Union-United Nations peacekeeping efforts for Darfur were coming together, serious challenges remained in the deployment process. The security and humanitarian situation, he added, remained very worrying and, at the same time, there were fundamental challenges in the areas of force generation, particularly the critical mobility capacity and the final identification of the force composition, as well as a number of bureaucratic impediments. With regard to the support of the Government of the Sudan, he reported that, although a direct response to the list of troop contributors to UNAMID had not been received, the Government of the Sudan had made clear its reluctance to accept certain non-African units in the force, particularly those from Thailand and Nepal, as well as the Nordic engineering company. Stressing that there was no alternative to the inclusion of non-African units, the Under-Secretary-General also briefed the Council on the serious difficulties between the Government of the Sudan and the United Nations Secretariat regarding the conclusion of a status-of-forces agreement, as the proposals by the Government included features that would make it impossible for the mission to operate, in particular with regard to freedom of movement of personnel and integrity of its communications. Recalling that the ability to find a solution to the crisis in Darfur was ultimately linked to the political process, he concluded that the efforts to deploy a capable peacekeeping operation, able to fulfil its mandate and to help the parties implement the outcome of their negotiations, required the Security Council's continued engagement, as well as the active support of the Government of the Sudan.²⁴⁵

The representative of the Sudan reaffirmed his country's full commitment to resolution 1769 (2007), as recently demonstrated by its participation in the Sirte peace talks. While highlighting his country's efforts to fulfil its obligations in the deployment of UNAMID, he affirmed that a discussion on the troop-deployment agreement should take place among the African Union, the United Nations and the Government of the Sudan, and not in the Security Council. Reaffirming his country's commitment to a peaceful political settlement of the Darfur question, he hoped to see a prompt resumption of the Sirte negotiations and the inclusion of those movements that rejected the Abuja agreement in the peace process, while avoiding any mixed messages that could negatively affect the negotiations.²⁴⁶

Expressing concern over the worsening of the humanitarian situation and the lack of cohesion among rebel groups, Council members generally supported the launch of the Sirte negotiations under the auspices of the co-mediators from the United Nations and the African Union; reiterated that the Darfur Peace Agreement provided the framework for the peaceful resolution of the conflict in Darfur; called for the speedy conclusion of political negotiations, ensuring that all armed groups engaged fully in the peace talks; and stressed the need for progress on the political, humanitarian and security fronts, as well as on the issue of impunity, in order to deploy successfully.

In connection with the political talks for Darfur, several delegations, expressing concern about the fact that some movements and rebel groups had decided not to participate in the Sirte negotiations, urged the international community and the Security Council to adopt strong measures and do everything possible to ensure that everyone joined that process.²⁴⁷ The representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States urged the Secretary-General to appoint a chief mediator to lead the Darfur peace process.²⁴⁸ The representative of Belgium opined that a cessation of hostilities on the part of all parties, under an effective monitoring mechanism, was a necessary precondition to any progress.²⁴⁹

With regard to the deployment of UNAMID, despite the progress that had been achieved, most speakers expressed concern over the continued delays regarding critical key areas; appealed for its quick and full deployment; appealed to troop-contributing countries to provide the missing mobility capabilities; and urged the United Nations and the African Union to speed up the transfer of authority from AMIS to

UNAMID. A number of speakers expressed concern with respect to the behaviour of the Government of the Sudan that was causing delays in the arrangements for the deployment of the mission.²⁵⁰ The representative of the United States urged the Government of the Sudan to immediately approve the list of troop-contributing countries, conclude an acceptable status-of-forces agreement, and remove the multiple logistical obstacles impeding progress, asking the Security Council to be unrelenting in demanding that the Government commit itself to the peacekeeping mission and take all necessary measures to facilitate its immediate deployment.²⁵¹ The representative of the Russian Federation said that his country expected that the Sudanese leadership would do everything possible to remove all obstacles and cooperate with the United Nations and the African Union in the peacekeeping work in Darfur.²⁵² The representatives of France and Belgium called for the full cooperation of the Government of the Sudan with the deployment of UNAMID, stating that it was time for the Sudanese authorities to translate the commitments undertaken with resolution 1769 (2007).²⁵³ The representative of Slovakia, noting that it was unacceptable for the Government of the Sudan to choose which troop-contributing countries could be allowed to participate in the force, called on the Government to agree without delay on the proposed composition of the force and finalize the process of the deployment of UNAMID.²⁵⁴

The representative of Panama, expressing concern about the delays in obtaining necessary troops, stated that better cooperation and interaction among the parties was essential.²⁵⁵ The representative of China, recalling the unprecedented scale of UNAMID, involving cooperation and interaction between the Government of the Sudan, the United Nations and the African Union, stated that the only way forward was to continue to strengthen consultation and cooperation among all parties and to steadily reinforce mutual political trust in the process.²⁵⁶ The representative of

Qatar stressed that, despite difficulties, work was under way to implement resolution 1769 (2007), emphasizing that the Government of the Sudan had created an inter-agency ministerial committee in preparation for the deployment of UNAMID. Holding the view that the reservations of the Government of the Sudan in relation to the composition of the force should be taken into account, as the party primarily concerned, he stated that dialogue, understanding and a constructive coordination should be promoted with the Government.²⁵⁷ The representative of Indonesia called on the Secretariat to continue to consult with the Sudanese authorities with a view to swiftly agreeing on the remaining technical issues.²⁵⁸

With regard to the worsening of the humanitarian situation, the representative of the United Kingdom called on the Sudan to lift restrictions on humanitarian access, while the representative of Slovakia called on all parties to recommit to the full implementation of the joint communiqué on humanitarian activities.²⁵⁹ The representative of South Africa said that all steps should be taken to ensure the security of civilian populations and internally displaced persons and, in this regard, expressed concern at the presence of militia and rebel groups in and around some camps of internally displaced persons.²⁶⁰

A number of speakers also linked a sustainable peace in Darfur to ending the culture of impunity. In this regard, noting that the Council looked to the Government of the Sudan to carry out the arrest warrants issued by the International Criminal Court, the representative of the United Kingdom said it was an insult to the Council that one of the indictees charged with crimes against humanity had been appointed a minister in the Government.²⁶¹ The representative of Slovakia expressed his country's full support of the investigation and prosecution of crimes in Darfur by the Court.²⁶²

Deliberations of 5 December 2007 (5789th meeting)

At its 5789th meeting, on 5 December 2007, the Council heard a briefing by the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court on the activities of his Office pursuant to resolution 1593 (2005), following which statements were made by all Council members.

In his briefing, the Prosecutor reported that the Government of the Sudan had not complied with its legal obligations under the terms of resolution 1593 (2005), nor had it cooperated with the Prosecutor's Office or the Court. Despite the commitment, he added, the Sudanese authorities, notwithstanding their ability to do so, had not taken any steps to prosecute domestically, or to arrest and transfer to the Court Ahmad Harun and Ali Kushayb, for whom the Court had issued arrest warrants for crimes against humanity and war crimes committed in Darfur. Reiterating that it was not acceptable for the Government of the Sudan to refuse to cooperate with the Court, he asked the Security Council to ensure respect for resolution 1593 (2005). The Prosecutor further stated that massive crimes continued to be committed in Darfur, and he was therefore preparing to open two new investigations: first, into consistent indications of a pattern of attacks by Sudanese officials against civilians, in particular against those 2.5 million people forcibly displaced into camps; and second, into reports of an increasing number of attacks against humanitarian personnel and peacekeepers. With regard to the first new investigation, the Prosecutor stated that all information pointed to a calculated, organized campaign by Sudanese officials to attack individuals and further destroy the social fabric of entire communities. He further drew attention to the extensive role played by one of indictees, Ahmad Harun, defining him as a key actor, who had coordinated the first phase of the "criminal plan" in Darfur in 2003-2004. In the second phase of such a plan, which was still occurring, civilians were being attacked in the camps of internally displaced persons. Failure to take any step to investigate or arrest Ahmad Harun and failure to remove him from office were clear indications of the support he had received from other high officials of the Government. The Prosecutor therefore announced that his Office would proceed to investigate those bearing the greatest responsibility for ongoing attacks against civilians — those who maintained Harun in a position to commit crimes and who instructed him. With regard to the second new investigation, he said that attacks against international peacekeepers and humanitarian workers could constitute a war crime under the Rome Statute and noted with concern that the Sudan was not taking any measures to protect international forces in its territory. He therefore asked all members of the Council, all States Members of the United Nations, and all relevant organizations to volunteer specific information and thus assist in conducting these two new investigations. In concluding his briefing, the Prosecutor asked the Security Council for consistency and called on it to send a strong and unanimous message to the Government of the Sudan, requesting compliance with resolution 1593 (2005) and the execution of the arrest warrants.²⁶³

In the subsequent discussion, several members urged the Government of the Sudan to cooperate with the International Criminal Court, as required by resolution 1593 (2005), including by arresting the two indictees and surrendering them to the Court; and felt that the Council had to react to the conclusions by the Prosecutor and send a strong message supporting the Court, reminding the Sudanese authorities of the terms of resolution 1593 (2005) and the obligations set out therein.²⁶⁴ Considering justice as an integral part in the search for peace and security in Darfur, many members considered the lack of cooperation by the Government of the Sudan with the Court as a challenge to the Council's authority as expressed in resolution 1593 (2005), with the representative of Belgium recalling that it had been adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter.²⁶⁵ The representative of the United States, sharing the assessment of the Prosecutor, called on the Government of the Sudan to cooperate fully with the Court, as required by resolution 1593 (2005), and stressed his country's strong belief in the need for accountability for acts of genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity committed in Darfur.²⁶⁶

The representative of the Congo insisted that all of the perpetrators in Darfur needed to be charged, including those in the rebel movements, as impartiality would serve as the criterion for judging the action of the Court and the Security Council.²⁶⁷

By contrast, the representative of Qatar stressed that the Council must proceed cautiously, so that the invitation by the Prosecutor to urge the Government of the Sudan to cooperate with the Court was not interpreted as a request for action on the part of the Council against the Sudan as his delegation did not want to politicize the issue in any way. He further cautioned that neither the Court nor its Prosecutor should be viewed as political tools in the hands of the Security Council; rather, the Court must be seen as an independent and impartial judicial body that strove to achieve justice and not political goals or purposes. He noted that the Council needed to understand the legal rights of the Sudan according to the Statute of the Court, which included the right to challenge the admissibility of the case, and its various legal options, including domestic prosecutions, and urged Council members not to prejudge by putting emphasis on the arrest of wanted individuals as the only option.²⁶⁸ Echoed by the representative of Indonesia, he noted that the role of the Court, in accordance with the Rome Statute, should be complementary to national criminal jurisdiction.²⁶⁹ The representative of the Russian Federation noted that, since the atmosphere of mistrust between the Sudan and the Court was not helping the investigation, efforts should be undertaken to promote a constructive dialogue between the parties and added that an important aspect in this regard would be for the investigation to focus on crimes committed by rebels and by fully involving the Sudanese legal system in investigating the crimes committed. He therefore emphasized that, at such a politically sensitive juncture, it was crucial to act with extreme caution to promote UNAMID in the region, fully mindful of the consequences that any actions regarding the situation in the region could have for hundreds of thousands of people.²⁷⁰ According to the representative of China, it was only through an improvement of the situation in Darfur and the stabilization of the political situation that the problem of impunity could be resolved.

Highlighting that the most urgent aspect of resolving the crisis in Darfur was to stabilize and improve the security situation, he stated that ignoring the overall political and security situation and exclusively stressing the issue of impunity by pushing for mandatory measures was an approach unlikely to result in cooperation and support from the Government of the Sudan and to overall solve the problem of Darfur.²⁷¹

17. Security Council meetings in Nairobi (18-19 November 2004)

Initial proceedings

Decision of 26 October 2004 (5063rd meeting): resolution 1569 (2004)

At its 5063rd meeting, on 26 October 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled “Security Council meetings in Nairobi (18-19 November 2004)”. The President (United Kingdom) drew attention to a draft resolution;¹ it was then put to the vote and unanimously adopted as resolution 1569 (2004), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to hold meetings in Nairobi on 18 and 19 November 2004, and that the agenda for those meetings would be “The reports of the Secretary-General on the Sudan”;

Decided to discuss the Sudan with representatives of the African Union and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, and to discuss other peace efforts in the region;

Decided to waive the requirement that a verbatim record should be made available on the first working day following the meeting and decided that the verbatim record would be issued subsequently in New York.

18. Items relating to the African Union

A. Institutional relationship with the African Union

Initial proceedings

Decision of 19 November 2004 (5084th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5084th meeting, held in Nairobi on 19 November 2004, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled “Institutional relationship with the African Union”.¹ The Council heard a briefing by the Chairman of the African Union (Nigeria), following which statements were made by the representatives of Benin and the United Kingdom.

The Chairman of the African Union welcomed the decision of the Council to convene the meeting in Nairobi, which was a confirmation of the importance that the Council attached to African issues. He noted that cooperation between the African Union and the Council had covered a wide variety of areas, inter alia, conflict prevention, conflict resolution, peacekeeping and peacebuilding, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, and development. In particular, he noted the cooperation in Darfur, Sierra Leone, Liberia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Côte d’Ivoire. He reaffirmed the commitment of the African Union to play a strong role on the continent in the area of conflict resolution, and sustainable peace and development.²

The representative of Benin stated that the creation of the Peace and Security Council of the African Union and the decision to establish an Africa rapid reaction standby force and an early warning system had created a new structural dynamic, making the African Union a partner of the United Nations in resolving the problems faced by Africa in matters of international peace and security.³

The representative of the United Kingdom observed that the Peace and Security Council was far-reaching and even recognized the principle that an intervention on a territory may be permissible if a Government was not protecting its own citizens, or if the situation in that country affected neighbouring countries; and that intervention, if necessary, could be made against the wishes of the country concerned. Noting that the mission in Darfur undertaken by the African Union was being carried out, he underlined the importance of the draft presidential statement since it recognized the need to help the African Union develop its capabilities, including a rapid-reaction capability. He concluded by underlining the United Nations responsibility to work with the African Union to address African issues.⁴

The President (United States) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the establishment of the African Union Peace and Security Council and expressed its support for early ratification of the Peace and Security Protocol by all African States and the establishment of an African standby force and an early warning system in Africa;

Recognized the importance of strengthening cooperation with the African Union in order to help build its capacity to deal with collective security challenges;

Particularly welcomed the leading role of the African Union in efforts to settle crises in the African continent and expressed its full support for the peace initiatives conducted by the African Union, and through subregional organizations;

Also welcomed the strengthening of practical cooperation between the United Nations and the African Union, as demonstrated in the case of the African Mission in the Sudan and the African Mission in Burundi;

Called on the international community to support the efforts of the African Union to strengthen its capacities for peacekeeping, conflict resolution and post-conflict reconstruction, through the provision of information, training, expertise and resources, as well as to support the activities of the United Nations and its agencies in this regard.

B. Briefing by the Chairman of the African Union

Initial proceedings

Deliberations of 31 May 2006 (5448th meeting)

At its 5448th meeting, held on 31 May 2006, the Security Council heard a briefing by the Chairman of the African Union (Congo).⁶

In his statement, the Chairman stated that in the light of the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa,⁷ the partnership that had been established between the United Nations and the African Union was based upon a vision which clearly established that there could be no peace without development and there could be no development without peace. He stressed that because international peace and security were so closely linked, the Security Council and the African Union must deal appropriately with issues of economic and social development, poverty elimination, national reconciliation, good governance, social justice and others. He pointed out that the creation within the African Union of the peer review mechanism had responded to the need to be aware of the multidimensional aspect of the conflicts in Africa. He welcomed the creation of the Peacebuilding Commission as the African Union appealed for sustained, long-term international support that could avoid a relapse or return to post-conflict situations in Angola, Burundi, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia and Sierra Leone. He welcomed the adoption of the resolution on enhancing the effectiveness of the role of the Security Council in conflict prevention, particularly in Africa,⁸ and noted that the African Union now had the appropriate tools to implement the partnership, including the African Union Peace and Security Council and the African Union Non-Aggression and Common Defence Pact. Lastly, the Chairman emphasized the common will to put an end to the intolerable situations that continued in Africa by making best use of all the means that international cooperation provided, particularly in the framework of the partnership that had been established between the Security Council and the African Union.⁹

Immediately following the briefing, at the 5449th meeting, held in private, the members of the Council and the Chairman of the African Union had a constructive exchange of views.

19. Briefings by the Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Minister of Defence of Uganda

Initial proceedings

Deliberations of 19 April 2006 (5415th and 5416th meetings)

At its 5415th meeting, held on 19 April 2006, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled “Briefings by the Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Minister of Defence of Uganda”. The Council heard briefings by the Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Minister of Defence of Uganda.

In his briefing, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Uganda noted the threat posed to regional peace and security in northern Uganda, southern Sudan and the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo by the Lord’s Resistance Army (LRA). He focused on the establishment by the Government of Uganda, the United Nations, core partner countries and representatives of non-governmental organizations of the joint country coordinating and monitoring mechanism to support the Government’s strategy and plan of action to address the humanitarian situation and the resettlement of internally displaced persons in northern Uganda. This would comprise, inter alia, a joint monitoring committee, tasked with identifying, discussing and monitoring issues related to the emergency action plan for humanitarian intervention in LRA-affected areas; providing advice to Government, key partners and other stakeholders on action areas; establishing benchmarks and mobilizing resources needed for the implementation of the emergency humanitarian action plan; and ensuring that decisions taken by the joint monitoring committee were implemented by relevant ministries and institutions. The committee would be expected to ensure the timely implementation of the emergency action plan designed to improve the humanitarian situation facing internally displaced persons as well. He informed the Council that the Government of Uganda was working with development partners on a comprehensive peace, recovery and development strategy for northern Uganda.¹

In his briefing, the Minister of Defence of Uganda addressed the question of the LRA terrorist organization as a regional threat to peace and security in northern Uganda, southern Sudan and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. While the LRA terrorist group had been severely degraded by combined efforts of the Uganda People’s Defence Force, the Sudan People’s Liberation Army and the Sudanese Armed Forces, LRA was now operating mainly in Garamba National Park in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. He expressed concern that LRA was slowly rebuilding its capacity by recruiting through abductions in southern Sudan and the Democratic Republic of the Congo and becoming a stronger potential threat to regional peace and security. He noted that LRA was also likely to link up with the Allied Democratic Forces and other negative forces in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to attack Uganda, at which point Uganda would be forced to act in self-defence. He recalled that similar attacks had been the cause of Uganda's involvement in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in 1997 and 1998. Noting that the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) had two companies based in an area only 50 km away from the LRA forces, he stressed that MONUC and the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS) had not taken resolute action against LRA. He also emphasized the importance of developing combined efforts by regional stakeholders, with the support of the international community, to disarm, capture or arrest the indicted LRA terrorist leaders and hand them over to the International Criminal Court. Finally, he called upon the Security Council to support strong measures that included adequate mandates for MONUC and UNMIS to forcefully disarm LRA, and to send a clear message to LRA supporters that any such support would not be tolerated by the Council.²

Following the briefings, at the 5416th meeting, held in private, Council members, the Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Minister of Defence had an exchange of views.

20. The situation in Chad and the Sudan

Initial proceedings

Decision of 25 April 2006 (5425th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5425th meeting, on 25 April 2006, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled "The situation in Chad and the Sudan". The President (China) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 13 April 2006 from the representative of Chad addressed to the Secretary-General,¹ in which Chad expressed its concern at the acts of aggression directed against Chad by the Sudan and the threat to State institutions. The representative urged the Council to take the necessary measures prescribed by the Charter of the United Nations to put an end to the aggression against Chad. The representative of Chad was invited to participate in the discussion. The President made a statement on behalf of the Council,² by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the Secretary-General's briefing on 18 April 2006 on relations between Chad and the Sudan and endorsed his deep concerns over the political and security situation and the instability along Chad's borders with the Sudan;

Welcomed the fact-finding mission dispatched by the African Union to Chad;

Endorsed the statement of 13 April 2006 made by the African Union Peace and Security Council, in which it strongly condemned the rebel attacks against N'Djamena and the eastern town of Adré;

Called for political dialogue and a negotiated solution to the continuing crisis within Chad;

Reaffirmed the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Chad and the Sudan;

² S/PRST/2006/19.

Called upon States in the region to cooperate in ensuring their common stability;

Noted with deep concern the deteriorating relations between Chad and the Sudan, and urged the Governments of the two countries to abide by their obligations under the Tripoli Agreement of 8 February 2006 and to urgently start implementing the confidence-building measures which had been voluntarily agreed upon; was concerned about the situation of the refugees from the Darfur region of the Sudan and from the Central African Republic, as well as the situation of the thousands of internally displaced persons in Chad.

Decision of 15 December 2006 (5595th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5441st meeting, on 19 May 2006, the representative of Chad was invited to participate in the discussion. The Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator, who reported on his visit to the Sudan and Chad. He stressed the importance of implementing the Darfur Peace Agreement and bringing those on board who had not yet signed it; immediately and substantially strengthening the African Union Mission in the Sudan; taking concrete steps to accelerate the transition to a United Nations operation; and ensuring security and funding for the humanitarian lifeline. He deplored the humanitarian crisis, particularly in southern Darfur. Reporting on a number of violent demonstrations against the Agreement in camps for internally displaced persons, he pointed out the importance of improving security in those camps. Turning to the situation in Chad, he also expressed concern about the security of the civilian population and relief workers in eastern Chad. Noting the total lack of law and order in eastern Chad, he deplored the targeting of refugees and internally displaced persons, including children, for recruitment by armed groups. Reporting that the President of Chad had indicated that his Government did not have the capacity to provide security and protection for the civilian population and humanitarian organizations in eastern Chad, he highlighted the need to consider a number of options, including providing assistance to the Government of Chad.³

At the 5595th meeting, on 15 December 2006, the representative of Chad was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Qatar) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its grave concern regarding the increase in military activities of armed groups in eastern Chad;

Strongly condemned all attempts at destabilization by force; expressed its concern regarding the threat that the increase in military activities of armed groups in eastern Chad posed for the safety of the civilian population and of humanitarian personnel and the maintenance of their operations in the eastern part of the country;

Stressed that a peaceful settlement to the conflict in Darfur, in accordance with the Darfur Peace Agreement and relevant Security Council resolutions, would contribute to restoring security and stability in the region, in particular in Chad and the Central African Republic;

Expressed its concern over the continuing tensions between Chad and the Sudan, urged the two States to abide fully by the obligations they assumed with regard to respect for and securing of their common border in the Tripoli Agreement of 8 February 2006.

Decision of 16 January 2007 (5621st meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5621st meeting, on 16 January 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on Chad and the Central African Republic.⁵ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the situation in the border areas had deteriorated considerably and constituted a serious threat to regional peace and security, adding that the conflict in Darfur had clearly spilled over into Chad and that the conflicts in Darfur, Chad and the Central African Republic appeared increasingly interlinked. He expressed serious concern about the humanitarian and human rights situation in the region. Noting the current hostilities between the respective Governments and rebel groups, he saw only limited prospects for a meaningful dialogue and reconciliation process. He, therefore, believed that the conditions for an effective United Nations peacekeeping operation were not in place. However, should the Council decide to pursue the establishment of a multidisciplinary presence in eastern Chad and the north-eastern Central African Republic, the Secretary-General would recommend a robust monitoring and protection mission. In the meantime, he suggested that the Council might consider dispatching an advance team to collect further information, explore the possibilities for a political agreement and conduct additional planning and logistic preparations.

The representative of the Central African Republic was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Russian Federation) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁶ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its concern about the continuing instability along the borders between the Sudan, Chad and the Central African Republic and about the threat which this posed to the safety of the civilian population and the conduct of humanitarian operations;

Noted the Secretary-General's intention to authorize the immediate return of the technical assessment mission to the region in order to complete its observations that were curtailed on security grounds and requested him to submit, by the middle of February 2007, updated and finalized recommendations on the size, structure and mandate of a United Nations multidimensional presence;

Requested that the Secretary-General deploy as soon as possible an advance mission to Chad and the Central African Republic, in consultation with their Governments, as envisaged in paragraph 88 of his report.

21. The situation in Chad, the Central African Republic and the subregion

Initial proceedings

Decision of 27 August 2007 (5734th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5734th meeting, on 27 August 2007, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled "The situation in Chad, the Central African Republic and the subregion" and the report of the Secretary-General dated 10 August 2007 on Chad and the Central African Republic.¹ In his report, the Secretary-General indicated that the authorities in Chad had expressed concern about the military component of the proposed multidimensional United Nations presence in eastern Chad and the north-eastern Central African Republic, as set out in his report dated 23 February 2007,² and added that the current report was based on consultations with the authorities of both countries and relevant stakeholders on the ground.

He detailed the revised concept for an international multidimensional presence in eastern Chad and the north-eastern Central African Republic, which had three significant adjustments to the previous proposal. First, the tasks and functions of the military component would be performed by a European Union military force for the first 12 months of the deployment. Thereafter, a follow-on agreement, including a possible United Nations successor, would be put in place. Second, there would be no direct involvement of the multidimensional international presence in the border area. Third, Chadian police and gendarmes, serving in refugee camps and at internally displaced person sites, would remain under national authority, while being trained, monitored and mentored by the United Nations police component. Expressing concern about the security and humanitarian situation in the region, the Secretary-General reiterated the importance of the proposed United Nations mission, which he hoped, in conjunction with the newly authorized African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID), would help stabilize the situation in the region, pending political agreements for a lasting solution. Finally, he emphasized the importance of proper coordination between the United Nations, the European Union and the authorities in Chad, and underlined the need for early preparation for the recommended follow-on military component.

The President (Congo) made a statement on behalf of the Council,³ by which the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the report of the Secretary-General of 10 August 2007, which proposed a revised concept of operations for a multidimensional presence aimed at contributing to the protection of refugees, internally displaced persons and civilian populations at risk in eastern Chad and the north-eastern Central African Republic as well as facilitating the provision of humanitarian assistance;

Requested the Secretary-General to study the follow-on arrangements for this multidimensional presence after a period of 12 months, in particular on the basis of a joint assessment of requirements to be conducted by the United Nations Organization and the European Union six months after the deployment of the multidimensional presence;

Expressed its readiness to authorize the establishment of a multidimensional presence in eastern Chad and the north-eastern Central African Republic;

Requested the Secretary-General to continue to keep it closely informed of the preparations for each element of the multidimensional presence, including further details on the structure, modalities and force levels.

Decision of 25 September 2007
(5748th meeting): resolution 1778 (2007)

At its 5748th meeting, on 25 September 2007, the Council again included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on Chad and the Central African Republic.⁴ The representatives of the Central African Republic and Chad were invited to participate in the discussion.⁵

The President (France) drew attention to a draft resolution;⁶ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1778 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Approved the establishment in Chad and the Central African Republic of a multidimensional presence intended to help to create the security conditions conducive to a voluntary, secure and sustainable return of refugees and displaced persons, inter alia, by contributing to the protection of refugees, displaced persons and civilians in danger, by facilitating the provision of humanitarian assistance in eastern Chad and the north-eastern Central African Republic and by creating favourable conditions for the reconstruction and economic and social development of those areas;

Decided that the multidimensional presence should include, for a period of one year, a United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT);

Requested the Secretary-General and the Governments of Chad and the Central African Republic to conclude status-of-forces agreements for MINURCAT as soon as possible;

And, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations:

Authorized the European Union to deploy an operation;

Requested the Secretary-General to report to it, after due consultations with the Governments of Chad and the Central African Republic;

Invited the Governments of Chad and the Central African Republic and the European Union to conclude status-of-forces agreements as soon as possible;

Requested the European Union to report to the Security Council, in the middle and at the end of the period of deployment;

Urged all Member States, particularly the States bordering Chad and the Central African Republic, to facilitate the delivery to Chad and the Central African Republic of all personnel, equipment, provisions, supplies and other goods intended for MINURCAT and the European Union operation;

Encouraged the respective Governments of the Sudan, Chad and the Central African Republic to cooperate actively with a view to implementing the Tripoli Agreement of 8 February 2006;

Exhorted the donor community to redouble its efforts to address the humanitarian, reconstruction and development needs of Chad and the Central African Republic.

22. The question concerning Haiti

Decision of 26 February 2004 (4917th meeting): statement by the President

By a letter dated 23 February 2004, the representative of Jamaica, on behalf of the States members of the Caribbean Community (CARICOM), requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council for the purpose of considering the situation concerning Haiti in the light of the steadily deteriorating situation, which affected peace and security in the region.¹

At its 4917th meeting, on 26 February 2004, held in response to the request contained in the above-mentioned letter, the Council included the letter in its agenda.² In addition, the President drew attention to a letter dated 25 February 2004 from the representative of France addressed to the President of the Council,³ transmitting a statement by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of France on the situation in Haiti advocating the establishment of a transitional government of national unity in Haiti and promising the support of France, should that Government decide to proceed with elections before the summer of that year. In addition, France proposed an initiative that broadened an earlier plan by CARICOM and included the following: the immediate establishment of a civilian peacekeeping force to guarantee the return to public order; international assistance for preparing the presidential election; the delivery of international humanitarian aid; the dispatch of human rights observers; and a long-term commitment to providing international aid for the economic and social reconstruction of the country. Those proposals would have to be legitimized and implemented by the international community and could involve regional organizations, such as the Organization of American States (OAS) and CARICOM as well as the various United Nations bodies and the European Union. In addition, the Minister for Foreign Affairs stated that the spiral of violence had to be stopped; that President Jean-Bertrand Aristide bore heavy responsibility for the situation; and that it was up to him to accept the consequences while respecting the rule of law.

Statements were made by all members of the 77 Council, as well as by the representatives of Argentina, the Bahamas,⁴ Bolivia, Canada, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Guatemala,⁵ Haiti, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union),⁶ Jamaica (on behalf of CARICOM),⁷ Japan, Mexico, Nicaragua, Peru, Venezuela and the Permanent Observer for the International Organization of la Francophonie.⁸

The representative of Jamaica, speaking on behalf of CARICOM, sought to call the urgent attention of the international community to the rapidly deteriorating situation in Haiti, which had reached crisis proportions given the continuing breakdown in law and order, the rising insurgency and conditions of sheer anarchy and chaos, and the worsening humanitarian crisis, causing displacement of the population and increasing numbers of refugees crossing the border. He reported that during the past weeks the political upheaval in Haiti had escalated, with heavily armed groups extending their control over parts of the country. The groups controlled all cities in the northern part of the country and would seek to advance on the capital. The weakened and outnumbered Haitian National Police had in part been forced to abandon its posts, and some 70 persons had so far been killed. He held that the prevailing situation within Haiti could no longer be viewed as an internal matter and posed a serious threat to regional peace and security, given the outflow of refugees, which threatened to overwhelm the resources of States in the region. He also reported that the country was now locked in a political stalemate as a result of the steadfast refusal of the opposition to engage in the process of dialogue mandated by the CARICOM action plan. He pointed out that CARICOM had maintained that adherence to the following principles was critical: full application of democracy in Haiti; non-acceptance of a coup d'état in any form; and any change in Haiti had to be in accordance with the Constitution of Haiti. He held that regional organizations, in keeping with Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, were often the first recourse in addressing threats to peace and security. He recalled that CARICOM had negotiated an action plan, which included measures to improve the security climate and build confidence, including compliance with previous OAS resolutions, negotiation of rules for demonstrations, the release of detainees, disarmament of strong-arm groups, the strengthening of the police force and the enjoyment of fundamental freedoms. The plan had also envisaged the establishment of an electoral commission, the formation of a council of eminent persons, the appointment of a neutral and independent prime minister and the formation of a new government through a process of consultations between the Prime Minister, the President and the council of eminent persons. The plan had been accepted by President Aristide but rejected by the opposition. The representative held that the situation now was completely different in that it had turned from a political impasse over the exercise of rights and the role of opposition groups to a violent situation with incursions by heavily armed rebel forces from the north. He recalled that the Government of President Aristide had requested the international community to assist in the restoration of security, order and the rule of law within the country. He held that the United Nations had a special responsibility in assisting Haiti, given its past involvement in Haiti, and emphasized that its past role had been deemed relatively successful in stemming the downward spiral and in bringing the parties to the negotiating table. He emphasized that the volatile situation in Haiti and the potential for further chaos were not only a threat to the peace and security of the region but were also of great concern to the international community. Against that background, CARICOM member States sought the direct and immediate intervention of the United Nations in Haiti within the context of the Charter. He called for the Council to authorize the urgent deployment of a multinational force to assist in the restoration of law and order, to facilitate a return to stability and to create an environment in which the continuing efforts to find a solution to the political crisis could be pursued. He underlined the willingness of some CARICOM members to contribute to such a force. He also called upon the Council to endorse urgent action by the international community to address the growing humanitarian crisis and to provide neighbouring States, affected by the growing surge of refugees, with the requisite resources for the provision of relief and humanitarian assistance to the refugees.⁹

The representative of Haiti warned that the situation in his country was urgent and serious and required the attention of the international community. He reported that since 5 February 2004, the country had been engulfed in an armed insurrection committed by armed groups made up of former members of a repressive paramilitary force designated as the Front for the Advancement and Progress of Haiti (FRAPH), which, according to his account, committed atrocities during the coup d'état of 1991, as well as of former members of the armed forces that had been dissolved in 1995, and of convicts who had escaped from prison. He held that the attacks of the armed groups jeopardized the stability of the country's institutions and noted that the humanitarian situation was alarming. He also noted that President Aristide had welcomed and consented to the plan for a solution to the crisis that was presented by the international community while the political opposition had rejected that plan. He reiterated the Government's call to the opposition to contribute to restoring peace and dialogue in order to find a negotiated political settlement, and expressed the Government's faith in the democratic future of Haiti. He stated that the Government of Haiti fully associated itself with the position of CARICOM, which requested that the Council remain seized of the matter concerning Haiti, and that it do its utmost to send urgently an international force to help restore peace, while conforming to the provisions of the Charter. He emphasized that the Government of Haiti wanted the Council to reiterate its condemnation of the acts of violence, indicate its refusal to accept any form of Government resulting from an anti-democratic and anti-constitutional process, and demand that the opposition accept a political compromise to resolve the crisis. He welcomed the appointment of a special adviser to the Secretary-General and the initiative to establish, in the country, an office of the Commission on Human Rights. He also anticipated international technical cooperation to professionalize the police, strengthen democratic institutions — in particular judicial institutions — to disarm armed groups and to provide security for elections.¹⁰

In their statements, most speakers condemned the acts of violence and underscored the deterioration of the economic, political and humanitarian situation in Haiti. Many speakers supported the efforts of CARICOM and OAS. A number of speakers urged the opposition to reconsider their negative response to the plan proposed by CARICOM and OAS. Most speakers also welcomed the appointment by the Secretary-General of a Special Adviser on Haiti. They underlined the need for urgent international assistance and urged all actors to facilitate the work of international agencies involved in humanitarian assistance.

Many speakers urged a broader engagement of the international community. The representative of Spain supported the dispatch of a civilian peacekeeping force, in accordance with the principles of the Charter, to guarantee security for humanitarian missions and for OAS and CARICOM mediation missions.¹¹ The representatives of Algeria and Brazil also held that the Council should urgently consider the deployment of an international force in Haiti in accordance with the Charter.¹² The representative of the Philippines proposed the deployment of an international civilian police presence to restore order on the ground. He further supported the possible deployment of a coalition of the willing to arrest continued violence and the breakdown of law and order.¹³ The representative of Angola expressed his readiness to support the deployment of an international force to support a political settlement.¹⁴ The representative of Benin called for robust measures to be employed.¹⁵ The representative of Germany held that the Council should be ready to assist in the stabilization efforts in all possible ways.¹⁶ The representative of the United States held that if a sustainable political agreement was reached, his Government would support efforts to deploy an international force to support its implementation. In addition, he proposed that the OAS special mission in Haiti could serve as the foundation for an expanded international presence to professionalize the Haitian National Police, promote the rule of law, disarm gangs and encourage a climate of security conducive to democratic activity.¹⁷ The representative of France envisaged a civilian peacekeeping force that would not be a United Nations force, but would be authorized by the Council and based upon a Council mandate. He held that such a force could be an important complement to a political solution, in that it would be established immediately to support a government of national unity and could help to re-establish public order and support the humanitarian and human rights actions of the international community on the ground. He indicated that France would be prepared to contribute to such a force, supplementing contingents from the countries of the region.¹⁸ The representative of Chile held that the negotiation process should be conducted by the regional and subregional organs that were currently involved, but that the Council should not discard a more robust action should it become necessary. He cautioned, however, that any formula used in the consideration of dispatching a police or civilian force should be used to support the political agreement, once it was attained.¹⁹ The representatives of the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and Romania acknowledged the call for international involvement in Haiti and expressed their readiness to consider proposals for an enhanced role of the international community.²⁰ The representative of China expressed his willingness to participate in the efforts of the international community to help to ease the current situation in Haiti and to attain lasting peace, stability and development in that country.²¹ The representative of Pakistan expressed his willingness to consider broader international engagement in support of a political solution in accordance with the Charter.²² The representative of Ireland, on behalf of the European Union, welcomed the urgent initiative of the Government of France to invite representatives of the Government of Haiti, the opposition and civil society to talks in Paris and called on all parties to refrain from any harmful action while those discussions were ongoing.²³

In addition, the representative of France held that it was important to insist on the proposals of the two regional organizations relating to the establishment of a transitional government of national unity and, supported by the representative of Romania, proposed to supplement this by accelerating the timetable for presidential and general elections.²⁴

A number of delegations emphasized that the crisis in Haiti should be resolved peacefully and through constitutional means. The representatives of Brazil and Venezuela expressed their support for the constitutional Government of President Aristide, with Venezuela rejecting all attempts to overthrow the Constitution of that country or make any changes in it concerning the fixed terms for the election of authorities.²⁵ The representative of Nicaragua held that his Government fully supported President Aristide in the quest for a solution consistent with the Haitian constitutional order and the principles of the Inter-American Democratic Charter.²⁶ The representative of Cuba held that his Government would adhere strictly to its principled position of non-interference in the internal affairs of any country, including Haiti.²⁷

Many speakers emphasized the importance of the economic, social and institutional development of Haiti, and underlined that a solution to the political and humanitarian crises without addressing the economic issue would not suffice in the long-term. The representative of Pakistan held that earlier United Nations involvements in Haiti had not addressed many of the root causes and reminded the Council that his delegation had frequently advised against the premature disengagement of the United Nations in any conflict situation. He called for a more comprehensive approach, involving not just the Security Council, but also the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, to address all the underlying issues in such complex situations. He held that if the United Nations became involved once again, it should do so with a sustained commitment to stay the course.²⁸ The representative of Brazil also held that the means adopted in earlier involvements of the Security Council had not brought about the envisaged results and that the root causes, including poverty, instability and institutional weakness, had yet to be addressed.²⁹ The representative of Cuba linked the current situation in Haiti with colonialism, exploitation, and the unjust and exclusionary international economic order.³⁰

Speakers condemned human rights abuses and called on all parties to respect human rights and humanitarian law. The representative of Peru called on the Council to send a clear signal that it was ready to take action and that it was monitoring respect for human rights in Haiti. In that regard, he put all political and social forces in the country on notice that the international community would not permit any violation of human rights to go unpunished.³¹

The representative of the Dominican Republic reiterated his Government's offer of good offices.³²

Decision of 29 February 2004 (4919th meeting):
resolution 1529 (2004)

At the 4919th meeting, on 29 February 2004, the President drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 29 February 2004,³⁶ from the representative of Haiti addressed to the President of the Council. In that letter, the President of Haiti called on Governments of friendly countries to support with all urgency the peaceful and constitutional process that had begun in Haiti and, to that end, authorized security forces to enter and operate in Haiti to conduct activities designed to bring about a climate of security and stability, which would support the political process under way, facilitate humanitarian assistance, and in general help the people of Haiti.

The Council extended an invitation to the representative of Haiti to participate in the discussion.³⁷ The President (China) then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;³⁸ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1529 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Called upon Member States to support the constitutional succession and political process then under way in Haiti and the promotion of a peaceful and lasting solution to the current crisis;

Authorized the immediate deployment of a Multinational Interim Force for a period of not more than three months;

Requested the Secretary-General to elaborate a programme of action for the United Nations to assist the constitutional political process and support humanitarian and economic assistance and promote the protection of human rights and the development of the rule of law;

Authorized the Member States participating in the Multinational Interim Force to take all necessary measures to fulfil its mandate;

Requested the leadership of the Multinational Interim Force to report periodically to the Council, through the Secretary-General, on the implementation of its mandate;

Called upon the international community, in particular the United Nations, the Organization of American States and the Caribbean Community, to work with the people of Haiti in a long-term effort to promote the rebuilding of democratic institutions and to assist in the development of a strategy to promote social and economic development and to combat poverty.

Decision of 30 April 2004 (4961st meeting):
resolution 1542 (2004)

On 16 April 2004, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on Haiti.³⁹ In his report, the Secretary-General recalled the resignation of President Aristide in February 2004 following contested elections in 2000, mediation between the political opposition and the Government by CARICOM and the OAS and the outbreak of armed conflict in February 2004. He noted the creation of a Transitional Government led by a Prime Minister and also noted the signature of the Consensus on the Political Transition Pact on 4 April 2004. Through the Pact, signatories agreed on the holding of municipal, parliamentary and presidential elections in 2005 and on discussions with the United Nations on the status of the Multilateral Interim Force and the follow-on peacekeeping operation. Fanmi Lavalas, the party of former President Aristide, had denounced the Pact. The Secretary-General stressed the need for a process of nationwide reconciliation, embracing all segments of society accompanied by a genuine effort to put an end to the prevailing climate of impunity and enforce individual accountability, and for a better involvement of the Haitian people in the development of policies. He also highlighted the suggestion from the Transitional Government that the international community should supervise rather than observe the elections.

³⁷ The Secretary-General was present at the meeting but did not make a statement.

³⁹ S/2004/300, submitted pursuant to resolution 1529 (2004).

With regard to the security situation, the Secretary-General reported that while the situation had calmed down with the deployment of the Multinational Interim Force, and Haiti seemed to have overcome the worst of the crisis, the restricted resources and geographic areas of operation of the Multinational Interim Force, as well as limited disarmament activities, had constrained its ability to address aspects of the insecurity. He reported that the situation on the ground remained complex with a variety of armed groups, local security arrangements and local gangs coexisting. In that regard, he observed that a comprehensive approach would be required for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of armed groups and for a successful restoration of the rule of law and public security.

The Secretary-General also expressed concern at the numerous human rights violations in Haiti and proposed that the international community support efforts made by the Transitional Government to re-establish the rule of law and promote a culture of individual accountability for human rights abuses, including sexual violence against women and gender issues. He also reported that Haiti was still facing an immediate emergency humanitarian situation and called upon donors and international financial institutions to support the efforts of the United Nations to address the urgent needs of the population.

In accordance with the request of the Council, he recommended the establishment of a multidimensional stabilization operation consisting of up to 6,700 troops and 1,622 civilian police as well as civilian staff for an initial period of 24 months. He recommended that the mandate of the operation should, inter alia, support the constitutional and political process under way in Haiti, ensure a secure and stable environment, assist in maintaining public safety and public order, support the police and judicial system, support the Transitional Government in extending State authority throughout Haiti, provide support for a broad-based national dialogue, facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance, assist with the restoration of basic public services and support employment-generating activities as well as monitor the human rights situation and strength capacity for the protection of human rights to ensure individual accountability for human rights abuses. The Secretary-General welcomed the participation of regional organizations, in particular OAS and CARICOM, and of the agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system within the Mission.

At its 4961st meeting, on 30 April 2004, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General.⁴⁰ At the meeting, in which the representative of Haiti was invited to participate, the President (Germany) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution.⁴¹ It was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1542 (2004), by which the Council, noting the existence of challenges to the political, social and economic stability of Haiti and determining that the situation in Haiti continued to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region, inter alia:

Decided to establish the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH), the stabilization force called for in resolution 1529 (2004), for an initial period of six months, with the intention to renew for further periods; and requested that authority be transferred from the Multinational Interim Force in Haiti to MINUSTAH on 1 June 2004;

Authorized remaining elements of the Multinational Interim Force to continue carrying out its mandate under resolution 1529 (2004) within the means available for a transition period not exceeding thirty days from 1 June 2004, as required and requested by MINUSTAH;

Requested the Secretary-General to appoint a Special Representative for Haiti, who would have overall authority on the ground for the coordination and conduct of all the activities of the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes in Haiti;

Decided that MINUSTAH would consist of a civilian and a military component, in accordance with the report of the Secretary-General on Haiti, the civilian component to include a maximum of 1,622 civilian police, including advisers and formed units, and the military component to include up to 6,700 troops of all ranks, and requested further that the military component report directly to the Special Representative through the Force Commander;

And, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations:

Decided that MINUSTAH should have the following mandate: to ensure a secure and stable environment; to support the political process; and to promote and protect human rights; and decided further that MINUSTAH should coordinate and cooperate with the Transitional Government as well as with their international partners;

Urged all the above-mentioned stakeholders, in particular the United Nations organs, bodies and agencies, to assist the Transitional Government of Haiti in the design of a long-term development strategy.

Decision of 10 September 2004 (5030th meeting): statement by the President

At its 5030th meeting, on 10 September 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on Haiti.⁴² In his report, the Secretary-General reported on the formal takeover of authority by MINUSTAH from the Multilateral Interim Force on 1 June 2004. He noted that since then the security situation had improved gradually, but regretted that illegitimate armed groups had continued to exercise official security and administrative functions. He also noted that continued problems in the law enforcement structures contributed to the precariousness of the human rights situation. He underscored the challenges of assisting the Transitional Government with the comprehensive and sustainable disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of all armed groups. He further noted that MINUSTAH would require a number of experts to support Haitian judicial and governmental authorities. On the political situation, he noted that tensions continued between Fanmi Lavalas and the Transitional Government. He pointed out problems and delays in the elections process and reported that a mission to assess the electoral needs and determine the modalities for the assistance of the international community had been sent to Haiti from 8 to 17 June 2004. He welcomed the close cooperation between MINUSTAH and the regional partners of Haiti in the area of electoral support and assistance to the Haitian National Police. He further observed that efforts to ensure a stable environment, support the political process and assist in the upcoming elections must be accompanied by sustainable economic development and income-generating activities.

At the meeting, the Council extended an invitation to the representative of Haiti to participate in the discussion. The President (Spain) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁴³ by which, the Council, inter alia:

Condemned attempts by some illegal armed groups to perform unauthorized law enforcement functions in some Haitian cities;

Underscored the need for the Transitional Government to extend its control and authority throughout the country;

Stressed the urgency of disbanding and disarming all illegal armed groups;

Called upon the Transitional Government to complete without delay the establishment of the required structures and the adoption of the required legal framework for the implementation of a national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme;

Underlined the fact that only a comprehensive and inclusive dialogue in Haiti could lay down the foundations of a peaceful and democratic political environment;

Reiterated that an end to impunity was key to national reconciliation in Haiti;

Reiterated its support for the establishment of a core group to maintain the mobilization of the international community, to increase the consultation among major stakeholders, to enhance the coordination and effectiveness of the assistance for Haiti, and to contribute to the definition of a long-term development strategy aimed at the promotion of lasting peace and stability in that country.

Decision of 29 November 2004 (5090th meeting): resolution 1576 (2004)

At its 5090th meeting, on 29 November 2004, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on MINUSTAH.⁴⁴ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the security situation in Haiti had deteriorated, and gave his support to the Transitional Government's efforts to put an end to the violence perpetrated by various armed groups. He noted that the restoration of law and order throughout the country needed to be achieved with regard for basic human rights and the rule of law. He condemned the surge of violence and incidents during demonstrations organized by supporters of former President Aristide, and reported that increased security threats had made it necessary for the MINUSTAH civilian police component to focus mainly on providing operational support to the Haitian National Police. He reported on the humanitarian emergency in Haiti after several natural disasters, and underlined the efforts of MINUSTAH in that area. He welcomed the sustained commitment of the Transitional Government to holding free, fair and credible local, legislative and presidential elections in 2005. He recommended that the Council extend the mandate of MINUSTAH for a further period of 18 months, until 31 May 2006. While a major review of the structure and concept of operations of the Mission was found not feasible at the time, the Secretary-General suggested the following modifications within the general structure of MINUSTAH: to deploy, for an interim period, an additional formed police unit of 125 officers within the present authorized strength of the Mission, to provide enhanced operational support to the Haitian National Police and to strengthen security arrangements in the capital to increase the ability of MINUSTAH to undertake short-term projects that could make an immediate tangible difference in the lives of people; to augment the capacity of MINUSTAH to implement disarmament, demobilization and reintegration projects in the community; to add one engineering company to the military component of MINUSTAH, within the authorized strength of the Mission; and to modestly strengthen the humanitarian and development coordination pillar of MINUSTAH.

The Council extended an invitation to the representative of Haiti to participate in the discussion. Statements were made by the representatives of Brazil, Chile and Spain. The President (United States) then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution.⁴⁵

Speaking before the vote, the representative of Brazil, while welcoming the draft resolution concerning the renewal of the mandate of MINUSTAH, also expressed his belief that, in the future, the mandate for MINUSTAH would need to be more specific and concrete than the one endorsed in resolution 1542 (2004). Warning that the absence of measures to achieve prompt improvement in the living conditions of the Haitian people, including those aimed at job creation, would lead to growing difficulties for the maintenance of public order in the country, he held that more precise language could have been included, for example in operative paragraph 2 of the resolution,⁴⁶ concerning the political reconciliation process; in operative paragraph 4,⁴⁷ regarding economic development measures; and in the corresponding second, third and fourth preambular paragraphs.⁴⁸ He also held that the Council should issue stronger messages concerning the international community's long-term commitment to Haiti, including through the adoption of a broader multidisciplinary mandate for MINUSTAH, and he expressed his trust that the intention to renew the mandate for further periods would be confirmed.⁴⁹

The draft resolution was subsequently put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1576 (2004), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of MINUSTAH, as contained in resolution 1542 (2004), until 1 June 2005, with the intention to renew it for further periods;

Encouraged the Transitional Government to continue to explore actively all possible ways to include in the democratic and electoral process those who currently remain outside the transition process but have rejected violence;

Welcomed the report of the Secretary-General of 18 November 2004 on the Mission, and endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations as outlined in paragraphs 52 to 57 thereof;

Requested the Secretary-General to provide a report to the Council at least every three months on the implementation by MINUSTAH of its mandate.

Speaking after the vote, the representatives of Chile and Spain expressed their regret at the fact that the mandate of MINUSTAH had been renewed for only six months, instead of the 18-month period proposed by the Secretary-General. They expressed their convictions that only a comprehensive, multi-dimensional and long-term mission would be successful in Haiti.⁵⁰

⁴⁵ S/2004/923.

⁴⁶ Paragraph 2 reads: "Encourages the Transitional Government to continue to explore actively all possible ways to include in the democratic and electoral process those who currently remain outside the transition process but have rejected violence".

⁴⁷ Paragraph 4 reads: "Urges relevant international financial institutions and donor countries to disburse promptly the funds pledged at the International Donors Conference on Haiti held in Washington, D.C., on 19 and 20 July 2004".

⁴⁸ The third preambular paragraph reads: "Underlining the fact that political reconciliation and economic reconstruction efforts remain key to the stability and security of Haiti, and, in that regard, stressing that all Member States, especially those in the region, should continue to support the Transitional Government in those efforts"; and the fourth preambular paragraph reads: "Urging the Transitional Government to continue to make progress in the implementation of the Interim Cooperation Framework, including by developing concrete projects for economic development, in close cooperation with, and with the full assistance of, the international community, in particular the United Nations and international financial institutions".

Decision of 12 January 2005 (5110th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5110th meeting, on 12 January 2005, the Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of MINUSTAH, following which all members of the Council made statements, as well as the representatives of Barbados,⁵¹ Bolivia, Canada, Chile, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Luxembourg (on behalf of the European Union),⁵² Mexico, Morocco, Norway, Paraguay, Peru and Uruguay; and the Acting Secretary General of the Organization of American States and the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNESCO).⁵³

In his briefing, the Special Representative highlighted the decrease in the level of violence and insecurity, and reported that MINUSTAH had almost reached full strength and was thus more able to deal with situations that might jeopardize security. He underscored that the security concept guiding MINUSTAH included, on the one hand, the legitimate use of force when necessary or indispensable and, on the other hand, a focus on the most urgent problems that affected the more vulnerable people of Haiti. He noted the success of Operation Liberty in Cité Soleil, through which MINUSTAH and the Haitian National Police had succeeded in restoring order and security, and reported that several other attempts by armed groups to destabilize the country were foiled by a prompt and robust response by MINUSTAH. He also reported that MINUSTAH had started to plan and organize a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme but emphasized that the security and political conditions were not yet favourable to the programme's full implementation. He noted that the Mission was closely following the policy of the Transitional Government to grant compensation and severance pay to former members of the armed forces, but held that after the prompt payment of the first part of the promised amount, any further monetary payment must be conditioned on the surrender of military weapons to the Transitional Government. In addition, he stressed the fact that infrastructure work done by MINUSTAH troops around the capital had helped to establish good relations with the population. He reported that the basic technical elements and funding for proceeding with the electoral timetable for 2005 were in place, while progress needed to be made with regard to including those who currently remained outside the transition process. He welcomed the national dialogue promised by the provisional President of Haiti and emphasized that all sectors of society and all political forces of Haiti without exclusion should take part in that process and shoulder their respective historic responsibilities. He noted with concern the human rights violations and crimes committed with an apparent link to the Haitian National Police.⁵⁴

The representative of Haiti recalled the recommendation of the Secretary-General in his report of 18 November 2004⁵⁵ that the international community make a long-term commitment to Haiti. He regretted the deterioration of the security situation, and held that it had been complicated by the personnel shortage of the Haitian National Police and the delayed deployment of MINUSTAH troops. Pointing to joint efforts of the National Police and MINUSTAH, however, he detected a clear improvement in recent weeks. He hoped that the Government would soon be able to provide all former military personnel with the full amount of money due to them. He held that the current human rights situation represented a wide-ranging legacy of dictatorship and welcomed the recent release of a number of detainees who had been held without charges. He stressed that the interrelated issues of dire poverty, unemployment and illiteracy contributed to the unstable situation and regretted that the lack of resources to fund development activities increasingly compromised the efforts of the international community and the Government to protect human rights and democracy.⁵⁶

In their statements, most speakers welcomed the positive developments on the ground but noted that further action was required to halt the violence and improve the situation in Haiti with regard to security, poverty and human rights. Most speakers emphasized the need for the disarmament of armed groups, the reform of the Haitian National Police and the establishment by the Transitional Government of a commission for disarmament. The representative of France supported the full use of the possibilities of the mandate of MINUSTAH to re-establish order and security.⁵⁷ The representative of Greece utterly condemned all attacks on MINUSTAH and other international personnel.⁵⁸ The representatives of Chile, the United Kingdom and Algeria underscored the challenge of the reintegration of armed forces into society.⁵⁹ The representative of Algeria called on the Transitional Government to consider the question of compensation for former member of the armed forces to facilitate their reintegration into society.⁶⁰

Many speakers underscored the importance of the political process, a genuine national reconciliation and the holding of the forthcoming local, legislative and presidential elections. Many speakers also expressed concern about the human rights situation in Haiti. Several speakers underlined the necessity of establishing an effective and respected Haitian National Police force. In that regard, the representative of the United Kingdom stressed that no human rights violators should have a place in the future Government of Haiti.⁶¹ The representative of Canada underscored that the reinsertion of any member of the armed forces into the Haitian National Police should involve strict and comprehensive screening and training procedures.⁶² The representatives of Chile, Barbados, Romania and Luxembourg underscored the need for a reform of the judiciary.⁶³ The representatives of Japan, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Philippines and Uruguay condemned arbitrary detentions for political reasons.⁶⁴

Most speakers also emphasized the importance of economic rehabilitation. Many speakers underscored the need for rapid disbursement of the donor funds for rehabilitation and development efforts.⁶⁵ Some speakers encouraged the establishment of quick impact projects that would have an immediate effect on the population.⁶⁶ The representative of Brazil referred to the situation in Haiti as a “genuine social and economic tsunami”.⁶⁷ The representative of Cuba underscored that development and progress rather than security were the key to peace and stability in Haiti.⁶⁸

Most speakers underscored the need for a long-term, multidimensional and comprehensive commitment in Haiti. The representatives of the United Republic of Tanzania, Morocco and El Salvador emphasized the importance of comprehensive peacebuilding in Haiti.⁶⁹ The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania also supported the proposed mission of the Council to Haiti.⁷⁰ In addition, the representatives of Brazil, Guatemala and Uruguay supported further cooperation between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council under Article 65 of the Charter.⁷¹ Some speakers saw Haiti as an example for future operations and recalled the conclusions of the High-Level Panel on Threats, Challenges and Change⁷² initiated by the Secretary-General.⁷³

Many speakers welcomed the efforts of regional organizations and underscored the impact of the Haitian conflict on the region.⁷⁴ The representative of

Barbados underscored the regional threat that illegal immigration, drugs and arms trafficking from Haiti represented.⁷⁵ The acting Secretary General of the Organization of American States drew attention to the mandate granted to OAS by its own General Assembly, which referred to support for the elections, for the institutional strengthening of the Haitian State and for the defence of human rights, all in cooperation with MINUSTAH and the United Nations as a whole. He also informed Council members of the signing of a memorandum of understanding between the United Nations and OAS, which gave OAS the lead in the voter registration process.⁷⁶ The representative of Bolivia noted with satisfaction that the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter had been implemented in a positive manner through the signature of the memorandum of understanding.⁷⁷

In addition, the representative of China held that although there were no diplomatic relations between China and Haiti, the Chinese people had always had friendly feelings towards the Haitian people. He welcomed achievements in the security situation and in the areas of disarmament, the restoration of the rule of law and the promotion of national reconciliation. He nevertheless emphasized that peace, stability and development in Haiti would not be possible without the vigorous support and assistance of the international community. China would continue to provide assistance in good faith to the peace and stability process in Haiti.⁷⁸

The Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund drew the attention of the Council to the dire situation of children in Haiti, and held that investment in children was the best foundation to build a strong and peaceful nation. She especially emphasized the plight of children in slum areas such as Cité Soleil, and appealed to MINUSTAH to secure those areas to allow relief and development agencies to work unhindered.⁷⁹

Underlined the fact that national reconciliation, security and economic development remained key to stability in Haiti;

Called on all parties in Haiti to respect human rights and to renounce the use of violence to advance their goals;

Encouraged the Transitional Government to create without delay the national commission on disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration;

Renewed its appeal for the prompt disbursement of the funds pledged by international financial institutions and donor countries at the International Donors Conference on Haiti held in July 2004, and reiterated the need to assist the Transitional Government in establishing a long-term development strategy for Haiti, in accordance with the priorities set forth in the Interim Cooperation Framework;

Encouraged the Transitional Government to continue to take steps towards a comprehensive and inclusive national dialogue and reconciliation process, and called upon all political actors in Haiti to renounce violence and join this dialogue without delay;

Called upon the Transitional Government, with the assistance of MINUSTAH and the Organization of American States, urgently to take the necessary measures to ensure the holding of free and fair elections in 2005 and the subsequent transfer of power to elected authorities;

Expressed its intention to organize a mission to Haiti before 1 June 2005, possibly in conjunction with a mission of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti of the Economic and Social Council;

Expressed its full support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Haiti, and commended the work done by MINUSTAH and all of its personnel.

Decision of 31 May 2005 (5192nd meeting):
resolution 1601 (2005)

At its 5192nd meeting, on 31 May 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 13 May 2005 on MINUSTAH.⁸¹ In his report, the Secretary-General reported that MINUSTAH had made progress towards creating an environment in which the political transition could unfold, but warned that this progress remained fragile. He noted the signs of improvement in the security situation following successful operations by MINUSTAH and the Haitian National Police, and welcomed the launching of the electoral process and national dialogue. However, he observed that unless real progress could be achieved in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, the security situation would remain uncertain. He also observed that the inclusiveness of the electoral process, as well as its transparency, credibility and legitimacy, remained uncertain. He remained deeply concerned about the humanitarian and human rights situations and the impunity enjoyed by those committing the violations. He further recommended that the Council adopt adjustments to the mandate of MINUSTAH, including increases in its authorized strength, and requested that the Mission be extended for a further period of 12 months, until after the electoral process and the establishment of a newly elected Government of Haiti. He reported that, according to various evaluation missions, MINUSTAH was taking practical steps to improve the implementation of its mandate.

The Council extended an invitation to the representative of Haiti to participate in the discussion. The President (Denmark) then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁸² it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1601 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia, decided to extend the mandate of MINUSTAH, as contained in resolution 1542 (2004), until 24 June 2005, with the intention to renew for further periods.

Decision of 22 June 2005 (5210th meeting):
resolution 1608 (2005)

At its 5210th meeting,⁸³ on 22 June 2005, the Council again included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 13 May 2005.⁸⁴ The representative of Haiti was invited to participate in the discussion. The President (France) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁸⁵ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1608 (2005), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

⁸² S/2005/354.

⁸⁴ S/2005/313.

⁸⁵ S/2005/402.

Decided to extend the mandate of MINUSTAH, as contained in resolution 1542 (2004), until 15 February 2006, with the intention to renew for further periods;

Welcomed the report of the Secretary-General of 13 May 2005 on MINUSTAH, and supported the recommendations of the Secretary-General as outlined in paragraphs 44 to 52 thereof, as follows:

(a) A temporary increase, during the electoral period and subsequent political transition, of 750 personnel to the currently authorized military strength of MINUSTAH in order to create a rapid reaction force in Haiti to provide increased security, in particular in and around Port-au-Prince;

(b) An increase of 50 military personnel in order to create a sector headquarters in Port-au-Prince, with the understanding that MINUSTAH would optimize at all levels the coordination between military and police components to ensure efficient and better-integrated operations, including by posting United Nations staff civilian police officers in this headquarters;

(c) A temporary increase, during the electoral period and subsequent political transition, of 275 personnel to the current strength of the civilian police component of MINUSTAH to provide increased security;

(d) An assessment of the Haitian judiciary and correctional systems, including to explore possibilities for greater international community support, and a more active role of MINUSTAH, to be submitted to the Council as soon as possible;

Urged MINUSTAH to urgently develop and implement a proactive communications and public relations strategy, in order to improve the Haitian population's understanding of the mandate of MINUSTAH and its role in Haiti.

Decision of 18 October 2005 (5285th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5284th meeting, on 18 October 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 6 October 2005 on MINUSTAH.⁸⁶ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that Haiti was at a critical juncture. He welcomed the progress in the electoral process through the registration of a significant number of voters and the participation of candidates representing a broad range of political opinions, but observed that preparations continued at a slower pace than anticipated and that political dialogue remained at a nascent level. In that regard, he called on the Transitional Government to ensure that the elections be inclusive and participatory in order to enhance their credibility. He pointed to the remaining technical issues in the electoral process, the possibility of increased violence during the campaign period and persisting impunity and disregard for human rights. He reported that MINUSTAH was working to develop local capacities, including by training and advising local human rights organizations, while continuing to monitor human rights on the ground. He reiterated the importance of sustained international support through MINUSTAH and through complementary and coordinated assistance. In that regard, he welcomed the commitment shown by the members of the Core Group on Haiti. He also urged the full disbursement of funds pledged by bilateral donors. On security, he welcomed progress in addressing urgent security threats but underscored the need to maintain pressure on illegal armed groups and expand disarmament, demobilization and reintegration activities, and proposed that security operations be accompanied by humanitarian and development assistance, especially after the natural disasters that had hit Haiti. He observed that reassurance could be provided if one or more Member States indicated their readiness to back up the capabilities of MINUSTAH through the deployment of an offshore presence during the electoral period. He further recommended that the reform of the police be carried out in parallel with the improvement of the functioning of the judicial and penal systems in Haiti.

The Council heard a statement by the Prime Minister of Haiti, in which he reaffirmed the commitment of the Transitional Government to ensure that the elections and the transfer of power to the new Government would take place smoothly on 7 February 2006. He pointed out the improvements made in the national dialogue between political parties and reported that a new Director General of the Provisional Electoral Council had been installed in order to improve its efficiency in preparing the electoral process. In the area of security, he welcomed the promises and recommendations for better cooperation and coordination between MINUSTAH and the National Police and held that security was no longer such a serious problem in Haiti as it had been. He underscored however, that disarmament remained a major issue and stressed that the solutions achieved by some countries in that area could not always be applied wholesale in another. In regard to human rights, he assured the Council that, if there was any semblance of human rights violations, it was not deliberate. In respect of the judicial system, he welcomed the commitment of some countries to help with reform. He also called on the international community to speed up the bureaucracy in order to implement infrastructure projects that had been agreed upon. He alerted the Council to the need to consider that Haiti would need the continuation of MINUSTAH even after the arrival of the newly elected Government.⁸⁷

At its 5285th meeting, the Council again included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 6 October 2005.⁸⁸ The President (Romania) made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁸⁹ by which the Council, inter alia:

Expressed its full support for the work of MINUSTAH and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Haiti, Mr. Juan Gabriel Valdés;

Conveyed its concern regarding the risk of delays in the electoral process, and underlined international expectations that the first round of national elections should take place in 2005;

Strongly supported the mission's endeavours to ensure a secure and stable environment in Haiti, which was crucial for the country's progress, and to enable the electoral process to take place; recognized the contribution of MINUSTAH to the restoration and maintenance of the rule of law in the country, and underlined the need for strong and coordinated assistance to enable the reform and restructuring of Haiti's rule of law institutions;

Reiterated the need for the Transitional Government and MINUSTAH to begin immediately effective implementation of a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme.

Decision of 6 January 2006 (5343rd meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5343rd meeting, on 6 January 2006, the Council extended an invitation to the representative of Haiti to participate in the discussion. The President (United Republic of Tanzania) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁹⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Reiterated its full support for the work of MINUSTAH and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Haiti;

Reiterated that the future holding of elections was a fundamental step towards the restoration of democracy, and took note with concern of the new postponement of the elections;

Urged the Transitional Government of Haiti and the Provisional Electoral Council to expeditiously announce new and definitive dates for the elections;

Expressed its concern over the deterioration of security conditions and urged the Haitian National Police and MINUSTAH to further intensify their cooperation to restore and maintain the rule of law;

Reaffirmed that short-, medium-, and long-term strategies, within a unified framework, were needed to ensure coordination and continuity in the international assistance to Haiti.

Decision of 9 February 2006 (5368th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5368th meeting, on 9 February 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 2 February 2006 on MINUSTAH.⁹¹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that significant progress had been made in laying the basis for an inclusive democratic transition. He underlined the fact that the electoral process would bring particular demands in the coming months and called on the Haitian authorities to complete the remaining practical preparations to support free, fair and transparent elections, especially after the first round of elections had been postponed by the Transitional Government. He stressed that the incoming leadership in Haiti would have to show strong commitment to reconciliation and an inclusive approach, and that continued international institution- and capacity-building at all levels would be required. He welcomed, however, the broad level of political engagement generated by the electoral process. In regard to security, he reported that, apart from Cité Soleil, where peacekeepers were the targets of attacks, most areas of the country had experienced a relatively high level of security during the period. He reported that MINUSTAH had continued to play a pivotal role in providing security and stability in the country, as well as developmental and humanitarian efforts, and observed that the configuration of troops, formed police units and individual police officers appeared adequate to maintain security at this point in time but that stability could be enhanced if one or more Member States indicated their readiness to back up the capabilities of MINUSTAH during the electoral period. He emphasized that in the longer term, the security of Haiti would require reform and strengthening of the Haitian National Police and the judicial system. In regard to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, he reported that the conditions for comprehensive disarmament remained elusive and proposed that reintegration of members of armed groups could be promoted by the development of alternatives to processing through the justice system, including national reconciliation mechanisms, such as limited forms of amnesty. He reported that their respect for human rights still fell short of acceptable standards. In respect of the humanitarian situation, he observed that humanitarian and development needs must be effectively addressed to achieve and consolidate lasting stability. The Secretary-General recommended that the Mission continue in its present configuration for a further period of six months, with recommendations regarding its role in a post-electoral environment to be developed and presented to the Council in a further report.

The Council extended an invitation to the representative of Haiti to participate in the discussion. The President (United States) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,⁹² by which the Council, inter alia:

Commended the Haitian people on the holding of the first round of national elections on 7 February 2006 with high voter turnout; and called on all parties to respect the outcome of the elections, remain engaged in the political process and renounce all forms of violence;

Underlined the fact that the electoral process should lead to the inauguration of a representative government; and emphasized that, once the new government took office, Haitians should continue to promote national reconciliation and political dialogue in order to strengthen their democracy, and to ensure social, economic and political stability;

While recognizing the importance of the elections for democratic institutions and procedures, stressed that they did not constitute the sole means to address Haiti's longer-term problems and that significant challenges remained, in particular, in the fields of rule of law, security and development.

Decision of 14 February 2006 (5372nd meeting):
resolution 1658 (2006)

At its 5372nd meeting, on 14 February 2006, the Council again included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 2 February 2006.⁹³

⁹² S/PRST/2006/7.

⁹³ S/2006/60.

The Council extended an invitation to the representative of Haiti to participate in the discussion. The President (United States) then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution⁹⁴ and a revision to the text.⁹⁵ The draft resolution was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1658 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of MINUSTAH, as contained in resolutions 1542 (2004) and 1608 (2005), until 15 August 2006, with the intention to renew for further periods;

Requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council, as soon as possible after the conclusion of Haiti's electoral process and drawing, as appropriate, on consultations with the elected Government of Haiti, on whether to restructure the mandate of MINUSTAH after the new Government takes office, including recommendations for ways in which MINUSTAH could support reform and strengthening of key institutions.

Decision of 27 March 2006 (5397th meeting):
statement by the President

At the 5377th meeting, on 22 February 2006, the Interim Prime Minister of Haiti and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Haiti and Head of MINUSTAH were invited to participate in the discussion. In his statement, the Interim Prime Minister of Haiti emphasized that the Transitional Government had completed its mission to organize free, fair and inclusive elections. He pointed out that progress in security had allowed a large voter turnout, which also proved the confidence of Haitians in the democratic process. He explained that there had been dissatisfaction and suspicion of fraud following a delay in the announcement of the results of the election, but that the final results had been unambiguous. He announced that the transition was planned for 29 March 2006, after a second round of elections for parliament. He nevertheless stressed that elections were a first step rather than a solution to the country's situation and that democratic consolidation through international assistance as well as efforts to fight the root cause of instability were greatly needed. In relation to that, he underscored the importance of judicial reform and professionalization of the National Police, as well as of good economic governance and continued international assistance. Welcoming the extension of the mandate of MINUSTAH, he held that revisions to its mandate might be needed under the new Government and suggested that Haiti would need fewer military personnel, but many more engineers. He also invited the Council to visit Haiti to celebrate the victory of democracy.⁹⁶

At its 5397th meeting, on 27 March 2006, the Council heard statements by the Secretary-General, the President-elect of Haiti and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Haiti and Head of MINUSTAH, following which statements were made by all members of the Council,⁹⁷ as well as by the representatives of Austria (on behalf of the European Union and aligned countries), the Bahamas (on behalf of CARICOM), Brazil, Canada, Chile, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guyana (on behalf of the Rio Group), Mexico, South Africa, Spain, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of), the President of the Economic and Social Council, the Deputy Secretary-General of the Organization of American States and the Assistant Administrator and Director of the Regional Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean of the United Nations Development Programme.

In his statement, the Secretary-General welcomed the peaceful holding of the first round of elections and the high voter turnout. He also welcomed the decision of the Council to extend the mandate of MINUSTAH for a further six months and held that it was necessary that a multidimensional peacekeeping operation continue.⁹⁸

The President-elect of Haiti called on the international community to renew its commitment to a long-term assistance programme for Haiti and outlined the relationship between peace, democracy and economic development.⁹⁹

The Special Representative stated that MINUSTAH had achieved its objective of restoring stability and support for the organization of free, transparent and legitimate elections. Nevertheless, he expressed his conviction that despite that achievement the mission had only begun and a new emphasis needed to be placed on strengthening State institutions and on launching a comprehensive and sustainable socioeconomic development process.¹⁰⁰

In their statements, most speakers welcomed the successful holding of the first round of elections and urged all parties to remain engaged in the political process and to accept the outcome of the vote. They observed that national reconciliation and political dialogue were crucial to remedy instabilities in the country. The representative of the Bahamas, on behalf of CARICOM, pointed out that organizational shortcomings witnessed during the first round of elections nevertheless had to be addressed.¹⁰¹

Most speakers also called on the international community to build a comprehensive, long-term approach to Haiti's problems, one that would address democracy, poverty and security issues in an inclusive manner. In that regard, the representative of Guyana, on behalf of the Rio Group, called for a broadening of the mandate of MINUSTAH to include a stronger humanitarian and development component in view of the post-electoral challenges.¹⁰² The representatives of China, Chile and Mexico proposed that Haiti should be considered by the newly established Peacebuilding Commission.¹⁰³ The President of the Economic and Social Council underscored the massive lack of international assistance and reasserted the need for full cooperation between the Economic and Social Council and the Security Council.¹⁰⁴

Many speakers also welcomed regional and bilateral cooperation achievements between Haiti and CARICOM and welcomed the normalization of relations between the two. The Assistant Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme highlighted the post-electoral stabilization strategy developed by the United Nations country team and MINUSTAH, aimed at developing a coherent package of high impact programmes, supporting key democratic institutions, enhancing political dialogue and social cohesion and working towards a poverty-reduction strategy.¹⁰⁵

In addition, most speakers underscored the necessity of reforming the Haitian police and the judicial system.

The representative of China stated that although China did not have diplomatic relations with Haiti at the current time, the Chinese people had always had friendly ties with the Haitian people. He believed that the Security Council should continue to watch closely the situation in Haiti, and looked forward to the early submission by the Secretary-General, after consultations with Haitian leaders, of recommendations regarding the structure and mandate of MINUSTAH in the next stage. His Government also hoped that the political conditions necessary for MINUSTAH to stay on would continue to prevail.¹⁰⁶

The President (Argentina) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Commended the Haitian people on the successful completion of the first round of their electoral process, and congratulated Mr. René García Prével on his election as President;

Welcomed the announcement that the second round of parliamentary elections would be held on 21 April 2006; and reiterated its call upon all parties to respect the outcome of the elections, remain engaged in the political process and promote national reconciliation;

Stressed the need to ensure a secure and stable environment in Haiti and expressed its support for the continued efforts of MINUSTAH in that respect;

Reaffirmed that the establishment of the rule of law, including institutional capacity-building and rapid progress on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration would be crucial to Haiti's future;

Called on donors and relevant stakeholders to work with the new Government through the Interim Cooperation Framework to reassess assistance priorities in a targeted way.

Decision of 15 May 2006 (5438th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5438th meeting, on 15 May 2006, the Council extended an invitation to the representative of Haiti to participate in the discussion. The President (Congo) then made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹⁰⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

Congratulated Mr. René García Prével on his inauguration as President of Haiti; also congratulated all newly elected parliamentarians and called upon them to recognize the importance of the mandate given to them by the Haitian people to work constructively to build a better future for their country;

Underlined the fact that many challenges remained to be tackled, including the need to ensure a secure and stable environment in Haiti, strengthen its democratic institutions, foster national reconciliation, inclusiveness and political dialogue, promote and protect human rights and the rule of law, and build governmental capacity, and welcomed the commitment of Mr. Prével in this regard; recognizing that development remained essential to Haiti's stability, the Council called on donors and relevant stakeholders to continue to assess and coordinate assistance priorities, in close cooperation with the new Government, taking into account existing mechanisms such as the Interim Cooperation Framework;

Expressed its full support for the continued efforts by MINUSTAH and the international community to assist Haiti in its ongoing transition, and requested that MINUSTAH work closely with the new authorities in the implementation of its mandate.

Decision of 15 August 2006 (5513th meeting):
resolution 1702 (2006)

At its 5513th meeting, on 15 August 2006, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 28 July 2006 on MINUSTAH.¹⁰⁹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the security situation in Haiti continued to be worrying and destabilizing, despite the successful and peaceful holding of the national elections. He welcomed the efforts for national dialogue and reconciliation of the President-elect, and the holding of a consultative process leading to an agreement on a multiparty Government. He observed that the institutions of the State, including the national police and the judicial system, required extensive assistance to function appropriately at all levels. He regretted that little progress had been made in addressing structural problems in Haiti's judicial system, and observed that the independence of the judiciary remained problematic. He noted that poverty reduction and socioeconomic development were high priorities. He observed that Haiti could not address those challenges by itself at the moment and that international support from partners was greatly needed. Following an assessment of the role of MINUSTAH in the post-election environment, the Secretary-General held that MINUSTAH could best offer assistance, on the basis of its comparative advantages, in the following two areas: ensuring a secure and stable environment; and providing institutional support to rule-of-law reform and to institutions of governance. Those efforts would be underpinned by the human rights work of the Mission and a political role for the Special Representative, including through his good offices. He recommended that the MINUSTAH police be strengthened with personnel and equipment qualified for special weapons and tactics (SWAT) as well as with expert advisers, as kidnapping and increased gang operations greatly impeded stabilization in Haiti. He warned, however, that while the Mission intended to maximize its crime prevention role, it would not be able to respond to criminality in an exhaustive manner.

The Council extended an invitation to the representative of Haiti to participate in the discussion. The President (Ghana) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹¹⁰ it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1702 (2006), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of MINUSTAH, as contained in resolutions 1542 (2004) and 1608 (2005), until 15 February 2007, with the intention to renew for further periods;

Decided that MINUSTAH should consist of up to 7,200 troops and up to 1,951 police officers;

Authorized MINUSTAH to deploy 16 corrections officers in support of the Government to address the shortcomings of the prison system;

Decided that MINUSTAH should provide assistance and advice to the Haitian authorities in monitoring and strengthening the justice sector;

Requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the implementation of the mandate of MINUSTAH by 31 December 2006.

Decision of 15 February 2007 (5631st meeting):
resolution 1743 (2007)

At its 5631st meeting, on 15 February 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on MINUSTAH.¹¹¹ In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the largely successful completion of the electoral process marked a further significant step in the reinforcement of Haiti's democratic process. He stated that, in spite of the fragility of the country's foundation for democracy and stability, a renewed political dialogue had created a unique opportunity to tackle key underlying problems in the areas of security, institution-building and socioeconomic development. He noted, however, that sustained and close collaboration between the Haitian authorities, MINUSTAH and the wider international community was still required. He stated that the Government would continue to face challenges, including the distribution of responsibilities between central and local authorities; how best to meet the full security requirements of the country; determination of an appropriate response to armed groups and development of relevant disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes; finalization of plans for reform of the justice system; development of a means to resolve the problem of pretrial detentions; and adoption of an appropriate legislative framework for the Office of the Ombudsman. He reported that the human rights situation in Haiti remained of concern and that further efforts were needed to strengthen human rights institutions. With regard to the security situation, he reported on incidents by armed groups expressing their frustration for the perceived inaction on the part of the Government to meet their demands for amnesty in return for participation in a disarmament programme and reported that the President had issued a statement stressing that he would not hesitate to use force to neutralize armed groups that refused to disarm voluntarily. He noted that a continued deployment of MINUSTAH remained essential and that any reductions in the international security presence from its current force level should be linked to proportionate increases in the ability of Haitian institutions to assume relevant tasks, taking into account any changes in the security environment. He reported that MINUSTAH had been supporting the new Government in establishing strong and sustainable State institutions for governance and the rule of law and was also promoting development and supporting humanitarian assistance in coordination with the work of the United Nations country team. He recommended that the Mission be extended for a further 12-month period, with its present authorized troops and police ceilings.

¹¹¹ S/2006/1003, submitted pursuant to resolution 1702 (2006).

The representatives of Argentina, Brazil, Canada, Chile and Haiti were invited to participate in the discussion. Statements were made by the representatives of China and Panama.

The President (Slovakia) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹¹² it was then put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1743 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of MINUSTAH as contained in its resolutions 1542 (2004), 1608 (2005) and 1702 (2006) until 15 October 2007 with the intention to renew for further periods;

Requested that MINUSTAH continue the increased tempo of operations in support of the Haitian National Police against armed gangs as deemed necessary to restore security, notably in Port-au-Prince, and encouraged MINUSTAH and the Government of Haiti to undertake coordinated deterrent actions to decrease the level of violence;

Requested MINUSTAH to maintain a proactive communications and public outreach strategy to improve public understanding of the mandate and the role of MINUSTAH in Haiti.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of China welcomed the improvement of the security situation in Haiti and emphasized that the mandate of MINUSTAH should be updated to reorder the Mission's priorities and adjust its composition to meet more effectively the current needs of the Haitian people, especially in the transition from peacekeeping to peacebuilding. He pointed out that China had proposed amendments to the resolution, inter alia, extending the mandate for only six months in keeping with general practice related to United Nations peacekeeping operations. Since he had also requested that the Secretary-General carry out a comprehensive assessment on the changed situation, his Government had agreed to an extension for a reasonable period, as an ad hoc arrangement, beyond the original six months. He also held that although military operations against armed gangs were necessary for the short term, certain paragraphs of the draft resolution overemphasized military means while failing to pay adequate attention to such important priorities as political reconciliation and economic recovery. He also held that a timely implementation of the provision in resolution 1608 (2005), paragraph 3, requesting the Secretary-General to devise a progressive drawdown strategy of the MINUSTAH force levels for the post-election period would enhance the effectiveness of the limited resources of the United Nations. He regretted that some amendments proposed by the Chinese delegation were not considered and hoped that when the Council next revisited the issue those insufficiencies would be fully addressed.¹¹³

The representative of Panama regretted that the extension provided for in resolution 1743 (2007) was for only eight months and wished that 12 months had been allocated to a comprehensive assessment of Haiti's development. He held that the support of the United Nations for Haiti would have to continue not only for 12 months, but for many more. He expressed the hope that in this time the Government of Haiti would make enough progress to enable the Council to change the Mission's configuration in keeping with that progress and that eventually the Peacebuilding Commission would step in to assist Haiti with its development, at which point the Council would be able to complete its task there.¹¹⁴

Decision of 15 October 2007 (5758th meeting):
resolution 1780 (2007)

At its 5758th meeting, on 15 October 2007, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 22 August 2007 on MINUSTAH.¹¹⁵ In his report, the Secretary-General reported on his visit to Haiti to assess the stabilization process and reaffirm the United Nations commitment to Haiti, and noted the progress made and the determination of the people to address the root causes of the conflict. He observed that the multiparty Government established by the new President in May 2006 continued to benefit from broad public support. He welcomed recent improvements in security but underlined the need for consolidation of the gains. He reported that MINUSTAH had conducted a detailed threat assessment which identified three security threats facing Haiti: the likelihood of civil unrest; the potential of renewed armed violence; and the illicit traffic in drugs, arms and contraband. He also reported that an international task force, comprising MINUSTAH, the United Nations country team, key partners and donors, had been launched in January to help ameliorate the dismal situation in the shanty towns of Port-au-Prince. It aimed at identifying a broad strategy as well as short- and medium-term activities for those areas. With regard to the socioeconomic situation, he observed that real progress had been made in stabilizing the economy and that, if Haiti maintained its current path and continued improvements in security, real growth could be expected in its gross domestic product. The Secretary-General also welcomed the progress made towards judicial reform, respect for the rule of law, the strengthening of institutions and governance. He observed, however, that the security and human rights situation in Haitian prisons remained unacceptable. He reaffirmed the essential role of MINUSTAH in assisting the Government in those areas as well as in that of human rights. He observed that the provision of quick-impact projects continued to make a crucial difference and fostered public support for MINUSTAH. He recommended that the mandate of MINUSTAH be extended for a further period of 12 months, with adjustments made to its composition to reflect changing circumstances on the ground and with a view to a gradual transition towards reliance on Haitian structures to maintain stability. He further indicated that, during the coming mandate period, MINUSTAH would develop a consolidation plan with clear benchmarks for progress.

The representatives of Argentina, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Ecuador, Guatemala, Haiti, Spain and Uruguay were invited to participate in the discussion. The President (Ghana) then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution submitted by Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Ecuador, France, Guatemala, Italy, Panama, Peru, Spain, Uruguay and the United States;¹¹⁶ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1780 (2007), by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, inter alia:

Condemned any attack against MINUSTAH personnel;

Requested MINUSTAH to continue to pursue its community violence reduction approach;

Reaffirmed the human rights mandate of MINUSTAH;

Strongly condemned the grave violations against children affected by armed violence, as well as widespread rape and other sexual abuse of girls, and requested MINUSTAH to continue to promote and protect the rights of women and children;

Called on the United Nations system and the international community, in cooperation with the Haitian authorities, to devise and support a renewed aid coordination system;

Requested the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure full compliance of all MINUSTAH personnel with the United Nations zero-tolerance policy on sexual exploitation and abuse, and to keep the Council informed, and urged troop-contributing countries to ensure that acts involving their personnel are properly investigated and punished;

Also requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the implementation of the mandate of MINUSTAH semi-annually and no later than 45 days prior to its expiration.

23. The situation in Timor-Leste

Decision of 14 May 2004 (4968th meeting): resolution 1543 (2004)

On 13 February 2004, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a special report on the United Nations Mission of Support in East Timor (UNMISSET).¹ In the report, he observed that in view of the formidable challenges that remained at the end of the current UNMISSET mandate on 20 May 2004, further assistance would be essential to consolidate and build upon the gains that had been made in an atmosphere of peace and security. He recommended the extension of UNMISSET for a further year, in a reduced size and with a modified mandate. He also recommended that a security force be deployed to provide protection for military liaison officers.

¹ S/2004/117, submitted pursuant to resolution 1410 (2002).

At its 4913th meeting,² on 20 February 2004, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. The President (China) drew the attention of Council members to a letter dated 11 February 2004 from the representative of Portugal,³ in which the President of Portugal indicated his support for a post-UNMISSET United Nations presence that continued to include a military force; and to a letter from the representative of Timor-Leste,⁴ requesting the extension of the presence of a United Nations battalion of peacekeeping forces in Timor-Leste beyond May 2004 in the light of the general volatility in the region and the ² During this period, in addition to the meetings covered in this section, the Council held meetings in private with the troop-contributing countries to UNMISSET, pursuant to resolution 1353 (2001), annex II, sections A and B. The meetings were held on 6 May 2004 (4963rd), 11 November 2004 (5074th) and 16 May 2005 (5179th).

lack of readiness of the current forces of the country to deal independently with internal tensions. The Council heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations. The Council members made statements, as did Australia, Fiji, Indonesia, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union),⁵ Japan, Malaysia, New Zealand, Portugal, the Republic of Korea, Singapore, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Timor-Leste and the Executive Secretary of the Community of Portuguese-Speaking Countries.

Introducing the report of the Secretary-General, the Under-Secretary-General observed that although Timor-Leste had made remarkable progress, the line of true self-sufficiency had not yet been crossed. He reported that the continued presence of a small peacekeeping operation for an additional one-year consolidation phase was essential to reinforce and strengthen what had been achieved to date. He viewed further provision of assistance to the public administration as urgent. He contended, furthermore, that continued international assistance was crucial to the conduct of serious crime investigations and proceedings, to show the Council's determination to address the issue of impunity. To promote calm at a time of potential volatility and provide security, protection and extraction for United Nations personnel, he advocated the retention of a small military presence after May 2004.⁶

Speakers in general welcomed the progress achieved by Timor-Leste in the areas of public administration, efforts to address serious crimes, internal security and the further strengthening of the relationships between Timor-Leste and Indonesia and in the region. Speakers agreed on the need to consolidate and expand on the achievements by Timor-Leste and UNMISSET over the past 18 months and agreed that further assistance to Timor-Leste after 20 May 2004 would be required in such areas as the judicial system, administrative structures and the maintenance of security. Speakers concurred in their assessment that Timor-Leste had reached a critical juncture and that the international community should continue to work in concert towards helping the institutions of Timor-Leste to attain full-fledged sufficiency. As pointed out by the representative of Brazil, the fact that Timor-Leste was a remarkable success story for the United Nations should not be overestimated by the international community, and much remained to be done.⁷ The representative of Algeria believed that it was the duty of the international community to continue to support that young State during the crucial stage of the establishment of its institutions.⁸ The representative of Timor-Leste accepted that his Government bore some responsibility for its shortcomings and weaknesses, but noted that the country had been independent for less than two years. He pointed out that none of the members of his Government had governed before, and that training had been lacking, especially in the justice sector, where the police in particular needed strengthening.⁹

Some speakers shared concern at the security situation, which remained at risk owing to, inter alia, destabilizing groups which continued to operate across the border in West Timor.¹⁰ Others emphasized the need to strengthen the rule of law and address human rights violations, including assisting in completing investigations of crimes committed in 1999 and rooting out corruption.¹¹ Many speakers urged Timor-Leste and Indonesia to reach early agreement on their land border. The representative of Indonesia, in that connection, noted that the Joint Ministerial Commission had established several working groups to deal with border issues, trade and finance, legal matters, educational and cultural affairs, and transport and telecommunications.¹² A number of speakers expressed hope that a solution concerning approximately 28,000 refugees on the western part of the island would soon be achieved,¹³ although the representative of Indonesia contended that the remaining East Timorese were not refugees, but had opted to stay in Indonesia and were now being processed as its citizens.¹⁴

Against this background, delegations voiced support for the recommendation of the Secretary-General, and the appeal by Timor-Leste, that the UNMISET mandate be extended for a further 12-month consolidation phase, in a reduced size and with a modified mandate. Speakers concurred that an immediate pullout of the international military and police presence would create a security vacuum in the country. Many speakers fully supported the proposals of the Secretary-General, including the proposal that UNMISET retain a military component with a reduced size,¹⁵ and, in that regard, the representative of Spain pointed out that maintaining a military component would undoubtedly reduce the risk of destabilizing incidents.¹⁶ A number of representatives underscored the fact that the Government of Timor-Leste had expressed the wish for the continued presence of a United Nations peacekeeping force in the country.¹⁷ The representative of Pakistan and the Executive Secretary of the Community of Portuguese-Speaking Countries highlighted the deterrent value of such a component,¹⁸ and other speakers observed that the military component represented a comparatively modest effort which could have a crucial impact, in line with reality on the ground.¹⁹

In contrast, the representative of Australia reiterated the view of his Government that an armed, emergency backup United Nations police response unit could help Timor-Leste to address its security challenges, which were internal and therefore required a police rather than a military response. The proposed unit would serve an essential complementary role to any peacekeeping presence, while day-to-day and executive policing would be the sole responsibility of the Government of Timor-Leste.²⁰ Concurring that the security threats to Timor-Leste were mostly of an internal dimension, some speakers supported the Australian proposal.²¹ At the same time, the representatives of Germany and Australia expressed readiness to join a consensus on a peacekeeping force as suggested by the Secretary-General, including the military component.²² For his part, the representative of Timor-Leste contended that a police force did not offer the same deterrence and credibility as a military force, which would provide time and space to the country to strengthen its defence and police forces.²³

The representative of France, stressing the importance of defining a clear exit strategy, stated that the new UNMISET timetable should not exceed one year and affirmed that a precise schedule should be laid down for troop reductions up to the final withdrawal.²⁴ The representative of Fiji also emphasized that a timeline aiming at an end to the Mission must be respected.²⁵ The representative of the United States stated that any assistance in civil administration beyond May 2005 would be provided through normal bilateral and multilateral donor support, rather than through a United Nations peacekeeping operation.²⁶ It was the belief of the representative of Timor-Leste that the policing and defence responsibilities could be taken over by his country by May 2005.²⁷ However, the representative of the Russian Federation stated that Timor-Leste was yet another example of the fact that the process of establishing Statehood was extremely complex and labour intensive and could not be artificially squeezed into rigid existing patterns and frameworks.²⁸ which he further developed his proposals for the Mission's consolidation phase, including a new recommendation for the establishment of an international response unit for emergency circumstances. While extraordinary progress had permitted a swift downsizing in the international presence on the ground, the Secretary-General again recommended the extension of UNMISSET for a further one-year consolidation phase to sustain, strengthen and build upon the gains made and thereby permitting Timor-Leste to attain self-sufficiency. For this, he proposed three programmes supporting public administration and justice, the development of law enforcement, and security and stability. He pointed out that the provision of support through peacekeeping could meet only the most urgent of the country's requirements, and that it must be complemented and built upon by bilateral and multilateral support, if real progress was to take place.

At its 4965th meeting, on 10 May 2004, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Timor-Leste. Statements were made by all members of the Council³⁰ and by Australia, India, Indonesia, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union),³¹ Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Singapore and Timor-Leste.³²

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General introduced the report and elaborated on the various elements of the mandate pertaining to external and internal security and support for public administration, such as developing national police capacities, the presence of the military component of UNMISSET and the bilateral relationship between Timor-Leste and Indonesia. He reported that through its institution-building and capacity-building activities, UNMISSET had contributed significantly to the viability and political stability of the State institutions of Timor-Leste. He considered a robust exit strategy to ensure sustainability to be the major challenge during the consolidation phase of the Mission. The Special Representative of the Secretary-General also stated that considerable progress had been made in the orderly downsizing of the Mission.³³

Speakers in general welcomed the significant progress achieved in Timor-Leste, as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General,³⁴ including the largely calm security situation; the continuing positive relationship between Timor-Leste and Indonesia; ongoing development of the country's public administration; and promulgation by the Government of an organic law and disciplinary code for the Timorese police and an organic law for the Timorese defence forces. At the same time, speakers agreed that much remained to be done and concurred with the Secretary-General that UNMISSET should be extended with a modified mandate and reduced personnel for another year to cross a critical threshold of self-sufficiency and to consolidate gains made during the two years since the Mission had been established. In particular, they agreed that UNMISSET would continue to provide solid support to Timor-Leste's fledgling public administration and security institutions, and support the country in establishing a strong judicial tradition with emphasis on human rights and the rule of law. Speakers therefore particularly welcomed the Secretary-General's recommendation of a programme of support to public administration and justice. Speakers also maintained that substantial progress was only possible in line with economic and social development. The representative of the United Kingdom emphasized that a smooth build up in the governance capacity of Timor-Leste was necessary for a smooth UNMISSET drawdown.³⁵

The representative of France noted that special attention should be given to combating impunity for serious crimes committed in 1999,³⁶ and a number of speakers welcomed the work of the Serious Crimes Unit.³⁷ The representative of the United States believed that the Unit should maintain close adherence to its completion strategy, ending investigations no later than

November 2004, in order to conclude all its trials by no later than May 2005. He added that the international community, together with the United Nations, should consider an international truth commission as a means of achieving accountability and, ultimately, reconciliation in Timor-Leste by resolving outstanding cases.³⁸ Some speakers expressed support for the resolution of outstanding justice issues for less serious crimes through the parallel work of the Timor-Leste Commission for Reception, Truth and Reconciliation.³⁹

Many delegations voiced concern at the precarious security sector, as the national police of Timor-Leste continued to suffer from a number of institutional weaknesses. In that regard, some speakers expressly welcomed the proposed deployment of an international response unit of 125 gendarmerie, along with the earlier proposed military component of 310 troops, to form a two-element security force, providing backup support to the Timor-Leste security forces in emergency situations.⁴⁰

The representative of the United States asserted that the Mission should end no later than May 2005, at which time the Government should resume full responsibility for its own security, while continuing to receive support from elsewhere in the United Nations system and from other members of the international community.⁴¹ Similarly, the representative of Japan saw the necessity to conclude during this period the transition from the phase of peacekeeping operations for conflict resolution to the next phase of development activities, conducted through bilateral channels or relevant international institutions.⁴² The representative of India agreed that multilateral assistance of the current scale would also have to be substituted progressively by bilateral and regional cooperation.⁴³

At its 4968th meeting, on 14 May 2004, the Council once more included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General of 29 April 2004 on UNMISSET.⁴⁴ The President (Pakistan) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁴⁵ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously as resolution 1543 (2004),⁴⁶ by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNMISSET for a period of 6 months, with a view to subsequently extending the mandate for a further and final period of 6 months, until 20 May 2005;

Decided also to reduce the size of UNMISSET and revise its tasks, in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary-General in section III of his report of 29 April 2004;

Decided, accordingly, that the mandate of UNMISSET should consist of the following elements, as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General of 29 April 2004: (a) support for the public administration and justice system of Timor-Leste and for justice in the area of serious crimes; (b) support to the development of law enforcement in Timor-Leste; and (c) support for the security and stability of Timor-Leste;

Decided also that internationally accepted human rights principles should continue to form an integral part of training and capacity-building carried out by UNMISSET.

The representative of Brazil stressed that the resolution was a clear commitment by the international community to peace and security in a country that was only two years of age and that he was sure that this one-year consolidation phase of the United Nations presence in Timor-Leste would be of the utmost importance to the development of Timor-Leste, its own capabilities and self-sufficiency.⁴⁷

Decision of 16 November 2004 (5079th meeting): resolution 1573 (2004)

On 13 August 2004, the Secretary-General submitted a progress report on UNMISSET.⁴⁸ He reported that since April 2004 the Government of Timor-Leste had taken several important steps towards reaching a critical threshold of self-sufficiency. It had adopted additional legislation and successfully assumed the responsibility for its internal and external security, while its public administration, law enforcement agencies and armed forces had all continued to develop and mature. At the same time, it was clear that much remained to be accomplished during the remaining months of the UNMISSET mandate, and that the extent of progress would depend upon joint efforts by Timor-Leste, UNMISSET and the international community.

At its 5024th meeting, on 24 August 2004, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. The Council heard a briefing by the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations. Statements were made by all members of the Council and by Australia, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, the Netherlands (on behalf of the European Union),⁴⁹ New Zealand, Portugal and Timor-Leste.

Introducing the report of the Secretary-General, the Assistant Secretary-General reported that, except for a few minor incidents, the situation in Timor-Leste had remained stable and largely peaceful during the reporting period. With regard to the functioning of the democratic process, the smooth conduct of the registration of voters for the first elections in Timor-Leste since independence was an encouraging development. While Timor-Leste was making steady progress towards achieving self-sufficiency, it would continue for some time to require international assistance — both financial and human resources — to implement the legislation it had adopted and to enhance the effectiveness of key institutions of State and Government. Reporting on the progress made in the three programme areas of the UNMISSET mandate, the Assistant Secretary-General said that the recruitment of civilian advisers to support public administration had been completed. There was a shortage of qualified personnel in the public administration and justice sectors as well as in the Timorese national police and the defence forces. As many of the indicted persons were still outside Timor-Leste and had not been brought to justice regarding serious crimes committed in 1999, the serious crimes process might not be able to fully respond to the desire for justice of those affected by the violence in 1999 within the limited time frame and resources that remained available. The Assistant Secretary-General indicated that the development of the defence forces, which also continued to suffer from a lack of proper training and equipment and a very limited logistical capability for deployment, would continue to depend on external support through the provision of equipment and training.⁵⁰

Speakers welcomed the steps taken by the Government towards self-sufficiency during the first part of the consolidation phase. In particular, they highlighted the Government's assumption of responsibility for internal and external security, the adoption of a number of fundamental laws, the steps taken in the area of electoral registration and the establishment of the Office of the Provedor for Human Rights and Justice. At the same time, they pointed to deficiencies in capacity-building.

Speakers also commended the support provided by UNMISSET in the three programme areas set out in resolution 1543 (2004), paragraph 3. In terms of support for the public administration and justice system (Programme I), some representatives hailed the improvements in the capacity and structure of public administration, but agreed with the Secretary-General, who pointed out in his report⁵¹ that in addition to having civil servants prepared for leadership roles, the right personnel also needed to be available for mid-level management posts.⁵² The representative of the United States noted the critical need for the UNMISSET civilian advisers to transfer their skills to their counterparts in Timor-Leste before May 2005.⁵³

Several speakers noted with concern the lengthy delays in the administration of justice, and agreed that additional capacity needed to be developed. In that regard, some speakers pointed to the measures adopted by the Council of Coordination of the Justice System which had led, inter alia, to the establishment of a judicial training centre to help develop the human resources necessary for a functioning judiciary.⁵⁴ Speakers expressed support for the assistance provided by UNMISSET through the Serious Crimes Unit. Highlighting the strategy prepared by the Unit, which aimed to complete judicial rulings on requests for arrest warrants by May 2005 for all those indicted but whose cases were not yet before the court, the representative of Chile took note of the fact that the body might not be able to complete its work in the allotted time frame and within current resources, and that accordingly, the Council should not rule out the need to take additional measures in the future.⁵⁵ Calling for some level of accountability for the atrocities committed in 1999, several speakers were deeply concerned at whether the recent rulings by an appeals court in Indonesia and the ad hoc tribunal process could provide a full and credible accounting for the abuses that had occurred.⁵⁶ Some called for continuing support from the international community⁵⁷ or offered to lend support.⁵⁸ The Assistant Secretary-General noted that the Secretary-General had asked the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to prepare a report on progress to date in the serious crimes process, in both Indonesia and Timor-Leste. On the basis of that report, he believed, decisions could be taken to ensure that the serious crimes process moved forward and that impunity did not prevail.⁵⁹

In terms of support to the development of law enforcement (Programme II), speakers welcomed the work done by the national police, but stressed the need for ongoing training, in particular with regard to achieving greater professionalism, efficiency and responsibility and a strong emphasis on respect for human rights.

With regard to support for security and stability (Programme III), speakers welcomed the relative calm that prevailed in Timor-Leste. At the same time, some emphasized the importance of paying attention to such areas of concerns as smuggling, illegal trafficking and border crossings.⁶⁰

While noting that no decision would be taken by the Council before November, the representative of Australia was of the firm view that UNMISSET should continue in its current form through May 2005, as he was not in favour of an early withdrawal or downsizing of the Mission's police or military elements.⁶¹

Speakers also stressed the importance of Timor-Leste attaining a level of economic development that would make it possible to overcome poverty and unemployment. While highlighting the assistance programmes by the United Nations, the Bretton Woods institutions and several bilateral donors, speakers were unanimous in their appeal to the international community to provide more and continued financial support to Timor-Leste to facilitate its transition from peacemaking to peacebuilding. In that connection, the representative of Pakistan advocated examining the possibility of setting up a composite committee with representation from the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly to coordinate and oversee international support for Timor-Leste.⁶²

In regard to bilateral relations for Timor-Leste, the majority of speakers looked forward to the early finalization of the maritime boundary between Timor-Leste and Australia, and an agreement on the sharing of petroleum and natural gas resources in the region. They believed this to be essential for Timor-Leste in order to fully exploit its economic potential. Speakers also stressed the importance of a strengthened bilateral relationship between Indonesia and Timor-Leste. Specifically, they welcomed the progress already made between the two countries in reaching agreement on the demarcation and management of their common border, and looked forward to a definitive agreement being reached in the near future.

On 9 November 2004, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a progress report on UNMISSET.⁶³ In the report, which reviewed the activities of UNMISSET since August 2004, he included recommendations on the basis of the findings of an integrated technical assessment mission that had visited Timor-Leste in October 2004. The mission had concluded that, despite the notable advances achieved during the UNMISSET consolidation phase, Timor-Leste had not yet reached the critical threshold of self-sufficiency. The public administration — particularly the finance, banking and justice sectors — remained weak and fragile. The Secretary-General concluded that the situation on the ground did not warrant any modification of the Mission's tasks as mandated by the Council in resolution 1543 (2004). In the current circumstances, any change of the composition or size of UNMISSET, including those of the police and military components, could compromise its ability to carry out its responsibilities.

At its 5076th meeting, on 15 November 2004, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Timor-Leste. Statements were made by all members of the Council and by the representatives of Australia, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, the Netherlands (on behalf of the European Union),⁶⁴ New Zealand, Portugal, Singapore, Thailand and Timor-Leste.

Introducing the Secretary-General's report, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General reported that Timor-Leste had remained stable and peaceful, with one exception when Timorese police officers had used excessive force on 20 July in arresting peaceful demonstrators, mostly former independence fighters. Significantly, however, the Timorese leadership had taken immediate initiatives to address the grievances of members of the former resistance and other disgruntled groups. He noted that preparations for the first Suco local elections had progressed further, and the National Electoral Commission was deliberating upon the procedures that would allow the commencement of polling.

Reporting on setbacks encountered during the reporting period, he informed the Council that the National Parliament had failed to select the Provedor for Human Rights and Justice and had yet to complete its deliberations on the reports submitted by the Commission for Former Combatants Affairs and the Commission for Veterans Affairs. Border demarcation talks had not resulted in a final agreement, as expected earlier. Turning to the issue of bringing to justice the perpetrators of the atrocities committed in 1999, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General stated that the serious crimes process would be unable to respond fully to the desire for justice for all the victims in view of the limited time and resources available.

In regard to the status of the implementation of the UNMISSET mandate, the Special Representative noted that while training of the national police of Timor-Leste continued, key challenges remained, including a lack of professional expertise and, in some officers, a lack of respect for human rights. While the capacity of the Timorese defence force had continued to grow, he noted that the Force remained hampered by a lack of experienced personnel and limited logistic capacity. In addition, the Timorese border security agencies did not yet have the capacity to manage border affairs by themselves.

Reiterating the recommendation of the Secretary-General that there be no modification to UNMISSET tasks nor any reduction in its size, the Special Representative turned to the increased focus required to implement the Mission's transition strategy in the coming six months. In that respect, he reported that UNMISSET was redoubling its efforts to increase Timorese involvement and ownership of the three programme operations. Further, he reported that he had constituted eight working groups to identify specific measures required for a smooth transition from peacekeeping operations to more traditional nation-building and sustainable development assistance.

Speakers supported the recommendation of the Secretary-General to extend the mandate of UNMISSET with its current tasks, configuration and size for a further and final six-month period until 20 May 2005. They generally stressed the importance for UNMISSET to devise and implement an effective exit strategy that would ensure a seamless transition upon its departure, as recommended in the report of the Secretary-General. According to the representative of Angola, the strategy would be based on increased ownership and involvement of the Timorese in public administration, justice, law enforcement and national security.⁶⁵ At the same time, as also noted by the representatives of the Philippines and the United Kingdom, the Mission would have to mobilize bilateral and multilateral partners whose assistance would be crucial in further efforts towards a sustainable development assistance framework.⁶⁶ Other speakers stated that UNMISSET should focus on preparing and implementing its exit strategy, while aiming at increasing Timorese ownership but also requiring sustained bilateral and multilateral international assistance after the departure of UNMISSET. The representative of New Zealand particularly emphasized the importance of a transition strategy in the justice sector.⁶⁷ The representative of Malaysia expressed the view that the next six months would be crucial with respect to ensuring that the withdrawal of UNMISSET would not have a significant impact on the proper functioning of the Government of Timor-Leste. He therefore called for a thorough and comprehensive assessment regarding that country's self-reliance.⁶⁸

In the view of the representative of Timor-Leste, the establishment of the eight working groups, which were given the task to ensure a smooth transition from peacekeeping and peacebuilding to sustainable development, was a timely initiative that would contribute to finding the most appropriate exit strategy,⁶⁹ and it was welcomed by a number of speakers.⁷⁰ The representative of Indonesia stated that the efforts of the working groups could create an opportunity to successfully complete the UNMISSET mandate within a secure time frame.⁷¹ The representative of the Russian Federation emphasized that UNMISSET should give maximum attention to preparing an exit strategy.⁷²

Many speakers welcomed the strengthening of relations between Timor-Leste and other States of the region, particularly Indonesia, and hoped for further progress with Indonesia and Australia on finalizing maritime boundaries and land border demarcation.

At its 5079th meeting, on 16 November 2004, the Council once more included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on UNMISSET.⁷³ The President (United States) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;⁷⁴ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1573 (2004),⁷⁵ by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNMISSET for a final period of 6 months until 20 May 2005;

Decided also to maintain current tasks, configuration and size of UNMISSET in order to allow it to complete key tasks of its mandate and consolidate gains made thus far;

Requested UNMISSET to focus increasingly on implementing its exit strategy, particularly with a view to ensure increasing involvement and ownership of the Timorese in the Mission's three programme areas;

Urged the donor community to continue providing its indispensable assistance to Timor-Leste;

Urged, in particular, United Nations development and humanitarian agencies and multilateral financial institutions to start immediately planning for a smooth transition, in Timor-Leste, from a peacekeeping operation to a sustainable development assistance framework.

Decision of 28 April 2005 (5171st meeting): resolution 1599 (2005)

On 18 February 2005, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a progress report on UNMISSET.⁷⁶ In the report, the Secretary-General recommended maintaining a United Nations mission with a scaled-down structure for a period of up to 12 months, until 20 May 2006, as the withdrawal of UNMISSET would have a potentially negative impact on the security and stability of the country as well as on the proper functioning of State institutions.

At its 5132nd meeting, on 28 February 2005, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Timor-Leste. Statements were made by all members of the Council and by Australia, Indonesia, Luxembourg (on behalf of the European Union),⁷⁷ New Zealand, Portugal, Singapore, Thailand and Timor-Leste.⁷⁸

Introducing the Secretary-General's report, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General reported that tangible progress had been achieved by holding local elections, strengthening relations with neighbouring countries and building democratic institutions. He reported, however, that the most demanding challenge was the land-border demarcation negotiations. According to the findings of the transition working groups, major challenges remained in four areas: security and stability; the development of police capability; public administration and the justice system; and human rights and the promotion of good governance. Since all of those areas were important in the post-conflict situation, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General maintained that if the United Nations totally withdrew the military liaison officers and police trainers upon completion of the UNMISSET mandate, Timor-Leste might face insurmountable challenges on its path towards peace and stability.

He therefore endorsed the recommendation of the Secretary-General to extend the mandate of UNMISSET for a period of up to 12 months until 20 May 2006, albeit in an appropriately scaled-down form, noting that the period could be shortened if sufficient bilateral and multilateral support was forthcoming.⁷⁹

The representative of Timor-Leste also appealed to the Council for an extension of the UNMISSET mandate. In regard to the presence of military liaison officers, he stated that they were needed to provide further training to the Timorese Border Patrol Unit and that national security agencies were not in a position to guarantee the safety and security of liaison officers. At the same time, he expressed an openness to discuss arrangements with any country in the region offering or willing to offer stand-by arrangements for evacuation and other logistical support. In regard to the training of Timorese police officers, the representative considered it essential to retain the 62 police trainers deployed in those areas where multilateral and bilateral assistance was unlikely to become available at that time. The same was true for civilian advisers, who were needed to strengthen the institutional capacity of State institutions. If Timor-Leste was to rely exclusively on bilateral funding, it would be in a very dire situation with regard to ensuring the functioning and capacity-building of its institutions. He went on to brief the Council on the joint efforts of his Government and Indonesia to resolve the reported human rights violations in 1999 and reported that the land border demarcation talks between the two countries had made progress in record time, and had now reached some 96 per cent completion. Elaborating on the new Truth and Friendship Commission, he said that the initiative was unique, as it was the first time in modern history that two countries previously in conflict had decided to deal with issues of violence through a joint truth and reconciliation commission.⁸⁰

Speakers acknowledged the tangible progress achieved in Timor-Leste since 1999, but at the same time noted that progress was not sufficient and saw the need for ongoing international assistance after 20 May 2005, particularly for the public administration, judicial institutions and security forces. In that connection, several speakers expressed support for or took note of the Secretary-General's suggestion to extend the mandate of UNMISSET for another year in a scaled-down configuration.⁸¹ Supporting a continued United Nations presence, several delegations stressed the need for a smooth transition from peacekeeping to a sustainable development framework which focused on capacity-building.⁸² The representative of the United Kingdom held that the successor to UNMISSET should be a small, tightly focused political mission with a clear and achievable exit strategy.⁸³ The representative of the United States advocated the conclusion of UNMISSET as scheduled in May 2005, as there was no longer a threat to international peace and security requiring a peacekeeping operation. He was open to exploring the establishment of a special political mission for a discrete, limited period.⁸⁴

In terms of the areas requiring ongoing support, speakers expressed particular concern over the limited progress in the delineation of the common land border between Indonesia and Timor-Leste. While praising improved relations between the two countries, speakers urged both countries to reach final agreement as soon as possible, thereby improving border management and control. Speakers also welcomed the establishment of a bilateral Truth and Friendship Commission to deal with the human rights abuses perpetrated in 1999, and in that connection reiterated their support for the commission of experts established by the Secretary-General to explore further ways to address impunity.

At the 5171st meeting, on 28 April 2005, the President (China) drew the attention of the Council to the report of the Secretary-General on UNMISSET⁸⁵ and to a draft resolution.⁸⁶ The draft resolution was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1599 (2005),⁸⁷ by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to establish a one-year follow-on special political mission in Timor-Leste, the United Nations Office in Timor-Leste (UNOTIL), which would remain in Timor-Leste until 20 May 2006;

Decided also that UNOTIL would have the following mandate: (a) to support the development of critical State institutions through provision of up to 45 civilian advisers; (b) to support further development of the police through provision of up to 40 police advisers, and support for development of the Border Patrol Unit through provision of up to 35 additional advisers, 15 of whom might be military advisers; (c) to provide training in observance of democratic governance and human rights through provision of up to 10 human rights officers; and (d) to monitor and review progress in (a) through (c) above.

Decision of 12 May 2006 (5436th meeting):
resolution 1677 (2006)

On 12 May 2005, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council an end-of-mandate report on UNMISSET,⁸⁸ in which he reviewed the activities of UNMISSET since his previous report, dated 18 February 2005⁸⁹ and described preparations for the implementation of the mandate of UNOTIL.

At its 5180th meeting, on 16 May 2005, the Council included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General dated 12 May 2005. The Council heard a briefing by the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations. Statements were made by all members of the Council and by the representatives of Australia, Indonesia, Luxembourg (on behalf of the European Union),⁹⁰ Malaysia, Portugal and Timor-Leste.

Introducing the report of the Secretary-General, the Assistant Secretary-General highlighted some notable political developments, such as the peaceful and orderly holding of local elections in the eastern districts of the country and continued improvement in relations between Timor-Leste and Indonesia. However, a border incident underscored the continued need for a United Nations presence to facilitate interaction between the Border Patrol Unit and the Indonesian military. Similarly, he noted that the Rapid Intervention Unit still relied to a large extent on the advice of the UNMISSET civilian police component. While local ownership had been enhanced and further progress had been achieved towards the consolidation of the State institutions of Timor-Leste, the functioning of the judicial system continued to depend on the support of international advisers. He observed that a withdrawal of UNMISSET contingents could have implications for the security of United Nations personnel.⁹¹

Speakers in general welcomed the progress achieved during the final consolidation phase of UNMISSET, including the peaceful holding of elections; the improvement of relations with neighbouring States, particularly Indonesia; the improvement of security; progress in institution-building; and the promotion of democracy and human rights. They pointed out, however, that much more remained to be done, if Timor-Leste was to achieve sustainable self-sufficiency. Stressing the need to fight impunity and bring the perpetrators of the serious crimes committed in 1999 to justice, they looked forward to the report of the Commission of Experts appointed by the Secretary-General. In view of the report's release after the closure of UNMISSET, the representative of the United States supported a delay in the liquidation of the Serious Crimes Unit until the Council could consider the Commission's recommendations.⁹² The representative of the Philippines believed that there was ample opportunity for complementarity between the work of the Commission of Experts and the work of the Truth and Friendship Commission,⁹³ and other speakers encouraged coordination between both to ensure that justice was done.⁹⁴

The representative of Indonesia highlighted both countries' responsibility to address the reported human rights violations of 1999 within the Truth and Friendship Commission, which he believed remained the best mechanism to provide an acceptable solution. He looked forward to the positive contributions of the Commission of Experts to the work of the Truth and Friendship Commission in bringing closure to that residual issue.⁹⁵

In addition, speakers emphasized the need to further improve and strengthen relations between Timor-Leste and Indonesia as well as between Timor-Leste and Australia. They recognized the continuing need for international assistance and welcomed the succession of UNMISSET by UNOTIL, with its focus on peacebuilding and development. The representative of the United Kingdom noted that, with the establishment of UNOTIL, United Nations activities in Timor-Leste moved into a new phase and that the Organization would now be in a position to refocus and concentrate its efforts on areas where the people of East Timor still required targeted assistance.⁹⁶ The representative of China expressed the hope that, UNOTIL would be clear about its direction and would focus on transferring management experience and other skills to ensure that a fully independent professional Timorese management team was in place at an early date.⁹⁷ At the same time, some speakers stressed the need to secure bilateral and multilateral assistance beyond the support provided by UNOTIL.⁹⁸

The representative of Japan believed that peacekeeping operations must have clear completion strategies and that recipient countries of such operations should keep that point in mind and make the utmost effort to attain self-sufficiency. Praising the efforts of the United Nations in Timor-Leste, he stated that he hoped that other peacekeeping operations would redouble their efforts to fulfil their mandates in accordance with completion strategies appropriate to the specific situations on the ground.⁹⁹ The representative of Denmark supported an approach based on national ownership that placed the people of Timor-Leste in the driver's seat, and therefore welcomed the fact that the number of international United Nations advisers would be reduced over the coming months to give room for the Timorese to assert their leadership.¹⁰⁰

The representative of Timor-Leste, while pointing to the absence of provision for a backup security force in resolution 1599 (2005), and recognizing his country's insufficient capacity, reaffirmed his country's commitment to peace and stability, as well as to the protection of United Nations personnel. He reaffirmed the commitment of both Timor-Leste and Indonesia to resolve the remaining issues of mutual concern. He indicated that his Government was carefully studying the Australian proposals on the maritime boundaries, to achieve a fair and just agreement.¹⁰¹

On 18 August 2005, the Secretary-General submitted a progress report on UNOTIL,¹⁰² in which he covered major developments on the ground since his end-of-mandate report on UNMISSET¹⁰³ and described the activities undertaken by UNOTIL since its inception.

At its 5251st meeting, on 29 August 2005, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Timor-Leste. Introducing the report of the Secretary-General, the Special Representative maintained that the overall situation in Timor-Leste had remained calm and stable, and that relations between Timor-Leste and Indonesia and between Timor-Leste and Australia continued to improve. He reported that as a result of the support to critical State institutions by civilian advisers, Timorese counterparts had increased their ownership of the functional responsibilities. Nevertheless, there was a lack of a minimum national capacity in such highly technical and specialized sectors as justice and finance. Police training advisers had begun a training programme for the Border Patrol Unit, and human rights officers had been assigned to national State institutions to strengthen their capacity to protect and promote human rights at all levels. After the closure of the serious crimes process, he reported that an agreement on the preservation of serious crimes records had currently been discussed. The Special Representative of the Secretary-General then made clear that, in the absence of a United Nations security force, the security and safety of United Nations personnel remained a major concern and a challenge to UNOTIL.¹⁰⁴

On 17 January 2006, the Secretary-General submitted a progress report on UNOTIL,¹⁰⁵ in which he, inter alia, outlined the ongoing plans for the transition from UNOTIL to a sustainable development framework. He observed that despite the remarkable achievements made by Timor-Leste since 1999, the situation in the country remained fragile. Crucial State institutions, in particular the justice sector, remained weak, in large part owing to a lack of qualified human resources, and time would also be required for democratic governance and human rights to take root in the country. Therefore, the Secretary-General strongly believed that while the future of the country rested with the Timorese people and their Government, the international community should remain engaged in Timor-Leste beyond the expiration of the mandate of UNOTIL on 20 May 2006.

At its 5351st meeting, on 23 January 2006, the Council included in its agenda the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General. The President (United Republic of Tanzania) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 20 January 2006 from the Prime Minister of Timor-Leste requesting the establishment of a special political office in Timor-Leste with the components of electoral assistance, civilian advisers and police training.¹⁰⁶ The Council heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Timor-Leste. Statements were made by all members of the Council and by the representatives of Australia, Austria (on behalf of the European Union),¹⁰⁷ Brazil, Papua New Guinea, Portugal and Timor-Leste.

Introducing the report of the Secretary-General, the Special Representative noted that, during the past five months, UNOTIL civilian advisers had accelerated their efforts to transfer skills and knowledge, and that their Timorese counterparts were now demonstrating increased ability and willingness to carry out their duties. However, national capacities in highly technical areas, such as justice and finance, remained extremely weak, so that international advisory support, especially in those two areas, would be required for some years to come. Furthermore, the Special Representative maintained that human rights activities would need continued attention by the international community. With regard to UNOTIL support to the national police, a border incident had prompted UNOTIL to refocus attention on enhancing the professionalism of the Border Patrol Unit. He then drew attention to an electoral needs assessment mission which had concluded that, for forthcoming elections of the National Parliament and Presidency in 2007 to be free and fair, Timor-Leste needed the assistance of the international community and a strong political presence. The Special Representative recommended that the Council, taking into account the newly emerging political and security situation, examine carefully a request from the Government of Timor-Leste for the establishment of a special political office.¹⁰⁸

The representative of Timor-Leste stated that the recently concluded report of the Commission for Reception, Truth and Reconciliation needed to be evaluated not only from the perspective of exposing the truth regarding human rights violations, but also from the perspective of reconciliation, which had been a long-standing process for the people of Timor-Leste. Turning to achievements and challenges in Timor-Leste, he acknowledged the criticism levelled at the national police and the shortcomings in the justice sector. Against the backdrop of upcoming parliamentary and presidential elections, he proposed that the Council consider, as requested by the Prime Minister of Timor-Leste,¹⁰⁹ establishing a follow-on special political office in Timor-Leste.¹¹⁰

Speakers in general were encouraged by the significant positive developments in Timor-Leste, including the submission of the report of the Commission for Reception, Truth and Reconciliation to the Secretary-General. They applauded the improved relations between Timor-Leste and Indonesia, with the establishment of the bilateral Commission for Truth and Friendship being of particular importance, and looked forward to the report of the Secretary-General on justice and reconciliation in Timor-Leste. Speakers commended the agreement between Timor-Leste and Australia on sharing oil and gas revenues. However, they noted that, in spite of all the progress made, further assistance was required. They agreed that the need to secure the long-term success of the State-building process was a central task that lay ahead, for which the 2007 presidential and parliamentary elections would be a milestone. To that end, the majority of speakers expressed their support for the establishment of a special political office in Timor-Leste, as a follow-on to UNOTIL. Several speakers expressed the view that any continued United Nations presence should be small, to enable the Timorese to be in the driver's seat in the future development of their country.¹¹¹ Stating that the request by Timor-Leste was perfectly legitimate, the representative of France maintained that the structure needed to be appropriate and functional.¹¹² The representative of the United States held that ending UNOTIL did not mean ending assistance to Timor-Leste, promising to ensure that the Government of Timor-Leste would continue to receive assistance from the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and a variety of bilateral donors.¹¹³

The issue of impunity was brought up by a number of speakers,¹¹⁴ with some emphasizing that reconciliation must not mean that the most serious crimes escaped unpunished.¹¹⁵

On 20 April 2006, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council his end-of-mandate report on UNOTIL,¹¹⁶ in which he proposed the establishment of a follow-on integrated United Nations office, in response to the request made by Timor-Leste.¹¹⁷

At its 5432nd meeting, on 5 May 2006, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda. The Council was briefed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Timor-Leste. Statements were made by all members of the Council and by Australia, Austria (on behalf of the European Union and the countries aligning themselves with the statement), Brazil, Indonesia, Malaysia, New Zealand, Portugal, Singapore, Thailand and Timor-Leste.¹¹⁸ The President (Congo) drew attention to a letter dated 10 April 2006 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of Timor-Leste, transmitting a letter dated 2 April 2006 to the Secretary-General concerning the post-UNOTIL United Nations presence in Timor-Leste.¹¹⁹

In his briefing, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General reported that the situation in Timor-Leste had changed rapidly since the issuance of the most recent report of the Secretary-General¹²⁰ two weeks earlier. He drew the attention of the Council to the demonstrations by 594 dismissed soldiers of the Timorese defence force, who had demanded that an independent commission be established to address the issue of discrimination and investigate their grievances. After four days of peaceful demonstrations, a mob of "non-594" youths and some political elements had attacked the Government office building, and the Government of Timor-Leste had then been forced to deploy its military to restore order. The Special Representative of the Secretary-General remarked that while property damage was minor, the psychological impact on the people had been immense. In that regard, he said that 14,000 people had sought refuge in churches and other public buildings, and that more than 1,000 family members of local UNOTIL staff had taken refuge at UNOTIL headquarters. UNOTIL estimated that five persons had been killed and at least 60 had been injured. The Special Representative noted, in reference to the UNOTIL capacity-building programme for State institutions, that a sustainable development assistance framework had been completed in almost all areas. While progress had been made in training the national police of Timor-

Leste, he called on the international community to provide the police with further intensive training and to help to strengthen its Professional Ethics Office and other human rights mechanisms. He stated that the establishment of an integrated United Nations office after the completion of the UNOTIL mandate and the continued presence of the United Nations police were of utmost importance to support Timor-Leste in maintaining peace and stability, in particular with a view to conducting free and fair national elections in 2007.¹²¹

The representative of Timor-Leste favoured a small but robust United Nations presence in the country from May 2006 to May 2007 as a follow-on to the successive United Nations missions there and hoped that the Council would consider his country's request to that end. He described the recent violence in Dili as a wake-up call for his Government and the international community, and expressed the belief that urgent preventive measures were needed to prevent a relapse into violence and instability. In the many days of dialogue with the leaders of the ex-military group that had sparked the incident, those leaders had expressed a willingness to cooperate with the Government. It was his view, however, that the ex-military organizers had lost control of the demonstration, which had been taken over by others who had hijacked their agenda. He assured the Council that the Government was moving swiftly to prepare for the upcoming elections and, in that regard, cited pertinent reasons for the establishment of an integrated office, including the fragile political environment; the challenge to upholding internal stability, the rule of law and respect for human rights before, during and after the elections; the creation of a secure environment, including in the border region; and the acute need for continued international assistance to the justice sector. The representative of Timor-Leste concluded by reiterating that the proposal contained in the report of the Secretary-General represented the bare minimum that Timor-Leste required, and in the light of the latest developments, requested once again a robust international police force of at least a company strength, with appropriate logistical means, during the period leading up to the national elections.¹²²

Most speakers supported the recommendation of the Secretary-General for a continued United Nations presence in Timor-Leste, since peace and democracy were yet to be consolidated, and expressed the belief that the support of the international community would be indispensable in preparing for the 2007 presidential and parliamentary elections and to fully build up State institutions. The representative of the United States, on the other hand, believed that a follow-on United Nations presence, regardless of how well thought out it could be, would not be timely at the present moment. He was of the view that a simple one-month rollover of the Mission's existing mandate would give the situation in Timor-Leste time to settle down and provide the Council with the time to consider the situation further.¹²³

While agreeing that Timor-Leste had made strong progress towards being self-reliant and welcoming the advances in its relations with Indonesia, most speakers acknowledged that, as had been evidenced by the recent violence, the country remained fragile and required continued support from the international community. Speakers agreed that, as the Secretary-General noted in his report, serious challenges remained in the areas of defence, police, justice, human rights, border patrols and public administration. Some representatives held that the recommendations of the Secretary-General were the minimum required for Timor-Leste, as the Council must act in the context of a long-term plan.¹²⁴ The representative of France believed that a follow-on mission should also have a human rights section to pursue matters related to justice and reconciliation.¹²⁵

The representative of Australia said that it was essential to recognize that the many challenges facing Timor-Leste, including the recent unrest, were domestic in nature and that assistance should be focused on helping the people of Timor-Leste to develop sustainable institutions and policies that supported Timor-Leste's new democracy, its political stability, the rule of law, the future security of its people and economic growth.¹²⁶

The representative of Indonesia stated that the delineation of the remaining one per cent of the land border was expected to be completed by August, and that cooperation on border security continued to be strengthened.¹²⁷

At its 5436th meeting, on 12 May 2006, the Council again included in its agenda the end-of-mandate report of the Secretary-General on UNOTIL.¹²⁸ The President (Congo) drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹²⁹ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1677 (2006),¹³⁰ by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNOTIL until 20 June 2006;

Requested the Secretary-General to provide the Council by 6 June 2006 with an update on the situation in Timor-Leste and the role of United Nations in Timor-Leste following the expiration of the mandate of UNOTIL with a view to taking further action on the subject.

Decision of 25 May 2006 (5445th meeting):
statement by the President

At its 5445th meeting, on 25 May 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Council,¹³¹ transmitting a letter from the President, Prime Minister and Speaker of the National Parliament of Timor-Leste, in which they reported that Timor-Leste had requested assistance from the Governments of Portugal, Australia, New Zealand and Malaysia in sending defence as well as security forces to Timor-Leste as a matter of urgency, in view of the deterioration of the internal security conditions in that country, and had requested the Secretary-General to take steps in order to obtain international support to the assistance to be extended by the aforementioned countries. The President (Congo) drew attention to four letters addressed to him: a letter dated 24 May 2006 from the representative of New Zealand,¹³² which referred to the unstable situation in Timor-Leste and a request made by Timor-Leste to provide international assistance to help re-establish security and confidence in the country, and requested the Council to give urgent attention to the matter; a letter dated 25 May 2006 from the representative of Australia,¹³³ in which, further to his letter of 24 May 2006, he reported that Australia had responded positively to the formal written request from Timor-Leste and had agreed to provide appropriate assistance to support the country's defence and security forces to re-establish and maintain public order; a letter dated 25 May 2006 from the representative of Portugal,¹³⁴ transmitting a letter dated 24 May 2006 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, reporting that Portugal, in coordination with Australia, Malaysia and New Zealand, had agreed to deploy a multinational security force in response to the request made by Timor-Leste, and stating that such a deployment would benefit from an expeditious decision by the Council confirming its full international authority; and a letter dated 25 May 2006 from the representative of New Zealand,¹³⁵ transmitting a statement released by the Prime Minister of New Zealand on 26 May 2006, announcing the initial deployment of New Zealand aircraft and personnel to Darwin in response to the situation in Timor-Leste.

The President (Congo) made a statement on behalf of the Council,¹³⁶ by which the Council,¹³⁷ inter alia:

Expressed its deep concern at developments in Timor-Leste, recognized the urgency of the deteriorating security situation and condemned acts of violence against people as well as destruction of property;

Urged the Government of Timor-Leste to take all necessary steps to end the violence;

Urged all parties in Timor-Leste to refrain from violence and to participate in the democratic process;

Welcomed the positive responses made by the Governments concerned and fully supported their deployment of defence and security forces to urgently assist Timor-Leste in restoring and maintaining security;

Looked forward to close cooperation between UNOTIL and the forces of the Governments concerned;

Welcomed the initiatives of the Secretary-General, including his intention to send a special envoy to Timor-Leste in order to facilitate the political dialogue;

Requested the Secretary-General to follow closely the situation in Timor-Leste and to report on developments, as necessary.

Decision of 20 June 2006 (5469th meeting):
resolution 1690 (2006)

At its 5457th meeting, on 13 June 2006, the Council heard a statement by the Secretary-General and was briefed by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Timor-Leste. Statements were made by all members of the Council and by Australia, Austria (on behalf of the European Union and the countries aligning themselves with the statement), Brazil, Fiji, Indonesia, Malaysia, New Zealand, the Philippines, Portugal, the Republic of Korea, Singapore and Timor-Leste. The President (Denmark) drew the attention of the Council to a letter dated 13 June 2006 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the Security Council,¹³⁸ transmitting a letter dated 11 June 2006 from the President, the President of the National Parliament and the Prime Minister of Timor-Leste requesting the Council to establish immediately a United Nations police force in Timor-Leste to maintain law and order in Dili and other parts of the country as necessary, until the Timorese police had undergone reorganization and restructuring to act as an independent and professional law enforcement agency.

The Secretary-General deplored the recent events in Timor-Leste, which had shown shortcomings on the part of the Timorese leadership as well as on the part of the international community in inadequately sustaining the nation-building process. He stated that it was clear that tremendous work lay ahead, but that the United Nations was determined not to abandon the Timorese people at this critical time of need. The Secretary-General noted that he had received a letter from the Government of Timor-Leste that invited the United Nations to set up an independent special inquiry commission into the incidents on 28 and 29 April and on 23, 24 and 25 May and other issues related to the crisis. He announced that he would request the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to take the lead in establishing such a commission.¹³⁹

The Special Envoy of the Secretary-General, who had visited Timor-Leste from 29 May to 7 June, reported that the Council of State and Superior Council for Defence and Security of Timor-Leste had agreed on an action plan for the political leadership to address the security crisis. The President had assumed the main responsibility for defence and security in close collaboration with other senior leaders, and the Timorese leadership was working closely with the international military and police forces deployed in the country. The Special Envoy of the Secretary-General pointed out that the most serious cause of the recent unrest concerned the security sector, with political cleavages between the police and military, as well as internally in each institution. In addition, the East-West friction, as ostensibly a central factor in the crises in the army, and in the defence and police forces, was likely the most dangerous cleavage for national unity. In regard to the role the Timorese wanted the United Nations to play in the future, the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General noted the request made to the Secretary-General to assure accountability and investigate human rights violations during the recent uprisings. He also found a consensus that the United Nations should play a major role in organizing the 2007 elections and ensuring that they would be free and fair, in reviewing and ensuring restoration of the security sector and in generating international support to State institutions, as well as a desire for the United Nations to offer its good offices in fostering political and community reconciliation.¹⁴⁰

The representative of Timor-Leste held that the work of the United Nations and the international community, together with the Timorese, had taken root in the form of State institutions that had the capacity to continue operations, even at the height of the crisis. The affected areas were limited primarily to Dili, with the other 12 districts functioning normally and the border between Indonesia and Timor-Leste remaining calm. He informed the Council of the steps taken by the Government to commence an all-inclusive dialogue within two weeks, in parallel to the independent special inquiry commission which his country had requested. As for a future United Nations presence, the representative of Timor-Leste believed that UNOTIL should in due course be replaced by a United Nations-mandated peacekeeping force which should comprise a greater number of countries in the region. He maintained that the time frame for such a force should be long enough to enable State institutions to move beyond the fragile stage.¹⁴¹

Speakers commended the quick action of the four-country stabilization force of Australia, Malaysia, New Zealand and Portugal, while stating that stabilizing Timor-Leste would require the efforts of the whole international community, particularly the Council, to halt the violence and relaunch the national reconciliation process. They welcomed the timely humanitarian assistance provided and, in the light of more than ten thousand internally displaced persons, urged that the call for further such aid be heeded.

There was agreement among speakers that a continued United Nations presence was needed in Timor-Leste, in the areas of election assistance, rule of law, national reconciliation, the strengthening of democracy and capacity-building. However, opinions on a future international presence after the termination of UNOTIL differed. The representative of Australia believed that while an international presence in Timor-Leste would be needed for some time, the stabilization force did not need to be brought under direct United Nations mandate, as he wanted the United Nations to be free to focus on the long-term needs of Timor-Leste through a new Council-mandated mission. The new mission should be established under Chapter VII of the Charter and be mandated to facilitate political dialogue and reconciliation, restore the confidence of the people and strengthen the justice system.¹⁴² The representative of Portugal stated that the current turmoil showed the need for renewed long-term involvement by the United Nations in Timor-Leste. In defining the future mandate of the United Nations presence in Timor-Leste, he called for first and foremost listening to the views of the Timorese in order to respect Timorese ownership. He emphasized that Timor-Leste was not a failed State but that it was in a deep political crisis which was having very serious security and humanitarian repercussions.¹⁴³ Several representatives called for a thorough needs assessment, including social and economic problems, for consideration of future options.¹⁴⁴ In that regard, the representative of France warned against premature or poorly planned withdrawal and held that one lesson learned from the recent events was the need for in-depth analysis of political problems in Timor-Leste.¹⁴⁵

Some speakers considered the deployment of a “full-fledged” or “robust” peacekeeping operation to be the appropriate response.¹⁴⁶ According to the representative of Argentina, it was increasingly clear that a continued presence of international military and, above all, police troops would be essential in the months to come, in particular with respect to the general elections to be held in 2007. He held that the Council should not rule out a priori the possibility of including military and police components in the mandate of the successor mission to UNOTIL.¹⁴⁷ The representative of the United Kingdom supported a United Nations policing and political mission,¹⁴⁸ and several representatives supported an expanded United Nations presence, including a robust police component.¹⁴⁹ While awaiting the recommendations of the Secretary-General on United Nations engagement post-UNOTIL, some representatives were in favour of a technical rollover.¹⁵⁰

At its 5469th meeting, on 20 June 2006, the Council included in its agenda a letter dated 13 June 2006 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council,¹⁵¹ and a letter dated 13 June 2006 from the representative of Timor-Leste addressed to the Secretary-General.¹⁵²

The President (Denmark) drew attention to a draft resolution,¹⁵³ which was adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1690 (2006),¹⁵⁴ by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNOTIL until 20 August 2006;

Requested the Secretary-General to provide to the Council by 7 August 2006 a report on the role for the United Nations in Timor-Leste following the expiration of the mandate of UNOTIL, taking into account the current situation and the need for a strengthened presence of the United Nations.

Decision of 18 August 2006 (5514th meeting):
resolution 1703 (2006)

On 8 August 2006, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on Timor-Leste,¹⁵⁵ which presented recommendations on the future role of the United Nations in Timor-Leste. He recommended the establishment of a United Nations multidimensional, integrated mission in Timor-Leste for an initial period of 12 months, which required a strong civilian component, including a United Nations civilian police element of substantially greater strength than in UNOTIL, with the support of a small United Nations military component. The Special Representative, who would also serve as the head of mission, would liaise with the Timorese authorities and other stakeholders, international and regional organizations, international financial institutions, bilateral and multilateral donors and the diplomatic community, and provide good offices to the Timorese authorities at all levels, as required.

At its 5512th meeting, on 15 August 2006, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda and heard a briefing by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Timor-Leste. The Council also had before it the report of the Secretary-General on justice and reconciliation for Timor-Leste.¹⁵⁶ The President (Ghana) also drew attention to two communications from Timor-Leste.¹⁵⁷

Statements were made by all members of the Council, by the representatives of Australia, Brazil, Cape Verde, Cuba, Finland (on behalf of the European Union),¹⁵⁸ Indonesia, Malaysia, New Zealand, the Philippines, Portugal, Singapore and Timor-Leste,¹⁵⁹ and by the Executive Secretary of the Community of Portuguese-Speaking Countries.

Elaborating on the Secretary-General's recommendations, the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General stressed that establishment of a larger mission after successive downsizing should not be seen as a reversion to an earlier stage of United Nations engagement in Timor-Leste or the State-building process in Timor-Leste. To the contrary, the proposals were aimed at establishing a more effectively coordinated partnership between Timor-Leste and the international community, which would be Timorese-led. He indicated that the key roles to be played by such a mission were in the most crucial areas of the security sector, the administration of justice and the functioning of democratic institutions. For the first year of the mission, he foresaw that assisting and ensuring the credibility of the 2007 elections would be a central task. A review of the whole security sector was required to clarify the roles of the defence force and the police in relation to each other, together with strengthened ministries of interior and defence. He noted that the demand for accountability as part of the necessary basis for reconciliation was a strong one, and that the crucial work of the Independent Special Commission of Inquiry for Timor-Leste would provide an objective starting point to that end. He urged the Council to support the recommendations for a new mission which corresponded to the appeal of Timor-Leste's Government and people.¹⁶⁰ establishment of a new integrated United Nations peacekeeping mission in Timor-Leste; and S/2006/651, letter dated 14 August 2006 from the representative of Timor-Leste addressed to the Secretary-General, transmitting a letter dated 9 August 2006 from the Prime Minister on the executive policing authority of the United Nations.

While welcoming a gradual return to peace, speakers stressed that the security and political situation of Timor-Leste remained fragile and noted that many challenges remained, including addressing the root causes behind the recent violence. In that connection, speakers generally supported the recommendations of the Secretary-General for a multidimensional integrated mission in Timor-Leste, noting that it was in line with the request made by the Government. They underscored the need to strengthen what had been achieved, noting that the future United Nations mission would need to be sufficiently large to effectively address such urgent issues as training of the national police and support for the 2007 elections. Many speakers welcomed the proposal by the Secretary-General for a compact between the Government of Timor-Leste and the international community to reorient the national economic plan of Timor-Leste and help to build the capacity of State and Government institutions. At the same time, speakers concurred with the Secretary-General's observation that the United Nations should fully respect the sovereignty of Timor-Leste, noting that it was essential that the process be led by the Timorese themselves. Referring to the prevailing climate of fear, some representatives expressed concern about the humanitarian situation of more than 150,000 internally displaced persons¹⁶¹ and the issue of widespread weapons which could be used in further actions of destabilization.¹⁶² The representative of the Philippines said that the new mission should serve as an early warning device to alert the Timorese to potential crises.¹⁶³

The representative of Timor-Leste concurred with the recommendations of the Secretary-General. He affirmed that the recommendations, including in relation to a small United Nations force, were important and the best option with which to face the current crisis. He expressed the view that the proposed new mission should also provide assistance in the design of poverty reduction and economic growth policies and strategies.¹⁶⁴

While there was a broad agreement on the need for the police component in the new mission, divergent opinions were heard on how to handle its military component. Several speakers believed that having both a large police presence and a smaller military component under United Nations command were essential, as proposed by the Secretary-General, as those two elements would help to restore stability and law and order.¹⁶⁵ The representative of Japan preferred the utilization of international security forces over a military component under United Nations command, to ensure operational effectiveness.¹⁶⁶ The representative of the United Kingdom was of the view that putting in place the force-generation mandate of a United Nations force would inevitably be time-consuming and unnecessary, given the presence on the ground of the partners and the requirements for the interim.¹⁶⁷ The representative of the United States did not see a need for United Nations troops, noting that security concerns in Timor-Leste were internal and stressing that the international security force that was already in place was well-equipped, well-staffed and prepared to respond to any need for military action.¹⁶⁸ In contrast, the representative of Greece stated that bilateral arrangements were not a viable long-term solution to reinforce security.¹⁶⁹ The representative of New Zealand was comfortable with the recommendations contained in the report and held that as New Zealand was one of the contributors to the current stabilization force, it was important that the military presence in Timor-Leste, however it evolved, enjoyed broad-based support and clearly recognized international legitimacy.¹⁷⁰ The representative of Australia said that while his country was gradually drawing down its troops to the international stabilization force as conditions in Timor-Leste improved, it was nevertheless prepared to continue to provide forces for the policing and military tasks. To permit the effective functioning of the forces, he stressed the preference for regional participation in such a force, providing both a rapid deployment capacity and security, and that it was important for the Council to provide the force with authority under Chapter VII.¹⁷¹ The Executive Secretary of the Community of Portuguese-Speaking Countries drew attention to the Community's adoption of a political declaration in which it had offered to assist in the establishment of a new United Nations mission in Timor-Leste, and had expressed the willingness of its members to participate in the mission.¹⁷²

As the justice sector and police had been most affected during the recent crisis, many speakers endorsed the recommendations of the Secretary-General on justice and reconciliation, including the proposed re-establishment of a capacity to investigate the serious crimes of 1999. They agreed that assistance should be provided to the Timorese to settle questions of human rights abuses and provide redress for victims.

At its 5514th meeting, on 18 August 2006, the Council again included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General of 8 August 2006.¹⁷³ The President (Ghana) drew attention to the report of the Secretary-General on justice and reconciliation for Timor-Leste;¹⁷⁴ to a letter dated 4 August 2006 from the representative of Timor-Leste addressed to the President of the Security Council;¹⁷⁵ and to a letter dated 9 August 2006 from the representative of Timor-Leste addressed to the Secretary-General.¹⁷⁶

The President also drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;¹⁷⁷ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1703 (2006),¹⁷⁸ by which the Council, inter alia:

resolution 1704 (2006)

At its 5516th meeting, on 25 August 2006, the Council again included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General of 8 August 2006.¹⁷⁹ The President (Ghana) drew attention to the report of the Secretary-General on justice and reconciliation for Timor-Leste.¹⁸⁰ He also drew attention to a draft resolution;¹⁸¹ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1704 (2006),¹⁸² by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to establish a follow-on mission in Timor-Leste, the United Nations Integrated Mission in Timor-Leste (UNMIT);

Affirmed that the Council should consider possible adjustments in the Mission structure, including the nature and size of the military component, taking into account the views of the Secretary-General;

Decided that UNMIT should be headed by a Special Representative of the Secretary-General, who should direct the operations of UNMIT and coordinate all United Nations activities in Timor-Leste;

Called upon the international security forces to fully cooperate with and provide assistance to UNMIT for the implementation of the mandate;

Called upon all parties in Timor-Leste to cooperate fully in the deployment and operations of UNMIT and the international security forces.

Decision of 22 February 2007 (5634th meeting):
resolution 1745 (2007)

On 1 February 2007, the Secretary-General submitted his report on UNMIT for the period from 9 August 2006 to 26 January 2007,¹⁸³ in which he supported the extension of the UNMIT mandate for a period of 12 months with no major changes until after the forthcoming elections. However, to strengthen security for the critical electoral process, he supported the request by the Government that an additional formed police unit be deployed. The unit would be based in Dili to support the existing formed police units and respond specifically to possible incidents that might arise in the potentially volatile western districts adjacent to the capital, in particular during the pre- and post-electoral period.

At its 5628th meeting, on 12 February 2007, the Council included the report of the Secretary-General in its agenda and heard a briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Timor-Leste. Statements were made by all members of the Council and by the representatives of Australia, Brazil, Germany (on behalf of the European Union),¹⁸⁴ Japan, New Zealand, the Philippines, Portugal, Singapore and Timor-Leste.¹⁸⁵

Noting that Timor-Leste was preparing for its first national elections since independence, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General stressed that security remained a critical element for the success of the electoral process, and that while the situation was showing some signs of improvement, it remained fragile. In that regard, he favoured the deployment of an additional formed police unit for the pre-electoral and immediate post-electoral periods. He commended the recent conclusion of the Memorandum of Understanding between the Government of Timor-Leste, the Government of Australia and the United Nations that established a Trilateral Coordination Forum to enhance security coordination in Timor-Leste. He also praised the Government of Timor-Leste for having initiated the review of the security sector and expressed the hope that the recommendations of the Independent Special Commission of Inquiry would soon be implemented. Noting that the development and the strengthening of democracy would require the continued support of the international community, the Special Representative highlighted, in particular, the recommendation of the Secretary-General to extend UNMIT for an additional 12 months.¹⁸⁶

Although the arrangement between the United Nations and the Government of Timor-Leste on public security had addressed issues of police reform, the representative of Timor-Leste requested that the Council consider deploying an additional formed police unit owing to the continuing fragile situation in Timor-Leste. He noted that his Government, supported by the United Nations, had made security sector reform a priority. Referring to the justice sector, he noted that the system was overstretched and not prepared to deal with the current post-crisis scenario. He requested the United Nations to enhance its principal framework of assistance to respond to the immediate needs of justice delivery. Highlighting the need for a long-term commitment by the United Nations in Timor-Leste to enable lasting peace in his country, which was at a critical juncture, the representative of Timor-Leste urged the Council to extend the UNMIT mandate for another 12 months.¹⁸⁷

Speakers shared the assessment by the Secretary-General that the overall situation in Timor-Leste had improved since UNMIT had been established. However, they agreed that many challenges still remained to be faced to prevent a relapse into conflict and achieve sustainable development. They noted that the security situation remained fragile and the lack of progress in the judicial system and the fight against impunity remained a concern. Speakers stressed that it was crucial to prepare proper conditions for holding the upcoming presidential and parliamentary elections. With Timor-Leste being at a critical juncture, they shared the view that the country needed strong continued support from the international community. Speakers therefore supported the recommendation of the Secretary-General for the extension of the mandate of UNMIT for 12 months. The representative of South Africa believed that the UNMIT mandate should also be strengthened,¹⁸⁸ and many speakers explicitly supported the deployment of an additional police unit before the elections.¹⁸⁹ Stressing that viable peace could be achieved only in a secure environment, a number of speakers welcomed the establishment of the Trilateral Coordination Forum between the Government of Australia, the Government of Timor-Leste and the United Nations to enhance security activities in preparing for the elections.¹⁹⁰ Several speakers emphasized the need to build an effective Timorese national police capable of addressing the security challenges, and the need for security sector reform,¹⁹¹ including the future direction and shape of the Timorese defence force. The representative of the United States expressed concern that the presence of armed soldiers of the Timorese armed forces had served to heighten the sense of insecurity among the Timorese people and urged the Government to ensure that the Timorese military assumed an appropriate profile. He noted that the United Nations police continued to have the Council's mandate to provide interim law enforcement and public security in East Timor.¹⁹²

Many delegations reaffirmed the continuing need for accountability and justice,¹⁹³ and a number of speakers supported the timely implementation of the recommendations of the Independent Special Commission of Inquiry.¹⁹⁴ The representative of the United States urged UNMIT to complete the investigation of crimes committed in the country in 1999, observing that justice delayed too long could become justice denied.¹⁹⁵ In that context, several speakers concurred with the Secretary-General that justice was an essential precondition for sustainable national reconciliation.¹⁹⁶

At its 5634th meeting¹⁹⁷ on 22 February 2007, the Council again included in its agenda the report of the Secretary-General on UNMIT.¹⁹⁸ The President (Slovakia) drew attention to a letter dated 21 December 2006 from the representative of Timor-Leste addressed to the Secretary-General.¹⁹⁹

He then drew the attention of the Council to a draft resolution;²⁰⁰ it was put to the vote and adopted unanimously and without debate as resolution 1745 (2007), by which the Council, inter alia:

Decided to extend the mandate of UNMIT until 26 February 2008;

Decided to increase the authorized force strength of UNMIT by up to 140 police personnel;

Urged the development partners, including the United Nations agencies and multilateral financial institutions, to continue providing resources and assistance for the preparations for the upcoming elections, and other projects towards sustainable development, and called upon the international donor community to consider contributing generously towards the 2007 consolidated appeal for Timor-Leste;

Requested UNMIT fully to take into account gender considerations as a cross-cutting issue throughout its mandate, and further requested the Secretary-General to include in his reporting to the Council progress on gender mainstreaming throughout UNMIT.

statement by the President

At the 5682nd meeting, on 23 May 2007,²⁰¹ the President (United States) made a statement on behalf of the Council,²⁰² by which, the Council, inter alia:

Welcomed the announcement of the results of the presidential elections in Timor-Leste and congratulated Mr. Jose Ramos-Horta on his election as President, and looked forward to working with the new Government to help to build a better future for Timor-Leste;

Expressed its concern over the still fragile and volatile security, political, social and humanitarian situation in Timor-Leste; and emphasized the importance of all parties continuing to work together in a spirit of cooperation and compromise in order to consolidate progress made by Timor-Leste in recent years and to enable the country to move to a peaceful and more prosperous future;

and the Prime Minister of Timor-Leste concerning the unstable security conditions in some areas of the country, requesting that UNMIT be reinforced by an additional formed police unit from the Guarda Nacional Republicana of Portugal to ensure that the presidential and legislative elections were held in a secure and peaceful environment.

¹⁹⁸ S/2007/50, submitted pursuant to resolution 1704 (2006).

¹⁹⁹ S/2006/1022, transmitting a letter from the President of Timor-Leste, the President of the National Parliament Expressed its continued support for the work of UNMIT under the leadership of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Timor-Leste, Mr. Atul Khare, and encouraged UNMIT, in accordance with its mandate, to continue to cooperate and coordinate with United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, as well as all relevant partners, to support the Government of Timor-Leste.

Decision of 10 September 2007 (5740th meeting): statement by the President

On 28 August 2007, the Secretary-General submitted a report on UNMIT.²⁰³ He observed that the successful completion of presidential and parliamentary elections indicated that the efforts to overcome the 2006 crisis were making progress. He also reported that weaknesses in the judicial sector undermined public confidence in other rule-of-law institutions, including the police. UNMIT, together with other international partners, would continue to support the judicial sector, as well as other efforts to strengthen human rights and the rule-of-law. He also observed that humanitarian challenges linked to the prolonged crisis of internally displaced persons remained. For the remaining mandate period, the focus of UNMIT would begin shifting from interim law enforcement to support for police reform, restructuring and rebuilding, taking account of the prevailing law and order situation; this work would be done within the context of wider security sector reform, which would be a continuing UNMIT priority.
