Equity Compensation

Employers in the U.S. and the UK face a fiercely competitive labor market to hire “tech talent.” While there are a number of factors that sway prospective employees, the availability of equity grants to allow them to share in the company’s success is often crucial.

Private companies typically leverage two key tools for incentive equity: option grants and restricted stock.

Option grants confer upon a recipient the right to purchase common stock/ordinary shares at a pre-determined exercise price and are typically subject to a vesting schedule. There are two main types of option grants used by private companies in each of the U.S. and UK: incentive stock options (ISO) and non-qualified stock options (NSO) in the U.S., and enterprise management incentives (EMI) and non-tax favored options in the UK.

Restricted stock are shares of company common stock/ordinary shares that are issued on award to a service provider. Although the recipient of a restricted stock grant receives shares outright, these shares are subject to restrictions that - similar to option grants - lapse in accordance with a vesting schedule.

The chart below summarizes the main types of equity grants that transatlantic technology companies utilize:

Features	EMI (UK)	“Non-tax favored” Options (UK)	ISO (U.S.)	NSO (U.S.)	Restricted Stock (U.S.)	Restricted Stock (UK)
Summary	Only for employees, tax favored treatment which gives a tax rate as low as 10 percent if disposal of the shares is more than two years after the date of grant of the option	No favorable treatment	Only for employees; more favorable tax treatment if held/exercised within specific timeframes	For any person providing services; fewer limits, but less favorable tax treatment	For any person providing services	For any person providing services
